Weedon Bec, Beck, or Weedon-on-the-Street, is bounded by Nether Heyford on the east, Dodford on the north, Everdon on the west; and on the south by Stowe, from which it is divided by Stowe brook. It contains 1855 acres, and its population in 1801 was 750; in 1831, 1439; in 1841, 2195; in 1851, 2195; in 1861, 2189; and in 1871, 1861 souls, including 816 persons in Weedon barracks. The rateable value of the parish is £7263, and the gross estimated rental is £9163. The soil of the lower ground is principally clay, and of the hills a light loam; the lordship is about equally divided between arable and pasture; and the principal landowners are the Provost and Fellows of Eton College (lords of the manor), and the Rev. T. C. Thornton (the lay impropiator). There are six hills in the parish, "one of which," writes Bridges, "called Whitewell Hill, affords a view of twenty spire steeples at once, and on a clear day extends the prospect to Higham Ferrers." Camden, Talbot, Morton, and other antiquaries place the Bennaventa of the Britons and Isannavaria of the Romans here, but Mr Baker appropriates it to Borough Hill, near Daventry. "Though we have no Roman antiquities now at Weedon," says Bridges, "it is certain that it was afterwards the chief seat of Wulphere King of the Mercians; which Mr Morton thinks a further argument of its having been formerly a Roman station, as many of these in after-times became the dwelling-places of Saxon princes. But if Bennaventa were the ancient name, how comes it to be now called Weedon? Mr Morton hath given a solution to this difficulty. Peada, the elder brother of Wulphere, and his immediate predecessor in the kingdom of Mercia, is by our old historians frequently called Weda. Supposing him, therefore, to have taken up his residence here, the place might in all probability be named from him, and Weedon be no other than a contraction from Weadaton or Weda's town." In Leland's time, a little from the south side of the churchyard, there stood "a faire chapel" dedicated to St Werburgh. This lady was the daughter of King Wulphere, and set over a monastery of nuns here by her uncle, King Ethelred, who succeeded her father in his kingdom. This monastery was subsisting in the age of Bede, but was destroyed by the Danes in the ninth century. By digging in the upper part of the ground called the Ashyards, to the south of the church, the foundations of old buildings have at different times been discovered, and large wall stones taken up. These, in all probability, were the ruins of St Werburgh's monastery, and of King Wulphere's palace. According to Mr Baker, "Ethelred King of Mercia converted the royal palace of his brother and predecessor, Wulphere, at Weedon, into a monastery, under the superintendence of his niece Werburgh. She had in her infancy vowed to devote her life to religion, but was prevented from professing herself by Wulphere her father. Relieved from this obstacle by his death, she and her mother took the veil in the Abbey of Ely; but at the earnest entreaty of her uncle Ethelred, she returned into Mercia, and for the fame of her piety was elected to preside over the four nunneries of Trentham and Hanbury in Staffordshire, Repton in Derbyshire, and Weedon in Northamptonshire. She spent much of her time at Weedon, and it was here that the miracle recorded of her in Cresy's 'Church History' was performed. The corn in the neighbourhood having suffered much from the inroads of wild geese, she remonstrated with, and forbade them ever to revisit her demesnes; to which command they paid implicit obedience, and in Bridges' time it was the popular belief that no wild geese were ever seen to settle or graze in Weedon field." Drayton, when speaking of the course of the Nene, alludes to this legend. He says:—

"She falleth in her way with Weedon, where, 'tis said,
St Werburgh, princely born, a most religious maid,
From those peculiar fields by prayer the wildfowl drove."

She died at Trentham towards the close of the seventh century, on the 3d of February, on which day her festival was celebrated. She was buried at Hanbury, from whence her body was translated in 875 to the Abbey of Chester, which was dedicated to her as its patron saint, and where in the cathedral, formerly the abbey church, her shrine now serves for the base of the episcopal throne.

Manor.—At the time of the Norman survey, Hugh de Grentemaisnil held 3 hides of land in Weedon, which he had in exchange for Watford. There were 17a. of meadow, and 12a. of wood, with the mill, of the yearly rent of 40d., and the whole had been valued at 40s., but was then advanced to 50s. Soon after the Conquest, Roger de Thebovit gave a moiety of this manor to the Abbey of Bec, in Normandy; and before the close of the reign of Henry II. the whole of Weedon was in the possession of the monks of Bec. This monastery was built in 1034, in the valley of Bec, by Harlewin, son of Augor and Hillors, descended from the Danes, who became its first abbot. Sir William Dugdale and Dr Tanner make Weedon Priory a cell of the Convent of Bec; but it is certain that it was a parcel of the Priory of Okeburn, in Wiltshire, which was the only cell to the Abbey of Bec in England. Henry II. granted considerable privileges, such as sok, sak, thol, and thew, infangthef, the goods and chattels of all their tenants who should be sentenced to die or lose a limb in any of the king's courts, and all americiaments whatsoever. He exempted them from the payment of all toll passage, stallage, &c., and gave them a right to judge and determine on cases of murder and manslaughter, wounding and maiming, blood, water, fire, &c.; all of which privileges were confirmed by Henry III. in the 37th year of his reign (1253), and in addition to which he granted them free warren in their manor of Weedon. "The memory of the privileges and immunities above mentioned," continues Bridges, "still subsists by tradition; a furlong in the Common Field is yet called Gallows-Furlong, and the stump of the gallows is visible, not far from the highroad." On the final suppression of the alien priories by Parliament in the 2d of Henry V. (1414), Weedon, with the other possessions of the Abbey of Bec, were escheated to the crown, and granted for life to Humphrey Earl of Stafford, afterwards Duke of Buckingham, who was slain at the battle of Northampton in 1460. It was then granted to the Provost and Fellows of Eton College, near Windsor, by King Henry VI., in 1443, in augmentation of their endowment, and has continued in their possession to the present time. The whole lordship is copyhold except the impropriate rectory and vicarage estates, and the land purchased by the Board of Ordnance in 1803. The lands belonging to the Provost and Fellows of Eton are let on beneficial leases renewable every seven years. A court-leet is held occasionally, and a court-baron annually. A town or court house was built by subscription in 1637, but has long been disused for public purposes. The erection of the Royal Military Depot was commenced by Act of Parliament in 1803 for the Ordnance Department, and £100,000 was annually appropriated to the works till completed. It covers an area of about 125 acres of land; stands on the summit of a hill above the village of Weedon; and contains barracks for 500 men, 200 horses, extensive armoury, storehouses, and magazines, capable of containing 800,000 stand of small arms, besides field ordnance and ammunition, an hospital, and workshops. The situation is very healthy, elevated, and pleasant, overlooking the vale of the Nene, and a rich agricultural landscape. Two field batteries, Royal Artillery, and a detachment of the line are generally stationed here. The Grand Junction Canal communicates with the storehouses, and the railway passes close to them.

The Village of Weedon is also called Weedon-in-the-Street, from its situation on the ancient Roman road, Watling Street; its distinctive epithet, "Bec," was derived from the circumstance of its ancient priory being established here as a cell to the Abbey of Bec in Normandy. Leland describes the village as "a praty thoroughfare sette on a playne ground, and much celebrated by carriers, bycause it stondeth hard by the famose way there comunely caullid of the peeple Wathelinge Streete. And upon this the tounetlet is caullid Weedon-on-the-Streete. The tounetlet of itself is meane, and hath no market, and the paroche chirch is as meane." The village at present is large and straggling, and is divided into Church or Lower Weedon, and Upper Weedon, the latter being a few furlongs west of the former. It is situated about 4 miles S.E. from Daventry, 8 miles west from Northampton, and 68 from London by road. The Grand Junction Canal and the London and North-Western Railway pass through it, the latter having a principal station here, distant from London $69\frac{3}{4}$ miles, and from Birmingham $42\frac{3}{4}$ miles. The railway is here carried through a tunnel 509 yards in length. The Northamptonshire police force have a station here, built in 1870 at a cost of about £1500. It is a white brick building, in which the present force reside, which comprises a superintendent, a sergeant, and one constable.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, stands at the eastern extremity of the village, and is a spacious structure, partly in the Norman and partly in other styles of English architecture, consisting of a nave and side aisles, porch and chancel, with a tower containing five bells. The tower was built before the Conquest, and is probably a Saxon one. On its north and south sides are Norman-arched belfry windows, with a Norman loophole; and there are in each front two rows of corbel heads, four in each row. The body of the church was rebuilt and enlarged in 1823; and the chancel was rebuilt and furnished in 1863, as a memorial to the Rev. Geo. Watson, the late vicar. The west door has a good flat-headed arch with spandrels, under a flat hood moulding; and an organ was erected in 1866 by subscription at a cost of £120. The living is a discharged vicarage in the Deanery of Weedon, rated in the king's books at £11, and its gross income is now worth £300 per annum. The Rev. T. C. Thornton of Brockhall is the patron, and the Rev. John S. Winter, M.A., vicar. The impropriate rectory consists of 248a. 3r. 3p., awarded by the Commissioners of Enclosure in lieu of great tithes. The vicarage received an augmentation in 1739 of £200 from Queen Anne's bounty, with which 8 acres of land were purchased in Hardingstone, and the commissioners also allotted 72a. 3r. 33p. in lieu of glebe and vicarial tithes. A chantry was founded here, but the date or name of the founder is not known. In 1535 its revenues were rated at 106s. 8d. per annum. The Vicarage House, a respectable residence, stands a little south-west of the church.

Weedon was constituted a separate deanery in 1871, and comprises the following parishes, viz., Brockhall, Bugbrooke, Dodford, Everdon, Farthingstone, Floore, Harpole, Hayford Lower, Kislingbury, Litchborough, Stowe-Nine-Churches, and Weedon.

The Independent Chapel, erected in 1792, is a stone building capable of seating about 500 hearers, and to which is attached a small burial-ground. The minister is paid from the interest arising from the sale of 20 acres of "brakes or bushes" left to the Independents of Weedon and Floore, which were sold to Mr Grant of Litchborough for £1200. Out of this sum the minister's house and five cottages were built, and the remainder (£460) is out at interest, altogether producing about £40 per annum. The Wesleyan Methodists also have a small chapel here, which was erected in 1811.

The Free School was founded and endowed in 1712 by Nathaniel Billing of London, vintner, and a native of Weedon. He devised the whole of his real and personal estate to be converted into money after the decease of his wife, in trust, to erect or purchase a schoolhouse here for teaching gratis 20 poor children born in Weedon, to read, write, cast accounts, &c., and he directed his executors to lay out the remainder of the money in purchasing land in or near the said parish, which land and school he appointed should be conveyed to the master and wardens of the Vintner's Company in London, in trust that his nephew, Nathaniel Billing, and every succeeding master, should receive the whole rents and profits of the land to be purchased to his and their sole use and benefit, the master for the time being keeping the school in good repair, and finding and providing for each of the 20 boys a kersey coat or a coarse cloth of whitish colour, and red buttons and button-holes, a flat cap with a white tuft on the top and white ribbon round each of the caps, and a pair of shoes once in every two years, which things and apparel he ordered should be under the keeping of the master for the time being, whereby they might appear decent at church on Sundays and holidays; and the testator appointed that once in every two years the boys in the school able to write, read, and cast accounts, should be discharged therefrom, having their clothes with them, and such other boys as the master for the time being, by the advice of the minister and churchwardens of Weedon Beck should elect, should be admitted into the school, to be taught and clothed in manner aforesaid, whereby the charity would be more general to the poor inhabitants of the parish. In pursuance of the will, a dwelling-house for a master and a school were erected in Weedon, and an estate for the support of the school was purchased in the parish of Everdon, which consists of three closes, containing together about 42 acres. The land is let by the master for the time being, and now yields about £105 a year, but subject to a charge for land-tax, amounting to £5 a year. The school-house and school are repaired from time to time by the master. Twenty boys are instructed without charge in reading, writing, and arithmetic, and in the principles of the Church of England, and they attend the church on Sundays with the master. The number is always kept full, and the master has other scholars, paid for by their parents. The school was rebuilt in 1863 by subscription at a cost of £800, and the benefits of the charity were extended to a larger number of poor children.

There is a school for girls and a teacher's house contiguous to the Free School, which was erected in 1860 at a cost of £950, to which an infant school has been added in 1870 at a further cost of about £100.

The other Charities of the parish are—the dividends of £76 Old South Sea Annuities, left in 1736 by the Rev. John Rogers, alternately for the use of the Free School and the poor of the parish; the interest of £50 left by Thos. Judkins in 1719, to the poor of the parish; the interest of £50 bequeathed by George Bliss in 1780, to the poor shoemakers of this parish for ever; the interest of £50 which was left by John Freeman, and invested in £80 3 per cent. consols, to be distributed to the oldest poor persons who attend at church regularly; the poor's land, consisting of about 3 acres, allotted in lieu of a right of cutting furze, which lets for about £13 per annum; and the church land, 3 acres, lets for about £11 per annum, and applied by the churchwardens for the repairs of the church.

Post, Money-Order, and Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank.—Albert Coles, postmaster. Letters arrive from all parts at 7 and 9.25 A.M., and are despatched to all parts at 8.15 A.M., to Daventry at 9.15 A.M., and to London and the South at 2.50 P.M., and to all parts at 9.30 P.M. On Sundays arrive at 7 A.M., and despatched at 9.30 P.M.

Adams Mrs Eliz., ironmonger, grocer, tallow chandler, and sub-stamp distributor
Allin Jno. maltster and butcher

Andrews Mrs Ann
Arlidge Samuel, photographer
Baillie John, superint. of police
Barker Thomas, baker

Beasley Jno. barrack-sergeant
Billing Hy. maestr. of Free School
Boys George, tailor
Boys Thomas, tailor

Bullett Mrs Elizabeth
 Butlin Richard, stationmaster
 Capell Rd. grocer & ironmonger
 Carter Benjamin, beerhouse
 Carvel Miss Jemima T. beerho.
 Clarke Edward Pearson, stationer and newsagent
 Clear Mrs Mary Ann, shopkpr.
 Coles Albert, draper, post-office
 Coles Hy. Riches, manager and secy. for Weedon Gas Co., bailiff of manor of Weedon, and rate collector
 Cook Mrs Sarah
 Drake William, shopkeeper
 Easy George, beerhouse
 Forsyth Chas. inland rev. officer
 Garrood Gilbert, clock repairer
 Gibbins John Archbold, timber merchant and farmer
 Green Amy, straw-hat maker
 Green Geo. baker and shopkpr.
 Green George, blacksmith
 Gudgeon Richard, blacksmith and shopkeeper
 Gudgin John, beerhouse
 Gudgin William, shoemaker
 Hadland Joseph, butcher
 Hare Arthur, armourer
 Herbert Mr Thomas
 Howard Thos. carpenter, &c.
 Humphrey Mr Ralph
 Hutchinson Miss Emma, teacher of girls' school
 Judkins Miss Car. Lawn Villa
 Kidsley Francis, mail-cart driver
 Lyne Mrs Harriet, schoolmrs.

Malsbury Thomas, saddler
 Meacock Thos. baker & grocer
 Mead Mrs Mary Ann, beerhouse
 Moors Henry, beerhouse
 Muddiman William, shoemaker
 Muddiman Wm. jun. hairdresser
 Murdin Wm. John, shoemaker
 Phipps Mr George
 Phipps John, plumber & glazier
 Pinfold Wm. brick & tile manuf.
 Rainbow Wm. Oliver, watchmkr.
 Reynolds Robert, parish clerk
 Reynolds Robert, jun. shoemaker and sexton
 Roberts Edmund, builder
 Shannan Miss Mary, teacher of infant school
 Smith Chas. grocer and draper
 Smith Mrs Eliz. brewer, maltster, wine and spirit merchant, Dodford Brewery
 Smith Mr John
 Smith Thomas, butcher
 Stretton Mr Martin
 Stretton William, carpenter, builder, and shopkeeper
 Swann Fred. Billingham, surgeon, Stowe Nine Churches
 Thwaites William Skillbeck, brazier and tinner
 Warr John, shopkeeper
 Watson Noah, auctioneer and valuer, Globe Hotel
 Watson Wm. coal merchant, and registrar of births and deaths for Weedon district
 Webb Mr John
 Weddell Rev. Jno. Egddell, M.A.

Wells Mrs Susannah
 Winter Rev. John S., M.A. vicar
 Wynne George Hugh, tailor

Farmers and Graziers.

Allin Thomas, South Villa
 Allin William
 Barge Christopr. Manor-House
 Bromwich Mrs Clara
 Earl Samuel
 Goff Joseph (and butcher)
 Humphrey Mrs Elizabeth
 Tarry Thos. & Jas. (& butchers)
 Wareing John (and baker)

Fire and Life Offices.

British Prudential (life), Henry Billing
General (life and fire), Edward P. Clarke
Manchester (fire), Hy. R. Coles
Western (life), Wm. Watson

Hotels, Inns, &c.

Admiral Nelson, William Allin
Duke William, Miss Mary Wall
Fox-and-Hounds, Chas. Lockett
Globe Hotel (posting and commercial), Noah Watson
Horseshoe, James Bliss
Maltsters' Arms, Sam. Hadland
New Inn, Mrs Eliz. Humphrey
Old Crown, William Hopley
Plume-of-Feathers, Mrs Eliz. Wallis
Red Lion, Edmund Osborn
Wheat Sheaf, Geo. Nightingale
White Hart, Mrs Sar. Whiting

Carriers to all parts.—London and North-Western Railway, and Grand Junction Canal.

Carriers to Northampton.—Thomas Howard and Richard Shortland, on Wed. and Sat.

WELTON PARISH

Is bounded by Long Buckby on the east; on the north by Watford, from which it is divided by the Watling Street way; on the west by Braunston; and on the south by Daventry, from which it is divided by the Grand Junction Canal. It contains 1896 acres, and its population in 1801 was 485; in 1831, 600; in 1841, 635; in 1851, 642; in 1861, 592; and in 1871, 530 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3650, and the gross estimated rental £4171.

The soil is principally a strong loam, and the chief owners are Col. Richard Trevor Clarke (lord of the manor), and Alfred Seymour, Esq. of Norton Hall. The lordship is well supplied with springs, and there is some good limestone, and excellent brick and tile clay in the parish. The Grand Junction Canal is continued on to Braunston by a tunnel $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile long, where it joins the Oxford Canal.

Manor.—Osborn held 3 hides, wanting 1 virgate, of land in Welintone, of Hugh de Grentemaisnil, at the time of the Domesday survey. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 12d., and 8a. of meadow, and the whole, which in the Confeſſor's time had been the frehold of Baldwin and valued at 20s., was now rated at 40s. Leuric, the Saxon proprietor, held half a hide and 1 virgate in Welton and Thorpe of the Countess Judith at the same time. This was valued at 8s. In the reign of Henry II., William de Novo Foro held $2\frac{1}{2}$ hides and 2 small virgates here of the fee of Leicester; Hugh de Leycester had $5\frac{1}{2}$ small virgates of the fee of Birkhampstead, which were held by the monks of Daventry, and

Richard Mallore had 2 small virgates. The descendants of this William de Novo Foro are not known. In the eighteenth year of the reign of Edward I. (1290), Philip de Montgomery levied a fine of this manor; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1316), John Mallore was lord of Welton. In the male line of this family it continued for some time, and then descended to Margaret, daughter of John Mallore, and wife of Thomas Peyton, Esq. From this gentleman's grandson and successor it was purchased, in the second of Richard III. (1485), by William Catesby, Esq. of Ashby St Ledgers, who levied a fine of it in the same year, and from whom it was named Catesby's Manor. Sir William Catesby (for he was afterwards knighted) was beheaded at Leicester after the battle of Bosworth-field, and being attainted of high treason in 1485, his manors of Welton, with several others, were granted in 1489 to Sir David Owen, in tail-male. From him this manor descended to his grandson, Henry Owen, Esq., who sold it in the fourteenth of Elizabeth (1572) to Sir Richard Knightley of Fawsley, who afterwards alienated it to the family of Newport of Welton. John Newport, Gent., sold it in 1647, together with the impropriate rectory, to William Adams, Esq. of Charwelton. In this family it continued till 1804, when Samuel Miller Adams, Gent., alienated it to John Clarke, Esq., son of John Plomer, Esq., who by Act of Parliament in 1775 adopted the name and arms of Clarke on succeeding to the estates of that family under the will of his maternal great-uncle, Richard Clarke, Esq. John Clarke, Esq., was succeeded at his death in 1805 by John Plomer Clarke, at whose death in 1826, his brother, Richard Clarke, became possessor; and he was succeeded in 1829 by his son, the present lord, Colonel Richard Trevor Clarke of Welton Place.

The manor in Welton belonging to the Daventry Priory was valued in 1525 at £7, 10s. 2d. per annum, and passed with the other possessions of that house to Cardinal Wolsey's College, Oxford. Leicester Abbey had the annual rent of a water-mill at Welton (43s.), at its dissolution, which was sold by the crown to John Franke.

The Village of Welton, which is very respectable, is situated on a steep declivity about 2 miles N.E. of Daventry, 12 N.W. from Northampton, and 2 from the Crick Station of the London & North-Western Railway.

The Church, dedicated to St Martin, and which has been recently restored, stands on rising ground near the centre of the village, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch and chancel, with a pinnacled tower containing five bells. The whole building, except the tower, is in the Perpendicular style of the fifteenth century. The church was restored in 1866-67 at a cost of from £400 to £500. The living is a discharged vicarage in the Deanery of Daventry, rated in the king's books at £7, but its value at present is about £210. The patronage is vested in the Lord Chancellor; and the Rev. Daniel Darnell, M.A., is the present incumbent. The impropriate rectory consists of 196a. 19p.; the vicarage of 60a. 11. 5p., granted by the commissioners in lieu of vicarial tithes; and 3a. 3r. 14p., in lieu of an annual payment of £3, 16s. 8d. out of certain lands. In ecclesiastical matters Welton was originally a parochial chapelry to Daventry.

There is a small Baptist Chapel here, built in 1830: it will hold about 100 people; and the Rev. Israel Drakeford of Northampton is the minister. There is also a Wesleyan Chapel, built in 1858, which will seat 140 hearers.

The National School was built by the late Mr Clarke, and is supported by voluntary subscription, and money arising out of the Charity Land, consisting of 58 acres, a small close, and a garden, which lets for about £130 per annum; and the rents are applied to the relief of the poor, to the school, and other purposes.

Welton Place, the seat of Col. R. T. Clarke, is a handsome mansion, situated near the church, on the southern side of a bold, abrupt hill, on a terrace commanding a fine prospect of the town of Daventry and the adjacent country. The hill rising behind the house is ornamented with forest trees and shrubs, and near its base is "Mickle Well," in a curious ancient vaulted cave, which is so called, perhaps, from its never-failing abundance. It feeds several fish-ponds, &c., within the grounds.

Churchill House, formerly the manor-house, stands at the entrance to the village, and is the commodious seat of Henry Haig, Esq.

Antiquities.—Mr Baker tells us that in the year 1778, in a close called Stone-pit Field, then belonging to John Clarke, Esq., a “rudely-formed sepulchre,” probably a cist, was discovered about two feet below the surface, within which were deposited two skeletons of small stature, having two brass fibulae, and a number of beads lying near the throat and wrists. Between the skeletons was an urn, and a spear now mouldered to fragments, with four or five small Roman coins, one of which appeared to be of Constantine the Great, and another of Flavia Fausta, his empress. The urn, which is in the possession of Colonel Clarke, is of a dark colour, nearly black, and the beads are of amber, glass, and jet, varying in size, shape, and colour. A small Roman coin of Barbia Orbiana, last wife of the Emperor Alexander Severus, was dug up in the churchyard some years since.

Post-Office.—Edward Bleaney, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Daventry at 7.30 A.M., and are despatched at 6.10 P.M. The nearest money-order office is Daventry.

Bachelor Thomas, tailor
Benjamin Caleb, shopkeeper
Benjamin Geo. vict. Red Lion
Billingham John, dairyman
Bleaney Edward, schoolmaster, post-office
Brown Andw. trav. tea dealer
Brown Richard, baker
Clarke Henry, parish clerk
Clarke Col. Richard Trevor,
Welton Place
Darby Thomas, wheelwright
Darnell Rev. Danl. M.A. vicar
Eagleton The Misses Harriet
Augusta, Katharine, Anna
Maria, and Emily Frances

Fathers John, coal dealer
Frost Thos. higgler and shopkr.
Green Geo. brick & tile maker
Gregory Mrs Isabel, shopkeeper
Gregory John, coal dealer, &c.
Haig Hy. Esq. Churchill House
Harris Mrs Elizabeth, vict.
White Horse
Harrison William and Henry,
blacksmiths
Howard Miss Susannah, baker
Howard Wm. Darby, wheelwright
Pearcy Mr Thomas
Robbins Mr Samuel
Robbins Mr Thomas

Smith Martin, dairyman, &c.
Smith Thos. boot & shoe maker
Watson Miss Margaret, Welton
House

Farmers and Graziers.

Gilbert William Hands John
Johnson Thos. Turner, Welton
Place
Lee Thomas
Oakley Thomas
Robbins Thomas and Samuel
Stockley William
Watson Boswell, Welton House
Winterton Thos. Welton Grange

Carriers.—John Gregory, on Monday to Daventry, and on Saturday to Rugby; and Martin Smith, on Wednesday to Daventry, and on Saturday to Northampton.

CHIPPING WARDEN HUNDRED,

Situated in the south-western part of the county, is bounded by the hundred of Fawsley on the north, on the west by the counties of Warwick and Oxford, on the south by the hundred of King's Sutton, and on the east by that of Greens-Norton. Its figure is partly triangular, comprising an area of 21,370 acres.

Chipping Warden is called in Domesday Book Warredon, Warradone, and Wardune, and its first lord after the Conquest was Guy de Reinbuedcurt, a Norman noble, who was also lord of the manor of Warden, which was bestowed upon him by the Conqueror himself. The hundred and manor afterwards passed to the Foliois, the Latimers, and Griffins, and by course of succession down to John North, Esq. of Wrixton Abbey, Oxfordshire, the present lord. (See Chipping Warden parish.) The hundred courts are still held at Chipping Warden. This hundred is divided into nine parishes, of which the following is an enumeration, showing the population in 1871, with the number of houses, rateable value, and the gross estimated rental, and the area of each parish, according to the rate-books:—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Aston-le-Walls	1000	30	1	...	62	58	120	£ 2,148	£ 2,287
Appletree, hamlet	680	14	1	...	34	29	63	1,074	1,200
Boddington, Upper.....	1,733	95	4	...	200	208	408	3,230	3,774
Boddington, Lower	1,304	72	2	...	145	155	300	2,530	2,838
Byfield	2,906	226	14	2	435	405	840	5,546	6,540
Chipping Warden	1,910	109	6	...	223	257	480	3,293	3,664
Edgcott	1,274	15	1	...	43	53	96	2,463	2,725
Eydon	1,570	132	15	...	206	271	531	3,463	4,161
Greatworth	848	51	3	...	116	93	209	1,989	2,341
Sulgrave	1,955	134	10	...	298	276	574	3,852	4,550
Woodford	2,651	183	14	...	384	358	742	4,267	5,057
Farndon West, hamlet
Hinton, hamlet
	17,831	1,061	71	2	2,146	2,163	4,363	33,855	39,137

CHARITIES OF CHIPPING WARDEN HUNDRED, as abstracted from the last Parliamentary Reports, with the dates, names of donors, &c. See also the histories of the parishes.

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what places and purposes applied.	Annual value.
1711.	Poor's Land and Benefaction Fund	Aston-le-Walls parish	£6 0 0
	Poor's Land	Boddington parish, poor	12 15 6
1740.	Dr Maynard (£100)	Ditto, school	5 0 0
1774.	Dr Knowler (£50)	Ditto, ditto	2 10 0
	Donor unknown (£15)	Ditto, ditto	0 17 0
1791.	William Miller (£50)	Ditto, ditto	2 10 0
	Richard Wainman (£90)	Ditto, ditto	4 10 0
	George Cosbrook	Ditto, ditto	0 2 6
1758.	Richard Lamprey (rent)	Ditto, ditto	3 0 0
	48 pecks of wheat annually	Byfield parish, poor
	Poor's allotment	Ditto, ditto	35 0 0
1522.	Thomas Shaw (causeway land)	Ditto, ditto	25 0 0
1693.	Samuel Greenwood (rent)	Ditto, school	2 14 6
1802.	Sir John Knightley (£100)	Ditto, Sunday-school	2 17 6
1725.	Thomas Edwards (£10)	Ditto, bread to poor	0 10 0
1467.	Wm. Smart (town estate)	Chipping Warden parish	80 0 0
1694.	Deering's Charity	Greatworth parish	20 0 0
1722.	John Hodges (rent)	Sulgrave parish, bread to poor ...	4 0 0
	Ditto	Ditto, school	4 0 0
	Walker's Gifts	Ditto, poor	3 4 0
1794.	John Haycock (rent)	Ditto, ditto	2 0 0
1763.	Robert Gardner (rent)	Ditto, bread to poor	7 16 0
	Ditto	Ditto, school	5 0 0
	Ditto	Ditto, the trustees	1 1 0
1776.	Ditto (£500)	Ditto, apprenticing a poor boy, &c.	25 0 0
	Thomas Ash (£5)	Ditto, poor	0 5 0
	Donor unknown (£3)	Ditto, ditto	0 3 0
1670.	Henry Musters (rent)	Woodford parish, ditto	3 5 0
	Poor's Estate	Ditto, ditto	5 6 0
1612.	John Gardner (£20)	Ditto, ditto	4 0 0
	Donor unknown (£5)	Ditto, ditto	0 5 0
	Church Land	Ditto, ditto	0 16 6

£269 2 6

ASTON-LE-WALLS PARISH.

This parish, which includes the hamlet of Appletree, and part of the grange or reputed manor of West Warden, is bounded on the north by Boddington, on the east by Byfield, on the south by Chipping Warden, and on the west by Claydon and Cropedy in Oxfordshire. The East and West Junction Railway passes through this parish, which contains 1000 acres. Its population in 1801 was 225; in 1831, 240; in 1841, 252; in 1851, 254; in 1861, 221; and in 1871, 183. The rateable value of the parish is £2148, and the gross estimated rental £2287. The land varies from a strong loam to a sandy soil, and the lordship is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture. Wm. H. F. Plowden, Esq. (lord of the manor), and Richard Aubrey Cartwright, Esq., are the principal proprietors.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Estone, as it is written in the Domesday Book, or Aston, Aston-le-Walls, or Aston-in-the-Walls, as it is variously written in later records, contained six hides of land, which were held by Malger of Geoffrey de Mandeville. These six hides were then valued at £5, though in the Confessor's reign they were rated only at 5s. "This Geoffrey de Mandeville," writes Bridges, "was distinguished by his valour in the battle of Hastings, and after the victory was richly rewarded by the Conqueror. Besides the lordships he gave him, seven of which lay in Northamptonshire, he made him Constable of the Tower of London, and continued him in that post during life." In the reign of Henry II., the lordship of Aston, with the hamlet of Apeltre, contained seven hides, and was held by William de Bologna of the successor of Geoffrey de Mandeville. In the second year of the reign of Edward I. (1274), Robert de Sutton died seized of this manor, and in the ninth of Edward II. (1316), Richard, his son, was certified to be lord of Aston and Apeltre. With the family of Sutton it continued for many generations, and in the twenty-second of Henry VIII. (1531), Edward Sutton, Lord Dudley, levied a fine of it. This nobleman was succeeded by Sir John Dudley, Knight, who in the thirty-second of the same reign obtained a grant of the manor of Appletree, which before the dissolution of the monasteries belonged to the monks of Chacombe, in this county, and the manor of West Warden, in Bedfordshire, all of which, with the manor of Aston, passed from him in marriage with his daughter to John Butler, Esq., second son of Ralph Butler, Esq. of Sabridgeworth, in Hertfordshire. From John Butler, Esq., this manor descended lineally to his great-grandson, Alban Butler, Esq., who died in 1617, and his estates passed to his daughter and heiress, Elizabeth, wife of Francis Plowden, Esq. of Plowden, in Shropshire. William Plowden, Esq., great-grandson to Francis, we are told by Mr Baker, "was a colonel in King James II.'s guards, whose fortunes he followed into Ireland and France; but after a short residence at the court of St Germain's, was, through the interest of his wife's uncle, the Duke of Shrewsbury, and the Countess of Sunderland, permitted to return to England and take possession of the family estates, his three elder brothers having died without issue. From his presumed attachment to the countess originated the song of 'Plowden of Plowden Hall,' by Wycherley, the comic poet. He rebuilt the manor-house at Aston, and lived there a few years; but being a Catholic, he became an obnoxious man to the violent Whigs of the neighbourhood, particularly to a Colonel Montague, who then resided in the present Lord Guilford's house, at Chipping Warden; and not having taken the oath of allegiance to King William, his six coach-horses, by virtue of an act recently passed against nonjurors, were seized on entering Banbury, and impounded by a magistrate, being worth above five pounds each. He immediately quitted Aston in disgust, and it has been deserted by the family ever since." The estate continued in the possession of the family, and now belongs to William Henry Francis Plowden, Esq. of Plowden Hall, Shropshire, who succeeded his father, William Plowden, Esq., in 1869.

The Manor-House, now a farmhouse, stands west of the church. Traces of its original splendour are still visible.

The Village of Aston-le-Walls is situated in a wooded valley about eight miles north-east from Banbury. Bridges tells us that "the town is reported to have been formerly larger, and foundation walls have been dug up towards Apeltre."

The Church, dedicated to St Leonard, consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch, chancel, and a low tower containing three bells and a clock. The chancel is entered under an open arch, and the altar is ascended by three high steps. In the south wall are stone seats for the priest and deacon, and a double piscinæ. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £9, 9s. 7d., and now worth about £600 per annum. In the north wall of the chancel is the monumental effigy of an ecclesiastic, under an arch, and in the nave are brasses and a marble slab to the memory of the family of Butler. The patronage is vested in the President and Fellows of St John's College, Oxford, who purchased it in 1720 from William Plowden, Esq., the then lord of the manor, and the Rev. Henry Thorpe, M.A., is incumbent. The rectory consists of 140 acres of land, and moduses of £174, 1s. 6d. from Appletree, and £24, 10s. for that portion of West Warden which is within this parish.

The Rectory House stands near the centre of the village.

The Catholic Chapel, which stands at the south-east end of the village, was built and endowed by Edmund Plowden, Esq., in 1826, and was opened in July 1827. The windows are partly filled with stained glass; the altar-piece is a representation of our Saviour crucified between the two thieves. The chancel is separated from the body by a handsome screen, surmounted by the rood, bearing the figure of our crucified Redeemer. There is a small gallery at the west end, in which there is a harmonium. Near the chapel is the presbytery, and there is a day-school attached to the chapel, built in 1873 by the trustees of the late Wm. Plowden, Esq., and supported by his son, the present lord of the manor. The Rev. William Hammond is the priest.

APETREE or APPLETREE is a hamlet forming the south-western division of this parish, the rateable value of which is £1074; the gross estimated rental is £1200. It contains from six to seven hundred acres, of which Lord Overstone, Thomas Horley, Esq., Captain Severn, and the Rev. Henry A. Holden are the principal proprietors. Appletree being a member of Aston, its manorial history is included in it. This hamlet supports its own poor.

Biography.—The Rev. Alban Butler, a learned Catholic divine, was the second son of Simon Butler, Esq. of Appletree, and born here in 1710. For extent of possessions and splendour of descent, his family once vied with the noblest and the wealthiest of the land, but were reduced to slender circumstances at the time of his birth. His grandfather was a Protestant, and according to the tradition of the family, was the confidential agent of the Duke of Devonshire and the Earl of Warrington in inviting the Prince of Orange to England. The subject of this notice, when about eight years old, was sent to the English College at Douay, Mr Holman of Warkworth undertaking to defray the expenses of his education; "and no student was more humble, more devout, more exact in every duty, more obedient or mortified." After completing the usual course of studies he received holy orders, and after making a tour through Europe as tutor and companion to three young noblemen, members of the illustrious house of Talbot, he was appointed to a mission in Staffordshire, and here he brought to a conclusion his great work on the "Lives of the Saints." It was first published in London in 1745, in 5 vols. 4to; a Dublin edition appeared in 1780, in 12 vols. 8vo; an Edinburgh edition in 1800; a London stereotype edition in 1815; and another edition in the same number of vols. in Derby in 1842. He was a perfect master of the Italian, Spanish, French, Latin, and Greek languages, and possessed some skill also in those of the East. He was elected President of the English College of St Omer's, and Vicar-General to the Bishops of Arras, St Omer, Ipres, and Boulogne; and after a life of the most exemplary piety, he died on the 10th of May 1773, in the sixty-third year of his age. A "Treatise on the Movable Feasts," written by him, has been since edited by Mr Challoner; three volumes of his "Discourses" have been published under the superintendence of Mr Jones, and an "Account of his Life and Writings" has been published by Mr Chas. Butler of Lincoln's Inn, his nephew, who erected a handsome monument to his memory in the chapel of the English College at St Omer.

WEST WARDEN hamlet, containing one farmhouse, is situated partly in this and partly in the parishes of Chipping Warden and Woodford. This estate formed part of the possessions of the Abbey of Warden, in Bedfordshire, prior to the dissolution of the religious houses in the reign of Henry VIII. Aubrey Cartwright, Esq., is the present proprietor.

Post-Office.—Letters received here through the Leamington post-office.

Budd Misses Susanna, Ann, and Mary
Hammond, Rev Wm. (Catholic)
Thorpe, Rev. Henry, M.A. rector

Farmers and Graziers.

(Marked * reside at Appletree.)

*Archer Benj.
*Astel John and William
Budd Henry

Carpenter Edward Haslewood Thomas
Johnson Daniel, Red Hill
Mattingley Thos. Manor-House
Phillips John

BODDINGTON PARISH.

This parish includes the two lordships of Upper and Lower Boddington, and is bounded by Wormleighton, in Warwickshire, on the west, Stoneton on the north, Byfield on the east, and Aston on the south. It contains 3037 acres, and its population in 1801 was 476; in 1831, 662; in 1841, 675; in 1851, 926; in 1861, 750; and in 1871, 708. The rateable value of the parish is £5760, and its gross estimated rental £6612. The soil of the lower grounds is clay, that of the upper a sandy loam; and the lordship is about equally divided between arable land and pasture. The principal proprietors are Earl Spencer (lord of the manor); George Fessey Wills, Esq.; Leaman James, Esq.; Arthur H. Hursby, Esq.; and Miss Cleaver. About 80 acres of the great reservoir for the Oxford Canal is within this parish.

Manor.—One of these lordships was the freehold of Turi before the Conquest, and at the time of the Domesday survey belonged to the Earl of Morton, to whom Leuvin was under-tenant. It then consisted of 2 hides of land, which had been valued at £5, but was reduced to £4. The other lordship belonged to Hugh de Abrincis, Earl of Chester, nephew to the Conqueror, and contained 1 hide; it was held by one Robert, and had been rated at 30s., but was then advanced to 40s.; this had been the freehold of Aschill in the Saxon times. In the reign of Henry II., Fulk Paynel held 2 hides here, one of which was of the fee of Chester; William Meschin held 1 hide, and there was one hide of the fee of the Bishop of Lincoln. In the 9th of Edward II. (1316), Robert de Felton and Robert Paynel were lords of Boddington. In the 20th of Richard II. (1397), Sir John de Felton died seized of this manor, which had descended to him from his ancestors. Sir Edmund Hastings, Knight, died in the 27th of Henry VI. (1449), seized of both manors, and left them to William Hastings, his son, from whom they descended to Sir Roger Hastings, and of him were purchased by Sir John Spencer of Wormleighton. In this family they continued to the present time, but the manor-house was sold in 1706, by the Countess-dowager of Sunderland, to Mr John Smith, the celebrated mezzotinto engraver, and is now reduced to a farmhouse. The priories of Clatercote, Catesby, Tickford, Chacomb, and the Hospitalers of St John of Jerusalem had each possessions here.

The Village of Upper Boddington stands on an eminence about 9 miles S.W. of Daventry, 14 N. by W. from Towcester, 10 N. from Banbury, and contains several respectable houses. The lordship has an area of 1733 acres, of the rateable value of £3230, and its gross estimated rental is £3774.

LOWER BODDINGTON contains 1304 acres; its rateable value is £2530, and the gross estimated rental amounts to £2838. The village is situated in a valley about a mile south of Upper Boddington, and both maintain their own poor separately.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, is a handsome structure, seated on a hill at Upper Boddington, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch and chancel, and an embattled tower containing five bells and a clock. In the chancel is a very curious old wooden chest. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £20, and now valued at £900 per annum, in the gift of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and the Rev. Edward Townsend Sale, B.D., is the rector. The rectory consists of 490a. 2r. 33p. of land, and a rate tithe of 11s. 5½d. yearly, in lieu of all tithes and moduses whatsoever. The Rectory House, a handsome residence, stands a little north of the churchyard.

A Wesleyan Methodist Chapel was erected at Upper Boddington in 1865.

The School, erected in 1870, at Upper Boddington, is endowed with about £20 a year, being the amount of the interest of several benefactions, for which 20 children are taught free.

Lapworth's Charity, consisting of 18a. 19p., yields about £30 per annum, which is expended on the poor of the parish.

UPPER BODDINGTON.

Post-Office.—Wall-Box. Cleared at 4.50. P.M., letters viâ Leamington. The nearest money-order office is Byfield.

Amos Thomas, gardener
Archer Thos. shoemaker and parish clerk
Ariss George, boot and shoe-maker
Ariss Wm. wheelwright, &c.
Bunting Mark, blacksmith and shopkeeper
Fairbrother George, tailor
Gilbert Benjamin, shoemaker
Herritage Wm. baker & farmer

Hull Thomas, butcher, &c.
Marriott James, tailor
Marshall Mr James
Mold Edwin, carpenter
Mold Thomas, carpenter
Sale Rev. Edward Townsend, B.D., rector
Wills George Fessey, Esq.
Wilson Mrs Sarah Ann, vict.
Plough
Wimbush William, tailor

Farmers and Graziers.

Andrews Richard
Band John Oliver, Spella House
Band Thomas
Gardner Thomas
Green Robert
Hammond William
Hill George Selby
Middleton Clarke
Miller Richard
Miller Robert
Sanders Thomas

Carriers.—William Bradshaw, to Banbury on Monday and Thursday, and to Leamington on Saturday; and Thomas Hull, to Banbury on Monday and Thursday.

LOWER BODDINGTON.

Betts James, baker
Betts John, wheelwright and shopkeeper
Betts Thomas, carpenter, brick and tile maker and farmer
Budd Mr John
Budd Richard, shopkeeper

Budd Robert, butcher and vict.
Carpenters' Arms

Farmers and Graziers.

Andrews Job
Borton James
Borton William

Budd William
Cooper John Weston
Fessey William
Fletcher Isaac
Goodwin William Hammond John
Sear Amos

Carrier.—John Cherry, to Banbury on Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday.

BYFIELD PARISH.

This parish, which includes the small insulated hamlet or farm of Trafford, is bounded on the north by Charwelton, on the east by Hinton, on the south by Farndon and Aston-le-Walls, and on the west by Priors Marston in Warwickshire. It contains 2966 acres, and its population in 1801 was 842; in 1831, 952; in 1841, 1079; in 1851, 1060; 1861, 901; and in 1871, 840 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £5546, and the gross estimated rental is £6540. The soil varies much in quality, but it is chiefly a red loam, and a light red and sandy land. The principal owners are—Richard Aubrey Cartwright, Esq. (lord of the manor), Mr William Bromley, Rev. Thomas Farebrother, Mr George Farebrother, Mrs Frances Coates, Mr George Hitchcock, Lord Rendlesham, the trustees of the late Mr John Harris, Mr Edmund Potter, Messrs Complin and Edwards, and Mr Richard Cleaver.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey Ivo held of Hugh de Grentemaisnil 2 hides of land here, which in the Confessor's time had been the freehold of three thanes, and rated at 2s., but was then advanced to 10s. By the same survey, Hugh Earl of Chester held of the king 8 hides in Bivield, and Robert de Rothelent held them of him. There was a meadow a mile in length and 8 furlongs in breadth, and the whole had been rated then, as before the Norman invasion, when it was the freehold of Aschil, at £8. In the reign of Henry II. there were 8 hides in Byfield of the fee of Leicester; and in the 20th year of the reign of Edward III. (1347), John Mareschall of Hinton accounted for a fourth part of a knight's fee here as of the fee of William Longespey, John de St Andrew for a fourth part of a fee of the Honor of Leicester, and John de Verney for a third part of a fee held of the Lady Holland. In the reign of Edward III. the family of Parles held a manor here called Parles Manor, and which passed in marriage to John Comberford in the reign of Edward IV.; and besides this there were three other manors in Byfield, called St Ebrulf's Abbey Manor, Zouch or Verney Manor, and St Andrew or Gotham Manor. The Parles Manor passed from Thomas Comberford, Esq., in the 5th of Henry VIII. (1514), to William Fitzherbert. Sir Thomas Andrew of Charwelton in 1564 died possessed of this and another manor here, which he had purchased of Lord St John. These two manors have subsequently been blended together, and called Seawell's Manor, from the family of that name who purchased them. The whole of the manors passed through several intermediate possessors down to Thomas Carter, Esq., who died in 1835. It remained in his family until 1856, when it passed from the sister, the late Mrs Cartwright, to her son, Richard Aubrey Cartwright, Esq. of Edgcott House, the present possessor. None of the manor-houses are now standing.

The Village of Byfield, which is large and respectable, is pleasantly situated on a slight eminence, about $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. by S. of Daventry, 9 N.E. from Banbury, 13 N.E. from Towcester, 18 S.W. from Northampton, and 97 from London. The western part of it is called Westrop or Westhorp.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, is a large and handsome stone structure in the Decorated style, consisting of nave, north and south aisles, and chancel, small transept called the Trafford aisle, south porch, and a lofty embattled tower, containing 5 bells and a clock, and surmounted by a spire. At each of the angles is an octangular turret, and the west front is ornamented with three niches having projecting canopies beautifully wrought. In the chancel are a sedilia and piscina, and the Trafford and north aisles also contain piscinæ in good preservation. The church was thoroughly restored in 1871 at a cost of £2500, raised by voluntary contributions. The beautifully carved old oak seats in the nave were restored, and the whole building furnished with open oak sittings of a similar character. The west arch was opened, a carved oak pulpit, resting on a stone pedestal, and a carved oak lectern and reading-desk erected. A leper's window in the chancel, near the reading-desk, was discovered during the restoration. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £28, and now worth about £1000 per annum, in the gift of the President and Fellows of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and incumbency of the Rev. Francis Henry Curgenven, M.A. The church land consists of 524a. 23p., allotted in lieu of tithes.

The Rectory House, which stands N.E. of the church, is a substantial stone building.

Here is an Independent Chapel, erected in 1827; and one belonging to the Primitive Methodists, built in 1849.

The National School is supported by subscription, by Government grant, and the school pence.

A Reading-Room was established here in 1871; it has a small library attached, and is supplied with the London and local papers and periodicals.

Charities.—The poor's land consists of 17a. 2r. 34p., which lets for £28 per annum. By ancient usage there are provided and given to the poor of Byfield and Westrop 48 pecks of wheat yearly by the rector. The custom is recognised and confirmed by an Act of Parliament, passed in 1779, for the enclosure of the parish; and the specified quantity of wheat is distributed regularly on St Thomas's Day, by the rector and churchwardens, among the poor persons considered most proper objects of the charity. Thomas Shaw, in 1521, gave a messuage, with appurtenances, to repair the common church ways, and for other charitable uses ; the charity now consists of 6 cottages, 10a. 2r. 26p. of land allotted by the Commissioners of Enclosure. The Rev. Sir John Knightley, Bart., in 1802, left the interest of £100 to the Sunday-school. Mr John Lovitt in 1836 left the interest of £150 to the poor of this parish.

TRAFFORD is a hamlet containing one farmhouse and 325a. of land, which belongs to Richard Aubrey Cartwright, Esq., D.L.

Post, Money-Order Office, and Post-Office Savings Bank.—Alfred Wm. Budd, sub-post-master. Letters arrive from Daventry at 9 A.M., and are despatched at 5 P.M.

Anthony Mrs Ann
Barnes Miss Susan, & Hopkins
Mrs Joyce, ladies' seminary
Barnes Mr William
Billson Mr Richard
Bottomley William, master,
National School
Bradshaw Richard, shoemaker
Brightwell Thos. Hy. maltster
& vict. Rose and Crown
Brown Rev. Chas. (Independent)
Budd Alfred Wm. grocer, P.-O.
Burton Benjamin, shoemaker
Bush Samuel, Amos, & Joseph, grocers (who. and ret.), wine and spirit merchts. and corn-millers ; and agents to the General Fire and Life Office, and at Banbury
Claridge Richard, carpenter
Clarke Mrs Mary
Coates Mrs Frances
Curgenven Rev. Francis Henry,
M.A., rector
Dodd Charles, grocer
Durrant Benoni Pearson, wtmr.
Elliman John, miller
Eyles James, butcher
Eyles Rd. collar & harness mkr.
Eyles Rbt. colr. & harness mkr.
Eyles Thomas, painter, &c.

Flowers Edward, farm bailiff
Floyd James, shoemaker
Fowke Fred. Wm. M.D. surgeon
Freeman Fd. plumber & glzr.
Frost Samuel, vict. New Inn
Gardner Edward, tailor
Gardner Mrs Elizabeth
Gardner William, beer retailer
Hopley Mr Richard
Hutt Jas. carpenter & wheelwrt.
Johnson Charles, baker
Kerrod William, millwright, &c.
Lawrence John, stonemason
Lawrence Samuel, stonemason
Lawrence William, stonemason
Lord Mrs Elizabeth
Lord Robert, butcher & baker
Marlow Geo. rope & twine mkr.
Marlow George, parish clerk
Mason Thomas, blacksmith
Newcomb Samuel, vict. Bell
Newcomb Thomas, shoemaker
Owen Mr John
Oxley Jonas, chairmaker
Plummer George, plumber, &c.
Potter Mr Edmund
Saul George, cooper
Sedgwick Wm. draper & clothr.
and agent for the Manchester
Fire and Life Office
Seear Mr Thomas

Sewell Thomas, castrator and
beerhouse
Smith Henry, butcher & baker
Smith James, higgler
Smith Joseph, chimney-sweeper
Thornton Mrs Elizabeth
Thornton Thos. beerh. & higgler.
Townsend John, blacksmith
Wills Mr Henry
Yorke Mrs Caroline, milliner

Farmers and Graziers.

Barnes Edward
Billson Thomas Richard Jordan
(& maltster and corn-dealer)
Brightwell George
Brightwell Thomas Henry
Bromley John
Bromley William (yeoman)]
Cleaver Richard (yeoman)
Dodd William
Douglas Geo. Trafford House
Fancott Mrs Harriet
Farebrother George (yeoman)
Holdom Joseph
Howes Samuel
Lines William Messenger Martin
Potter William
Saul John
Thornton Thomas
Whitmill Miss Hannah

Railway (East and West Junction).—G. Marshall, stationmaster.

Carriers.—Levi West, to Daventry on Wednesday, to Banbury on Thursday, and Leamington on Saturday. William Gardner, to Banbury on Monday and Thursday, and Daventry on Wednesday and Saturday.

CHIPPING WARDEN PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Aston-le-Walls and West Farndon, on the east by Eydon, on the south by the river Cherwell, which divides it from Edgcott and from Wardington, in Oxfordshire, and on the west by Prescott, in the same county. The parish contains 1910 acres ; and its population in 1801 was 294 ; in 1831, 500 ; in 1841, 545 ; in 1851, 520 ; in 1861, 489 ; and in 1871, 480. Its rateable value is £3293, and the gross estimated rental is £3664. The soil is principally a red loam, and about half the lordship is in permanent pasture. The principal proprietors are the Baroness North (the lady of the manor) and Richard Aubrey Cartwright, Esq.

Manor.—This lordship was held of the crown, by Guy de Reinbuedcurt, at the time of the Domesday survey. It then contained 2 hides and 3 virgates of land, which, with 2 mills of the yearly rent of 26s., and 20 acres of meadow, was rated at £8. It was the freehold of Testis, and rated at £5 before the Conquest. This Guy de Reinbuedcurt held 10 lordships of the Conqueror in this county, which were subsequently called the barony of Warden, from this lordship of Warden being the capital manor of the barony. Richard, his son, succeeded to his estates, and leaving no male issue, it was carried in marriage by his daughter Margery to Robert Foliot. In the reign of Henry II., Robert, son of the said Robert Foliot, held $2\frac{1}{2}$ hides here of the king in capite. He had issue a daughter, Margery, wife of Wyschard Ledet, to whom she carried the manor in marriage, and from whom it descended to his daughter, wife of Henry de Braybroc. This gentleman obtained a grant of a weekly market here, which in the 11th year of the reign of Henry III. (1226) was prohibited as injurious to the Bishop of Lincoln's market at Banbury, but in 1237, Gerard de Furnival obtained a re-grant of it. The steps and base of the market-cross are still remaining near the churchyard wall, the market itself having fallen into disuse centuries since. Morton is of opinion that Warden was a market town in Saxon times, and derives its name of Cheping from ceapana, to buy or cheapen. In the 11th of Edward I. (1283), John de Latimer died seized of this manor, which he held of the king in capite by the service of $2\frac{1}{2}$ knight's fees, and an annual payment of 20s. towards the guard of Rockingham Castle. The yearly profits arising from it at that time amounted to £33, 6s. Thomas de Latimer, son of John de Latimer, was certified to be lord of the manor and hundred of Warden in the 9th of Edward II. (1316). The manor continued in the possession of the family of Latimer till the 12th of Henry IV. (1411), when Edward Latimer died without issue, and his estate descended to John Griffin of Braybrook, the grandson of his sister. In the 23d of Henry VI. (1445) this gentleman died seized of the manor of West Warden, and leaving no issue, he was succeeded by Nicholas Griffin, his nephew, from whom the manor and hundred of Warden descended, in the 6th of Henry VII. (1491), to Nicholas Griffin, his son and heir. Thomas Griffin, his eldest son and successor, received the honour of knighthood. In the 9th of Elizabeth (1567), Clement Catesby purchased this manor, with the advowson of the church, the hundred of Warden, and several other manors, for £2040; and from him it passed to Edward Griffin of Dingley, the younger brother of Sir Thomas, and Attorney-General to King Edward VI. and Queen Mary, and who died seized of it in the 11th of Queen Elizabeth (1569), and left it to Edward Griffin, Esq., his eldest son. In the 17th of James I. (1620), Sir Richard Saltonstall, Knight, died possessed of this manor, hundred, and advowson, and from this family they passed in marriage to the second Earl of Halifax. This nobleman was succeeded in this estate by his daughter Lucy, first wife of Francis North, first Earl of Guilford. Their eldest son, Frederick Lord North, filled the arduous office of prime minister during the American war. In 1792, by the death of his father, Lord North succeeded to the earldom of Guilford, which has been successively enjoyed by his three sons. On the death of the ninth baron, who was third Earl of Guilford, the earldom descended to the male heir, and the barony became divided among his three daughters. The youngest of these died in 1835, and the eldest (who was Marchioness of Bute) in 1841, when the abeyance naturally terminated in favour of his second daughter, Lucy Baroness North. This lady married in 1835 John Sidney Doyle, Esq., who in 1838 assumed the surname of North, and succeeded to the barony in 1841. The manor is still in the possession of the Baroness, whose seat is Wroxton Abbey, Oxfordshire.

The Castle, or baronial residence of the ancient lords of Chipping Warden, stood south of the church, in the grounds between the entrance lodge to Edgcott and the mansion.

The Manor-House, now a farmhouse, stands east of the church, and was built by the Saltonstalls, in the seventeenth century.

Antiquities.—Black Grounds, near the village, is the site of the Roman station Brinavis. It was the intermediate station between Isannavaria (near Daventry) and Ælia Castra (Alcester, in Oxfordshire), and was situated on the Portway, the name by which this road, which diverged from the Watling Street, was designated. Upon ploughing these grounds, which comprise about 40 acres, and are called Black Grounds, as being of a darker colour than the other parts of the parish, several foundation and other hewn stones have been frequently met with, and many Roman coins have also been found on the spot. The Rev. G. G. Walford, the late rector, in an interesting notice of a recent discovery of Roman urns found here, which he communicated to the British Archæological Association, and which was published in the Journal of that body, vol. v. part i., writes thus: "The south side of this Roman station falls with a deep slope from the vallum into a marshy piece of ground, being portion of a meadow below which is bounded by the river Charwell. During the month of January this marsh-land has been undergoing an extensive drainage. The cuttings, which are wide, and from three to seven feet deep, extend from the brow of the hill to the flat ground of the meadow. I have narrowly watched the progress of the work, and the result has been the discovery of the following articles: Fragments of Samian pottery embossed. No. 1. A fragment, four inches wide and three inches high. This appears to have been a portion of a much-prized bowl, from the great care taken in boring the holes for the rivets, which are so arranged as not to interfere with the ornamental figures. One compartment represents Apollo with his lyre, seated, with two circles at the angles. The other compartment, in the upper part, contains a semicircle in the angle, and a branch of a shrub, and a hare squatting. The compartments are divided by strings of small beads. The top is not embellished with the usual festoon and tassel border. No. 2. A fragment, three inches wide and three and a half high. The upper part of the design bears the festoon and tassel ornament. Of the design there remains the head, breast, and fore-legs of a stag running, and above, a lion entire, on the point of springing down upon him. No. 3. Three inches wide and two high. The lower part of this fragment comprises a part of the circle of the bottom; above it are the legs of two gladiators, the right foot of each resting on a square stone. In the angles are two circles of the plain bright Samian ware: No. 1 is a considerable portion of a very shallow dish, eight inches in diameter, and one and a half deep. The brim is ornamented with the ivy-leaf pattern. No. 2. The bottom of a bright Samian dish, with the potter's name in the centre—SALIAPVS. The other fragments, of which there are many, are too much broken to carry any interest with them. Of vases, I have large portions of three, which, when put together, are nearly entire: 1st. A buff-coloured indented vase, eight and a half inches high, and six and a quarter wide. No. 2. A buff-coloured bowl, eight inches in diameter, and five and a half high. No. 3. An elegant lead-coloured vase, seven inches in diameter, and four and a half high. No. 4. A black dish, the rim nine and a half inches in diameter, three and a half inches high. One of the drains cut through four skeletons, disposed with the heads to the west and the feet to the east. They were enveloped in bog, and do not appear to have been interred with the usual accompaniments of sepulchral vases; nor did the soil present any ashes or signs of cremation. They lay a few yards beyond the descent of the vallum, at the depth of five feet. One was the remains of a female, and just above the body a round ball or pebble of ironstone was met with, and immediately above it a small bronze finger-ring, perfectly plain. A large quantity of the bones of animals were also dug up—namely, the skull and other bones of horses; the jaw and tusks of a boar, entire; the jaw-bones and teeth of cows, sheep, and goats; portions of the antler of a stag; a cow's horn, and one which I conceive to be the horn of a goat. Large foundations were also cut through, and the stones removed; they were uncut, and presented nothing particular in their appearance. All the above articles were discovered in that part of the station which is called the Caldwells." In 1849, Mr Walford also discovered, in the lower part of the Caldwell, the foundations of a Roman building, a plan of which he forwarded to the Council of the Archaeological Society, who published it in their Journal. It consisted of two or three apartments, the bathroom, ashpit, &c.

Wallow Bank.—Of this vallum only a small portion in a garden at the north end of the village is left. Bridges says, "It is an earthen rampire at the north end of the town, pointing directly upon Aston-in-the-Wall. It is twenty-four paces in length, and hath a narrow ridge; the western side of it is almost perpendicularly steep, the eastern is gradually sloped; from the foot to the ridge of it is nine paces." Morton conjectures it to have extended from the Charwell below Walton to Aston-in-the-Wall, on the river Leam, a distance of about eight miles, and to have been raised by the Romans as a fortification to secure their conquests from the frequent incursions of the native Britons, who inhabited the forests of Warwickshire.

Arbury, or Arberry Bank, the remains of an old entrenchment a little west of the village, is supposed by Morton to be either a camp of the West Saxons in their wars with the Mercians, or formed by the Danes prior to the battle of Edgcott, upon Danesmoor; but Mr Baker thinks it was neither a camp nor an enclosed entrenchment, "but a line of vallum, which, if not a component part of, certainly coalesced with Willow Bank."

The Village of Chipping Warden is pleasantly situated on the turnpike road from Banbury to Daventry, about $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.N.E. of the former, and 10 S.W. from the latter town.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter and St Paul, is a large stone structure in the Decorated style, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch, chancel, and north vestry, and a pinnacled tower containing five bells and a clock. The interior is well paved and pewed; at the east end of the north aisle is the burial place of the lords of the manor; at the east end of the south aisle are three parallel seats under arches, and a little eastward of them a piscina indicating a chapel, and in the south wall of the chancel is another piscina. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £26, 10s., and now worth about £282 per annum. The patronage is vested in the lady of the manor, and the Rev. Bentick John Francis Doyle, B.A., is the incumbent, and the Rev. John Henry Pullin curate in charge. The rectory consists of about 117 acres, granted in lieu of glebe land and tithes. The lands of West Warden formerly belonged to the Abbey of Warden, in Bedfordshire, and that portion situated in the parish of Chipping Warden pay tithe to the rector. The tithes of West Warden were commuted in 1839 for £34, 3s. 6d. The Rectory House stands north-west of the church. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship in the village; and the National School was erected here in 1832 by the Baroness North.

STONETON, or STAINTON, is an insulated hamlet about 5 miles from Chipping Warden, and generally considered a member of this parish, being assessed with it in the land and assessed taxes and militia, but in every other respect independent of it. It contains one farmhouse, built on the site of the old manor-house in 1810, and about 700 acres of land. The manor-house was surrounded by a deep moat, which was fed by neighbouring springs. Bridges says, Stoneton is supposed to have been formerly a town, as the foundations of walls, in ploughing and digging up the ground, have sometimes been met with. Sir William Spencer levied a fine of the manor of Stoneton in the 23d of Henry VIII. (1532), and from him it descended, by the same title as Althorp, to his Excellency the present Earl Spencer.

Post-Office.—William Hawkes, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Banbury at 9.30 A.M., and are despatched at 4.40 P.M.

Austin John Wm., vict. Griffin	Hawkes Wm. carptr. shopkpr.	Farmers and Graziers.
Borton James, blacksmith	and post-office	Austin John William
Borton William, farrier	Lines Mrs Elizabeth, shopkpr.	Douglas John, Manor-House
Cooknell Samuel, genl. dealer	Lovell Reuben, tailor	Douglas John and William
Doyle Rev. Bentick John Francis,	Pullin Rev. John Henry, curate	Jessey John, Stoneton House
B.A., rector	Robinson William, blacksmith	Johnson Abrm. Warden Hill
Farquharson Geo. master 'National School	Taylor George, stonemason	Lambert Frederick (& maltster)
Gubbins John, sen. shopkeeper	Taylor Thomas, gamekeeper	Lovell Robert
Gubbins John, vict. Rose and Crown	Timms John, parish clerk	Messenger Edmund, Warden Grange
	Ward Thos., wheelwright	Wilson Daniel William
	Young Samuel, shoemaker

Carriers.—John Gubbins, sen., and Henry Higham, to Banbury on Mon. Thurs. and Sat.

EDGCOTT PARISH.

The boundaries of Edgcott or Edgcote parish are formed by Chipping Warden on the north, by Culworth on the east, by Thorp Mandeville on the south, and by Wardington, in Oxfordshire, on the west. It contains 1274 acres ; its population in 1801 was 66 ; in 1831, 96 ; in 1841, 83 ; in 1851, 77 ; in 1861, 103 ; and in 1871, 96 souls. Its rateable value is £2463, and the gross estimated rental is £2725. The soil is principally a deep loam ; the greatest part of the lordship is in permanent pasture, and the whole belongs to Richard Aubrey Cartwright, Esq. of Edgcott House, who is the lord of the manor.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Walchelin held 2 hides of land here of the Bishop of Constance, which, with a mill of the yearly rent of 10s., and 6 acres of meadow, was then valued, as it had been formerly, at £4. In the reign of Henry II., Roger Murdock held these 2 hides of the fee of David Earl of Huntingdon ; and in the 9th year of the reign of Edward II. (1316), Sir Thomas Murdock was lord of Edgcote. In the 20th of this reign (1347), Sir John Murdock accounted for one knight's fee in Edgcote, as held of John de Lewkmore of Harweden. Sir Thomas Murdock, his successor, levied a fine of it in the 6th of Richard II. (1383). In the 9th of Henry IV. (1409), John Lord Lovell of Titchmarsh died seized of this manor ; in the 11th of the same reign, Henry Prince of Wales was in possession of it, and after his accession to the crown in 1413, levied a fine of it. In the 14th of Henry VI. (1436), Richard Buckland died seized of it, and his relict left it to Richard Clarrell for two years, after which it was to pass to Rd. Whittingham, her grandson, in tail-male. Thomas Cromwell, Esq., the king's chief secretary, purchased this manor in 1535. "This distinguished but ill-fated favourite of a capricious monarch," writes Mr Baker, "was the son of a blacksmith at Putney, in Surrey, and born there about the year 1498. His education was limited to reading, writing, and the rudiments of Latin ; but being of an enterprising turn, he visited the Continent, where he made himself master of the German, French, and Italian languages. Having the good fortune to rescue Sir John Russell, afterwards Earl Bedford, from a secret plot against him at Bologna, he is said to have been introduced by him, on his return to England, to Cardinal Wolsey, who employed him as his solicitor or confidential agent. In the hour of distress he did not desert his patron, but ably and successfully defended him in the House of Commons from the charge of treason. Through the intervention of his friend Sir John Russell, the king engaged him in his service ; and he speedily ingratiated himself with his royal master, by fostering his dispute with the Papal See, and rendering it subservient to his rapacity. He was sworn of the Privy Council in 1531, Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1532, Principal Secretary of State and Master of the Rolls in 1534. As a preliminary step to the suppression of the religious houses, he was this year appointed Visitor-General of all the monasteries throughout England. In the exercise of his inquisitorial power, his zeal was more conspicuous than his justice or humanity, but he acquitted himself to the entire satisfaction of his royal master, and honours began to flow in rapidly upon him : he was constituted Lord Privy Seal on the 2d of July 1536 ; elevated to the peerage on the 9th of the same month, by the title of Baron Cromwell of Oakham, in Rutlandshire ; and on the 18th of the same month the new office of Vicar-General, or Vicerent, under the king, as supreme head of the Church, was conferred on him, or rather created for him ; in which capacity he presided in convocation, and took precedence of the archbishops. . . . Having been the chief instrument in suppressing the monastic orders, he shared amply in the spoil ; the king rewarding him with numerous manors and lands, parcel of the dissolved priories, in the counties of Essex, Suffolk, Norfolk, and Leicester. His rank kept pace with his wealth, for in 1537 he was installed Knight of the Garter, and in April 1540 raised to the dignity of Earl of Essex, and appointed Lord High Chamberlain. Aware of the virulence of his enemies, and of the inconstancy of his royal master's temper, he sought to strengthen his interest by engaging the king in marriage with the Princess Anne of Cleves, on whose gratitude for her elevation, and zeal for the Lutheran religion, he relied for powerful protection ; but his apparently politic measure hastened his ruin. The king, disgusted with his new consort, was determined on a divorce, and having transferred his affections, or rather his passions, to Catherine Howard, abandoned Cromwell to her machinations, and on the 10th of June 1540, the deserted favourite was suddenly arrested at the council table by her uncle, the Duke of Norfolk, and committed to the tower on a charge of heresy and high treason. The evidence adduced was not merely improbable, but absolutely frivolous; yet a bill of attainder against him passed the Houses of Parliament without permitting him to be heard in his own defence—a proceeding, however, which, though utterly unjust and unconstitutional in itself, was, as applied to him, a just retaliation for his having introduced the precedent in the cases of the Countess of Salisbury and others in the preceding session. He made the most humble and even abject appeals to Henry for mercy, in which he was warmly seconded by Archbishop Cranmer; but the king was inexorable, and he was brought to the block, on Tower Hill, the 26th of July 1540." After his fall, his lands were escheated to the crown, and in 1543 this manor was included in the dower to Queen Anne of Cleves. Upon her death it was granted by the king to William Chauncey, Esq., from whose descendants it passed to the late Thomas Carter, Esq. At his death in 1835, his sister, Miss Martha Carter, became owner of the manor, and at her demise in 1848 it passed to her sister, the late Mrs Cartwright, who died in 1856, and was succeeded by her son, Richard Aubrey Cartwright, Esq., the present possessor.

DANESMOOR.—South of the village is a valley called Danesmoor, or Dunsmore, as it is commonly called, where, according to the tradition of the neighbourhood, a battle was fought between the Saxons and Danes, but history is silent on the subject. In the 9th of Edward IV. (1469) a sanguinary conflict also took place here between the partisans of that monarch and a body of insurgents, in which the former were defeated, and the Earl of Pembroke, with his two brothers, and eight other gentlemen, taken to Banbury and beheaded. The insurgents, or Yorkists, were estimated at about 20,000, and the king's troops between 17,000 and 18,000 strong; 5000 of the latter, it is said, were left dead on the field on that fatal day. The spot is marked by three small mounds in a triangular position.

The Village of Edgcott, which contains only a few scattered houses, is situated about 6 miles N.E. by N. of Banbury, near to one of the sources of the Cherwell and to the Oxford Canal.

The Church, dedicated to St James, is in the Perpendicular style, and consists of a nave, south aisle, and porch, chancel and north chapel, erected under the will of Dean Buckland for a priest to officiate in, and a tower containing four bells. The interior is well paved and pewed; there is neither arch nor division between the nave and chancel; on the south side within the altar rails is a piscina and a plain locker, and the east window is filled with stained glass, the gift of the late Thomas Carter, Esq. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £12, but now worth about £300 per annum. The advowson has been immemorially appendant to the manor; and the Rev. Arden Bayley, B.A., rural dean, is the present incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1840 for £341, 4s. 10d. In the church are several monuments to the Chauncy family. The Rectory House adjoins the churchyard.

Edgcott House, the seat of Richard Aubrey Cartwright, Esq., is a handsome mansion, erected in 1752 by Richard Chauncy, Esq. It is approached by a double balustraded flight of steps, and occupies a delightfully secluded situation, nearly on the site of the old manor-house. In the hall are several portraits of the Chauncy family. Charles I. and his two sons rested here on the night of the 22d of October 1642, on his way to Edgehill, in Warwickshire, where a pitched battle was fought on the following day between his troops and the Parliamentarians. The bed in which his majesty is said to have slept is still preserved in the present mansion. The king's army, consisting of about 14,000 foot and 4000 horse, encamped between the villages of Edgcott and Cropedy; and the Parliamentary forces, under the Earl of Essex, quartered at Keynton, between Stratford-on-Avon and Banbury. So obstinate and equal was the conflict next morning, that both sides claimed the victory.

Letters are received here through the Banbury post-office.

Cartwright Richard Aubrey, Esq. J.P., Edgcott House	Harrod Edward, gamekeeper Isham William, gardener	Griffin William, Wardington Gate Farm
Bayley, Rev. Arden, B.A., rector and rural dean	Farmers and Graziers.	Root Jonathan, Edgcott Lodge
Atterbury William, butler	Douglas Thomas Henry, Traf- ford Bridge Farm
Bliss Joseph, steward & bailiff

EYDON PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Woodford, on the east by Canons Ashby, on the west by Chipping Warden, and on the south by Culworth. It contains 1570a.; and its population in 1801 was 484; in 1831, 630; in 1841, 647; in 1851, 621; in 1861, 576; and in 1871, 531. The rateable value of the parish is £3463, and the gross estimated rental £4161. The soil of the high ground is a sandy loam, and of the lower grounds a stiff clay with a little gravel. About two-thirds of the lordship is in permanent pasture. Here is an excellent stone for building purposes, and Redwell, one of the principal springs in the parish, is chalybeate. Viscount Valentia, the lord of the manor, the Venerable Archdeacon Clerke, Col. Henry Cartwright, and John Ivens, Esq., are the principal landowners. The Roman road from Bennaventa or Isannavaria to Brinavis passed through this parish.

Manor.—Hugh de Grentemaisnil held 2 hides of land here at the time of the Norman survey. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 2s., with 2 acres of meadow, and the whole had been valued at 40s., but was then rated at 50s. In the reign of Henry II., Richard Fitz-Wale held these 2 hides of the fee of Leicester. In the 9th year of the reign of Edward II. (1316), Richard Wale was lord of the manor of Eydon; and in the 19th of the same reign John Wale levied a fine of the manor. In the 20th of Edward III. (1347), Richard Wale accounted for one knight's fee here of the Honor of Leicester. John Earl of Somerset, eldest son of John of Gaunt, died seized of this manor in the 11th of Henry IV. (1410); his brother was created Duke of Somerset and Earl of Kendal, and married Margaret, the daughter of Sir John Beauchamp of Bletsoe, by whom he had issue an only daughter, Margaret, the wife of Edmund Earl of Richmond, and mother to King Henry VII. By this means the manor of Eydon came to the crown, and continued in it till the 32d of Henry VIII. (1541), when it was granted to Sir John Cope of Canons Ashby. From the family of Cope is passed into the hands of John Browne, Esq., clerk of the Parliament, from whom it descended upon his decease in 1691 to the heirs of his daughter Martha. Sir Thomas Cave, son of Martha Cope, by her husband, Sir Roger Cave, Bart., of Stanford, sold this manor to his mother-in-law, Dame Mary Cave, second wife to Sir Roger; and on her decease in 1721 it descended to her son, Roger Cave, Esq., whose eldest son, William Cave, Esq., in 1750 sold it to Richard Williamson, Esq. This gentleman's children joined in conveying the manor to the Rev. Francis Annesley, who died in 1811, and was succeeded by his nephew, the Rev. Charles A. Francis Annesley, at whose death in 1863 it passed to his late brother, Viscount Valentia of Bletchington Park, Oxfordshire, who died in 1864, and was succeeded by his grandson, Viscount Valentia, the present lord of the manor of Eydon. There was formerly a manor here called Wakelyn Manor, from the family of that name which held it, but it has long been united to the principal manor.

The Priors of St John of Jerusalem, Catesby, and Canons Ashby, and the Abbey of Wroxton, in Oxfordshire, had each possessions here.

The Village of Eydon is pleasantly situated on an eminence about 8 miles S.S.W. of Daventry, the same distance N.W. from Towcester and Banbury, and 10 north of Brackley. A fire broke out here on the 13th of August 1651, which consumed 26 houses, besides stables and out-offices, and 223 loads of corn and hay.

The Church, dedicated to St Nicholas, is a stone structure, partly in the Norman, Early English, and Decorated styles, and consists of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, south porch, and a square embattled tower, in which is a peal of five bells. It was restored and enlarged in 1865, when a south aisle and south porch were added, in memory of the Rev. C. A. F. Annesley. The east window, a beautiful memorial one, in stained glass, to the Empson family, was erected in 1865 by the present rector, who also supplied in 1872 a handsome reredos of encaustic tiles. Several other windows in the chancel and north aisle are filled with stained glass, and the south aisle contains several mural tablets to the Annesley family. There is also in the chancel an ancient piscina in good preservation, and a mural tablet commemorative of the Rev. Francis Clerke, who was rector of this parish for 26 years; and the font, which is of Norman design, is very ancient. The benefice is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £16, 16s. 3d., but now worth about £420 per annum. The patronage is vested in the crown, and the Rev. Arthur John Empson, M.A., is the rector. The church land consists of 261a. 17p., allotted at the enclosure in lieu of all tithes, except about 30a. of old enclosure, which were commuted in 1847 for £14, 7s.

The Rectory House, pleasantly situated a little south of the church, is a commodious Elizabethan structure of stone, built by the present rector in 1857.

The Wesley Chapel is a small brick edifice, built in 1860, to which a Sunday school was added in 1871. The Society of Friends and the Moravians have each a place of worship here; the latter was built in 1810.

The National School, erected in 1854 by the late Mr Annesley, is supported by subscription, Government grant, and school pence.

Charities.—The Rev. Francis Clerke, late rector of Eydon, who died in 1853, left the sum of £500 to the poor of the parish; and his sister, Byzantia Clerke, who died in 1854, left £100. These sums were invested in the 3 per cent. consols, producing £624, 16s. 3d., and handed over to the Charity Commissioners. The annual interest, £18, 14s. 8d., is appropriated as follows, in accordance with the wills of the donors: School, £9, 7s. 6d.; clothing club, £3, 2s. 2d.; and to poor aged persons of the parish, at the discretion of the rector and churchwardens, £6, 5s. Sir John Knightley in 1802 left a sum of money, which was lodged in the 3½ per cent. consols, now yielding £191, 17s.; the interest, £5, 9s. 2d., is appropriated to the Sunday-school.

Eydon Hall, the seat of Viscount Valentia, and now the residence of Colonel Henry Cartwright, is a handsome mansion occupying a gentle eminence S.E. of the village.

Post-Office.—May Juge, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Banbury at 10 A.M., and are despatched at 3.25 P.M.

Cartwright Colonel Henry, J.P.	Haynes William, corn miller	Smith Joseph Jarrit, boot and shoemaker, beer retailer, & farmer
Eydon Hall	Howard George, butcher
Empson Rev. Arthur John, M.A., J.P., rector	Humphries Geo. blacksmith
Coy Thos. carpenter & wheelwright	Juge May, grocer, butcher, and post-office	Taylor Robert, blacksmith & vict. Royal Oak
Dancer John, shopkeeper	Kench Thomas, painter and plumber	Walker George, tailor
Dodd Edw. clock & watchmkr.	Malsbury James, baker, grocer, and farmer	Whitton William, saddler and farmer
Foster John, pig dealer	Neblett Rev. Augustus, chaplain of Canons Ashby	Farmers and Graziers.
Franklin George, cooper	Osborn Mr Thomas	Ivens John (yeoman)
Franklin Richard, carpenter	Page John, surgeon	Ivens Martin (yeoman)
Garrett Mrs Mary Ann	Pamplet John, master National School	Lines Edward
Golby George, stonemason	Pettifer Thomas, farrier & graz.	Lines John
Golby Henry, stonemason	Smith Edward, tailor	Manning William
Golby Richard, stonemason		Thompson William
Gostick John, grocer, baker, and beer retailer		Turney George Scroggs

Carriers.—William Hunt and Abraham Adamson, on Monday and Thursday to Banbury.

GREATWORTH PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Sulgrave, on the east by Hawes and Helmdon, on the south by Farthinghoe, and on the west by Marston St Lawrence. It contains 848 acres, and its population in 1801 was 207; in 1831, 214; in 1841, 184; in 1851, 135; in 1861, 157; and in 1871, 209. The gross estimated rental of the parish is £2341, and the rateable value £1989. The soil of the upper grounds is a light loam, and of the meadows a stiff clay. The principal landowners are William Pulsford, Esq. (lord of the manor); Geo. Rush, Esq.; Corbet Whitton, Esq.; John Alexander Blencowe, Esq.; Messrs William Manning, John Cherry, and George B. Wilkinson. About three-fourths of the parish is in pasture; and it is intersected by the London and North-Western and the Northampton and Banbury Junction Railways.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, William Peverell held 2 hides of land in Greteworde of the fee of the Bishop of Bayeux, half-brother to the Conqueror. In the reign of King Edward this was the freehold of Saulf, and valued at £4, but it was now rated at £3. In the reign of Henry II., Ralph de Keynes held 2 hides here of his own fee; and in the 4th year of the reign of Edward I. (1276), Roger de Leukmore was lord of Greatworth. In this family it remained till the reign of Henry VIII., when a fine was levied of it between Sir Edward Neville and Henry Draper, from whom it passed to Andrew Lord Windsor, one of whose descendants, Edward Lord Windsor, levied a fine of it in the 9th of Elizabeth (1567). The Pargiters, who resided here from the reign of Henry VII., subsequently acquired the manor; and from them it passed in marriage to Charles Howe, Esq., third son of Grubham Howe, Esq. of Langar, Nottinghamshire. This gentleman was the author of a work entitled “Devout Meditations; or, A Collection of Thoughts upon Religious and Philosophical Subjects.” In 1751, George Macaulay, M.D., and Leonora his wife, and Thomas Cooper, Esq., and Frances his wife (grand-daughters of Mr Howe), jointly sold this manor and estate to William Higginson, Esq., whose grandson, the Rev. William Montagu Higginson, sold it to William Pulsford, Esq. of London, the present proprietor.

The Manor-House was accidentally destroyed by fire on Christmas Eve 1793, and the site is now partly occupied by a farmhouse.

The Village of Greatworth is pleasantly situated on a lofty eminence, commanding an extensive view of a richly wooded country, about 5 miles N.W. by N. of Brackley.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, stands at the S.W. end of the village, and consists of a nave, chancel, and a square embattled tower, in which are three bells. The interior is well paved and pewed, and the chancel was re-roofed in 1869. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £9, os. 5d., and now valued at £310 per annum. The Rev. Henry Dyke, B.A., is the incumbent. The rectory consists of 38½ acres of glebe land, and the tithes of the whole lordship, which were commuted in 1845 for £280. The Rectory-House is situated a little south-west of the church.

The National School, erected in 1822, and enlarged in 1845, was founded on Lady Deering's Charity, and endowed with £22 a year, for which 22 children are taught free.

Lady Deering's Charity consists of a rent charge of £15 per annum, out of certain lands in Stutchbury, for the education of poor children. The poor's land consists of 4a. 3r. 26p., which lets for £20 present income per annum; and the Church land, 3a. 3r. 2p., yields an annual rent of £11, 5s.

Post-Office.—Letters arrive here through the Banbury post-office.

Chew Ed. master of Natl. Schl.	Humphries Jas. beerho. & car.	Jackson William
Dyke Rev. Henry, B.A. rector	Farmers and Graziers.	Manning William (yeoman)
Dyson James, shoemaker and	Adkins James (yeoman)	Roberts Richard Beauchamp, parish clerk	Cherry William (and maltster)	Cockley Hill
Golby, James, sawyer	Cox Francis, Greatworth Hall	Turney George, Manor-House

Carriers.—James Humphries, to Banbury on Monday and Thursday, and to Brackley on Wednesday and Saturday.

SULGRAVE PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Morton Pinkney, on the east by Weston-by-Weedon and Helmdon, on the south by Stutchbury, and on the west by Thorp Mandeville. It contains 1955 acres, of the rateable value of £3852, and the gross estimated rental is £4550. Its population in 1801 was 414; in 1831, 576; in 1841, 560; in 1851, 604; in 1861, 565; and in 1871, 574. The soil consists chiefly of a strong clay, and the principal proprietors are the Hon. Colonel Henry Hely Hutchinson (who is lord of the manor), Viscount Valentia, and Messrs William Whitton, Robert Blencowe, Mrs Eagles, and several smaller owners. The greater part of the parish is in grass. The river Tove or Towe takes its rise from Holywell spring, in this lordship, and after passing through Towcester, flows towards Grafton Regis, where it forms the boundary between this county and Buckinghamshire, till it unites with the Ouse below Cosgrave.

"Westward of the church," writes Mr Bridges, "is a hill named Castle Hill, on which was formerly a castle. In the midway between Culworth and this town is about an acre of ground, fenced in with a hedge, called the old churchyard, where the church is supposed to have stood. Stones and bones have been dug up here, and it is preserved as consecrated ground, though never used unless privately by Roman Catholics." This castle or ancient mansion was formerly attached to one of the manors.

About a mile north of the village is a tumulus called Barrow or Burrow Hill. Morton tells us that no fewer than nine counties can be seen from this spot.

Manor.—Gilo, the brother of Anculf, held 4 hides of land here, and Hugh, Landric, and Othbert were his under-tenants, at the time of the Conqueror's survey. The estate lay within the soke of Warden, and was then valued at £7. This Gilo was progenitor of the family of the Pinkeneys, who held the barony of Weedon, of which Sulgrave was a member; he was founder of the Priory of Weedon Pinkeney. In the 22d year of the reign of Edward I. (1294), John de Monthault died seized of a manor here, which was held of Robert de Pinkeley by the service of a sixth part of a knight's fee. In the 4th of Edward III. (1331), the Prior of St Andrews, in Northampton, and Stephen de Trafford were lords of Sulgrave by the service of an annual payment of 20s. towards the guard of Windsor Castle. In the 20th of this reign (1347), Stephen de Trafford accounted for half a knight's fee in Sulgrave, as held of the fee of Pinkeney, and this was henceforth called Trafford's Manor. In the 45th of the same reign (1372), Henry de Arderne levied a fine of it; and in the 18th of Henry VI. (1440), it was purchased of Robert de Arderne by Richard Danvers, Esq. of Culworth, who levied a fine of it in the same year. In this fine it is called the Manor of Netherbury, in Sulgrave. Here is also another manor which was formerly in the possession of William Pinkeney, and held by the family of De Elington. It continued in the male line of this family till the reign of Henry VIII., when it was carried in marriage to Robert Leeson, Esq. of Whitfield, with whose posterity it continued for several generations, and from whom it was called Leeson's Manor. About the year 1604 it passed from this family to the Crewes, and, with the Trafford manor, to John Hodges, Esq., in whom all the manors were proved to centre about the year 1764. The third manor, which was held of the Priory of St Andrew, was surrendered to the crown upon the dissolution of the monasteries, and in the 30th of Henry VIII. (1539) it was granted to Lawrence Washington, Gent., of Northampton. Robert Washington, his son and heir, conjointly with his eldest son, Lawrence, sold this manor in 1610 to Lawrence Makepeace, Gent., of the Inner Temple, London. Lawrence Washington, after the sale of his estate, retired to Brington, where he died; and his second son, John Washington, emigrated to America about the middle of the seventeenth century, and was grandfather of George Washington, the great American patriot (see page 161). Abel Makepeace, son of the purchaser of this manor, sold it in 1659 to Edward Plant of Kelmarsh; and Edward Plant of Overston sold it in 1673 to the Rev. Moses Hodges of Over Worton, in Oxfordshire. His son, John Hodges, in 1700, purchased the other manors of Lord Crewe's trustees; and on his decease they all centred in his brother, the Rev. Moses Hodges, who devised them under the general designation of the Manor of Sulgrave to his daughter Mary, who settled the reversion on her three sisters; all of whose shares became subsequently invested under their respective wills in the Rev. Moses Hodges Bartholomew of Hardington, in Oxfordshire. Colonel the Hon. Henry Hely Hutchinson is the present lord of the manor, to whom it passed by purchase in 1836.

The Manor-House, now a farmhouse, stands at the east end of the village, and was formerly the residence of the Washingtons.

The Village of Sulgrave is 7 miles N.W. of Brackley, 14 S.W. of Northampton, and 7½ N.E. from Banbury.

The Church, dedicated to St James, is situated in the centre of the village, and consists of a nave, south aisle, north and south porches and chancel, and a low embattled tower containing five bells. It was newly roofed, seated, and repaired in 1841 at a cost of £500, raised by a rate and voluntary contributions. At the east end of the south aisle is a brass to the memory of Lawrence Washington and his eleven children, bearing date 1564. The living is a discharged vicarage in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £9, 17s., and now worth about £233 per annum. The Rev. William Harding, M.A., is the present patron and incumbent. The impropriate rectory consists of 343a. 3r. 12p.; and the vicarage of 105a. 21p. allotted in lieu of vicarial tithes, and 1a. 2r. 11p. in exchange for the old churchyard. Viscount Valentia has the impropriate rectory. The Vicarage House stands a short distance west of the church; it has been improved and enlarged by the present vicar.

The Wesleyan Chapel, a small brick building, was erected in 1863; and the Baptist Chapel was built in 1844.

The School is endowed with £9 a year, and supported by subscription; twelve children are taught free; and an Infant School was opened in 1846, which is also supported by voluntary contribution.

Charities.—John Hodges, Esq., in 1722, left a rent charge of £4 per annum, to be distributed in bread among the poor, and £4 to the schoolmaster for teaching ten poor children. Robert Gardiner in 1763 left £14 per annum to be distributed as follow: £7, 16s. in bread to the poor; £5 to the schoolmaster for teaching six poor boys; £1, 1s. for an entertainment to the trustees; and 21s. to be laid up annually to defray the expense of new deeds, &c. He also bequeathed the interest of £500, to be disposed of annually on St Valentine's Day, as follows: 21s. to the minister for preaching a sermon on that day; 21s. to the county hospital; 15s. to entertain the trustees; £3 for clothing six poor boys; £9, 3s. to be distributed to the poor in beef; and £10 for apprenticing a poor boy; total £25. The interest of other bequests is also distributed to the poor annually on St Thomas's Day.

Letters arrive here through the Banbury post-office.

Boswell Thomas, baker
Burman Job, grocer, draper, butcher, and farmer
Cakebread Thos. vict. Six Bells, marbl. mason & gravest. engr.
Compton William, grocer and beer retailer
Course Alfred, miller & farmer
Douglas George Cox, surgeon
East James, parish clerk
Franklin Mrs Mary, vict. Three Compasses
Harding Rev. Wm. M.A. vicar
Hawkes Henry, shoemaker
Hawkins James, tailor

Jones Mrs Ursula Ann, rope
& twine maker & shopkpr.
Kilby Richard, blacksmith
Kinman Mark, harness maker
Reeve Geo. gardner & seedmn.
Smith John, shoemaker
Smith Mrs Sarah
Spence Mrs Ann Elizabeth, day and boarding school
Taylor Rd. wheelwt. & builder
Thomas Miss, schoolmistress
Tyrrell Richard, shopkeeper
Welby Wm. bkr. butc. & grocr.
Wilcox John, beerh. & shopkr.
Wooton Isaac, bricklayer

Farmers and Graziers.

Cooke Henry Webb, *Manor-
House*
East William
Harris George
Henn Mrs Hannah
Henn Joseph
Malsbury John
Malsbury Joseph (yeoman)
Malsbury Joseph, jun.
Stuchfield James Roberts
Watts George
Whitton John
Williams George

Carriers.—Mrs Mary Franklin, to Banbury on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday; George Blackwell, to Banbury on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday, and Towcester on Tuesday.

WOODFORD PARISH.

This parish, which includes the hamlets of Farndon and Hinton, is bounded on the north by Charwelton, on the east by Preston Capes, on the west by Byfield, and on the south by Eydon. It contains 2651 acres, and its population in 1801 was 629; in 1831, 827; in 1841, 846; in 1851, 800; in 1861, 735; and in 1871, 742. The rateable value of the parish is £4267, and its gross estimated rental is £5057. The soil is a light loam on the hills and a stiff clay in the valleys, and there are also limestone quarries in the parish. The principal proprietors are Sir Henry Edward Leigh Dryden, Bart., Mr Rd. Walker Tew, Miss Caroline Hunt, Mr Samuel Bates, and Mr William Ward. The lordship is well supplied with springs, and the Roman road (Portway) from Bennaventa or Isanavaria (near Daventry) to Brinavis, in Chipping Warden, passed through it.

Manor.—At the time of the general survey, Hugh de Grentemaisnil held two hides of land here, and one Richard was his under-tenant. It had been the freehold of Baldwin before the Conquest, when it was valued at 40s., but it was then advanced to 60s. In the reign of Henry II., Osmund Bassett held two hides here of the fee of Leicester, and in the 9th of Edward II. (1316), John Bassett was lord of the manor. In the 13th of Edward III., Thomas Boiden levied a fine of this manor, and in the 20th of the same reign accounted for three parts of a knight's fee here of the Honor of Winchester. It afterwards reverted to the Bassett family, from which it passed in the 14th of Richard II. (1391) to Thomas Earl of Stafford. In the 1st of Henry IV. (1399), Maud, the widow of John Lord Lovel, died seized of this manor; in the 20th of Henry VIII. (1529) it was in the possession of the Earl of Shrewsbury; and in the beginning of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, Sir John Spencer of Wormleighton held it of the crown in capite. In the 6th of Elizabeth (1564), George Spencer, Esq., levied a fine of Woodford Manor to John Fountayne, and in the 41st of the same reign John Fountayne and others levied a fine of it to John Marryatt and others. Certain lands in Woodford and Sulgrave belonging to the Priory of St Andrew were granted in the 30th of Henry VIII. (1539) to Lawrence Washington, Gent., whose son, Robert Washington, Esq., in the 42d of Elizabeth (1600), levied a fine of lands here to Robert Spencer, Esq. of Althorp. Certain lands in this parish belonging to Canons Ashby Priory and Warden Abbey were granted after the dissolution to Sir John Dudley of Aston, Anthony Stringer, and John Williams. The Earl of Ellesmere is the present lord of the manor of Woodford Halse, having succeeded to the estates of his uncle, the Duke of Bridgewater, upon the decease of the Duchess.

The Village of Woodford stands on a slight eminence about $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. of Daventry, 12 N.W. from Towcester, 12 N.E. from Banbury, and 13 N. from Brackley. It is supplied with water by a company formed in 1869. The water is conveyed through iron pipes from the top of a neighbouring hill to the village.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, consists of a nave and side aisles, chancel, and south porch, and a low tower, in which are four bells. It is much dilapidated, but is about to be rebuilt at a cost of some £3000, nearly one-half of which sum has already been contributed. The living is a vicarage in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £6, 10s., but now valued at £275 per annum. The advowson is in the crown, and the Rev. Harry Holdsworth Minchin, M.A., is the incumbent. The impropriate rectory consists of 228a. 2r. 10p., granted by the Commissioners of Enclosure in lieu of the rectorial tithes; and the vicarage consists of 54a. 3r. 37p. in Woodford, 12a. 1r. 4p. in Farndon, and 18a. 1r. 38p. in Hinton, and the tithes of some old enclosure which were commuted in 1840 for a rent charge of £65. Sir Henry Edward Leigh Dryden, Bart., is the lay rector of Woodford Halse, George Hitchcock, Esq. of Hinton, and G. Horne, Esq. of Farndon. The Vicarage House, a neat Elizabethan building, stands in the village.

The Moravians have a small chapel here, built in 1799, to which a house for the minister and a burial-ground are attached.

The National School was erected by Sir Henry Edward Leigh Dryden, Bart., and presented to the parish in 1867. The school has been supported from the first by a voluntary rate of 4d. in the pound, two-thirds of which are paid by the landowners and one-third by the tenants. A sum of £170 has been spent on the master's house, which stands near the school.

HINTON is a hamlet in this parish, containing about 875 acres, of which Sir

Rainald Knightley, Bart., M.P. (lord of the manor), George Hitchcock, Esq., and Messrs Charles and Edmund Bromley are the principal owners. This manor passed from the Hintons to the De Brays; in the fifteenth century it was in the possession of the Catesbys of Althorp; in the 42d of Elizabeth (1600), Robert Catesby sold it to Erasmus Dryden, Esq. of Canons Ashby; from the family of Dryden it passed to the Hastings; and in 1712 it was purchased by Giles Knightley, Esq., and is now held by his descendant, the present baronet. The village is separated from Woodford by the Cherwell.

WEST FARNDON is another hamlet, forming the southern division of the parish. It contains 656 acres, of which Mr W. Hitchcock, Richard Aubrey Cartwright, Esq. of Edgcott House (the lord of the manor), Mr R. Checkley, and the rector of Wigan are the principal proprietors. The manor was in the possession of William de Farendon in the reign of Henry VIII.; in the 7th of Henry IV. (1419), Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, levied a fine of it, and after his decease in 1439, it descended to his three daughters. After passing through several intermediate possessors, it came into the hands of the second Earl of Halifax, whose son, the third earl, sold it to Richard Chauncy, Esq. of Edgcott, from whom it passed to Thomas Carter, Esq., from whose sister, the late Mrs Cartwright, it passed to her son, Richard Aubrey Cartwright, Esq., the present possessor. The population of Farndon and Hinton in 1871 is included in that of the parish. That portion of West Warden which is situate in this parish formerly belonged to the Abbey of Warden, in Bedfordshire.

Post-Office (Wall-Box).—Cleared at 4 P.M. Letters arrive through the Daventry post-office.

Alcock Geo. vict. Hare & Hounds
Barnes Joseph, carpenter
Bason Joseph, grocer
Buswell John, vict. Fleur de Lis
Coy Henry, wheelwright
Hines Mrs Charlotte, day-school
Humphries Thomas, draper
Hunt Miss Caroline
Jordan Thomas, shopkeeper
Kiteley Thomas, shoemaker
M'Connell, Jas. mason & buildr.
Marriott William, beerhouse

Miles Thos. grocer & butcher
Minchin Rev. Harry Holdsworth, M.A., rector
Scandrett Rev. John William (Moravian)
Scriven George, tailor
Smith Wm. Heygate, tailor & manager co-operative store
Tew Mrs Mary Ann
Ward John, blacksmith
Wood Hy. and Mrs Eliz. master & mistress Natl. School

Farmers and Graziers.

(Marked * are yeomen.)

Alcock John
Bowles Thomas
Cherry Matthew, Woodford Hill
Douglas Owen
Ganderton William
*Tew Richard Walker
*Ward Wm. Woodford Lodge
West Mrs Elizabeth

Carriers.—George Alcock, to Banbury, Thurs., & Northampton, Sat. Samuel Higham, to Daventry, Wed. & Sat. Wm. Marriott, to Banbury on Mon. & Thurs., & Northampton, Sat.

HINTON.

Eden Caleb, baker
Goodman William, carter
Goodridge Wm. blacksmith & shopkeeper
Hitchcock Geo. Esq. Hinton Ho.

Johnson Wm. carpenter and wheelwright
Stone Leonard, grocer

Farmers and Graziers.

Alcock Samuel

Allin Thomas
Bromley Charles and Edward (yeomen)
Daniel Thomas

WEST FARNDON.

Douglas John, jun. Hill House
Lovell John

Thomason Edward Thomason John

Haynes Edward, corn-miller

KING'S SUTTON HUNDRED.

THIS hundred, forming the south-western angle of the county, is bounded on the east by Greens Norton hundred, and a part of the county of Buckingham; on the north by Greens Norton and Chipping Warden hundreds; and on the west and south by the county of Oxford, from which it is separated by the river Charwell. Its greatest length from north to south is about eleven miles; its greatest breadth from east to west about the same distance; and it covers an area of 48,250 acres. At the time of the Conqueror's survey this was divided into two hundreds, one of which was called the hundred of Sutton, and the other of Elbodestow or Abbodestowe. The hundred of Sutton comprehended the townships of Middleton, Thenford, Farninghoe, Purston, Newbottle, Sutton, Walton, Aynho, Croughton, and a part of Evenle; besides Finemere Scildeswelle and Hedham, in Oxfordshire, on the borders of this county, and Brime, then in the possession of Gilo, the brother of Auculf; and Abbodestowe hundred, the townships of Brackley, Hawes, Stean, Whitfield, Radson, Syresham, Helmdon, Stutchbury, Marston, Culworth, Thorp, Chacomb, and the other part of Evenle. It does not appear from the records how long this division subsisted. Emelina de Longespe was lady of the hundred of Sutton in the ninth of Edward II. (1316), and she was certified to hold the hundreds of Sutton and Aboldestowe, sub nominatione Hundredi de Sutton, in the third of Edward III. (1330). This hundred was granted with the manor of Sutton to Richard de Camville by the crown in the second of Henry II. (1156), and from this time forward they had both the same possessors till the manor was sold by the Earl of Derby to Robert Kenwrick, Esq., in the fortieth of Queen Elizabeth (1597), and the hundred alone transmitted to his posterity. It was held of the crown by the annual payment of £4 to the exchequer. King's Sutton hundred contains the market town of Brackley, and is divided into twenty-three parishes and nine hamlets, of which the following is an enumeration, showing the number of acres taken from the rate-book, together with the number of houses, population, rateable value, and gross estimated rental of each parish in 1871:—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Aynho	2,255	134	2	...	300	320	260	£ 5,261	£ 6,175
Brackley, St James'	2,790	128	7	...	307	340	647	3,074	3,734
Brackley, St Peter's		385	17	4	831	873	1,704	7,322	8,677
Halse, hamlet	1,639	110	9	...	213	238	451	3,716	4,172
Chalcombe	2,005	130	292	300	592	2,851	3,381
Croughton	2,214	144	15	...	284	311	595	4,541	5,437
Culworth	2,984	120	6	...	296	293	589	3,983	4,688
Evenley	1,471	93	16	...	200	204	404	3,437	4,004
Farthinghoe	1,906	157	11	...	340	316	656	3,394	4,181
Helmdon	1,409	41	90	84	174	2,332	2,615
Hinton-in-the-Hedges	289	5	630	689	1,319
King's Sutton	4,348	10,025	12,151
Astrop (part of), ham.
Charlton (part of), ham.
Purston (part of), ham.
Walton, hamlet	1,624	120	2	...	261	252	513	3,736	4,363
Marston St Lawrence	2,320	203	15	...	622	614	1,236	6,093	6,889
Middleton Cheney	1,645	105	244	253	497	3,627	4,262
Newbottle	1,225	28	1	...	61	59	120	1,455	1,717
Radstone	1,139	6	12	15	27	1,467	1,722
Stean or Stene	1,023	5	13	21	34	1,706	2,008
Stutchbury or Stutsbury	1,755	233	33	...	485	506	991	3,716	4,421
Syresham	873	30	2	...	56	75	131	1,866	2,223
Thenford	990	35	72	80	152	2,154	2,285
Thorpe Mandeville	2,258	128	3	2	329	298	627	3,494	3,806
Wappenham	1,760	5	19	18	37	2,205	2,603
Astwell, hamlet		7	2	...	21	21	42
Falcutt, hamlet	9	1	20	22	42
Warkworth	2,096	380	20	18	903	899	1,802	8,220	10,325
Grimsbury, hamlet		21	37	24	61
Nethercote, hamlet	1,401	66	3	...	115	132	247	1,854	2,170
Whitfield	43,190	3,112	170	24	7,053	7,257	14,310	91,529	108,009

THE CHARITIES OF KING'S SUTTON HUNDRED, as abstracted from the last Parliamentary reports, with the dates, donors' names, and purposes, &c. See also the histories of the parishes.

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what places and purposes applied.	Annual value.
	— Cartwright (rent)	Ayno parish, grammar school ...	£20 0 0
1633.	Rd. Cartwright (rent)	Ditto, bread to poor	5 4 0
	Poor's Land	Ditto	4 0 0
1816.	John Baker (£5153, 6s. 4d.)	Ditto, six poor people and two annuitants	161 10 7
	Feoffees, or Charity Estate,	Brackley parish	250 0 0
	Robert Higgins (a cottage)	Ditto, school	1 0 0
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent)	Ditto, poor	2 10 0
1633.	Sir Thomas Crewe (rent)	Ditto, almshouses for six poor people	24 0 0
	Nathaniel Lord Crewe	Ditto, ditto	12 0 0
	Lyttleton Burton (£50)	Ditto, poor	2 10 0
	John Welchman (£100)	Ditto, school	5 0 0
	Catherine Moore (£5)	Ditto, lost
1715.	William Lisle (£6 per annum)	Ditto, ditto
	Rt. Wilkins (house and malthouse)	Ditto, ditto
	William Pargiter (£9)	Ditto, ditto
	William Ashby (£10)	Ditto, ditto
	Bennett's, or Short's and Walker's } Charities (rent)	Chalcombe parish, poor	4 0 0
1633.	Rd. Cartwright (rent)	Croughton parish, poor	2 2 0
	Charity Estate	Culworth parish, poor, and apprenticing children	65 0 0
1795.	Martha and Fran. Rich (£65 a year)	Ditto, school	65 0 0
1646.	Jane Leeson	Ditto, poor	1 0 0
1723.	Rev. Mr Jones (£20)	Helmdon parish, building a school
1622.	Poor's Land, or Taylor's Charity ...	Middleton Cheney parish	84 0 0
1701.	John Barksdale	Ditto, church	2 10 0
1657.	Joyce Hall (rent)	Ditto, poor	6 0 0
1764.	Richard Garnet (£150)	Ditto, ditto	6 0 0
1633.	Richard Cartwright (rent)	Newbottle par., five poor widows	2 3 4
1795.	Mary Smith (£150, 3 per cent. consols)	Charlton township, poor	9 10 0
1688.	John Haynes (£100)	King's Sutton parish, poor	5 0 0
1633.	Richard Cartwright (rent)	Ditto, ditto	4 6 8
	Poor's Allotment	Ditto, poor and church	25 0 0
1751.	Margaret Willes (£100)	Ditto, poor and teaching four poor children	5 0 0
1813.	Ann Jenkinson (£3000 navy 5 per cents.)	Ditto, apprenticing children	94 10 0
1646.	Jane Leeson	Syresham parish, poor	1 0 0
	Poor's Allotment	Ditto, ditto	21 0 0
1778.	Alice Hammond (£200)	Ditto, ditto	10 0 0
1773.	Conquest Jones (£100)	Ditto, school	5 0 0
1775.	George Hammond (£300)	Ditto, teaching ten poor children	15 9 0
1692.	John Tooley (rent)	Thenford parish, poor	4 0 0
1704.	William Tooley (land)	Ditto, ditto	20 0 0
1610.	Jane Leeson (rent)	Wappenham parish poor	1 10 0
1761.	Poor's Land	Ditto, ditto	29 0 0
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent)	Whitfield parish, poor	0 10 0
1708.	Thomas Lister (rent)	Ditto, apprenticing poor children	8 0 0
	Ditto	Ditto, poor	2 0 0
	School Land	Ditto, school	9 0 0
1796.	Poor's Allotment	Ditto, poor	20 0 0
			£945 5 7

AYNH0 PARISH

Occupies an elevated site, and is bounded on the north by King's Sutton and Newbottle, on the east by Croughton, and on the other points by Oxfordshire. It contains 2255 acres; its population in 1801 was 623; in 1831, 664; in 1841, 662; in 1851, 611; in 1861, 600; and in 1871, 620. The rateable value of the parish is £5261, and the gross estimated rental £6175. The soil varies from a deep to a light loam on a substratum of limestone. William

Cornwallis Cartwright, Esq., M.P., is lord of the manor and principal proprietor. The Oxford and Birmingham Branch of the Great Western Railway passes through this parish, where there is a station, and the Oxford Canal also intersects the parish. There are good quarries here, and the lordship abounds in springs, the principal of which are the Town Well, Friars Well, Puckwell, a strong chalybeate, and Painter's Well, a petrifying spring. The Roman road Portway from Bennaventa or Isannavaria (Borough Hill), through Brinavis (Chipping Warden), to Ælia Castra (Alcester near Bicester), passed through this lordship, entering it by the road through Walton grounds, into the lane running north of the village. "Crossing the turnpike to Buckingham," says Mr Baker, "its course is continued southward till it quits the county at Souldern, but it has been partially levelled and reduced to the narrow pathway, walled in, which intersects Mr Cartwright's park. In levelling the ground for this alteration, the workmen disinterred a skeleton, with the legs gathered up, and enclosed between four stone slabs placed at right angles, which is considered the most ancient mode of interment; similar discoveries have recently been made in the same direction by the side of the road to Bicester. Near the portion of the Portway north of the village, a groved brass celt was found in 1846, with a number of skeletons lying north and south. These are strong indications of residence anterior to the arrival of the Romans, and lead to the inference that the Portway in this district, as in some others, adopted the original trackway of the Britons."

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey Geoffrey de Mandeville held three and one-fifth hides of the king in Aynho, which with a mill of the yearly rent of 10s., and twenty acres of meadow, had been valued in the Confessor's time, when it was the freehold of Asgar or Algar, at £6, but it was then advanced to £8. This Geoffrey de Mandeville attended Duke William to this country, and fought valiantly for him at the battle of Hastings, which gained him the kingdom. He was rewarded by the Conqueror with various lordships, several of which lay in this county, and was made Constable of the Tower of London. In the reign of Henry II. William de Mandeville held three hides of the crown in Aynho, and conveyed them, in exchange for other lands, to Roger Fitz-Richard. From him they descended to Robert Fitz-Roger, also called John de Clavering. In the 9th of Edward II. (1316), John de Clavering was lord of this manor, and in the 17th of this reign, he obtained a charter for a weekly market here on Tuesdays, and an annual fair on the eve and feast of St Michael and the two following days. This John de Clavering was succeeded by his grandson Ralph de Neville in the 6th of Edward III. (1333), who, in the 20th of this reign (1347), accounted for one knight's fee in Aynho, as held of the fee of Mandeville. From the family of Neville it passed to the Arundels, and from them, in the reign of Henry VIII., to Roland Shakerley, of London, in consideration of the sum of £1060. It subsequently became subdivided between his successors, and in 1615 Shakerley Marmion, Esq., sold two-thirds of the manor to Richard Cartwright, Esq., of the Inner Temple, London, for £5250. In the following year Mr Cartwright purchased the remaining third for £3000, of Sir Paul Tracy, Bart., and his son. This Mr Cartwright, in the 20th of James I. (1623), had a re-grant of the market and fair, with the addition of another yearly fair on the Monday and Tuesday after Pentecost. These fairs and the market have long since fallen into disuse. William Cornwallis Cartwright, Esq., M.P., is the present proprietor.

The Village of Aynho is pleasantly situated on an eminence about six miles W.S.W. from Brackley, and the same distance S.E. of Banbury.

The Church, dedicated to St Michael, stands at the east end of the village, and consists of a fine massive embattled tower, containing a peal of six bells and a clock with chimes, and a body of one pace. The tower is of ancient date, and in the Decorated style, and the body, which was rebuilt about 1723, is in the Grecian style. The interior is lofty and spacious, and neatly fitted up, and the building was re-roofed in 1862. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £25, 5s. 5d., and now worth about

! John was
- his son

£620 a year. William Cornwall Cartwright, Esq., M.P., is the patron, and the Rev. Frederick William Cartwright, M.A., incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1792 for land, and an annual corn rent was commuted in 1844 for £150 per annum. The church contains several monuments to the Cartwright family. The Rectory House adjoins the north side of the churchyard.

An Hospital for the relief of poor and sick passengers, dedicated to St James and John the Apostles, stood at the west end of the village, and is supposed to have been founded by Roger Fitz-Richard and his son, Roger Fitz-Roger, in the reign of Henry II. It was endowed with certain lands by several benefactors, which now consists of 210 acres and a house, and was governed by a master, who was nominated by the lord of the manor, and instituted by the Bishop of Lincoln. In 1484 William Earl of Arundel gave it to Magdalen College, Oxford, on condition that mass should be offered for himself and his ancestors on the Arundel altar there, and after his death that an obit dirge and mass for his soul might be kept yearly for ever, and be recommended in their prayers at Oxford, and at St Paul's Cross, in London. The estate is let on lease to the Cartwright family, but the injunctions and pious intentions of the donors have long since been repudiated, or allowed to fall into disuse. The hospital is now a farmhouse.

Almshouses.—John Baker, glazier, of Oxford, in 1816, founded and endowed almshouses, in which are four poor men and four poor women. The men receive each 8s. per week, and the women 7s. The funds consist of £800, new 4 per cents., and £4352, 6s. 4d., 3 per cent. consols, producing about £161 per annum. The trustees erected a neat range of almshouses, consisting of eight separate dwellings, in 1822.

The Free Grammar School was founded and endowed with a rent-charge of £20 a year and a residence for the master, by Mrs Mary Cartwright, for which seven scholars are taught free. John Cartwright, Esq., gave to Brasenose College, Oxford, a rent-charge of £10 per annum, out of lands in Bloxham, to found two scholarships, for which boys from this school are more especially eligible. Mr Charles Davies is the present master.

The National School here was formerly a farm-building; it will accommodate 100 scholars, and is supported by subscription, Government grant, and the school-pence.

The other Charities are a rent-charge of £5, 4s., left by Richard Cartwright, Esq., in 1633, for bread to the poor; and the poor's land, about one acre, the rent of which is distributed at Christmas amongst the poor of the parish.

Aynho Hall, the residence of David Fullerton, Esq., is a handsome stone building of two fronts, situated at the northern extremity of a beautiful park, ornamented with extensive plantations. The old Manor-House was burnt down by the Royalists on their return from Naseby to Oxford in 1645. The present mansion contains some beautiful bronze figures and vases, and a fine collection of pictures, collected principally on the Continent by John Blackwood, Esq.

Eminent Men.—Shakerley Marmion, the poet and dramatist, was born in the manor-house here in 1602-3; and Sir Ralph Winwood, an eminent diplomatist and statesman in the seventeenth century, was a native of this parish.

Post-Office.—William Buckingham, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Banbury at 8.30 A.M., and are despatched at 6 P.M.

Banghan Edwin, wheelwrt. &c.
Bradshaw Mrs Catherine
Brown Mrs Ellen
Brown Miss Mary, day-school
Buckingham Wm. dairyman and post-office
Bygrave Mrs Soph. beer retlr.
Bygrave Wm. vict. (coml. and posting) Cartwright Arms
Cadd John, saddle & harness mr.
Cartwright, Rev. Fred. Wm.
M.A., rector

Davies Charles, master of grammar school
Dowty John, grocer
Fullerton David, Esq. Aynho
Hall
Howe Rich. vict. Gl. Western
Arms, and posting-house, coal merchant, goods and parcel agent for Oxford and Birmingham Branch of Great Western Railway,
Lambert John, sawyer

Lambert William, sawyer
Lardner Mrs Sarah
Mayo Mr Richard
Merry Thomas, baker, butcher, and surveyor
Millard Mr Charles
Millard James, dairyman
Oakey Robt. butcher and baker
Poole Rd. master Natl. School
Robbins Thos. thrashing-machine owner
Seccull John, stonemason

Skuce John, stationmaster
 Smith Matthew, carpenter
 Terry Joseph, draper
 Tuckey John, grocer
 Tuckey Thos. under-steward to
 W. C. Cartwright, Esq. M. P.
 Walton George, carpenter

Walton Mr John
 Watts Thomas, thrashing-machine owner
 Willes Rev. Geo. Edw. curate
Farmers and Graziers.
 Austin William Hewens

Borton Frederick
 Bygrave Mrs Mary
 Bygrave William (& maltster)
 Hawkes Samuel
 Patullo Brthrs. Aynho Warren
 Wilson Edwin Chris. Aynho
 Grounds

Carrier.—Frederick Borton, to Banbury, on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday.

BRACKLEY PARISH.

Brackley—so called from the fern, or brake, which formerly abounded in the lordship, and ley, or field—includes the parish of St James, Halse or Hawes, and the insulated woodlands of Whistley and Syresham Hatch. It is bounded on the north by Greatworth, Stutchbury, and Radstone, on the east by Whitfield, on the south by the river Ouse, which separates it from Evenley, and on the west by Hinton-in-the-Hedges and Steane. It contains 2790 acres; and its population in 1801 was 1420; in 1831, 2107; in 1841, 2221; in 1851, 2277; in 1861, 2383; in 1871, 2351 souls. The rateable value of St Peter's is £7322, and that of St James, £3074. The gross estimated rental of St Peter's is £8677, and that of St James, £3734. The soil is principally a deep strong loam; a great portion of the parish is in grass; and the principal landowners are Magdalen College, Oxford, the Earl of Ellesmere (the lord of the manor), John Locke Stratton, Esq., Mrs Malins, and Mr James Fairbrother. The lordship is well supplied with springs. The railway from Banbury to Buckingham passes through four miles and one furlong of the parish.

Manor.—Azor was the Saxon proprietor of the manor of Halse or Hawes, with its dependencies in Brackley and Siresham. At the time of the Conqueror's survey, this manor consisted of 5 hides of land, 2 of which were in Hawes, 2 in Siresham, and 1 in Brackley, and they were held of the king by Earl Albericus. The whole, including a mill of the yearly rent of 10s., was then valued at £9. Besides these, the Earl held in Brackley 2 hides more, which were valued at £4. Albericus dying about the time of the survey, his lands were seized into the hands of the king, and granted to Robert de Mellent, created Earl of Leicester in the 3d of Henry III. (1219). This Robert, sometime before his death, took the habit of a monk in the Abbey of Preaux, in Normandy, and dying in 1118, his body was buried there, and his heart brought over and deposited at Brackley. He was succeeded by his son Robert, surnamed Bossu, who founded the noble abbey called De Pratis in the suburbs of Leicester, and granted to it the church of Brackley, the chapels of Siresham, and the tithe of the profits arising from his possessions here. Robert le Bossu, Earl of Leicester, obtained a grant of Henry II. to hold a market at the town of Brackley on Sundays, but in 1217 it was altered to Wednesday. From this family the manor was carried in marriage to the De Quincis, Earls of Winchester, and in the 48th of Henry III. (1264), upon the death of Roger de Quinci without male issue, the town of Brackley was assigned to his youngest daughter, Elena, wife of Alan, Lord Zouch, of Ashby. It descended to his grandson of the same name, from whom it passed in marriage with his daughter Maud to Robert de Holland, who in the 9th of Edward II. (1316) was lord of the manors of Hawes and Brackley. Upon the death of Robert, his son, these manors descended to Maud, his daughter, the wife of John Lord Lovell. In the family of Lovell these manors continued till the 1st of Henry VII. (1485), when, upon the attainder of Francis Lord Lovell, his lands were seized into the hands of the king, and these manors granted to George Lord Strange, the eldest son of Thomas Lord Stanley, who set the crown upon the Earl of Richmond's head in Bosworth Field on the death of Richard III., after which he was advanced to the dignity of Earl of Derby. This George was given up to the usurper, Richard, as an hostage for his father's fidelity, and narrowly escaped with his life. He died in his father's lifetime, and his son and successor, Thomas, succeeded to the Earldom of Derby upon the death of his grandfather, in the 19th of Henry VII. (1504). Lady Frances, daughter of the fourth Earl of Derby, brought the manor and borough of Brackley in marriage to Sir John Egerton, second son of Thomas Lord Ellesmere, Lord Chancellor of England, advanced by James I., in 1616, to the dignity of Viscount Brackley. This Sir John was created Earl of Bridgewater by the same king. From him this property regularly descended down to Francis, the third and sixth Earl and last Duke of Bridgewater, on whose decease, unmarried, in 1803, the Marquisate of Brackley and Dukedom of Bridgewater became extinct, but the Barony of Ellesmere, Viscountcy of Brackley, and Earldom of Bridgewater, reverted to General J. W. Egerton, M.P. for this borough, and from him, on his death without issue in 1823, to his brother Francis Henry, the eighth Earl. Francis Charles Granville Egerton, third Earl of Ellesmere, the present proprietor, is the son of the second Earl by Mary, daughter of the first Earl of Cawdor; born 1847, succeeded in 1862, married in 1868 Katharine Louisa, third daughter of the second Marquis of Normanby; educated at Eton and Trinity College, Cambridge, M.A., 1867; and is captain of the Duke of Lancaster's Yeomanry Cavalry. Residences—Worsley Hall, Manchester, and Bridgewater House, St James's, S.W. Heir, his son, John Granville Scrope, Viscount Brackley, born 14th November 1872. The Abbays of Leicester and Biddlesden had possessions in this parish.

THE TOWN OF BRACKLEY.

Brackley is a market town and ancient borough, near the S.W. extremity of the county, 8 miles W. by N.W. of Buckingham, 11 S.W. of Towcester, 9½ E. by S. of Banbury, 20 S.W. by S. of Northampton, 16 from Blisworth railway station, 21 from Oxford, and 63 miles N.W. from London. It is seated on rising ground, near the river Ouse, and consists principally of one wide street, nearly a mile in length, which contains many good houses, chiefly built of stone. It is divided into New and Old Brackley. New Brackley, which is the chief, contains 274 houses, and Old Brackley, which lies beyond St Peter's Church, has about 207, and consists of the consolidated parishes of St Peter and St James. The limits of the borough are co-extensive with those of the parish, and within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. The town is well supplied with water and gas.

The Castle.—Here was formerly a castle, the original residence of the feudal lords, but it was deserted at an early period. Leland says, "There was a fayre castle in the southe-west end of the towne, on the left hand or ripe of the riveret. The site and hill where it stode is yet evidently sene, and berithe the name of the Castle Hill; but there is not seen any peace of a wauill stondinge."

The Manor-House. which succeeded the castle, has also disappeared, and the present plain building at the upper end of High-street, where the manorial courts were formerly held, is supposed to have been formed out of the offices.

Brackley, we are told by tradition, was a town of considerable importance in the Saxon times, until the Danes nearly destroyed it; this is not borne out by history, but Mr Baker tells us that "Brackley will be found his torically associated with the commencement of three of the most memorable civil contests in the annals of our country: the baronial wars in the reigns of the despotic John, and his imbecile son Henry; and the yet more eventful struggle between the parliament and the crown in the seventeenth century." In 1215, the tyranny of John having aroused the barons to resistance, they assembled at Stamford, with 2000 knights and a powerful army, in Easter week, and rendezvoused at Brackley on the following Monday. The king being at Oxford, despatched the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Earl of Pembroke to ascertain their claims. The barons delivered to them a schedule, founded on and comprising the ancient laws of the kingdom, and since known by the term of Magna Charta, which the king refusing in a fit of rage to confirm, the royal delegates returned to the barons at Brackley, who immediately marched to Northampton, and the boasted bulwark of English liberty was the successful result of this struggle. In 1264,

Henry III. and the barons having agreed to refer their differences to the arbitration of the King of France, the latter being dissatisfied with his decision, the king appointed a commission to treat at Brackley with Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, and the barons adhering to him, for the security and peace of the kingdom; but the negotiation failed. In 1642, when the Royalists and Parliamentarians appealed to arms, the royal standard was raised at Nottingham on the 22d of August, and three troops of horse, amounting to about 200 men, under the command of Sir John Byron and his two brothers, were immediately despatched to Oxford. They reached Brackley on the 28th, and before they could obtain refreshment were attacked by the inhabitants and the country people, who pursued them, and completely routed them, with the loss of above 60 horse, and gold, silver, and valuables to the amount of from £6000 to £8000.

In August 1643 the Parliamentary army, to the number of 15,000 horse and foot, under the command of the Earl of Essex, the general in chief, rendezvoused on Brackley Heath on their way to Gloucester to resist the king's attack upon that city. Brackley was anciently one of those places where tournaments or military exercises of armed knights, to improve their strength and activity in war, were allowed to be held. The scene of those brilliant exercises was Bayard's Green, now corrupted to Bear's Green, an elevated piece of table-land on the south bank of the Ouse, and it became afterwards celebrated as a race-course, but the races have been long discontinued.

An Hospital, Chapel, and Cemetery, originally dedicated to St John, and subsequently to St James and St John, stood near the centre of the town. It consisted of a master and prior and several brethren, and was founded and endowed with an acre of land by Robert le Bossu, Earl of Leicester, about the middle of the twelfth century. Several other benefactors made grants to it, and here the poor were received and hospitably entertained. In Bridges' time the building was composed of two quadrangles, with several offices, but all have disappeared save a few detached traces of arches in the adjoining house, and the chapel, which consists of a broad low tower, and a nave and chancel of one pace. This was formerly the place of sepulture of the early lords of Brackley. The chapel was thoroughly restored in 1869, at a cost of about £1000, by an arrangement made between the present vicar and the President and Scholars of Magdalen College, Oxford, to whom it belongs. The walls were renewed internally, the arches rebuilt, the windows were reglazed, a handsome reredos of stone and marble and an oaken altar-table erected, together with sedilia and new choir stalls of oak. It was seated throughout with chairs, and floored with encaustic tiles. The restoration was carried out by subscription raised by the vicar. In the year 1810, when alterations were being made in the chancel, two stone coffins were discovered in the walls—one of them contained the skeleton of a priest with a leathern girdle and buckle. On being exposed to the air the remains crumbled into dust. One of the coffins was buried, the other is used as a trough for cattle. The site of the ancient hospital was granted to the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, at the time of its dissolution. There was another hospital and chapel, dedicated to St Leonard, for the reception of the sick and infirm, the site of which is now unknown, but, according to Leland, it stood at the northern extremity of the town.

In the reign of Henry VIII., the plague raged violently at Oxford, and the Fellows and Scholars of Magdalen College removed to this town, and resided in St John's Hospital.

This town, we are told by Leland, was adorned with three "goodly crosses of stone;" one stood at the south end of the town, another at the west, and the third, "very antique, faire, and costly, in the inward parte of the high streete. Ther be dyvers tabernacles in this, with ladys and men armyed," continues the same writer. This last-mentioned cross, which was 28 feet high, with an octagonal pillar in the midst, having images on the sides, was taken down in 1706, and the present town-hall occupies its site. This town was a great mart for wool formerly; but the inhabitants are now chiefly employed in the manufacture of boots and shoes and bobbin lace.

The Town-Hall, a handsome building supported on arches, in the centre of the town, was erected in 1706, by Scroop Duke of Bridgewater, at an expense of £2000. The basement story is used as a corn-market. The market is on Wednesday, and fairs are held on Wednesday after the 25th of February, 19th April, on the Wednesday after 22d June, and 11th October (a statute fair), and on the 11th of December.

Municipal Government.—The town is said to have been incorporated by Henry III., but the only evidence of a documentary nature which the corporation possessed of their corporate existence at the period of the parliamentary inquiry in 1835, consisted of the abstracts of two charters of James II. This borough, though possessing a mayor and other functionaries, has not been for many years a municipal institution, nor has it exercised any of the functions of town government within the memory of the present generation, nor is it considered capable of defraying the expenses of such an institution. The government of the town, though vested in a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 26 burgesses, the mayor being regularly appointed by the lord of the manor, and sworn into office at his annual court-leet, and baron, and portmoot, on the Monday after 29th September, when other officers are also chosen, is entirely within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold petty sessions at the police-station once a month. The present mayor of Brackley is John Cave, Esq.; and the aldermen are Messrs Edward Butterfield, Robert John Russell, Rev. Hugh William Smith, Isaac Bartlett, and Edward Taylor. Two or more of the following magistrates preside at the petty sessions:—R. A. Cartwright, Esq. (chairman); Hon. Percy Barrington; W. B. Barrington, Esq.; Sir William R. Brown, Bart.; Lieut.-Col. G. H. F. Campbell; A. T. C. Cartwright, Esq.; T. R. B. L. M. Cartwright, Esq.; Rev. A. J. Empson; Beville Ramsay, Esq.; and J. L. Stratton, Esq.

The County Court is held in the town-hall monthly, and comprises the following places, viz.:—Astell and Falcut, Aynho, Biddlesden, Brackley St James, Brackley St Peter, Brackley Hatch, Brackley Halse in Brackley St Peter, Charlton, Croughton, Crowfield, Culworth, Evenley, Eydon, Astwick in Evenley, Edgcott, Finmere, Farthinghoe, Greatworth, Hinton-in-the Hedges, Helmdon, King's Sutton, Astrop in King's Sutton, Purston Great in King's Sutton, Purston Little in King's Sutton, Marston St Lawrence, Mixbury, Westhorpe in Marston St Lawrence, Fulwell in Mixbury, Moreton Pinkney, Newbottle, Radstone, Steane, Sulgrave, Syresham, Stuchbury, Turweston, Thenford, Thorpe Mandeville, Westbury, Whitfield, and King's Hill in Whitfield.

The Police-Station, a neat stone building erected in 1851, has accommodation for an inspector and two constables, with a room for magisterial purposes, where the magistrates for the Division meet once a month, and four cells for the confinement of prisoners.

The Elective Franchise was conferred on this borough in the 1st of Edward VI. (1547), and two members were returned by the 33 burgesses, until the Reform Act deprived them, or rather deprived the Marquis of Stafford and the Earl of Bridgewater (whose influence predominated here) of their monopoly.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, stands at the N.E. extremity of the town, on the declivity of a hill, and consists of nave, chancel, side aisles, and Lady chapel, under which is a crypt in good preservation, and a massive, square embattled tower, containing five bells. It was newly roofed and repaired in 1838, at a cost of nearly £2000. An organ was erected by subscription in 1844. In 1873 it was reseatd at a further cost of £600. The living is a vonsolidated vicarage in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £19, 1s. 6d., and now worth about £360 per annum. The patronage is cested in the lord of the manor, and the Rev. F. H. Thicknesse, M.A., Hon. Canon of Manchester, is the vicar. The tithes were commuted in 1842 for a rent-charge of £238, and there are 78 acres of glebe. The Deanery of Brackley is coextensive with the four hundreds of Warden, Sutton, Norton, and Towcester.

St James' Church formerly stood at the south end of the town, where the railway station now is ; it was taken down about forty years ago, and a small burial chapel erected, in which divine service was occasionally held during the summer months by the vicar up to 1869, when the College Chapel was restored.

The Vicarage House, in the Elizabethan style, stands north-west of the church ; it was rebuilt and enlarged by the present incumbent.

The Wesleyan Chapel, built in 1816, will accommodate about 500 hearers ; and there is in connection with it a day and Sunday-school, erected in 1863.

The Independent Chapel, erected in 1836, on the Banbury road, is capable of seating about 300 persons.

The Magdalen College Grammar-School was founded and endowed in the year 1447 by William of Wainfleet, Bishop of Winchester, who endowed it with £13, 6s. 8d. per annum, for ten boys of the parishes of St Peter and St James. The school was reorganised in 1860 by the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, who raised the endowment to £100, and arranged that ten of the most deserving boys should annually be elected to school exhibitions, and be exempted from the payment of the ordinary school fees. The school is under the care of the Rev. F. S. Taylor, M.A., head-master : the course of instruction includes everything necessary for a good commercial education, and prepares boys for the higher classical schools.

The National School for boys, girls, and infants, was erected by subscription in 1871, at a cost of £2000 ; it will accommodate 300, and has an average attendance of 150.

The Library and Reading-Room was removed in 1871 to what was formerly used as the infant school, the use of which was given by the Earl of Ellesmere ; it is supplied with the London and local papers. Subscribers of 5s. per annum and upwards have admission at all times ; artisans, &c., pay 6d. a month. The Rev. Canon Thicknesse is the president. An Amateur Choral Society was established here in 1871 under the direction of a committee. The vicar is president ; the Rev. S. Angel-Smith, secretary ; and Mr John Kirby, of King's Sutton, musical director.

Almshouses for six poor aged widows were founded by Sir Thomas Crewe in 1633, and endowed with a rent-charge of £24, which was increased in 1721 by his descendant, Nathaniel Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham, with an additional rent-charge of £12 per annum. The inmates receive each 10s. per month.

The other Charities are—The Charity estate, consisting of several cottages, lands, tenements, and rents, amounting to about £300, which is applied in repairing the churches, in money to the poor, and apprenticing poor boys ; Mrs Jane Leeson's gift of £2 per annum to the poor ; the interest of £50 bequeathed by the Rev. L. Burton in 1732 to the poor ; and the interest of £100 left in 1773 by John Welchman, Esq. of Brackley, for teaching four poor boys and four poor girls.

The Brackley Poor-Law Union comprises 29 parishes, embracing an area of 87 square miles, viz., Astwell and Falcu, Aynho, Biddlesden (Bucks), Brackley St James, Brackley St Peter, Croughton, Culworth, Evenley, Eydon, Farthinghoe, Finmere (Oxon), Greatworth, Helmdon, Hinton-in-the-Hedges, King's Sutton, Marston St Lawrence, Mixbury (Oxon), Morton Pinkney, Newbottle, Radstone, Steane, Stuchbury, Sulgrave, Syresham, Thenford, Thorpe Mandeville, Turweston (Bucks), Westbury (Bucks), and Whitfield. The Union Workhouse was erected on an eminence near the town in 1835, at a cost of £6000, and is capable of accommodating 200 persons. The average number of paupers in the house for the past year was 51, and the average weekly expense of each 3s. 5d. The affairs of the union are conducted by a board of 32 guardians, and 13 ex officio guardians, of whom J. L. Stratton, Esq., is the chairman, Mr James Bartlett, vice-chairman, and Mr Arthur Weston, solicitor, clerk. Mr James and Mrs Eliza Ward are the master and matron, and the medical officers are Mr J. Farmer, Mr W. Moore, Mr G. C. Douglas, Mr G. Waugh, and Mr Robert Barry Hocter. The relieving officers are Robert Heath, for Brackley district, and John Barrows, for Sulgrave district.

Eminent Men.—Samuel Clarke, the celebrated Orientalist, was born here in 1624, and died at Holywell, near Oxford, in 1669. Thomas Payne, an eminent bibliopolist of the very first reputation, was also born here in 1719, and died at Finchley in 1799.

HALSE or HAWES forms the north-western division of this parish. Its acreage, together with the population in 1871, are included in the return for the parish. Here was formerly a chapel dedicated to St Andrew, the site of which is now occupied by a farmhouse.

WHISTLEY WOOD is an insulated member of Brackley parish, Radston-intervening; it lies about three miles north of the town of Brackley, and contains nearly 200 acres of woodland.

BRACKLEY HATCH, or SIRESHAM HATCH, is another insulated district of woodland, about five miles north-east of Brackley, on the road to Towcester, containing about 500 acres. At the Norman survey it was certified to contain two hides, and has always accompanied Hawes and Brackley.

BRACKLEY DIRECTORY.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank.—William Hadland, postmaster. Letters arrive from London and all parts at 5.40 A.M. and 1.50 P.M., and are despatched to London and the South at 8.45 A.M.; to Banbury and Oxford at 12.55 P.M.; to Banbury and the West of England at 5 P.M.; to the North of England and London through, at 6.40 P.M.; and to London and all parts at 8 P.M. On Sundays they arrive from London and all parts at 5.35 A.M., and are despatched at 6 P.M.

ADLARD Benj. Townsend, mast. of Nat. school
Alcock Samuel, wheelwright and carpenter
Appletree Mrs Eliz. Banbury road
Austin William, tailor

BALFOUR James, travelling draper
Bannard Mrs Ann
Bannard Mrs Sarah, shopkeeper
Bannerman Mr George
Barnes Chas. Boorn, solicitr. (Weston & Barnes)
Barrett Benjamin, tailor
Bartlett Mrs Charlotte, linen & woollen draper
Bartlett Misses Emily & Louisa
Bartlett Isaac, farmer, Halse
Bartlett, Mrs Sarah
Bishop Elias, farmer, Brackley Hatch
Blaby Henry Goodwin, gardener
Blackwell Mrs Mary, milliner and dressmaker
Blackwell Robert, blacksmith
Blackwell Robert, photographer
Blencowe Mr Clement
Blencowe Nathaniel, wood-turner & gardener
Blencowe Mrs Sarah, confectioner
Blencowe Wm. brewer, maltster, & hop mercht.
Bonham Alfred, farmer, Brackley Hatch
Boote Thomas, cooper
Botterill Charles, police inspector
Bowerman David, slater and plasterer
Bowerman Mrs Zillah, vict. Reindeer
Boyles Charles, vict. Locomotive
Branson J. vict. Green Man, Brackley Hatch
Brickwell John, draper
Bucks & Oxon Union Bank, Mr Robt. Jno.
Russel, agent
Bull Mr Francis
Bull Geo. county court bailiff, Burrell Hill

Butcher Ben. town-crier and postman
Butcher Richard, boot and shoe maker
Butler Thomas, grocer
Butterfield Edward, farmer, Halse

CARTER John Opie, master of Wea. school
Carter Robert, butcher and grocer
Cave John, farmer and maltster
Cave John, joiner and cabinetmaker
Cave Wm. baker, butcher, and farmer
Chapman Edward Sibley, vict. Plough
Chapman George, vict. Greyhound
Chatwell Mrs Eliz. beerh. & shopkr. Banbury rd.
Clarke Mrs Jane & Son (John Goffe), iron-mongers, &c.
Clarke George Harry, coal merchant
Clarke Thomas, tailor
Coleman Samuel, manager
Coles Thomas, blacksmith
Colley Thomas, beerhouse
Collier John, surgeon
Course William, baker
Course Thomas, miller, Brackley Mills
Curtis Thomas & Co., drapers

DANIELS Wm. Gardiner, chemist and druggist
Durrant Eustace, watchmaker

ELLIS, William, vict. Crown Hotel, commercial & posting ho. and farmer
Evans John, coal and wood dealer

FAIRTHORNE Edw. Falkener, solicer. and miller
Farmer John, surgeon
Faulkner James, higgler
Faulkner John, vict. Cross Keys

Foxley Mrs Eliza
Franklin William, builder

GASKINS Wm. beerhouse, Banbury rd.
Gillet Jonathan Charles & Alfred, bankers, and Banbury
Gilchrist Mrs Sophia Mary
Goodman James, farmer, Staplegate Farm
Green Alfred, bookseller and publisher of the Brackley Observer, on Wednesday
Green John, boot and shoemaker
Grove John, parish clerk
Grosvener Captain, The Hon. Robert Wellesley, The Lodge

HADLAND William, postmaster
Hall James, glass and china dealer
Harris Mr Thomas
Hatwell Henry, cooper & vict. Horse & Jockey
Hatwell John, farmer
Hawkins Henry, ironmonger and seedsman
Hawkins Mrs Mary Ann, strawbonnet maker
Hawkins Robert, tailor
Hawkins Wm. builder, painter, plumber, &c.
Hawkins William, tailor
Haywood William, boot and shoemaker
Hearn Mrs Elizabeth, butcher and grocer
Hearn Mrs Mary Ann, shopkeeper
Heath William, tailor
Heath Robert, relieving officer, and registrar of births and deaths for Brackley district
Hocter Rt. Barry, M.D. surgeon (Moore & H.)
Holdom Edw. Golby, gardener & seedsman
Holland Henry, shoe mfr. h. Buckingham
Holton Henry Joseph, butcher and farmer
Hopcraft Alfred (exora. of), brewers, maltsters, wine & spirit mercha. & farmers
Hopcraft Alfred, Ernest, Frederick, & John (exora. of Alfred)
Howard Stephen, carpenter
Hutton Mrs Elizabeth, vict. Wheat Sheaf

JARVIS Alfred, chimney-sweeper
Jellyman Aaron & Edw. shopkeepers
Jellyman James, rope and twinemaker
Jones Moses, coal dealer
Jones Richard, Esq. F.R.G.S.
Judd Isaac, higgler
Judge Frederick, marine store dealer
Judge Mrs Jane
Judge The Misses Mary, Sarah, & Martha, booksellers, stationers, and fancy repository
Judge Richard Thos. corn merchant, maltster, and farmer, Hill Farm, Halse
Judge Thomas, grocer

KILBURN John, brewer's traveller
King Daniel, wheelwright and carpenter

LESSEY Ambrose, grocer and haberdasher
Lindars William, farm bailiff
Lock John, haberdasher
Long John, cabinetmaker and upholsterer

MAINWOOD Mrs Susannah, earthenware dealer
Malins Mrs Lucy, St James' place
Mallett James Varney, tailor
Martin Wm. Henry, glass dealer & shopkr.
Mobbs Thomas, boot and shoe maker
Moore & Hocter, surgeons
Moore Walter (M. & Hocter)

Morris Mr Charles, Banbury road
Morris Benjamin, baker
Morris Mrs Eliza, Banbury road
Morton Alfred, cow leech
Munday George, tailor

NICHOLS John Shaw, coal merchant
Nichols Joseph, farmer, Grange Farm
Nichols William Henry, coachbuilder
Norris Thomas, painter and vict. King's Head
Norris Wm. painter and gravestone engraver

PAINE James, gardener and sexton
Painter Miss Mary
Palmer James, grocer
Pratt Mrs Mary

RAY John, vict. Red Lion
Reeve Mrs Mary, beerhouse, Banbury road
Richardson John, saddler, and sec. to Gas Co.
Russel Mrs Caroline
Russel Robert John, auctioneer, land agent,
and surveyor

SALMON Thomas, farmer, Brackley Grange
Shakespeare Thos. wheelwright and carpenter
Sharp Miss Eleanor
Shipham Mrs, school
Simms Edward, shoemaker
Sirett Henry, chemist and druggist
Slatter Thomas, grocer and hop merchant
Smith Rev. Hugh Wm. M.A. vicar of Biddleton
Somerton Charles, fellmonger and carrier
Stace Mrs Caroline, Banbury road
Storer Joseph, beerhouse
Strange Mr Samuel

TAYLOR Edw. farmer and grazier, Brackley Fields
Taylor Rev. Frank Stanley, M.A., head-master of grammar-school
Taylor Geo. Wm. farmer, maltster, brick and tile maker, stone and lime merchant
Taylor Joseph, wheelwright and carpenter
Thicknesse Rev. Francis Henry, M.A. vicar
Tibbetta John Wilsheer, plumber and glazier
Timms Mrs Elizabeth
Timms Edward, boot and shoe maker
Trotman William, hairdresser and newsagent
Tucker William, butcher
Tuckey Henry, fishmonger and fruiterer

VICARS Samuel, butcher and shopkeeper
Vickers William, shopkeeper
Vickery William, grocer and beerhouse

WADDUP John, stonemason
Waghorn William, vict. Bell
Wallis George, stationmaster
Walah Mrs Sophia
Walah John, wine, spirit, & coal merchant, and agent to the London and N.-W. R. Co.
Goods Depart.
Walton Mrs Rebecca, Banbury road
Walton William, baker
Ward James, master, Union Workhouse
Ward William, jobbing gardener
Weston & Barnes, solicitors
Weston Arthur (W. & Barnes), h. St John's pl.
Weston Mrs Maria
Weston Miss Mary Woodhouse, school

White Edward, beerhouse
 Whitehurst Francis, farmer
 Whitlock John, grocer and gardener
 Whitton Edward, saddler and clothier
 Wilkins John Stevenson, shoemaker
 Williams John, watchmaker

Winckles Joseph, hawker
 Wodhams Thos. shoeing and jobbing smith
 Wootton Allen, builder and contractor
 Wootton Mrs Elizabeth
 Wootton Thomas, farmer
 Wrighton John, boot and shoe maker

Academies and Schools.

Grammar, Rev. Frank Stanley
 Taylor, M.A. head-master
National, Benj. Townsend Ad-lard & Mrs Annie Spreadbury
 Montague
 Shipman Mrs
Wesleyan, John Opie Carter
 Weston Miss Mary Woodhouse

Attorneys.

Fairthorne Edward Falkener
 Weston & Barnes, Market sq.

Banks.

Bucks & Oxon, Union Bank (draw on London & Westminster); John Russel, agent Gillett J. C. & A. (draw on Glyn & Co. London); Joseph
 Saul, manager

Bakers.

Cave William
 Course William
 Morris Benjamin
 Somerton Charles Walton William

Blacksmiths.

Blackwell Robert
 Coles Thomas
 Wodhams Thomas

Bookellers & Stationers.

Green Alfred
 Judge Misses Mry. Sar. & Mar.

Boot and Shoe Makers.

Butcher Richard
 Green John
 Haywood William
 Holland Henry
 Mobbs Thomas
 Timms Edward
 Wilkins John Stevenson
 Wrighton John

Brewers.

Elencowe William
 Hopcraft Alfred (executors of)

Builders.

Franklin William
 Hawkins William
 Wootton Allen

Butchers.

Carter Robert
 Cave William

Hearn Mrs Elizabeth
 Holton Henry Joseph
 Tucker William
 Viccars Samuel

Carpenters, &c.

Alcock Samuel
 Cave John
 Hawkins William
 Howard Stephen
 King Daniel
 Long John
 Shakespeare Thomas
 Taylor Joseph

Chemists and Druggists.

Daniels William Gardiner
 Sirett Henry

China, Glass, &c. Dealers.

Hall James
 Mainwood Mrs Susannah
 Martin William Henry

Coachbuilder.

Nichols William Henry

Coal Merchants.

Clarke George Harry
 Hopcraft Alfred (executors of)
 Nichols John Shaw
 Walsh John

Coopers.

Boote Thomas
 Hatwell Henry

Drapers (Linen and Woollen).

Balfour James (travelling)
 Bartlett Mrs Charlotte
 Brickwell John
 Curtis Thomas & Co.

Farmers and Graziers.

Bartlett Isaac, Halse
 Bishop Elias, Brackley Hatch
 Butterfield Edward, Halse
 Bonham Ald. Brackley Hatch
 Cave John
 Cave William
 Ellis William
 Goodman Jas. Staplegate Farm
 Hatwell John
 Holton Henry Joseph
 Hopcraft Alfred (executors of)
 Judge R. T., Hill Farm, Halse
 Nichols Joseph, Grange Farm
 Salmon Thos. Brackley Grange
 Taylor Edw. Brackley Fields

Taylor George, Taylor's Lane
 Weston Arthur
 Whitehurst Francis
 Wootton Thomas

Fire and Life Offices.

Atlas, Robert John Russel
County Fire & Provident Life,
 Weston & Barnes
Norwich Union, Alfred Green
Sun, George Bull, Burrell Hill
Royal Farmers, E. F. Fair-thorne

Gardeners.

Blaby Hy. Goodwin
 Blencowe Nathaniel
 Holdom Edward Golby
 Paine James
 Whitlock John

Grocers.

Bannard Mrs Sarah
 Butler Thomas
 Carter Robert
 Chatwell Mrs Elis. Banbury rd.
 Hearn Mrs Elizabeth
 Hearn Mrs Mary Ann
 Jellyman Aaron & Edward
 Judge Thomas
 Lessey Ambrose
 Martin William Henry
 Palmer James
 Slatter Thomas
 Viccars Samuel
 Vickers William
 Vickery William
 Whitlock John

Hairdresser.

Trotman Wm. (and newsgt.)

Inns and Taverns.

Bell, William Waghorn
Cross Keys, John Faulkner
Crown Hotel, posting and commercial, Wm. Ellis
Green Man, J. Branson
Greyhound, George Chapman
Horse and Jockey, Hy. Hatwell
King's Head, Thomas Norris
Locomotive, Charles Boyles
Plough, Edw. Sibley Chapman
Red Lion, John Ray
Reindeer, Mrs Zil. Bowerman
Wheat Sheaf, Mrs E. Hutton

Beerhouses.

Chatwell Mrs Elis. Banbury rd.
 Colley Thomas
 Gaskins Wm. Banbury road

Reeve Mrs Mary, Banbury rd.
Storer Joseph
White Edward
Vickery William

Ironmongers.

Clarke & Son (and seedsmen)
Hawkins Henry (and seedsman)

Land Agent and Surveyor.

Russel Robert John

Maltsters.

Blencowe William
Cave John
Hopcraft Alfred (exors. of)
Judge Richard Thomas
Taylor George William

Millers.

Course Thomas
Fairthorne Edw. Falkener

Milliners and Dress-makers.

Blackwell Miss Mary
Morris Miss Eliza, Banbury rd.
Pearson Mrs
Sergeant Miss Sar. Banbury rd.
Tooth Mrs Elizabeth Amelia

Painters, Plumbers, &c.

Hawkins William
Norris Thomas
Norris William
Tibbetts John Wilsheer

Saddlers.

Richardson John
Whitton Edward

Surgeons.

Collier John
Farmer John
Moore & Hooter

Tailors.

Austin William
Barrett Benjamin
Clarke Thomas
Hawkins Robert
Hawkins William
Heath Robert
Heath William
Mallett James Varney
Munday George

Watchmakers.

Durran Eustace
Williams John

Wheelwrights.

Alecock Samuel
King Daniel
Shakespeare Thomas
Taylor Joseph

Wine and Spirit Merchts.

Hopcraft A. (exors. of), (spirit)
Walsh John

Public Officers and Establishments.

Clerk to the Board of Guardians, Assessment Committee, Rural Sanitary Authority—
Arthur Weston

*Clerks to the Magistrates—*Weston & Barnes
*Clerk to Brackley Highway Board—*A. Weston
*Clerks to the Deputy-Lieutenants—*Weston & Barnes

*Clerks to the Commissioners of Taxes, Land Assessment, and Income—*Weston & Barnes

Coroner for the Western District of the County—
Arthur Weston

*Deputy Coroner—*Charles Boorn Barnes

*County Court Offices, Town-Hall—*J. P. Parry, Esq., Q.C., judge; Edward Falkener Fairthorne, registrar; F. W. Baker, high bailiff; George Bull, bailiff

*Inspector of Nuisances—*N. T. Wetherell, jun., Marston, St Lawrence, Banbury

*Gas Works—*John Richardson, secretary

*Inland Revenue Office (Crown Hotel)—*William W. Page, collector; George Morris, supervisor; Henry Spencer, excise officer

*Police-Station and Magistrates' Chamber, Banbury road—*Charles Botterill, inspector

*Stamp Office—*John G. Clarke, sub-distributor

Steward of the Manor and Borough of Brackley—
Arthur Weston

Steward of the Manor of King's Sutton—
Arthur Weston

Steward (Deputy) of the Manor of Turweston—
Arthur Weston

*Superintendent Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages—*Arthur Weston

*Deputy Superintendent of Births, Deaths, and Marriages—*Charles B. Barnes

*Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages for Brackley District—*Robert Heath
*Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages for Sulgrave District—*John Barrows
Town-Hall—in the principal street
Union Workhouse, Banbury road, James Ward, master

Carriers.

*London and North-Western Railway Company, to all parts—*John Walsh, agent; George Wallis, stationmaster

*Parcels Office, Crown Hotel—*Wm. Ellis, agent
Chas. Somerton, to Banbury on Mon. & Thur.; to Bicester and Oxford on Fri. & Sat.

Aaron & Edw. Jellyman, to Banbury on Mon. & Thur.; to Buckingham on Wed. & Sat.
John Elliott, to Northampton on Tues. & Fri.

Carriers who attend on market-days, &c., leaving the same afternoon, or as otherwise stated:—

Frederick Borton, to Aynho on Wednesday
Edward Cook, to Farthinghoe on Wed. & Sat.
Jas. Humphries, to Greatworth on Wed. & Sat.
James Archer, to Helmdon on Wed. & Sat.
William Watson, to Helmdon on Wed. & Sat.
Tarmen, to Hethe on Wednesday
James Bull, to Newbottle on Wed. & Sat.
Mrs Mary Franklin, to Sulgrave, Moreton, Pinckney, and Canons Ashby, on Wed.
William J. Allen, to Syresham daily
Joseph James, to Syresham on Wed. & Sat.
— Bucknell, to Culworth on Wednesday

CHALCOMBE PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Thorpe Mandeville; on the north by Wardington, in Oxfordshire; on the west by the river Cherwell; and on the south by Middleton Cheney. It contains 1639 acres. Its rateable value is £3716, and the gross estimated rental £4172; its population in 1801 was 438; in 1831, 499; in 1841, 488; in 1851, 506; in 1861, 468; and in 1871, 451 souls. The soil on the high grounds is a red loam, and on the lower fields clay and dark loam. About two thirds of the parish is in pasture; and Philip Wykeham Martin, Esq. (lord of the manor), Sir William Henry Cope, Henry Norris, Esq., and Colonel Parker, are the principal owners.

Manor.—Before the Conquest, Bardi was the Saxon proprietor of Cewcumbe, when it was valued at £10, but at the time of the Domesday survey one Godfrey held it of the Bishop of Lincoln. It then contained 4 hides of land, which, with 3 mills of the yearly rent of 16s., and 9 acres of meadow, were rated only at £7. In the reign of Henry II., this lordship was in the possession of Hugh de Anaf, or De Chacombe, the founder of the priory. His successor was Sir Robert de Chacombe, his son, from whom it descended, in the reign of Henry III., to Amabilia, his daughter and heir, wife of Gilbert de Segrave. From the De Segraves it passed in marriage to the De Mowbrays, Earls of Nottingham, and afterwards Dukes of Norfolk, and with them it continued till the 15th of Edward IV. (1476), when John, the fourth Duke of Norfolk, died, leaving an only child, Anne, who married Richard Plantagenet, Duke of York and Norfolk, the second son of Edward IV. He shared the tragic fate of his brother, Edward V., and dying without issue, the estates devolved to the families of Berkeley and Howard, into which the two daughters of the first Duke of Norfolk had married. On the partition of the property, this lordship was allotted to John Lord Howard, in whom the Dukedom of Norfolk was revived by Richard III., who also created his son Earl of Surrey. The Duke and his son attended their patron to Bosworth Field, where, after the death of the king, they were taken prisoners, committed to the Tower, and attainted; and in the 3d of Henry VII. (1488) this manor, which was forfeited, was granted to Sir John Ryselly. The attainer against these noblemen was reversed in the following year, and Chacombe was exchanged by Thomas Duke of Norfolk, in the 25th of Henry VIII. (1534) with John (Vere) Earl of Oxford, for two manors in Norfolk. The manor of Chalcombe subsequently passed to the family of Fox, and Charles Fox, Esq., in 1810, died seized of the manor, priory, impropriate rectory, advowson of the vicarage, 550 acres of land, the reversion of about 550 acres, and a great part of the village. Fiennes Wykeham, his nephew and heir-at-law, purchased of the trustees of his uncle the manor, impropriate rectory, and about 200 acres of land, and in 1821 assumed the arms and surname of Martin in addition to Wykeham, on succeeding to the estates in Kent of General Martin, his kinsman. Philip Wykeham Martin, Esq., is the present possessor.

The Priory for Canons Augustin, dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul, was founded by Hugh de Chacombe in the reign of Henry II., and endowed by him and others with lands, &c., in several places. At the time of its dissolution the revenues were worth £93, 6s. 3d. per annum; and in the 35th of Henry VIII. (1544), its site and demesne lands, with the rectory or parish church and the advowson of the vicarage, were granted to Michael Fox, Gentleman, of London, by whose descendants they have been incorporated with the manor.

Chalcombe Priory, the property of P. W. Martin, Esq., and now occupied by Mrs Cornwallis, widow of Major Cornwallis, is a handsome mansion, occupying the site of the religious establishment, a little north of the village.

The Village of Chalcombe, or Chacomb, is situated in a valley about 3½ miles N.N.E. from Banbury, and 8 N.W. from Brackley.

The Church, dedicated to SS. Peter and Paul, stands at the north end of the village, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch, chancel, and tower, in which is a peal of six bells. It was restored in 1856. The living is a discharged vicarage in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £7, 17s., endowed with £600 private benefaction, and £400 royal bounty; and the present gross income is about £280 per annum. The aggregate amount of vicarial tithes is £239, 5s., and the rent-charge for the impropriator's tithes, £199, 16s. Philip W. Martin, Esq., is the patron, and the Rev. William Alexander Ayton, B.A., the incumbent. There was formerly a chantry in this church, which, in the 26th of Henry VIII. (1535), was valued at £5, 6s. 8d. per annum. The Vicarage House, a neat modern edifice, is N.W. of the churchyard.

A small Wesleyan Chapel was erected here in 1816, to which a day and Sunday-school is attached. The Primitive Methodists have also a place of worship here.

The National School was erected by subscription in 1865. P. W. Martin, Esq., and the vicar are the principal contributors; it will accommodate 60 scholars.

Charity.—Walker's charity, a rent-charge of £2 per annum, and Bennet's, a similar rent-charge, are added to other moneys subscribed on the occasion, and expended in the purchase of a fat beast, which is divided amongst the poor at Christmas.

Post-Office.—William Capell, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Banbury at 8 A.M., and are despatched at 5.30 P.M.

Ayton Rev. William Alexander, B.A. vicar	Prickett Thos. & Sons (Thos. & John), millers and farmers, Huscle Mill	Farmers and Graziers. Bennett John Bennett William
Cornwallis Mrs, The Priory	Rainbow Benjamin, tailor	Campion John, at Thorpe Man- deville
Adkins John, pig dealer	Reader Jno. shopkpr. & carrier	Chinner The Misses
Gibbard Charles, cattle dealer	Sabin Mrs Jane, schoolmistress	Gibbard Mrs Sarah, Sales Hill
Green Samuel, baker	Sewell Mrs, beerhouse	Hirons William
Hancox Ths. framework knitr.	Watkins Wm. Beale, carpenter	Hirons Wm. jun. Castle Farm
Owen Wm. Jno. Watts, shoe- maker	Watts Corbett, shopkeeper	Hollier Edward
Plumbe Thomas, wheelwright and blacksmith	Watts Jno. beerho. & shopkpr.	Hollier William
Porter Miss Eliza, mistress National school	Wilkins Fred. stonemason	Pearson John (yeoman), Lodge Westley, Wm. Michael
	Wilkins William, shoemaker

Carrier.—John Reader, to Banbury, on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday.

CROUGHTON PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Charlton in Newbottle parish on the north, by Astwell in Evenley parish on the east, by Fritwell in Oxfordshire, on the south, and by Aynho on the west. It contains 2065 acres, and its population in 1801 was 301; in 1831, 450; in 1841, 472; in 1851, 582; in 1861, 580; and in 1871, 592 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £2851, and the gross estimated rental, £3381. The soil is principally a strong loam, and the largest landowners are the Earl of Effingham, the lord of the manor; the executors of the late Mr Alfred Hopcraft, and Mr Edward Manning. Three fourths of the parish is arable.

Manor.—At the time of the general survey, Suetman held the fifth part of half a hide, and Osbern 1 hide and 2 parts of 1 virgate, of Geoffrey de Mandeville. The former was valued at 3s. and the latter at 30s. The Earl of Morton held 4 parts of half a hide here at the same time, which were valued at 20s. in the Saxon time, but now rated at 2s. only. The farmhouse or grange belonging to the Earl's land was situated in Evenley parish. In the reign of Henry III., Simon de Turville and others held this lordship, and in the 9th of Edward II. (1316) Nicholas de Turville and Milo de Beauchamp were lords of Croughton. In the 1st of Henry VIII. (1509), Thomas Ramsay, Esq., died seized of this manor, which he held of the king as of the Honor of Wallingford, by the service of a fourth part of one knight's fee. Thomas, his successor, died in the 16th of the same reign (1525), and left it to his daughter, from whom it passed to Nicholas Woodhull, commonly called Lord Woodhull. From the Woodhulls it passed to the family of Clarke of Weston, who held it of the king as of his Honor of Wallingford, and from the Clarkes to the Fermors of Tusmore, in Oxfordshire. The late William Fermor, Esq., devised it with his other estates to trustees in trust for Maria, wife of Captain John Turner Ramsey, who sold it in 1865 to the Earl of Effingham, the present proprietor.

The Village of Croughton is about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. of Brackley, and 8 S.E. of Banbury. On the south side of the churchyard stands a venerable elm, much prized by the inhabitants, which measures about 32 feet round the trunk.

The Church, partly Norman and partly Early English, dedicated to All Saints, stands south of the village, and consists of a nave, north and south aisles, north and south porches, chancel, and low tower, containing three bells. It was rebuilt by the Rev. H. L. Bennett, the late rector. It is in a good state of repair, with open oak sittings and finials, and there is a very old staircase leading to the rood loft. The chancel is separated from the nave by an ancient rood screen; at the east end of the south aisle is a stained window to the memory of Lieut. Norman Ramsay, who died in the Crimea in 1855. An organ by A. Church of Banbury was placed in the chancel in 1869. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £15, 3s. 6½d., and now worth about £650 per annum. The Rev. John Lister, M.A., is the present patron and incumbent. The rectory consists of 305 acres of land, allotted in lieu of tithes; and also the tithe of 6 acres of meadow, and 4½ acres of the first cut of grass in Croughton Meadows, in the parish of Aynho. The Rectory House adjoins the north side of the churchyard.

The Wesleyan Methodists and Wesleyan Reformers have places of worship here. In a field called Chapel Close stood formerly a small chapel, which was appropriated to the Hospital of St James and St John in Aynho.

The National School was erected in 1842 on the glebe land, by the late incumbent, and enlarged in 1866 by the present rector; the average attendance is about 120.

Charity.—The poor's land consists of 15a. 2r. allotted in lieu of cutting furze, &c., and now let out in 72 allotments to the poor, who pay 2s. for each allotment.

Eminent Men.—Rev. Robert Friend, a distinguished scholar, eldest son of the Rev. William Friend, rector of this parish, was born here in 1667. He was head-master of Westminster School in 1711, canon of Windsor in 1729, and prebend of Westminster in 1731. He published an edition of Cicero's "Orations" in 1724, and died in 1751. John Friend (brother to Robert), an elegant writer, and a most eminent physician of his day, was born here in 1675. He was professor of chemistry at Oxford, and published his lectures in Latin, under the title of "Prælectiones Chymicæ," with a dedication to Sir Isaac Newton. He also wrote and published "The History of Physic, from the Time of Galen to the Beginning of the Sixteenth Century," the first vol. in 1725, and the second in 1726. This work was reprinted in 1727, and again in 1750, and has been translated into the Latin and French languages. He was physician to the Prince of Wales and Queen Caroline; he died in 1728, and was buried at Hitcham, in Buckinghamshire.

Post-Office.—Jacob Burnam, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Brackley at 8.15 A.M. and at 3 P.M., and are despatched at 4.10 P.M.

Burman Jacob, harnessmaker
Collins Thos. and Miss Sarah, teachers of National school
Jones Frederick, baker
Judd Edward, shoemaker
Judd William, shoemaker
Judge Geo. vict. White Horse
Lambert Jesse, grocer
Lister Rev. John, M.A. rector
Lord Joseph, butcher
Lovell Mrs, carpenter

Manning Edward, surgeon
Mansfield Chas. wheelwright
Payne Benj. marine store deahr.
Payne Miss Mary, shopkeeper
Ramsay Beville, Esq. J.P.
Croughton House
Robinson George, blacksmith
Taylor Alfred, blacksmith & agricultural implement mkr.
Turner Charles, beerhouse
Taverne Louis, miller & farmer

Troke Edw. vict. Blackbird
Wootton Jarv. stonemas. & bld.

Farmers and Graziers.

Berridge Samuel, Manor-House
Chambers James
Hawkins Thomas & Charles
Hawkins Wm. (& asst. ovrr.)
Hobbs Henry
Tubb John, Pimlico Farm

Carriers.—Benjamin Payne, to Banbury, on Thursday, and Bicester on Friday; and Mrs Mary Morris, to Banbury, on Thursday.

CULWORTH PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Eydon, on the east by Morton Pinkney, on the south by Sulgrave, and on the west by Thorp Mandeville and Edgcott. It contains 2214 acres; and its population in 1801 was 532; in 1811, 564; in 1821, 581; in 1831, 606; in 1841, 713; in 1851, 685; in 1861, 652; and in 1871, 595 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £4541, and the gross estimated rental, £5437. The soil varies from a light sand with a substratum of limestone to a loam and clayey land, and the principal landowners are Percy Henry Crutchley, Esq. (lord of the manor), Mr John Sabin, Mr George Whitton, Mrs Hill, Messrs E. and R. Cardwell, the executors of the late Charles Fairbrother, Mr George Berner, and a few smaller owners. The white pavingstone of this lordship was formerly used alternately with the blackstone of Byfield for paving floors in imitation of black and white marble. A valuable bed of very "hard, loose" stone, which makes excellent lime and cement, and is susceptible of a fine polish equal to marble, is found on the estate of Mr George Whitton, as is also ironstone of a superior quality, and which is now about to be worked. This ore is found by analysis to contain $42\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of iron.

Berry Mount Hill, a circular mount surrounded by a deep ditch in a close north of the churchyard, is supposed to be the site of a castle erected by one of the feudal lords in King Stephen's reign.

Manor.—Osbern held $1\frac{1}{2}$ hides of land here of Geoffrey de Mandeville at the time of the Norman survey; before the Conquest it was the freehold of Asgar, and was then valued at £3. In the reign of Henry II., William de Coleworth held 2 hides and 4 small virgates here, and Othner 1 hide. This manor continued in the possession of the Coleworth family for several generations, and in the 48th of Henry III. (1264), Richard de Coleworth obtained a grant of a weekly market to be held here on Saturday, and an annual fair, to commence on the eve of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin (7th December), and end on the day after the feast. This market was confirmed in the 47th of Edward III. (1374), but the fair was removed to the Feast of St Peter ad Vincula; but both have been long discontinued. In the 9th of Edward II. (1316), Roger Missenden was lord of Culworth by purchase, and in the 20th of Edward III. (1347) his son and successor, Roger, accounted for one knight's fee here of the fee of Pinkeney, and half a knight's fee as held of the fee of Hereford. In the 2d of Henry V. (1415), Robert Charingworth levied a fine of this manor. It subsequently passed into the possession of the Danvers family, and from them in moieties to Martha and Frances Rich, of Sunning Hill, Berkshire, from whom it passed to G. H. Crutchley, Esq., who died in 1869, and was succeeded by his son, Percy Henry Crutchley, Esq., the present possessor. Canons Ashby Priory and Warden Abbey, in Bedfordshire, had lands in this parish. The Manor-House, long the residence of the Danvers family, is in the centre of the village, and now in a dilapidated state.

The Village of Culworth extends nearly a mile along the brow of an ascent, about $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles north-east of Banbury, and 8 north-west from Brackley.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is situated in the upper part of the village, and consists of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, south porch, and embattled tower containing five bells and a clock. It was partly restored in 1842 by the late rector, and the restoration was carried out in 1858, when a fine organ by Walker of London was added. The chancel windows are of stained glass, those on the south side representing "The Transfiguration," "Resurrection," "Walk to Emmaus," and "The Ascension." The former of these was erected to the memory of Mrs Spence by her son, the then rector; the other in 1857 by the parishioners to the Rev. John Spence, who was curate and afterwards rector of this parish from 1816 to 1852. There are two stained windows in the south aisle, one representing "Christ blessing little children," the other "Peter walking on the sea." One of these, in memory of Captain Prout, who was drowned at Buenos Ayres, was erected by his sister. In the same aisle is a monumental arch supposed to be the tomb of Robert de Coleworth; there is also a piscina and aumbrey; the pews are of oak, and the pulpit, which is of the time of James I., is beautifully carved. There are several other monuments in the church—one in the chancel to the D'Aurers family is very handsome. The living is a rectory annexed to the vicarage in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £10, and now valued at about £780 per annum, in the gift of and held by the Rev. Charles Hill, M.A. The impropriate rectory and vicarage united consist of 23a. of glebe land, and the tithes, which were commuted in 1841 for a rent-charge of £700.

The Rectory House, which stands near the church, is a commodious and handsome stone building, partly in the Elizabethan and partly in the Early English styles, and was built by the present rector in 1854.

The School is endowed with £80 per annum, arising from an annuity of £65, charged on lands here, settled in 1795 by the Misses Rich; and £500 3 per cent. consols, purchased with the savings of income. The school is free to all the poor children of the parish above the age of six years. Mr Henry Ambler is the present master.

The Infant School was erected and endowed with the interest of £1000 in 1848 by the Rev. John Spence, the late rector. The children are educated up to six years of age; in the school is a tablet erected by the inhabitants to the memory of the founder.

A Baptist Chapel stands in the centre of the village, and was built in 1842; and the Moravians have a chapel, erected in 1810.

Charity.—The charity estate consists of 32 acres, which lets for about £65 per annum. It is expended in bread, coal, and clothing for the poor, and in apprenticing poor children.

Post and Money-Order Office, and Savings Bank.—Miss Ellen Gibbs, postmistress. Letters arrive from Banbury at 10 A.M., and are despatched at 4.5 P.M.

Ambler Hy. masterNat. school
Arnett Wm. carpnr. & par. cl.
Arnett Edwin, M.D. & surgeon,
Culworth Hall
Carvill Charles, stonemason
Cave John, plumber, painter, &
vict. Red Lion
Cherry Mrs Martha, butcher
Collins Mr Thomas
Cotterill Thos., wheelwt. & bldr.
Elkington Mrs Rebecca
Faulkner Mrs Caroline, butcher and farmer
Freeman Geo. shoemr. & beerho.
Gascoigne John, blacksmith
Gibbs Mrs My. Ann, dressmkr.
Gibbs Mr Samuel
Harris Mrs Sophia
Hartley H. Urban, miller and threshing-machine owner,
Culworth Mill

Hawkes James, shoemaker
Hill Rev. Chas. M.A. rector
Humphrey Rev. Algernon Guise
Pargiter, preparatory school
Ibberson Wm. Covey, grocer and draper
Lever Mrs Elizabeth
Linnell Mrs Sarah
Lovell Geo. stone & lime mercht.
asst. oversr. & assr. of taxes.
Lovell Wm. carpnr. & wheelwrt.
Merry John, grocer and baker
Minchin Miss My. mstrs. inf. sch.
Moss William, shoemaker
Parish James, vict. Horseshoe
Wadham Miss Ann, shopkeeper.
Ward Mrs Selina, baker and
beerhouse
Ward Mr Walter
Webb Thomas, grocer & baker

Wells Thomas, tailor
Yates Mrs Ann, beerret. & shopk.

Farmers and Graziers.

Bannard Thomas
Cotterill William
Hartley Frederick
Inge Ambrose Henry, Black-bird Hill
Jessop George
Lovell George
Page Rd. Culworth Grounds
Potter William
Pratt Isaac
Sabin James
Sabin John (yeoman)
Watts Caleb
Whitton George (yeoman), Culworth House

Carriers.—James Parish, to Banbury on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday; Nehemiah Bricknell, to Banbury on Monday and Thursday, and to Brackley on Wednesday.

EVENLEY PARISH.

Evenley, or Imley, is bounded on the north by the river Ouse, which separates it from Hinton; on the north-east by Brackley; on the east by Mixbury, in Oxfordshire; on the west by Croughton; and on the south by Tusmore, in Oxfordshire. It contains 2984 acres; its rateable value is £3983, and the gross estimated rental £4668. The population in 1801 was 369; in 1831, 506; in 1841, 487; in 1851, 489; in 1861, 525; and in 1871, 589. The soil is principally a light loam on limestone, and the largest landowners are the Hon. Mrs P. S. Pierrepont (lady of the manor), and Magdalen College, Oxford. The greater part of the lordship is arable. At the Three-shire Pit, near the Mill Ford, is the point of junction of the parishes of Turweston, Evenley, and Mixbury, in the counties of Buckingham, Northampton, and Oxford. Several Roman coins were found in 1826 in a field near the river Ouse, called Addington's Meadow, in the direction of Brackley.

Manor.—Otbert held 2 hides of land here of Walterius Flandrensis, at the time of the Norman survey; one William held 1 hide here of the Earl of Morton, and Gilbert 3 virgates of Earl Albericus at the same time. The whole was then rated at £4, 10s. In the reign of Henry II., one of the lordships of Evenley contained 1 hide and 1 small virgate, and was held by Robert Fitz-Osbert of the fee of Leicester; and the other was in the possession of Alous de Merke, and contained 2 hides wanting 1 virgate. In the 24th of Edward I. (1296), John de Wahul, descendant of Walterius Flandrensis, died seized of 2½ knight's fees here, which he held of the king in capite. In the 4th of Edward III. (1321), William de Weston died seized of a third part of this manor, which he held of John de Wahul; and in the following year William de Apeltre was lord of the whole manor. In the 5th of Edward VI. (1552), William Stutesbury died seized of this manor, and his son William levied a fine of it in the 6th of the same reign. From this family it passed to the Lisles, and by one of them sold to William Price, Esq., at whose decease it was purchased by Francis Basset, Esq. His son sold it in 1786 to George Rush, Esq., of whom it was purchased in 1790 by Herbert Gwynne Browne, Esq., whose daughter Georgina in 1807 carried it in marriage to the Hon. Philip Sydney Pierrepont, fifth son of Charles, first Earl Manvers, and it has recently passed to Colonel Campbell. The Abbey of De la Pre, near Northampton, had possessions in this parish.

The Village of Evenley is built in the form of a square, enclosing a large green, adorned with some fine elm-trees, and presents a remarkably picturesque appearance. It is seated on elevated ground about 1 mile S.W. of Brackley.

The Church, dedicated to St George, is a handsome structure in the Early English style, consisting of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, north and south transepts, organ-chamber, vestry, and square tower, surmounted by a shingled spire, and containing five bells and a clock with chimes; the latter was presented by the late vicar. The church was rebuilt in 1864, at the expense of the Hon. Mrs Pierrepont, in memory of her late husband. The chancel is separated from the nave by a rood screen which stood in the former structure. The east window is of stained glass by Hardman of Birmingham; and in the north transept is another to the memory of the late Hon. P. S. Pierrepont, placed there by Colonel Campbell and his lady. The reredos is very handsome; the arcade is ornamented with shafts of Devonshire marble, the centre arch containing a cross of green alabaster, the others, two on each side, are angels carved in alabaster. The living is a vicarage in the Deanery of Brackley, augmented by Queen Anne's bounty with £400 to meet private donations, rated in the king's books at £7, but now worth £182 per annum. The great and small tithes were commuted in July 1840 for £285—viz., the rectorial, the property of the President, Fellows, and Scholars of Magdalen College, Oxford, the patrons, for £218; and the vicarial, £67. The impropriate rectory has also 356 acres in Evenley, allotted by the Commissioners of Enclosure, and 160 of old enclosure at Astwick. The vicar has 87a. 36p. of glebe in addition to the tithes. The Rev. Edward Worsley, M.A., is the present incumbent. A chantry was founded and endowed in this church in 1333, in honour of the Blessed Virgin and All Saints, by William de Apeltre. The Vicarage House, erected in 1834, is pleasantly situated west of the church.

A Day and Sunday School was built in 1834 by the Hon. Mrs Pierrepont, and has lately been considerably enlarged, and a master's house erected; it is supported by Colonel Campbell, Government aid, and the school-pence.

Evenley Hall, the seat of Colonel Campbell, is a fine stone mansion situated on an eminence between Brackley and Evenley, in a well-wooded park, and commands a fine view of the adjacent country.

Eminent Men.—Sir Creswell Levinz, second son of William Levinz, Esq., was born here in 1627; appointed to the office of attorney-general in 1679, and afterwards a justice of the common pleas. He published reports of cases in the various courts, in French, in 1702.

Baptista Levinz, D.D., youngest brother of Sir Creswell, was also a native of this village. He was consecrated Bishop of Sodor and Man in 1684–85; became a prebend of Winchester in 1691, and died there in 1692–93.

Astwick and Plowman's Furze form the south and west sides of this parish. The former place contains about 670 acres, the latter about 500 acres, and the whole belongs to Magdalen College, Oxford. The village of Astwick, now consisting of a few scattered houses, is situate about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. of Evenley. "It appears," says Bridges, "to have been formerly a large town, as may be seen from the ruins, which are called the Old Town. There was formerly a manor-house, the site of which is now overgrown; but there is still remaining a moat full of water, 150 paces long and 10 yards wide." In 1848 several stones were found laid as if forming a stone descent or staircase. Plowman's or Plummer's Furze is a single farmhouse.

Post-Office at Henry Green's. Letters arrive from Brackley at 7.30 A.M., and are despatched at 4.50 P.M.

Boughton Mrs Eliza. baker
Boughton Mr Joseph
Burrows Wm. Jno. schoolmstr.
Cadd Daniel, vict. Red Lion
Campbell Col. Evenley Hall
Collison Robert, stonemason
Dolton James, steward to Col. Campbell

Finch Jno. wheelwrit. & carpr.
Green Henry, shoemaker
Hawkins Stephen, beer retailer
Hearn John, wheelwright
Hulatt Wm. beer & flour retail.
Prue George, shopkeeper
Southam Mrs Eleanor
Worsley Rev. Edw. M.A. vicar

Farmers and Graziers.

Andrews Thomas
Lord John, Astwick
Painter Hy. h. Finmere, Oxon.
Railton John Hill
Rogers John, Plowman's Furze

FARTHINGHOE PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Marston St Lawrence and Greatworth on the north, by Steane and Halse in Brackley on the east, by Newbottle and Astrop on the south, and by Purston, Middleton Cheney, and Thenford on the west. It contains 1471 acres, of the rateable value of £3437. Its population in 1801 was 348; in 1831, 456; in 1841, 409; in 1851, 416; in 1861, 316; in 1871, 404 souls. The gross estimated rental of the parish is £4004. The soil is principally a strong loam and clay; but the south side of the parish is a red sandy land and limestone. About three fourths of it is in permanent pasture, and Alfred Rush, Esq., the lord of the manor, is the principal proprietor. Ouse Well, a spring on the glebe land about a mile E. of the village, is the source of the Ouse. It directs its course to Brackley from this parish, thence to Huntingdon and St Ives; being augmented by the Cam above Ely, and the lesser Ouse below, it enters the estuary S.E. of Lynn Regis, in Norfolk. A spring in Red-well-head Close is chalybeate.

Manor.—The king held three hides of land in Farninghoe of Earl Albericus at the time of the Conqueror's survey. There were twenty acres of meadow, and the whole had been valued at £10, and was then rated at £7. In the reign of Henry II. these three hides were held of the fee of Leicester. Saher de Quincy, Earl of Winchester, was the successor of the Earls of Leicester; and in the 9th of Edward II. (1316), Robert de Holland was lord of Farthinghoe. The manor afterwards passed to the Bereford family, with which it continued till the 2d of Henry VI. (1424), when it passed to Thomas, son of Sir Philip Seynteler, brother of Elizabeth, wife of Baldwin de Bereford, who died without issue. William Lord Lovell was the superior lord of the fee at this time. In the 18th of Henry VII. (1503), John Mauntell died seized of this manor, which he held of the Earl of Derby, as of his manor of Brackley, by fealty, and an annual payment of sixpence. The estates of John Mauntell, Esq., grandson of the said John, were confiscated for murder in 1541, and this manor was granted to Geoffrey Dormer, Esq., who had previously purchased a manor here belonging to the Abbey of Leicester. This latter estate was given to the abbey by the Earl of Leicester in the reign of Edward II., and at the dissolution of that house in the reign of Henry VIII., to Richard Andrew, and Leonard Chamberlyn, Esq., who sold it in the same year to Mr Dormer. His son William alienated lands to the amount of £1000, and his son John sold the manors, advowson, and remainder of the estate to Francis Cheyne, Esq., who in the 41st of Elizabeth (1599) levied a fine of them to Robert Dillon, Esq. John, his son and successor, alienated his estate here to the Egertons in the reign of James I., and from this family it lineally descended to the Earl of Wilton. George Rush, Esq., purchased the manorial estate and advowson in 1789; and his grandson Alfred, of the same name, is the present proprietor.

The Village of Farthinghoe stands on the crown of a hill about 4 miles N.W. of Brackley, on the turnpike road from that town to Banbury.

The Church, dedicated to St Michael, is situated at the N.E. side of the village, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch and chancel, and a tower containing a clock and five bells. The church was restored in 1871, when open deal sittings, a new pulpit, lectern, reading-desk, altar rails, chancel stalls, and south porch were erected. A gallery was removed, and the west end thrown open, when a handsome Norman arch was discovered. There are two piscinas—one in the chancel, and one at the east end of the south aisle. A small organ was added in 1871. At the east end is a stained glass window to the memory of Mrs Stratton. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £16. The rectory consists of about 100 acres of glebe; and the tithes were commuted in 1841 for a rent-charge of £428, 8s. 10d. The value of the living is now about £620 a year. Alfred Rush, Esq., is the patron, and the Rev. Francis Litchfield, M.A., incumbent. A chantry was founded here for a priest to teach and instruct freely the children of the parish, but when or by whom left is unknown. At the east end of the south aisle is a handsome monument to the memory of George Rush, Esq., who died in London in 1803. There are three almshouses in the village, erected by Mr Thomas Amphlett, and endowed by him with the interest of £150, at 3 per cent., which is equally divided between them.

Biography.—Philip Thicknesse, Esq., an author and eccentric character, was son of the Rev. John Thicknesse, and born here in 1719. He was intended for the medical, but embraced the military profession, and was engaged in active service from 1735 to 1746. He published "Observations on the Customs and Manners of the French Nation," &c., "A Year's Journey through France and Spain," Memoirs and Anecdotes of himself, and "A Year's Journey through the Pais Basor Austrian Netherlands." He died suddenly on the journey from Boulogne to Paris in 1792.

Post-Office at Thomas Boswell's. Letters arrive from Brackley at 7.25 A.M. and 1.50 P.M., and are despatched at 6.30 P.M.; on Sundays at 9 A.M.

Allitt Thomas, shoemaker
Austin Mr William
Blackwood Hon. & Rev. Wm.
Farthinghoe Lodge
Baldwin Augustine, tailor
Belcher Jas. farmer & vict. Fox
Boswell Thomas, baker, shopkeeper, and post-office
Bull Thomas, stonemason
Chatwell William, shoemaker
Cook Edward, carrier

Curtis Mr Daniel
Curtis William, butcher
Fathers Ben. shopkr. & beer retl.
George Miss Elizabeth
Heritage Jno. btchr. & beerho.
Litchfield Rev. Francis, M.A.
J.P. rector
Lovell Edward, carpenter
Roberts Edward, blacksmith
Roberts Misses Ellen & My. Ann
Robinson Rev. Arthur Edw.
M.A. curate

Starkey Mr Thomas
Taylor Philip, blacksmith
Wilkins George, baker

Farmers and Graziers.

Bliss John
Eldridge James Golby
George Augustine
Locke John
Nicholas John Robert

Carrier.—Edw. Cook, to Banbury on Mon. and Thur. and to Brackley on Wed. and Sat.

HELMDON PARISH.

Helmdon has Plumpton and Weedon Lois on the north, from which it is divided by Allybrook, Wappenham and Radston on the east and south, and Stutchbury and Sulgrave on the west. It contains 1906 acres. Its population in 1801 was 421; in 1831, 512; in 1841, 551; in 1851, 603; in 1861, 602; and in 1871, 656 souls. Its rateable value is £3394, 4s., and the gross estimated rental is £4181, 5s. The soil is generally a strong clay, subsoil freestone. Two thirds of the parish is in grass, and there are about 40 acres of woodland. The largest landowners are the Provost and Fellows of Worcester College, Oxford (lords of the manor); Magdalen College, Oxford; Mr James Fairbrother,

Mr John Adkins, Mr Edwin Wrigton, Mr George Thomason, and Mr William Farmer. Helmdon was long celebrated for its extensive freestone quarries, but they have not been worked for architectural purposes for many years except in the locality. Lace-making is carried on here extensively.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey the Earl of Morton held four hides of land in Helmdon. In the Confessor's reign it was the freehold of Alwin and Goodwin, and was valued then, as in the following reign, at £6. William de Torevill held these four hides of the fee of Leicester in the reign of Henry II., and in the 52d year of Henry III. (1268), Simon de Turville was lord of Helmdon. In the 9th of Edward II. (1316), Nicholas de Turville was lord of this manor, and dying without issue male, his inheritance descended to Sarah his daughter, wife of Robert Lovett of Liscombe, Buckinghamshire. In the 20th of Edward III. (1347), Robert his son accounted for one fee here as held of the Honor of Leicester. In the reign of Henry V. we find three distinct manors in Helmdon, called Overbury, Netherbury, and Minnicourt, or Middlebury manors. The first was in the possession of Thomas Moore, Esq., early in the reign of Henry VIII. In the 5th of the same reign (1514), Anne, the widow of John Cope, Esq., died seized of Netherbury manor, which she held of Thomas Moore, Esq., as lord of Overbury. In the 20th of this reign (1529) Mrs Moore was lady of Overbury, Mrs Heneage of Netherbury, and Thomas Crispe, Esq., of Middlebury manor. These manors passed through several intermediate possessors, and the manor of Overbury (the principal one) is now the property of the Provost, Fellows, and Scholars of Worcester College, Oxford; Netherbury was in the possession of the Emylies for several generations, and is now in the possession of the successor of Mr Vincent Shortland of Oxford; and the third manor passed from the Crispes and Coles to the family of Fairbrother.

The Abbey of Biddlesden had also a manor here, which at the dissolution was granted to Sir John Williams and Anthony Stringer, who sold it to Richard Mayho, alias Nichols. Henry his son sold it in 1552 to the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, the present proprietors. Canons Ashby Priory had lands here, which passed with the Biddlesden Abbey estate to Magdalen College.

Worcester College manor-house, which has just been thoroughly restored, is now a farmhouse standing west of the church, and the other manor-houses cannot be distinguished.

The Village of Helmdon, which is a mile in length, is situated partly in a valley about 5 miles south of Brackley, 18 miles east of Northampton, and 10 west from Banbury. In Bridges' time there were 104 families and 43 freeholders here. A monthly market for the sale of live and dead stock is held here; and the Northampton and Banbury Junction Railway passes through, and has a station in the village.

The Church, dedicated to St Mary Magdalen, standing in an elevated situation at the south end of the village, is a stone structure in the Decorated style of architecture, and consists of a nave, north and south aisles, and north and south porches, chancel, square tower ornamented by a spire, and containing a peal of six bells. The tower was rebuilt by the parishioners in 1823 at a cost of upwards of £500; the south porch was rebuilt in 1841, and the north porch in 1860. In the south wall of the chancel are a sedilia and piscina in good preservation. An organ was placed in the church in 1870. A new stained chancel roof was inserted in 1872 by the late rector, Rev. C. F. Heydon. In preparing flues for the church two very solid stone coffins were recently found in the south aisle, in what is supposed to have been the manor chapel. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £13, 11s., and now valued at £300. The patronage is vested in Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and the Rev. Frederick Barnes, M.A., is the incumbent. The rectory consists of 59a. 9p. of glebe land, and a rent-charge of £160 per annum in lieu of tithes.

The Rectory House, a stone building on the north side of the church, was erected in 1856. In the porch is a chimneypiece, the date and initials of which excited much disputation amongst the antiquarians of the last century. Dr Wallis, the celebrated mathematician, contended that the true reading of the date is "An. Do. M. 133;" whilst others state it, variously, to be 1133, 1233, 1533, and 1535. The initials, W. R., following the date, are referred by some to William Reynolde, the rector from 1523 to 1560. In the churchyard is a large yew-tree, which measures 28 feet round its trunk.

The National School, with a master's residence attached, was built in 1853, and enlarged in 1872 by the addition of an infant school; it will accommodate 100 scholars. The infant school was built by subscription on land given by Mr John Adkins.

Post-Office at John Franklin's.—Letters from Brackley at 9 A.M., and returned at 3.40 P.M.

Adams Slater, surgeon
Barnes Rev. Fred. M.A. rector
Barrows John, relieving officer
Dawes Rd. wheelwt. & carptr.
Fairbrother Mr James
Franklin Emanuel, shopkeeper
Franklin John, baker, grocer
Franklin Miss My. Nat. schlmrs.
Gibbs William, beerhouse
Golby Mr Job
Gorham Chas. mast. Natl. school
Hopkins Thos. shoemaker
Howard Henry, blacksmith
Humphrey Martin, stonemason
Isham Miss Mary Ann, shopkr.

Jeffrey Edw. John, butcher and vict. Cross
Labram Daniel, vict. Chequers
Liddington Mr George
Marriott Mr Thomas
Mayo Fred. shoemakr. & draper
Osborn Charles, baker
Pratt John, beerhouse
Sadler Mr William
Smith Mr John
Stanton George, cattle dealer
Stevens Chas. stationmaster
Taylor Thos. wheelwright, carpenter, and builder
Thomas Thomas, baker
Wooding John, blacksmith

Wrighton Mrs Susannah

Farmers and Graziers.

Adkins Jno. Salmon (yeoman),
The Grange
Archer James
Bayliss Wm. Augustine
Bazley Mrs Hannah
Cockerill Robert
Farmer Wm. Stocking's Farm
Farmer Wm. (yeoman)
South Henry (yeoman)
Strange Richard
Thomason George (yeoman)
Thomason William
Weston Henry Alfred

Carriers.—Edward John Jeffrey, to Banbury on Mon. and Thur., Towcester on Tues.; William Watson, to Banbury on Mon. and Thur., and Brackley on Wed. and Sat.

HINTON-IN-THE-HEDGES PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Brackley, on the north by Steane, on the west by Newbottle, and on the south by Charlton and Evenley. It contains 1409 acres, and its population in 1801 was 177; in 1831, 173; in 1841, 171; in 1851, 150; in 1861, 178; and in 1871, 182 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £2332, and the gross estimated rental £2615. W. C. Cartwright, Esq., M.P., is lord of the manor, and the principal proprietor of the soil, which varies in quality, and the greater part of which is arable. In ancient records this parish is called Hinton near Brackley, but now Hinton-in-the-Hedges, to distinguish it from Hinton near Woodford.

Manor.—In the Domesday survey Hintone is placed in the hundred of Foxley. It then contained two hides of land, which were held by Ernald of Geoffrey de Mandeville. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 2s., and 16 acres of meadow, and the whole was valued at 70s., though in the preceding reign it was rated only at 30s. In the reign of Henry II. this lordship was comprehended in Towcester hundred, and these two hides were then in the possession of Elias de Hinton. In the eighteenth of Edward I. (1290), Henry de Hinton held this manor of the Earl of Hereford, the lineal heir of Geoffrey de Mandeville. From the De Hintons it passed to John Lord Lovell, who died possessed of it in the ninth of Henry IV. (1408). In the family of Lovell it continued till the reign of Henry VII., when, upon the forfeiture of Lord Lovell, his estates reverted to the crown; and in the eleventh of the same reign (1496), this manor, with that of Steane, was granted to Sir Reginald Bray, to be held by fealty and the presentment of one red rose. His brother's daughter carried it in marriage to Sir William Sandes, afterwards Lord Sandes. In the twenty-fourth of Elizabeth (1572), Reginald Bray levied a fine, and died seized of it in the following year. Upon the partition of his estates between his five daughters, Sir Thomas Crewe became the possessor of Hinton in right of Temperance his wife, fourth daughter of the said Reginald Bray. From him it descended in course of succession to Nathaniel Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham, after whose decease in 1721 it devolved on his youngest daughter, Catherine, wife of Sir John Harper, Bart. of Calke Abbey, Derbyshire. His grandson, Sir Henry Harper, sold it in 1748 to William Cartwright, Esq. of Aynho, great-grandfather of Sir Thomas Cartwright, G.C.H., the late lord of the manor, from whom it passed to William Cornwallis Cartwright, Esq., M.P., the present possessor.

The Village of Hinton-in-the-Hedges is situated partly in a valley about two miles east of Brackley.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, stands at the west end of the village, and consists of a nave, north aisle, south porch, and a low Norman tower containing three bells. It was thoroughly restored in 1869, when the chancel was partly rebuilt, and a new east window and two windows on the south side put in, and the floor laid with encaustic tiles; the nave was re-roofed, the church furnished with open oak sittings, and floored with Minton's tiles, and a new vestry erected. The chancel is separated from the nave by a handsomely carved rood screen. In the chancel is a brass, dated 1452, to Sir William Saunders. The font is ancient and curiously carved, and at the west end is a fine Norman arch. In the north aisle of the church are two ancient and very remarkable altar tombs of freestone, bearing the figures of a knight in armour and his lady in a loose robe, the knight's feet resting upon the body of a lion. There is no inscription or date, but it was erected evidently anterior to the reign of Henry IV. They have been attributed to Lord and Lady Lovell. Within this manor was formerly a chapel dedicated to St John. The living is a rectory with that of Steane, in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £10, and now worth £500 per annum. His Excellency the Earl Spencer is patron, and the Rev. George Dewhurst Atwood is the rector. The rectory consists of 302 acres, and a modus of £7, 9s. 8d. in lieu of tithes in Steane parish.

The Rectory House, which stands close to the church, is a stone building partly covered with ivy, and was erected in 1678. A new school has just been erected at the expense of Mr Cartwright and Earl Spencer, and is well attended.

Almshouses.—In the village are almshouses for two poor widows, endowed with from 25 to 30 acres, which let for about £30 a year. The poor inmates receive each 4s. per week, and the remainder, after defraying the expense of repairs, is applied to the apprenticing of poor children. Lady Arran left £100 to the poor of this parish, the interest of which, £4, is distributed to the poor at Christmas.

Human Remains.—Several human skeletons have been found from time to time in the garden of Hinton Grounds; and in 1848, whilst our agent (then collecting information for the first edition of the present work) was examining the spot, two others were discovered very near the surface.

{ Letters are received here through the Brackley Post-Office.

Atwood Rev. Geo. Dewhurst, rector	Mobbs John, blacksmith	Farmers and Graziers.
Horwood Mr Philip, Hinton Ho.	Stanton Miss Ellen, school-	Alkin Joseph
Horwood, the Misses Ann and	mistress	Bartlett Robert
Eliza, Hinton House	Steedon Shugborough Nevett, vict. Crewe Arms	Cherry Chas. Hinton Grounds

KING'S SUTTON PARISH.

King's Sutton, being an ancient demesne of the crown, was so called to distinguish it from the other Sutton in the county; it is bounded on the north by Warkworth and Middleton Cheney, on the east by Newbottle and Hinton, on the south by Aynho, and on the west by Adderbury, in Oxfordshire, from which it is separated by the river Cherwell. It includes Walton Grounds, and portions of the hamlets of Astrop, Charlton, and Purston, which are situated partly in this and partly in Newbottle parish. It contains, with that portion of those hamlets situated in this parish, 4348 acres. Its population in 1801 was 1021; in 1831, 1270; in 1841, 1662; in 1851, 1335; in 1861, 1350; and in 1871, 1319 souls. Its rateable value is £10,025, and the gross estimated rental £12,151. The soil varies from a stiff clay to a light loam. Ironstone has been discovered here on Mr Lovell's property, and is now extensively worked. The greater part of the lordship is in permanent pasture; and the principal proprietors are Mrs Willes (lady of the manor); Sir William Richmond Brown, Bart.; Charles Thomas Willes, Esq.; Wm. George Whittall Lovell, Esq.; Samuel Richard Lovell, Esq.; and Colonel North. The Oxford and Birmingham branch of the Great Western Railway extends over 33a. 1r. 2p. in the parish.

Manor.—Sutton contained three hides of land, which were in the possession of the king at the time of the Domesday survey. There was a mill worth 10s. 8d., a meadow of the value of 20s., and a market which yielded 20s. yearly. Besides these, Godwin the priest, and Ulwin, held of the king three and one fifth virgates; the Earl of Morton had the fifth part of a hide, and Hugh de Grentemaisnil had one and a half hides and the tenth part of a hide, and Hugh was his under-tenant. In the second of Henry II. (1156), Richard de Camville had a grant of this lordship and hundred, and was founder of Coombe Abbey, in Warwickshire. From this family it passed in marriage to the Longspes, one of whom, in the thirty-sixth of Henry III. (1252), had a grant of a weekly market on Monday, and an annual fair on the vigil, day, and morrow of St James the Apostle, both of which have long since fallen into disuse. From them it passed also in marriage to the Earl of Ulster, and in the fourth of Edward I. (1276), Emelina Countess of Ulster died seized of this manor and hundred of Sutton. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), Emelina de Longspe, second daughter of the Countess of Ulster, was in possession of them; and after her decease, in the fifth of Edward III. (1332), they descended to her niece, Maud, wife of Robert de Holland. From this family they passed in marriage to John Lord Lovell; and with his descendants they continued till the attainder of Francis Lord Lovell, in the first of Henry VII. (1485), when they were seized by the crown. In the fourth of the same reign they were granted to George Lord Stanley, eldest son of Thomas, first Earl of Derby, with whose posterity they continued till the fortieth of Elizabeth (1598), when the manor was purchased by Robert Kenwrick, Esq., for £820. In 1735, George Kenwrick alienated it to Sir John Willes, the attorney-general, from whose grandson it passed in 1802 to his cousin, the late Rev. William S. Willes, whose son, the late William Willes, left it to his widow, the present possessor.

There was also a manor here called the Prebend Manor of Sutton, which the family of Longspe gave to the Priory of Burcestre, but the prebend was converted into a lay fee in the reign of Henry VIII.

The Manor-House, an ancient mansion, stands south of the churchyard. It is said that Charles I. was concealed here. It is now the residence of Mrs Willes; it contains a fine portrait by Jarvis of Lord Chief-Justice Willes, together with a good collection of family and other portraits.

The Village of King's Sutton is situated partly on an eminence, about five miles S.E. of Banbury, and six W. by S. of Brackley. On the 15th of July 1785, a fire broke out here, which in about three hours consumed forty houses and property to the amount of £3300. At the west end of the village is an excellent mineral spring.

The Church, dedicated to Saints Peter and Paul, is a large, handsome structure, consisting of a nave, north and south aisles and porches, chancel, and a pinnacled tower containing eight bells, and surmounted by a beautiful spire. It was newly seated and repaired in 1842. The chancel was restored in 1866, under the auspices of Sir G. G. Scott, at the sole expense of Mrs Willes, as a memorial to her husband, the late William Willes, Esq. It contains an arcade in the Norman style, six arches on either side, with oak stalls for the canons. During these restorations a fine specimen of an ancient aumbry was discovered, and is once more in use. Handsome memorial windows to the deceased members of the Willes family have been erected by their surviving relatives; and a monument on the south side of the church, representative of "Our Lord's victory over death," was erected by Mr F. Willes to the Freke family. The screen separating the chancel from the nave is a fine specimen of oak carving, designed by Sir G. Scott. The church contains a good organ by Walker of London. The chapelries of Buckingham, Horley, and Hornton are still attached to this church, and the incumbent of each receives an annual stipend from the rectorial manor of King's Sutton, in right of the office as chaplain. The living is a vicarage in the diocese of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £5, 5s. 8d., but now worth about £140 a year. Mrs Willes is patroness, and the Rev. E. W. Urquhart, M.A., is the incumbent.

The Vicarage House, a stone building situated between the church and the school, was rebuilt in 1865 by the Rev. J. A. Bruce, the late vicar.

Here is a Baptist Chapel, established in 1820, to which is attached a Sunday-school. It was rebuilt in 1866. The Primitive Methodists have a place of worship here.

The National Schools, which are supported principally by subscription, Government grant, and school-pence, were erected in 1847, between King's Sutton and Astrop, and enlarged in 1871, and will accommodate 250 scholars.

A Reading-room is now in course of erection, at the expense of Sir William Richmond Brown, Bart. of Astrop House.

The other Charities are—the interest of £100 left to the poor in 1688; a rent-charge of £4, 6s. 8d. per annum (Cartwright's charity), which is expended on bread to ten poor widows; the poor's allotment of 10a.; the interest of £100 left by Dame Margaret Willes, to be divided between the master of the free school and the poor; Mrs Ann Jenkinson's gift of £3000 navy 5 per cents., for which are substituted £3150 new 4 per cent. annuities, producing an annual dividend of £126, which is expended, according to the will of the testatrix, in apprenticing poor children; and the church lands, consisting of 3a. 3r., and five cottages.

Biography.—William Lisle Bowles, A.M., the poet, author of "The Spirit of Discovery," "The Missionary," "The Grave of the Last Saxon," "Barnwell Hill, or Days Departed," &c., was born here in 1762, his father being the resident incumbent.

Tumuli, &c.—In the south extremity of this lordship are two tumuli, called the Two Lows, and on Highborn's hill is a third. Human skeletons have been found at various times in a field called Black Land's Piece, lying with their heads to the east, within rude cists of sarson stones. In 1825 a cinerary urn of unbaked clay, filled with burned bones and earth, was discovered, and near to it a small coin of the Emperor Adrian. A couple of yards from the urn were found three skeletons. In Lake Meadow and Barton are traces of an intrenchment; and at the enclosure a skeleton was dug up there. Numerous Roman coins of several emperors have been found at various times in this parish, as well as an ancient battle-axe and other articles.

ASTROP is a large hamlet in this parish, divided into Upper and Lower Astrop, one mile east of Sutton and west of Newbottle, and part member of both parishes. It contains about 1240 acres in this parish. Mrs Willes is lady of the manor. Sir William Richmond Brown, Bart., is the principal owner; born 1840; succeeded in 1864; married in 1863, Emily, daughter of Colonel W. T. B. Mountstevens; is Colonel of the Lancashire Artillery Volunteers; heir, his son, Melville Richmond, born 1866. The tithes of this hamlet were commuted in 1772 for 22 acres of land. Astrop Well, discovered by Dr Richard Lower, or Dr Willes, in 1664, and called St Rumbald's Well, was formerly much frequented for its mineral properties. Astrop, we are told by Mr Baker, at one time "could boast of a public ball every Monday, and breakfast, cards, dancing, and ordinary for ladies and gentlemen every Friday during the season. Its attractions began rapidly to decline about the commencement of the present century, and it is now completely supplanted by more fashionable rivals." Formerly two roads connected the villages of King's Sutton and Newbottle;

the one which passed through Astrop Park has been closed, in lieu of which the other has been greatly improved at the expense of Sir W. R. Brown, Bart.

The Village of Astrop or Easthorpe, which is partly in this and partly in Newbottle parish, stands about six miles S.E. from Banbury, and five miles west from Brackley.

Astrop House, the seat of Sir William Richmond Brown, Bart., is situated in a picturesque and well-wooded park. It is a fine stone mansion with two fronts, in the Italian style. It was erected by the Lord Chief-Justice Willes, and enlarged by the present owner by the addition of a north and south wing and a fine conservatory. At the south end the pleasure-grounds have been enlarged and beautified, and fish-ponds made facing the east front.

PURSTON, formerly called Prestone, is another hamlet, containing 620 acres, which is nearly equally divided between this parish and Newbottle. The lordship is chiefly in permanent pasture, and contains three farmhouses. Here was formerly a Chapel, the site of which is unknown. The tithes of that portion of the hamlet in this parish were commuted in 1848 for a rent-charge of £47, 15s. 10d. the vicarial, and £39, 2s. 6d. the rectorial.

WALTON hamlet, which contains 733 acres, is entirely in this parish. The soil is principally a rich loam, and nearly the whole is in permanent pasture. There was also a Chapel in this hamlet, dedicated to St Rumbald, who is said to have been born at King's Sutton in 662.

Post, Money-Order Office, and Savings Bank.—Mr John Dagley, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Banbury at 8.5 A.M., and at 3.30 P.M., and are despatched at 3.30 P.M.

Baker Mr George, Astrop
Bell Mrs Ann, Laurel Cottage
Bellam Wm. cattle dealer
Blake Miss Fanny, beerhouse
Bowham Chptr. baker & shopr.
Brown Sir Wm. Richmond,
Bart. Astrop House
Busby John, shopkeeper
Butler John, maltster and vict.
Three Tuns, Astrop
Carroll Thomas, hawk
Cave Wm. painter & plumber
Cole Miss Elizabeth
Cooper Richard, shoemaker
Co-operative Co. grocers & provn.
dlrs.; Thos. Jennings, mangr.
Dagley John, grocer & draper
Dalton Mr Wm. Astrop
Fathers Rt. builder & vict. Bell
Fortuam Mrs Elizabeth
Fortuam Mr John, Spa Villa
Gardner Wm. Hy. butcher
Gibbons Charles Wm. tailor
Goffe William, tailor
Good Edwin, mastr. Nat. school
Green John, shoemaker
Gregory Charles, beerhouse
Gregory Mr Edward
Gregory Mrs Susanah
Harper Mrs Mary

Hurst Thomas, blacksmith
Jeffrey Wm. Collins, farmer
Jerrams John, shoemaker
Jerrams Natl. drainage contr.
Johnson Benj. shoemkr. Astrop
Kirby John, professor of music
Kirby Thomas, carpenter
Leggett Henry, gardener and farm bailiff, Astrop
Lovell Mrs Elizabeth
Lovell Samuel Richard, Esq.
Morgan Mrs Fanny, plumber &
vict. Three Tuns
Mumford Mr Thomas
Paine Ths. wheelwrit. & carptr.
Parsons Mrs Mary
Phillips John, stationmaster
Scarsbrook Frs. baker & grocer.
Simpson William, carpenter
Smith Geo. wheelwrit. & carptr.
Taylor Jno. shoemkr. & parish cl.
Taylor Samuel, saddler, &c.
Tibbetts Jeremiah, grocer, draper, and coal merchant
Tomes Mrs Ann
Unthank Capt. Clement Wm.
Joseph, Astrop
Urquhart Rev. E. W. M. A. vicar
Waugh Geo. surgeon, M.B.
Weaver Daniel, carptr. & baker

Willes Mrs Sophia, Manor-House
Willes William Aubrey, Esq.
Manor-House
Williams John, rat-catcher
Williams Wm. butcher & beerho.

Farmers and Graziers.

Cole Wm. Purston
Colegrove John, (& maltster)
Dagley Mrs Sarah Ann, Astrop
Fortuam John
Fortuam Wm. Edw. Purston
Gee John, Purston
Gregory Richard, corn miller,
King's Sutton Mill
Gregory Wm. (& assist. overseer)
Hall Chptr. King's Sutton Lodge
Harper William
Jerrams Joseph, Astrop
Mawle, Geo. Astrop Hill Farm
Parsons, James Edw. Walton
Grounds
Preedy Benjamin
Rogers Chs. Hry. Walton Grnds.
Spokes John, corn miller, Twysford Mills
Tibbetts Thomas, Astrop
Willifer John, Bustin Farm

Carriers.—Thomas Barber, to Banbury daily; William Collins Jeffrey, to Banbury daily; and Wm. Haynes, to Banbury on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

MARSTON ST LAWRANCE PARISH

Is bounded by Thorp Mandeville on the north, Greatworth on the east, Farthinghoe on the south, and Middleton Cheney on the west. It contains 1624 acres, and its population in 1801 was 371; in 1831, 440; in 1841, 540; in 1851, 541; in 1861, 535; and in 1871, 513 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3736, and the gross estimated rental £4363. The soil of the upper land is a dark loam, and the lower a strong clay; the greater part of the lordship is in pasture, and the principal landowners are John Alexander Blencowe, Esq. (lord of the manor), and Lincoln College, Oxford. About 255 acres in Middleton Cheney parish pay to the church and poor of this parish. In a ploughed field here some human skeletons, spear-heads, beads, &c., were discovered close to the surface.

Manor.—Merestone contained 4 hides of land at the time of the general survey, which Robert de Rothelent held of Hugh de Abrincis, Earl of Chester. These 4 hides, with a mill of the yearly rent of 8s., and 24 acres of meadow, were then valued at £10. In the reign of Henry II., Ralph Murdack held this estate of the fee of the Earl of Chester. Ranulph Earl of Chester granted to the church of Lincoln certain lands here and in Warkworth of the yearly value of £30; and in the 9th of Edward II. (1315), the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln were lords of Marston, Westhorp, and Warkworth. No mention is made of this manor from the reign of Henry III., when it was still in the same hands, till the 32d of Henry VIII. (1541), when the capital messuage of a manor, with the tithes of the said premises, and a mill lately belonging to the dissolved Carthusian monastery of Shene, in Richmond, Surrey, were granted to Thomas Blencowe, Esq. These possessions had been given by Robert de Rothelent to the monks of St Ebrulf, near Utica, in Normandy; but upon the suppression of the alien priories, were granted to the king's new foundation at Shene in the 3d of Henry V. (1417). In the Blencowe family these possessions continued to the present time. Upon the death of John Blencowe, Esq., unmarried, in 1777, the estates passed to his nephew, Samuel Jackson, Esq., who adopted the name and arms of Blencowe. He was succeeded by his son, the late John Jackson Blencowe, whose son, John Alexander Blencowe, Esq., is the present proprietor. Sir John Blencowe, successively Baron of the Court of Exchequer, Justice of the Common Pleas and King's Bench, was a member of this family, and lord of this manor; he was born here in 1642, and died in 1726. As an instance of his considerate and humane disposition, Mr Baker relates the following pleasing anecdote: "An old man whom he had employed in hewing stones lived to be above ninety years old, and for some time had daily spoiled the stones, instead of rendering them fit for use. Lady Blencowe perceiving it, desired the Judge to continue him his eightpence a day, and desire him to stay at home. 'No, no,' said the Judge, 'let him spoil on; he has a pleasure in thinking he earns his daily bread at fourscore years and ten, but if you turn him off, he will soon die with grief.'"

The Village of Marston, which is small, is situated in a low plain about 5 miles north-west of Brackley.

The Church, dedicated to St Lawrance, stands at the south end of the village, and consists of a nave and side aisles, north porch, chancel, and tower, in which are five bells and a clock. The interior was paved and pewed at a cost of £606 in 1829-30. The chancel is entered under a richly-carved Gothic screen; and in it are the sedilia, piscina, and a square locker. The altar-piece is of richly-sculptured oak. In the chancel are several monuments to the Blencowe family. The living is a vicarage united to the rectory of Warkworth, in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £20, and now worth £420 per annum. John Alexander Blencowe, Esq., is the patron, and the Rev. Thomas Blencowe, M.A., the incumbent. The vicarage consists of 81a. 3r. 10p. in Marston, granted in lieu of glebe and vicarial tithes; 7a. 1r. 26p. in Warkworth, in lieu of rectorial and vicarial tithes; and 39a. 2r. in Middleton, in lieu of vicarial tithes of that part of the lordship within this parish.

The Vicarage House is a neat residence near the church. In the churchyard is a remarkably fine yew-tree, which measures about 21 feet at the base and 23 feet from the ground, spreading its branches above 75 feet.

National School, erected in 1846 by the Rev. Charles Blencowe and J. J. Blencowe, Esq., and is now chiefly supported by the vicar and the patron.

Marston House, the seat of John Alexander Blencowe, Esq., is a handsome mansion situated a little N.E. of the church. In the house is a good collection of family portraits.

Biography.—Mary Leapor, an humble uneducated votary of the Muses, and author of two volumes of poems published in 1748 and 1751, was born in this village. Her father was gardener to Judge Blencowe, after which he removed to Brackley, where his daughter died of the measles in November 1746.

William Blencowe, third son of Judge Blencowe, was the first decipherer to whom Government allowed a salary. He was born in 1682 and died in 1712.

WESTHROP, or WESTROP, as it is called by the inhabitants, is a hamlet in this parish, about 1 mile N.E. of Marston, and adjoins the village of Greatworth. It contains one farmhouse and several cottages.

Letters are received here for and arrive through the Banbury Post-Office.

(Marked * reside at Westhrop.)

Blencowe John Alexander, Esq. Marston House	*Humphries Jas. shoemaker	Wheeler Jno. machinist, black smh. & thresg.-machn. owner
Blencowe Rev. Ths. M.A. rector	*Lord James, tailor	Wheeler Wm. corn miller
Barrett Rbt. wheelwt. & carptr.	*Lord Robert, tailor
Bartett Mrs Sarah, school-mrs.	Mayo Thos. Warwick, shop-keeper	Farmers and Graziers.
*Bazeley Robert, shoemaker	Russell Frederick, beerhouse	*Adkins William Salmon
*Bazeley William, shoemaker	Shepard Thomas, blacksmith and butcher	Boswell William, Costow House
*Chester John, blacksmith	Weatherall Nathaniel Thomas, sanitary inspector (Brackley Union)	Cherry John (and steward)
*Golsby Joseph, shopkeeper		Chester James
*Gulliver Jesse, butcher, shop-keeper, and farmer		Kilby Jno. Marston Hill Farm
		Osborn John

Carrier.—Edward Russell, to Banbury on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday.

MIDDLETON CHENEY PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Chacombe on the north, by Thenford on the east, by Newbottle on the south, and by Warkworth on the west. It contains 2320 acres, and its population in 1801 was 1153; in 1831, 1415; in 1841, 1410; in 1851, 1315; in 1861, 1259; and in 1871, 1236 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £6093, and the gross estimated rental £6889. The soil is principally a rich red loam; about two thirds of the lordship is in pasture, and the principal proprietors are—John H. Horton, Esq. (the lord of the manor); Charles Brickwell, Esq.; Messrs James Jones, Robert Croome, Joseph Law, and the rector. About 950 acres in Warkworth, called Middleton Tithing, pay to the poor and church rates of this parish, and to the highways of Warkworth.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey the Earl of Morton held 2 hides of land here, which before the Conquest had been the freehold of Almar and Saulf, and was rated at 50s., but was then advanced to 60s. Hugh held 2 hides here of Hugh de Grentemaisnil, which were valued at 40s. at the same time, and had been the estate of Godrick in the preceding reign. Besides these lands, Robert de Rothelent held 4 parts of 2 hides here of Hugh de Abrinces, Earl of Chester, and these were afterwards three distinct manors of the several fees of Morton, Grentemaisnil, and Chester. In the reign of Henry II., Simon Chendicit held 2 hides here of the fee of Berkhamstede; William de Meschin, 1½ hides and a small virgate of the fee of William de Curcy; and the 4 parts of 2 hides were held by the monks of St Ebrulf, to whom they were given by Robert de Rothelent. In the 9th of Edward II. (1315) the Bishop of Rochester and the Prior of St Ebrulf, in Normandy, were lords of the manor. The manor called Lower Middleton is still vested in the bishopric of Rochester, and is demised on lease for three lives. There are 530a. of copyhold held of this manor, and the custom is, that where it descends to females, the elder sister inherits, and tenements only pay a heriot of the best beast upon death or alienation. On the suppression of the alien priories, the manor belonging to the Abbey of St Ebrulf was transferred by the king to the Carthusian convent of Shene, at Richmond, Surrey; and after the dissolution to Sir John Williams and Anthony Stringer. It was afterwards alienated to Hugh Taylor, who sold it to the Holmans of Warkworth; and in 1799 Francis Eyre, Esq. of Warkworth, sold it to William Horton, Esq., of London. John H. Horton, Esq., is the present possessor. Canons Ashby Priory had possessions here.

The Village of Middleton Cheney or Chenderit, so called from its ancient lords, situated on the highroad to Brackley, from which town it is distant 6 miles N.W., and 3 N.E. of Banbury, is divided into Upper or Church Middleton, and Lower Middleton. Petty sessions for this division of the hundred are held monthly in the police-station, a stone building erected in 1856, and where the Highway Board also hold their meetings.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, was restored in 1865; it is a spacious building, partly in the Decorated and partly in the Perpendicular style, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch, chapel and chancel, and a pinnacled tower, surmounted by a handsome spire, and containing six bells and a clock. The porch is of very peculiar and almost unique construction; it is entirely of ashlar stone, the roof having no other material than stone about it. The spire has been three times struck with lightning, "and it is remarkable," says Mr Baker, "that the electric fluid each time escaped at the east window of the north aisle. The first time was on the 18th December 1720, when some of the stones and iron were carried beyond the parsonage into what is now called the glebe. The second time, 13th June 1794, fragments of the stones were thrown against the opposite house, near the corner of the churchyard, south of the spire. The third time, 28th June 1797, smoke issued out of the upper apertures of the spire as from a furnace." The chancel is entered through a handsome screen, and the whole structure is very beautiful. The east window and two windows in the north aisle are filled with stained glass, and in the chancel is a brass to the Rev. Ralph Churton, A.M., who was thirty-nine years rector of the parish, and who published "Bampton Lectures," and several letters, sermons, discourses, &c. In the chancel is a cinquefoil-headed piscina in good preservation, and there is also a singular double locker or place for the sacred vessels. A new organ was presented to the church by Thomas Hunt, Esq., of the Holt, in 1871. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £31, 11s. 3d., and now worth about £470 per annum. The rectory consists of 214a. allotted in lieu of glebe land and the tithes of Middleton, and 126a. in lieu of the tithes of that portion of Warkworth parish called Middleton Tithing. The patronage is vested in the Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford, and the Rev. William Edward Buckley, M.A., is rector. It was formerly the custom here to strew the church in summer with hay, gathered from a part of Ash Meadow given for that purpose, and the rector found straw in winter. The Ratory House, a good stone building, was restored and enlarged by the present rector in 1855.

The Baptists have a chapel in Upper Middleton, which was rebuilt in 1806; attached to it is a house for the minister, and a Sunday-school, erected in 1870. The Wesleyan Chapel, a brick building, with Sunday-schools attached, was erected in 1867. The Primitive Methodists have also a place of worship here.

National Schools, with master's residence attached, were erected in 1815, and rebuilt in 1856, when a girls' school was added at the expense of the present rector, the landowners, and parishioners, aided by a grant from the Committee of Council on Education. These schools will accommodate 120 boys and 80 girls.

The Charities of the parish are—Taylor's charity, consisting of about 19a., which lets with an acre of church land for about £84 per annum, which sum, except £2, 10s., the value of the church land, is distributed to the poor; a moiety of Hall's charity, consisting of about 1a. and some tenements, which lets for about £12 per annum, divided between the poor of the parishes of Middleton and Cropedy; and Garhett's charity, which consists of £200 3 per cent. consols, purchased with £150, bequeathed in 1764 by the Rev. Richard Garnett, rector of the parish, the dividends of which, £6, are annually distributed in clothes to the poor children attending the National School. Mr Garnett also left £50 for the erection of an altar-piece. The poor have also nearly an acre of land, and a cottage, which was received in exchange for a small piece of ground in the pig-market in Banbury. The late Miss Mary Ann Horton founded and endowed 6 almshouses here in 1863, and 3 in 1867, for labourers aged 60 years and upwards, or their widows, who had been employed on her estates; and she left £1000 3 per cent. consols in 1869, the interest of which is given to the poor of the parish at Christmas.

Battle.—On the 6th of May 1643 a battle was fought in the town-field here, between the Royalists, commanded by the Earl of Northampton, and the Parliamentarians, in which the latter were defeated, according to Mr Baker, with the loss of 217 killed, above 300 taken prisoners, 416 muskets, 150 pikes, and nearly 500 swords. The Earl only lost 3 men; 46 soldiers were buried here on the following day.

Post, Money-Order Office, and Savings Bank.—Richard Braggins, postmaster. Letters arrive from Banbury per messenger at 7.45 A.M., and are despatched at 5 P.M.

Armstrong Wm. blacksmith & agricultural-implement mkr.	Hatten Mr George	Shepherd Miss Hannah
Bazeley Mr Robert	Heydon William, shoemaker	Shrewsbury Wm. flour dealer
Bonham Jno. beerhouse	Hunt Thos. Esq. The Holt	Simpkin John, stationmaster, Farthinghoe Station
Braggins Rich. tailor & P.O.	Iley William, tailor	Smith Mrs Elizabeth Ann
Braginton Jno. shoemr. & beerh.	Jarvis Thos. baker and butcher	Smith Thos. brick & tile maker,
Buckley Rev. William Edward,	Jeffs Edward, parish clerk	beer retailer, and shopkeeper
M.A. rector	Jeffs Elijah, shoemaker	Tuckey Jon. wheelwt. & carptr.
Bustin Edw. collar & harnes. mr.	Jerrams Richard Saunders,	Tyler John William, master of
Carter Fred. wheelwt. & blksth.	builder and vict. Red Lion	National school
Claridge Mrs Mary	Killpack George, gardener	Wilkins Miss Catherine B.
Cole Miss Ann	Kingston Mrs Mary	Williams John, beer retailer
Co-operative Soc. grers. & prov. dealers; Geo. Longe, managr.	Kingston Mr Richard
Croome, Alf. mechanl. engineer	Locke James, baker	Farmers and Graziers.
Croome Robert Mr	Longe Geo. carpenter & joiner	(Marked * are yeomen.)
Dand Mrs Jane	Longe John, saddler, druggist, and shopkeeper	Barrett James
Dewar Jas. surgeon, Middleton House	Merivale John, shopkeeper	*Eldridge William
Dodwell Rev. Jabez (Baptist)	Palmer the Misses Emma and Hannah, milliners	Gibbard Wm. (and cattle dlr.)
Elkington Edw. thresh-machin. owner & vict. Dolphin	Penn Thos. coal dlr. & carrier	Goldby Frederic
Flowers Miss Mary	Phipps James, stonemason	*Goldby John Austin
Franklin John, cooper	Pinfold Charles, corn miller	*Jones James
Glover Miss Louisa, grocer &c.	Pinfold Robert, cottager	*Law Joseph
Grant Rev. Geo. (Independent)	Pinfold Thos. butchr. and dlr.	Law Richard
Grant Thos. painter & plumr.	Pinfold Wm. cattle-dealer and vict. New Inn	Locke Thomas
Hatten John Lee, baker and assistant overseer	Ping Mr Richard	Longe William
	Ping Wm. Tredwell, plumb. &c.	*Lord Benjamin
	Pratt Joseph, cottager	Richardson Mrs Mary
		Simmons John Thomas
		*Tomkins John

Carriers.—London and North-Western Railway Co., Farthinghoe Station, to all parts; William Penn and John Bonham, to Banbury on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday.

NEWBOTTLE PARISH.

This parish includes portions of the hamlets of Astrop, Charlton, and Purston, the other portions being in King's Sutton parish, and is bounded on the north by Farthinghoe and Middleton Cheney, on the east by Hinton, on the south by Aynho, and on the west by King's Sutton. It contains, with its members, including about 315 acres in Astrop, 425 in Charlton, and 320 in Purston, 1645 acres. Its population in 1801 was 229; in 1831, 336; in 1841, 384; in 1851, 438; in 1861, 527; and in 1871, 497 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3627, and the gross estimated rental £4262. The soil of the arable land is light and brashy, and that of the pasture a strong clay. The principal proprietors are William Cornwallis Cartwright, Esq., M.P. (lord of the manor); Sir William R. Brown, Bart.; John Marten Watson Harris, Esq.; the executors of the late Mr John Franklin—Messrs Owen, Cole, and John Haddon. From Newbottle hill is an extensive view, in which the three spires characterised by the local adage of "Adderbury for strength, Bloxham for length, and King's Sutton for beauty," are prominent objects.

Rainsborough Camp.—Within the limits of Charlton, in this parish, is Rainsborough hill, the site of an ancient encampment, but whether it belonged to the Britons, the Romans, or the Danes, or has been used by each in turn, is a matter of conjecture. From its vicinity to the Portway Roman road from Isannavaria or Bennaventa (Borough hill) to Ælia Castre (Alcester), it may be presumed to have been a Roman camp. "The area," according to Mr Baker, "contains about 6 acres, and the whole circuit, including the fosse, about 11 acres. The inner vallum rises about 7 feet above the level of the area, and is 15 feet wide on the summit, and 24 at the base. The fosse is 13 feet deep and 60 wide. The outer vallum is traceable throughout, and in some parts strongly marked. The principal entrances are nearly opposite on the east and west sides, and there are slight indications of minor ones at the two other cardinal points." The hill is now surrounded with a stone wall, and the summit planted with fir and beech. Numerous Roman coins have been found here of late years.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, Ivo held 6 hides of land here of Hugh de Grentemaisnil, which in the preceding reign had been the freehold of Baldwin, and valued at £4, but it was then rated at £6. In the reign of Henry II., Regis de Rynes held 6 hides and 1 small virgate here of the fee of the Earl of Leicester. In the 36th year of Henry III. (1271), John de Grey died seized of this manor; and in the 9th Edward II. (1315), Richard de Grey was lord of Newbottle. In the 10th of Henry VII. (1494), Henry de Grey levied a fine of this manor and that of Charlton, and died without lawful issue in the year following. In the 9th of Henry VIII. (1517), Henry Kebell, Esq., alderman of London, died seized of this manor; and from his posterity it passed by purchase to Sir George Raleigh, who alienated it in 1608 to Sir Robert Wilbraham, whose daughter Elizabeth carried it in marriage to Sir Thomas Wilbraham. Elizabeth, the daughter of Ralph Wilbraham, Esq., his second son, married the Hon. Sackville Tufton, son of the Earl of Thanet, and his great-grandson, Sackville, the ninth Earl of Thanet, sold the manors of Newbottle, Charlton, and Purston, with the impropriate rectory and advowson of the vicarage of Newbottle, to William Ralph Cartwright, Esq. of Aynho, from whom they descended to his son, Sir Thomas Cartwright, who was succeeded in 1850 by William Cornwallis Cartwright, Esq., M.P., the present proprietor.

The Manor-House, formerly used as a hunting-seat of the Earls of Thanet, stands north of the church, and is now the residence of Thomas Robert Brooke Leslie Melville Cartwright, Esq., J.P.

The Village of Newbottle consists of four scattered houses about $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Brackley, and 7 south-east of Banbury.

The Church, dedicated to St James, consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch, chancel, and low tower, in which are two bells. It was restored in 1865, when open sittings and a new east window were added, and four lancet windows placed in the chancel, and in the south aisle a memorial window in stained glass, by Samuel Priestley Salisbury, Esq., to his wife and two daughters. A monument to John Creswell, Esq., who died in 1704. The busts of himself and his wife, executed in white marble, rest upon the projecting tablet; above is a shield bearing the arms of the family; and in the chancel is a brass to Peter Dormer, on which are engraved the figures of himself and his wife, and nineteen children. The living is a vicarage in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £10, os. 10d., and now worth about £300 per annum. William Cornwallis Cartwright, Esq., M.P., is patron, and the Rev. William Noble is the present incumbent. The vicarage consists of the vicarial tithes of Newbottle, 22a. in Astrop, 34 in Charlton, allotted in lieu of the tithes of that portion of each hamlet situated in this parish; and the tithes of Purston, which were commuted in 1845 for a rent-charge of £159. The rectorial tithes of Purston were commuted at the same time for £22, 2s. 4d.

The Vicarage House, which stands south of the church, is a neat stone building erected in 1863, partly on the site of the old parsonage.

CHARLTON, two thirds of which are in this, and the remainder in King's Sutton parish. The village is large and pleasantly situated, about a mile south from the church. At the south end of the village is Charlton Lodge, the residence of Samuel Priestley Salisbury, Esq. Here was formerly a chapel, the site of which is now unknown. There is an Independent chapel in the village, erected in 1827, to which a Sunday-school is attached.

Charity.—Mrs Mary Smith bequeathed a sum of money to the poor of Charlton, with which £150 3 per cent. consols were purchased, and the dividend is applied in bread to the poor.

The National School, a stone building, with master's residence attached, erected by subscription and parliamentary grant in 1871, at a cost of upwards of £1000, will accommodate 100 pupils, and is supported by subscription, Government grant, and the school-pence. John Taylforth, master.

Post-Office, Charlton.—Daniel Mace, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Brackley at 8.50 A.M., and are despatched at 2.55 P.M.

Cartwright Thos. Robt. Brooke
Leslie Melville, Esq. J.P.
Manor-House

Noble Rev. William, vicar
Thornton Reuben, gamekeeper

Farmers and Graziers.
Bradshaw Robt. Newbottle Farm
Dagley Francis, Forscleap Farm

CHARLTON.

Harris John Marten Watson,
Esq. Holly House
Salisbury George Henry, Esq.
Charlton Lodge
Bayliss Jph. wheelwt. & carpnr.
Bloxham Jeremiah, beerhouse
Bloxham Thos. coal dealer, &c.
Bull Edm. stonemason & par. cl.
Bull James, beerhouse
Bull Richard, stonemason
Bull Thomas, butcher & dealer

Dent Mrs Eliza. shopkeeper
Elkington Thos. baker & grocer
Hopkins Mrs Sarah
King Mrs Ann, vct Rose & Crown
Marshall William, gardener
Mitchell Mark, shoemaker
Mobbs Mr James
Moss Benjamin, miller
Moss Mrs Hanh. baker & grocer.
Side William, carpenter
Spiers Francis, higgler

Taylforth Jno. master National school
Warr Hannah, blacksmith
Weston Thomas, tailor
White Jno. Hy. vict. Bell Inn

Farmers and Graziers.
Haddon John (yeoman)
Hemming Thomas
Loggin Nicholas, Charlton Ho.
Woolgrove Wm. Camp Farm

Carriers.—James Bull, to Brackley on Wednesday, and Banbury on Thursday; Thomas Bloxham, to Banbury on Thursday.

RADSTONE PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Helmdon, on the east by Whitfield, on the south by Brackley, and on the west by Hawes in Brackley. It contains 1225 acres, and its population in 1801 was 128; in 1831, 203; in 1841, 189; in 1851, 168; in 1861, 168; and in 1871, 120 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1455, and the gross estimated rental, £1717. The soil is principally a stiff loam, and the whole parish belongs to the Wardens and Fellows of Merton College, Oxford, the lords of the manor. The greater part of the parish is in grass.

Manor.—Hugh Earl of Chester held two hides of land here at the time of the general survey, which were rated at £5. In the reign of Henry II. these two hides were held of the fee of the Earl of Chester; and at an early period the manor of Rodeston was in the possession of the Earl of Albemarle, from whose daughter it passed by agreement to the crown, where it remained till the fifth of Edward II. (1311), when it was granted to John de Clavering for life. In the eighth of Edward III. (1335), William Trussell, the king's valet, held this manor; and in the tenth of the same reign, Anthony Lord Lucy obtained a grant of it from the crown. This nobleman was governor of the Castle of Carlisle, the town and castle of Berwick-upon-Tweed, and Sheriff of Cumberland; and from him the manor descended to his son. In the first of Richard II. (1377), the Earl of Angos held Radstone, and it was afterwards in the possession of the family of De Melton. John Melton, Esq., in the reign of Henry III., sold it to John Bridges and Nicholas Lambert of London, of whom it was purchased by John Twistleton, who sold it in the seventh of the same reign (1516) to Henry Kebell, Esq., alderman of London. His grandson sold it in 1572 to John Pascall, Esq., whose sons alienated it in 1588 to Sir William Spencer of Yarnton, in Oxfordshire. John Brown, Esq. of Eydon, purchased it in 1575, and his daughter Martha carried it in marriage to Sir Roger Cave of Stanford. Ambrose Holbech, Esq. of Mollington, Warwickshire, purchased it of the trustees of Sir Thomas Cave, and from him it descended to William Holbech, Esq., from whom it passed by purchase in 1870 to the present proprietors.

The Village of Radstone, which was formerly of importance, but now very small, is situated about two and a half miles north of Brackley.

The Church, dedicated to St Lawrence, is an ancient stone edifice in mixed styles of architecture; it was restored in 1861, and consists of a nave, south aisle and porch, chancel and low Saxon tower, containing two bells, and in which is a small stained window. The east window is also of stained glass. The living is a vicarage in the Deanery of Brackley, certified at £6, and returned at £118. The patronage is vested in the lords of the manor, and the Rev. C. E. Thompson is the incumbent. The living was endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £800 from Queen Anne's bounty, for which thirty-four and a half acres of land have been purchased; and the impropiators, the lords of the manor, pay the curate £24 a year. The Vicarage House, which stands near the church, was enlarged in 1862.

The National School, a small brick building with stone dressings, was built in 1869 by the Wardens and Fellows of Merton College, Oxford: it was founded and endowed with £20 per annum, about sixty-six years ago.

Letters are received through the Brackley post-office.

Ayres Miss Hannah, schoolmistress
Manders William, shopkeeper
Thompson Rev. Charles Edward, M.A.
vicar

Farmers and Graziers.
Checkley George
Smith Charles James, Cold Harbour Farm
Ward Thomas

STEAN OR STEANE PARISH

Is bounded on the east and north by Brackley and Hawes, on the west by Farthinghoe, and on the south by Hinton. It contains 1139 acres, and its population in 1801 was 15; in 1831, 24; in 1841, 26; in 1851, 37; in 1861, 29; and in 1871, 27 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1467, 4s., and the gross estimated rental £1722. The soil varies very much; the lordship, which is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture, has 66 acres of woodland. Earl Spencer is the lord of the manor and owner of the whole parish, which is divided for a short distance from Farthinghoe by the river Ouse, which passes through the lordship near the park.

Manor.—Gilo de Pinkeney held 2 hides of land here at the time of the general survey; there was a mill of the yearly rent of 2s., and these lay in the hundred of Alboldeston, and 4 parts of 1 hide belonging to this manor, which lay in the hundred of Sutton. The whole had been rated at 50s., but was then advanced to 60s. This manor continued with the family of De Pinkeney until the 29th year of Edward I. (1300), when the barony of Pinkeney was surrendered to the crown. Henceforth the manor of Stanes was held of the king. In the 9th of Edward II. (1315), William de Beresford was lord of Stean, and with his descendants it continued till the 2d of Henry VI. (1423), when it passed to Thomas, son of Sir Philip Seynteler. In the 11th of Henry VII. (1495), Sir Reginald Bray obtained a grant of it, to be held of the crown by fealty and the presentation of a red rose, and dying without issue, left it to Margery, the wife of Sir William Sandys, afterwards Lord Sandys. From this family it passed to Sir Thomas Crewe, whose son and successor was raised to the title of Lord Crewe of Stenes. His eldest son succeeded him in the title and estate, and dying without issue male, in 1697 the dignity descended to his brother Nathaniel, fifth son of the first peer. This nobleman having entered the Church, was promoted to the See of Oxford in 1671, and translated to that of Durham in 1674. He died at Steane on the 18th September 1721, in the eighty-second year of his age. Henry Duke of Kent, who married the eldest daughter of Thomas Lord Crewe, was his successor. It came afterwards into the hands of Sarah Duchess-dowager of Marlborough, who devised it to her younger grandson, the Hon. John Spencer, father of the first Earl Spencer. It passed to the present proprietor, the fifth Earl Spencer, in 1857.

The Manor-House stood in a walled park of about 150 acres: the Duke of Kent occasionally resided here, but about 130 years since the kitchen and some of the inferior offices were converted into a farmhouse.

The Village of Steane though said to have been once a flourishing town, which was destroyed by the Danes, now consists of two farmhouses (one of which is the remains of the manor-house) and three dispersed cottages: it is situated about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. of Brackley.

The Church or Chapel, dedicated to St Peter, is a small but beautiful structure, built in 1620 by Thomas (afterwards Sir Thomas) Crewe. It is nearly square, without a tower, and the parapet is profusely decorated with small pinnacles. "Nathaniel Lord Crewe, Bishop of Durham," says Mr Baker, "gave to this church the furniture of crimson velvet for the altar, reading-desk and pulpit used in the Chapel Royal at St James's, where he was Clerk of the Closet to Charles II., and also the Bible and Common Prayer-book used by the king himself, together with six other Common Prayer-books, splendidly bound, with the royal insignia of King William III. on the covers." In the north chapel, or cemetery of the Crewes, are several fine monuments of that family. The living is a discharged rectory annexed to that of Hinton-in-the-Hedges, in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £5, 9s. 7d., and endowed with £200 private benefaction and £400 royal bounty. The Earl Spencer is patron, and the Rev. George Dewhurst Atwood, incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1848 for £7, 9s. 8d.

Letters arrive through the Brackley post, which is the nearest money-order office.

Goodman John, farmer, Wall-Tree Farm | Horwood Thomas, farmer, Steane Park

STUTCHBURY OR STOTESBURY PARISH.

This parish, which has neither church nor village, is bounded on the north by Weedon, on the east by Helmdon, on the south by Greatworth and Marston St Lawrence, and on the west by Sulgrave. The lordship contains about 1023 acres. Its population in 1801 was 30; in 1831, 29; in 1841, 21; in 1851, 38; in 1861, 23; and in 1871, 34 souls. Its rateable value is £1706, and the gross estimated rental £2008. The soil is principally a strong loam, and the principal landowners are Thomas Caldecott, Esq. (lord of the manor); John Alexander Blencowe, Esq.; John Wrighton, Esq.; the University of Oxford; and Corbet Whitton, Esq. This parish is situated five miles N. by W. of Brackley. The Northampton and Banbury Junction Railway passes through the parish. "There is a tradition," writes Mr Bridges, "that the town was destroyed by the Danes many ages ago; and as this part of the country was infested by them, possibly it might suffer, with Steane and Brackley, from the depredations they committed. But it is certain there were here both a manor and a town several centuries after the Danes were expelled."

Manor.—Hugh and Landric held two hides of land in Stoteberie of Gilo de Pinkeney at the time of the Domesday survey. There was a wood three furlongs in length, and two in breadth; and the whole was valued at 30s., but was then advanced to 40s. Osmund the Dane was the possessor in the previous reign. These two hides were given to the Priory of St Andrew at Northampton, by Simon de St Liz, upon its foundation in 1084; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315) the prior of that monastery was certified to be lord of the manor. After the dissolution, Stutchbury was granted out in parcels; part of it, with the manor of Sulgrave, was granted to Lawrence Washington, gentleman, and is now in the possession of the present lord of the manor. Other portions of it were granted to Robert Sirwhitt, Esq., and John Molle, gentleman, of Northampton, and Sir John Williams and Anthony Stringer, from whom they passed through several intermediate possessors to the present proprietor, Thomas Caldecott, Esq.

The Church, long since demolished, was dedicated to St John, and a piece of ground called the churchyard still denotes the site. The living is a rectory in the patronage of the University of Oxford. This parish pays a modus of £5, 17s. 6d. per annum to the rector of Helmdon, who generally possesses this benefice.

Letters arrive through Banbury.

Neal Thomas and Edwin, farmers and graziers, and threshing-machine owners

Warren John Pearson, farmer and grazier, coal merchant, and cattle dealer

Wrighton John, yeoman

SYRESHAM PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Wappenham and Astwell on the north; Syresham Hatch, in Brackley, on the east; the river Ouse, which separates it from Biddlesden, in Buckinghamshire, on the south; and by Radston on the west. It contains 1755 acres: its population in 1801 was 587; in 1831, 895; in 1841, 889; in 1851, 1027; in 1861, 1047; and in 1871, 991 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3716, and the gross estimated rental, £4421. The soil varies from strong clay to gravel, and the principal proprietors are Nicholas Parry, Esq. (lord of the manor), Messrs Thomas Kendall and Thomas Barford, Mrs Timms, Lord Penrhyn, and Captain George Morgan.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey the Earl of Morton held half a hide of land in Sigresham, which had been valued at 20s., but was then reduced to 5s.; and Geoffrey held half a hide here of Gilo de Pinkeney at the same time, which was rated at 10s. Levenot and Leuric were the Saxon proprietors of these estates. Upon the foundation of the Abbey of Bittlesden, in Buckinghamshire, in 1147, the founder, Ernald de Bois, granted to it certain lands here which he had received from Geoffrey de Clinton. In the reign of Henry II., Thomas Sorell held 1½ hides of the Earl of Leicester and 1 small virgate, Gilo half a hide, and William Fitz-Allen 4 small virgates. In the 6th year of Edward I. (1227) every house in Siresham was found subject to the payment of one hen on Christmas Day and ten eggs at Easter to Elias de Fyngewick, bailiff of the forest of Whittlebury. In Bridges' time the payment was commuted to 6d. yearly, in lieu of the hen and eggs. In the 9th of Edward II. (1315), John de Chetwood and the abbots of Leicester and Biddlesden were lords of Siresham and Wescote. Upon the dissolution of the religious houses in the reign of Henry VIII. the lands here which belonged to the Abbey of St Mary de Pratis at Leicester were granted to Anthony Stringer, Esq., and Sir John Williams, and from them they passed to the President and Fellows of Magdalen College, Oxford, the present lords, who hold a court baron for this manor, to which belongs 300 acres of copyhold here, about 310 acres in Whitfield, and 80 acres in Westbury, Buckinghamshire. The possessions of Biddlesden Abbey were granted to John Fox and Thomas Hall in the 36th of Henry VIII. (1544), and to John Doyle and John Seddamore in the year following. A great portion of the estate was sold in parcels, but the manorial rights now belong to Nicholas Parry, Esq.

The Village of Syresham, or Siseham, as it is commonly pronounced, is pleasantly situated partly in a valley about 4 miles N.E. of Brackley.

The Church, dedicated to St James, stands at the upper end of the village, and consists of a nave, side aisles, and chancel, south porch and square tower, surmounted by a shingled spire, and containing five bells. It was resealed in 1809, and restored in 1868, when a new east window was added; two other windows and a new organ were placed in the chancel, the west arch was thrown open, and a small lancet window inserted in the tower. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £13, and now worth £216 per annum. C. C. Dormer, Esq., of Rousham, Oxfordshire, is the present patron, and the Rev. Oswald Pattison Sergeant, M.A., is the incumbent. The rectory consists of 24a. 26p. allotted in lieu of glebe lands, and a rent-charge of £120 in lieu of tithes. The Rectory House is situated in the village.

There is a stone brought from Whittlewood Forest, and now in possession of Mr Thomas Kendall, of Abbey Lodge, that is said to have been a favourite seat of King Richard II. when hunting in this district. Lace-making gives employment to a number of females in this parish.

A Wesleyan Chapel was erected in 1846, which will accommodate 150 persons.

The National School is a brick building with stone dressings, erected in 1872 by subscription and a grant from the Committee of Council on Education; it will accommodate 180, and is well attended. It is endowed with £15, 8s. 4d. per annum, the interest of £300 bequeathed by the Rev. George Hammond in 1755, and £100 by Conquest Jones in 1773: in consideration of this sum 10 children are taught free, and the minister appoints them as vacancies occur.

The other Charities are the interest of £200 left to the poor by Mrs Alice Hammond in 1778; the rent of the poor's land, 9a. 3r. 20p., is £21 a year, and 20s. per annum left for them in 1646 by Mrs Jane Leeson.

CROWFIELD is a hamlet in this parish, containing two or three farmhouses and several cottages, about three-fourths of a mile from Syresham.

Post-Office.—John Markham, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Brackley at 9.30 A.M., and are despatched at 3.10 P.M.

Allan Mrs Elisha, baker	Linnell Mrs Sarah, brewer and beer retailer	Yates William, shopkeeper
Allan George, wood dealer	Markham John, bricklayer &c.	Farmers and Graziers.
Allan Geo. jun. wood dealer	Pargeter Jno. vict. King's Head	Barford Thomas (yeoman)
Allcock Charles, butcher, pig-dealer, and shopkeeper	Payne James, shoemaker	Batchelor John, Crowfield
Amos Thos. tailor, baker, and shopkeeper	Payne Jno. jun. shopr. Crowfield	Franklin Henry, Langley Farm
Amos William, collar and harness maker and beer retailer	Payne Mrs Mary	Griffith William (yeoman), and cattle dealer
Barford Jas. G. rate collector	Payne Thomas, cottager	Griffith Wm. jun. Manor Farm
Barnes Thomas, shopkeeper	Pollard George and Mary Ann, National school teachers	Kendall Ths. (yeo.) Abbey Lodge
Burman Thomas, shoemaker	Pollard John, shoemr. & shopr.	Kirby Edmund
Casey Ths. carpenter, Crowfield	Pollard William, shopkeeper	Linnell William
Craddock Fred. cattle dealer	Prickett Richard, shoemaker	Payne George
Dowsett Robert, vict. Bell	Roberts Mrs Ann, shopkeeper	Payne James
Franklin Rt. butcher & shopr.	Sergeant Rev. Oswald Pattison, M.A. rector	Rawlings Jas. Syresham Fields
French John, wheelwright	Thomas James, shopkeeper	Thomas James
Friday Geo. mason & bricklayr.	Thomas John, butcher, grocer, and farmer	Timms Jph. (and corn merch.)
Hinton William, postman	Whitman Richard, coal dealer	Wilkinson Edw. Syresham Fields
James Joseph, shopkeeper	Wilkins John, blacksmith	Wrighton William
James Mrs Sarah, baker	Wootton Frederick, beerhouse, and farmer, Crowfield	Fire and Life Offices.
Keasry Mrs Ann, draper	Wrighton John, farrier	Liverpool, London, and Globe—
Kirby Hy. John, baker & shopr.		George Pollard
Liddington, Mrs Ann		West of England— Josh. Timms

Carriers.—Richard Whitmore, on Monday to Banbury; Wm. Yates and John Webb, on Thursday to Brackley; William Allen and Joseph James, on Wednesday and Saturday to Buckingham; Frederick Whitlock, on Wednesday and Saturday to Northampton; John Webb and William Yates, on Saturday to Towcester; John Webb, on Tuesday to Towcester.

THENFORD PARISH.

Thenford, or Taneford, is bounded by Thorpe Mandeville on the north, Marston St Lawrence on the east, and Middleton Cheney on the south and west. It contains 873 acres; its population in 1801 was 155; in 1831, 231; in 1841, 155; in 1851, 132; in 1861, 131; and in 1871, 131 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1866, 7s., and the gross estimated rental £2223. The soil varies from a light to a strong loam; the greater part of the lordship is in permanent pasture; and the whole, exclusive of forty-six acres, and about sixty acres belonging to the rector, is the property of John Edmund Severne, Esq., the lord of the manor. This lordship is remarkable for its luxuriant growth of trees; and south of Thenford House there is an extraordinary echo. "Without attempting a philosophical solution of the phenomenon," says Mr Baker, "the fact may be stated, that a person stationed about three hundred and eighty feet from the north front of the house, uttering a sentence not exceeding thirteen syllables, will hear it distinctly and audibly repeated. By advancing or receding, a nearly similar effect is produced, but the resonance is strongest and most perfect at the given distance."

Roman Antiquities.—From the fact of Thenford being on the line of road from Brinavis (Chipping Warden) to Ælia Castra (Alcester, near Bicester), and several fragments of Roman materials having been found here, it is the supposed site of an intermediate post between the two stations. In the two fields called Stone Green and Flaxlands, about half a mile east of the village, foundations of buildings, tesserae, coins, Roman pottery, tiles, portions of hypocausts, &c., have been discovered. In Seabridge Close several skeletons were discovered some years since, and a small drinking-cup near them, which is preserved by Mr Severne. An urn containing ashes was found in digging a grave in the churchyard, and in the field such squares as the Romans made their checkered pavements of, and also a medal of the Emperor Constantius. Morton thinks it not improbable that the church was built upon a burial-place of the Romans.

Arbury Hill, an oblong mount, rounded at the angles, but not encompassed by a fosse, is supposed by Morton to have been cast up by the Danes long before the fight at Danesmoor. Bridges thinks it was originally the work of the Romans, and without giving a decided opinion, is inclined to consider it of British origin, and that it primarily bore a relation to the two hills of the same name at Badby and Chipping Warden.

Manor.—At the time of the general survey, Maino held one hide of land of the king in Taneford, which, with a mill of the yearly value of thirtypence, was rated at its former value of forty shillings. In the reign of Henry II., Mainfelin de Wolverton, one of his descendants, held one hide here, and Robert Bassett another hide, of the fee of Wallingford. In the ninth year of Edward II. (1316), John Omnibou was lord of Thenford. In the reign of Edward III. it was in the possession of the family of Pabenham, and from them was called Pabenham's manor. In the sixth of Henry V. (1418), Sir Thomas Aylesbury died seized of it in right of his wife, who carried it again in marriage to the family of Chene, with which it continued till the reign of Henry VIII., when Elizabeth, the daughter and heiress of Sir Thomas Chene, married Lord Vaux of Harwedon, whose son, William Lord Vaux, sold it to Fulk Wodhull, Esq., usually called Lord Wodhull. There was another manor here which in the fourth of Edward VI. (1550) came into the possession of Fulk Wodhull, Esq. In the ninth of Henry VII. (1493), William Somerton died seized of a third manor in Thenford, of which a fine was levied in the twenty-third of the same reign (1531) between Fulk Wodhull, Esq., grandfather of the purchaser of the first-mentioned manor, and William Cowley. Michael Wodhull, Esq., a bibliographer, a man of extensive learning, the author of an "Ode to the Muses," and several other poems; the translator of the first English version of "The Nineteen Tragedies and Fragments of Euripides," was the last of the male line of the great baronial family of Wahull or Wodhull, and lineal representative of Walter Flandrensis, the Domesday lord of several manors in this county. By will dated 21st August 1815, he devised Thenford and his other estate to Mrs Mary Ingram, after whose decease in 1824 they devolved, in pursuance of her will, on Samuel Amy Severne, Esq., from whom they descended to John Michael Severne, Esq., and from him to John Edmund Severne, Esq., the present proprietor.

The Village of Thenford, which is small, is situated about five and a half miles N.W. by W. of Brackley.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is an ancient structure of mixed styles, and consisting of a nave, chancel, side aisles, north porch, and square embattled tower, in which are five bells. In the south wall of the chancel is an old piscina in good preservation. The living is a discharged rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £10, and now worth about £130 per annum. The patronage is vested in the crown, and the Rev. Arthur Severne, M.A., is the incumbent. The rectory consists of 61a. 1r. 16p., allotted in lieu of glebe and tithes. The Rectory House is in the village. The School was established in 1842, and is supported by Mrs Severne.

Thenford House, the seat of Mrs Severne, is a handsome mansion situated east of the village. It was erected by Michael Wodhull, Esq., in 1765, and is surrounded by extensive plantations. It contains a valuable library, and amongst the pictures is one from Vandyck of Charles I. dictating to Sir Edward Walker on the drum-head.

The Charities of Thenford are a rent-charge of £4 per annum, left by John Tooley in 1692; and William Tooley's charity, consisting of ten acres at Everdon, the rent of which, £20, is distributed amongst the poor, except a small sum annually retained towards apprenticing one poor boy belonging to the parish.

Letters are received here through Banbury.

Butler Mrs Mary, shopkeeper
French Mr John
Hancox Levi, farm bailiff
Hayward Miss Clara, schoolmrs.
Severne Rev. Arthur, M.A.
rector

Severne Mrs, Thenford House
Severne Walter M. Esq. Then- ford House
Young Robert, gardener,

Farmers and Graziers.

Belcher John
Belcher John, jun.
Hawkes William
Sewell Thomas
Sharpe Samuel, Hill Farm

THORPE MANDEVILLE PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Culworth on the north, Sulgrave on the east, Marston St Lawrence and Thenford on the south, and Wardington, in Oxfordshire, on the west. It contains 990 acres, and its population in 1801 was 137; in 1831, 175; in 1841, 154; in 1851, 151; in 1861, 164; and in 1871, 152. The rateable value of the parish is £2154, and the gross estimated rental £2285. The soil is principally a light loam; the greater part is in pasture; and the principal proprietors are William Peareth, Esq. (lord of the manor), and Mr Henry Gibbard.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, Ingelran held 2 hides of land in Torp, of Gilo de Pinkeney; in the Confessor's time it was the freehold of Osmond the Dane, and was valued at 40s., but afterwards advanced to 50s. This manor passed from the Pinkeneys to the family of Amundeville, or Mandeville, and by one of them it was sold, in the 18th year of Edward I. (1290), to the Fitz-Whitacres. In the 10th of Edward I. (1282), Richard de Mandeville had a grant for life of a weekly market and annual fair here, but these privileges were not renewed to the succeeding lords. In the 9th of Edward II. (1315), the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, who must have held under the Whitacres, was certified to be lord of this manor. In the beginning of the reign of Henry VI. it was in the possession of the family of Freebody, from which it passed to the Kirtons, with whom it continued for several generations. Bridges tells us that "Oliver Cromwell was related to the family of Kirton, and kept garrison here. The mounds which were thrown up on this occasion are still visible behind the manor-house." Thomas Gostelowe, Gent., of Wardington, in Oxfordshire, purchased the manor and estate of Thomas Kirton, Gent., and his grandson Richard sold them to the trustees under the will of Lucy Knightley, Esq., of Fawsley, 1723-24. Richard Jennens, Esq. of Weston by Weedon, purchased this manor of the Knightley family in 1742-43, and dying without issue in 1773, the lordship was assigned, in the partition of his estates, to Ann, his youngest sister, wife of William Peareth, Esq. of Unsworth, Durham, whose grandson of the same name is the present proprietor. The Manor-House stands east of the church.

The Village of Thorpe Mandeville, which is very small, is situated about seven miles north-west by north of Brackley, and six miles north-east by east of Banbury.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, erected about the thirteenth century, stands near the centre of the village, and consists of a nave, north aisle, south porch, chancel, and pinnaced tower containing three bells. The tower has a low roof, or what is locally termed a pack-saddle steeple. The interior has been tastefully fitted up since 1857. In 1872 the chancel was thoroughly restored by the Rev. W. T. Browning, when a carved oak pulpit and a reading-desk, stalls, altar rails, &c., were erected; and the east window and two other windows in the chancel were filled with stained glass. Many other improvements were effected by the rector. In the chancel are a piscina and a locker, and several mural tablets to the Humfrey family; and in the north aisle is a monument to a member of the Kirton family and his wife: the former, a common sergeant of the city of London, died in 1597, and the latter in 1601. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £10, 2s. 10d., and now valued at £370 per annum. The Rev. Robert P. Humfrey, M.A., is both patron and incumbent. The rectory consists of 178a. 1r. 34p., allotted in lieu of glebe and tithes. The Rectory House is a handsome building south-east of the church. In the churchyard is a very fine yew-tree.

The National School, built by subscription in 1864, is also supported by subscription, aided by Government grant and the school-pence.

Post-Office.—William Gardner, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Banbury at 9 A.M., and are despatched at 4.30 P.M.

Allett Miss Jane, farmer and vict. Three Conies
Browning Rev. William Thos. M.A. Boarding School
Gardner William Thos. parish clerk and post-office

Golby Jno. farmer & vict. Maggie
Humfrey Rev. Robt. Pargiter, M.A. rector
Scarr Mrs Mary, shopkeeper
Scarbrook Thos. blacksmith
Webb Mrs Harriet, schoolmrs.

Farmers and Graziers.

Campion John, A. Chacombe
Cooper Mrs Sarah
Gibbard Henry (yeoman)
Iven Tom

WAPPENHAM PARISH.

This parish includes the hamlets of Astwell and Falcote, and is bounded on the east by Abthorpe, on the north by Blakesley, on the west by Weedon Lois and Helmdon, and on the south by Syresham. It contains, with its hamlets, 4018 acres. Its population in 1801 was 477; in 1831, 458; in 1841, 641; in 1851, 519; in 1861, 566; and in 1871, 627 souls. The rateable value of the parish, with its hamlets, is £5699, and the gross estimated rental, £6409. The soil is principally a strong loam, and the principal proprietors are F. P. Wilson, Esq., Messrs James Fairbrother, J. A. Carruthers, R. W. Jones, and James Dover, and the executors of the late Lord Southampton, whose son is a minor, and to whom the manorial rights belong. The parish is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture land. The Northampton and Banbury Junction Railway passes through a part of the parish, and has a station about three-fourths of a mile from the village.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Gilo de Pinkeney held two hides of land here, which, with a mill of the yearly rent of 4s., 5 acres of meadow, and a wood 11 furlongs in length and 6 in breadth, had been valued at 100s. in the preceding reign, when it was the freehold of Leuric and Siward, but was now reduced to £4. At this time, and in the hydarium of Henry II., Wappenham is entered under the hundred of Towcester, and in all documents since in the hundred of Sutton, though no reason is assigned for it. The manor continued in the possession of the Pinkeneys till the twenty-ninth year of Edward I. (1300), except for the space of ten years that it was in the hands of Hugh de Pateshull, Henry de Pinkeney having made a conveyance of it to him for that time, when Henry de Pinkeney sold it to John de Tyngewick. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), John de Boudon was lord of Wappenham. Robert de Arden died seized of this manor in the fifth of Edward III. (1331), and it descended to his posterity, and passed from them in the eighteenth of Henry VI. (1439) to Sir Walter Lucy. In the fifth of Henry VIII. (1513), Sir Robert Corbet died seized of the manor of Wappenham, and from his family it passed in marriage to Sir Henry Wallop. Robert Wallop, Esq., sold the capital messuage or manor-house, and certain lands here, to Philip Holman, Esq. of Warkworth, for £1700 in 1650, and in the following year the Rev. Theophilus Hart purchased it. Having passed through several intermediate possessors, it was purchased of Dering Pargiter, Gent., in 1728-29, by the trustees under the will of the late Lucy Knightley, Esq. of Fawsley. In 1742, John Wodhull, Esq., purchased it, and from him it passed to Samuel Amy Severne, Esq. The heir of the late Lord Southampton is the present possessor.

A Chantry for six priests was founded here in the first of Edward III. (1330), by Gilbert de Middleton, Archdeacon of Northampton, in honour of the Holy Trinity, the Blessed Virgin, and All Saints, and endowed by him that divine service might be daily performed for his soul. The Abbey of Biddlesden and the Priory of Canons Ashby had possessions in this parish.

The Village of Wappenham is pleasantly situated about five miles S.W. from Towcester, ten S.S.W. from Blisworth Station, and about fifteen S.S.W. from Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands at the upper end of the village, and consists of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, north and south porches, and a pinnacled tower in which are four bells and a clock. It was thoroughly restored in 1851, when it was furnished with open oak sittings, new windows, &c., the gallery at the west end removed, and the west arch thrown open. There are three brasses in the church—one to Thomas Billing, who was Lord Chief-Justice of the Queen's Bench in the reign of Edward IV.; and the other two are to the Lovell and Shirley families. In the south aisle is a piscina, and another in the chancel, in good preservation. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £29, 9s. 7½d., but now worth about £400 per annum. The Bishop of Peterborough is the patron, and the Rev. Thomas Scott, M.A., is the incumbent. The rectory consists of 317 acres of land, allotted in lieu of tithes, &c. The Rectory House stands in the village, and was built by the late rector in 1833.

The National School was established here in 1840. The present building, of brick, was erected in 1861 by voluntary contributions, and is supported by subscription, Government grant, and the school-pence: it is well attended.

The Wesleyan Chapel, a small brick building erected in 1860, will seat about two hundred, and has a Sunday-school attached to it.

Charities.—The poor's land, consisting of 15a., the rent of which, together with 20s. from Mrs Jane Leeson's charity, is distributed to the poor.

ASTWELL is a hamlet in this, but extending into Syresham parish, containing, in 1841, 6 houses and 46 souls; in 1871, 5 houses and 37 inhabitants. It contains about 1760 acres, and is the property of Lord Penrhyn. The rateable value is £2205, and the gross estimated rental £2603. It is situated about a mile south of Wappenham. The soil is principally a strong loam, and the greater part is in pasture. Astwell and Falcott are now consolidated, and separated from Wappenham in parochial matters. The Duke of Buckingham sold this property in 1850 to the Earl of Southampton, from whom it was purchased by Lord Penrhyn in 1862, the Earl retaining the manorial rights. The rector of Wappenham receives a modus of a guinea and a half yearly from the estate. The inhabitants of these hamlets lay claim to the south aisle of Wappenham Church, and they pay one third of the expenses of the churchwardens.

Manor.—The De Wauncys were amongst the earliest possessors of this manor since the Conquest. From them it descended to the Brookes and the Lovetts. George Shirley, Esq. (created a baronet, on the first institution of that order, by James I. in 1611), grandson of Thomas Lovett, Esq., was the next possessor, and his great-grandson was raised to the dignity of Viscount Tamworth and Earl Ferrers in 1711. From him this manor, with Falcott, descended to Washington, the fifth Earl Ferrers, by whom they were sold in 1763 to Richard Earl Temple. He was succeeded by his nephew, George Nugent Temple, Earl Temple, who was elevated to the marquise of Buckingham in 1784, and whose son, Richard Nugent Temple Brydges Chandos, was, in 1822, created Earl Temple, Marquis of Chandos, and Duke of Buckingham and Chandos. Biddlesden Abbey had possessions here.

The Manor-House, formerly the occasional residence of the noble family of Ferrers, has been taken down, and some of the inferior offices converted into a farmhouse. The mansion was partially, if not wholly rebuilt, by Sir George Shirley, Bart., in 1807. A broad embattled tower, still standing, attests the former grandeur of this ancient structure.

Biography.—Selina Countess of Huntingdon, founder or patron of the sect of Calvinistic Methodists called "Lady Huntingdon's Connection," was born in Astwell-House on the 13th August 1707. She was the second daughter of the second Earl Ferrers, and was married to Theophilus, ninth Earl of Huntingdon, who died in 1746. Her widowhood (forty-five years) was devoted to the zealous propagation of the peculiar views of Christian truth held by herself and her chaplain, George Whitfield. She established sixty-four chapels in various parts of the kingdom, for the maintenance of which she devised the bulk of her fortune to trustees. She is said to have expended upwards of £100,000 in acts of public and private charity. She died in London on the 17th of June 1791, at the advanced age of eighty-four years, and by her will directed her remains, dressed in the suit of white silk which she wore at the opening of the chapel in Goodman's Fields, to be deposited in her husband's vault at Ashby-de-la-Zouch, in Leicestershire.

FALCOTT or FAWCOTE is another hamlet in this parish, but the manor has been immemorially associated with Astwell. It contained in 1871, 9 houses and 42 inhabitants; in 1841 it had 15 houses and 82 inhabitants; but several of the houses have been taken down, and the occupants removed to other localities. These hamlets support their own poor, and contribute one-third to the church-rate of Wappenham.

The Village lies at the extremity of the lordship, about 2½ miles S.W. of Wappenham, and a short distance from Helmdon.

Here was formerly a chapel, but it has long since been demolished.

Atterbury Samuel, permanent-way inspector of Northampton and Banbury Railway
Bannard Mrs Mary Adelaide, day and boarding school
Beasley William, auctioneer
Bodley Edward, shopkeeper and coal dealer
Brown James, stonemason
Chester John, shoemaker
Cockerill Mrs Ann
Dawes Alfred, wheelwright and vict. Chequers
Farthing, Mrs Jane
Garr James, blacksmith
Green John, shoemaker
Hitchcock George, coal dealer and vict. Horseshoe

Jones Thomas, shoemaker
King Thomas, carpenter
Lawrence John, thrashing-machine owner
Louvas Miss Martha, schoolmrs.
Newitt Wm. Roidis, butcher and farmer
Payne John Valntn. par. clerk
Perry Jas. tailor, shopkeeper, baker, and beerhouse
Perry Arthur, horsebreaker
Pinfold Joseph, stationmaster
Scott Rev. Thos. M. A. rector
Stanton Henry, vict. Bull
Summers John Higham, miller, Astwell Mill
White Thomas, shopkeeper, beerhouse, and hurdle-maker

Farmers and Graziers.

Barford John, Falcott House
Bennett Sam. Astwell Park
Bird Thomas, Falcott Hall
Burman Wm. Frederick
Chapman Richard
Cockerill Henry (yeoman)
Fairbrother Charles (yeoman)
Farmer William, Astwell
Jones Jno. R. Wappenham Lodge
Matthews John
Newitt Charles (and maltster)
Nichols John
Pittam William (yeoman)
Strange John, Manor-House, Astwell
Woodin Thomas

Carrier.—Edward Bodley, to Banbury on Thursday, and Northampton on Saturday.

WARKWORTH PARISH.

This parish, which includes the hamlets or members of Grimsbury, Nethercote, Overthorpe, and Huscote, is bounded on the north and east by Middleton Cheney, on the south by King's Sutton and Astrop, and on the west by Chalcombe. The river Cherwell divides it from Bodicote and Banbury, in Oxfordshire. It contains 2096 acres, and its population in 1801 was 614; in 1831, 614; in 1841, 655; in 1851, 573; in 1861, 1111; and in 1871, 1905 souls. Of this number only 42 belong to Warkworth township. The rateable value of the parish is £8220, and the gross estimated rental £10,325. The soil varies from a strong to a light loam; more than four-fifths of the lordship is in pasture, and the principal proprietors are John H. Horton, Esq. (lord of the manor), Mrs Forbes, John Hitchcock, Esq., Charles John Bricknell, Esq., and Mr James Jones. This parish is divided into three districts, called Warkworth Tithing, Middleton Tithing, and Banbury Tithing. Warkworth Tithing pays to the poor and church rates of Warkworth; Middleton Tithing to the poor and church of Middleton Cheney; Banbury Tithing, including Nethercote, Grimsbury, and Huscote, to the poor of Warkworth, and Christ Church, south parish, Banbury; and the whole contribute to the highway rates of Warkworth.

Manor.—Warkworth not being mentioned in Domesday Book, nor in the account taken of hides in this county in the reign of Henry II., it is supposed to have been an appendage to the manor of Banbury. In the 31st year of Edward I. (1302), a fine was levied of two parts of the manor of Warkworth, to the use of John de Lyons and his heirs; and with his descendants they continued till the reign of Richard II., when Sir John de St Lyons dying without issue, his lands here descended to Elizabeth his sister, the wife of Sir Nicholas Chetwood. From the Chetwoods this manor passed in marriage to the Wahuls, or Wodhulls, and in the 23d of Elizabeth (1580), Nicholas Wodhull, Esq., died seized of it, and by inquisition it was found that he held it of the Bishop of Lincoln as of his manor of Banbury. From this family it was carried in marriage to the Chetwoods, who sold it for £14,000 to the family of Holman in 1629. From them it descended to the Eyres, and in 1805, Francis Eyre, Esq., sold his manor and estate here, consisting of 1073 acres, by public auction, to Thomas Bradford, who in 1807 disposed of the manor and about 340 acres to James Smith, Esq. of Berkhamstead, Hertfordshire. In 1866 it passed to the Horton family, of whom John H. Horton, Esq., is the present representative.

The Manor-House, the ancient residence of the Chetwoods, stood on an eminence near the church, and was taken down in 1806.

The Village of Warkworth consists of three farmhouses and a cottage, and is situated about 2 miles east of Banbury. Several curious customs were formerly observed here at the annual meadow mowing.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is an ancient structure in the Decorated style, and consists of a nave, north aisle, south cross aisle or chapel, with a south porch attached, chancel, and an embattled tower containing two bells. The upper storey of the tower and the wall of the north aisle were rebuilt in 1841, and the church was thoroughly restored in 1869; it was re-roofed, the chancel rebuilt, and a new vestry and south porch erected, and the sittings are open and of oak. Here are several ancient monuments of the Lyons, Holman, and Chetwood families. In the 6th of Edward III. (1332), Sir John de Lyons, lord of the manor, founded a chantry here for two secular priests, to be supplied by the prior and convent of Chalcombe. The living is a rectory annexed to the vicarage of Marston St Lawrence, in the Deanery of Brackley; joint yearly value £420, in the gift of John Alexander Blencowe, Esq., and incumbency of the Rev. Thomas Blencowe, M.A., of Marston St Lawrence. Rev. John Meredith, A.K.C., is the curate in charge.

A Dame School was established at Overthorpe in 1859, which is partly supported by the rector, and partly by voluntary contributions.

GRIMSBURY extends along the valley to Banbury bridge; it contained in 1841 90 houses and 474 inhabitants. In 1871 it had 418 houses (20 empty and 18 building) and a population of 1802. The principal owners are Mrs Churchill, H. C. Shaw, Esq., Mr Robert Kilby, Mr Robert Field, Mr Richard Brazier, Mr Gist, and the Banbury Board of Health. The lordship is principally in grass. The priories of Bicester and Canons Ashby, and the hospital of St Leonard, had possessions in Grimsbury.

Grimsbury House, the residence of Mrs Churchill, stands on the site of the old manor-house, and was built by her first husband, Edward Lamley Fisher, Esq., in 1837, whose son, E. L. Fisher, Esq., will inherit it at his mother's death.

GRIMSBURY (Old and New), together with Nethercote and Huscote, were annexed to the ecclesiastical parish of South Banbury, Christ Church, in 1852. New Grimsbury, which has arisen since 1850, contains some neat and well-formed streets, and several good brick villas and houses, and extends to the bridge which spans the river Cherwell at Banbury. The railway stations of the London and North-Western, the Great Western, and Northampton and Banbury, together with the works of the Banbury Gas and Water Companies, are in this hamlet.

The Wesleyan Chapel, situated in West street, New Grimsbury, is a plain brick building with stone dressings, to which a Sunday-school is attached; it was erected by subscription in 1872, at a cost of upwards of £2000, Mr Mewburn of Wykeham Park being the principal contributor. A new organ was given by Mrs Mewburn. The building will seat 500 hearers; Rev. Thomas W. Johnston is the present minister.

Christ Church National Schools are substantial stone buildings, with a master's residence annexed; they were erected in 1861, by voluntary contributions, at a cost of £1500, and will accommodate 400 scholars. Charles John Gee and Mrs Gee are the teachers.

Here was formerly a chantry, "parcel of our Lady's guild at Banbury," endowed with lands, which at the dissolution were worth £3, 6s. 8d. The founder or purpose of this chantry are alike unknown. At "Brigg-foot at Banbury" was formerly a hermitage.

NETHERCOTE is a hamlet adjoining Grimsbury, containing in 1841 33 houses and 139 inhabitants, and in 1871 only 21 houses and 61 inhabitants.

HUSCOTE, containing a farm of 115 acres, is also a member of this parish. Huscote mill, on the river Cherwell, is in the parish of Chalcomb.

OVERTHORPE is principally in Middleton Tithing, and the village lies north of Warkworth.

(Marked * reside at Overthorpe.)

*Brickwell Charles John, Esq. Overthorpe Lodge	*Kingerlee Mr Thomas	*Brickwell Charles John (yeoman), Overthorpe Lodge
*Clarke Mrs Ann, schoolmrs.	*Meredith Rev. John, A.K.C. curate	*Hemmings Thos. (and baker)
*Coy Thos. wheelwrt. & builder	*Rodnight Mrs Elizabeth	*Jones John
Edwards Wm. assist. overseer	Stanley George, dairyman	Jones Mrs Mary Ann
*Elkington Mrs Caroline	Farmers and Grainers.	Mawle Thos. (executors of)
*French John, shoemaker	*Basley, Jno. Edw. (& cattle dlr.)	Wady John
Gillett Thos. market gardener.		*Wakelin William Tom

WHITFIELD PARISH

Is bounded by Syresham on the east, by Radston on the north, on the west by Brackley, and on the south by Biddlesden in Buckinghamshire, from which it is divided by the river Ouse. It contains 1401 acres; its population in 1801 was 217; in 1831, 328; in 1841, 321; in 1851, 326; in 1861, 265; and in 1871, 247 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1854, and the gross estimated rental £2170. The soil is principally a strong loam; and the principal landowners are the Provost and Fellows of Worcester College, Oxford (lords of the manor), John T. P. French, Esq., J. L. Stratton, Esq., and Lady Southampton, and there are 400 acres of forest still in the possession of the crown.

Manor.—Witefile was an appendage to the manor of King's Sutton, and in the hands of the king, at the time of the Conqueror's survey. In the reign of Henry II. Gilbert de Monte held 2 hides and 2 small virgates here. He gave half a hide in Whitfield to the hospital of Brackley, and his successors were also benefactors to the same brotherhood. In the 9th of Edward II. (1315), Peter de Monte sold the reversion of this manor, which he held of the crown in capite by the service of bringing one hound into the field whenever the king should hunt in person in the forest of Whittlewood. In the 35th of Edward III. (1361), Gilbert de Impworth died seized of it. In the 5th of Henry VIII. (1513), it was in the possession of the Osborne family, and, in the 21st of the same reign (1529), Thomas Osborne died seized of it, and left it to his son. In the 10th of Charles I. (1634) it was in the hands of Sir William Spencer, Bart., and his grand-daughter carried it in marriage to Samuel Trist, Esq. From this gentleman it devolved upon his daughter, the wife of Thomas Lister, Esq., who left it at his death to his daughter and heir, the wife of Clabery Holt, Esq. In 1720, the Provost, Fellows, and Scholars of Worcester College, Oxford, purchased of the Holts the manor and advowson of Whitfield, and the manor of Helmdon, for £13,000. As has been stated, the hospital of Brackley had a manor here, which accompanied the Worcester College lands. The Abbey of Biddlesden, the Priory of Sewardsey, and the Prior of St John of Jerusalem, had each possessions here.

The Village of Whitfield is situated near the boundary of the county, about two miles north-east by north of Brackley.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Evangelist, is an ancient structure in the Early English style, consisting of nave, chancel, north aisle, south porch, and square tower, surmounted by a spire, and containing five bells. On the 1st of February 1869, during a heavy gale of wind, the tower of the old church, supposed to have been built in the thirteenth century, was blown down; and on examination the whole of the building was found to be in such a state of crumbling decay as to require rebuilding. The foundation-stone was laid on the 12th August 1869 by the Hon. Mrs Pierrepont, of Evenley Hall, and the building was completed at a cost of nearly £3000. It is furnished with open sittings. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £8, 15s., and now worth about £300 per annum. The Provost and Fellows of Worcester College, Oxford, are the patrons, and the Rev. Lewis Paige, M.A., is the incumbent. The rectory consists of about 88 acres of land, allotted in lieu of tithes; a corn rent of £134, 7s. 6½d., and some tithes which were commuted in 1846 for £22, 15s. 6d. The Rectory, pleasantly situated in the village, was formerly a farmhouse.

The Wesleyans have a place of worship in the village.

The School, with a teacher's residence, was erected in 1837 and enlarged in 1872; it is endowed with a piece of land purchased with the sum of £115, made up of various donations, which yields about £9 a year.

The other Charities are a yearly rent-charge of £10, left by Thomas Lister in 1708, to distribute £2 yearly to the poor on Christmas Day, and the remaining £8 which is given by order of the Charity Commissioners towards the support of the school, together with two allotments, amounting to 8a. 1r. 13p., to the poor, at the enclosure of the commons of Whitfield and Haselborough-walk, which now let for £20 a year.

Letters received here through the Brackley post-office.

French Mrs Ann
French Mr Henry
Paige Rev. Lewis, M.A. rector
Baldwin Geo. blacksmith
Green William, shoemaker
Knibbs Daniel shoemkr. & vict.
Swn

Miller Thos. baker & shopkepr.
Munday James, shopkeeper
Newberry Thos. farm bailiff
Reeve William, carpenter
Farmers and Graziers.
Allen John Alfred

Bartlett James
Berry James (and miller) Whitfield Mill
Goodwin Mrs
French John Thomas Philips
(yeoman)

GREENS-NORTON HUNDRED.

THIS Hundred is bounded on the north by that of Fawsley, on the east by those of Towcester and Cleely, on the south by Buckinghamshire, and on the west by King's Sutton and Chipping-Warden Hundreds. Its form is nearly oval, comprising 22,606 acres of land, and extending about eight miles from east to west, and three and a half from north to south, at its widest point. In the time of William the Conqueror this was called Foxle Hundred, from a town which stood upon its northern border, now demolished. The crown, which was in the possession of this Hundred from the time of Edward the Confessor till the reign of Richard I., granted it, with the manor of Norton, to Baldwin de Betun, Earl of the Isle of Wight, afterwards Earl of Albemarle, from whom it passed in marriage with Alice his daughter to William Mareschal, Earl of Pembroke, who transmitted it to his posterity. It was afterwards purchased by Sir Henry Greene, in the reign of Edward III., in whose family it continued for several generations, and hath ever since had the same possessors with the manor of Norton. It is now in the possession of the Duke of Grafton. (See Norton parish.) It was held of the king by an annual payment of 54s. into the exchequer by the hands of the sheriff, which tenure was called alba firma.

It is divided into twelve parishes, and a part of an extra-parochial district, of which the following is an enumeration, showing the population in 1871, with the area in acres as taken from the parish books, the number of houses, rateable value, and gross estimated rental of each parish :—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Adstone.....	1,379	36	2	...	97	87	184	2,236	2,446
Blakesley	3,940	120	12	...	237	258	495	6,972	7,634
Woodend, hamlet.....	...	70	7	...	127	129	256
Bradden	1,011	39	65	75	140	1,701	1,857
Canons Ashby.....	1,733	11	1	...	33	35	68	2,639	3,033
Greens-Norton	2,354	208	15	...	421	471	892	4,714	5,248
Luffield Abbey, ex par. (part of).....	60
Maidford	1,054	83	3	...	158	205	363	1,866	2,088
Morton Pinkeney	2,376	125	9	...	256	255	511	4,310	5,096
Plumpton	847	12	1	...	24	28	52	1,068	1,137
Silverstone	1,820	275	17	...	573	590	1,163	3,591	4,035
Slapton	615	57	2	...	122	132	254	1,141	1,282
Weedon Loys	2,232	4,197
Milthorpe, hamlet	133	4	...	281	257	538	3,792	...
Weston, hamlet
Whittlebury	3,185	111	9	...	188	219	407	3,936	4,314
	22,606	1,280	82	...	2,482	2,741	5,823	37,966	42,367

THE CHARITIES OF GREENS-NORTON HUNDRED, as abstracted from the last Parliamentary Reports, with the dates, names of donors, &c. See also the histories of the parishes :—

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what places and purposes applied.	Annual value.
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent)	Adston Chapelry, poor	£0 10 0
1670.	Lady Katherine Levison (rent)	Blakesley parish, poor widows, and apprenticing children	40 0 0
	Overplus money	Ditto, poor	85 0 0
1669.	William Foxley (land)	Ditto, grammar-school	145 0 0
1802.	Sir John Knightley (£200)	Ditto, Sunday-school	5 2 6
1646.	Jane Leeson	Ditto, poor	1 10 0
	The Bidford Charity	Ditto, church and poor	60 14 0
1638.	— Cleave (land)	Ditto, repairs of church and poor	18 0 0
	Poor's Land	Ditto, poor	25 0 0
	Town Land	Bradden parish	45 0 0
	Ditto (Bell-rope piece)	Ditto, church bell-ropes	5 8 6
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent)	Ditto, poor	0 10 0
1739.	Robert Porter (£5)	Ditto, ditto	0 5 0

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what places and purposes applied.	Annual value.
1557.	Thomas Capoone (rent)	Greens-Norton parish, poor	0 3 0
1693.	William Ives (rent)	Ditto, ditto	3 0 0
1646.	Jane Leeson	Ditto, ditto	1 10 0
	Church Land	Ditto ..	10 10 0
1691.	John Wilkins (£10)	Ditto (lost) ..
1706.	George Savage (£2)	Ditto (lost) ..
1847.	Wm. Pinckard (£500)	Ditto, schools (after the death of Elizabeth Gibbins)	16 0 0
1865.	John Elliott (£538, 7s. 2d.)	Ditto, school	16 0 0
1778.	Poor's and Church Allotments	Maidford parish	25 0 0
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent)	Morton Pinkeney, poor	1 10 0
1624.	Anthony Plant (rent)	Ditto, ditto	2 0 0
	Poor's Land	Ditto, ditto	18 0 0
	Benefaction Fund	Ditto, ditto	1 9 6
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent)	Plumpton parish, poor	0 10 0
	Donor unknown (£5)	Ditto, ditto	0 4 0
	Jane Leeson (rent)	Silverstone parish, poor	1 0 0
	Poor's Land	Ditto, ditto	33 0 0
	Jane Leeson (rent)	Slapton parish, poor	1 0 0
1723.	Thomas Knight (rent)	Ditto, school	1 10 0
1640.	John Knight (£5)	Ditto (lost)
1666.	Hugh Alloway (£20)	Ditto (lost)
1855.	Land	Ditto, poor	4 5 0
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent)	Weedon Loys parish, poor	1 0 0
1773.	Poor's Land	Ditto, ditto	33 0 0
	Bryan's Charity	Whittlebury parish, clothes for 4 poor widows, and a year ..	5 0 0
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent)	Ditto, poor	1 0 0
	Poor's Land	Ditto, ditto	10 11 6
	Slapton Charity Estate	Ditto and Silverstone parish, poor and school	22 13 9
1855.	The Crown (£189, 18s.)	Ditto, poor (in lieu of forestrights) ..	5 10 9
1646.	Smart's and Preston's Donations	Whittlebury parish (lost)
			£647 7 6

ADSTONE PARISH.

Adstone, or, as it is called in ancient records, Atteston and Adneston, formerly a parochial chapelry in the parish of Canons Ashby, was in 1865 constituted an independent parish. It is bounded by Blakesley on the east, on the north by Preston, on the west by Canons Ashby, and by Plumpton on the south. It contains 1379 acres, and its population in 1801, was 161; in 1831, 166; in 1841, 196; in 1851, 174; 1861, 165; and 1871, 184 souls. The rateable value is £2236, and the gross estimated rental £2446. The soil is principally a strong loam, and the principal proprietors are the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy; Mr Thomas Aris, Worcester College, Oxford; Colonel Parker, M.P.; and Mrs Elliott. About two thirds is in permanent pasture, and there were here two quarries of red-sandstone used for building purposes, but these have been closed up. Pits of excellent sand and gravel have been opened on Mr Aris' land.

Manor.—Before the Conquest Adstone was held by Edward the Confessor, and at the Domesday survey it was in the hands of the Conqueror. In the reign of Henry II., Geoffrey de Turville held here 3 small virgates, and the monks of Bec 8 small virgates. In Henry III.'s time the prior of Ashby and Alexander de Bois were certified to hold a third part of a knight's fee here, of the fee of Margery de Ripariis or Rivers. The prior of Ashby's share in this third part of a fee seems to be the half a hide given to the convent by Herbert Golafre. In the 1st of Edward I. (1303), John Boupere gave 15 acres, and Walter Brithriche 12 acres of land here, to the same prior and convent. A mill and other lots were given them about the same time. In the 13th of Edward II. (1320), the king granted the said prior and convent the liberty of free warren in all their demesne lands lying in Adstone, and henceforth they appear to have been lords of the manor till the time of their dissolution. Upon the dissolution of the alien priories, the small possessions which the abbot of Bec held here were given by King Henry VI. to his new foundation of Eton College. At the dissolution of Canons Ashby Priory, their revenues in Adstone were valued at the yearly rent of £13, 2s. 4d.; and the manor was granted in the 4th of Edward VI. (1550), to Sir Ralph Sadler and Lawrence Washington, Esq., and the mill and the remainder of their other possessions here, in 1554, to Thomas Reeve and George Cotton. In the 6th of Edward VI. (1552), William Harby, Gent., died seized of this manor, and his lineal descendant, Francis Harby, Esq., with his son and heir-apparent, Keynsham Harby, Esq., sold it with the estate in June 1720, for £6893, 2s. 6d., to the governors of the charity for the relief of the poor widows and children of clergymen, who are its present lords.

The Village of Adstone stands on an eminence about 6½ miles west-north-west from Towcester, about 7½ from Daventry, and 12 from Northampton. A quarry was opened here in 1869, which produces a most durable kind of stone. The first supply was used in the erection of the Vicarage.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, was built, according to Bridges, by one of the family of Harby, not far from the manor and mansion-house of that family, but never endowed. In Catholic times it was served by the canons of Ashby, and no provision having been made for it after the Reformation, the curate was supported by the subscriptions of the lord of the manor, and the principal inhabitants. The church was restored in 1843 by the lords of the manor. It is a good stone edifice in the Early English style, and consists of a nave, side aisle and chancel, with a small bell-turret at the west end. Previous to 1868 the deceased of this parish were interred at Canons Ashby, but the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy having granted a site adjoining the church for a burial-ground, Sir Henry E. L. Dryden, Bart., defrayed all the expenses of rendering it a fit place of interment. The living is a vicarage in the Deanery of Brackley, yearly value £97, 6s. 8d., of which the Ecclesiastical Commissioners and the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy contribute £73, 6s. 8d.; Worcester College, Oxford, £4; and the farmers by voluntary rate £20. The Rev. Francis Keeling, M.A., is the incumbent.

The Vicarage, which is pleasantly situated near the village, is a substantial stone structure partly in the Elizabethan style, and was erected in 1870 at a cost of more than £1100. A Wesleyan Chapel was erected here in 1849.

The National School was built in 1846 by the Corporation above named, and receives from that body an annual grant of £23; from Worcester College, Oxford, £2; and from Sir Henry E. L. Dryden, Bart., £3. It is in the Elizabethan style, and will accommodate fifty scholars.

The East and West Junction Railway from Towcester to Stratford-on-Avon runs through part of this parish.

Letters arrive from Towcester at 9.15 A.M., and the pillar-box is cleared at 3.55 P.M.

Bliss William, gardener
Boot Wm. wheelwright & vict.
Wheat Sheaf.
Boot Wm. wheelwght & buildr
Burman Sarah, teacher
Keeling Rev. Fras, M.A., vicar

Marshall Robt. blacksmith
Warwick Thos. draper & grocer
Farmers and Grasiers.
Aris Thos. Adstone House
Burman Thomas
Gibbins John, Adstone Manor

Hartley Edw. Linnel, Adstone Lodge
Perridge John, Whitnell
Thomas James
Underwood Edw. Fulling-mill
Underwood Samuel William
Underwood Stephen, Ashby

BLAKESLEY PARISH

Comprehends the hamlets or members of Woodend, or Wood Blakesley, Kirby, Green's Park, Sewell, and part of Foxley, and contains 3940 acres. Its boundaries are formed by Litchborough on the north, Greens-Norton on the east, Plumpton and Adstone on the west, and by Wappenham on the south. The population of Blakesley, including its hamlets, in 1801, was 659; in 1831, 829; in 1841, 830; in 1851, 798; in 1861, 777; and in 1871, 814. Its rateable value is £6972, and the gross estimated rental is £7634. The soil varies from a light loam to a stiff clay, and nearly two thirds of the lordship is in permanent pasture. The principal proprietors are the Duke of Grafton, Mr William Edwards, Henry Shephard, John C. Roper, William Whitton, Thomas Gascoigne Welch, and the executors of the late John W. Wight, who are also the lords of the manor. The East and West Junction Railway, which intersects this parish, has a station on the south side of the village. The lordship abounds in springs, some of which are slightly chalybeate.

Manor.—Blaculveslei, Blachesleuve, Blaxley, or Blakesley, was in the hands of several possessors at the time of the general survey. The Earl of Morton had 1½ hides of land here of the soke of Norton, which was held of him by one Sagrim, the Saxon proprietor, and was then advanced in value from 10s. to 20s. Hugh de Abrincis, Earl of Chester, held half a hide of the same soke, which was valued at 8s.; and Walter held of William Peverel 2 hides, which had been rated in the Confessor's reign at 10s., but were then advanced to 40s. Part of Blakesley was also at this time a member of Norton, and kept in the king's own hands. In the reign of Henry II. the 2 hides of the fee of Peverel were held by Norman de St Patrick; 1½ hides and 7½ virgates belonged to Norton; Roger Golafre held 3½ hides, and half a small virgate; William de Plumpton 2 hides and 2 small virgates; and Gilbert 1½ hides and 1 small virgate of the fee of Berkhamstede. In the 4th year of the reign of King John (1203), Geoffrey de Norton sold the whole lordship of Little Blakesley to Peter de Stokes, to be held of the crown by the service of one knight's fee, and an annual payment of 8½ marks to the knight's hospitallers of the order of St John of Jerusalem. Henry III., granted to this order the manor of Blakesley, with the privilege of free warren in all their demesne lands in this lordship; and William de Plumpton, Peter Woddam, Peter de Stokes, and Hugh and Maud Golafre, gave them considerable possessions in Blakesley. From the time of Edward III. the family of Zouche possessed a manor here, which in the 19th of Richard II. (1396) was found to have been held by William la Zouche of the prior of St John of Jerusalem by an annual payment of one penny. Edward Lord Zouche levied a fine of this manor in the 23d of Elizabeth (1581). Upon the dissolution of the monasteries, the manor here, belonging to the prior of the hospitallers, was granted to the Princess Elizabeth, during life, and in the 7th of Edward VI. (1554) was given to John Duke of Northumberland, in exchange for the manor and castle of Tunbridge, in Kent. In the 5th of Mary (1550) it was restored to the hospital; and in the 2d of Elizabeth (1560) was granted to Thomas Watts, Esq. From this gentleman the manor lineally descended, till the extinction of the male line in Edward Watts, Esq., whose daughter, Maria Penelope, carried it, with other possessions in Blakesley, which had been purchased by the family of Watts, to William Wight, Esq. of Little Ilford, in Essex, in 1721. His son and successor, Henry Wight, Esq., dying without issue, in 1793, the manor and estate passed from his widow, who died in 1823, to John Wight Hibbit, Esq., as representative of Henry Wight's first cousin, who adopted the name of Wight. He died in 1867, and the manor and estate are now in the hands of his executors.

Sir Erasmus Dryden, Bart., of Canons Ashby, in 21st James I. (1623), settled on his youngest son, Erasmus Dryden, Esq., a capital messuage and 8 yardlands, and another messuage and 3 yardlands, in Blacovislie, alias Blackoslie, which constituted the patrimony of his son, John Dryden, Esq., the celebrated poet, and continued in the family down to the late Lady Dryden, who sold this estate, consisting of 200 acres, in 1804, to William Edwards, Gent., grandfather of the present possessor.

The Village of Blakesley, which is large, and contains several respectable residences, is delightfully situated in the midst of a thickly-wooded country, 5 miles west-north-west of Towcester, 13 east of Banbury, and 11 south-west-by-west of Northampton. In Bridge's time it contained about 200 families, amongst whom were 60 freeholders.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands at the north end of the village, and is in the Late Perpendicular style. It consists of a nave, with clerestory, side aisles, south porch, and chancel, and an embattled tower, in which is a peal of five bells. The interior is now (1873) about to be restored at an estimated cost of £1000, when the gallery will be removed, the pews give place to open and unappropriated seats, and an organ-chamber will be erected at the same time. The Rev. Arthur Hibbit, the late vicar, presented a new font. An organ, which cost about £100, was erected by subscription in 1843. The living is a discharged vicarage in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £9, 17s., and now worth £320 per annum. The executors of the late John W. Wight, Esq., are the patrons, and the Rev. James Jenkins is the incumbent. In 1760 the commissioners allotted 106a. 3r. 20p. to William Pickering, Esq., and 132a. 1r. to Samuel Sheppard, Esq., in lieu of impropriate or rectorial tithes, the remainder of the parish, then belonging to Henry Wight, Esq., Mrs Sarah Higgins, and the Rev. T. C. Welch, being exempt from both impropriate and vicarial tithes. Robert Ayres, Esq., received an allotment in 1779 in lieu of the impropriate tithes of Woodend. The vicarage consists of 65a. 7p., allotted in lieu of glebe lands and vicarial tithes of Blakesley; and 43a. 3r. 34p. in lieu of the tithes of Woodend, Sewell, and that part of Foxley within this parish. The vicar also receives the dividends on £368, 15s. consols, being a share of the Duchess Dudley's charity. The Vicarage House stands near the church.

The Wesleyans first formed a congregation here about the year 1816, and occupied rooms in the late Mr John Phillips' house until the erection of their present chapel, built in 1868 at a cost of £170, on a site given by Mr Joseph Watts.

The Free Grammar-School was founded and endowed by William Foxley, Gent., in 1669, for the free instruction of all the children of the town and parish of Blakesley. The estate consists of a school, a dwelling-house for the master, with about 8 acres of land adjoining, and an allotment of 70a. 2r. 28p. in lieu of 3 yardlands left by Mr Foxley. About 35 boys attend at present. The land yields about £145 a year.

The Rev. Sir John Knightley left £200, the interest to be applied to the support of the Sunday-school in this parish. This sum yields £5, 2s. 6d. The other Charities are the Poor's land, 9a. 2r. 7p., which lets for £25 per annum, which is distributed in bread to the poor at the church on certain Sundays. Cleave's charity, in lieu of which an allotment of 8a. 3r. was awarded at the enclosure, which lets for about £18 a year, of which sum £2, 10s. goes to the poor, and the remainder towards the repairs of the church. Besides the interest of £368, 15s., which is received for the augmentation of the living from the Duchess Dudley's or the Bidford Charity, dividends of £34 and £13 per annum have been received some years, in pursuance of an order in Chancery in 1826, for the poor of this parish, amounting altogether to £60, 14s. 4d. per annum. This parish is also entitled to £40 per annum from Lady Katharine Leveson's or the Foxley Estate Charity, viz., £20 to be given to poor widows, and £20 to place two poor boys apprentices, and after the payment of other specific bequests, one third of the surplus rents and profits of the estate is to be distributed amongst the poor. The share of the overplus money for several years was from £80 to £90, amounting, with the original donation of £40, from £120 to £130. These sums are proportionately divided between Blakesley and Woodend, and distributed amongst the poor in coal and clothing about Christmas. The sum of £1, 10s. per annum is also received for the poor of this parish from Mrs Jane Leeson's Charity.

FOXLEY, or the Field of Foxes, consists of about 483 acres, of which 281a. are in this parish, about 149a. in Pattishall, 53a. in Litchborough; and the whole is the property of the trustees of the Foxley Charity, founded by Lady Katharine Leveson. Foxley was formerly a village, which gave name to the hundred now called Norton, and at present consists of only two farmhouses, which are not only situated in the three above-named parishes, but also in three several hundreds—Fawsley, Norton, and Towcester. At the Domesday survey, the lordship of Foxley contained four parts of half a hide, and was held of the crown by the Earl of Morton. In the reign of Henry II., Simon de Wahul, Earl Maurice, and the Priory of St Andrew at Northampton had each 4 small virgates here. In the reign of Henry VIII. this lordship was in the possession of the family of Foxley, from whom it afterwards passed by purchase to Alice, Duchess Dudley, wife of Sir Robert Dudley, son of the Earl of Leicester, Queen Elizabeth's favourite. At her decease in 1669, at the advanced age of ninety years, she was succeeded in this manor by her daughter, Lady Katharine Leveson, who, by a codicil to her will, dated 21st February 1670, devised the whole manor to six trustees, to be applied to charitable purposes in the parishes of Blakesley, Pattishall, and Litchborough, in this county; and the parishes of Lilleshall and Trentham, in Shropshire and Staffordshire. The gross rental of the estate in 1873 was £906 per annum. The above rental is subject to the yearly payments of tithes to the rector of Litchborough and the rector of Blakesley, to the churchwardens and overseers of the parishes of Pattishall, Blakesley, and Litchborough, £40 to each parish; to the vicars of Trentham and Lilleshall, £50 each; and Warwick Chapel, £40.

WOODEND is a hamlet in this parish, which forms its south-western division, and its population in 1841 was 272 souls. It contains 1759 acres; the rateable value is £2880, and the gross estimated rental, £3123. The landowners are the executors of the late J. W. Wight, Esq., and Messrs John Edwards, William Whitton, John Thomas Smith, William Jenkinson, — Checkley, Alexander Greaves, John Shephard, Jesus College, Oxford, and the Duke of Grafton. It has a separate highway rate, maintains its own poor, and appoints its own churchwarden. The soil is principally a strong clay, with a substratum of limestone, and it is plentifully supplied with springs.

The Village, or Woodend Green, in this hamlet, is about half a mile south-south-west of Blakesley; and a short distance from it is Blakesley House, formerly the manor-house of the Knights Hospitallers, but now in the hands of the exrs. of the late John W. Wight, Esq. It has been nearly rebuilt by the Wight family. There is a small Baptist Chapel here, built in 1811, which will seat about 150 persons. The hamlets of Kirby, South Fields, Cathanger, and Green's Park are small hamlets in the Woodend division of the parish.

Post-Office.—John Emery, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Towcester at about 8.30 A.M., and are despatched at 5 P.M.

Bird Mrs Sarah
Bodily Daniel, stonemason
Bull Joseph, baker
Chapman Thos. vict. Red Lion
Checkley Mr John
Constable John Smith, painter,
plumber, &c.
Cook William, assessor of taxes,
and assistant overseer
Cowap William Butler, master
of grammar school
Emery John, butcher, &c.
Franklin Thos. cooper & carpnt.
Hibbit Mrs Sarah Eliza, *Manor-
House*
Hicks Henry, vict. Gryhound

Hill Arthur, surgeon
Hill Mrs Mary Wight, *Blakesley
Hall*
Inglis Arch. grocer and draper
Jenkins Rev. James, vicar
Kinman George, saddler, &c.
Oliver John, miller, Foxley mill
Pittam Jerh. registrar of births and deaths, Abthorpe district
Shephard Mr Joseph
Smith Thomas, shoemaker
Warren Mrs Sarah, beer retailer
Watts Jph. wheelwt. & carpnt.
Welch Thomas, tailor
Whitlock Rd. baker and grocer
Williams Mrs Sarah, vict. Boat

Wooding James, blacksmith
Wrighton Mr James

Farmers and Graziers.

Aris John Jordan
Bird William, Foxley
Chambers Rt. Wait (& maltster)
Dix George
Dix Wm. Shepard, Sewell Lodge
Edwards William (yeoman)
Manning William, Foxley
Tite Wm. Samuel (and maltster and cattle dealer)
Welch Francis (and miller)
Williams Mark and Edward

WOODEND.

Ayris Mrs Mary Ann
Bliss William, tailor
Dawes Thomas, gardener
Loydell John, blacksmith
Townsend Mark, carpenter and
beerhouse

Wilkinson Mrs Eliza, shopkpr.
Farmers and Graziers.
Ayris John and Lawrence
Branson John (and brick manufacturer), Cathanger

Edwards John (yeoman)
Marriott William
Osborne George (and butcher)
Reeve John (and coal dealer)
Spencer Mrs Elizabeth
Taylor James, South Fields

Carrier.—Wm. Marriott, to Northampton on Wed. and Sat., and to Banbury on Thurs.

BRADDEN PARISH

Is bounded on the east and north by Greens-Norton and Towcester, on the west by Blakesley, and on the south by Slapton and Abthorpe. It contains 1011 acres; and its population in 1801 was 156; in 1831, 165; in 1841, 171; in 1851, 172; in 1861, 140; and in 1871, 140 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1701, and the gross estimated rental, £1851. The soil is principally a stiff clay, and about two thirds of the lordship is in permanent pasture. The principal landowner is the Rev. Cornelius Ives (lord of the manor and rector); and Mr Joseph H. Goodman and Mr Alexander Greaves have possessions here. The parish is intersected by the Northampton and Banbury Junction and the East and West Junction Railways.

Manor.—At the time of the general survey David held 1 hide and 4 parts of half a hide in Bradne of the king. In the Confessor's time it was the freehold of Biscop, and was valued at 5s., but it was now rated at 10s. William, the ancestor of the baronial family of Engayne, held a similar quantity of Robert de Buci, which was then advanced in value from 40s. to 60s. In the reign of Henry II., Payen held 1 hide and 4 small virgates here, Vitatis Engaine the same quantity, and Ralph de Mandeville 1 hide and two small virgates. In the 9th year of the reign of Edward II. (1316), Geoffrey de Braden was certified to be the lord of Braden. In the 20th of Edward III. (1347), Richard Blundell and John Draper accounted for a fourth part of a knight's fee here, as of the fee of Engaine; and Thomas de Baa, with three others, answered for two parts of a fee in Sewell Braden, and Everdon, of the fees of Waundevill. In the 37th of this reign (1364), Margery, relict of William Lord Ros of Hemlake, died seized of the fee which Geoffrey de Braden held here, and under the successor of her son Thomas de Ros, this manor was held in the reign of Henry V. by Sir Thomas Green, of Norton Davy, now called Greens-Norton, who died possessed of it in the 5th of this reign, and left it to Thomas, his son. In Edward IV.'s time, John Hulcate, Esq. died seized of it; and in the 2d of Henry VII. (1487) a fine was levied of this manor between Thomas Fowler, Esq., John Mattheve, and Richard Meyrett, and Robert Prudde, the heir of John Holcote; and in the 11th of the same reign another fine was levied between John Mattheve, and Thomas Marquis of Dorset and Cicely his wife. Upon the attainder of Sir Richard Empson in the reign of Henry VIII., he was found to be seized of this lordship, by which means it was forfeited with the rest of his estates to the crown, and granted to William Compton in 1512. Sir Nicholas, afterwards Lord Vaux of Harrowden, levied a fine of it in the same year, and left it to Thomas Lord Vaux, his son. It afterwards reverted to the Mattheve family, with which it continued till 1677, when Gaius Mattheve, Esq., sold it with the advowson to the Rev. William Ives, rector of Greens-Norton, and afterwards of this parish. This gentleman died in 1696-97, was succeeded in his estate by his nephew and heir, William Ives, and it is now in the possession of the Rev. Cornelius Ives. Bradden is a parcel of the Honor of Grafton, and a member of the court annually held at Morton Pinkeney. The Knight's Hospitallers of St John of Jerusalem had possessions here, and are traditionally supposed to have erected the old manor-house, the site of which is occupied by the present family mansion of the Ives.

The Village of Bradden is pleasantly situated in a valley about 3 miles west of Towcester, and 12 south-by-west of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St Michael, stands at the north end of the village, and consists of a nave, with clerestory, chancel, north and south aisles, south porch, and a low embattled tower containing five bells. The church underwent a thorough restoration in 1858, all, with the exception of the tower and the arches of the aisles, being rebuilt at a cost of over £1000, solely at the expense of the rector and his family. The old oak pews were converted into open seats. The living is a rectory, in the Deanery of Brackley, valued in the king's books at £14, 6s. 8d., but now valued at £241 per annum. The Rev. Cornelius Ives, M.A., author of a "Compendious History of the Church of God," 1820, and a "Memoir of Bishop Van Mildert," prefixed to his works, 1838, and of a volume of "Sermons originally composed for a country congregation," is the present patron and incumbent. The rectory consists of 191a, 2r. 31p., allotted by the commissioners in lieu of glebe land, and all tithes whatsoever. There is a piscina in the south aisle. The school was erected in 1831 by the rector, who also rebuilt the Rectory House, about the year 1860, at a cost of from £1500 to £2000.

Bradden House, the seat of the Rev. C. Ives, stands a little west of the church, and is a handsome structure.

Charities.—The town land consists of a messuage called Bradden House, and 27a. 2r. 38p. in Slapton, and about 2a. in Wappenham, which lets for about £40 a year. The rent is applied by the feoffees to the repairs of the church, and the surplus, if any, to the schoolmaster and the poor. There are a few cottages, and 3a. 1r. 23p. yielding about £5 a year, which sum was originally intended to supply the church with bell-ropes, but is now included in the churchwardens' accounts. The poor's land consists of 1a. 3r. 24p.; Leeson's charity yields 10s. yearly to the poor of this parish; and 5s. a year is paid out of the poor-rates as interest for the sum of £5, left to the poor of this parish in 1739 by the Rev. Robert Porter—now lost, not being secured.

Longevity.—Henry Greenwood, of this parish, died in February 1727-28, at the advanced age of 103 years.

Post-Office.—Wall-Box. Letters arrive from Towcester at about 7.30 A.M., and are despatched at 5.45 P.M.

Barrett Jesse, parish clerk
Barrett Mrs Han. teacher of infant school
Greaves Mr Alexander
Groom George, millwright
Heel Mat. tobacco dealer

Ives Rev. Cornelius, M.A. rector, Bradden House
Stewart Rev. Francis, M.A. curate
Swan George, carpenter
Swan Jas. jun. shoemaker

Farmers and Graziers.

Goodman Joseph H. (yeoman)
Kenning William
Newitt William

Carrier.—To Towcester, Matthew Heel, on Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday.

CANONS ASHBY PARISH.

Canons Ashby, or Ashby Canons, so called from the Priory of Black Canons seated here, and to distinguish it from other Ashbys, is bounded on the east by Maidford, on the north by Preston Capes, on the west by Eydon, and on the south by Morton Pinkeney. It contains 1733 statute acres. The population of Ashby (exclusive of Adstone) in 1801 was 40; in 1831, 31; in 1841, 56; in 1851, 40; in 1861, 68; and in 1871, 68 souls. Its rateable value is £2639, 9s., and the gross estimated rental, £3033. The soil is principally a red loam, with a mixture of clay; the greater part of the lordship is in permanent pasture; and the whole is the property of Sir Henry E. L. Dryden, Bart., J.P. (lord of the manor), except one farm of about 270 acres, which belongs to Colonel Parker, M.P. ADSTONE, which was formerly a hamlet of Canons Ashby, but is now an independent parish, will be found under a distinct head.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Hugh was under-tenant to Walter Flandrensis, the lord of Wahull, who held two and a half hides of land of the king in Ashby. There were twelve acres of meadow, and the whole had been valued in Edward the Confessor's reign at 40s., but was then advanced to £4. In the reign of Henry II., Stephen de la Leye, held two hides and eight small virgates here of the fee of Hugh de Leye. The descendants of this Stephen held the lordship down to the latter end of the reign of Henry III., when one of the family, in conjunction with the prior of Ashby, was certified to hold it of Saer de Wahull, by the service of one knight's fee. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), John de Mareschal and the prior of Ashby were seized of one knight's fee in Ashby, which they held of Reginald de Grey, as of the fee of John de Wahull; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1316), John de Mareschal was certified to be lord of the manor. In the twentieth of Edward

III. (1347), Roger de Grey accounted for the fourth part of a knight's fee here as held of the fee of Leye, and his successor, Reginald, died seized of this manor in the twelfth of Richard II. (1389). To the family of De Grey succeeded the prior of the convent, with whom it continued till the dissolution of the monasteries in the reign of Henry VIII., when it was granted to Sir Francis Bryan, and passed from him to Sir John Cope, who died seized of all the possessions here belonging to the monks, in the fifth of Queen Mary (1558). Elizabeth, the daughter of Sir John Cope, carried this manor in marriage to John Dryden, Esq., who was the eldest son of David Dryden, Esq., by Isabel, the daughter of William Nicholson, of Staffe Hill, in the county of Cumberland. John Dryden, Esq., died in 1584, and was succeeded by Erasmus, his eldest son. This gentleman levied a fine of this manor upon his father's decease; and in the fortieth of Elizabeth (1498), and seventeenth James I. (1620), was sheriff of Northamptonshire. In the latter year he was advanced to the dignity of a baronet. Sir John Dryden, his son and successor, was sheriff of this county in 1634, and chosen knight of the shire in 1640. Sir Robert Dryden, the eldest son of Sir John, was the next possessor of this manor, and dying unmarried in 1703, he left his estate here to his second cousin, Edward Dryden, son of Erasmus Dryden, of Westminster, a younger brother of the poet, but the title passed to Sir John Dryden, fourth baronet, son of William Dryden, of Farndon, second son of the first baronet, on whose decease in 1710 the title descended to Sir Erasmus Henry Dryden, fifth baronet, the youngest son of the poet. Sir Erasmus Dryden, sixth baronet, was uncle to the fifth baronet, and his grandson, Sir John Dryden, became the seventh baronet in 1718. In him the estates accompanied the title, from which, in the short space of ten years, three baronets and heirs at law were excluded. On the decease of Lady Dryden, relict of Sir John Dryden, the estates descended to Elizabeth, daughter of Bevill Dryden, Esq., youngest brother of Sir John, and wife of John Turner, Esq. This gentleman, in pursuance of Sir John Dryden's will, took the name and arms of Dryden by royal licence; was knighted in 1793, and elevated to a baronetcy in 1795. He died in 1797, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir John Turner Dryden, second baronet of the new creation, on whose decease, in 1818, the title devolved on his next brother, the Rev. Sir Henry Dryden, who died in 1837. Sir Henry Edward Leigh Dryden, the fourth baronet of the new creation, is the son of the third baronet, by the third daughter of the Rev. Julius Hutchinson, of Woodhall Park, Herts. He was born in 1818, succeeded in 1837, married in 1865 Frances, daughter of the late R. Tredcroft, was sheriff of Northamptonshire in 1844, and appointed a deputy-lieutenant of the county in 1846. His heir-presumptive is his brother, Alfred Erasmus, barrister-at-law, born in 1821, married in 1849 Frances Isabella, daughter of the Rev. J. Curwin. John Dryden, the celebrated poet, as has been seen above, was father of the fifth baronet of the more ancient line. (See Aldwinkle Parish, where he was born.)

The Priory for Black Canons of the order of St Augustine, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, was founded here as early as the reign of King John. The supposed founder, or at least the earliest known benefactor, was Stephen de Leye, who was lord of the manor in the time of Henry II., and who gave to the monks the church of Ashby, and that of Puddington in Bedfordshire, with four virgates of land in Ashby, a park, mill, and twenty-six acres of meadow, with mansions and crofts. He afterwards added, "for the benefit of his own and his father's soul," half a hide in Adstone, exempt from all incumbrances. "This last gift," says Bridges, "he made in the presence of the whole parish, by the solemn offering of a sword upon the altar, and constituted the parishioners witnesses of his benefaction." His son Robert added eleven virgates of land in Ashby to his father's gifts; and Herbert Golafre gave them half a hide in Adstone. Various other benefactors gave them possessions in Blakesley, Byfield, Culworth, Dodford, Ecton, Eydon, Grimsbury, Helmdon, Maidford, Litchborough, Morton Pinkeney, Middleton, Preston Capes, Northampton, Sulgrave, Wappenham, Woodford, Plumpton, Pytcheley, Sewell, Weedon, and Weston.

Philip de St Helen gave them an annual-rent of twenty shillings for the repairs of their chamber, and at its ratification, the prior, in full chapter, at the request of the donor, pronounced the sentence of excommunication by bell, book, and candle, against any who in time to come should presume to alienate or diminish from his grant. At the dissolution, the revenues of the monastery were valued at £127, 19s., and the site, as has been observed, with all their property, was granted to Sir Francis Bryan. "The site of the priory," says Baker, "was converted into a residence by Sir John Cope, but was not adopted by his successors, and before the close of the 17th century it was divided into two farmhouses, occupied by the tenants, and so continued after the purchase by the Drydens till it was taken down in 1710. The Canon's Walk was a terrace on three sides connecting with the priory garden, which, with the orchard and the stews or fish-ponds, are still remaining." There are no remains of the monastery except the chapel, now the parish church.

The lead pipe which was used to convey the water from the old well to the monastery still exists about four feet below the surface; it crossed the church under the pavement. Shafts, mouldings, encaustic tiles, roofing slates, coffin lids, fragments of glass, &c., belonging to the church and monastery, have been dug up at various times.

The Village of Ashby consists of three farmhouses and two or three lodges. "But though now reduced to so small a compass," writes Bridges, "there is a tradition that the village was formerly very considerable; and in proof, it is urged that the number of graves, of which the remains are still to be seen in the churchyard, could not possibly arise from the like small number of inhabitants as at present live in it. But whether any past conclusion can be drawn from this circumstance may fairly be questioned, as these graves were in all probability made for the monks and their benefactors, to whom this churchyard was a burying-place." It is situated about 8 miles W. by N. of Towcester, 12 S. from Daventry, and 13½ S.W. of Northampton.

The East and West Junction Railway, from Towcester to Stratford-on-Avon, runs through part of this parish. The nearest railway station is Morton Pinkeney, about half a mile from Ashby, which is now in course of erection.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is mainly a western portion of the monastery. No part of the original church remains. The present church consists of a nave (part of which is used as a chancel) 55 feet by 32 feet, a north aisle 44 feet by 15 feet, and a tower attached to the north side of the aisle 27 feet square and 93 feet high, including the pinnacles. The west front is 69 feet wide. The western doorway and the arcade on each side of it are the earliest parts, and were built about 1250. The tower was built about 1350; and the original west window (probably a triplet) was removed and the present one inserted about the year 1450. A porch of peculiar construction existed in the angle of the tower and aisle. Probably Sir John Cope, about 1540, took down a large portion of the church, and built the present east end of the nave and that of the aisle. The former east end of the church is shown by a break in the ground in the churchyard, 162 feet from the present east end, so that the total length was about 217 feet. The south wall was built on the original foundation about the year 1710, when a large portion of the monastic buildings was taken down, and the materials used in the house, &c. The present roofs of the nave and the aisle were then made, with a coved ceiling under the nave roof. The ceiling was taken down in 1843. Of the four pinnacles on the tower, only the one surmounting the staircase is original. The church contains some handsome monuments to the Dryden family, and is well seated with fine oaken pews. The benefice is now a donative, and not under episcopal jurisdiction, the officiating clergymen being appointed by the lord of the manor, and divine service performed at his expense. The Rev. Augustus Neblett is the present chaplain.

Canons Ashby House, the seat of Sir H. E. L. Dryden, Bart., is an irregular building of different periods, situated in a small deer park a little N.W. of the church. In the west front is a square tower, and the dining-room, which is thirty feet long by twenty feet wide, is said to be entirely floored and wainscoted with the timber of one single oak which grew in this lordship. The old hall doors and windows are shown to have been built by John Dryden some time between 1551 and 1584. The drawing-room is traditionally supposed to have been fitted up for the reception of Anne of Denmark, queen of King James I. There is armour in the hall belonging to the period of the Civil Wars, and many of the rooms contain tapestry, principally of the seventeenth century. There is also a curious volume of theology, supposed to have belonged to the monastery, and several letters from and to Sir John Dryden, 1640-58, are to be seen, which tend to show the state of the country at that time. In the hall is a bust of the poet, the model for that in Westminster Abbey. Aubrey, in his "Lives of Eminent Men," states that Spenser the poet had a room here called "Mr Spenser's Chamber," and that Spenser's wife was a kinswoman of Frances, wife of Erasmus Dryden, and daughter of William Wilkes, of Hodnell. Richardson, the novelist, wrote a great part of "Sir Charles Grandison" here. "Near the great close," writes Bridges, "within the park, it is supposed, was anciently a fortification; cannon-balls have frequently been dug up, and the place still retains the name of Castle Hill. The park was formerly adorned with a number of venerable oaks, but the greatest ornament at present is four large fish-ponds at the head of each other, containing some of them eight acres of ground." Mr Baker relates the particulars of a skirmish which took place here on the 18th of April 1644, between a party of thirty of the Parliamentary infantry, which were sent by the Governor of Northampton to collect money in the neighbourhood of Banbury, and took up their quarters at Sir John Dryden's house, and a party of about two hundred foot and twenty horse from Banbury Castle; or, according to another account, a party of the Earl of Northampton's horse, with eighty foot from Banbury. The Parliamentarians having intelligence of their approach, retreated into the church for safety, where the enemy pursued them, and having effected an entrance, the besieged took refuge in the tower, the possession of which they maintained for two hours, and at length surrendered on terms, when the enemy was about to set fire to it. They were all conveyed prisoners to Banbury, except one man, who was left behind wounded, but were soon released by a strong party from Northampton. One of the royalists was killed by a stone from the steeple.

Letters are received through the Daventry office.

Dryden Sir Henry E. L. Bart.
J.P. Canons Ashby House
Walker Thomas, parish clerk

Farmers and Graziers.

Brown William

Gale Samuel, Ashby Lodge
Irons Thos. Crockwell House

GREENS-NORTON PARISH.

Norton, formerly called Norton Davy, or David, and now Greens-Norton, from the family of Green, its former lords, comprehends the hamlets of Duncote, Caswell, Field Burcote and a part of Potcote. It is bounded on the north by Blakesley and Cold-Higham; on the west by Bradden; on the south by Towcester, from which it is divided by a small brook; and on the east by the Roman Watling Street way, or Chester road. It contains 2354 acres; and its population in 1801 was 615; in 1831, 771; in 1841, 820; in 1851, 857; in 1861, 903; and in 1871, 892 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £4714, and the gross estimated rental, £5248. The soil varies very much, but the land is generally fertile; the lordship is well supplied with good springs (one of which is mineral), limestone, and sand; and the principal proprietors are the Duke of Grafton (the lord of the manor), John Malsbury Kirby Elliott, Esq.; Messrs S. and W. Sheppard, of Duncote; Samuel, William, and Miss Mary Sheppard, of Field Burcote, William Gallard, Thomas Howes, and Thomas Ridgway, Esq.

Manor.—Edward the Confessor held the manor of Norton before the Conquest, and at the general survey the Conqueror himself held it, together with its members, Blakesley and Adstone, which then contained 7 hides and 1 virgate of land. There were two mills of the yearly rent of 15s. each, with a wood four miles in length and three in breadth, and the whole had been rated at £12, but was then advanced to £20. Mr Baker is of opinion that this wood was synonymous with the origin of Whittlebury Forest. In the reign of Henry II., Norton contained the same quantity of land; and it continued a royal demesne till the first year of the reign of Richard I. (1189), when it was granted, with the hundred of Norton, to Baldwin de Betun, Earl of the Isle of Wight, and afterwards of Albemarle, to be held by the service of three knight's fees, and a fee-farm rent of £4 yearly. From this nobleman it passed, with the hundred of Norton, in marriage with his daughter Alice, to William Earl of Pembroke, from whom it descended to his five sons successively, who died without issue, and then passed to John le Mareschal, nephew of the first earl. William, his grandson, having joined the rebellious barons who were in arms against their sovereign, this manor was confiscated to the crown, who granted it to Henry, son of Richard, King of Almaine, but it soon after reverted to the former family; for in the following year, at the intercession of William de Say, the sons of William Mareschal, John and William, obtained the royal pardon for their father's treason, and were permitted to succeed to his inheritance. In the reign of Edward I. the manor was held under John le Mareschal by David, the son of Griffin, from whom it received the appellation of Norton David. In the 29th of Edward III. (1355), Sir Henry Green and Thomas, his son, gave 20s. for licence to acquire the manor of Norton Davy, and soon after a fine was levied of the manor, advowson, and hundred, in fee-tail to himself and his heirs, in the male line of which it continued for several generations. By inquisition taken upon the death of Thomas, son of Sir Henry Green, in the 15th of Richard II. (1392), it was found that the manor and advowson of the church were held of the king in capite by knight's service, and the hundred of Norton by the payment of £3, 4s. yearly into the king's exchequer. In the 33d of Henry VIII. (1542), the hundred and manor of Norton were annexed, by Act of Parliament, to the Honor of Grafton, and were granted, in the 5th of Edward VI. (1552), to William Parr, Marquis of Northampton, and his heirs. This nobleman was the only son of Sir Thomas Parr and Matilda Green. "His youth," writes Mr Baker, "was spent in personal attendance on Henry VIII., and he bore a conspicuous part in the tournaments which graced the splendid interview between that monarch and Francis, King of France. In 1538 he was created Baron Parr, and in 1545, through the influence of his sister, Queen Catherine Parr, the earldom of Essex, which had been enjoyed by his wife's father, was conferred on him, though his issue by her had been illegitimated by Act of Parliament, and she was then living with one Hunt, alias Huntley, by whom she had several children. In the 1st of Edward VI. he was advanced to the dignity of Marquis of Northampton, but, on the demise of the king, becoming implicated with Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, in the attempt to place Lady Jane Grey on the throne, he was, on the accession of Queen Mary, attainted of high treason, and sentenced to be beheaded; his life, however, was not only spared, but before the close of the year he was restored in blood, though not to his honours, and was styled simply Sir William Parr, till Queen Elizabeth, in the first of her reign, recreated him Marquis of Northampton. He died without issue, in 1570, and was buried in the Collegiate Church at Warwick. His delight was music and poetry, and his exercise war; though his skill in the field answered not his industry, nor his success his skill. King Henry called him his 'integrity,' and King Edward his 'honest uncle.'" At his death all his estates reverted to the crown, and the hundred and lordship of Norton were afterwards settled upon Queen Catherine, consort to Charles II., upon whose death, in 1705, they devolved on the Duke of Grafton, from whom they lineally descended to William Henry Fitzroy, the 6th Duke of Grafton, and the present possessor, who succeeded his father in 1863. The Manor-House stood north-west of the church, but no remains are left.

The Village of Greens-Norton, which is "long, straggling, wide and irregular, with a brook crossing it," is situated about 2 miles W.N.W. of Towcester.

The Church, dedicated to St Bartholomew, is mostly in the Early English style; it is situated on a slight eminence at the east end of the village, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch, chancel, and tower containing five bells, and surmounted by a lofty spire which was rebuilt in 1807. The aisles extend one arch on the chancel sides, and originally formed side chapels, in each of which may still be seen the piscina, but that in the chancel is plastered over. The interior was well paved and pewed in 1826; a neat barrel-organ, which cost 100 guineas, was presented by John Elliott, Esq., and stands in the gallery at the west end. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £38, and now valued at £600, per annum. The patronage is vested in the crown, and the Rev. Thomas Coldwell, M.A., is the present incumbent. The tithes of Norton and Duncote were commuted in 1779, for 273a. 4p. of land in Norton, and the rector receives a modus of £15, 10s. yearly, and for the Messrs Sheppard, of Field Burcote and Duncote, for the Duke of Grafton's old inclosures in Norton, Caswell, Field Burcote, and Potcote. There are two neat mural monuments of marble on the north side of the chancel to the Hicklinge family, bearing dates respectively, 1556-58 and 1803-6. The monument of marble to Sir Thomas Greene and his wife was removed in 1826 from the centre of the chancel to a recess in the north wall of the north chancel aisle or chapel, which no doubt has been originally used as the sedilia to that chapel.

A Chantry was founded here in 1496 by Matilda Green, which, at the dissolution, had lands in this county and that of Leicester of the yearly value of £10, 17s. 9d. The house for the priest stood opposite the south wall of the churchyard, and was modernised in 1826, and is now called Chantry House, and at present occupied by Mr George Stops.

The Free Methodists have a chapel in the village, which was erected in 1802; and the Wesleyan Chapel was built in 1866, at a cost of about £355; and here also is a Primitive Methodist Chapel, built in 1837.

The National Free School, supported by subscription (the principal subscribers being the Duke of Grafton and the rector), and one half of the rent of 26 acres of land, being £22, 13s. per annum each for this and Whittlebury parish, situated in Slapton, which was purchased by the executors of Aaron Wood, who by will, in 1719, directed the residue of his personal estate and effects to be disposed of to such charitable uses as his executors should think fit. The day and Sunday-schools are well conducted and attended, and the children are instructed gratis in reading, writing, and arithmetic.

William Pinckard, formerly of Ascote in Pattishall, and late of Towcester, by his will, dated 15th March 1847, bequeathed to the minister and churchwardens of this parish £500, vested in the 3½ per cent. annuities, the interest thereof to be applied (after the death of Elizabeth and Charlotte Gibbons, his daughters) towards the support of the parochial schools of Greens-Norton, in connection with the Established Church.

The other Charities of the parish are £1, 10s. yearly for the poor, from Mrs Jane Leeson's charity; £3 a year, which was left by the Rev. William Ives, of Bradden, in 1693, to be distributed among twelve poor families who constantly attended the parish church; and the church land, consisting of 6a. 1r. 27p., which lets for about £21 per annum, and is applied to the repairs of the church. A boy belonging to this parish is sent, on the nomination of the minister, to be educated, under the Saunders Charity, in Towcester school. In 1865, the late John Elliott, Esq., of this parish, left the sum of £500 for the purchase of £538, 7s. 2d., which is vested in the consolidated 3 per cent. annuities, towards the support of the infant school of the parish.

Biography.—Catherine Parr, the last wife of King Henry VIII., was the youngest daughter of Sir Thomas Parr, by the coheirress of Green, and is traditionally reported to have been born at Greens-Norton, while some affirm that she was a native of Westmoreland. Her first husband was Edward Borough, son of Lord Borough. She afterwards married John Neville, Lord Latimer; and, in 1543, within a twelvemonth of his decease, was selected by the capricious king for his sixth queen. "Henry," writes Mr Baker, "having carried on the work of reformation so far as suited his selfish and unprincipled views, seemed to recede rather than to advance; and Catherine, devotedly attached to the cause, had a narrow escape of falling a sacrifice to her zeal. The king being confined by illness, she attended him with the most assiduous care, and he often turning the conversation to his favourite topic—religion, she ventured to express her sentiments with more freedom than his impatience of opposition could brook. He complained of her dictation to Bishop Gardiner, who, with Wriothesley, the chancellor, eager to remove so powerful an enemy to the Romish Church, wilfully insinuated the danger of cherishing such a viper in his bosom, and worked so effectually on his wounded vanity and impetuous temper, as to procure his sanction to a warrant for committing her to the Tower on a charge of heresy and treason. A copy of this fatal document, with the royal signature, by some fortunate accident reached the queen, and all her address and courage were summoned to avert the impending blow. She repaired immediately to the king, who, entering on the ensnaring subject of controversy, she modestly declined the conversation, remarking that women, by their original creation, were subject to men, who being made after the image of God, as women were made after their image, ought to instruct their wives, and she was more especially bound to be taught by his majesty, as he was a prince of such excellent learning and wisdom. 'Not so, by St Mary,' said the king; 'you are become a doctor, Kate, able to instruct us, and not to be instructed by us.' To which she replied, that he had misinterpreted her motives in arguing with him, that she was actuated solely by a desire to alleviate the anguish of his pain, and she well knew that her opinions could only afford him a momentary amusement, but her conversation was apt to languish without some opposition, and by this innocent artifice she had frequently reaped instruction from his profound knowledge. 'And is it even so, sweetheart?' said Henry, with great tenderness, 'then we are perfect friends again.' The next morning, when the king and queen were walking in the garden, the bishop, unaware of the reconciliation, appeared at the head of forty pursuivants to arrest her. The king stepped aside to him, and having dismissed him with the most opprobrious epithets, the queen, ignorant of the purpose for which he came, began to intercede for him, but she received no other answer from Henry than that she little knew how ill he deserved her good offices. Henceforward she uninterruptedly retained her influence over the king, who, in his will, acknowledges her great love, obedience, chasteness of life, and wisdom. Henry died on the 28th of January 1546-47, and long before the expiration of the year, Catherine was the wife of Thomas Lord Seymour, Lord Admiral of England, and brother of the Protector Somerset. She died in September the ensuing year, according to some authorities, in childbed, but not without suspicion of poison, and was buried in the chapel of Sudley Castle, in Gloucestershire."

DUNCOTE is a hamlet in this parish, a little north-east of Norton. It contains about eighteen houses, and here is a small place of worship belonging to a religious sect called Johnsonians erected in 1841.

FIELD-BURCOTE is another hamlet north of Norton, containing only two farm-houses.

CASWELL is situated north-west of Norton, and is an ancient freehold, the property of the Duke of Grafton. The house was formerly moated round. These three hamlets are all manorial as well as parochial members of Norton.

POTCOTE is a hamlet containing two houses, one of which stands in Cold-Higham parish, and the other partly in Higham and partly in this parish. The principal part of the hamlet lies in Cold-Higham, but about 130 acres belonging to the Duke of Grafton forms the northern extremity of this parish.

Post-Office.—William Bodaly, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive here from Towcester at 6.30 A.M., and are despatched at 6.20 P.M.

Bodaly Wm. baker & post-office
Burt Isaac, coal dlr. & beer ret.
Chambers Josh. police constable
Brayne Mr Jesse
Coldwell Rev. Thos. M.A. rector and chaplain to the Duke of Grafton, Rectory
Darby Mr William
Dix John, shoemaker
Elliott Jno. trav. draper and tea
dealer
Foster Mrs Esther, shopkeeper
Foster Thos. baker and shoemr.
Garlick Henry, lime-burner
Garlick Henry, shopkeeper
Garlick Thomas, shoemaker
Hitchcock Tho. shopkr. Duncote
Howes Jacob, asst. overseer and yeoman, Bengal House
Howes Wm. baker and beer ret.
Kendall Henry, shoemaker
Lay John, blacksmith
Lee William, carpenter
Lyman John, wheelwright

Matthews David, blacksmith and vict. Red Lion
Mobbs Wm. Adcock, butcher,
Duncote
Nicholl Harry, Esq. The Hall
Payne Jenk. baker, & coal dlr.
Pinckard The Misses Catherine and Louisa, Manor-House
Pinckard Jn. Tos. Esq. Manor-H.
Ratledge Thomas, tailor
Ratledge William, stonemason
Ratledge Wm. jun. stonemason
Savage Josh. tailor and shopkr.
Savage Mr Richard
Sheppard Miss My. Field Burcote
Sheppard Mrs Mary, Duncote
Sheppard Mr Sam. Field Burcote
Smart John. coal dealer, &c.
Smart Jos. butcher, tea dealer,
and vict. Butchers' Arms
Stevens John, thrasg.-machine
propr. shopkr. and beer retlr.
Stops John Fawcett, corn miller,
Kingthorn Mills

Thurlby George, jun. tailor
Wakelin Wm. foxkeeper to the Duke of Grafton
Williams Wm. carptr. & shopk.

Farmers and Graziers.

(Marked thus * are yeomen.)

* Ayres Samuel, Potcote
* Burman Jacob, Bengal
Foxley William, brick manfr.
Smithland House
* Gallard William (& corn miller)
Greens-Norton Mill
* Howes Thomas
Johnson Sam. Jph. (& maltster)
* Lee Samuel (cooper & btchr.)
* Norton Wm. Bliss, Field Burcote
* Sheppard Wm. Field Burcote
* Sheppard William, Duncote
* Stops George, Chantry House
Whitton Corbett, Greens-Norton
Park
Whitton —, Caswell

Carriers.—To Northampton, Jenkinson Payne, on Wed. and Sat.; and John Smart, on Sat.

Luffield Priory.—This religious establishment stood in a secluded spot within the forest of Whittlewood or Whittlebury, at the junction of the counties of Buckingham and Northampton. It was founded in the reign of Henry I., by Robert Bossu, Earl of Leicester, for monks of the Benedictine order, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; the conventual buildings and offices were principally in the parish of Lillingston Dayrell, in Buckinghamshire, and the church stood in Northamptonshire, within the precincts of Silverstone. About 60 acres of the land belonging to the priory is situated in this county, and the remainder, or greater part of the district, which is now extra-parochial, and contains but one house, is situated in Buckinghamshire. In consequence of the extreme poverty of this monastery, it was suppressed, and its revenues annexed to King Henry VII.'s chapel, in Westminster Abbey, and it continued a cell to that splendid establishment till the general dissolution of the monasteries in the next reign.

MAIDFORD PARISH.

Maidford, called in Domesday Book Merdeford, and in later records Maydford, is bounded by Lichborough on the east, by Farthingstone on the north, on the west by Preston Capes, and by Blakesley on the south. It contains 1054a. 1r. 25p.; and its population in 1801 was 228; in 1831, 373; in 1841, 339; in 1851, 312; in 1861, 344; and in 1871, 363 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1866, and the gross estimated rental, £2088. The soil varies from a light to a strong loam, and the lordship is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture. It is well supplied with limestone and gravel, and on the south-west side of the parish is a mineral spring, called Moor's Spring. The principal proprietors are Mrs Grant, of Lichborough (lady of the manor); Mrs Perridge, Mr J. Messenger, the Goff family of Weedon, Mrs Weight, and her sister. Maidford Wood, belonging to Mrs Grant, contains about 36 acres, and is only separated by a field from Sewell Wood, which covers an area of 30 acres.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, one Hugh held two and one-fifth hides of land here, which were held of the crown by Hugh de Grentemaisnil, and which, with a wood four furlongs in length and one in breadth, had been valued, in the Confessor's time, when it was the freehold of Willa, at 20s., but now advanced to 50s. In the reign of Henry II., Payen held 2 hides and 2 small virgates in Maidford; and in the reign of Henry III. Henry de Alento held one knight's fee here of Roger de Quincy, Earl of Winchester, of the fee of Leicester. This Henry de Alento gave an annual-rent of 15s. 4d., arising from lands in Maidford, to the convent of Canons Ashby, for the maintenance of a canon there, and the benefaction was confirmed by Roger de Quincy, his superior lord. In the 48th of Henry III. (1264), Roger de Quincy died without male issue, and in the division of his estate between his daughters, this lordship was assigned to Elena the youngest, the wife of Alan, Lord Zouche, of Ashby, from whom it came to Alan, Lord Zouche, his grandson. The fee which had been held by Henry de Alento was in the possession of Thomas Kynne, in the 54th of this reign (1270), and his son Robert was certified to hold the lordship of Maidford of the heirs of the Earl of Winchester, in the 24th of Edward I. (1296). In the 9th of Edward II. (1316), Robert Kynne was lord of the manor, and in the 20th of Edward III. (1347), this Robert Kynne and Simon Potche accounted for the third part of a knight's fee in Maidford. Alan la Zouche died in the 7th of Edward II. (1314), and in the partition of his estates, Maidford was allotted to Maud, the wife of Robert de Holland, and was carried in marriage by his daughter Maud to John, Lord Lovell, with whose descendants it continued till the beginning of the reign of Henry VII., when, upon Francis Lord Lovell being attainted of high treason, Maidford was granted to George Lord Strange, and from him it descended to Thomas, his eldest son. This Thomas succeeded his grandfather in the title of Earl of Derby, in the 19th of the same reign (1504), and died in the 13th of Henry VIII. (1522), leaving Edward Earl of Derby, a minor 15 years of age, his successor. But the immediate possession of this manor, after the attainder of the family of Lovell, was in the hands of William Trist, son of John Trist, of this parish. His grandson, William Trist, Esq., died, in the 20th of Henry VIII. (1529), seized of the manor and advowson of Maidford, held of the Earl of Derby, as of the Honor of Winchester, by the service of 2d. yearly. The manor descended in succession in this family to Andrew Twist, M.D., who died without issue in 1749, leaving one moiety to his nephew, Samuel Barker, Esq., of Lyndon, in Rutlandshire, for life, with remainder to all his children; and the other moiety to his niece, Elizabeth Dawes, for life, with remainder to all her children. Samuel Barker, Esq., sold his entire estate here in 1811, in lots, and the manor was purchased by William Grant, Esq., of Litchborough, and is now possessed by his widow. The priories of Canons Ashby and Luffield, and the Hospital of St John of Jerusalem, had each possessions in this parish.

The Manor-House of the Trists stood west of the church, and is said to have occupied a double quadrangle; part of it has been converted into a farmhouse, and some of the offices are still remaining.

The Village of Maidford stands on an eminence, about 6½ miles N.W. by W. of Towcester, 2 from Blakesley, 8 from Daventry, 12 from Northampton, and 13 from Banbury.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter and St Paul, stands at the upper end of the village, and consists of a nave, south aisle, porch, and chancel, with a tower containing two bells. The structure is in the Early English style. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, valued in the king's books at £8, 8s. 9d., but now worth about £380 per annum. Mrs Grant is patron, and the Rev. William Egerton Tapp, M.A., is rector. The rectory consists of 175 acres, allotted by the commissioners in lieu of glebe lands and tithes, and the tithes of about 103 acres of old enclosure, and 30 acres of Sewell wood, for which no compensation was made by the commissioners, and which were commuted, in 1846, for £30, 16s. 9d. The Rectory House, a good building of stone, was thoroughly restored in 1873.

The Wesleyan Chapel, a plain brick building, was erected in 1858.

The National School, which stands enclosed near the church, was built to accommodate fifty children, in 1873, by subscription.

Charities.—The poor's and church allotments consist of about 10 acres, which lets for about £25 per annum ; one moiety of which is distributed to the poor at Christmas, and the other is applied with the church rates.

Longevity.—Elizabeth Wilson died here in May 1767, at the extraordinary age of 122 years.

Letters arrive through Towcester at 9.30 A.M. The pillar-box is cleared at 4.15 P.M.

Campion Henry, grocer & vict. Queen's Head	Howes John, corn miller, Maidford Mill.	Underwood Samuel William, baker, butcher, & shopkpr.
Campion John, general dealer	Johnson Samuel, tailor	Watts William, carpenter
Caves Chas. boot and shoemakr.	Perridge Miss Elizbth. Judkins
Cave Richard, boot and shoe- maker	Perridge Mrs W. Judkins	Farmers and Graziers.
Chambers Jno. vict. George Inn	Stanton Leopold, lace merch.	Kingston Benjamin (yeoman), Maidford Grange
Chambers Mary K. school- mistress	Swan John Francis, carpenter	Messinger John, Manor Farm
Earle Alfred, boot & shoemkr.	Tapp Rev. William Egerton, M.A. rector	Perrin Joseph
	Underwood John, butcher

The nearest railway station is Blakesley (East and West Junction).

MORTON PINKENEY PARISH.

Morton, called in Domesday Book Mortone, received the addition of Pinkeney from the family of that name, who were afterwards possessors of it. It is bounded on the east by Plumpton, on the north by Canons Ashby, by Eydon on the west, and on the south and south-east by Culworth, Sulgrave, and Weston by Weedon. It contains 2376 acres, of the rateable value of £4310; the gross estimated rental is £5096, 7s.; and its population in 1801 was 420; in 1831, 581; in 1841, 565; in 1851, 576; in 1861, 570; and in 1871, 511 souls. The soil is principally a light red loam, on a limestone substratum, and the principal proprietors are Baroness Sempill (lady of the manor), Mr Richard Yeomans, Mr Bennett Thomson, Mr Checkley, and Mr Malsbury. The greater part of the lordship is in pasture.

Manor.—This lordship consisted of one and a half hides of land at the time of the Conqueror's survey, and was held by one Geoffrey, of Gilo, the brother of Anculf, also called Gilo de Pecheni. This Gilo possessed 11 lordships in this county after the Norman invasion, and gave name to the barony of Pinkeney, which descended to his heirs and successors. In the reign of Henry II., these one and a half hides were in the hands of Henry de Pinkeney, the son of Gilbert, the grandson of Gilo. The lordship continued with this family till the reign of Edward III., when it was sold to Richard de Blundell; but soon reverted again to William de Pinkeney, who in the twentieth of the same reign (1347) alienated it to Sir John Molins, who answered fortwo fees here in the same year. From Sir John Molins, this lordship passed into the hands of Sir Henry Greene, who levied a fine of it in the twenty-first of this reign; and in the thirtieth of the same reign Sir Henry Greene conveyed it to Giles de St John, and Isabella, his mother, the relict of William de St John, for the term of their respective lives, with remainder to the heirs of the said Giles. It afterwards descended to Margery, the wife of William Harwedon, and daughter of Giles de St John afore-said. In the first of Henry VII. (1485), Margery Garmon, the sister of Thomas Harwedon became possessed of the manor; and her daughter and heiress by her first husband carried it in marriage to Sir Richard Knightley, of Fawsley, and it was included in their extensive estates till the thirty-first of Elizabeth (1589), when Sir Valentine Knightley alienated it to Samuel Danvers, Esq., of Culworth. The next possessors of this manor were the Cope family; and on the death of Edward Candler Sempill, Esq. (the late Lady Cope's nephew), in 1871, his widow, Baroness Sempill, became lady of the manor.

The old Manor-House, for many years used as a farmhouse, was, in 1870, converted into a splendid mansion, of a mixed style of architecture. A great portion of the old building can still be traced, though much altered and beautified. Two large wings form a semiquadrangle at the principal entrance. The left wing is surmounted by an octagonal tower, pinnacled at the top. The walls are handsomely decorated with heraldic devices of the Cope and Candler families. It is now the residence of Baroness Sempill, and stands on an eminence east of the churchyard, surrounded by spacious grounds, the entrance to which is obtained from the village, through a substantial lodge, over the gates of which are the armorial bearings of the Sempills.

Canons Ashby Priory had the church of Morton and other possessions here, and the Abbey of Bittlesden had a portion of Morton Wood. This lordship is a member of the Honor of Grafton.

The Village of Morton Pinkeney is situated on a descent, about eight miles W. by N. from Towcester, 14½ miles from Northampton, and about the same distance from Brackley and Daventry.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands on the south side of the village, and consists of a nave, side aisles, and porches, a chancel, and a low embattled tower, in which are five bells and a clock. In the church are tablets to the memory of Edward Candler Sempill, Esq., and the Hon. Sarah Sempill, who were buried in the Chapel-Royal, Holyrood, Edinburgh. There is also a tablet to the memory of John Suckley, churchwarden of this parish, who died in 1843. He secured £2, to be paid yearly to the support of the school by Oriel College. The chancel was rebuilt in 1845 by the patrons, and in 1846 the church was newly floored and pewed, and partly roofed, at a cost of £800; £500 of which was raised by a rate levied on the parishioners, and the remainder by voluntary subscription. The living is a vicarage in the Deanery of Brackley, the gross value of which is about £220, in the patronage of the Provost and Fellows of Oriel College, Oxford, and incumbency of the Rev. Francis Jones, M.A. The advowson continued in the crown till the reign of James I., but now accompanies the vicarage. The great tithes were commuted in 1847 for £163, 3s. The vicarage was twice augmented with the sum of £200; and it now consists of 78a. 3r. 26p., allotted by the commissioners in lieu of small tithes; a rate payment of £6, 9s. 2d. per annum for the small tithes of old enclosures belonging to persons who had no open land; about 20s. in Priors Marston, and 22a. 2r. 23p. in Morton, purchased out of the proceeds of Queen Anne's bounty. The Vicarage House stands north of the churchyard.

Here is a Baptist Chapel, which the Rev. Joseph Lees, of Weston-by-Weedon, attends on Sunday and Wednesday every fortnight.

The National School, erected in 1822, at a cost of above £300, ornaments the village green, and is supported principally by subscription. A class-room has since been added, and the school will now accommodate seventy children.

An Infant School was erected here in 1868, at a cost of £170, exclusive of building ground, the gift of Sir E. L. Dryden, Bart., who also contributes towards its support. It is a neat stone structure, in the Elizabethan style, and will accommodate forty children.

Charities.—£1, 10s. per annum is received from Mrs Jane Leeson's charity for the poor of this parish; 40s. a year was left to the poor also by Anthony Plant, in 1624. The poor's land, consisting of 12 acres, lets for about £18 a year, which sum is expended upon the poor, and the interest of £36, the amount of some ancient benefactions, was expended upon some small tenements, which have been sold, and the interest of the money realised is devoted to the poor of the parish.

The East and West Junction Railway, from Towcester to Stratford-on-Avon, runs through this parish; and a station has just been built a short distance from the village, and about half a mile from Canons Ashby. There is a chalybeate spring on the manor farm.

Letters are received through Banbury at 11 A.M., and despatched at 3 P.M.

Brockliss John, tailor	Chambers Joseph, butcher	Gilkes Elijah, vict. Dun Cow
Brunskin Lavina J. infant-school mistress	Franklin John, beer retailer	Gascoigne John, blacksmith
Bull Mr Thomas	Franklin Thos. vict. Crown Inn	Hemmings Sam. boot and shoe maker
	French John Robt. grocer, &c.

Higham Thos. shopr & butcher
 Jenkins Emma, Nat. schoolmrs.
 Johnson George, builder, &c.
 Johnson John, timber dealer, builder, &c.
 Johnson William, wheelwright
 Jones Rev. Francis, M.A. vicar
 Kirby Edmund, beer retailer
 Potter Mrs Elizabeth
 Sempill Baroness, Manor-House
 Slow Wm. mason and vict. Red
Lion
 Thomson Walter, drapr. & grocr.

Farmers and Graziers.

Adams Wm. and Matthew
 Bazeley John Bull
 Bazeley Thomas Bull
 Branson Richard
 Burbidge John
 Chambers Martha
 Day Joseph
 Frost Henry, Foxhill
 Golby John Goodman
 Goodridge Jessie

Humphrey Wm. (and maltster)
 Ivens Wm. (and cattle dealer)
 Law John
 Linnell Richard
 Potter Samuel Goodman
 Potter William, Lodge Farm
 Seckington George
 Turner James
 Underwood Edward
 Ward Edwin, Manor Farm
 Williams Elijah
 Williams Joseph

Carriers.—John Franklin, to Brackley, Wed. and Sat. Henry Gardener, to Daventry, Wed., Banbury, Thur., and Northampton, Sat. Jessie Goodridge, to Towcester, Tues. and Fri., and Banbury, Thur. George Kinch, to Banbury, Mon. and Thur., and Northampton, Sat.

PLUMPTON PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Adstone, in Canons Ashby parish; on the east by Woodend in Blakesley parish; on the south by Weston and Weedon Pinkeney; and on the west by Morton Pinkeney. It contains 847 acres; and its population in 1801 was 56; in 1831, 75; in 1841, 67; in 1851, 50; in 1861, 50; and in 1871, 52. The rateable value of the parish is £1068, and the gross estimated rental is £1137. The soil is principally a stiff clay, and three fourths of the lordship is in permanent pasture. The Principal and Fellows of Jesus College, Oxford, are proprietors of nearly the whole parish. Mr William Edmunds and Mr John Branson have small estates here, and there are forty acres of Queen Anne's bounty belonging to the living of Merton College, Oxford. There was formerly an extensive pottery at Oakley Bank. Plumpton Wood, containing about 160 acres in this parish, extends to Blakesley parish.

Manor.—Lavenot, one of the Saxon nobles, held one hide of land here of Walterius Flandrensis, at the time of the Domesday survey, which had been rated at forty shillings, and still continued at the same valuation. This hide had been the freehold of the said Lavenot before the Conquest. Walterius Flandrensis was the lord of Wahul, and his lands were afterwards held of his heirs and successors, as of the barony of Wahul. In the reign of Henry II., William, son of Robert de Plumpton, held one and a half hides here of the fee of Wahul, in which he was succeeded by Robert de Plumpton, his brother. This Robert, with Robert his son, gave a considerable portion of land, with a wood called Ocle, to the priory of Canons Ashby, and these benefactions were ratified by Walter de Wahul, the superior lord of the fee. In the partition of the estate of Robert de Plumpton, in the reign of Henry III., this manor was assigned to his daughter Sarah, the wife of William de St John. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), William de St John was lord of Plumpton; and in the fifth of Edward III. (1331), his son, of the same name, died seized of it. Margaret, the daughter and heiress of Giles de St John, the son of William, carried this manor in marriage to William de Harwedon, in the male line of whose descendants it continued till the first of Henry VII. (1485), when, upon the failure of issue in Sir Thomas Harwedon, it passed with the other family estates to his sister and heiress, Margaret, successively the wife of Henry Skenard, Esq., and William Garmon, Esq. Her daughter and heiress, Joan, by her first husband, carried this manor, with several others, in marriage to Sir Richard Knightley, of Fawsley, and in 1604, Sir Valentine Knightley alienated it with the advowson of the church to Sir Roger Wilbraham of Bridgmore, in Cheshire, and Newbottle. Upon the death of Sir Roger, his estate was partitioned between his three daughters, and this manor and advowson were assigned to the youngest, Catherine, first wife of Sir Henry Delves, Bart., of Doddington, Cheshire, from whom they passed to Nicholas Onley, Esq., of Catesby, who afterwards conveyed them to Francis Watson, Esq., of Willesdon,

Middlesex. Horace, or Horatio Moore, was lord of the manor of Plumpton in 1681, and it passed soon after to the family of Busby. Edward Busby, Gent., sold it in 1772 to Benjamin Hill, Esq., of Northampton, whose grandsons, the Rev. Benjamin Hill and George Hill, Esq., sold it in 1818 to John Aris, Gent., of Weedon Pinkeney, and William Edmunds, Gent., of Plumpton, from whom it passed by purchase to the Principal and Fellows of Jesus College, Oxford, the present lords of the manor. Plumpton is a member of the Honor of Grafton.

The Manor-House, now reduced to a farmhouse, is the residence of Mr William Edmunds, whose family have occupied it for the past hundred years.

The Village of Plumpton, containing two farmhouses and a few cottages, is pleasantly situated about seven miles west from Towcester.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, was rebuilt in 1822, and consists of nave, chancel, and pinnacled tower. The interior is neatly paved and pewed. The living is a discharged rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £7, 9s. 7d., and now worth about £100 a year. The patronage is vested in Jesus College, Oxford, and the Rev. Edmund Whittingstall St Maur Macphail, M.A., is the present rector. The rectory consists of 105a. 2r. 28p., awarded in 1781 in lieu of all tithes in Plumpton.

The Rectory House (formerly a farmhouse), adjoining the churchyard, was purchased by the present patrons.

Charities.—The sum of ten shillings per annum is received from Mrs Jane Leeson's charity for the poor of the parish, and four shillings per annum, the interest of £5 from some unknown donor, is distributed with it.

Letters arrive from Towcester at about 10 A.M., and are despatched at 4.15 P.M.

Macphail Rev. Edmund Whittingstall St
Maur, M.A. rector
Wyatt Alexander, parish clerk

Farmers and Graziers.
Aris John, Oakley Bank
Edmunds William

SILVERSTONE PARISH.

Silverstone, or, as it is commonly called, Silston, is bounded on the north by Towcester, on the east by Whittlebury and the forest, on the south by the forest and by Luffield and Lillingston Dayrell, in Buckinghamshire, and on the west by Abthorpe. It contains 1820 acres; and its population in 1801 was 586; in 1831, 947; in 1841, 985; in 1851, 1134; in 1861, 1166; and in 1871, 1163 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3591; and the gross estimated rental, £4035. The soil is chiefly a strong loam, and except the woodlands, which extend to near 600 acres, the lordship is principally in tillage. The principal proprietors are the Duke of Grafton, and a few others.

Manor.—The lordship of Silverston was divided amongst several possessors at the time of the Conqueror's survey. One hide of land was in the hands of the Earl of Morton, which had been the freehold of Leuric, in the Confessor's time, and was rated at 10s., but it was now advanced to 20s. Gilo, the brother of Anculf, held half a hide, to whom Godwin was an under-tenant. This had been the freehold of Siward before the Conquest, and was rated at 2s., but it was now valued at 5s. Ernald held half a hide here also of Geoffrey de Mandeville, which was advanced in value from 10s. to 20s. In the reign of Henry II., Otnor held half a hide here of the fee of Earl William, son of Geoffrey de Mandeville, who was grandson to the former Geoffrey, and created Earl of Essex in the reign of King Stephen. William de Keynes held one hide, and Henry de Pinkeney half a hide of the fee of Morton, at the same time. In the 19th of the same reign (1173), this manor was in the hands of the king, and henceforth was accounted to be held in ancient demesne. In the 32d of Edward I. (1304), Edmund Lord Mortimer was possessed of one knight's fee in Silverstone, of the yearly rent of 100s., which was held of him by Alan la Zouche. In the 7th of Edward II. (1314), the manor was granted, with other lordships, to Richard de Arundel for the term of his life, and upon his death, in the succeeding year, it reverted to the king, who, in the 9th of this reign, was lord of Silverstone. In the following year the king gave this manor, then worth £13 yearly, together with the manor of Brill, to Sir Richard Lovell, in exchange for the manor of Bradenach, in Devonshire. From Sir Richard Lovell it passed, in the 11th of Edward III. (1338), to Sir John Molyns, who gave it in the following year to the convent of Burnham, in Buckinghamshire. This manor, called "Silveston Burnham," was, with the manor of "Silveston Luffield," granted in the 5th of Edward VI. (1551) to Sir Nicholas Throgmorton of Paulerspury. About the year 1687, Sir Edward Hales sold it to Sir Benjamin Bathurst of Paulerspury, whose lineal descendant, Henry, the third Earl of Bathurst, sold it in 1800 to Augustus Henry, third Duke of Grafton, from whom it descended to his son, George Henry, the fourth duke, who was succeeded by Henry Fitzroy, the 5th Duke of Grafton, from whom it passed by purchase to the late Lord Southampton in 1855, and from him to his son (now a minor) in 1872. We understand the whole of Lord Southampton's estates in this county have been recently sold to Robert Loder, Esq., of London. St Andrew's Priory had possessions here. About 60 acres of land, situated in this parish, formerly belonged to Luffield Priory.

Within the limits of this parish was anciently a lodge or mansion, the residence of our early monarchs when they visited the forest of Whittenbury to enjoy the pleasures of the chase. "In 1194," says Mr Bridges, "Richard I. was lodged here in the 5th of his reign, when William, King of Scotland, came to make his complaint for the affront he had received from the Bishop of Durham at Brackley, who denied him admission into his inn, and seized on the provisions that were preparing for the king's table." King John was frequently here. Mr Baker tells us, that "on the 3d of January 1200, he dated from hence the grant of Medmenham, in Buckinghamshire, to Woburn Abbey. He was here," continues the same historian, "from the 2d to the 5th of September 1204, and from the 10th to the 12th of February 1204-5; on the 24th and 25th May 1205, and 15th March 1206-7; on the 8th and 9th of August, and the 5th and 6th of November 1207, and 17th of January 1207-8; from the 6th to the 9th of August 1212, from the 16th to the 18th February 1214, and from the 4th to the 6th of March 1215, during which three days he issued more than twenty orders and grants, principally of the forfeited lands of the adherents of the barons. King Henry III. was here on the 16th of June 1224. A grant from him to the University of Oxford bears date at Silverstone, 6th February 1235; and in August 1258, whilst staying here, he gave the monks of Luffield a charter, placing them under his special protection. King Edward I. was at Silverstone 22d December 1274. From the circumstance of his placing an oblation of 7s. on the great altar of the church of Luffield Priory on the 9th of August 1290, it may be fairly presumed that he was then living here; and this is the last notice which I have been able to trace of a royal residence at Silverstone." There was a chapel attached to the royal residence, and the site of the mansion and chapel are assigned by Mr Baker to King's-hill coppice and Chapel coppice, which were within the Hasleborough-walk of the forest, and in the precincts of Silverstone.

The Village of Silverstone stands on rising ground, about four miles south-south-west of Towcester. A few of the inhabitants are employed at lace-making, and the timber trade is carried on extensively here, owing to its close proximity to Whittlebury Forest.

The Church, dedicated to St Anne, is a plain stone structure. The living, formerly a perpetual curacy attached to the rectory of Greens-Norton, from which it was separated in 1853, is now a vicarage annexed to that of Whittlebury, in the Deanery of Brackley. The corn and tithe rents of the parish amount to £178, 10s.

The Wesleyan Chapel was erected in 1811, and enlarged in 1863; it will seat about 450 hearers, and the Rev. John Thomas Pallister is the present minister. The school which is attached to this chapel was built in 1853, and enlarged in 1863, and is supported by subscription, Government grant, and the school-pence ; and there is an Infant school in connection with it, opened in 1870; both schools are attended by 150 scholars.

The National School, which is supported principally by subscription, was erected by Lord Southampton in 1846.

The other Charities are 20s. per annum from Mrs Jane Leeson's charity for the poor of the parish; and the poor's land, which consists of 8 acres, allotted by the Commissioners for enclosing Hasleborough-walk and Silverstone, and now let for £33, which is given to the poor on St Thomas' Day.

Post, Money-Order Office, and Savings Bank.—Mrs Mary Ann Cartwright, postmistress. Letters arrive from Towcester at 8 A.M., and are despatched at 5 P.M.

Adkins Emanuel, gardener
Adkins Noah, cart-owner
Badger William, hawker
Barford Thomas, jun. baker.
Bawd Price, nurseryman and gardener
Braggins Joseph, foreman
Buckingham Ths. Jph. blksmh.
Bunney Miss
Cartwright Mrs My. Ann, drapr.
Chapman Richard, carter
Coleman Edwin, butcher
Clark Francis, saddler
Coleman Hy. wheelwt. & blksth.
Coleman William, tea dealer
Coles Thomas, blacksmith
Daniel Edwin, mast. Ntl. schl.
Denney John, Wes. schlmaster.
Earl William, baker
Hawkes John, shoemaker
Higham Charles, corn miller
Hinton Peter, joiner & painter
Hunt William John, surgeon, M. R. C. S.
Linnell George, parish clerk
Linnell Miss Martha Julia
Needles & Linnell, thrashing-machine owners
Pallister Rev. John Ths. (Wes.)
Phillips John, sawyer
Richardson George, butcher
Scott Wm. boot and shoemakr.
Varney Richard, wheelwright
Waite Richard, hurdle maker
Wake Thomas, baker
West Mrs Esther
Whadcroft Miss Annie, mistress, Wesleyan infant school
Whitlock Thomas, butcher
Wood Joseph, coal dealer

Farmers and Graziers.

Adams George and Son
Barford Thomas, jun.
Braggins Thomas (yeoman)
Grimsdick Edward Horton
Linnell Thomas
Ridge Edwd. Silverstone Field
Rush Thomas
West George (yeoman)
Whitlock Thos. & Wm. & Co.

Grocers, &c.

Amos Mrs Harriet
Earl William
Kirby Alexander
Linnell Mrs Ann
Mayo George, West End
Mayo William
Picketts Mrs My. Ann, West End
Richardson Miss Ann
Rogers Henry (and joiner)
Scott William
Wake Mrs Mary
Whitlock Thomas

Inns and Taverns.

Compasses, Mrs Hannah Linnell
White Horse, Mrs Martha
Liddington

Beerhouses.

Higham John
Kirby Alexander
Liddington Valentine
Mayo George, West End
Rogers Henry
Rush George
Rush John, West End

Milliners and Dress-makers.

Liddington Miss Augusta
Linnell Misses Eliz. & My. Ann
Spencer Miss Elizabeth
Whitlock Mrs Elizabeth

Stonemasons.

Adams James
Coleman John
Coleman John, jun.
Richardson David

Tailors.

Bird William Francis
Coleman William
Heeley William

Timber Merchants and Dealers.

Adams George and Son
Adams Thomas
Braggins Thomas
Higham John
Holt William
Liddington Valentine
Rush George
Rush John, West End
Rush Thomas
Varney John, West End
Waite James
Wake William, West End
Webb Joseph
West George
West Thomas George
Whitlock Thos. & Wm. & Co.
Whitlock and Waite
Whitlock George
Whitlock Thomas

Carriers.—George Church, to Towcester on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday; and Joseph Wood to Northampton on Saturday.

SLAPTON PARISH

Is bounded by Woodend, in Blakesley parish, on the north, by Bradden on the east, on the south by Abthorpe, and on the west by Wappenham. It contains 615 acres, of the rateable value of £1140; and the gross estimated rental is £1282; and its population in 1801 was 135; in 1831, 197; in 1841, 208; in 1851, 219; in 1861, 240; and in 1871, 254 souls. The soil is chiefly a strong clay and gravel; and the principal owners are Mrs Sarah Barford (the lady of the manor), Thomas Gascoigne Welsh, Esq., Mr John Dunkley, Mr Thomas Amos, and Mr Joseph H. Goodman. There are several good springs in the parish.

Manor.—Gozelin held 4 hides of land in this lordship of Hugh de Abrincis,

Earl of Chester, at the time of the Domesday survey. There were 8 acres of meadow, and the whole was rated then at its former valuation of £3. In the reign of Henry II., these 4 hides were held of the fee of Chester. In the reign of Henry III., Geoffrey de Lucy held one knight's fee here of Hugh de Albin, Earl of Arundel, of the Honor of Chester. In the first of Edward I. (1272), Geoffrey de Lucy died seized of the manor and advowson of the church of Slapton, and was succeeded by Geoffrey, his son. In the second of Edward III. (1329), Geoffrey de Lucy levied a fine of the manor, and in the sixth of the same reign he obtained a grant of free warren in this lordship for himself and his heirs. In this family it continued till the sixth of Edward IV. (1467), when, upon the death of Margaret, wife of Sir William Lucy, it came into the possession of Sir Robert Corbet, grandson of Elizabeth, Countess of Worcester, daughter and heir of Eleanor, the eldest daughter of Sir William Lucy, but by some subsequent arrangement it passed to Nicholas Lord Vaux of Harrowden. Thomas Lord Vaux, his son and heir, alienated it in the twenty-seventh of Henry VIII. (1536) to Thomas Pope, Esq., afterwards knighted. In the twenty-ninth of the same reign, a fine was levied of the manor between his majesty the king and Thomas Pope, Esq.; and in the thirty-third of this reign (1541) it was annexed to the Honor of Grafton. In the seventh of Elizabeth (1565), the manor and advowson of the church were granted by the crown to William Chauncy, Esq., of Edgcote, who died seized of them in the twenty-seventh of the same reign (1585), and was succeeded by Tobias, his son. In 1608, Sir Henry Wallop, of Farley Wallop, in Hampshire, purchased them, and Robert Wallop, Esq., his son and heir, sold them, in 1650, to John Thompson, Gent., who conveyed them, in 1653, to Henry Gastrell, Esq. The manor was again sold by this family, in 1707, to William Foster, Gent., who alienated it, for certain considerations, to his nephew, Thomas Watts, of Slapton, from whom it was purchased by John Wodhull, Esq., and passed to Samuel Amy Severn, from whom it was purchased, in 1862, by John Barford, of Banbury, whose widow, Mrs Sarah Barford, is the present possessor. The family of Knight had a considerable estate here, which they retained till the close of the last century.

The Village of Slapton is situated in a valley about four miles W.S.W. of Towcester, and twelve of Northampton. The Manor-House stood a little west of the churchyard.

The Church, dedicated to St Bodolph, is a very ancient edifice, much in need of restoration, and consists of a nave, chancel, south aisle and porch, and a low embattled tower in which are two bells. The living is a rectory in the Deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £9, 9s. 9½d., and now worth about £190 per annum; Thomas Gascoigne Welsh, Esq., is patron, and the Rev. Edward Hudson Edman, M.A., is the incumbent. The rectory consists of about 120 acres of land, allotted by the Commissioners of Enclosure in lieu of glebe land and tithes.

There is a small Wesleyan Chapel in the village, built in 1844.

The School is endowed with a rent-charge of £1, 10s. per annum, left by Mr Thomas Knight in 1723, and for which three poor children are taught free.

The crown, in 1855, gave two acres of land in Whitfield parish, in lieu of forest rights, which brings in £4, 5s. per annum, and is given to the poor of the parish in money on St Thomas' Day.

Biography.—Francis Gastrell, D.D., Bishop of Chester, was the son of Henry Gastrell, Esq., and born in this parish in 1662. He wrote and published several excellent sermons, and a work entitled "The Christian Institutes, or the sincere Word of God, being a plain and impartial account of the whole faith and duty of a Christian." This work appeared in 1807, and has since passed through several editions. He died of gout on the 25th of November 1725, and was buried in Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

Post-Office.—Wall-box. Letters arrive from Towcester at about 7.30 A.M., and are despatched at 5.20 P.M.

Button Thomas, shoe agent	Henson Mr George	Wood Isaac, parish clerk
Cross Henry, shoe agent	Hinds Thomas shopkeeper and vict. Royal Oak	Farmers and Graziers.
Cross Henry, j. shoemaker	Horn Henry, general dealer	Amos Thomas (yeoman)
Cross John, j. shoemaker	Parsons John & Thomas, felt- mongers and woolstaplers	Billing Jeremiah (grazier)
Edman Rev. Edward Hudson, M.A. rector	Swan Thomas, carpenter	Dunkly John (yeoman)
Emery Robert, j. shoemaker	Talbot Wm. lace dealer, shop- keeper, and beer seller	Henson George, jun.
Evans William, shoemaker		Wrighton James
Foxley Geo. Fred. corn miller, Slapton Mill

WEEDON LOYS PARISH.

Weedon Loys, or Lois, so called from the patron saint of a celebrated well in the parish, but more frequently Weedon Pinkeney, from its ancient lords, or Weedon by Weston, from the hamlet of that name which it includes, is bounded on the north by Plumpton, on the east by Blakesley, on the west by Sulgrave and Morton Pinkeney, and on the south by Helmdon and Wappenham. It contains, with its hamlets, Weston and Milthorp, 2232 acres; and its population in 1801 was 387; in 1831, 526; in 1841, 501; in 1851, 545; in 1861, 547; and in 1871, 538 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3792, and the gross estimated rental, £4197. The soil is various, but principally clay, and the principal owners are the Wardens and Fellows of All Souls' College, Oxford (the lords of the manor), the Hon. Colonel Henry Hely Hutchison, Messrs John Aris, Joseph Richard Lovell, and Samuel Giles.

Manor.—At the time of the Norman survey, Gilo de Pinkeney held three hides of land in Weedon of the crown, which, with a mill of the yearly value of two shillings and six acres of meadow, were valued in the Confessor's time, when it was the freehold of Fregist and Siward, at forty shillings, but was now advanced to fifty shillings. It was this Gilo who gave the name to the barony of Pinkeney, of which Weedon was the capital manor. In the reign of Henry I., he gave certain lands here to the monks of St Lucia, near Beauvois. In the reign of Henry II., Henry de Pinkeney held two hides and eight small virgates here, and he and his successor were also considerable benefactors to the above-mentioned monks. The manor continued in this family till the twenty-ninth year of the reign of Edward I. (1031), when Henry de Pinkeney, after having previously sold to different persons several fees of his barony, gave up the manor of Weedon and advowson of the priory, with the rest of the barony, to the king, his heirs and successors for ever, for one hundred marks. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), Lucia Wale was lady of the manor, it being certified by an inquisition taken in the same year that Henry de Pinkeney had made a conveyance of the manor in the former reign to Thomas and Lucia Wale and their heirs, with the consent of the king. In the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), Sir Thomas Wale accounted for one knight's fee here of the Honor of Pinkeney. Dying without issue in the twenty-sixth of this reign (1353), his sisters became his heirs. In the following year a fine was levied of the manor in fee-simple by the king, and soon after granted to Simon, Archbishop of Canterbury, and William, Bishop of Winchester, probably in trust for his daughter, the Princess Isabella. Richard II. assigned this manor in dower to Anne, his consort, for life. Henry V. gave it afterwards to Joan, Queen Dowager to Henry IV.; and in the sixteenth of Henry VI. (1438), upon the death of Queen Joan, it was granted for twelve years to Joan Burgh, Esq., who paid for the farm of it £14, 6s. 6d. by two half-yearly payments. In two years after this, the king, at the instance of Archbishop Chicheley the founder, granted the manor, with the priory and advowson of the vicarage, to the Warden and Fellows of All Souls' College, Oxford, who are its present possessors.

THE PRIORY.—Mr Bridges gives the following particulars respecting this establishment:—"The Priory of Weedon, of the Benedictine order, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary, was a cell to the monastery of St Lucien, near Beauvois, in France. Gilo de Pinkeney is reputed to have been the founder.

Gilbert De Pinkeney confirmed to them one hide of land, a mill, and the adjacent meadows, with the tithes of Weedon, and of his demesnes in Wapenham, which had been given by Ralph and Gilo, his father and grandfather, to which he added a further benefaction of two carucates of land more. By another charter he ratified the former donations, and gave them forty acres of his demesne lands in Weedon. Henry de Pinkeney, the son of Gilbert, confirmed to them the tithes of his demesnes in Weedon, Wapenham, Stains, Morton, Miggeham, Huggelai, and Datchet, with the tithes of the assarts of his demesnes at Rutheberthe and Hestlea in Datchet. Robert, the son of Henry above mentioned, gave them other lands in the lordship of Weedon. In the wars between England and France, the profits of the priory were seized into the hands of the crown; and were let to farm at the yearly rent of eight pounds. The monks of St Lucien, by this means being often disappointed of their revenues, in the seventeenth of Richard II. sold their right in the priory, with the advowson of the vicarage, to the abbot and convent of Biddlesden in Buckinghamshire: who in the same year obtained a full discharge from all taxes and payments in any future time of war, with a particular exemption from the annual payment of £8, which in times of war had been usually received by the crown. But although thus united to the convent of Biddlesden, it could not escape the fate in which the priories alien were involved. In the second of Henry V. it was suppressed by the Parliament at Leicester; and about the year 1440, was made part of the endowment of All Souls' College in Oxford." Church Close is the supposed site of the priory. The priory of Canons Ashby had possessions here, which in the twenty-sixth of Henry VIII. (1535), were valued at 17s. 4d., and in the thirty-third of the same reign were granted to Sir John Williams and Anthony Stringer. The rising ground or mount, on the village green, is the site of the baronial castle of the Pinkeneys.

The Village of Weedon stands partly in a valley about six miles W. by S. of Towcester. Here is a mineral spring, once famed for curing various disorders, but now neglected, deserted, and almost unknown. Morton, writing of it, says, "For ancient fame, that called St Loy's or St Lewis's well, at St Loys, Wedun, I take to be the chief of all the western part of the county. Even blind and leprous people, as tradition tells us, it infallibly cured."

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, or St Peter and St Mary, is in the Early English style, and consists of a nave, chancel, north and south aisles, south porch, and a broad embattled tower at the intersection of the nave, chancel, and transepts, containing four bells. Before the aisles were added, it was a cruciform structure, and the transepts were originally chapels or side altars. In the south transept and the adjoining bay of that aisle (which appears to have been the private chapel of the Pinkeney family), are two piscinas in a state of good preservation, and also two arches in the south wall called the "founder's arches." The north aisle was added in 1849 at the expense of the late vicar, the Rev. Samuel Smith. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £6, 17s. 6d., and now worth about £500 per annum. The Provost and Fellows of King's College, Cambridge, are the patrons, and the Rev. Thomas Lewes Soley, M.A., is the incumbent. The vicarage consists of 192a. 2r. 23p., allotted by the commissioners of enclosure in lieu of glebe lands, tithes, and Easter offerings; 198a. 3r. 5p., allotted to the vicar as lessee of the impropriate rectory in lieu of the great tithes; with a rate-tithe of £35, 3s. yearly, in lieu of the great and small tithes of old homesteads, worth 10s. yearly, and certain old enclosures belonging to All Souls' College, Oxford.

MIDDLETHORP, or as it is now called Milthorpe, is a small hamlet in this parish, situate about midway between Weedon and Weston. A "Church of England School," which will hold 73 children, with a master's house attached, was erected here in 1848 by the managers, the Rev. S. Smith, the then vicar, and Colonel the Hon. Henry Hely Hutchinson, with aid from the Committee of Council on Education, and the College of All Souls', Oxford, and King's College, Cambridge, by whom it is also supported. An acre of ground was given by the vicar as a site for the building, and a garden for the master. Though this, as its title imports, is a Church of England school, yet all denominations are admitted to its general advantages; and while the tenets of the Church are strictly taught, the children of dissenters are not required of necessity to learn her catechism or other formularies.

WESTON, or Weston by Weedon, is a hamlet and considerable village in this parish, situate in a valley about half a mile west of Weedon, and containing a few respectable houses. The Baptists first formed a congregation here in 1681, which is said to be the oldest in the country, and in 1792 they erected a small chapel, which was enlarged in 1866. It is now capable of accommodating 300. There was a Sunday-school for 150 children added at the same time, and the total cost amounted to about £600. Rev. Joseph Lea is the present minister.

Weston Hall, the seat and property of Colonel the Hon. Henry Hely Hutchinson, brother of John Henry, third Earl of Donoughmore, Ireland, is an ancient mansion, which has been enlarged and the grounds much improved by the present proprietor.

A small brass Greek coin, of the city of Sala Phrygia, was ploughed up in this lordship some years since.

The Charities of this parish are the poor's land, consisting of 14a. or. 26p., allotted by the Commissioners of Enclosure to the poor in lieu of the right of cutting furze and thorns, now let in allotments, and yielding £33 per annum; and 20s. per annum received from Mrs Jane Leeson's charity, which is distributed amongst the poor.

Post-Office.—William Hopkins, sub-postmaster.—Letters arrive from Towcester at 9.15 A.M., and are despatched at 4.15 P.M. Wall Letter-Box, Weston, is cleared at 4 P.M.

Aris Mrs Mary, and Misses Elizabeth, Margaret, Harriet, and Ellen, The Green	Soley Rev. Thomas Lewes, M.A. vicar
Coy Hy. beer retlr. Milthorpe	Weaver Mrs Thos. Milthorpe
Edwards Thomas, parish clerk	Welch Mrs Ann, shopkeeper, Milthorpe
Hopkins Wm. shoemaker, &c.	Welch John Henry, farrier and castrator, Milthorpe
Jones Henry, master of free school, Milthorpe	Welch Robert, painter, &c.

Farmers and Graziers.

Aris Jno. (yeo.) Weedon House
Giles Henry Wm. Milthorpe
Stuchfield Crescens
Thomson Wm. (and butcher), Milthorpe

WESTON HAMLET.

Bleek Fred. Wm. vict. Crown	Lovell Mr Joseph Richard
Branson John, brick manufacturer, h. Woodend	Mansfield Charles Wm. stonemason and bricklayer
Cox William, beerhouse	Osborne Isaac, baker
Gulliver Richd. shopkeeper	Seckington Wm. Pryce, blacksmith
Hutchinson Colonel the Hon. Henry Hely, Weston Hall	Watts Mark, wheelwt. & carpnt.
Jones William, tailor	Whitton Edward, saddler
Lee Rev. Joseph (Baptist)

Farmers and Graziers.

Bleek John
Branson George
Gibbard Edward
Giles Samuel (yeoman)
Hinton Joseph
Marshall Clarke
Mawle Thomas

Carrier.—John Robinson, on Monday and Thursday, to Banbury.

WHITTLEBURY PARISH.

Whittlebury, or Whittlewood, is bounded on the north by Towcester, on the east by Heathencote and Paulersbury, on the south by Lillingston Lovell, in Oxfordshire, and Lillingston Dayrell, in Buckinghamshire; and on the west by Whitfield, Syresham, and Silverstone. It contains 3185 acres; and its population in 1801 was 533; in 1831, 670; in 1841, 748; in 1851, 707; in 1861, 487; and in 1871, 407 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3936, and the gross estimated rental £4314, 10s. The soil of the woodlands is principally a strong deep loam, but it varies very much in the other parts of the lordship, which is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture land. The principal landowners are—the Duke of Grafton, Robert Loder, Esq., Lord Southampton (lord of the manor), and Roscoe Shedden, Esq.

Manor.—Whittlebury is not mentioned in the Domesday survey, but in the account of hides taken in the reign of Henry II. it is comprehended in the hundred of Towcester, and Richard de Whittlebury held six small virgates of land here, then of the fee of Silveston. In the ninth year of the reign of Edward II. (1316), John Mareschal was lord of Whittlebury. From the reign of Edward II., the lordship of Whittlebury has been considered as parcel of the manor of Greens-Norton, and has always been in the hands of the same possessor. His Grace the Duke of Grafton sold it in 1855 to the late Lord Southampton, who was succeeded in 1872 by his son, Charles Henry Fitzroy, the present Lord Southampton, who was born in 1867, and from whom the estates passed by purchase in 1873 to Robert Loder, Esq., High Beeches, Crawley.

The Manor-House stood north of the village. The moat which surrounded it is still visible, and a farmhouse now occupies the area.

Whittlebury Forest.—This celebrated forest originally formed an irregular triangle, enclosing within its area about 32 square miles, or 20,480 acres. The whole of this circuit has not continued to this time forest land, or in the possession of the crown. Numerous and extensive manors and estates have been from time to time exempted from the forest jurisdiction. The land, still considered as forest land, consists of about 5424 acres, almost entirely encompassed with a mound, which is considered its boundary, all within being subject to forest laws. In the reign of Henry III., Whittlebury forest was divided into five walks—viz., Hasleborough, Sholebroke, Wakefield, Hanger, and Shrob. Hasleborough Walk, disforested, and enclosed in 1824, formed the south-western extremity of the forest, contained 1423 acres, of which 840 acres were in Whitfield parish, and 673 acres in Silverstone. This walk was not encircled with a ring fence on every side like the other walks, and the turnpike road from Northampton to Oxford passed through the centre of it. Sholebroke Walk contains 1386 acres, the whole of which are in this lordship. Wakefield Walk contains 1814 acres, of which about 380 acres are in this parish, 635 in Pottersbury, 580 in Passenham and Denshanger, and about 220 acres in Lillingston Dayrell, in Buckinghamshire. Hanger Walk contains 513 acres, which are wholly in the parish of Passenham. Shrob Walk, containing 295 acres, is nearly a mile distant from any other portion of the forest. By grant from Queen Anne, in 1712, the Duke of Grafton was lord warden or master forester, and as hereditary ranger has charge of the deer, being required to supply the royal household, and those public offices accustomed to have an allowance of venison from the royal forests. The forest was enclosed in 1854, when the late Lord Southampton had a fine park made, comprising about 700 acres, which is well stocked with deer; the deer belonging to the crown were removed when his lordship purchased the forest. This forest was one of the favourite hunting resorts of our early monarchs, who had a palace or royal mansion at Silverstone, where they resided on these occasions. "Though this forest," writes Mr Baker, "cannot now boast of the picturesque beauties of the New Forest, in Hampshire, as it has been despoiled of many of its ancient sylvan treasures, the lover of wild woodland scenery will find ample attractions in the intermingling charms of its majestic trees, its luxuriant and sunless thickets, its opening glades, and its green alleys branching out in every direction, and enlivened with pasturing cattle and gay troops of deer."

Wakefield Lodge, the seat of his Grace the Duke of Grafton, is delightfully situated in Wakefield Walk, in Paulerspury parish.

Sholebroke Lodge, the residence of Robert Edmund Oliver, Esq., stands in Sholebroke Walk.

Shrob Lodge, in the walk of that name, is now occupied as a farmhouse.

Whittlebury Lodge, the seat of Robert Loder, Esq., was burnt down on 3d January 1864. The present handsome mansion of stone, in the Elizabethan style, was erected in 1868 on the site of the former building, by the late Lord Southampton. It is situated at the S.E. extremity of Whittlebury Green, skirting the park.

The Village of Whittlebury contains several respectable houses, and stands on the turnpike-road to Buckingham, about four miles S. by W. of Towcester, and eight north of Buckingham.

The Church, an ancient structure in the Early English style, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is situate at the N.W. end of the village, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch and chancel, and a tower containing a peal of four bells. The interior was paved and pewed in 1815, and a barrel organ, erected in 1848, presented by the late Lord Southampton. The living is a vicarage with that of Silverstone annexed, in the deanery of Brackley; gross yearly value, £383, 7s. 1d.; net £200; in the patronage of the crown, and incumbency of the Rev. Arthur J. Street, B.A., inducted in 1873. There is no house or residence belonging to the living; the vicar rents a house near the church.

Luffield Priory.—This religious establishment stood in a secluded spot within the forest of Whittlewood or Whittlebury, at the junction of the counties of Buckingham and Northampton. It was founded in the reign of Henry I., by Robert Bossu, Earl of Leicester, for monks of the Benedictine order, and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin. The conventual buildings and offices were principally in the parish of Lillingston Dayrell, in Buckinghamshire, and the church stood in Northamptonshire, within the precincts of Silverstone. About 60 acres of the land belonging to the priory is situate in this county, and the remainder, or greater part of the district, is situate in Buckinghamshire. In consequence of the extreme poverty of this monastery, it was suppressed, and its revenues annexed to King Henry VII.'s Chapel, in Westminster Abbey, and it continued a cell to that splendid establishment till the general dissolution of the monasteries in the next reign.

There is a small Methodist Chapel here, erected in 1782-3.

The National School is endowed with £22, 13s. 9d. from the Slapton charity estate, and is partly supported by voluntary contribution.

The Charities of the parish are—20s. from Mrs Jane Leeson's charity for the poor; the rent of the poor's land, 7a. 1r. 13p. awarded at the enclosure of Whittlebury, in 1797, which now lets for £11, 10s. 6d., and the sum of £5, given to four widows at Christmas for gowns and shoes and in money, is received from Amptill, in Bedfordshire, from the trustees of Bryan's Charity. The crown, in 1855, granted £189, 9s. 4d., 3 per cent. consols, the interest of which, £5, 10s. 9d., is given to the poor at Christmas in coal, in lieu of their right to gather firewood in the forest.

Antiquities.—In and about the year 1822, under the roots of some trees felled near the churchyard, fragments of inscribed Roman bricks, and several Greek, consular and Roman coins were found, amongst which was a silver drachm of Alexander the Great.

Post-Office.—At Edward Mead's. Letters arrive from Towcester at 7.30 A.M., and are despatched at 6 P.M.

Fitzroy Lord Augustus Charles
Lennox
Oliver Robert Edmund, Esq.
Beers Mrs Anne
Burbidge Saml. trav. tea dealer
Burbidge Thomas, shoemaker
Faulkner Miss Annie
Gardiner Reuben, wood dealer
Gasson William, farm bailiff

Gray Winckles, carpenter
Hayle Edmd. baker & shopkpr.
Linnell William, wheelwright
Loder Robt. Esq. Whittlebury
Lodge
Meads Edward, shopkeeper
Savage John, blacksmith
Street Rev. Arthur Joseph,
B.A. vicar
Tarry Miss Mary

Tilley Mr John
Tucker Henry, butcher
Tucker Jno. vict. Fox & Hounas
Webb Thomas, tailor

Farmers and Graziers.
Claydon William (yeoman)
Ridge Henry, Lord's Fields
Ridge Samuel (and maltster)

Carrier.—John Wilcox, to Towcester, daily.

TOWCESTER HUNDRED.

This Hundred is bounded on the north by the Hundred of Nobottle Grove, on the east by those of Wymersley and Clely, and on the south-west and west by the Hundreds of Fawsley and Greens-Norton, is of a very irregular form, and its area is 12,980 statute acres. The Watling Street Roman way (now the Chester Road), traverses it in a straight line, and enters Fawsley Hundred from Pattishall parish. "At the time of the Conqueror's survey," says Bridges, "the extent of this hundred appears to have been much larger than it is at present, and to have remained so for several generations. In the reign of Henry II., it contained the following lordships:—Gayton, Pateshall, Foxley, Hinton, Wapenham, Sewell, Grimescot, Potecote, Tiffeld, Wyttebiry, Toucestre, and Grafton. Of these, Hinton and Wapenham now lie in the hundred of Sutton; Sewell, and Whittlebury, with the greater part of Foxley, in the hundred of Norton; and Grafton in the hundred of Clely. In the time of Edward I., it was reduced to the dimensions which it now bears. The hundred of Towcester was in the hands of the crown in the reign of William the Conqueror, but was found to be in the possession of Audamare de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, in the seventeenth of Edward II. (1324). The hundred court, which was held once in every three weeks, was in the third year of Edward III. (1330) farmed out to bailiffs, from whom it passed to the lord of the manor of Towcester, and from this period the hundred has uninterruptedly accompanied the manor down to George William Richard, Earl Pomfret, the present lord. The families of Hastings and Grey enjoyed all that had been possessed of Towcester by Audamare de Valence, and from the latter family it passed to Sir Richard Empson, who was succeeded in the possession by Sir William Compton, to whom the manor was granted. It subsequently came into the hands of the Fermor family.

The following is an enumeration of the parishes into which this hundred is divided, showing the population in 1871, number of houses, rateable value, and gross estimated rental of each parish, together with the number of acres collected from the parish rate books:—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Abthorpe	1,889	116	—	—	216	299	559	£ 2,663	£ 2,892
Foscote, hamlet		—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Cold Higham	1,683	82	3	—	167	161	328	2,552	2,777
Gayton	1,605	106	7	—	271	244	515	7,980	28,805
Pattishall	2,757	206	7	—	503	462	965	5,476	5,984
Tiffeld	1,225	40	2	—	133	86	219	1,714	1,857
Towcester	3,631	617	65	2	1,275	1,402	2,677	10,893	12,734
	12,850	1,167	84	2	2,565	2,654	5,263	31,278	55,049

CHARITIES OF TOWCESTER HUNDRED, as abstracted from the last Parliamentary Reports, with the dates, names of donors, &c. See also the histories of the parishes:—

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purpose applied.	Annual value.
1646.	Jane Leeson (land)	Abthorpe parish, poor	£3 0 0
"	Ditto (land)	Ditto, school	8 0 0
1726.	Thomas Nicholl (£200)	Ditto, endowment of the church living	10 0 0
"	Thomas Nicholl (£200)	Abthorpe parish, poor and parish clerk	5 0 0
"	Sheppard and Porters' gifts (£5 each)	Ditto, bread to poor	0 10 0
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent)	Cold Higham parish, poor	1 0 0
1698.	Poor's Estate	Gayton parish	40 0 0
"	Church Land	Ditto	28 0 0
1670.	Lady Katherine Leveson	Pattishall parish, two poor widows	26 0 0
"	Ditto	Ditto, apprenticing children	20 0 0
"	Bidford Charity	Ditto, poor	26 13 4

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purpose applied.	Annual value.
1670.	Dividend on Stock left for the redemption of slaves	Ditto, ditto	£34 0 11
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent)	Ditto, ditto	1 0 0
"	Marke's Charity Estate	Ditto, ditto	6 0 0
1647.	Thomas Cleave (land)	Ditto, bread to poor	13 4 0
1684.	Thomas Young (rents)	Ditto, teaching six poor boys	18 0 0
"	Foxley charity	Ditto, school, according to surplus (about)	5 0 0
1809.	William Waite (£200)	Ditto, one poor widow	6 5 0
"	Ditto (£100)	Ditto, school	3 2 6
1847.	William Pinckard (£1000)	Ditto, two poor men	29 2 6
1847.	Ditto (£500), after the death of Charlotte Gibbings	Ditto, school
1780.	Church and Poor's Land	Tiffeld parish	11 0 0
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent)	Ditto, poor	0 10 0

CHARITIES OF TOWCESTER PARISH.

1451.	Sponne's Charity Estate		198 0 0
1552.	Trustees of Sponne's Charity (rents)	Grammar school	13 16 0
"	Payable out of the Crown rents of the county	Ditto	7 2 8
1797.	Land allotted at the enclosure	Ditto	20 0 0
1697.	Anne Jones (land)	Teaching six poor boys	3 3 0
1704.	Joseph Saunders (rent)	Grammar school	5 1 0
1735.	Richard Ratnett	Teaching two poor boys	2 0 0
1691.	William Perry (land)	Ditto, and supplying them with coats and caps	5 0 0
1695.	Thomas Bickerstaff (land)	Almshouses for three poor people	70 0 0
1776.	Joseph Newman (£100)	Four poor widows	5 0 0
1789.	Sarah Churchill (£80)	Ditto	3 0 0
"	Several sums (£551, 9s. 6d.)	For five poor almspeople
1814.	Sarah Churchill (£100)	Ditto	3 0 0
1800.	Mary Cooke (£10)	For five poor almspeople	0 10 0
1801.	Simon Adams (£120)	One elderly almsperson	5 0 0
1805.	James Hall (£100)	Almshouses	4 0 0
"	Thomas Cleaves (£50)	Bread to poor	13 7 0
1694.	John and Ann Jones (rent)	Ditto	9 6 0
"	Poor's Land		9 0 0
1617.	William Sheppard and Frances George	Poor	0 10 0
"	John Clarke (rent)	Ditto	2 0 0
"	Richard Bland (rent)	Ditto	1 0 0
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent)	Ditto	2 0 0
"	Church Estate		58 10 0
1802.	Sir John Knightley (£200, 3 per cent. consols)	Sunday-school	5 14 0
1829.	Martha Stokes	Almshouses	3 0 0
1836-7.	Mary Sheppard (£306, 12s.)	Ditto	9 3 0
1845.	Gilbert Fleisher	Ditto	0 12 0

£754 2 11

ABTHORPE PARISH.

Abthorpe was originally a chapelry, in the parish of Towcester; but was constituted a distinct parish, with the hamlets of Charlock and Foxcote, now called Fosote, in the tenth of George II. (1736). It is bounded by Towcester on the north, east, and south-east; on the south by Silverstone, and on the west and north-west by the river Sow, which divides it from Slapton and Bradden, and on reaching Towcester, changes its name to the Towe. The lordship, with its hamlets, contains 1889 acres; and its population in 1801, was 393; in 1831, 477; in 1841, 449; in 1851, 500; in 1861, 541; and in 1871, 558. Its rateable value is £2662; and the gross estimated rental is £2892. The soil varies from a red loam to a strong clay, and gravelly land; the lordship is well supplied with springs, and the principal proprietors are the Duke of Grafton (the lord of the manor), Messrs David and Thomas Gibbins, Mr William Pittam, Mrs Elliott, Charles John Hare, and Mr Thomas Amos, M.D.

Manor.—Abthorpe, with Foxcote and Charlock, were anciently members of the manor of Towcester. In the seventeenth year of the reign of Edward II. (1324), Aymer de Valence, Earl of Pembroke, died seized of them, and left them, with the manor of Towcester, to John de Hastings, his nephew; and in the reign of Edward III. they were in the hands of William de Clynton, Earl of Huntingdon, in right of his wife. In 1759, George, the second Earl of Pomfret, sold all his estates here, including Bucknell Wood and Challock, to Ralph, second Earl of Verney, in Ireland, after whose decease, in 1791, a portion of it was sold to the Rev. Thomas Coker, of Deynton, in Gloucestershire, with whose family it continued (the manor being afterwards purchased by John Coker, Esq., of Bicester, nephew to the said Rev. Thomas Coker) until 1822, when it was purchased of the trustees of Thomas Lewis Coker, Esq., by John Malsbury Kirby, Gent., of Towcester. He died in 1824, and the manor of Abthorpe was sold by his daughter Sarah, the wife of Henry Elliott, Gent., of Greens-Norton, in 1827, to the trustees of George Henry, fourth Duke of Grafton, K.G., from whom it descended, in 1844, to Henry Fitz-Roy, the fifth Duke, and from him it passed, in 1863, to his eldest son, William Henry Fitz-Roy, the present duke.

The Village of Abthorpe stands on an eminence about 3 miles W.S.W. from Towcester. Silk stockings were formerly manufactured here to a considerable extent, but the trade has greatly declined of late years. Most of the inhabitants are now employed in the shoe trade, and lace-making is carried on extensively.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, is a handsome stone structure in the Early English style, consisting of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, south porch, and a square tower, containing four bells, and surmounted by a handsome spire. The church was restored and partly rebuilt and enlarged in 1870, at a cost of over £2000, raised by voluntary contributions, when the south aisle, organ chamber, vestry, and the tower and spire were added, together with a new oak pulpit, lectern, altar-rails, and open deal sittings; an organ has lately been added, and the two ancient piscinas in the chancel have been retained. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Brackley, rated in the Parliamentary returns at £60 per annum, and now valued at £320. The Bishop of Peterborough and the feoffers of Mrs Leeson's charity alternately are the patrons, and the Rev. Serocold Clarke Skeels, M.A., is the vicar. The vicarage has been four times augmented with £200, Queen Anne's bounty, also with £200 from Thomas Nicholl, Gent., £200 from Mr Marshall's trustees, and by a legacy from the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry. In addition to the glebe land, the Commissioners of Enclosure allotted 17a. 30p. in lieu of vicarial tithes. The vicar holds a perpetual lease of the Leeson Charity Estate, at a fixed yearly rent of £57, 17s. 4d., and the amount of the several augmentations have been expended in the purchase of land. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners are the improPRIATORS, the parish being still part and parcel of the rectory of Towcester.

Leeson's Charity.—Mrs Jane Leeson, of Abthorpe, a native of Frankton, in Warwickshire, by will, dated 27th May 1646, devised her capital, messuage, and lands, in Abthorpe, subject to a fee-farm rent to the crown, of £9, 17s. 4d. yearly, to certain feoffees, upon trust that they should receive the rents and profits thereof, and therewith yearly pay the sum of £30 towards the relief of the poor for the time being, of certain towns and villages, in the following proportions:—

Abthorpe and village of	Wappenham.....	£1 10	Cold Higham and
Foxcote.....	Helmdon	1 0	Grimscote.....	£1 0
Towcester and Wood	Weston and Weedon		Pattishall	1 0
Burcott.....	Pinkeney	1 0	Tiffield	0 10
Brackley	Adson	0 10	Whitfield	0 10
Morton Pinkeney.....	Slapton	1 0	Alderton	1 0
Paulspury	Bradden	0 10	Blisworth	1 10
Whittlebury	Greens-Norton.....	1 10	Plumpton	0 10
Silverstone	Blakesley	1 10	Frankton (Warwick-
Siresham	Easton and Hulcot.....	1 0	shire).....	2 0

She also built the School near her dwelling-house here in 1642, and endowed it with £8 a year; and willed £4 a year to the feoffees "for their pains in performing her will," and 40s. to be expended upon them at their annual meeting. The school buildings, which are among the best in the county, have been restored and a new wing added. The estate comprises a dwelling-house, now the Vicarage House, with 60a. 28p. of old enclosed land, and an allotment of 61a. 3r. 24p. awarded at the enclosure. In 1737, when Abthorpe was constituted a parish, this charity and school were united to the living, to which the schoolmaster, Robert Porter, was presented. The vicarage, which was formerly the manor-house, has been renovated at great expense by the late vicar.

In pursuance of the directions of the Act, the trustees demised to the successive vicars of Abthorpe the messuage and lands devised by the will, at the yearly rent of £57, 17s. 4d. mentioned in the Act, being the rent at which the property was let to Mr Porter at the time the Act passed, and which, after the payment of the specific allowances mentioned in the will—namely, £9, 17s. 4d. for the fee-farm rent, £30 for the poor of the different towns and villages, £8 for the schoolmaster, and £2 and £4 to the trustees—leaves the sum of £4 for contingent expenses, such as new trust-deeds, repairs of the school, and of the room reserved for the use of the trustees.

Nicholl's Charity.—Thomas Nicholl, Gent., by will dated 15th of August 1726, bequeathed £700 (as stated above), towards procuring £200 more from Queen Anne's bounty for the augmentation of the living, and 20 guineas towards the purchase of communion plate. He also left £2, 10s. per annum for bread for the poor of this parish, and £2, 10s. per annum to the parish clerk, as long as divine service should be continued in the church there on Wednesdays, Fridays, and holidays, and certain other duties performed according to the terms of the Act of Parliament; but as these parochial duties have long since been discontinued, the owners of the land charged with these sums have refused to pay them any longer.

The other Charities are £5, left by Captain Sheppard and Mr Robert Porter, the interest of which (10s.) is given in bread to the poor.

CHALLOCK, or CHARLOCK, is a hamlet on the southern extremity of this parish, about one mile south-east of Abthorpe Church. The estate consists of about 200 acres, which anciently formed part of the possessions of the priory of Luffield, and is now united with the manor of Abthorpe.

Charlock House, the residence of Mr William Chadwick Amos, is the only house in the hamlet.

FOXCOTE, or FOSCOTE, is another hamlet in this parish, which contains two houses, and nearly 400 acres of land, situate between Abthorpe and Towcester. This was formerly a separate manor, but is now associated with Abthorpe as a member of the manor of Towcester. The Duke of Grafton is the proprietor.

Letters arrive through the Towcester Post-Office.

Barrett John, butcher
Capern John, stocking weaver
Dillow Thomas, parish cler
Goodall Alf. mas. nat. scho.
Henson Samuel, shoe agent
Hayward Edw. butcher & farmer
Hindes Wm. baker and grocer
Hinson Jas. wheelwright, brick and tilemaker, and victualler,
Stocking Frame
Kendall Robert, grocer and
beer retailer

Matthews Charles, blacksmith, shopkeeper, & vict. New Inn
Middleton Samuel, shopkeeper
Needham Jno. framewrk. knitt.
Rainbird George, shopkeeper
Rainbow William, tailor
Ratledge Nathan, bricklayer
Sewell William, shoemaker
Skeels Rev. Serocold Clarke,
M.A., vicar
Stevens Joseph, shoe agent
Timms Benjamin, glazier
Timms Miss Elizabeth, lace sch.

Timms John, shopkeeper

Farmers and Graziers.

Amos William, The Hayes
Amos William Chadwick,
Charlock House
Barford John, Foscote Hill
Barford Valentine, Foscote
Gibbins David (yeoman)
Gibbins Thomas (yeoman)
Hindes William
Shepherd Richard
Tomlin William

Carrier.—John Middleton, to Northampton, on Saturday.

COLD HIGHAM PARISH.

Cold Higham, so called from its exposed and elevated situation, is named Hecham, and Hecham Parva or Little Higham in early records, and Heca in Doomsday Book. Its boundaries are formed by Stowe on the north, from which it is divided by Stowe brook, by Pattishall on the east, on the south by Greens-Norton and Blakesley, and on the west by Litchborough. The parish comprehends the hamlets of Grimscothe, Potcote, and part of Foster's Booth, and contains 1683 acres of the rateable value of £2552, and the gross estimated rental is £2777; its population in 1801 was 271; in 1831, 391; in 1841, 388; in 1851, 406; in 1861, 349; and in 1871, 328 souls. The soil is principally a strong clay, but in some parts a light loam; there are some excellent springs here, and about one-third of the lordship is in grass. The proprietors are the Duke of Grafton, K.G. (who is lord of the manor); Thomas George Fermor Hesketh, Esq.; Rev. H. H. Bridgewater, and Messrs Richard and David Gibbins.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey the Earl of Morton held 2 hides and 4 parts of half a hide of land here; there were 10 acres of meadow, and the whole had been valued before the conquest, when it was the freehold of Leuric at 5s., but it was then advanced to 20s. Godwin held 2 hides here of Walterius Flandrensis at the same time, which had been reduced in value from 40s. to 20s. In the reign of Henry II. these were two separate manors, the former being in the hands of one Aunsel or Anselm, who held it of the fee of Roger de Mowbray; and the latter was held by the prior and monks of Dunstable, who were certified to hold 2 hides in Grimscothe of the fee of Wahul. There was also at this time $1\frac{1}{2}$ hide and 1 small virgate in Potcote, which were held by John de Daventre. In the ninth of Edward II. (1316), the lords of Higham, Potcote, and Grimscothe were Robert de Daventre, John de Grimscothe, Richard Foxle, and John de Pateshull. This latter gentleman died seized of a manor here, in the twenty-third of Edward III. (1350); and in the partition of the estates of his son and successor, Sir William de Pateshull, between his four sisters, his possessions here were assigned to Catherine, the wife of Sir Robert de Tudenham. These he died seized of in the thirty-fifth of the same reign (1362), and left them to John de Tudenham, his son, who became possessed of them after the decease of Catherine his mother, in the seventh of Richard II. (1384), and from whom it descended to his son. The other manor, which was held of the fee of Mowbray, was in the hands of Robert de Daventre, who died after conveying it to his youngest son Philip, in the sixteenth of Edward III. (1343). In the beginning of the reign of Henry IV., William de Daventre sold this manor to Thomas de la Pole; and in the tenth of the same reign (1409), William, his son, levied a fine of the manor of Grimscothe, Potcote, and the advowson of the church of Cold Higham. Margery, the widow of this gentleman, possessed it, and presented it to the church in the twelfth of Henry VI. (1434). From this family the manors of Grimscothe and Potcote passed in marriage to the family of Langley, and in the fourteenth of Henry VII. (1499), they passed from them to the Empsons. These manors, with the advowson of the church, were included in the same purchase as Towcester, from Thomas Empson, Esq., by Richard Fermor, Esq., in the twenty-second of Henry VIII. (1530), and from this purchaser, the estate, which has long since ceased to be considered manorial, descended to the Earl of Pomfret, at whose decease in 1867 it passed to his sister, Lady Fermor Hesketh, who died in 1870, and was succeeded by her second son, Thomas George Fermor Hesketh, Esq., the present proprietor. These manors, now called the manors of Cold Higham, were annexed to the honor of Grafton, on its creation, in the thirty-third of Henry VIII. (1542), and are now possessed by the present Duke of Grafton.

The Village of Cold Higham stands a little north of the Chester road, about 4 miles S.W. of Towcester, and $7\frac{1}{2}$ S.W. of Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St Luke, is a small, ancient edifice, consisting of nave, small chancel, south chapel, and tower; the latter, in which are four bells, has a ridge or pack-saddle top, and is of the thirteenth century; the north side of the chancel belongs to the lay impropriator, and the south side to the rector. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £10, returned at £124; but the gross income is over £500 per annum.

John Baron Howes, Esq., of Northampton, is patron, and the Rev. William Henry Clarke, A.M., is the rector. In the south chapel is the wooden effigy of a cross-legged knight on an alabaster altar tomb, supposed to belong to one of the ancient lords of Potcote; and in the exterior wall on the south side of the chancel is a low monumental arch, under which is the chamfered lid of a stone coffin, ornamented with a floriated cross.

The Rectory-House is situated north of the church, in grounds which are planted with lofty elms, visible as far as Bow Bricknill, in Buckinghamshire, to the south, and Naseby to the north. The rectory consists of 59a. 20p. of land, allotted by the Commissioners of Enclosure in lieu of glebe, 104a. 3r. 14p. in lieu of tithes in Higham and Grimscote, and 90a. 3r. 33p. in lieu of the tithes of Potcote.

The Churchyard is now (1873) about to be enlarged. The land was given by the Duke of Grafton for that purpose; and, in 1872, a good school, with teacher's house attached, was built at a cost of over £600, on a site adjoining the churchyard, also given by his Grace.

Charities.—The poor of this parish receive 20s. yearly from Mrs Jane Leeson's charity. The poor's allotment consists of 6a. 1r. 37p., which, instead of being let out and the rent distributed in the usual way, is divided into small parcels for garden ground, and given to those persons who formerly exercised the privilege of cutting fuel on the heath, and for whose benefit the land was allotted. The church land consists of 9a., and now lets for £23, 17s. per annum, which is appropriated to the repairs of the church; and 1a. 2r., called the clerk's land, is held by the parish clerk for the time being. The above three allotments are situate in Grimscote.

GRIMSCOTE is a hamlet forming the south-western portion of the parish, and the village, which is much larger than that of Higham, stands on a very uneven surface, about three-fourths of a mile west of it. Here is a small Baptist Chapel of stone, which will seat about 100 persons, and was built in 1837. There is a feast held in the village on the first Sunday after 29th of October.

FOSTER'S BOOTH, 7 miles S.W. of Northampton, is another hamlet, partly in this parish and partly in that of Pattishall, the houses on the south side of the Watling Street or Chester road, between the above villages, and upon which this hamlet is situated, being in Pattishall, and those on the north side in this parish. Morton tells us that this place originated in a hut or booth belonging to a poor countryman named Foster; "but tradition assigns its origin," says Mr Baker, "to the Forester's Booth, and points in confirmation to the rude hunting sketch in fresco, representative of the death of the stag, which bearing date '1637,' has continued for two centuries to ornament the western wall of the George Inn," but now, to the regret of antiquarians, destroyed.

POTCOTE hamlet (see Greens-Norton parish).

Post-Office.—Wall Box. Letters arrive from Towcester at 8.30 A.M., and are despatched at 5.44 P.M.

Archibald Mr William, Foster's Booth	asst. overse. for this & Litchborough parish, Grimscote	Gibbins Richard (yeoman) Grimscote
Armstrong William, shopkeeper. Grimscote	Judkins Thomas, parish clerk	Goff Thomas, Grimscote
Cardrey George, corn miller, Cold Higham Mills	Kirton Jas. shop. Foster's Booth	Messinger Thomas, Cold Higham Downs
Clarke Rev. William Henry, M.A. rector	Parkinson Joseph, wheelwright and machinist, Grimscote	Pinckard John, Grimscote
Folwell John, coal dealer, Grimscote	Rogers John, shopkeeper	Prowett Wm. Foster's Booth
Harris Jno. wheelwt. beer ret. &	Smith Thos. wheelt. Grimscote	Shepherd John, Grimscote
	Farmers and Graziers.	Webb Thomas, Grimscote
	Bull Thos. Cold Higham	Whitton Joseph Wakefield, Potcote House

Carrier.—Thomas Reeve, to Northampton, on Wednesday and Saturday.

GAYTON PARISH.

Gayton is bounded on the north by Rothersthorp, on the east by Milton Malzor, on the south by Blisworth and Tiffeld, and on the west by Pattishall, from which it is divided by Eastcote Brook, which rises in Churnwell, a very fine spring in this lordship. It contains 1665 acres, and its population in 1801 was 267; in 1831, 461; in 1841, 425; in 1851, 421; in 1861, 459; and in 1871, 515 souls. The rateable value, including the canal and railway property, is £7980, and the gross estimated rental is £28,805. The soil on the hill is a grey loam, and in the valley a strong clay, and is nearly equally divided between pasture and arable land. The principal proprietors are—Sir Joseph Henry Hawley, Bart., Leybourn Grange, Kent (the lord of the manor), William Blake, Esq., of Danesbury, Herts, and Mr Richard Dunkley. There are some extensive brick-kilns in the parish. Mr Baker informs us, that in the one adjoining the Bambury Lane Wharf Yard to the north, is a diluvian bed from which his sister (Miss Baker), “obtained, in the winter of 1835, some interesting relics of mammalia—the humerus bone and fragments of the teeth of the mastodon; the tibia of a full grown, and portion of a tooth of a young elephant; parts of the tibia, teeth, and tusks of the hippopotamus; parts of the skull, humerus, tibia, vertebræ, and the teeth of the ox; tibia and teeth of the elk; and horn and prong, and portion of ribs of the deer.” The London and North-Western, and the Northampton and Banbury Junction Railways, and the Grand Junction Canal pass through the parish.

Manor.—This lordship is not mentioned in the Domesday survey; but in the reign of Henry II., it was certified to contain four hides of land, which were in the possession of the advocate of Bethune, who in the ninth year of the same reign (1130), accounted to the king for 20s, and in four years afterwards for one mark for this manor. He was succeeded by Baldwin de Bethune, who sold it, with the advowson of the church, to Ingelram, Lord of Fienles, for 700 marks sterling (£466, 13s. 4d.), in the thirty-third of Henry III. (1249). This gentleman obtained a licence to enclose Gayton Wood, and throw it into a park in the forty-third of this reign (1259). In the fifty-fourth of the same reign, he granted the manor to Michael de Houghton of Northampton, who obtained a grant of free warren for himself and his heirs; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1316), Thomas Murdak and his wife, Scolastica de Meux, were certified to be lords of Gayton. From their descendants the manor passed to the family of Trussell, and in the twenty-fourth of Henry VI. (1446), Robert Tanfield, Esq., levied a fine of it, together with the advowson of the church. Sir Francis Tanfield sold them in 1607 to Sir William Samwell, who died seized of them in the thirteenth of Charles I. (1628); and in 1751, they were again sold by Sir Thos. Samwell, Bart., to Richard Kent, Esq. His son and successor of the same name disposed of the whole of his estate here, and the manor was purchased in 1755, by James Hawley, Esq., M.D., whose great-grandson, Sir Joseph Henry Hawley, the third baronet, is the present proprietor. Certain lands here were formerly in the possession of the family of De Gayton, and called “Gayton’s Manor.” St John’s Hospital, in Northampton, levied a fine to Henry de Gayton of two virgates of land here, and which estate, now consisting of 3 tenements and 37 acres, is still held by the hospital. Henry, son of Henry de Gayton, gave Litevill Croft and 16 acres in this parish, to the Abbey of St James, near Northampton. Gayton was annexed to the honor of Grafton, on its erection in 1541. About 20 acres of the wood which Ingelram de Fiennes had a licence to enclose, in 1258, still remain; and in the fifth of Henry IV. (1403), John Trussell had licence to impark 300 acres, which has been long since disparked and divided into fields.

The Manor-House, now reduced to a farmhouse, stands at the northern entrance to the village, and is that peculiar style of domestic architecture prevalent in the reigns of Elizabeth and James I.

The Village of Gayton is pleasantly situated on high ground, and commands an extensive view of a richly-cultivated district. It is five miles S.W. of Northampton, four N.W. of Towcester, and one and a half from the Blisworth station.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is in the Early English and Decorated styles. It consists of a nave with clerestory, chancel, side aisles, south porch, north chapel, or chantry, which was formerly the burial place of the Sam-wells, and a tower, 54 feet in height, in which is a peal of six bells. On the great bell, dated 1662, are the words, "God save King Charles;" on the second, 1594, "Feare God and obey the Lord;" and on the first, 1585, "Geve thanks to God alwaies." A turret for the Sanctus bell on the east end of the nave is a rather uncommon feature in this county.

The chief objects of interest in the interior are the font, which is ornamented with interlaced Norman arches and a cable-moulding round the rim. The wooden effigy of Sir Philip de Gayton, which is placed under a decorated canopy on the north side of the chancel, is of the early part of the fourteenth century. The carved oak-stalls within the communion rails show some curious specimens of carving. The altar tomb, of Purbeck marble, on the south side, under a canopy of the sixteenth century, is without any inscription, and the family it was intended to commemorate is unknown. In the north wall of what was a chantry chapel, is the tomb of Lady Scolastica, wife of Sir Godfrey de Meaux, and daughter of the last of the Gaytons; the figure is carved in the style of those which ornament the Queen's Cross at Delapre. A small figure upon the bracket above was found in the north wall, and is supposed to represent a member of the Gayton family; it bears the inscription, "H. jacet in tumba Mabila filia Thomæ de——" An alabaster altar tomb stands in the same chapel; on the top are incised figures representing Francis Tanfield and Bridget, his wife, and eighteen children, eight of whom appear to have died young. This monument deserves notice, as Mr Tanfield was one who signed the Act of Uniformity. He died in 1558, and his wife in 1583.

The east window and several others are filled with elegantly stained glass. The clock, erected in 1848, is the gift of the Rev. Edw. Rawnsley, late a curate of this parish, and Mrs Kennaird, afterwards Mrs Rawnsley; eight of the stained windows are also the gift of this lady, and the other seven were presented by the late rector, Dr Butler. An organ was placed in the church in 1871, at a cost of £300, defrayed by funds which had accumulated from the church lands. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £15, 5s. 2½d., and now worth about £580 per annum. The advowson continued appendant to the manor till 1765, when Jas. Hawley, Esq., M.D., sold it for £1400 to the Master and Fellows of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, who are the present patrons, and the Rev. Nicholas John Temple, D.D., is the rector. The rectory consists of 93 acres of glebe, and the tithes of the whole parish, which were commuted, in 1838-9, for £438. The Rectory-House is a handsome mansion, pleasantly situated south of the churchyard. Gayton House is the seat and property of Captain J. S. Ferguson. The National School was erected in 1845; and the school clock was presented by Mrs Coles.

Almshouses.—Here are 8 cottages and about 25 acres, called Almsland, the rent of which (about £40 per annum) is distributed four times a year by the minister and churchwardens, in sums varying from 2s. to 7s., among poor persons not receiving alms. The Church Land, containing 14a. 3r. 17p., yielding about £28 a year, is expended on the repairs of the church.

Post-Office.—Wall Box. Letters arrive from Northampton at about 9 A.M., and are despatched at 4.30 P.M.

Dixon George Edw. master of national school	Northamptonshire Iron Co., and at Duston , Joseph Carter, manager, h. Blisworth	Temple Rev. Nicholas John, D.D., rector
Dunckley David, joiner & bldr.	Old George, shoemaker	Wheldon Wm. Hy. iron ore mstr.
Facer Thos. shopr. & beer retair.	Payne Thomas, plumber, shop-keeper, and beer retailer	Whitehurst Rev. John, M.A. curate
Ferguson Major John Stephenson, Gayton House	Ratlidge Joseph, stonemason and deputy-clerk of parish	Farmers and Graziers.
Haynes William Oliver, blacksmith and beer retailer	Savage Geo. coal mer. and vict.	Dunckley George
Linnell Edmund Kirby, baker, butcher, and tax collector	Anchor Inn , Banbury Lane, h. Stoke Bruerne	George Walter
Lovell Arthur	Smith Samuel Whistance, vict.	Griffith Pheasant
Moore John, butcher, shopkpr. and beer retailer	Crown and Squirrel	Payne Mrs Charlotte and Sons (Thos. & Jas.) Manor-House
		Payne William
		West William, Gayton Lodge

Carriers.—To Northampton, John Moore and George Kingston, on Wednesday and Saturday.

PATTISHALL PARISH.

Pattishall, or Pateshull, comprehends the hamlets or members of Astcote, Estcote, Darlscote or Dalscote, and Descote; about 150 acres of Foxley, and part of Foster's Booth. It is bounded on the north by Bugbrook, on the east by Gayton and Tiffield, on the west by Litchborough and Grimscore, and by Greens-Norton on the south. It contains 2757 acres; and its population in 1801 was 551; in 1831, 742; in 1841, 728; in 1851, 775; in 1861, 885; and in 1871, 965 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £5476, and the gross estimated rental, £5984. The soil is principally a strong grey loam on limestone, and the proprietors are Thomas George Fermor Hesketh, Esq., lord of the manor; the executors of the late Thomas Howes, Esq.; the executors of the late Thomas Drayson, Esq.; Mr William Faulkner, the Duke of Grafton, Mr George West, Mr Joseph Rush, Mr William Archbold, and several smaller owners.

Manor.—Walterius Flandrensis held 8 hides of land here at the general survey; there were two mills of the yearly rent of 32d., and the whole had been valued before the conquest, when it was the freehold of Levenot, at £10; but was now reduced to £5. In the reign of Henry II. Simon de Wahull, grandson to Walterius Flandrensis, held 7 hides, William de Hocton 8 small virgates, and Earl Maurice 2 small virgates of the fee of Botebot. In the 24th of Edward I. (1296), John de Wahull died seized of a manor here, which he held of the king in capite, by the service of one knight's fee, and was succeeded by Thomas de Wahull, his son. In the same year, Simon de Pateshull died seized of a manor here, which he held in capite of John de Wahull, by the service of a fourth part of a knight's fee, and left it to John Pateshull, his son, a minor. This manor continued with the family of Wahull, or Wodhull, till the time of Henry VIII., in the latter part of whose reign it was carried in marriage by Agnes, only daughter of Anthony Wodhull, to Richard Chetwode, Esq., from whom it received the name of Chetwode's manor. Sir Richard Chetwode, son and successor of the said Richard and Agnes, sold it for £1013, 6s. 8d., to Theodore Markes, Gent., in the 8th of Charles I. (1633), and his son of the same name acquired the other manor here called Pateshull, or Strangeway's manor. The Rev. John Baron purchased both manors for £6300; in 1759, he settled them, by deed and will, on his son-in-law, Richard Dickinson, Esq., whose eldest son, John Baron Dickinson, Esq., sold them, in 1791, to Thomas Perkins, Esq. This gentleman sold them to Peter Denys, Esq., who soon after conveyed them to his brother-in-law, George, third Earl of Pomfret, from whom they descended in 1833 to George William Richard, 5th Earl of Pomfret; and from him, in 1867, to his eldest sister, Lady Anna Maria Arabella Fermor Hesketh, who was succeeded in 1870 by her second son, Thomas George Fermor Hesketh, Esq., the present possessor.

The Village of Pattishall stands a little north of the Roman Watling Street, now the Chester road, about 4 miles N.N.W. of Towcester, and 6½ miles S.W. of Northampton. This parish is divided by a small brook or ditch; the western division or Pattishall side, includes Pattishall and Astcote, and the eastern division, or Eastcote side, includes Eastcote and Darlscote.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Cross, and situate on rising ground at the N.E. of the village, is in the Early English style, and consists of a nave and side aisles, porch, chancel, and a low tower containing five bells. The interior was restored in 1871 at a cost of £1000, when it was furnished with open sittings, all of which are free. The tower was rebuilt in 1663 at a cost of £199, 10s. 3d. In the chancel and south aisle, or side chapel, are two piscinas in very good preservation; in the chancel is also the ancient locker, and in the south wall of the same is a monumental arch, which might be mistaken for the sedilia, were it not too low for that purpose. The chancel is divided from the nave by a narrow semicircular arch, and from the aisles by three pointed arches on each side, supported by plain octagonal columns. The living is a vicarage in two moieties, in the deanery of Brackley, rated in the king's books at £6, 11s. 10½d., and returned at £143, 10s. 4d. The advowson of the Dunstable, or Upper Vicarage, is vested in the crown, and that of the Godston, or Nether Vicarage, in the Rev. Henry Forster Welsh, the present incumbent. The Rev. Charles Augustus Perring is the incumbent of the upper vicarage. These portions formed parts of the possessions of the priory of Dunstable, in Bedfordshire, and the abbey of Godston, near Oxford, the Wahulls having disposed of the patronage in moieties, each of which constituted a distinct benefice, and had its separate vicarage. The Vicarage House of the upper portion stands south of the church, and that of the lower vicarage at the eastern extremity of the village.

Two small Baptist Chapels were erected, in Pattishall and Eastcote respectively, in 1838 and 1840; the Rev. Charles Mace is the minister.

Charities.—By a decree of Chancery, in 1226, it was ordered that seven-tenths of the accumulated fund of the Bidford Charity should be applied for the benefit of the poor of the several parishes named in the Duchess Dudley's will. Of the dividends this parish receives £26, 13s. 4d. per annum; an annual portion of the rents of the Bidford estate, amounting generally to about £13, and £34, os 11d., by reason of there being no claim for the redemption of Christian slaves from the bondage of the Turks, for which purpose a portion of the charity was left. Lady Catherine Leveson bequeathed her Foxley estate for charitable purposes (see Foxley, page 510), out of the rents of which Pattishall is entitled to £26 per annum for two poor widows; £20 to place two poor boys as apprentices, and one-third of the surplus rents and profits of the estate for distribution amongst the poor. £1 per annum is received from Mrs Jane Leeson's charity. Markes's Charity, consisting of 1a. 2r. 11p., yielding about £6 per annum, is added to the Dudley and Leeson charities, and distributed to the poor at Christmas. The rent of 7a. 1r. 38p., now let for £13, 4s., called Cleave's Charity, is expended in bread to the poor.

Young's Charity and School.—Thomas Young founded a school here in 1684, and endowed it with three houses in Pattishall, a close called Flitwell hills, in Eastcote, and lands in the open fields. The property now consists of a school, dwelling-house and garden, in the occupation of the master, a close of about 3 roods adjoining, and an allotment of 11a. or thereabouts, which now lets for £18 per annum. The master receives the rents of these premises, and £5 a-year each from the Foxley and Waites charities, for which sum he teaches 15 boys free. In 1818-19, the school was nearly rebuilt, and the house repaired, the expense being partly defrayed by the application of a balance in hand, arising from money destined to put out apprentices under the Foxley charity. A new school for boys and girls was built by subscription, in 1855, at a cost of £155, to accommodate 126, on a site given by the late Thomas Howes, Esq., of Northampton. The old school is now used as an infant school. William Waite left the sums of £200 and £101 in 1829, to be laid out in the purchase of land or placed at interest; the interest of the former sum to be paid to a poor widow, and that of the latter to the schoolmaster for teaching poor children. These sums are out at interest at the rate of 5 per cent. Thomas George Fermor Hesketh, Esq., has about 2 acres adjoining the Chester road, subject to an annual payment of £3 to the poor of the parish. William Pinkard left by his will, dated 15th March 1847, for two poor old men of this parish, being widowers or bachelors, £29, 2s. 6d., arising from £1000, 3½ per cent. reduced annuities, and the interest of £500, after the death of Charlotte Gibbins, to be applied towards the support of the schools of this parish belonging to the Established Church.

ASTCOTE is a hamlet in this parish, about 1 mile south of Pattishall. The prior and convent of Dunstable, and the abbess and convent of Godstow, rectors of the church of Pattishall, granted licence to Reginald de Monasterio and his heirs, anciently lords of this manor, to build a chapel or chantry here. The mansion and chapel formerly stood in the Buryfield, at the south entrance to the village.

ESTCOTE, or EASTCOTE, hamlet is situate about three-quarters of a mile S.E. of Pattishall. An Oddfellows' Lodge (Manchester Unity), was established here in 1842, and has 25 members.

DARLSCOTE, or DALSCOTE, forms with Eastcote the eastern division of the parish, and the village stands about $\frac{1}{4}$ mile east of Eastcote.

DESCOTE has not a single house remaining, but its grounds approach near to the N.E. end of the village of Darlescote.

FOSTER'S BOOTH is partly in this parish. (See Cold Higham Parish.)

Post Office.—Miss Ann Valentine, sub-postmistress. Letters arrive from Towcester at 8.45 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 5.30 P.M.

Briggs Mr Wm. Foster's Booth
 Burrows Haynes, blacksmith
 Cardrew Wm. corn, &c. dealer
 Cockerill Geo. cowkpr. Eastcote
 Drayson Miss Eliz. Pattishall
 Harris Mrs Eliza [House]
 Jolley Rich. corn & flour factor
 & grocer, Eastcote & Tiffeld
 Mace Rev. Charles, Baptist
 Mold Mrs Ann, Foster's Booth
 Mold Thos. butcher & shopkpr.
Foster's Booth
 Osborn George, land agent,
Manor House
 Perring, Rev. Charles Augustus, vicar, Upper Vicarage
 Richards Miss Marianne,
Pattishall House
 Rodhouse Wm. parish clerk
 Rush Jos. vict. George, Foster's
Booth
 Tustin Thos. Wm. schoolmaster
 Walker Mrs Anna
 Watson Langton, beerhouse
 Welch Rev. Hy. Forster, vicar,
Nether Vicarage

Wicks Geo. pensioner, Eastcote

Bakers.

Cory George, Ascote
 Howard Robert, Eastcote

Carpenters and Joiners.

Crowley Mark (& blacksmith),
Foster's Booth

Hart Henry Howes, Eastcote

Farmers and Graziers.

(*Marked * are yeomen.*)

Grove Philip, Eastcote
 Harris Geo. Luck (& assistantoverseer), Eastcote
 *Harris Isaac, Ascote
 *Harris John, Brittain
 Haynes John, Eastcote
 *Rush Joseph, Foster's Booth
 *Shepherd Henry

Grocers, &c.

Baseley Roleston, Eastcote
 Cockerill Mrs Elizabeth
 Co-operative Society (Job
 Robinson, manager)

Hart Henry Howes, Eastcote
 Hornsby Joseph, Ascote
 Jolley Rich. Eastcote & Tiffeld
 Mold Thomas, Foster's Booth
 Parsons Thomas, Ascote

Inns and Taverns.

Booth, Wm. Roleston Basely,
Eastcote
 George & Dragon, Jos. Rush,
Foster's Booth
 Red Lion, John Norris (and biscuit maker), Foster's Booth

Beerhouses.

Brown Eli
 Clarke Samuel Wm. Ascote
 Hart Henry Howes, Eastcote
 Jeffrey George, Foster's Booth
 Parsons Thomas, Ascote
 Watson Langton

Machine Proprietors.

Bishop Thomas
 Bishop Thomas, jun.
 Folwell Thomas

Carriers.—To Northampton, Samuel William Clarke, from Ascote; John Furniss and Henry Smith, from Eastcote, on Wednesday and Saturday.

(For remainder of Directory see Blakesley Parish.)

TIFFIELD PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Shutlanger and Blisworth; on the south by Easton Neston; on the west by Towcester and Pattishall; and on the north by Gayton. It contains 1225 acres of the rateable value of £1714; and the gross estimated rental is £1857. Its population, in 1801, was 126; in 1831, 131; in 1841, 146; in 1851, 154; in 1861, 214; and in 1871, 219 souls. The soil varies from a strong grey loam to a cold white clay, and the principal owners are Thomas George Fermor Hesketh, Esq., who is lord of the manor; William Blake, Esq.; Messrs William Whitton, Samuel Bates, John Faulkner, and William Brafield. There are some excellent springs here, one of which supplies Easton Neston House with water.

Manor.—The Earl of Morton held $1\frac{1}{4}$ hide of land here at the time of the Domesday survey, which in the Confessor's time was the freehold of Biscop and Leeving, when it was rated at 5s., but it was now valued at 10s. One William held half a hide and the fifth part of a hide of the earl here, at the same time. This had been the freehold of Leuvin, in the Saxon times, and was certified to lie within the soke of Towcester. In the reign of Henry II., William de Pery held $1\frac{1}{4}$ hide and one small virgate in Tiffeld, of the fee of Hugh Bigod, Earl of Norfolk; Walter de Furtho held 1 hide and 2 small virgates, and William de Keynes 7 small virgates. In the reign of Henry III., the master of the hospital of St John, at Northampton, and Alan de Tiffeld, held one small fee here; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1316), the master of the hospital was certified to be lord of Tiffeld; and in the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), he accounted for one fee, which he held of the Honor of Aquila. Upon the dissolution of the religious houses, the possessions which these knight's hospitalers held in Tiffield were granted, in the fifth of Edward VI. (1552), to Sir Nicholas Thockmorton, of Paulerspury. In the partition of the estate of Sir Arthur, his son, the manor of Tiffield, with the advowson of the rectory, was assigned to Elizabeth, his third daughter, the wife of Richard Lord Dacre. This manor afterwards passed into the hands of the family of Gilbert, and, in 1760, it belonged to the Rev. Bartholomew Keeling. From him it passed, in 1778, to the Rev. Brook Bridges, rector of Orlingbury, for life, with remainder to his daughter Margaretta, and Elizabeth Westley, daughter of Shadrach Westley, gent. In 1805, Samuel Raymond, Esq., husband of Margaretta Bridges, conveyed their right of the moiety of the manor to Thomas Hill, Esq., husband of Elizabeth Westley, who thus became possessed of the whole manor, and sold it, in 1823, to George, 3d Earl of Pomfret, from whom it descended to George Richard William, the 5th Earl of Pomfret; Thomas George Fernor Hesketh, Esq., the present possessor, succeeded in 1870. St James' Abbey, near Northampton, had a virgate of land here, the gift of Alan, son of Alan de Tiffield. This lordship was annexed to the Honor of Grafton on its creation in 1541.

The Village of Tiffield, which is small, is situate 2 miles north of Towcester and 7 south-west of Northampton. There is a feast held here on the first Sunday after the 5th of July.

The Church, dedicated to St John, is in the Early English style, and consists of a nave with clerestory, north and south aisles, south porch, chancel, and an embattled tower containing three bells. The south aisle and porch were added in 1859 at a cost of about £400, chiefly defrayed by the late Lord Southampton and the Northamptonshire Reformatory Committee, for the accommodation of the children in the reformatory, and in 1873 the remainder of the church was thoroughly restored by voluntary subscription, at a cost of about £500, and the chancel rebuilt at the expense of the present rector, when there was a memorial window of three lights placed in the east end to his daughter. It is filled with stained glass, representing in the centre light the "Saviour with the lamb in His arms." The ancient sedilia, of two seats, was replaced in the chancel. When the old chancel was being taken down (1872), a curious and interesting cross was discovered in the foundation, and is now placed in the outside of the south wall of the chancel. The Rectory House, a substantial building of brick, with stone facings, stands a short distance north of the church.

In 1872 a National School (mixed), with teacher's house attached, was erected under the Elementary Education Act, at a cost of £593, defrayed by the proprietors and the principal residents of the parish. It is a very neat building of brick, capable of accommodating 32.

Northamptonshire Society's Reformatory, situate half a mile south-east of the village, was built in 1856, and will hold 50 inmates; the average number in the house is 43. Mr John and Mrs Emma Goode, master and matron; Rev. J. T. H. Delafons, M.A., chaplain; Mr Wrighton Linnell, schoolmaster.

Charities.—The poor and church land, consisting of 6 acres, allotted by the Commissioners of Enclosure, in 1780, in lieu of the right of cutting furze, now lets for £6 a year, which is annually distributed amongst the poor of the parish, and 5s. 3r. 25p. awarded in lieu of some open field land appropriated to the church, which lets for £5 per annum, and is applied towards the repairs of the church. There is a yearly sum of 10s. received from Mrs Jane Leeson's charity, which is distributed to the aged poor of the parish.

Post-Office.—Thomas Perkins, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Towcester at 6.45 A.M., and are despatched at 6.15 P.M.

Brown Mr Jacob
Delafons Rev. John Thomas
Harcourt, M.A. rector
Eyden William, carpenter and wheelwright
Faulkner Miss Edith, mistress
of National school

Goode John, and Mrs Emma, mast. & matr. of reformatory
Jolley Rich. grocer & corn &c.
dealer, and at Estcote
Perkins Thomas, shoemaker and parish clerk
Williams James, beer retailer

Farmers and Graziers

Brafield William (yeoman)
Brown William
Cheney Jonas
Gudgeon Cornelius, Tiffield
Wood House
Stops Thomas Spincks, Manor-
House

TOWCESTER PARISH.

Towcester is bounded on the east by Easton Neston, on the north by Tiffield, on the north-west by Green's-Norton, and on the south by Whittlebury. It contains 3631 acres, and its population in 1801 was 2030; in 1831, 2671; in 1841, 2682; in 1851, 2665; in 1861, 2715; and in 1871, 2677 souls, including the hamlets of Caldecote, Handley, and Wood-Burcote; rateable value, £10,893; and the gross estimated rental is £12,734. The soil varies from a strong clay to a light red loam, and the lordship is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture land. The principal proprietors are Thomas George Fermor Hesketh, Esq. (lord of the manor), Thomas Ridgway, William Whitton, the Trustees of Hulcote Charity, Mrs Catharine Elliott, Richard Howes, Esq., Mr George West, and the Master and Fellows of University College, Oxford.

Manor.—Towcester, or Tovecestre, was a portion of the Terra Regis, or ancient demesne in the hands of the king, both before and after the Norman Conquest. At the Domesday survey it contained 7½ hides of land, which, with a mill of the yearly rent of 13s. 4d., 12 acres of meadow, and a wood two miles in length and one in breadth, was valued in King Edward's time at £12, but was then rated at £25; and 4 hides and 4 parts of half a hide, which before the Conquest was the freehold of Earl Tosti, but was then held by Sigar de Cioches. This latter estate was valued at £6, but the record does not state the part of the hundred in which it lay. In the reign of Henry II., William Earl of Arundel held 7 hides and 4 small virgates in Towcester, and Wybert Atte-Chirche 6 virgates of the fee of the Abbot of St Wandragasile, in Normandy. In the reign of Henry III., William de Munchensi appears to have been possessed of the manor here, which in Henry II.'s time was in the hands of the Earl of Arundel, as was the priory of Bradenestoke, in Wiltshire, of the fee of the Abbot of St Wandragasile. The former convent having lands in the diocese of Rouen, exchanged them for the possessions which belonged to the latter abbey in England. In the 9th of Edward II. (1316) Aymer de Valence was certified to be the lord of Towcester, and in three years after he procured a licence for an annual fair to be held here, on the eve of the Feast of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin (24th March), and the two following days. The manor soon after came into the possession of the family of De Hastings, from which it passed to the De Greys, with whom it continued till the 23d of Henry VII. (1508), when Sir Richard Empson purchased it of Richard de Grey, who, after wasting his estate in gaming and dissipation, died in a tavern in Lombard Street, without issue, in the 15th of Henry VIII. (1524). "This Sir Richard Empson," says Bridges, "is said to have been the son of a sieve-maker, who followed that business here at Towcester, where he had his birth and education. He was promoted by the king to be chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and being bred to the law, was accused of having raised to himself an immense fortune by various methods of extortion, and an oppressive execution of antiquated penal statutes." Upon his attainder the manor was escheated to the king, and in the 3d of Henry VIII. (1512), it was granted to William Compton, Esq., afterwards knighted. In the 5th of Edward VI. (1552), Richard Fermor, Esq., of Easton Neston, died seized of it, and from him it descended lineally to the Earl of Pomfret, who was succeeded in 1870 by Thomas George Fermor Hesketh, Esq., the present possessor.

In 1648, King Charles II. granted to Sir William Fermor, and his heirs, a weekly market to be held on Tuesdays for cattle, and three annual fairs. The manor, which belonged to the prior of Bradenestoke, was in the hands of Sir Richard Empson in the reign of Henry VII., and was in the possession, together with another manor which had been the Earl of Kent's, of Richard Fermor, Esq., at the time of his decease, and are now in the possession of Mr Hesketh.

Antiquities.—The Roman road, Watling Street, now the London and Chester road, passes here in a direct line from Stony Stratford, and is crossed in its passage by several channels, which unite at the east end of the town; and the river Towe being crossed by three bridges, Camden erroneously fixes the triponium of Antonius at Towcester instead of Lilbourne. That Towcester has been originally a Roman station there is no doubt, and several of the best authorities pronounce it the Lactodoro or Lactodorum of that people.

Bury-hill, a great tumulus at the N.E. side of the town, on the southern bank of the rivulet which incloses the town on the north, is supposed to be the site of the speculum or watch-tower. This mount, which seems to have been raised against a northern enemy, was surrounded with a moat, which is now filled up. It is composed of earth and gravel; its diameter is about 100 feet, and height about 24 feet. The top, which is flat, and of a circular form, has been planted with Scotch fir, by the late Earl of Pomfret. The Roman coins found in digging here prove it to have been an appendage to a Roman station. In 1824 fragments of urns, Samian ware, and pottery were found on the hill, and coins have been disinterred on almost every occasion when the ground is opened for building or agricultural purposes.

Towcester Antiquities.—The late Samuel Deacon, Esq. of Towcester, accumulated for many years a fine series, which were, like so many rare collections, lost at his death. More than one hundred Roman coins, and immense quantities of Samian and other pottery, were turned up in the excavations required at the railway station alone, and are now in the collection of Mr Tite. These, and other objects of special and real interest connected with the Roman occupation of the locality, are now for inspection lent to the Northampton Museum. The Saxons, it would appear, took advantage of this little fortress, and added the fosse which surrounded it. From them it received its present title of Bury, or Borough, to which has been since added the double tautology of Berry Mount Hill. On the N.W. side of the town are vestiges of a fosse, and the ruins of a tower supposed to be Saxon. The Saxons called the town Tofeceastre, and in early records it is called Tosseter, or Tovecestre, from its having been a castrum or Roman station on the river Tove and the ancient Watling Street. In the time of Edward the Elder, it was so strongly fortified that a vigorous attack made upon it in 917 by a large army of the Danes was wholly unsuccessful, and the besiegers were compelled to raise the siege. But fearing their return, and likewise a second and perhaps more disastrous attempt, the king, in 921, refortified the town with a strong stone wall and deep trench, some traces of which are even now discernible. "The Danes," writes Mr Bridges, "of Northampton and Leicester, breaking the treaty they had concluded with Edward, marched to Towcester, and made an assault upon it for a whole day; but the inhabitants signalled their courage upon the occasion, and, holding out till succour came, obliged the enemy to quit the siege and retire. Upon this King Edward, towards the close of the summer, advancing with his army to Passenham, took up his residence there till he had fortified the city of Towcester—so the Saxon annals call it—and encompassed it with a stone wall." A most violent storm of rain and hail occurred here on the 6th of June 1573, by which six houses were "borne downe," and fourteen more "sore perished," by the flood. The hailstones were square and six inches round. One child was drowned, and a number of sheep and other cattle, some of which, when the water subsided, were found lying on the hedges where the flood had left them.

In the Civil War, in 1643, Towcester bore a prominent part, it being the principal garrison of the Royalists, to keep the Northampton Parliamentarians in check. In February, Prince Rupert, with his brother Maurice and the Earl of Carnarvon, entered Northamptonshire; and after plundering Towcester and the neighbourhood, proceeded into Warwickshire. In August, a sharp conflict took place within less than a mile of Towcester, between a party of about thirty horse from Banbury, who were levying contributions, and 120 Parliamentarians; and, notwithstanding the disparity of numbers, the fight was continued for more than half an hour. Captain James Chamberlain, who commanded the Royalists, was killed; Captain Lawson, the other commander, wounded; five of the Parliamentary soldiers left dead on the field, and twenty severely wounded. A considerable section of the royal army, commanded by Prince Rupert, was quartered at Towcester, and constant skirmishes took place between the adverse parties. On one occasion, a party of the Newport horse, headed by Colonel Harvey, surprised Towcester in the night, slew the sentinels, killed about thirty men, took two colours and twenty prisoners, whom they brought to Newport, without the loss of a single man, and only two slightly wounded. On another occasion, Captains Butler and Wollaston, and two other captains of the Parliamentary army, united their troops, and surprising their opponent's quarters at Duncot, near Towcester, killed about twenty, wounded several, and took about thirty prisoners, besides horses. A detachment of a troop or two from Northampton, under Major Lydcot, attacked a party of Royalists near Towcester on the 24th of June 1644, killed twenty-five who refused quarter, and secured a number of prisoners. "Both armies," says Mr Baker, "faced each other in battle array on the 28th; the king in Grimsbury field, and Waller on the opposite bank of the Charwell. The following morning, Waller having taken a decidedly advantageous position near Banbury, the king drew off towards Daventry, leaving a strong guard of dragoons at Cropedy bridge, the pass over the Charwell between the two armies. Waller again attempting to cross the bridge, was repulsed with much loss, and chased to a considerable distance; but rallying again, formed a junction with Major-General Brown, a few days after (July 2), on a large common, within a mile of Towcester, where they remained the whole of the next day, and entered Northampton the day following with 7000 horse and foot." In June 1645, the principal armies of the contending parties occupied nearly the same relative positions. On the night of the 13th the king was at Lubanham, and Fairfax at Guilsborough, and the following morning witnessed the sanguinary conflict on the memorable field of Naseby. (For the Battle of Naseby, see page 360.)

THE TOWN OF TOWCESTER.

Towcester, as has been stated, is situated on the Watling Street, "a right noble street," as Drayton calls it, on the banks of the river Tove or Towe, over which there are three bridges. It is distant about 8 miles S.W. by S. of Northampton, 4 from the Blisworth station of the London and North-Western Railway, and 60 miles N.W. from London. The approaches to it are pleasant, and it consists chiefly of one long street, formed by the Chester road. There are many well-built houses, several good shops and excellent inns, and two smaller streets formed by the roads to Stony Stratford and Brackley. "Towcester," says De Foe, "is a pretty town, of Roman antiquity, through which, in a straight line, runs the Watling Street; and the inhabitants of all ages are here employed in a silken manufacture and lace-making." The lace trade is still carried on, but the silk manufacture has long since ceased to exist, and the inhabitants are now chiefly employed in the manufacture of boots and shoes. The town is well lighted with gas since 1838, and there are 35 public lamps. The gas at present sells at 6s. 10d. per 1000 cubic feet. The Market on Tuesday is well supplied, and fairs for all sorts of cattle and merchandise are held on Shrove Tuesday, May 12, the Tuesday before the 10th of October, and the 29th of October. "How thoroughly the town was once a town of inns, may be sufficiently seen in this suburb" (Jubilee Row), writes the author of an interesting little volume entitled "Rambles Roundabout." "The lofty gateways which now lead to tumbledown workshops, or to small tenements, led, in olden time, to spacious yards for the reception of merchandise, and were surrounded with stabling, warehouses, and dormitories. The 'Sun Inn' may be taken as a type of many others which have ceased to exist. The 'Talbot' and the 'Pomfret Arms' appear to be of later date, but they stand upon the sites of older inns, and retain the spacious yards and ample entrances so indispensable to the hostleries of old times. The 'Talbot' was probably an inn in the time of Chaucer, for in 1440 it was sold to Archdeacon Sponne, the good rector of Towcester, who gave it to the town, and in the deed (of conveyance) it is described as the 'Tabard.' In 1643 it is first called the 'Talbot,' but why it is so called is not stated. 'The Talbot' (a white hound) was the cognisance of the ancient house of Shrewsbury, which may have something to do with the change of name. In 1642 John Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury, fell in a fight before Northampton, between the forces of the Parliament under Lord Brooke, and the Cavaliers. On the 16th of January 1668, a duel was fought in a close near Barne Elms, between Francis Talbot, eleventh Earl of Shrewsbury, Sir John Talbot, and Bernard Howard, a son of the Earl of Arundel, on one side; and the Duke of Buckingham, Sir Robert Holmes, and Captain William Jenkins on the other. The Earl of Shrewsbury had challenged the Duke of Buckingham, who had supplanted him in the affections of his wife, the daughter of the second Earl of Cardigan. She is said to have held the Duke's horse, in the habit of a page, while he was fighting with her husband." According to Pepys, the Earl of Shrewsbury was run through the body, and died of his wounds on the 16th of March following. Sir John Talbot was wounded in one of his arms, Captain Jenkins was killed on the spot, and the rest of the combatants more or less wounded. The Countess of Shrewsbury found a second husband; notwithstanding the infamous notoriety of her conduct towards the first. She died in 1702; and a portrait of her by Lely, as Minerva, was bought by the late Sir Robert Peel at the Stowe sale for £68, 5s. In one of the windows of the "Talbot" are the arms of Archdeacon Sponne, with his name beneath. One of the heir-looms of the house is an oak chair, ornamentally carved. It is known as Dean Swift's chair, the tradition being, that the Dean of St Patrick's used to occupy it when he put up at the "Talbot" in his journeys to and from London and Dublin. The "Pomfret Arms," once called the "Saracen's Head," is apparently not more than two centuries old. The figures of Venus and Apollo occupy niches on either side of the gateway from the street, and are supposed to have once adorned the gardens at Easton Neston. A rather amusing anecdote concerning these figures is related in "Rambles Roundabout." The author says, "When Mr Tunnard's predecessor entered upon the house, the statues naturally enough attracted the notice of the landlady, Mrs Popple. She accordingly addressed herself to the postboy for information respecting them. 'I can't tell you anything about 'em, ma'am,' was the reply; 'but they calls 'em Junus and Venus.' 'And who was Junus and Venus?' was Mrs Popple's further question. 'I don't know who they was, mum,' said the post-boy, 'but you can read all about 'em in the Bible!'" Towcester, adds the writer just quoted, must at one time have been almost entirely a street of inns. There was an "Angell Inn" in 1448, and there was a "Bell" also in Towcester, as well as a "Tabard." It is mentioned in an enfeoffment as "Le Bell" in 1473. An inn called the "Old Bell" stood at the corner of the Brackley road until within the last few years. There was the "Swan Inn," too, and a second "White Horse," nearly all of which have disappeared; but the chief posting-house in Towcester in the palmy days of coaching was the "White Horse," which was, to use a pun of the period, put hors de combat by the railway. The premises are now occupied as wine vaults by Mr Vernon. Not the least interesting relic of the olden time is an old house in the market-place, in the occupation of Mr Joseph Key, butcher. It is at least 300 years old, and is a good specimen of the ordinary houses in towns and villages in the days of Henry VIII. and Queen Elizabeth.

The Church, dedicated to St Lawrence, stands in a spacious churchyard, and is supposed to occupy the site of the Roman basilica. It is a handsome structure, and consists of a nave, north and south aisles, south porch and chancel, and a tower 90 feet in height, which contains a peal of six bells. The interior is very beautifully fitted up; at the west end of the nave is a handsome gallery of oak in panels, erected in 1627 by Henry Newby, a citizen of London, but a native of this town. Two side galleries were added in 1795, and extended in 1836, when the church was repaired. The Right Hon, George Earl of Pomfret presented a beautiful organ in 1817. There are 1176 sittings in the church, 678 of which are free. Five pews are awarded to Hanley, two to Wood-Burcote, and three to Caldecote. Nearly £2000 were expended in the internal alterations, inclusive of the liberal donation of velvet cushions for the pulpit, reading-desk, and communion table, by the late Samuel Deacon, Esq., and the painted east window of the chancel, exhibiting in the centre full-sized figures of our Saviour between Moses and St John the Evangelist on the right, and St John the Baptist and St Paul on the left, the joint contribution of Mrs Sabin and John Lovell, Esq. The roof, by Bernasconi, in square compartments diagonally divided, with angels holding blank shields for the springers, cost £500. The old open timber roof of the chancel, put up by Sir Robert Banastre in 1640, is still retained. In the north wall of the north aisle is a small door and stone staircase, which led to the rood-loft, and at the upper end of the south aisle was formerly a chapel belonging to the chantry, which was founded by the Rev. William Sponne, in the reign of Henry VI. There was also a chapel at the same end of the north aisle, called the Chapel of St Mary. Some fragments of painted glass in a window in the south aisle are the remains of a window which was destroyed by the puritanical zeal of one Robert Stichberry. In reference to this subject, Mr Baker, quoting from a pamphlet published in 1642, states, "that two days after, the wife of Stichberry was seized with a sudden torment in her limbs, which ultimately brought her to her last, and that Stichberry himself died howling mad." The tower and aisles were commenced in the reign of Edward IV., and finished in that of Richard III., and are in the Early English style. The chancel is in the Decorated style of the third Edward; and the chancel arch springs from two corbels, which represent figures of jesters in grotesque attitudes. Amongst the monuments is an ancient altar-tomb to the memory of Archdeacon Sponne, who was rector of this parish, and died in 1448. The living is a discharged vicarage in the Deanery of Brackley, endowed with £200 private benefaction and £200 royal bounty, and is in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough. Its present value is about £250 per annum, and the Rev. W. H. Lee, M.A., is the present vicar. The rectorial tithes have been commuted for £415 per annum—viz., £75 for the tithes of Towcester, and its hamlets of Wood-Burcote and Caldecote; £120 for Hanley, and £220 for the parish of Abthorpe, with the hamlet of Foscote. Amongst the various incumbents of this parish was Benedict Cajetan, a native of Aregni, in Campagna di Roma, afterwards Pope Boniface VIII. On his elevation to the Papal throne in 1294, he resigned this rectory, and died in Rome on the 12th of October 1303. He added the "Sextus Decretalium" as a supplement to the five books of the canon law which were extant before. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners are the owners of the impropriate rectorial tithes of the parish. The Vicarage House stands south-west of the churchyard.

The Baptist Chapel, erected in 1788, is a plain building, which will seat about 600 persons; the Independent Chapel will accommodate 400, and was built in 1845; and the Wesleyan Chapel, erected in 1809, will afford sitting-room for about 350 persons. The Sunday-schools in connection with these chapels are well attended. The National School (mixed) was built in 1851, at a cost of about £1100; average attendance, 150. A new Infant School was built in 1870, at a cost of £360; average attendance, 90.

Towcester Poor-Law Union comprises twenty-three parishes and townships—viz., Abthorpe, Adstone, Blakesley, Blisworth, Bradden, Cold Higham, Easton Neston, Gayton, Greens-Norton, Litchborough, Maidford, Pattishall, Plumpton, Shutlanger, Silverstone, Slapton, Stoke Bruerne, Tiffield, Towcester, Wappenham, Weedon Loys, Whittlebury and Woodend, and embraces an area of 62 square miles.

The Workhouse, which is a substantial building, was erected in 1836, at the north-east end of the town, at a cost of about £3000, and will accommodate 208 persons. The building is of oolite stone, from the hamlet of Foscote, and the design was by Sir G. G. Scott. The average number of paupers for the past year was about 80, and the average weekly cost of each was 2s. 9d. The affairs of the union are conducted by a board of 31 guardians, of whom George Osborn, Esq., is chairman; John Middleton Vernon, Esq., vice-chairman; and Mr William Whitton, clerk. The Rev. J. T. Harcourt Delafons is chaplain, Miss Mary Ann Dawe, matron, and Miss Elizabeth Warren, schoolmistress; and the medical officers are Messrs William Harris Heygate, James Parsons Knott, William John Hunt, and Arthur Hill; Thomas Percy, master. Prayers are read twice each day, and full church service is performed on Sundays.

Charities.—William Sponne, D.D., Archdeacon of Norfolk, and the rector of this parish in the reign of Henry VI., by will demised the Talbot Inn at Towcester, and several closes, which, according to a survey made in 1820, amounted to 57a. 1r. 33p., to certain trustees, for the support of the two chaplains of the chantry founded by him in the parish church, and in which they were to perform divine offices for his soul at the altar of the Blessed Virgin, in the chapel at the east end of the aisle. He also directed that whenever any fifteenth of the liege goods of the king, granted by the commonality of England, was to be paid to the king, it should be discharged by the trustees under his will, instead of being levied on the parish; and that the surplus should be expended in the repairs of the footways of the town. The estates belonging to this charity are vested in feoffees chosen from amongst the parishioners of Towcester, the number of whom when complete is fifteen. Two of the feoffees are appointed in succession every year to receive and apply the rents of the estates, and an annual meeting of the feoffees is held in Easter week for the examination of the accounts, and the general administration of the trust. The annual income of the charity is applied for the purpose of the repairs of the Talbot Inn and premises, and the keeping in repair the monument of the founder in Towcester church; and the surplus of the rents, after payment of the expenses of the trust, is expended in the pavement of the streets and distribution amongst the poor of the parish.

The Grammar-School.—The college or chantry house, founded by Archdeacon Sponne, was valued at the dissolution at £19, 6s. 8d. per annum, and, with a messuage belonging to it, were granted in the fourth of Edward VI. (1550) to Richard Hyebourn and William Dalby, who sold them to the feoffees of the said Archdeacon's will, by whom they were converted into a grammar-school and schoolmaster's house in the year 1552. The endowment now consists of two cottages and a small garden in Park Lane, a close of 1a. 2r. 30p. of land, which was allotted at the enclosure in lieu of rights of common; £7, 2s. 8d. per annum, payable out of the crown rents of the county, varying 4s. from the original pension of £7, 6s. 8d., to the schoolmaster, or second chaplain of the chantry. Besides the above, there is other property, arising from benefactions either given to the school itself, or for the education of poor children generally, which is now become annexed to the institution. The annual value of the endowment at present is £63, 9s., which, after deducting the income-tax and repairs of the school, leaves the net income about £57, 10s., for which 31 children are taught free. The master is appointed by the feoffees, who usually choose one qualified to teach the classics. The old building had once an ancient doorway facing the market-place, and some stone chimneypieces of the fifteenth century; but, being much decayed, it was sold by the feoffees in 1870, and was purchased by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, with the view of giving the site to the vicar for a garden. One of the rooms retains much of its Tudor character, and the fireplace, ceiling, and doors, are very interesting. The wall which encloses the house from the street is of the same period, and the entrance is under a very perfect Tudor arch. The feoffees, we understand, are desirous of building a new school on another site, which was promised by the late Lady Anna Maria Arabella Fermor Hesketh for that purpose.

Almshouses.—Thomas Bickerstaffe, of London, a native of this town, erected almshouses for three poor aged women; and by will, dated 20th January 1695, devised to the trustees of Sponne's charity a piece of ground in Towcester, and the sum of £250, to lay out in the purchase of an estate for the endowment of the same. Land was purchased in 1698, in the open field in Farthingstone, in lieu of which 28a. 17p. were allotted at the enclosure, which lets for about £70 a year. The almshouses were rebuilt in 1815, and the inmates receive 7s. per week each, and coals. The tablet which the founder set up bears this inscription :—

“ He that earneth wages by labour and care,
By the blessing of God may have something to spare.
T. B., 1689.”

There are two other almshouses for poor widows also, one of which was built, in 1788, by subscription, and the other by Mr Simon Adams prior to 1801. The funds of the whole have been augmented by the following benefactions—viz., £167 3 per cent. consols, arising from a donation of £100 given in 1776 by Mrs Mary Burnhill, as executrix to Joseph Newman; £100 3 per cent. consols, purchased with £80 given in 1789 by Mrs Sarah Churchill; £15, 6s. 2d., 3 per cent. consols, purchased with £10 given in 1800 by Mrs Mary Cooke; £169, 3s. 4d., 3 per cent. consols, purchased with £120 bequeathed by Mr Simon Adams in 1801; £100 bequeathed by Mr James Hall in 1805; and £100 3 per cent. consols bequeathed by Mrs Sarah Churchill in 1814. Mrs Mary Sheppard, late of this town, about the year 1836–37, bequeathed the sum of £400 to the feoffees of Bickerstaffe's charity in trust, the interest to be paid to the late Mr Samuel Deacon during his life, and after his decease, to the poor occupants of the two latter-named almshouses. This bequest being barred by the Statute of Mortuaries, only £306, 12s. came into the hands of the feoffees. In 1829, Miss Martha Stokes gave £100, and in 1845, Gilbert Flesher gave £19, 19s., the interest of both sums to be applied to the use of the occupants of the almshouses.

The Sunday-school is endowed with £191, 17s., 3 per cent. consols, left by Sir John Knightley in 1802.

The Town-Hall and Corn Exchange, situate in the principal street, is an excellent building of stone, erected in 1865, at a cost of about £3600, including £600, the cost of the site, by a company of 87 shareholders, with a nominal capital of £4000, raised in 500 shares of £8 each. The building consists of a large hall, reading and coffee rooms, offices, &c., and a tower in which is a clock. The hall, which is occasionally used for the delivery of lectures and other public meetings, will accommodate 400 persons. The 2d company of the Northamptonshire Rifle Volunteers was embodied in 1859, and has a total number on roll of 78 men—Henry J. Fitz-Roy, Esq., is captain, and Richard Howes, Esq., lieutenant.

Petty Sessions for the Towcester division of the county are held at the police station on every alternate Tuesday, when two or more of the following magistrates preside :—His Grace the Duke of Grafton, Hon. H. Hely Hutchinson, Rev. W. H. Clarke, and Rt. Edmund Oliver, Esq. Towcester is a polling-place at the election of M.P. for the southern division of the county. The police establishment consists of a superintendent, inspector, serjeant, and eleven men, whose district extends over thirty parishes. The police station, built in 1852, consists of magistrates' room (in which the petty session and county court are held), and house accommodation for the inspector and two constables, and room for eight prisoners.

Towcester County Court District comprises the following parishes and hamlets, &c. :—Abthorpe, Adstone, Alderton, Ashton, Blakesley, Blisworth, Bradden, Cold Higham, Cosgrove, Easton Neston with Hulcote, Furtho, Gayton, Grafton Regis, Greens-Norton, Hartwell, Litchborough, Maidford, Pattishall, Passenham, Paulerspury, Plumpton, Potterspury, Salcey Lodge, Shutlanger, Silverstone, Slapton, Stoke Bruerne, Tiffeld, Towcester, Wappenham, Weston and Weedon Loys, Whittlebury, Wicken, Woodend, and Yardley Gobion. Courts are held monthly, except in September.

A branch of the Northampton Savings Bank is held here; and the provident societies in the town are the Freemasons' Lodge of Fidelity, No. 445, and the order of Oddfellows, of the Manchester and Nottingham bodies; and there is the Towcester Friendly Institution, established in 1837, which affords an opportunity to parents of making provision for their children by endowments.

BURCOTE, or WOOD BURCOTE, as it is generally called, is a small hamlet containing two farmhouses and a few cottages, on the south-west side of the parish, one mile south-west by south of Towcester.

CALDECOTE, or CALDICOTT, usually pronounced Caucote, is another hamlet, containing about six good houses and several cottages, on the northern side of the parish, about one and a half mile north of Towcester. Here is a small Wesleyan chapel, erected in 1846.

HANDLEY, or HANLEY PARK, containing 863 acres, the property of the Master and Fellows of University College, Oxford, forms the S.E. division of this parish, and is from one and a half to two miles of Towcester. It was formerly within the forest of Whittlebury, and in the fifth of Charles I. (1629), the king, in consideration of £6000, granted it to Sir Simon Bennet, Bart., Beachampton, in Buckinghamshire. Sir Simon, by will dated 15th August 1631, devised the reversion of this estate, after the death of Elizabeth, his wife, to the University College, Oxford, in which he had been educated, for the advancement of learning there, for enlarging and completing the buildings, and founding four new fellowships and four new scholarships. The whole of the north side of the larger quadrangle of the college fronting the High Street, and the south side containing the chapel and hall, were erected by means of this bequest, at a cost of about £4000, and new fellowships and scholarships have been added and incorporated with the old foundation of the college. Handley Lodge is a commodious residence, and remains nearly in its original state.

TOWCESTER DIRECTORY.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank.—Miss Mary Ann Simco, post-mistress. Letters arrive from all parts at 4.10 and 9.45 A.M., and are despatched at 8 A.M., and 12.50 and 8.55 P.M. Rural messengers despatched at 6 A.M.

ABBOTT William, carpenter and vict. Nelson's Arms, High street

Adams Edwin, linen & woollen draper, High st.

Ager Chas. hairdr. & sub-bailiff of Co. Ct., High st.

Ashby Edw. Jas. cabtmkr. and upholstr. High st.

Ashwell Thos., draper (Vernon & A.,) High st.

Ayers Mrs Anne, Wood Burcote

Ayers John William, farmer, Wood Burcote

BAKER Jas. fishmonger and fruiterer, High st.

Baker Wm. Westwood, glass, china, &c. dealer and shoe agent, High street

Barnicle Mrs. Eliz. vict. Crown, High street

Basford John, gardr. and seedsman, Park st.

Basford Samuel, greengrocer, High street

Beesley & Sons, auctioneers, land and estate

agents, High street, and Wappenham

Beesley John (B. & Sons), and printer, High st.

Beesley William (B. & Sons), h. Wappenham

Bent Miss Mary, dressmaker, High street

Betts William Maydwell, chemist, High st.

Birch John, auditor, railway, Albert villas,

Blaxley Miss Sophia, lodgings, High street

Bleek Lewin Henry, saddler, High street

Brown Benjamin, ironmonger, hop, and seed

merchant, High street

Brown Mr John, High street

Brown John, jun. plumber, paintr. &c. High st.

Brown Job, furniture broker, High street

Brown Miss Mary Ann, milliner, High street

Brown William, plumber, painter, &c. High st.

Bull Miss Hannah, butcher, High street

Burchell Mrs Sarah, vict. Wheat Sheaf, High st.

Bustin Edward Henry, saddler, High street

Butcher John, letter carrier, Park street

CAKEBREAD Saml. tombstone cutr. &c., High st.

Clarke Charles, shopkeeper, High street

Clarke Isaac, blacksmith, Park street

Clarke Chas. shopkr. and beer retlr. Park st.

Cockerill Mrs Ann, farmer, Caldecote

Coe John, High street

Cook John, pawnbroker, High street

Collins Rev. Robt. Codrington, vicar of Easton

Neston, Park street

Crow Richard, carpenter and joiner, High st.

Crow Richard, jun. vict. Bear, High street

DAVIES Rev. Isaac (Indpt.) High street

Davis Samuel, veterinary surgeon, High street

Duffett Frederick, shoemaker, Church yard

Durran John, watchmaker, High street

EDWARDS Sommersby, solr. (Greville & E.) High st.

Elliott Mrs Catherine, Park street

Elliott Mrs Elizabeth, High street

Evans Arthur Griffith, surgeon, High street.

FISHER Rev. James (Wesleyan), Park street

Foster William, letter carrier, Park street

Foulks James, butcher, High street

Franklin Jno. Thos. frmr. Handley Park Farm

Frost John, vict. White Hart, Park street

Frost Thomas, baker, High street

GALLARD Joseph Lee, corn miller and oil-cake merchant, Towcester Mills
 Gallard Mrs Martha, Park street
 Gaybell John, flour dealer, High street
 Gibbon Henry, drill serjeant, Park street
 Godfrey Thomas, cooper, High street
 Greville & Edwards, solicitors, High street
 Greville Arthr. Edwin (G. & Edwards), High st.
 Gurney Thos. White, corn and coal merchant, maltster, and hop factor, Park street

HAMBIDGE Thos. leather seller, High street
 Harris William, manager of brickworks
 Harwood Mrs Ann, High street
 Hawkins Mrs Susan, shopkpr. Wood Burcote
 Befford George, hardware dealer, High street
 Hewson Joseph Frankish, chemist, High st.
 Hickson John, tailor and draper, High street
 Higham John Ayres, coal mercht. &c. High st.
 Higham Joseph, vict. Talbot, commercial and posting-house, High street
 Holloway George, cattle dealer, High street
 Howes Mrs Mary Anne, baker and grocer, High street.
 Howes Richard, solicitor, High street, and Northampton
 Howkins Martin, brazier & tinplate wr. High st.
 Hurfurt Jas. Brooks, printer, bookseller, book-binder, statr. & acct.-book mfr. and theol. library and reading-room, and sub-distributor of stamps, High street
 Hutchings William, basketmaker, High street

INNS Samuel, farmer, Park street

JACOB Simon, tailor and draper, High street
 Jarvis John, carrier, High street
 Jenkinson Mr William, High street
 Jenkinson Wm. jun. linen & woollen draper, woclastapler, clothier, and hatter, High st.
 Jepsen Hy. Whitby, manager of Towcester Old Bank, High street
 Jepsen John Hanbury, bank clerk, High street
 Johnson Mrs Ann, tailor and draper, High st.
 Johnson Benjamin, coal dealer, High street
 Jones James Cornelius, master of National school, & bookseller & stationer, High st.

KENDALL William, wheelwright, High street
 Key Joseph, butcher, High street
 Kirby Miss Maria, High street
 Kirby Saml. John, chemist & druggist, High st.

LABRUM Mrs Caroline, vict. Swan, High st.
 Laurence George Richard, surgeon, High st.
 Lee Rev. William Hill, M.A., vicar
 Lewin Edward, grocer, and agent for W. & A. Gilbey, wine merchants, High street
 Linthwaite George, grocer, &c. High street
 Lovell Frederick, cabinetmaker, &c. Park st.

MANNING Charles, farmer, High street
 Manning Oliver, farmer, High street
 Manning Mrs Sarah, farmer, High street
 Marlow William, beer retailer, Wood Burcote
 Martin Mrs Ann, butcher, High street
 Martin Mrs Elizabeth, vict. Dolphin, High st.
 Matthews David, blacksmith, High street
 May Isaac, beer retailer, High street
 May William, j. shoemaker, High street
 Mayo Frederick, butcher, Park street
 Mayo Mrs Harriet, vict. Bull's Head, Park st.

Mayo William George, saddler, High street
 Meads Edward, vict. Plough Inn, High street
 Mercer Thos. banker (Towcester Old Bank) h. Mears Ashby
 Minards Geo. carrier and beer retlr. High st.

NEWMAN Mrs, grocer, &c., High street
 Newett John, farmer, Wood Burcote

OSBORNE, Jas. superintendt. of police, High st.
 Osborne Hopcraft, farmer, Caldecote
 Owen Robert, carpenter, &c. Albert street

PACKER Henry, inspector of police, High st.
 Percy Thos. master of union workhouse
 Peasnell James, vict. Albion, and mail contractor and furniture remover, High street
 Percival Thomas Miers, solicitor, High street
 Pettitt Benjamin, shopkeeper, Park street.
 Phipps Pickering & Richard, brewers, maltstra. wine and spirit merchant (W. E. Vernon, manager), High st. and Northampton
 Pilgrim Joseph, tailor, High street
 Porter George, traffic superintendent
 Powell Mrs Ann Bates, butcher, High street
 Powell Robert, shoemaker, Paradise row
 Powell Saml. boot and shoemaker, and leather seller, Park street

RATLEY William, tea dealer, High street
 Richardson David, grocer & tea dealer, High st.
 Ridgway Thomas, Esq. Elm Lodge
 Robertson Charles, boot & shoemaker, Park st.
 Rodhouse Thomas Blencowe, bookseller, stationer, &c. High street
 Roper Mrs Caroline, High street

SANSON Samuel, relieving officer for Towcester union, Rose terrace
 Savage Geo. brick manufactur. h. Stoke Bruerne
 Savage Samuel, tailor, Albert terrace
 Savage Mrs Sarah, shopkeeper, &c. High street
 Sewell Elijah, beer retailer, High street
 Shackleton Thomas, baker, shopkeeper, and rag dealer, High street
 Shackleton William, pawnbroker, High street
 Sharman John, clothes dealer, Park street
 Sharp Mrs Charlotte, hairdresser, High st.
 Sharp George, higgler, High street
 Sharp Samuel, baker, High street
 Sharpe Joseph, shoemaker, Albert row
 Sheppard Mr Job Goodman, High street
 Sheppard Mrs Sarah, High street
 Simmonds Wm., organist, prof. of music, and dealer in fancy goods, High street
 Smith Mrs Mary, ladies' boardg. school, Park st.
 Spencer Joseph Willaher, grocer, tea dealer, hop & cheese factor, & agent for European Wine Company, High street
 Steane John, day and boarding school, Park st.
 Swannell Mrs Catherine, ladies' school, High st.

TAYLOR Mrs Ann, High street
 Teague Mr Daniel, High street
 Teeton James, insurance agent, Park street
 Thomason George, bricklayer & mason, High street
 Thomason Samuel, bricklayer & mason, High street
 Tite Samuel Cooper, chemist, druggist, and seedsman, Exchange

Towcester Book Club and Circulating Library
 Towcester Old Bank (Mercer, Whitworth, and Wallis), High street
 Travil Edmund, butcher, High street
 Tunnard Jno. vict. Pomfret Arms, commercial and posting-house, High street

VENNER Frederick Bell, stationmaster
 Vernon John Middleton, wine and spirit merchant, High street, and Northampton
 Vernon & Ashwell, linen & woollen drapers, High street
 Vernon Wm. Ebenezer, brewery managr. High st.
 Vernon Thomas (V. & Ashwell), High street

WALLING Francis, stud-groom, Park street
 Wallis Owen (Towcester Old Bank), h. Overstone
 Ward James, confectioner, dealer in wines and beer retailer, High street
 Ward William, baker, Park street
 Warwick (Miss Elizabeth) & Causbrook (Miss Ellen) straw bonnet makers, Park street
 Wass Thomas, j. shoemaker, High street
 Watkins Robt. Webb, F.R.C.S. surgeon, High st.
 Webb Henry, vict. Peacock, High street
 Webb Jno. ironmonger, brazier, and tinplate worker, High street

Webb John Edward, compositor, Albert st.
 Webb Josiah, shopkeeper, Caldecote
 Webb Paul, basket & sieve maker & seedsman, High street
 Webb Richard, shoemaker, Park street
 Webb William, carrier, High street
 Webb William, shopkeeper, Park street
 Wheeler John & Sons (John, jun. & Thomas), timber merchants & builders, High street
 White John George, plumber, painter, &c. Pomfret terrace
 White Thomas, tobacco &c. dealer, High st.
 Whitworth Henry Billington (Towcester Old Bank), h. Northampton
 Whitton William, solicitor, Corn Exchange
 Wickins Smith, coal merchant, railway station & Roads, Wappenham & Helmdon, h. Hartwell
 Wilcox Joseph Watts, sugar boiler, High st.
 Williams John, coal merchant and rag dealer, High street
 Wilson Thos. Wm. watchmaker, High street
 Wilson Wm. bricklayer & stonemason, Park st.
 Woodin John and Thomas, farmers, Handley
 Woodward Henry, shoemaker, and dealer in jewellery, and sewing machines, High st.
 Wootton William, farmer, Caldecote
 Wright George, commercial traveller, High st.

TOWCESTER TRADES AND PROFESSIONS.

Academies and Schools.

(Marked * take boarders.)

*Smith Mrs Mary, Park street
 *Steane John (coml.), Park st.
 Swarnell Mrs Catherine, High st.
 National School, J. C. Jones & Mrs Annie Preedy, High st.

Attorneys.

Greville & Edwards, High st.
 Howes Rd. High st. and Northampton
 Whitton William, Exchange
 Percival Thos. Miers, High st.

Auctioneers, Land and Estate Agents.

Beealey & Sons, High street, and Wappenham

Bakers.

Howes Mrs Mary Anne, High st.
 Frost Thomas, High street
 Shackleton Thomas, High st.
 Sharp Samuel, High street
 Ward James (& confectioner & dealer in wines), High street
 Ward William, Park street

Bank.

Towcester Old Bank (Mercer, Whitworth, & Wallis), draw on Williams, Deacon, & Co. London; Hy. Whitby Jepson, manager, High street

Basketmakers.

Hutchings William, High st.
 Webb Paul, High street

Blacksmiths.

Clarke Isaac, Park street
 Matthews, David, High street

Booksellers.

Hurfurt Jas. Brooks, High st.
 Jones Jas. Cornelius, High st.
 Rodhouse Thos. B. High st.

Boot and Shoe Makers.

Baker Wm. W. (agent), High st.
 Duffett Frederick, Church yard
 Powell Robert, Paradise row
 Powell Samuel, Park street
 Robertson Charles, Park street
 Sharpe Joseph, Albert row
 Woodward Henry, High street

Braziers and Tinnerns.

Howkins Martin, High street
 Webb John, High street

Brewers.

Phipps P. & R. High street, and Northampton

Brick & Tile Manufac.

Savage Geo. and Stoke Bruerne

Builder.

Wheeler Jno. & Sons, High st.

Butchers.

Bull Miss Hannah, High st.
 Foulks James, High street
 Key Joseph, High street
 Martin Mrs Ann, High street
 Mayo Frederick, Park street
 Powell Mrs Ann Bates, High st.
 Travil Edmund, High street

Cabinetmakers.

Ashby Edward James (and upholsterer), High street
 Lovell Frederick, Park street

Carpenters and Joiners.

Abbott William, High street
 Crow Richard, High street
 Owen Robert, Albert street

Cattle Dealer.

Holloway George, High street

Chemists and Druggists.

Betts Wm. M. High street
 Hewson Jos. Frankish, High st.
 Tite S.C. (& seedsman.), Exchange

Clothes Dealer.

Sharman John, Park street

Coal Merchants.

Gurney Thos. White, Park st.
 Higham John Ayres, High st.
 Johnson Ben. (dlr.) High st.
 Wickins Smith, Railway station
 Williams John, High street

Cooper.

Godfrey Thomas, High street

Corn & Flour Dealers

Gaybell Jno. (flour dlr.) High st.
 Gurney Thomas White, (corn merchant) Park street
 Higham John Ayres, High st.

Corn Miller.

Gallard Joseph Lee (& oil-cake merchant), Towcester mills

Farmers and Graziers.

Ayres Jno. Wm. Wood Burcote
 Cockerill Mrs My. A. Caldecote
 Franklin J. T. Handley Park
 Innes Samuel, Park street
 Manning Charles, High street
 Manning Oliver, High street
 Manning Mrs Sarah, High st.
 Newitt John, Wood Burcote
 Osborne Hopcraft, Caldecote
 Woodin Jno. & Thos. Handley
 Wootton William, Caldecote

Fire and Life Offices.

Castle Insurance Association—
 Rd. Howes, High street
County (fire) & Provident (life)
 —W. E. Vernon, High st.
Life Association of Scotland—
 William Whitton, Exchange
Liverpool & London & Globe—
 J. B. Hurfurt, High street
London & Corporation—James
 Teeton, Park street
Royal Exchange—John Webb,
 High street
Sun—H. W. Jepsen, and J. L.
 Gallard, High street

Fishmonger.

Baker Jas. fruiterer, High st.

Furniture Brokers.

Brown Job, High street

Gardeners and Green-
grocers.

Basford Jno. seedsman, Park st.
 Basford Samuel, High street

Glass, China, &c. Dealers.

Baker Wm. Westwood, High st.
 Savage Mrs Sarah, High street

Grocers, Tea Dealers,
&c.

Howes Mrs M.A., High street
 Lewin Edward, High street
 Linthwaite George, High st.
 Newman Mrs, High street
 Ralley W. tea dealer, High st.
 Richardson David, High street
 Spencer Jos. Willsher, High st.

Hairdressers.

Ager Charles, High street
 Sharp Mrs Charlotte, High st.

Hardware, &c. Dealer.

Hefford George, High street

Hop & Seed Merchants.

Brown Benjamin, High street
 Gurney Thos. White, Park st.
 Spencer Jos. Willsher, High st.
 Phipps Pickering and Richard,
 High st. and Northampton

Hotels, Inns, &c.

Albion, Jas. Peasnell, High st.
Bear, Rd. Crow, jun. High st.
Bull's Head, Mrs Har. Mayo,
 Park street
Crown, Mrs Eliz. Barnicle,
 High street
Dolphin, Mrs Elizabeth Martin,
 High street
Nelson's Arms, Wm. Abbott,
 High street
Peacock, Henry Webb, High st.
Plough, Edw. Meads, High st.
Pomfret Arms, (coml. & posting-ho.), John Tunnard, High st.
Swan, Mrs Car. Labrum, High st.
Talbot, (commercial & posting house), Jos. Higham, High st.
Wheat Sheaf, Mrs Sarah Bur-chill, High street
White Hart, Jno. Frost, Park st.

Beer Retailers.

Clarke Chas. (out-door), Park st.
 Marlow William, Wood Burcote
 May Isaac, High street
 Minards George, High street
 Sewell Elijah, High street
 Ward James, High street

Ironmongers.

Brown Benjamin, High street
 Webb John, High street

Leather Sellers.

Hambidge Thomas, High st.
 Powell Samuel, Park street

Libraries and Reading Rooms.

Theological — James Brooks,
 Hurfurt, High street
Towcester Book Club and Circulating Library

Linen & Woollen Drapers.

Adams Edwin, High street Jenkinson William, jun. (and clothier and hatter), High st.
 Vernon & Ashwell, High street

Maltsters.

Gurney Thos. W. jun. Park st.
 Phipps P. & R. High street, and Northampton

Milliners & Dressmakers.

Bent Miss Mary, High street
 Brown Miss Mary Ann, High st.

Pawnbrokers.

Cook John, High street
 Shackleton William, High st.

Plumbers, Painters, &c.

Brown John, jun. High st.
 Brown William, High street
 White Jno. Geo. Pomfret ter.

Printers.

Beasley John, High street
 Hurfurt Jas. Brooks, High st.

Rag, &c. Dealers.

Shackleton Thomas, High st.
 Williams John, High street

Saddlers.

Bleek Lewin Henry, High st.
 Bustin Edw. Henry, High st.
 Mayo William George, High st.

Shopkeepers.

Clarke Charles, High street
 Clarke Charles, Park street
 Hawkins Mrs S. Wood Burcote
 Pettitt Benjamin, Park street
 Savage Mrs Sarah, High street
 Shackleton Thomas, High st.
 Webb Josiah, Caldecote
 Webb William, Park street

Stonemasons and Bricklayers.

Cakebread Samuel (tombstone cutter and writer), High st.
 Thomason George, High street
 Thomason Samuel, High street
 Wilson William, Park street

Straw Hat Maker.

Warwick & Causbrook, Park st.

Surgeons.

Laurence Geo. Richd., High st.
 Evans Arthur Griffith, High st.
 Watkins Robt. Webb, High st.

Tailors.

(Marked * are also drapers.)
 *Hickson John, High street
 *Jacob Simon, High street
 *Johnson Mrs Ann, High st.
 Pilgrim Joseph, High street
 Savage Samuel, Albert terrace

Timber Merchants.

Wheeler John & Sons, High st.

Toy, &c. Dealer.

Simmonds William, High st.

Veterinary Surgeon.

Davis Samuel, High street

Watchmakers.

Durran John, High street
 Wilson Thos. Wm. High street

Wheelwright.

Kendall William, High street

Wine & Spirit Merchants.

Phipps P. & R. High street, and Northampton
 Vernon John Middleton, High street, and Northampton

Woolstapler.

Jenkinson Wm. jun. High st.

PUBLIC OFFICERS AND ESTABLISHMENTS, &c.

Clerk to the Board of Guardians and Superintendent Registrar—Wm. Whitton, Corn Exchange

Clerk to Commissioners of Assessed and Property Taxes—Richard Howes

Clerk to Magistrates—Richard Howes

Clerk to Towcester Highway Board—R. Howes

County Court, Offices, Corn Exchange—Ricd. Harington, Esq. judge; William Whitton, registrar; Joseph Piggot Goodwin, high bailiff; and Charles Ager, sub-bailiff

Gas Works, High street—John Webb, secretary

Inland Revenue Office—Pomfret Arms
Perpetual Commissioners, and Commissioners for Oaths and Affidavits in Chancery and Common Law—Sommersby Edwards, Richard Howes, and William Whitton

Police Station, High street—Henry Packer, inspector

Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages—Thomas Blencowe Rodhouse, for Towcester district; Jeremiah Pittam, births and deaths for Abthorpe district and Blakesley

Stamp Office, High street—J. B. Hurfurt, sub-distributor

Town Hall and Corn Exchange—Richard Howes, secretary

Union Workhouse—Thos. Pearcy, master

Conveyances.

Omnibus from Pomfret Arms to meet all the trains.

To London and all parts of the kingdom per the London and North-Western Railway.

Parcels Office, Pomfret Arms—John Tunnard, agent

Goods Department—John Tunnard, agent, Pomfret arms

Railway Station (Northampton and Banbury Junction)—Geo. Porter, traffic supt.; John Birch, auditor; F. B. Venner, stationmaster

Carriers.

To London, Jno. Jarvis, from his house, High street, on Tuesday, and returns on Saturday To Northampton, Geo. Minards and William Webb, from their houses, High st., on Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday

Carriers who attend on market days, &c., leaving the same afternoon, or as otherwise stated:—

Abthorpe—John Middleton, Peacock, on Sat.

Alderton—Wm. Jelley, White Hart, on Tues.

Brackley—John Elliott, on Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday

Bradden—Matthew Heel and Edward Bodley, on Saturday

Green's Norton—Jno. Smart, Crown, on Tuesday and Saturday

Helmdon—Edw. Jeffery, White Hart, on Tues.

Morton Pinkney—Jesse Gutteridge, Wheat Sheaf, on Tuesday and Friday

Potterspury—Rd. Cook, Crown, on Tuesday.

Silverstone—Geo. Church, Dolphin, daily

Stoke Bruerne—Jos. Skears, Talbot, on Tues.

Stony Stratford—Henry Jeffcote, Dolphin, on Tuesday

Sulgrave—Geo. Blackwell, Albion, on Tuesday

Syresham—John Webb, Plough, Tuesday and Saturday

Wappenham—Edw. Bodley, Crown, on Tues.

Whittlebury—Jno. Wilcox, Dolphin, daily

CLELEY HUNDRED.

THIS Hundred is bounded on the west by the hundreds of Norton and Towcester and the county of Buckingham, on the north by Towcester and Wymersley hundreds, and on the south and east by the county of Buckingham, from which it is divided by the river Ouse. The great Roman road, Watling Street, crosses it in a direct line from Stony Stratford to Towcester. Its form is somewhat that of a cross; its greatest length from south to north-west is about nine miles; its greatest breadth from south-east to north-west about the same distance; and its area is 26,620 statute acres. According to Bridges, this hundred was in the possession of William Earl Ferrers in the reign of King John, who conveyed it to Hugh de Wydville and his heirs, in consideration of a yearly payment of twenty shillings. John, son of John de Wydville, was in the possession of it in the third of Edward III. (1330), and being called upon to show cause why he claimed to hold this hundred, with all the privileges annexed to it, pleaded the grant of William Earl Ferrers to Hugh de Wydville, his ancestor. It appears to have continued in this family until the extinction of the male line by the death of Richard Earl Rivers, and upon his decease to have descended with the rest of his estate to Thomas Marquis of Dorset. The fee of it is now in the crown.

Cleley hundred is divided into thirteen parishes, one chapelry, and two hamlets, of which the following is an enumeration, showing the population in 1871, rateable value, gross estimated rental, and number of rateable acres of each parish, according to the rate books :—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Alderton.....	871	35	—	—	73	70	143	£ 1,307	£ 1,468
Ashton.....	1,086	80	6	—	163	168	331	4,582	5,780
Cosgrove.....	1,545	140	6	2	322	324	646	3,726	4,305
Easton Neston.....	1,708	34	1	—	91	85	176	3,301	3,607
Furtho.....	742	7	—	—	30	16	46	1,253	1,394
Grafton Regis.....	1,371	45	3	—	93	107	200	2,388	2,667
Hartwell.....	1,429	136	4	—	274	257	531	4,319	5,353
Passenham.....	3,130	224	15	4	556	508	1,064	5,879	6,831
Denshanger, hamlet
Paulerspury.....	2,893	276	17	—	588	632	1,220	5,201	6,053
Potterspury.....	3,163	243	7	1	542	503	1,045	3,057	3,553
Yardley Gobion, ham.		137	7	—	309	345	654	2,614	3,110
Roads.....	1,566	170	5	—	321	355	676	6,440	7,510
Stoke Bruerne.....	2,582	96	3	—	216	225	441	2,142	4,815
Shutlanger, chapelry		102	6	—	185	195	380	2,021	2,330
Wicken.....	2,309	99	3	—	225	247	472	3,179	3,689
	24,395	1,824	83	7	3,988	4,037	8,025	51,409	62,474

CHARITIES OF THE HUNDRED OF CLELEY, as abstracted from the last Parliamentary Reports, with the dates, donors' names, &c. (See also the histories of the parishes) :—

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purpose applied.	Annual value.
	Church lands.....	Alderton parish.....	£5 0 0
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent).....	Ditto, poor.....	1 0 0
	Poor's land.....	Ashton parish, poor.....	6 0 0
1708.	Cath. and Elizabeth Chivall (£50)	Ditto, poor (lost).....
	Church Estate.....	Easton Neston parish.....	153 0 0
	Arnold's Estate (£566, ditto, £2300 (balance of the above out at interest).....	Furtho parish.....	62 11 3
	Poor's land.....	Hartwell chapelry.....	12 0 0
	Chapel land.....	Ditto.....	1 15 0
1646.	Jane Leeson (rent).....	Hulcote hamlet, poor.....	0 10 0
1642.	Anthony Carpenter (six cottages)...	Passenham parish, poor.....	21 2 6
1683.	Daniel Allen (rents).....	Ditto, ditto.....	24 7 6
1707.	John Swannell (rent).....	Ditto, school.....	2 10 0
1766.	Edward Whitton (£100).....	Ditto, bread to poor.....	3 3 8
1726.	Thomas Nicoll (rents).....	Ditto, poor.....	13 4 0
1728.	Eliz. Spinnell (£100).....	Paulerspury par., 10 poor widows	8 10 0
1646.	Jane Leeson (rents).....	Ditto, poor.....	1 10 0
1742.	Mrs Chapman (£20).....	Ditto, ditto.....	1 0 0
1762.	William Lepper (rent).....	Ditto, ditto.....	0 5 0
1720.	William Marriott (rent).....	Ditto, school.....	41 0 0
1726.	Thomas Nicoll (rent).....	Ditto, school, and bread to poor	6 2 0
	William Peake (rent).....	Potterspury par., 2 poor widows	1 10 0
1624.	Gabriel Clarke (rent).....	Ditto, poor.....	2 0 0
1726.	Cuthbert Ogle (£100).....	Ditto, minister and poor.....	3 0 0
	Poor's money invested in cottage } premises.....	Potterspury parish (lost).....
1672.	Nicholas Saxby (rents).....	Ditto, church, bridges, &c.	14 0 0
1708.	Cath. and Eliz. Chivall (land).....	Roads parish, poor.....	20 0 0
	Feoffees' Estate.....	Ditto, poor.....	30 0 0
1610.	Thomas Bosenhoe (land).....	Stoke Bruerne parish, church and poor.....	32 0 0

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purpose applied.	Annual value.
1743.	New charity estate	Stoke Bruerne parish, church and poor	£8 19 0
1609.	Thomas Kingston (rents)	Ditto, ditto	2 12 0
1702.	Frances Crane and Francis Arun- dell (lands)	Ditto, bread to poor	4 3 4
	Bread Fund	Wicken parish	3 4 0
1747.	Mrs Sharp (£100)	Ditto, bread to poor	5 5 0
1774.	Edward Whitton (£100)	Ditto, ditto	5 0 0
1810.	Eliza. Prowse (one share, Grand Junction Canal),	Ditto, school	2 0 0
			<hr/> £498 4 3

ALDERTON PARISH.

Alderton, or, as it is called in Domesday, Aldritone, and in later records, Aldrington, is bounded on the east by Grafton Regis, on the north by Stoke Bruerne, on the south by Potterspury, and on the west by Paulerspury. It contains 871 rateable acres, and its population in 1801 was 183; in 1831, 162; in 1841, 166; in 1851, 139; in 1861, 143; and in 1871, 143 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1307, 10s., and the gross estimated rental is £1468. The soil is various, but principally clay on a limestone bottom; the lordship is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture; and the principal proprietor and lord of the manor is the Duke of Grafton.

Manor.—Edmar and Edwin were the Saxon proprietors of Aldritone, and it was rated at 50s. before the Conquest; but at the time of the Conqueror's survey, Earl Ferrers held 2 hides of land and half a virgate here, which were valued at 50s.; and a thane held of the same earl one hide here of the value of 10s. In the reign of Henry II., Stoke and Alderton are certified to contain 7 hides with 2 small virgates, but the possessor of them is not mentioned in the record. In the reign of Edward I., Sir Pagan de Cadurcis, or Chaworth, was lord of this manor, and in the sixth of the same reign (1278), he obtained a grant of a weekly market here on Thursdays, and an annual fair on the vigil, the feast, and the morrow of St Margaret—the patron saint. Dying without issue in the following year, he was succeeded by Patrick de Chaworth, his brother. This gentleman's daughter, Maud, carried the lordship in marriage to Henry Earl of Lancaster, the king's nephew, who in the thirty-fourth of this reign (1307), granted it, with the advowson of the church, and the manor and advowson of Stoke Bruerne, to William de Coumbemartin, and henceforward Alderton was considered as a member of the manor of Stoke Bruerne, and had the same possessors. In the thirtieth of Henry VIII. (1539), it was in the hands of the crown, and in three years after was annexed to the Honor of Grafton.

A Castle stood at the north end of the village, near the church, the site of which is now called the mount, and the prospect from it of the surrounding country is extensive. It occupies an area of about two acres, and is encompassed with a deep fosse overgrown with underwood. Little is known of this ancient structure, but in the reign of Edward I., Sir Pagan de Candurcis paid Thomas le Sauvage £100 for his castle and all his lands in the village and fields of Audrinton.

The Manor-House stood in a low situation, at the N.W. extremity of the village. Mr Baker tells us that “during the royal progress in 1605, Queen Anne of Denmark was entertained for four nights at Alderton (Aug. 16–20), the king being during the same time at Grafton; and that in 1608, King James was here on the 4th of August, and knighted Sir Henry Anderson of London, having just before bestowed the same honour at Grafton, on his host Thomas Haslerige, Esq.

The Village of Alderton, which is very small, is pleasantly situated about three miles S.E. of Towcester, nine S. from Northampton, and five N.W. from Stony Stratford.

The Church, dedicated to St Margaret, is in the Perpendicular style, and was rebuilt (except the tower) in 1847-48, at a cost of about £800. It consists of a nave, chancel, south porch, and a low embattled tower containing five bells. The east window is filled with stained glass, representing the figures of our Saviour and Saints Peter and Paul. Upon removing an ancient altar-tomb of William Gorges, Esq., who is said to have built a large mansion (probably the manor-house), and resided here in the reign of Henry II., a stone coffin was discovered, in which was deposited a human skeleton of large dimensions. The living is a rectory annexed to Grafton Regis, in the Deanery of Preston and patronage of the crown, and of the joint annual value of £277. The benefice is held by the Rev. Barwick John Sams, M.A.; and the rectory consists of 128a. 3r. 16p. of land. There is no parsonage house.

The Charities of the parish are the church and town lands, 2a. 2r. 8p., which let for £5 per annum; and £1 a year is received for the poor from Mrs Jane Leeson's charity.

Letters through Towcester.

Bliss Humphrey, shopkeeper and vict. Plough	Jelley Edw. butchr. & cattle dlr.	Farmers and Graziers.
Blundell Mrs Mary, shopkpr.	Jelley John, carpenter	Blunt John Edward
Garrett George, shoemaker	Onley William, gardener	Jelley Joseph
	Whitlock Joseph, parish clerk	Smith Henry

Carrier.—William Jelley, to Towcester, on Tuesday; Northampton, Wednesday and Saturday; and to Stony Stratford and Wolverhampton on Friday.

ASHTON PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Roade, on the west by Stoke Bruern, by Salcey Forest on the east, and on the south by Grafton Regis, from which it is divided by the river Tove. It contains 1086 acres; its population in 1801 was 292; in 1831, 380; in 1841, 417; in 1851, 383; in 1861, 374; and in 1871, 331 souls; the gross estimated rental of the parish is £5780, and the rateable value, £4582, 2s. The parish is intersected by the London and North-Western Railway and the Grand Junction Canal. The soil is principally a grey loam on limestone, and the Duke of Grafton is the lord of the manor and principal proprietor. About three-fourths of the lordship is arable.

Manor.—Ashton, or Asee as it was anciently written, was in the possession of Winemar, and in the hands of his under-tenants at the time of the general survey. Dodin held 1 hide and 4 parts of 1 virgate; Bondi held 4 parts of $\frac{1}{2}$ a hide; and Mauf held $2\frac{1}{2}$ virgates. Before the Conquest these lands were the freehold of Alden, Aldrick, and Siward, and were valued at 22s., but were now advanced to 36s. In the reign of Henry II., Robert Fitz-Anketil was certified to hold 1 hide and 2 small virgates here of the fee of William Manduit, the descendant of Winemar. In Henry III.'s time, this manor was in the hands of Philip Lovell, who conveyed it to Robert le Lou, or Lupus, or Wolfe, John le Lou, his son, and Emma, his wife. In the first year of the reign of Edward II. (1307), Philip le Lou levied a fine of it, and in the 9th of the same reign, was certified to be the lord of the manor. In the 14th of Edward III. (1341), John de Hardeshull levied a fine of the manor of Ashne, and in the 20th of the same reign, accounted for the fourth part of a knight's fee here, as held of the fee of William Manduit. From this gentleman it passed to Sir Thomas Colepeper, the son of John Colepeper, by Elizabeth, daughter and co-heir of John de Hardeshull. The manor continued in the possession of this family till the year 1537, when Thomas Colepeper, Esq., conveyed it to the king in exchange for other lands. Whilst vested in the crown it was devised by successive leases to the families of Marriott, Goldsmith, and Rye. In the 33d of Henry VIII. (1541), it was annexed to the manor of Grafton, and the Duke of Grafton is the present proprietor. The Abbey of St James, near Northampton, had possessions here, which, in the 4th of Edward VI. (1550), were granted to Richard Fermor, Esq. of Easton Neston. It is now possessed by the Duke of Grafton. The Manor-House stood north of the church, and was surrounded by a broad deep moat.

The Village of Ashton, which is small, is seated on a declivity about 7 miles south of Northampton. Lace-making is carried on to a great extent here.

The Church, dedicated to St Michael, consists of a nave, north aisle, south porch, chancel, and a low tower in which are four bells. The structure is of rubble stone, and of the late Perpendicular period. The church has been entirely restored at a cost of about £500, derived from Queen Anne's Bounty; the back aisle rebuilt, the chancel restored, the flat roof of the nave replaced by a sloping one, and the church repewed in the modern style; the living is a rectory in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £10, and now worth above £400 per annum. The patronage is in the crown, and the Rev. Andrew Craig Neely, M.A., is the present incumbent. Ashton was originally a member of the mother church of Roade, and continued so till the beginning of the 16th century, when it was invested with distinct parochial rights, and the portion or third part of Roade church, to which the chapel of Ashton had been heretofore subordinate, became in its turn subordinate to Ashton. The rectory consists of 234 acres of land, granted in lieu of tithes in 1817. The Rectory House stands west of the churchyard, and has been enlarged by the present rector by the addition of a wing. Amongst the monuments in the church is a slab raised upon bricks, bearing the wooden figure of a cross-legged knight, much mutilated and worm-eaten, which is referred to one of the Le Lou or Wolfe family; on the slab of another altar-monument of stone are the brass figures of Robert Marriott and his wife, about 2 feet 9 inches long; and on a third altar-tomb lies the effigy of Sir John Hardeshull in plate armour. His hands and feet have disappeared.

Charity.—The poor's land consists of 5a. 2r. 7p., let at £2 per acre, the rent of which is distributed in coals.

There is a Wesleyan Chapel in the village, built in 1858 at a cost of £280; and here is a place of worship for the Baptists; and also an Infant School erected in 1854 by the late Duke of Grafton.

Post-Office.—Wall Letter-Box.—Letters are received by foot-post, through Northampton, at 9.15 A.M., cleared at 4.15 P.M., on week days only.

Goodridge James, blacksmith
Malin Mrs., — cottager
Merry Esther, baker & farmer
Mundy Mr Thomas
Neely Rev. Andw. Craig, M.A.
rector
Pettifer Miss Jane, schoolmrs.

Scaldwell Thomas, shopkeeper and shoemaker
Shakeshaft James, carpenter
Shakeshaft Thos. carpr. & buldr.
Shouler George, stonemason
Warren Joseph, shoemaker
Wilding Henry, vict. Old Crown

Farmers and Graziers.

Adams William
Geary George
Sinnell Mrs Mary Ann
Robinson Jon. Askwood Farm
Robinson Thos. Jones, Ashton Lodge

Carriers.—To Northampton, John Dickins and James Woodward, Wednesday and Saturday.

COSGROVE PARISH.

Cosgrove, Cosgrave, or, as it is called in early records, Covesgrave, is bounded by Potterspury and Yardley Gobion on the north; on the east by Hanslope, and Castlethorpe, in Buckinghamshire, from which it is divided by the river Tove; on the south and S.E. by Stony Stratford, and Wolverton, in the same county, and by Passenham on the west. It contains 1545 acres; and its population in 1801 was 505; in 1831, 624; in 1841, 701; in 1851, 641; in 1861, 776; and in 1871, 646 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3726, and the gross estimated rental £4305. The soil is principally clay and loam, and there is some rich meadow land bordering on the rivers. About two-thirds of the lordship is arable, and the principal landowners are—John C. Mansel, Esq. (lord of the manor), and the Duke of Grafton. The lordship and village of Cosgrove are intersected by the Grand Junction Canal, which is carried over the river Ouse, and across the long valley to Wolverton, a distance of nearly a mile, by a stupendous embankment. "This aqueduct," says Mr Baker, "was originally constructed on arches, and was opened on the 26th of August 1805. The contractors guaranteed a trial of twelve months; but, before the expiration of half that period, leakages, and other indications of instability, became apparent, and at length a sudden disruption took place, and inundated the surrounding country. The breach was, however, promptly repaired, and, in the course of another year, a solid embankment was substituted, along which a cast-iron channel, much narrower than the general width of the navigation, was supplied, and is still in use for the transit of the barges." The lower part of Mr Mansel's lawn is supposed by Mr Baker to be the site of a Roman villa, from several Roman coins having been found there, during the excavations for the Grand Junction Canal, and from its vicinity to the Watling Street road.

Manor.—The Earl of Morton held four parts of half a hide of land here at the time of the Domesday survey which was valued at 5s.; he also held five parts of a hide here, of the Soke of Passenham, which, with 10 acres of meadow, and 2 furlongs of small wood, was valued at 20s. Before the Conquest, these were the freeholds of Godwin and Ailric. Winemar held half a hide and the one-fifth of a virgate here of the king at the same time. This, with a mill of the yearly value of 30s., 5 acres of meadow, and a wood 3 furlongs in length and 2 in breadth, had been rated at 10s. in the Confessor's time, when it was the freehold of Alden, but its value was now doubled. In the reign of Henry II., Robert Ryvel held 8 small virgates here, William de Brun, 6 small virgates, and one Adam, 9 small virgates. In the 9th year of the reign of Edward II. (1315), Henry Spigurnell was lord of Cosgrove, and in the 2d of Edward III. (1329), he died, seized of the manor, with divers other lands and tenements here, which he held of the heir of the Earl of Warwick and several other superior lords. Thomas Spigurnell, his son, succeeded him. In the 13th of Edward III. (1340), a fine was levied of this manor by Henry de Burghersh, bishop of Lincoln, who died in the 15th of this reign, and was succeeded in it by Walter de Pavely, the heir of his brother, upon whom the remainder was entailed. This manor afterwards passed into the hands of the family of Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, with which it continued till the 3d of Henry VII. (1487), when Anne, Countess of Warwick, conveyed it, with all her other lands, to the king and the heirs male of his body, with remainder to herself and her heirs for ever. It continued in possession of the crown until the 5th of Edward VI. (1551), when it was granted to Sir Nicholas Throgmorton, of Paulerspury. Sir Arthur, his son, settled it with the advowson, on his daughter Elizabeth, in marriage with Richard Lennard Lord Dacre. From him it passed through several intermediate possessors to the family of Mansel, one of whom, John Christopher Mansel, Esq., is the present proprietor. This family, though not in possession of the manor, have had an interest here from the time of James I.

The Knight's Hospitallers of St John of Jerusalem and Snellshull Priory, in Buckinghamshire, have had possessions in this parish. Cosgrove was annexed to the Honor of Grafton on its erection in 1541.

The Village of Cosgrove is situate in a valley about two miles north from Stony Stratford, seven and-a-half east from Towcester, and thirteen from Northampton. Here is a chalybeate spring, formerly called St Vincent's, but now corrupted into Fineswell. Here is a meeting-house for the Wesleyan Methodists.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter and St Paul, stands on the west side of the village, in the churchyard, and consists of a nave, north aisle, and chancel, and a tower containing five bells. A new stained-glass window has been inserted in the chancel in memory of Henry Mansel, late dean of St Paul's. The interior is well paved and has been resealed; there are galleries in the north and west ends, in one of which there is a small organ. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £14, 11s. 3d., and now worth about £430. The rectory consists of about 236 acres of land, and certain tithes which have been commuted for £33, 8s. Mrs H. L. Mansel is the present patroness, and the Rev. George Jenkins, M.A., incumbent. The Rectory House, which is a handsome residence, stands N.E. of the church. It has been thoroughly repaired at the expense of the late rector. The National School, erected in 1844, is principally supported by subscription, and is well conducted.

Cosgrove Hall, the seat of J. C. Mansel, Esq., is situate a little south of the church. The Priory, formerly the manor-house, stands about half a mile north of the village. It is now the residence of T. Booth, Esq.; and Cosgrove Cottage, in the village, is the residence of Mrs Henry Mansel.

Charities.—Here are four cottages, which let for about £14 or £15 per annum, left for apprenticing poor boys.

OLD STRATFORD is a hamlet, partly in this and partly in the parishes of Furtho, Passenham, and Potterspury, but the greater portion of it is situate in Cosgrove parish. It is about one mile N.W. from Stony Stratford, on the Watling Street or Chester road. Here, at a place called Chapel close, there formerly stood a hermitage and free chapel. This hamlet is called Old Stratford, in contradistinction to Stony Stratford, on the presumption of superior antiquity. The river Ouse, which divides this county from Buckinghamshire, is crossed at the latter town by a bridge, for the erection of which an Act of Parliament was obtained in 1834, "Old Stratford bridge" being in a decayed and dangerous state.

Post-Office.—Mrs Maria Swannel, sub-postmistress. Letters arrive through Stony Stratford at 8.45 A.M., and are despatched at 6.15 P.M. on week days, and at 11.45 A.M. on Sundays. At Old Stratford the wall-box is cleared at 6.50 P.M. on week days, and on Sundays at 12.30 P.M.

Those marked 1 reside at Old Stratford.

1 Adams Thos. bkr. and shopkr	1 Hayes Edward, engineer	Simpson John, steward to Duke of Grafton.
Atkinson Jph. gamekeeper	Holdom Joseph, shopkeeper	Smith Jph. vict. Barley Mow
Booth Thomas, Esq. Cosgrove Priory	1 Horwood Miss Catherine	1 Smith Thomas, shoemaker
Branson William, cooper	Jenkins Rev. Geo. M.A. rector	1 Thorne Mrs Ann
Brown Jonah, beer retailer and coal merchant	1 Lancaster Mrs Ellen	Teal William, blacksmith
1 Castle James, shopkeeper	Loe Anthony, parish clerk	Toombs William, carpenter
1 Cater Geo. Esq. Thurlow Cot.	Mansel Jno. Christopr. Esq. J.P. Cosgrove Hall	Valentine Mr Jos. Twichel
1 Coles John, coachbuilder	Mansel Mrs H. L. The Cottage	Warren Daniel, maltster, brewer, corn and coal merchant, and wharfinger
Curl George, gardener	Marks John, canal overseer	Warren Thos. artificial manure and insurance agent
Dawson Thomas, miller, Cosgrove Mill , and farmer	Marriott Thos. Hy. canal agt.
1 Durham Mrs Catherine Small	Pratt Thomas, toll collector, Quarry Bridge Gate	Farmers and Graziers.
Foster Mrs Emily	1 Price Mark Clement, horse dealer and vict. Falcon	Clarke William
Gates Wm. butcher & farmer	Richardson Mrs Selina, sch.	Gates Edward, Isworth Farm
Goulding Mary Jane, mistress of national school	1 Robertson William Austin, coal merchant	Stopps George Torset
Green George, carpenter	Sharp John, vict. Plough	Slade Richard (h. Haadlope)

EASTON PARISH.

This parish includes Hulcote and Swardsley; and is bounded by Tiffeld on the north, on the east by Stoke Bruerne, and on the south and west by Towcester. It contains 720 acres, independent of the hamlets, and 1708 acres altogether. The rateable value is £3301, the gross estimated rental is £3607; and the population in 1801 was 114; in 1831, 144; in 1841, 169; in 1851, 170; in 1861, 160; and in 1871, 176 souls. The soil is principally a heavy loam, with a little limestone, ironstone, and gravel; about two-thirds is in permanent pasture. Thomas George Fermore Hesketh, Esq., is the owner of the whole, except a few acres of glebe.

Manor.—The Earl of Morton held 1 hide and 2 virgates of land here at the general survey, which was valued at 30s.; Ormar held 1 hide and 3 virgates here of the same earl, which, with a mill of the yearly rent of 8s., 3 acres of meadow and 3 acres of small wood, had been rated at 20s. before the Conquest, when it was the freehold of Siward, but was then valued at 40s. By the same survey, Bondi, who was the Saxon proprietor, held 3¼ virgates here of Gunfrid de Cioches, which was valued at 12s. In the reign of Henry II., Richard de le Estre held 1½ hide and 1 small virgate in Estnestone of the fee of Berkhamstead, and Godfrey and Aldrid, 8 small virgates of the fee of William Maduit. Henry Pavely was possessed of this manor in the time of Henry III., and in the 9th year of the reign of Edward II. (1315), Geoffrey de Braden was lord of Estneston. This Geoffrey granted one acre of land and the advowson of the church to the convent of Swardsley. From Geoffrey de Braden the manor passed into the hands of William de St John, of whom it was purchased in the 2d of Edward III. (1329), by the prioress and nuns of Swardsley, in exchange for 6 messuages and 4 acres of land in Canons Ashby. In the 20th of this reign the prioress accounted for the moiety of one knight's fee in Eston Neston and Hulcote, as held of the fee of Berkhamstead. Elias Ent accounted for half a knight's fee here of the fee of Chokes at the same time. In the 43d of Edward III. (1370), Sir Henry Green, of Greens-Norton, died seized of this manor, with the advowson of Swardsley priory, held of the Earl of Cornwall, and was succeeded by Thomas Green, his son, afterwards knighted, with whose descendants it remained till the 14th of Henry VII. (1499), when it passed into the hands of Richard Empson, Esq., afterwards knighted, and who obtained a licence in the same year to impart 400 acres of land, and 30 of wood, in Estneston and Hulcote, with free warren and free fishery in those lordships, and permission to embattle his manor-house here. Upon the attainder of this Sir Richard Empson, "the unpopular associate of Sir Edmund Dudley, in ministering to the insatiable avarice of their royal master" (Henry VII.), his estates were seized into the hands of the king, and in the 1st of Henry VIII. (1509), the manor of Easton Neston, and nearly the whole of his forfeited possessions, were granted to Sir William Compton, ancestor of the Marquis of Northampton. In the year following, Thomas Empson, Esq., son of Sir Richard, obtained an act of restitution, and in the 19th of this reign (1528), sold this with several other manors to William Fermor, Esq., of Somerton, in Oxfordshire. From this gentleman it passed to his brother Richard Fermor, Esq. "He was a merchant of the staple at Calais," writes Mr Baker, "and, having by fortunate speculations acquired an ample fortune, seated himself here, and lived in a style of splendid hospitality. But being a zealous Catholic, and neglecting or refusing to conform to the successive alterations in the national religion, he rendered himself obnoxious to the court; and, being accused of administering relief to Nicholas Tane, formerly his confessor, who was then a close prisoner in Buckingham Castle, for denying the king's supremacy, he was committed to the Marshalsea in July 1540, and being afterwards arraigned in Westminster Hall, though nothing could be proved against him, except that he had sent 8d. and a couple of shirts to the imprisoned priest, he was adjudged to have incurred a præmunire, whereby all his lands and goods became forfeited, and the rapacious monarch enforced the sentence with the most unrelenting severity. Thus persecuted and stripped of his possessions, he retired to Wappenham (where he was lessee of the parsonage), and passed in seclusion several years of piety and resignation. During his prosperity he had for his jester Will Sommers, afterwards so celebrated in that capacity in the royal establishment. Recollecting with gratitude his former master, and commiserating his reverse of fortune, Sommers is said to have availed himself of the unbridled privilege of his office, to make a pointed appeal to the king in his last illness, which so awakened his conscience that he gave immediate directions for making restitution; but death frustrated his intention, which was not carried into effect till the 4th of Edward VI. (1550), when Easton Neston, Towcester, and those manors which had not been granted out by the crown, were restored to him, and various manors and lands in this and other counties granted to him as some compensation for those which had been alienated; but the whole thus obtained was not adequate to one-third of what he had before possessed." He died in 1551, and was succeeded by his son and heir, Sir John Fermor. His son, Sir William Fermor, was created a baronet by King Charles I. in 1641; his son of the same name was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Lempster in 1692; and his son and successor, Thomas, was advanced to the dignity of Earl of Pomfret in 1721. From him the earldom and estates descended to George William Richard, the 5th earl. This nobleman, who was the son of the 4th earl, was born in 1824, succeeded his father in 1833, and was appointed a deputy-lieutenant of the county in 1846; from him it passed in 1867 to his eldest sister, Lady Anna Maria Arabella Fermor Hesketh, who was succeeded by her second son, Thomas George Fermor Hesketh, Esq., the present possessor, in 1870. Seats—Easton Neston and Park View, Northamptonshire; and Rufford Hall, Ormskirk, Lancashire.

There is no village, and though the population return for 1871 states that the parish contains 36 houses, there are only the Hall, a private residence, Easton Lodge, two farmhouses, and a few cottages. The parish adjoins Towcester.

Easton Neston House, the seat of the Earl of Ellesmere, stands on a gentle eminence, about one mile N.E. of Towcester, commanding a pleasing view of that town and Whittlebury forest. It is a very elegant mansion, erected by William Lord Lempster, or Leominster, partly from a design by Sir Christopher Wren, and partly by Hawkesmoor, and is of Helmdon stone. This splendid mansion was celebrated for the valuable collection of ancient marbles and pictures, which in former times adorned its walls. The marbles, consisting of upwards of 130 ancient Greek, Roman, and Egyptian statues, busts, &c., were presented to the University of Oxford, in 1755, by the Countess of Pomfret. Though many of the pictures have also disappeared, still the present collection is excellent. The old mansion stood between the church and the river Tove, "and," says the county historian, "is memorable as the place where King James I. first met his queen (Anne of Denmark) and Prince Henry, on their coming into England, after his accession to the throne; and also as the place where both their majesties met their second son, afterwards King Charles I., on his arrival in England. The first of these royal visits was on the 27th of June 1603, when the queen and prince came from Althorpe, two days after they had been received there with the poetical entertainment written by Ben Jonson."

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands south of the mansion, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch, north chapel, and chancel, with a tower containing a peal of six bells and a clock. The north aisle, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, the nave, and the belfry, were rebuilt, in the reign of Henry VI., by the executors of John Bacon, woolstapler, of London. The interior is well paved with stone, and pewed with oak; and there are ten elegantly stained-glass windows. The east window is of stained glass, erected in 1870 by Lady Arabella Hesketh to the memory of her brother, the late Earl of Pomfret, together with a handsome reredos of Bath stone and marble columns; and two of the others are charged with the figures of some of the apostles, and Judas betraying our Lord. Here are some fine monuments to the Fermor family; and an altar-tomb, beautifully executed, to Sir George Fermor, Knight, and his wife, in recumbent positions, the former in a suit of mail, his head resting upon his helmet and his feet upon his gauntlets, he died 10th October 1628. At the base of the altar-tomb are the kneeling figures of several children. In the south wall of the chancel is a fine brass to the memory of the 4th Earl of Pomfret, who died in June 1833, given by his daughter, Lady Henrietta Louisa Ogilvy in 1870. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £8, and now worth about £250 per annum. Thomas George Fermor Hesketh, Esq., is the patron, and the Rev. Robert Codrington Collins is the present incumbent. Lord Williams, of Thame, in Oxfordshire, purchased the impropriate rectory, and left it in 1589, with other property, for the foundation of a free grammar-school in that town. In 1574 his executors conveyed the property to the Warden and Scholars of New College, Oxford, to the uses of his lordship's will. The vicarage consists of a few acres of glebe land, intermixed with the manor grounds, and in lieu of which the lord of the manor pays the vicar £5, 13s. 6d. yearly, and all the tithes within the parish except those of corn, grain, and hay, which belong to the impropriate rectory.

The Church Lands of this parish, consisting of about 100 acres in the parishes of Towcester and Greens-Norton, yield £153 a year, out of which a school, erected in 1863, is endowed, and which is free to all the children of the parish. The sum of 20s. a year is received for the poor from Mrs Jane Leeson's charity.

HULCOTE is a hamlet, which forms the northern division of this parish, about 2 miles N.E. of Towcester. Easton Neston and Hulcote were included in the barony of Chenduit, parcel of the Honor of Berkhamstead, to which they still belong; it is the property of Thomas George Fermor Hesketh, Esq. The Manor-House stood in a field, still called Hall close.

SEWARDSLEY, or, as it is commonly called, Showslie, and Shewsley, forms the north-east division of the parish. Here was formerly a priory of nuns of the Cistercian order, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin. It was founded by Richard de Lestre, or Del Estre, lord of Easton Neston, in the reign of Henry II. Notwithstanding several donations, the revenues of this nunnery were inadequate to its maintenance; and in 1459, at the petition of Sir Thomas Green, the patron, the Bishop of Lincoln, appropriated it to the Abbey of St Mary de la Pre, near Northampton. After the dissolution of the religious houses, the site and demesnes were granted to Richard Fermor, Esq., and from him they lineally descended to the late Earl of Pomfret. Thomas George Fermor Hesketh, Esq., is the present proprietor. The chapel has been pulled down many years, and the priory itself has long since degenerated into a farmhouse.

Ellesmere, Right Hon. Earl of,
Easton Neston House, and
Worsley Hall, Manchester
Hesketh, Thomas Geo. Fermor,

Esq. Park View and Rufford
Hall, Ormskirk, Lancashire
Yardley, The Misses Clara, Ann,
Sarah, & Susan, Easton Lodge

Garlic John schoolmr. Hulcote
Clarke Eli, gardener, Easton
Neston House
Cooke Thos. farmer, Showslie

Letters are received here through the Towcester Post-Office.

FURTHO PARISH.

This small parish, containing only one farmhouse (the manor-house), and a small portion of the hamlet of Old Stratford, is situated about 7 miles W.S.W. of Towcester, and 2 miles N.N.W. from Stony Stratford, and near the Grand Junction Canal. It is bounded on the north by Potterspury and Yardley Gobion, on the east and south by Cosgrove, and on the west by Passenheim, from which it is divided by the Watling Street or Chester Road. It contains 742 acres, of the rateable value of £1253; the gross estimated rental is £1394, and its population in 1801 was 9; in 1831, 16; in 1841, 16; in 1851, 15; in 1861, 16; and in 1871, 46 souls. The soil is principally a cold white clay, more than half the lordship is in permanent pasture, and the principal landowners are the trustees of the Arnold Charity, who are also the lords of the manor.

Manor.—At the time of the Norman survey the Earl of Morton had two hides of land in Fortho, which were valued before the Conquest, when it was the freehold of Godeman and Godeva, at 10s., but now advanced to 30s. One William held half a hide and four parts of half a hide here of the earl at the same time, which had been rated also at 10s., but advanced to 30s. This had been the freehold of Alwin and Osulph before the Conquest. William had also nine parts of a hide here, which had been the freehold of Godwin, and advanced in value from 10s. to 30s. In the reign of Henry II., Walter de Fortho held two hides here of the fee of Richard Fitzwilliam; William Gernet held 7 small virgates of the fee of Berkhamstead, and the Earl of Leicester had 3 small virgates. In the second of Henry III. (1229), Henry de Fortho was lord of the manor, and it continued in the possession of the family of Fortho till the reign of Charles I., when, upon the death of Edward Furtho, Esq., without issue, it descended to his sisters. In the fifteenth of Charles I. (1640), the lordship and advowson were in the hands of Sir Robert Bannestre, of Passenheim; and in the reign of Charles II., Edmund Arnold, Esq., was lord of Furtho. This gentleman died seized of it in 1676, and having no issue, left the whole lordship, then valued at £566 per annum, and £2300, vested in consols, the interest of which amounts to £62, 11s. 3d., making a total annual income of £628, 11s. 3d., which is divided as follows:—Premiums paid with apprentices, £232, 10s.; relief of poor, £60; Vicar of Potterspury, £10; minister of Stony Stratford, £20; poor scholars of Merton College, Oxford, £80; tithe rent charge to the rector of Cosgrove, 16s.; tithe rent charge to the rector of Furtho, £33, 10s.; seat rents, 17s.; clerk's salary, £20; insurance against fire, 18s.; incidentals, &c., for repairs of farm buildings, £115, 18s. 11d. The hospital of St John of Jerusalem, and the abbey of Grestein, in Normandy, had possessions in this parish. Furtho is a member of the Honor of Berkhamstead and Grafton.

The Village is supposed to have been depopulated partly through the enclosure in the reign of James I., and partly by the adoption of a new line for the road from Northampton to London, which previously passed through it.

The Church, dedicated to St Bartholomew, was rebuilt in 1620 by the Furtho family, and consists of a nave, chancel, and tower containing one bell. It was restored throughout in 1870 by subscription, the trustees of Arnold's Charity being the principal contributors. It was re-seated with open deal sittings, and a handsome pulpit of bathstone, erected, together with a lectern and reading-desk. A harmonium was placed in the chancel at the expense of Mr John Bird, under whose auspices the restoration was carried out. There is a cinquefoil-headed piscina, mutilated, in the chancel, on the north side of which is an arch, under which lies a marble tomb, on which were the effigies of a man and his two wives, with a tablet at their feet, and a shield of arms at each corner, but these are now defaced. It is supposed to be the monument of Anthony Furtho, who was twice married, and died in the first year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £7, and now valued at about £300. The Provost and Fellows of Jesus College, Oxford, are the patrons, and the Rev. John William Mason, M.A., is the incumbent. Rev. Robert Emaus Crawley, M.A., vicar of Potterspury, is curate in charge. The rectory consists of 96a. 29p. of land, allotted by the Commissioners of Enclosure, and a modus of £20, 7s. 6d. per annum for the Arnold estate. The Manor-house is occupied by Mr John Bird, farmer and churchwarden.

GRAFTON REGIS PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed on the east by the river Tove or Towe, by which it is divided from Buckinghamshire, on the north by Ashton, on the west by Alderton, and on the south by Yardley Gobion. It contains 1371 acres, and its population in 1801, was 167; in 1831, 241; in 1841, 266; in 1851, 247; in 1861, 159; and in 1871, 200 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £2388, and the gross estimated rental is £2667. The soil varies from clay to a grey loam on limestone; the greater part of the lordship is in permanent pasture, and the Duke of Grafton (the lord of the manor) and Sir Charles Mordaunt are the principal proprietors. The parish is intersected by the Grand Junction Canal. Lace-making is now carried on here to a considerable extent.

Manor.—Grafton, or Grastone, as it is written in Domesday Book, was the freehold of Godwin in the Saxon times, and valued at 3s.; but at the time of the Norman survey it consisted only of four parts of one hide, and was held by William, under the Earl of Morton, and advanced in value to 26s. William, Earl of Morton, having given all the lands he possessed in Grafton to the Abbey of Grestein, in Normandy, the abbot of that monastery was certified to be lord of the manor, in the ninth year of the reign of Edward II. (1315). From the monks it passed to the family of De la Poles, from whom it passed in the reign of Henry VI. to Sir Richard de Widville, who levied a fine of it in the nineteenth of the same reign (1441). This Sir Richard, who was one of the esquires of the body of King Henry V., and Seneschell of Normandy, and other parts of France, Constable of the Tower of London, and Lieutenant of Calais, having married Jacquet, the dowager of John, Duke of Bedford, without licence from the king

(Henry VI.), he was fined £1000, and the livery of the lands of her dowry. He was afterwards restored to favour, and in the twenty-sixth of the same reign, 1448, created Baron Rivers, Grafton, and De la Mote; and his daughter Elizabeth, relict of Sir John Grey, of Groby, obtained in marriage the hand of Edward IV. Upon this marriage he was advanced to the dignity of Constable of England, and Treasurer of the Exchequer, with remainder to Anthony, Lord Scales, his eldest son. He obtained a charter for a weekly market here on Thursdays, and two annual fairs with grant of free chase and free warren in all his demesne lands in this county and elsewhere. But the connection proved calamitous to both parties, for the Duke of Clarence and the Earl of Warwick fell off from the king in consequence of this alliance, and in the ensuing year they led the northern insurgents against the king's forces at Edgcott, where, after a bloody battle, the latter fled; Earl Rivers was taken prisoner, and without trial or ceremony beheaded at Northampton. Richard Earl Rivers was succeeded by Anthony Lord Scales, created Earl Rivers, and was afterwards beheaded at Pontefract, by order of Richard Duke of Gloucester, who was apprehensive that he might be a check to his ambitious projects. From this nobleman's son and successor, who died without issue, the estates passed by will to Thomas Marquis of Dorset, the queen's eldest son, by Sir John Groby, her first husband. Upon the heavy blow which fell upon his family, this nobleman fled into Brittany, and joined Henry Earl of Richmond, after whose ascension to the throne he returned to England and became a privy councillor. He died in the seventeenth of this reign (1502), and was succeeded by his son, who gave up this lordship with the manor of Hertwell to the crown, in exchange for others in Leicestershire. In the thirty-third of Henry VIII. (1541), Grafton was created into an honor, and had the following lordships, manors, &c., annexed to it by Act of Parliament. The hundreds of Wymersley and Hamfordshoe, the forests of Salcey and Whittlewood, the chases of Yardley and Whaddon (the latter is in Bucks), and the manors, &c., in the townships or parishes of Grafton, Hartwell, Ashton, Roade, Courteenhall, Alderton, Stoke Bruerne, Shuttlehanger, Showsley, Blisworth, Milton, Milton Malzor, Tiffield, Paulerspury, Towcester, Easton Neston, Hulcott, Abthorpe, Foscote, Greens-Norton, Blakesley, Woodend, Cold Higham, Grimscott, Gayton, Pattishall, Escote, Ascote, Dalescote, Bugbrook, Rothersthorp, Collingtree, Hardingston, Wootton, Quinton, Slapton, Denshanger, Yardley, Potterspury, Furtho, Cosgrove, Castle Ashby, Wicken and Delapre, Hanslope, Castlethorpe, Haversham, Shenley, Little Harwood, Snellsoe, and Little Linford. Grafton continued a royal demesne till the reign of Charles II., who in 1665 settled the honor, lordship, and manor, and other estates, upon the queen for her life as part of her jointure, and in 1673 granted the reversion of the whole to Henry Earl of Arlington, for life. In 1675 the honor was selected for the title of the dukedom conferred on Henry Fitzroy, Earl of Euston, natural son of Charles II., by Barbara Villiers, Duchess of Cleveland. He was engaged both in the naval and military services; in 1690 he accompanied the Earl of Marlborough to Ireland, and whilst leading some resolute volunteers at the siege of Cork, he was mortally wounded by a shot on the 28th of September, and died on the 9th of October, in the 28th year of his age. His son and successor, Charles, second Duke of Grafton, was Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland in 1720, and Lord Chamberlain from 1724 to his death in 1757. Augustus Henry, his grandson, the third duke, filled some of the highest offices in the state, and whilst discharging the arduous duties of the premiership, in 1768, was assailed by the bitter and malignant phillipics of the immortal Junius. He was forty years Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, "and his liberal principles, classical acquirements, and patronage of literature, fully entitled him to the distinction." On his decease, in 1811, he was succeeded by his son, George Henry, the fourth duke, who, as well as his predecessors, was elected a Knight of the Garter. Henry Fitzroy, the fifth Duke, succeeded his father in 1844. William Fitzroy, the sixth and present Duke of Grafton, is the eldest son of the fifth duke, by Mary Caroline, daughter of the late Admiral Sir G. C. Berkeley; he was born in 1819, married in 1858 Maria Anne Louisa, daughter of the third Lord Ashburton, succeeded his father in 1863, was educated at Harrow, a D.L. for Suffolk and Northampton, and M.P. for Thetford 1847-1863. Residence—Wakefield Lodge, Stony Stratford. Heir-presumptive, his brother, Lord Augustus Charles Lennox, born 1821, married in 1847, Anna, daughter of the late J. Balfour, Esq. The Dukes of Grafton were hereditary receivers-general of the profits of the seals of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Common Pleas; but the office was abolished in 1845, and a pension of £843 per annum substituted by Act of Parliament. There was formerly a chapel or chantry, called the Hermitage of St Mary and St Michael, supposed to be founded by one of the Wydviles, near Shawood, in this lordship.

Grafton Park, an ancient appendage to the manor-house or palace, extended over 995 acres, and was situated in the parishes of Grafton Regis, Potterspury, Yardley Gobion, Alderton, and Paulerspury. It was subdivided into two parks, usually called Grafton Park and Pury Park, which were well stocked with deer, but the whole has long since been converted into farms.

Grafton House stood on the brow of the hill on which the village is situated. King Edward IV. was privately married, in 1464, to Elizabeth Wideville, eldest daughter of Earl Rivers, in this mansion. Richard III. halted here with his forces on the 19th of October 1483; and King Henry VIII., in 1529, held consultations here with Cardinal Wolsey and Cardinal Campegio on the subject of his divorce from Queen Catherine of Arragon. This monarch visited Grafton the same year, and again in 1532, to enjoy the pleasures of the chase. Queen Elizabeth, in one of her progresses through the country visited Grafton, 1563. In December 1643, the Parliamentarians were in possession of Northampton, and the Royalists possessed Grafton House and Towcester; and, after a fierce engagement between the rival forces here, on the 22d, 23d, and 24th of December, the mansion, which was gallantly defended, was at length entered by the enemy and plundered; and on Christmas-day it was destroyed by fire. The remains of this once noble mansion were then occupied by a farmer; but some years since it was partly modernised, and is now the residence of Lieut.-Colonel George Fitzroy.

The Village of Grafton occupies the summit of a hill about $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles E.S.E. of Towcester, 9 south from Northampton, and $4\frac{1}{2}$ from Stony Stratford.

The Church, dedicated to St Mary, consists of a nave, chancel, south porch, north aisle and chapel, and a tower containing four bells. It was newly roofed, pewed, and repaired in 1840, at a cost of about £1100, raised by subscription and a levy on the parishioners. The living is a rectory with that of Alderton, annexed, in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £9, 9s. $4\frac{1}{2}$ d., but now worth about £286 per annum, in the patronage of the crown, and incumbency of the Rev. John Barwick Sams, M.A. Amongst the monuments is a fine freestone altar-tomb, on which reposes the recumbent effigy of Sir John Wideville, and an elegant monument, by Flaxman, to the Countess of Euston. The Rectory House stands at the S.E. extremity of the village.

The National School, with a teacher's residence attached, is a fine building, erected in 1873 by subscription, aided by Government and other grants, on a site given by the Duke of Grafton.

Biography.—Elizabeth Wideville, or Wydville, Queen of Edward IV., the ancestress of the present royal family, as has been seen, was the eldest daughter of Richard Earl Rivers, and born at Grafton. Her first husband, Sir John Grey, of Groby, being a zealous Lancastrian, upon his death on the battlefield of St Albans, in 1460-1, his estates were confiscated by the victorious Edward, and the widow and her two infant sons returned to Grafton. Whilst the Earl of Warwick was negotiating a marriage between the king and the sister of the Queen of France, in which mission he was successful, Edward, hunting in the forest of Whittlebury, became enamoured of the Lady Grey, and sacrificed state policy to love. Mr Baker tells us that the popular tradition of the neighbourhood is, "that the lovely widow sought the young monarch in the forest for the purpose of petitioning for the restoration of her husband's lands to her and her impoverished children, and met him under the tree still known by the name of the Queen's Oak, which stands in the direct line of communication from Grafton to the forest, and now rears its hollow trunk and branching arms in a hedgerow between Pury and Grafton parks. Ignorant of the king's person, she inquired of the young stranger if he could direct her to him, when he told her he himself was the object of her search. She threw herself at his feet and implored his compassion. He raised her from the ground with assurances of favour; and captivated with her person and manners, accompanied her home, and in his turn became a suitor for favours she refused to grant at the price of honour. Finding her virtue inflexible, he yielded to the force of passion, and came from Stony Stratford to Grafton, early in the morning of the first of May (1464), and was privately married there by a priest, no one being present except the boy who served at mass, the Duchess of Bedford, and two of her gentlewomen." The calamities which fell upon her house are well known; and after a long recital of the sufferings of this ill-fated queen, the above learned historian concludes thus: "What were the pomps and pleasures of royalty in comparison with the heartrending catalogue of misery which resulted from her unexpected and dazzling elevation—her father, Earl Rivers, two of her brothers, Sir John Wideville and Anthony Earl Rivers, and three of her sons, Lord Leonard Grey, King Edward V., and the Duke of York successively murdered, and herself twice compelled, with her fatherless and unprotected children, to take refuge in a sanctuary, attainted and stripped of her possessions by a brother-in-law (Richard III.), and persecuted and imprisoned by a son-in-law (Henry VII.)" Queen's College, Cambridge, which had been left unfinished by Margaret of Anjou, Queen of Henry VII., was completed, and several privileges obtained for it by Elizabeth, the year after her royal marriage.

Fitzroy Lieut.-Colonel, Grafton House
Sams Rev. John Barwick, rector

Blunt Thomas Henson, bee-hive maker
Smith Joseph, shopkeeper and vict. Whitehart

Farmers and Graziers.

Brafield John Cook
Linnell Henry
Roper John Clarke

Letters are received here through the Stony Stratford Post-Office.

HARTWELL PARISH

Is bounded by Quinton and Piddington on the north; by Hanslope, in Buckinghamshire, on the south; on the south-west by Grafton Regis, and on the west by Ashton. It contains 1429a. 1r. 13p.; its population in 1801 was 357; in 1831, 531; in 1841, 533; in 1851, 554; in 1861, 542; and in 1871, 537 souls. The gross estimated rental of the parish is £5353, and the rateable value is £4319. The soil is principally clay; about two-thirds of the lordship is arable, and the principal proprietors are—the Duke of Grafton (lord of the manor), Rev. W. H. Castleman, F. W. T. Vernon Wentworth, Esq., and the feoffees of the Stony Stratford Charity. This parish, from its exposed situation, is sometimes called Wold Hartwell, and in Domesday Book it is written Hertewelle. There are some excellent springs in the parish.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, William Peverel held $4\frac{1}{2}$ and the fifth part of a hide here of the fee of Odo, Bishop of Bayeux. Before the Conquest this was the property of Edmar, and was rated at 80s., but it was then valued at 70s. This Odo, half-brother to the Conqueror, was made Earl of Kent and Governor of the Castle of Dover, "the lock and key of the kingdom." Sir Simon Hartwell and his posterity was in possession of the manor for several generations. In the reign of Henry II. these lands were in the hands of several tenants, and in the twentieth year of Edward III. (1346), Walter Mauntell and John de Hertwell accounted for one fee here as held of the Honor of Dover, and subject to the annual payment of 20s. towards the guard of Dover Castle. In the 17th of Henry VIII. (1525), Thomas Grey, Marquis of Dorset, died seized of this manor, and in two years after his son, Thomas, gave it up to the king in exchange for other possessions in Leicestershire. In the thirty-third of the same reign (1541), it was annexed to the Honor of Grafton. The monastery of St James, near Northampton, and the hospital of St John, had possessions here.

Hartwell Park, containing 320 acres, was disparked and sold, in the fifth of Charles I. (1630), to Endymion Porter, Esq., who reconveyed it to the king, in 1663, and by whom it was granted to Sir Robert Berkeley, one of the Justices of the King's Bench. Sir Francis Crane, Chancellor of the Garter, was the next possessor, and from his family it passed to the Arundels, and is at present in the possession of F. W. T. Vernon Wentworth, Esq.

The Village of Hartwell is situated on an eminence, $7\frac{1}{4}$ miles S.S.E. of Northampton. The parish is intersected by the London and North-Western Railway.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, is partly Norman and partly Early English, and was built in 1851, in lieu of the old Norman church, which stood a mile and a half from the village. It contains a Norman arcade, removed from the old church. The living, a vicarage in the deanery of Preston, was endowed with £200 private benefaction, £600 royal bounty, and £200 parliamentary grants, is now worth about £120 a year. The Rev. W. H. Castleman is the patron, and the Rev. George Curzon Cursham, B.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1828 for £199, and belong to the patron, who is lay rector. There is no vicarage house at present. A small Wesleyan Methodist Chapel was erected here in 1814; and the National School, erected in 1861, will accommodate 80 children.

Charities.—The poor's land consists of about $2\frac{1}{2}$ acres, the rent of which, about £4, 18s. per annum, is given away by the trustees. Thomas Barton, gent., left £500, the interest, £15 per annum, is at present distributed in calico to the poor of this parish.

SALCEY LODGE, in the extra-parochial place of Salcey Forest, is situated about 1 mile N.E. of Hartwell, and is the residence of Henry Fitzroy, Esq. It belongs to the crown.

HARTWELL LODGE is also in the extra-parochial district of Salcey Forest, is situated about half a mile from Hartwell. It also belongs to the crown, and is the residence of the Rev. G. C. Cursham.

Postal.—Wall Box. Letters are received by foot-post from Northampton at 9.30 A.M., and despatched at 3.30 P.M. on week days only. Hanslope is the money-order office.

Alderman Mr Jeremiah
Barrs Abraham, veterinary surgeon and vict. Plough
Brice William, shoemaker
Brown John, shoemaker
Brown Joseph, woodman and drillman
Chapman George, shopkeeper
Chapman James, woodman
Chapman Thomas, woodman
Cursham Rev. George Curzon, B.A. vicar
Fitzroy Hy. Esq. Salcey Lodge
Harris John, carpenter
Harris Thomas, shoemaker

Harris William, shoemaker
Hillyer James, butcher, cattle dealer, and farmer
Humphrey George, baker
Jeffs James, shoemaker
Lawrence Wm., parish clerk
Richardson Mr David
Sims Richard, general dealer
Sparks Rbt. vict. Rose & Crown
Timbs William, shoemaker
Warren Janet, Natl. schoolmrs.
Webster Elizabeth, lace school
West Mr John
Whatton Mary Ann, draper
Whatton Mary, lace school

Whiting Mary Ann, shopkpr.
Wickins Mrs Frances Ann, shopkeeper
Wickins Smith, coal merchant

Farmers and Graziers.

Barford James
James William, Tythe Farm
Kemp Mrs Eliz. Hartwell Park
Richardson Jno. Stone Pit Farm
Sawbridge Jno. Hartwell Green
Smith Joseph
Weston Henry (yeoman), Chapel Farm
York William, Hartwell End

Carriers to Northampton.—Robert Cook and Robert Sparks, Wednesday and Saturday.

PASSENHAM PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Whittlebury Forest, Potterspury, and Old Stratford; on the east and south by the river Ouse, which separates it from Buckinghamshire, and on the west by Wicken. It contains, with the hamlet of Denshanger, 3130 acres; its population in 1801 was 685; in 1831, 828; in 1841, 822; in 1851, 969; in 1861, 1105; and in 1871, 1064 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £5879; and the gross estimated rental, £6831. The soil varies from clay to a light loam; the greater part of the parish is in grass; and the principal proprieters are the trustees of the late Viscount Maynard (lords of the manor), Mr Thomas White Gurney, the Duke of Grafton, Mrs Carruthers, Sir Charles Mordaunt, the Crown, and Mr John Kendal. "It was here," says Bridges, "that in 921, King Edward, in his expedition against the Danes, who had ravaged the country northward, and laid siege to Towcester, sat down with his army after he had raised the siege till he had fortified that city, for so the Saxon annals call it, and encompassed it with a stone wall. The almost square entrenchment, which is still remaining near the old ford, was probably raised upon this occasion as a guard to that passage over the Ouse whilst his army lay here encamped. From passing the river here Passenham is supposed to have its name." There is not the slightest indication of this earthwork now visible.

Manor.—Passenham consisted of $1\frac{1}{2}$ hide of land, 1 hide of which was in the hands of the crown, and half a hide was held of the king by one Rainald at the time of the Domesday survey. From the crown this manor passed to the family of Ferrers; and in the reign of Edward I. all the manors, eastles, lands, &c., belonging to Robert Earl Ferrers were in the hands of Edmund Earl of Lancaster, the younger son of Henry III. William de Passenham held this manor under the Earl of Lancaster, from whose son, being found to be an idiot, they reverted to the crown. In the ninth year of Edward II. (1315), Passenham was in the possession of Robert de Holland, and in the twelfth of the same reign it was given by him to Thomas Earl of Lancaster, in exchange for other manors. It was again seized into the hands of the king upon the execution of Thomas Earl of Lancaster at Pontefract, in the fourteenth of this reign, but was restored to his brother Henry Earl of Lancaster, in the first of the ensuing reign. From John Duke of Lancaster it descended to Henry, his son, upon whose advancement to the throne it became annexed to the crown as part of the duchy of Lancaster. Part of this manor is said to have belonged to Elizabeth Wydeville, wife of Edward IV. No further mention is made of it till the tenth of Charles I. (1635), when we find it in the hands of Sir Robert Bannastre, from whom it descended to his daughter Dorothy, the first wife of William Lord Maynard. Thomas Maynard, Esq., their grandson, devised his estates, including Passenham, to his first cousin, the Hon. Charles Maynard, who succeeded to the barony of Maynard in 1745, and was created Viscount Maynard in 1766. Sir Charles Maynard, Bart., the second Viscount Maynard, died without issue in 1824, and the title and estates descended to his nephew Henry, third Viscount Maynard, who died in 1865, leaving his estates in the hands of the Rev. George Symonds and George Gibson, Esq., trustees. The hospital of St John of Jerusalem had possessions in this parish. The Manor-House, the residence of Charles George Perceval, Esq., is a fine specimen of the thirteenth century style, and stands north of the church. The old tithe barn, which joins it, is a massive building with buttresses and a massive oak groin roof; report says it was used as an hospital in the time of Cromwell.

The Village of Passenham, which is very small, is about $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile N.W. from Stony Stratford, and $8\frac{1}{2}$ S.E. from Towcester.

The Church, dedicated to St Guthlac, a Saxon saint, was one of the eight churches in the neighbourhood of Crowland Abbey dedicated to this saint, and consists of a nave, chancel, and pinnacled tower, which was formerly surmounted by a spire. The tower contains five bells; the pulpit is elegantly carved; the chancel is fitted round with carved oak panels, and has fourteen sedilia in carved oak. These had originally the "miserere seats," similar to those in the choir of Westminster Abbey; but they have been removed, and made into a cornice round the chancel. The chancel screen has been partially removed, and the rich carved work which formed the top is now the entablature of an unsightly west gallery. The windows on the south side of the church are beautiful specimens of thirteenth century work. The first name of a rector recorded for this parish is dated 1239. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Preston, rated at £20, and now valued at £316, and consists of 65 acres of glebe, 10 acres of foresland, 20 acres of Lammas ground, and 13 acres of midsummer meadows, of which the first crops belong to the rectory ; the tithes of the old inclosure of Passenham ; 8a. 5p. allotted for glebe land ; 117a. 23p. in lieu of tithes, &c., in Denshanger ; and the sum of £2, 13s. 4d. out of the rectory of Passenham. Lord Maynard is the patron, and the Rev. George Marie Capel, B.A., incumbent. The Rectory House stands south of the church.

Trinity School, Old Stratford. This school, which has been under the management of the present principal, the Rev. James Thomas, B.A., for the past twenty-five years, and is under the visitation of the Bishop of Peterborough and the rector of the parish, affords instruction in the various subjects required for the Cambridge local and other examinations to about 80 boys, of whom between 50 and 60 are boarders. The progress of the pupils is periodically tested by an examiner appointed by the Syndicate of the University of Cambridge. The school possesses playing-fields of over 20 acres, besides a large gravelled playground ; also an excellent swimming-bath, which is carefully graduated in depth. The school premises have been recently rebuilt, with every provision for health and comfort. The schoolroom has been licenced by the bishop, and divine service is held in it every Sunday evening. The Daily and Sunday School is supported by subscription.

Antiquities.—In excavating the soil for laying a new floor in the dining-room of the rectory (in August 1873), six skeletons were discovered, resting only 18 inches below the surface, and from their appearance competent judges suppose them to be more than a thousand years old. While our agent was collecting information for the present work, the rector informed him of another skeleton which had been exhumed that morning (September 19), about 16 inches beneath the flooring of the hall. Whilst preparing a vault for the late Rev. Loraine Smith, fifty skeletons were exhumed ; and in a field about a quarter of a mile north of the church, human remains are everywhere to be met with a little below the surface. If the antiquity thus given to these bones be correct, it will take us back to the scenes of some of the great battles fought here in the ninth or tenth centuries between the Saxons and the Danes, probably to an earlier period. Some even give to these remains an antiquity of fifteen centuries, which would carry us up to the Roman era. Remnants of flint, pottery, glass, &c., of great antiquity, have also been dug up here.

Charities.—Carpenter's charity consists of six neat cottages and an allotment of 2a. 2r. of land ; Allen's or Jervis's charity, of five cottages and 11 acres, the rent of which is distributed to the poor in clothing ; John Swannell, in 1707, left a rent-charge of 50s. for teaching poor children of Denshanger to read and write, which annuity is now paid to the schoolmistress for instructing 6 poor children ; Thomas Nicoll, in 1726, left a rent-charge of £1, 4s. yearly, for different charitable purposes ; and Edward Whitton, in 1766, left £100, with which £114, 12s. 3d. Old South Sea Annuities was purchased by the executors, the interest of which is expended in bread to the poor of the parish, and there is £5, 13s. distributed annually in coal at Christmas, in lieu of forest rights of gathering wood.

DENSHANGER, or DANESHANGER, is a hamlet forming the western division of this parish, and contains, exclusive of the forest, 900 acres ; the population is included in that of Passenham. The soil is chiefly clay on a limestone bottom ; about two-thirds of the hamlet is in grass, and it is in the hands of several proprietors. There is a fine, free-seated church for 430 people, built in 1854 at a cost of about £3000, nearly £1500 of which was given by the Hon. and Rev. C. G. Perceval Eagle, rector of Calverton Bucks. There is a mixed school for 120 children, built in 1861, and an Infant School, built in 1871, for 92 children, both supported by voluntary contribution. The cost of building and fitting these schools was nearly £700, of which £400 were obtained from the proceeds of the sale of old parish houses, and the rest by subscription.

The Village is about 2 miles from Stony Stratford, and is intersected by the Buckingham Canal. The Baptists have a chapel here, which was erected in 1833, and here is also a small Primitive Methodist's Chapel.

HOLYWELL and LITTLE LONDON are two small hamlets a little north of Denshanger.

PUXLEY, or POWKESLEY, within the limits of Whittlebury Forest, lies north of Passenham, and contains three farmhouses. The manor is annexed to the Honor of Grafton. A part of the hamlet of Old Stratford is also in this parish.

Forest Lodges.—Two of the keepers' lodges in Whittlebury Forest, Hanger Lodge and Shrob Lodge, are in this parish.

Post-Office.—Letters arrive from Stony Stratford about 7 A.M., and are despatched at 7 P.M.

Capel Rev. Geo. Marie, B.A. rector	Perceval Charles George, Esq. Passenham Manor	Scrivener Richard, farmer
Meads Joseph, toll-collector, Old Stratford	Reeve William, farmer, Manor Farm	Tapson Jno. toll-gate collector
Page William, blacksmith and wheelwright, Old Stratford	Reynolds Hy. toll-bar collector	Thomas Rev. James, B.A. head master of Trinity School, Old Stratford , and curate of Passenham
	Sanders Joseph, vict. Black Horse, Old Stratford	Webb Wm. corn miller & farmer

DENSHANGER.

Post-Office.—George Bignall, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Stony Stratford at 6.45 A.M., and are despatched at 6.45 P.M.

Andrews Levi, stonemason	Goldsworth Joseph, shopkeeper	Robinson John, lime burner
Atkinson Mrs Harriet, butcher	Haseldine Geo. shopkpr. & baker	Robinson John, butcher
Battams Misses Caroline and Mary, Northfields	Hicks Samuel Henry, baker	Rogers Thomas, shoemaker
Billing David, beer retailer	Johnson William, Esq. Denshanger House	Rodnight Wm. coal and lime mercht. & brick & tile maker
Bird Michael Warwick, car- penter and parish clerk	Jones Job, shoemaker	Rose James, shepherd
Brafield Septimus, coal mert. and vict. Fox and Hounds	Kendall Wm. Esq. Dove House	Salmon Mrs Ann
Burnhill Mrs Catherine	Lowe George, j. shoemaker	Yates Benjamin, wood dealer
Burrows Jno. thrash. machn. onr.	Partridge Joseph, wheelwright and vict. Duke's Head	Farmers and Graziers.
Canvin Jas. coalmert. & boat-onr.	Patrick Rd. baker & shopkeeper	Battams William, Northfields
Canvin Rd. beerho. & wheelwt.	Potter Sydney, Natl. schoolmr.	Brafield Thos. Puxley Grange
Canvin Thos. butcher & shopkpr.	Roberts Edwin and Henry, engineers and agricultural implement makers, Denshanger Iron Works	Druce Edward
Church Joseph, gardener	Roberts Albert, ironmgr. genrl. dlr. and insurance agent	Druce Walter
Compton James, bobbin turner	Roberts Luke, blacksmith	Golby William, Hanger Lodge
Ellis Miss Jane, infant schlmrs.		Johnson William, Denshanger House
Elmes Richard, tailor		Kendall John, Dove House
Foddy John, beer retailer

PAULERSPURY PARISH.

Paulerspury, Westpury, or Parvelis-Pery, from its ancient lords, includes Plumpton and the hamlet of Heathencote, and is bounded on the north by Easton Neston, Shutlanger, and Alderton; on the east by Yardley Gobion and Potterspury; on the south by Whittlebury Forest; on the west by Whittlebury, and on the north-west by Towcester. It contains with its hamlets 2893 acres; its rateable value is £5201; and its gross estimated rental £6006. The population of the parish in 1801 was 859; in 1831, 1092; in 1841, 1188; in 1851, 1162; in 1861, 1233; and in 1871, 1220 souls. The soil is principally a strong clay, and the principal landowners are, the Duke of Grafton, George Sheddon, Esq. (lord of the manor), T. G. F. Hesketh, Esq., and a few others. About half the parish is in grass.

Manor.—William the Conqueror gave the lordship of Pirie to William Peverel, after the Conquest, and at the Domesday survey it consisted of 3½ hides and the fifth part of half a hide. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 26s. 8d., with 10 acres of meadow, and a wood 6 furlongs in length and 4 in breadth, and the whole was valued at £4. Gitda was the Saxon proprietor. William Peverel, the lineal descendant of the abovenamed William, was in possession of this estate in the reign of Henry II., and from him it passed to Robert de Paveli. In the ninth year of Edward II. (1315), Lawrence de Paveli was lord of this manor, and it continued in the possession of this family till the latter end of the reign of Edward III. In the beginning of the next reign, Sir John de St John was lord of Pirie, and with his posterity it remained for several generations. In the sixteenth of Henry VIII. (1524), the king levied a fine of it, and in the fifth of Edward VI. (1551), it was granted to Sir Nicholas Throckmorton. His granddaughter Mary carried it in marriage to Thomas Lord Wooton, whose daughter Anne, wife of Sir Edward Hales, obtained it in the partition of Lady Wooton's inheritance. This Sir Edward Hales made a noble but abortive endeavour to rescue Charles I. during his imprisonment in the Isle of Wight; he raised on his own security the sum of £80,000 to defray the expense of his enterprise, but owing to its failure, and not being in a position to discharge this debt, he was obliged to end his days abroad, and is said to have died soon after the Restoration. His son, of the same name, the third baronet, succeeded him, and filled some of the highest offices in the state under James II. On that monarch's attempt to escape out of the kingdom, after the landing of the Prince of Orange, Sir Edward was one of his three attendants, and in consequence was imprisoned in the Tower for a year and a half. He was afterwards created Baron Hales, Viscount Tunstall, and Earl of Tenderton, by the abdicated monarch, and died in Paris in 1695. He alienated Paulerspury, about the year 1687, to Sir Benjamin Bathurst, whose son, Allen, was created Baron Bathurst in 1711, and elevated to the dignity of Earl Bathurst in 1772. He died in 1775, and was succeeded by his son Henry, second Earl Bathurst, who was Lord High Chancellor of England. Henry, the third earl, sold Paulerspury to Robert Sheddon, Esq., who died in 1826, and was succeeded by his son, George Sheddon, Esq., from whom it passed to his son, William George Sheddon, Esq., in 1862. He died in 1872, and was succeeded by his brother, Roscoe Sheddon, Esq., the present lord of the manor. This lordship was annexed to the Honor of Grafton on its creation in 1541.

The Manor-House stood contiguous to the west side of the churchyard. Here were formerly two parks, called the old and the new park, which Sir John St John, in the tenth of Henry IV. (1409), obtained a licence to enclose in one park.

The Village of Paulerspury, which is divided into Church End and Pury End, with an interval of about a quarter of a mile between, extending nearly a mile in length, is situate 3 miles S.E. by S. of Towcester, and 11 from Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St James, is in various styles, and consists of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, north chapel, north and south porches, and square tower, in which are five bells and a clock. The north chapel is in the Early English, the body of the building and chancel in the Decorated, and the tower in the Perpendicular style. The nave and aisles were rebuilt and resealed in 1843-4. The chancel was restored and the vestry built by the present rector in 1855. In the chancel is a fine sedilia and piscina, and an altar-tomb, with two wooden effigies of about the middle of the fourteenth century. The north chapel contains an altar-tomb, beautifully executed, to Sir Arthur Throgmorton, Knight, and his lady, in recumbent positions; the former is dressed in a suit of mail, and both are resting sideways on their elbows. The tomb bears date 1625. There are eight stained-glass windows, three of which were given by Isaac Lovell, Esq., who also presented an organ, and left a sum of money, which brings in £15 a year, to provide an organist, &c. The east window is of stained glass, by Clayton & Bell, representing the four evangelists, and St Peter and St Paul, St James and St Jude, which was given by the rector to the memory of his mother. He also gave two of the other stained-glass windows, and two of them were given by Mr Boghurst. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £24, 4s. 2d., but now worth £863, 19s. 9d. per annum, with residence and 68a. 2r. 34p. of glebe, in the gift of the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford, and incumbency of the Rev. William Henry Newbolt, M.A.

The churchyard was enlarged in 1871 by the addition of half an acre of ground, the gift of the late William George Sheddon, Esq.

The Rectory House, which stands east of the church, is a handsome structure, rebuilt by the late rector in 1822.

The Independent Chapel, erected in 1826, was restored in 1872, at a cost of upwards of £300, raised by subscription.

The Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have each a place of worship in this parish; the former was erected in 1811, and the latter, which is at Pury End, was built in 1862.

The National School is a neat stone building, in the Early English style of architecture, erected in 1861 by the present rector, at a cost of over £1000. It has a clock placed in a bell turret, which is surmounted by a small shingled spire given by the Warden and Fellows of New College, Oxford. It is endowed with £41 per annum, derived from Marriott, Nichol, and Lovell's charities. Each of the two first-named endowments require that six boys shall be educated free in the principles of the Church of England. The endowments are subsidised by subscriptions and school pence of the boys and girls who are not educated free. The interest of £500 a year is paid out of Lovell's charity in prizes to the most deserving boys. The old schoolroom, attached to which is the master's residence, is used for parish purposes; there are also vestry hall, night school, and club room. The Independent School, a brick building, was erected in 1863 by Mr John Scrivener, by whom and the children's pence it is supported.

The other Charities are 3a. 2r. 34p. purchased with £100 left in 1728 by Mrs Eliza Spinal, the rents whereof to be distributed to ten poor church widows; the sum of £1, 10s. per annum received from Mrs Jane Leeson's charity for the poor; the interest of £20 given in 1742 by Mrs Clapham to the poor; and a rent charge of 5s. per annum bequeathed to the poor in 1762 by William Lepper. William Marriott, in 1720, devised his lands here, for which an allotment of 21a. 3r. has been granted, the rent to be applied to the poor, after paying £6 to the schoolmaster, for the instruction of 6 poor boys: and Thomas Nicholl, in 1726, left a rent charge of £6, 2s., of which sum £5 is to be applied to the teaching of 6 poor boys, and £1, 2s. is laid out in bread on St Thomas' Day, which is given to the poor who attend church regularly.

Eminent Men.—Edward Bernard, D.D., a learned astronomer, linguist, and critic, was born here on the 2d of May 1538. His father, the Rev. Joseph Bernard, removed to Northampton, where Edward received the rudiments of his education. He was afterwards sent to the Merchant Tailors' School in London, from whence he was elected scholar of St John's College, Oxford, in 1655. In 1673 he accepted the Savilian professorship of astronomy, died in 1697, and was buried in St John's Chapel, Oxford. He published several useful works, and left many MS. volumes of his own composition on scientific, historical, and other subjects.

William Carey, D.D., "the patriarch of Indian missions, and the first Oriental professor of languages in India," was the son of Edmund Carey (originally a tammy weaver, but afterwards schoolmaster and parish clerk), and born here on the 17th of August 1761. At the age of fourteen years he was bound apprentice to a shoemaker at Hackleton, and in 1783 joined the Baptist denomination, and was publicly baptized at Northampton, in the river Nene, near Scarlet Well, by the late Dr Ryland. He soon after became a village preacher, and in 1786 he was appointed pastor to a small congregation there, and opened a school as a means of increasing his trifling income. In 1792 he published his "Inquiry into the Obligations of Christians to use means for the Conversion of the Heathen, &c." He afterwards originated the mission to India, and embarked for that country in January 1793. His aptitude for acquiring languages, we are told, was his most wonderful natural endowment; for "without the advantages of a classical education, and whilst struggling with poverty, supporting himself first by manual exertion, and then as a village pastor and schoolmaster, by dint of unaided application he enabled himself, before he left Moulton, to read his Bible in the Latin, Greek, Hebrew, French, Italian, and Dutch languages!" On his arrival in India, he applied himself to the study of the Bengalee, and in 1796, to the Sanscrit languages; in 1799, he had nearly completed the translation of the Holy Scriptures into the former language, and in about thirty years, principally through his instrumentality, the whole, or portions of the sacred writings were translated and printed in forty different dialects. He was appointed the first professor of the Sanscrit, Bengalee, and Mahratta languages, with a salary of £1500 per annum, in the college of Fort William, at Calcutta, in 1801; in 1805, he received a diploma from the Scottish University as Doctor of Divinity; in 1806, was elected a member of the Asiatic Society of Calcutta; and in 1823 he was appointed translator of the laws and regulations of the government general of India in council. Amongst his philological contributions to Oriental literature may be noticed his grammars of the Mahratta, Bengalee, Punjabee, Sanscrit, and Bohtanta languages; Mahratta, Bengalee, and Bohtanta dictionaries, and "An Universal Dictionary of the Oriental Languages derived from the Sanscrit." The last work, when nearly completed, was destroyed by a fire which burnt down the printing office at Serampore. Dr Carey was also a distinguished botanist and naturalist, editing works on those subjects. He was instrumental in obtaining the abolition of the suttees, or immolation of widows on the funeral piles of their husbands; the prevention of infanticide, and of persons devoting themselves to death at Sangur Island. He died at Serampore on the 9th of June 1834, in the 73d year of his age.

Plumpton End forms the south-east division of this parish. Here was formerly a park which Richard Damory, in the second of Edward III. (1329), had licence to form.

The Village now consists of a private dwelling and a few cottages contiguous to the Pury end of Paulerspury. The Duke of Grafton is the principal proprietor.

HEATHENCOTE is a hamlet in this parish, belonging to the Duke of Grafton and T. G. F. Hesketh, Esq. George Sheddon, Esq., claims the manor as parcel of the manor of Paulerspury, and the Duke of Grafton claims a manor in Paulerspury and Heathencote as part of the Honor of Grafton. The Village stands on the Chester Road, about one mile east of Towcester. Here was formerly a chapel, but no trace of its site is remaining.

Post-Office at Thomas Bignall's. Letters per messenger from Towcester, at 8.20 A.M., and are despatched at 5.20 P.M.

Adams Samuel, gamekeeper,
Heathencote

Ashby Mrs Elizabeth

Bignall William, wheelwright

Brown Samuel, shopkeeper

Buckingham Rev. Joseph (Ind.)

Chapman John Franklin, miller,

Cuttle Mill

Cross Wm. grocer, dpr. & lace dlr.

Dove William, baker

Elliott John, dealer in calves

Elstow Thomas, shopkeeper

Fascutt Mr William Lovell,

Plumpton End

Hill Allen Robt. mast. Nat. schl.

Hinds William, shoemaker

Hobbs Jph. shopkpr. Pury End

Holton Mrs Elizabeth, vict.

Barley Mow

Kingston Miss Elizab. mistress

Infant school

Kirby John, vict. Plough, Cuttle

Mill

Kirby Martin, shopkeeper

Lepper Mr Thomas, Pury End

Lepper Thomas, bricklayer

Lepper William, bricklr. & vict.

Bricklayer's Arms, Pury End

Line John Pywell, farm bailiff,

Heathencote

Linnell Jno. shopkpr. Pury End

Newbolt Rev. William Henry,

M.A. rector

Newman Miss Elizabeth

Poynter William, wheelwright

and blacksmith, Pury End

Reed Lovell, butcher & gardnr.

Rogers Samuel, gardener

Rogers Wm. carrier, Pury End

Savage William, blacksmith

Scott John, shoemaker

Scott Joseph, shoemaker

Scott Walter, butcher

Scrivener Mr John

Scrivener Rd. butchr. Pury End

Smith Miss Clara, mrs. Ind. schl.

Smith Mr Richard

Tite Thomas, beer retailer

Tite William, parish clerk,

Plumpton End

Tomlin Job, shopkpr. Pury End

Ward Ts. collar & harnes. mkr.

Webb Jas. Valentine, butcher and shopkeeper, Pury End

Weston Henry, tailor

Wilcox Benjamin, hurdle maker

Wood Mrs Mary Ann

Farmers and Graziers.

Attwood Richard

Blunt Stephen, Plum Park

Chapman John Franklin (and millr), Cuttle Mill

Druce Charles, Tew's End

Elliott John Malsbury Kirby,

Heathencote

Grimsdick Dennis, Pury End

Grimsdick Edward (yeoman)

Grimsdick Jas. Manor-House

Linnell James Edw. The Hill

Manning Francis Simpson,

Park Hall, Heathencote

Montgomery Fras. Heathencote

Pettifer John Gay, Heathencote

Vernon John Middleton, Paulerspury House

Carriers.—William Rogers, to Northampton, on Wednesday and Saturday.

POTTERSURY PARISH.

This parish, which includes the hamlet of Yardley Gobion, and part of Old Stratford, is bounded on the north by Grafton Regis, on the east by Cosgrove and Furtho, on the south by Wicken and Whittlebury Forest, and on the west by Paulerspury. It contains, with its hamlets, 3163 acres, and its population in 1801 was 1144; in 1831, 1544; in 1841, 1651; in 1851, 1734; in 1861, 1600; and in 1871, 1699 souls; including 52 persons in the union workhouse. The rateable value of the parish is £5671 (for Potterspury, £3032; and for Yardley Gobion, £2639); the gross estimated rental is £6663. The soil is principally a strong grey loam on limestone, and the principal owner is the Duke of Grafton, the lord of the manor. Here was formerly a pottery, from which the parish takes its appellation of Potterspury, and which Morton tells us was the largest as well as the oldest in all those parts. Clely Well, which gives name to this hundred, is in this parish.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Henry de Ferieres held 3 hides, and the fifth part of a hide of land in Pyrie, which, with a mill of the yearly rent of 18s. 4d., 16 acres of meadow, and a wood 6 furlongs in length and 2 in breadth, was valued at £6. Earl Tosti was the Saxon proprietor. In the reign of Henry II., Robert de Ferrers held this estate of the fee of Earl Ferrers. In the fourth year of the reign of Edward I. (1275), John Fitz-John died seized of the manor of East Perye (as it was then called to distinguish it from Paulerspury or West Pury), which he had held of the Earl of Derby by the service of one knight's fee. From the St Johns' it passed in marriage to the family of Beauchamp, and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), the Earl of Warwick was certified to be the lord of East Perye. Upon the banishment of Thomas, Earl of Warwick, in the twenty-first of Richard II. (1397), this with several other manors was granted to Thomas Mowbray, Earl of Nottingham, but restored to him with his liberty in the first of Henry IV. (1399), and descended to his son, Richard de Beauchamp. Anne, the daughter of this Richard, Earl of Warwick, carried it in marriage to Richard Neville, eldest son of the Earl of Salisbury, who levied a fine of it in the sixth of Edward IV. (1466). Upon his overthrow it was seized by the crown, but restored to his countess in the third of Henry VII. (1487), to the end that it might be given back by her to the king, and henceforth the fate of this great but ill-fated heiress is unknown, save that in two years after, the king assigned to her the manor of Sutton, in Warwickshire, to secure her from utter destitution. In 1541, this manor was annexed to the Honor of Grafton, and the Dukes of Grafton have been its successive lords since. Here was formerly a park called Pury Park or Grafton Park, but the residence is now a farm house, called Pury Lodge.

The Village of Potterspury, which is nearly a mile in length, is situated about 5½ miles south-east of Towcester.

The Church, dedicated to St Nicholas, a handsome stone structure, stands at the north end of the village, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch, chancel, vestry, and tower containing five bells and a clock. It was thoroughly restored in 1848, at a cost of about £3000, of which sum the late Duke of Grafton contributed £1000. It was reroofed, repaired, and a handsome pulpit and reading-desk erected in 1860. A gallery containing the organ was taken down, the organ was removed to the north aisle, and the west arch, a handsome one, was thrown open. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £8, 6s., endowed with £200 private benefaction, £200 royal bounty, and £600 Parliamentary grant, and now worth about £100 per annum. The patronage is vested in the Earl of Bathurst, and the Rev. Robert Emans Crawley, M.A. is the incumbent. The impropriate rectory consists of 320a. 13p. allotted to the Duke of Grafton, the lay rector, in lieu of glebe land, and the impropriate tithes of the parish. The benefactions granted to the vicarage are vested in 43a. 3r. 29p. in Paulerspury parish, and £124, 13s. 11d., 3 per cent. reduced.

The Vicarage House, which is a substantial building, stands south of the church. It was formerly the rectory-house, but was used for many years as a farmhouse. In the year 1865 it was exchanged by the Duke of Grafton, together with 3 acres of land attached to it, for the old vicarage house which stands east of the church, and as portion of the glebe land situate in Paulerspury parish.

At the south-east end of the village is a cemetery, inclosed by a stone wall, in which is a small chapel; the site and building were the gift of the late Duke of Grafton.

The Independent Chapel was erected in 1780, and the Sunday-school in 1846. This body was first established here in 1690, by the Rev. Michael Harrison. The Rev. James Slye is the minister.

The National School was enlarged in 1863 by the addition of girls' and infants' schools. It is chiefly supported by the Duke of Grafton, whose contributions are subsidised by Government grant. Mr Job Wright is the present teacher.

Charities.—William Peake left a rent charge of 30s. per annum for gowns for two poor widows, and Gabriel Clarke, a rent charge of £2 per annum to the poor of this parish. Cuthbert Ogle, in 1726, bequeathed £100, to be placed at interest, and divided between the minister of this parish and the poor. Cottages worth about £4 per annum were purchased with the sum of £63, arising from several small donations to the poor. Nicholas Saxby's charity consists of a house, small garden, and outbuildings in Buckingham, which lets for about £14 a year, and is expended in the repairs of the church, bridges, &c.

YARDLEY GOBION is a hamlet in this parish, forming its north-eastern division, 1 mile from Potterspury, and $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Stony Stratford, situated on the turnpike road from Northampton to Stony Stratford. The Grand Junction Canal passes through the hamlet. The Duke of Grafton is the lord of the manor and principal proprietor. It contains 1592 acres, of the rateable value of £2639; the gross estimated rental is £3110. Its population in 1871 was 654. The manor of Yardley passed from the families of Ferrers and Derby, through the Fitz-Johns to the Earls of Warwick. It was annexed to the Honor of Grafton on its creation, 1541, and has descended to the present Duke of Grafton.

The Church, dedicated to St Leonard, is a small stone structure in the Early English style, consisting of nave, chancel, vestry, and north porch; it was erected and endowed by the present Duke of Grafton in 1865, in memory of his father. It is furnished with open deal sittings, and an organ by Richardson, of London, and there is a handsome stained-glass window to the memory of the late Lord Charles Fitz-Roy. This church is used as a Chapel of Ease to Potterspury.

The Independent Chapel, a small stone building, erected by subscription in 1826, will seat about 250, and is served from Potterspury.

A Social Club and Reading-room, a building of red brick, with stone dressings, was erected here in 1872, by the Duke of Grafton, for the inhabitants; it is supplied with the London and local papers, &c.

The Village stands about 1 mile north-east of Potterspury, and 3 from Stony Stratford, on the turnpike road leading to Northampton. This hamlet supports its own poor.

The Potterspury Union Workhouse, which stands in the village, was built in 1837 at a cost of about £2000, and will afford accommodation to 200 inmates. The union embraces an area of 35 square miles, and comprises the following places:—Alderton, Ashton, Calverton (Bucks), Cosgrove, Furtho, Grafton Regis, Hartwell, Passenham, Paulerspury, Potterspury, Stony Stratford (east and west side), (Bucks), Wicken, Wolverton (Bucks), and Yardley Gobion. The average number of paupers received here for the past year is 52, and the average weekly cost of each for food and clothing is 4s. The affairs of the union are conducted by a board of 18 guardians, and 4 ex-officio guardians, of which Mr Henry Linnell is chairman, and Mr John Reeve vice-chairman; Mr Edward Swinfen is clerk to the board. William Bouser is master of the workhouse and relieving officer. Mrs Bouser is matron, and Miss Lucy Tarry is schoolmistress. The medical officers are, Messrs W. C. Daniels, R. W. Watkins, and T. N. Heygate, and the Rev. Robert Emans Crawley, M.A., is the chaplain. A schoolroom, for the children in the workhouse, together with dormitories and day-room, and a room for the accommodation of the schoolmistress, were added in 1872.

More End, or Moor End, forms the north-west portion of Potterspury, and is also the property of the Duke of Grafton. Here was formerly a castle, but the date of its erection or demolition is unknown. Bridges conjectures it was built in the reign of King Stephen, and the last notice of it is in the reign of Henry VIII., when it was granted to Parr. It was a rectangular building, with a tower at each angle, and the site is still known as the Castle Close.

Wakefield, or the field of Wac, or Wake, the first Saxon owner, forms another portion of this parish. Wakefield formed an integral part of Whittlebury Forest, and is now the property of the Duke of Grafton.

Wakefield Lawn Races were established by the late Duke of Grafton, and supported with much spirit for about twenty years, but were discontinued in 1788.

Wakefield Lodge, the forestial seat of the Dukes of Grafton, was erected by Charles, second Duke, from a design by Kent. It is a plain but elegant structure, delightfully situated about 1 mile south of Potterspury, on a beautiful lawn, in which there is an expansive lake of 35 acres. The mansion contains some excellent family and other portraits.

(For the family of Fitzroy, Dukes of Grafton, see Grafton Regis parish.)

Post, Money-Order Office, and Savings Bank.—George Osborne, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Stony Stratford at 7 A.M., and are despatched at 6 P.M.

Grafton Duke of, Wakefield Lodge

Alexander John, serg. of police
Atkins James, shoemaker
Beers Frank, huntsman
Benson Thos. John, shopkeeper,
Old Stratford
Bishop Wm. thres.machn.owner
Brand George, blacksmith
Bryant Mrs Eliz. beerhouse
Chadwin George, farm bailiff
Church George, shopkeeper
Church Mr Richard
Clarke John, baker
Collins Alfred, butcher & shopr.
Collins Mrs Sarah, vict. Anchor
Cooke Richard, shopkeeper
Crawley Rev. Robert Emans,
M.A., vicar
Faux Benjamin, carpenter
Faux John Joseph, carpenter
Frost John, blacksmith
Frost Richard, shopkeeper
Gray George, stonemason
Greaves John, head gardener,
Wakefield Lodge
Harris Edwin Swinfin, jun.
architect

Hawksley Thomas, carpenter
Hobson William, sawyer
Holman John, bricklayer
Holman Mrs Susannah, shopkr.
Holloway John, tailor
Ismay George Taylor, butcher and beerhouse
Kingston Thos. vict. Red Lion
Kingston Thos. jun. shoemaker
Lindsay Miss Juliet, mistress
national school
Moore Miss Mary Ann, mistress
infant school
Nichols John, baker
Osborne Mrs Charlot. wheelwt.
Partridge Joseph, wheelwright
& vict. Swan, Old Stratford
Reeve William, shopkeeper
Richardson Jno. vict. Old Talbot
Robinson Edward, rope and twine maker, and parish clerk
Robinson Jno. rope&twine mkr.
Scrivener Miss Catherine
Scrivener Thos. baker & farmer
Simpson John, land agent to the Duke of Grafton
Slye Rev. James (Independent)

Slye Mr Thomas Barton
Smith James, shoemaker
Smith John, carpenter and vict.
Reindeer
Webb Mrs Alice
Weston James, wheelwright
Wilson Jno. M'Dowall, collar & harness maker, Old Stratford
Wise Walter, marine store dlr.
Wright Job, master National school

Farmers and Graziers.

Chettle John, Beech House
Cooke Henry, Pury Lodge
Druce George
Iliffe Enoch (and butcher)
Kingston Thomas
Masom Joseph
Scrivener Alfred
Scrivener Job
Scrivener Thomas
Wise John (and maltster)
Wood Rd. & Son (Joseph), and corn millers
Wood Thomas

YARDLEY GOBION.

Post-Office at Thomas Holloway's. Letters arrive from Stony Stratford at 8 A.M., and are despatched at 5.30 P.M. The nearest Money-Order Office is Potterspury.

Berill George, baker
Bloore Jas. Chas. horse breaker
Blunsom Mrs Hannah
Drinkwater Daniel, butcher
Druce Mrs Jane
Foddy John, tailor and draper
Gregory Miss Elizabeth, vict.
Coffee Pot

Harris Miss Mary
Harrison James, shopkeeper
Holloway Thomas, tailor
Johnson William, corn dealer,
Moorend
Lambert John, baker
Masom John, butcher
Morris Benjamin, bricklayer

Pratt Thomas, shoemaker and vict. Pack Horse
Readman Mr John, Yardley House
Sanders Mr William
Smith John, blacksmith
Smith Jonathan, baker
Smith William, beerhouse

Swain John, hurdle maker
Tebbett Mrs Emma, shopkeeper
Warren James, wharfinger and coal dealer
Warr Thomas, coal dealer and shoemaker

Watts William, sawyer
Weston Samuel, wheelwright
Woodward John, shopkeeper
Farmers and Graziers.
Clare William (yeoman)

Gregory Jeremiah
Lambert John
Lawrence John
Scott Benjamin, Moorend
Weston Mrs Anna Maria
Weston Henry Joseph

Carrier.—From Potterspury, Richard Cooke, to Northampton, on Wednesday and Saturday; to Stony Stratford, on Friday, and Towcester, on Tuesday. From Yardley Gobion, James Bloore, to Northampton, on Wednesday and Saturday.

ROADE PARISH.

Roade or Rode is bounded on the south-east by Ashton, on the north by Courteenhall, and on the west by Stoke Bruerne and Blisworth. It contains 1566 acres; its population in 1801 was 345; in 1831, 553; in 1841, 716; in 1851, 693; in 1861, 664; and in 1871, 676 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £6640, 6s. 10d., and the gross estimated rental £7510. The soil is principally a grey loam on limestone; about three-fourths of the lordship is arable, and the Duke of Grafton is the lord of the manor and principal proprietor.

Manor.—Dodin held 4 parts of half a hide of land in Rode at the time of the general survey, which, in the reign of the Confessor, was the freehold of Suain; and one Stephen held 1 hide here of the fee of the Bishop of Bayeux. In the ninth year of Edward II. (1315), Robert Mauntell was lord of this manor. In the family of Mauntell it continued till the thirty-third of Henry VIII. (1541), when John Mauntell, having been convicted of murder, incurred the forfeiture of his lands, and Rode was annexed in the same year to the Honor of Grafton. Lenton Priory, near Nottingham, had a wood here called Shortwood, which was held by the Mauntells, and granted in the first of Elizabeth (1559), to Henry, Lord Hunsdon. St James' Abbey, near Northampton, held certain possessions here, which were granted in 1550 to Richard Fermor, Esq., of Easton Neston. A Manor in this parish, called Hide or Hyde (that being the quantity of land of which it was originally composed, and which was held by Stephen at the Conquest), lies on the western side of the parish. It contains the ancient Manor-House and about 100 acres of land. This manor formerly belonged to the Abbey of St James, and was also granted to Richard Fermor, Esq., whose grandson, Sir Hatton Fermor, sold it, in the reign of James II., to Stephen Hoe, Esq.

The Village of Roade, on the turnpike road to Stony Stratford, is about 5½ miles south of Northampton. The Grand Junction Canal is in the neighbourhood, and a little S.W. of the village is a station on the London and North-Western Railway.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands at the northern extremity of the village, and consists of a nave, south porch, and chancel, with a central tower in which are four bells. It is of the transition period, between the Norman and Early English styles. The edifice was repaired and a gallery erected in 1822. It has since been thoroughly restored at various periods, principally at the expense of the Duke of Grafton. The living is a vicarage, in the deanery of Preston, certified at £15; returned at £48; but now worth about £120 per annum. The Duke of Grafton and the rector of Ashton are the patrons—the former being entitled to two nominations out of three; and the Rev. Alexander Walter Annand, M.A., is the present incumbent. There are no tithes in this parish.

There is an Infant and Sewing School in the village, which was established in 1836.

The Baptist cause here was commenced early in the seventeenth century. A meeting-house was erected on the present site in 1736, and rebuilt and enlarged in 1802, and in 1871-72 it was re-seated and otherwise improved, and a new Sunday-school added at a cost of about £500. It will now seat 450. The Rev. Thomas How is the present minister.

Charities.—Catherine and Elizabeth Chival in 1708 left a piece of unenclosed land here for the poor, and for which the Commissioners of Enclosure awarded an allotment of 11a. 3r. 16p. which now lets for £20 a year. The Feoffees' Estate consists of four small cottages and an allotment of 10a. 2r 12p. now let for £30, which is also applied to the relief of the poor.

Post.—Wall Box. Letters arrive from Northampton by foot messenger at 9 A.M., and are despatched at 4 P.M., on week days only.

Annand Rev. Alex. Walter, M.A. vicar	How Rev. Thomas (Baptist)	Tew Samuel, coal dealer
Abbott Wm. insp. of nuisance	Jones Mrs Sarah Elizab. draper	Tew Thos. tailor and shopkpr.
Ayres Mary, vict. White Hart	Jones William, blacksmith	Watts Thomas, butcher
Checkley George, saddler	Lalor Miss Anne Louisa, school	Westley Joseph, shoemaker
Clarke Jno. baker and shopkpr.	Lovell Thomas, vict. George	Westley Mr William
Clarke John, coal dealer	Lucas John, vict. Fox & Hounds	Widows William, tailor
Clarke Thomas, stationmaster	Martin William, butcher	Willcox Mrs Caroline
Clarke Wm. market gardener	Murdin Samuel, stationer	Wreford Silvanus, cattle dealer
Crick Mr Charles	Old Mr George	Wright Edwin, engineer
Dunkley Benjamin, shopkeeper	Parish William, cart owner	Wrighton Mr Henry
Faulkner John, tailor	Rolls Mrs Elizabeth
Faulkner Misses Sarah and Lucy Hill	Rolls Miss Mary Jane, schlmrs.	Farmers and Graziers.
Foddy Benjn. tailor and draper	Shipp Jacob, thrashing-machine owner, cattle dr. & beerhouse	Butlin Wm. Edward (yeoman)
Goodridge Geo. car.&wheelwrt.	Simpson Mary, dressmaker	Carter Jph. Jas. New Inn Farm
Gregory Josiah, shoemaker	Smith Mr George	Hinton Thomas (and baker)
Hands William, grocer, &c.	Smith Mr Thomas	Howes Charles (and vict. Cock)
Hillyard Henry, blacksmith	Smith Ths. jun. wheelwright, &c.	White Geo. Joseph, Hyde Farm
Hillyard John, higgler	Stimpson David, tailor	Williams Thomas
	Sturgess Mrs Ann, shopkeeper	Young Thomas (and thrashing- machn. owner) Thrupp Farm

Carrier.—London and North-Western Railway to all parts; George Hillyard, to Northampton, Wednesday and Saturday.

STOKE BRUERNE PARISH.

This parish, which includes the hamlet or chapelry of Shutlanger, is bounded on the north by Blisworth and Roade, on the east by Roade and Ashton, on the west by Blisworth and Easton Neston, and on the south by Alderton and Grafton Regis. It contains, with its hamlet, 2582 acres; and its population, in 1801, was 609; in 1831, 702; in 1841, 800; in 1851, 861; in 1861, 824; and in 1871, 823 souls. The rateable value of the parish is, with Shutlanger, £4163; and the gross estimated rental is £4815. The soil is principally a grey loam on limestone, and the principal landowners are the Duke of Grafton (the lord of the manor), T. G. F. Hesketh, Esq., and F. W. T. Vernon Wentworth, Esq. The greater part of the lordship is arable. This parish derives its name from Stocche, which it is called in Domesday Book, signifying a place on an elevation, with the addition of the word Bruere, now corrupted into Bruerne, the name of its ancient lords.

Manor.—Suain held 4 hides of land of the king in Stocche, at the time of the Conqueror's survey, which, with a mill of the yearly rent of 13s. 4d., 30 acres of meadow, and a wood 3 furlongs in length, was valued in the Saxon times, and then at £3. In the reign of King John this lordship was in the possession of William de la Bruere, at whose death, in the eleventh of Henry III. (1237), it descended to his son. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), William de Coumbe-martyn was lord of Stoke Bruere; and in the third of Edward III. (1330), it was in the hands of Adam de Cortenhale, the husband of his widow. After this period the manor became subdivided, and was in the hands of several possessors, and in this condition it continued till the reign of Henry VIII., when the subdivisions were reunited, and in the possession of the crown. Charles II. included this manor in the extensive grant in trust for the first Duke of Grafton, in 1673, and from him it lineally descended to the present duke.

The Abbey of St James, near Northampton, and the Hospital of St John of Jerusalem, had possessions in this parish.

Stoke Park, which is bounded by the river Towe, contains about 400 acres, and is now the property of F. W. T. Vernon Wentworth, Esq. Stoke Park

House was built about the years 1630-6, by Sir Francis Crane, Chancellor of the Order of the Garter, who established a celebrated manufactory of tapestry at Mortlake, in Surrey, under the patronage of Villiers, Duke of Buckingham. Sir Francis was here visited by King Charles I. and his queen, about the time of the completion of the mansion, in 1636. The house, which stands on an eminence sloping to the river, about 1 mile south of the village, was built from an Italian design, and in its execution received the assistance of Inigo Jones.

The Village of Stoke Bruerne is seated on rising ground, about 4 miles E.N.E. of Towcester, 7 miles south of Northampton, and 4 miles S.E. from Blisworth Railway Station. It is intersected by the Grand Junction Canal, which is carried on a level above the houses of the lower part of the village. At a little distance are seven locks, to lift the navigation from the valley to the entrance of the celebrated Blisworth tunnel, the southern termination of which is a short distance from the village. In forming a new road here, at the time of the enclosure, some coins were found, one of James I., and two of Elizabeth, and several human skeletons. It is not unlikely that the bodies were buried here (considerably beyond the limits of the churchyard) from having died of the plague, as they appeared to have been interred in their clothes, and close to one of them was found the remains of a clasp purse.

The Church, a handsome stone structure, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands on elevated ground at the north-western extremity of the village, and consists of a nave and side aisles, north and south porches, chancel, and a tower containing five bells and a clock. It was restored in 1865, when it was re-seated with open sittings; the aisles and chancel were re-floored. The organ is in the rood-loft, the screen separating the chancel from the nave, and the pulpit and reading-desk are of carved oak. In the chancel are several monuments and a brass, the latter to the memory of the Rev. Richard Lightfoot, who was rector of this parish for twenty-four years; he died in 1625, aged 63 years. There are two piscinas—one trefoil-headed, in the east wall of the north aisle, and the other cinquefoil-headed, in the wall of the south aisle—both are in good preservation. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £30, and now worth about £530 per annum. It consists of 66 acres of glebe land in Stoke, together with the tithes, which were commuted, in 1844, for a rent charge of £248, 6s. 10d., and Shutlanger for £290, 19s. 8d., except some small modusses. The Principal and Fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford, purchased the advowson in 1676. The Rev. P. H. Lee, M.A., is the incumbent, and the Rev. R. Kyrke, M.A., curate.

The Rectory House, a commodious dwelling, with tastefully laid out grounds, stands north-east of the church.

A Wesleyan Chapel was erected here in 1846.

The National School, built in 1838-9, is supported by subscription, Government grant, and school pence.

Charities.—Thomas Bosenhoe, in 1610, devised a messuage, &c. (15a. 3r. 5p.) to trustees, to apply one moiety of the rents to the repairs of the church, and the other to be divided between the poor of Stoke and Shutlanger. The new charity estate consists of 2 cottages, and 2a. 2r. 35p. of land, the rents of which are applied to the relief of the poor of the parish. Thomas Kingston, in 1609, left 12d. weekly to the poor of Stoke and Shutlanger. A rent charge of £4, 3s. 4d. per annum was left, in 1702, to be distributed in bread to the poor of Stoke and Shutlanger.

Longevity.—William Davis, of Little Billing, died at Shutlanger, in 1751, aged 114 years, retaining all his faculties to the last; and Mrs Ann Cockbolt died at Stoke, in 1775, in the 104th year of her age. Her senses were also unimpaired, and she could see to read and make lace till within a few days of her death.

SHUTTLANGER or SHUTTLEHANGER, is a hamlet in this parish, though equal in extent with Stoke, exclusive of the park. It has distinct highway, poor, and church rates from Stoke, but is a manorial and parochial member of it. The village is about 1 mile N.W. of Stoke, and 2½ E.N.E. of Towcester. Its population in 1801 was 257; in 1831, 325; in 1841, 372; in 1851, 392; in 1861, 394; and in 1871, 380 souls. It contains 1254 acres. Its rateable value is £2022, and the gross estimated rental £2318. Ironstone of a superior quality has been found here, and is now extensively worked.

A Chapel, at the lower end of the village, formerly attached to Shoresly Abbey, has been converted into cottages. A Methodist Chapel was erected here in 1844; and an Infant School in 1841, after the enclosure.

Post-Office.—John Amos, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Towcester at 8.30 A.M., and are despatched at 4.45 P.M. Wall box at Shutlanger, cleared on week days at 5.10 P.M.

Amos Jno. rope mkr. & shopkr.	Lyman Miss Frances, shopkpr.	Tew James, shopkeeper
Ayers Mrs Ann, bkr. Shutlanger	Shutlanger	Tew Mrs Jane, shopkeeper
Ayres Mr John	Lyman Henry, vict. Boat	Tew John & Son, stonemasons
Bass Geo. shopkpr. Shutlanger	Lyman Thos. whlwr. Shutlanger	Tew Thos. stonemason & bldr.
Brookes Charles, gardener	Lyman William, vict. Plough,	White William, coal merchant
Campion Jno. baker, Shutlanger	Shutlanger	Willber William, shopkeeper
Child William, canal agent	Pettifer Miss Jane Matilda,	Woodward James, baker
Child William, jun. butcher	mistress Ashton Nat. school	Woodward William, butcher
Clark Joseph, smith, Shutlanger	Pettifer Robert, blacksmith
Cockerill William, carpenter	Pincke William Thos. master	Farmers and Graziers.
Elliott Mr Henry, Shutlanger	National school	Campion James, Shutlanger
Eydon John, wheelwright and	Savage Geo. brick & tile manfr.	Franklin Joseph Gallard, Shut-
carpenter, Shutlanger	corn miller, road and land	langer Grove
Gostick Miss Harriett, shopkpr.	surveyor and valuer	James Ricd. Jno. (& corn miller)
Gostick William, shoemaker	Scott Joseph, shoemaker	Linnett John
Hales Jabez, baker, Shutlanger	Sturges Francis, vict. Horsehoe,	Martin Thomas
Harris Mrs Mary, infant school-	Shutlanger	Nickson William, Shutlanger
mistress, Shutlanger	Sturgess William, shoemaker,	Peasland Samuel
Kyrke Rev. Richard, M.A.	Shutlanger	Phipps Thos. Hy. Hall, The Plain curate, Shutlanger	Taylor James, butcher and	Stops William George (and Lee Rev. Philip Hy. M.A. rector	shopkeeper, Shutlanger	millner), Stoke Lodge
Linnett Jno. shopkpr. & beer retl.	Tew Miss Charlotte Selina,	Woodward Fras. (& cattle dlr.)
	dressmaker	Woodward Joseph

Carriers.—Joseph Skears to Northampton, Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday, and Towcester on Tuesday; James Campion, to Northampton, on Wednesday and Saturday.

WICKEN OR WYKENS PARISH

Consists of the two ancient and contiguous parishes, which from the names of their former possessors were called, Wyke Dyve and Wyke Hamon. It is bounded on the east by Passenham, on the north by Lillingstone Lovel and Passenham, on the south by the river Ouse, which divides it from Buckinghamshire, on the west by Oxfordshire and Buckinghamshire. It contains 2309 acres; its population in 1801 was 367; in 1831, 536; in 1841, 503; in 1851, 487; in 1861, 529; and in 1871, 472 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3179, and the gross estimated rental £3689. The soil is principally a white clay, on a substratum of limestone; and Sir Charles Mordaunt is the lord of the manor, and principal proprietor. It is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture; and the lordship is intersected by the Buckingham Canal.

The Manor of Wyke Dyve consisted of 1 hide and 1 virgate in Wicha, at the time of the general survey, and was held of the king in capite by Robert de Oigli. One Roger was the under-tenant, and it was then rated at £5, though in the Confessor's time, when it was the freehold of Azor, it was only valued at 40s. In the reign of Henry III., William de Dyve died seized of this manor, which he held of the Earl of Warwick, by the service of one knight's fee. In the 9th of Edward I. (1281), Henry de Dyve held it of the king in capite; in the 9th of Edward II. (1316), another of the family of the same name was lord of this manor. From the family of Dyve it passed to the Mortimers, Earls of March. In the 27th of Henry VI. (1448), Sir Richard Wydeville, of Grafton, levied a fine of this manor. Sir Richard Wydeville, lord of this manor, was created Earl Rivers in the 6th of Edward IV. (1467). In 1716, the Earl of Sunderland sold it to Charles Hosier, Esq., of London, with whose descendants it continued, and one of whom carried it in marriage to Sir John Mordaunt, Bart. The Manor-

House stood south-west of the churchyard ; part of the out-offices have been converted into a farmhouse.

The Manor of Wyke Hamon was the freehold of Siward in the Saxon times, but after the Conquest it was held of the king by one Maino or Brito. It consisted of 3 virgates, which, with 6 acres of meadow and a wood 10 furlongs in length and 3 in breadth, was rated at 40s., which was the former valuation. Maino's successor was Hamon, who, in the reign of Henry II., was found to hold 2 hides here of the fee of Wolverton, of which barony it was a member. In the 4th of Edward I. (1276), John de Wolverton, a descendant of the Hamons, was in possession of this manor ; in the 18th of the same reign he had licence to enclose his park within this manor, in the forest of Whittlebury ; and in the 9th of Edward II. (1316), he was lord of Wyke Hamon. It subsequently passed to the De Wydevilles, and was purchased by Mr Hosier, in 1716, from whose descendants it passed in marriage to Sir John Mordaunt, Bart., from whom both these manors lineally descended to the present proprietor. These two parishes were annexed to the Honor of Grafton on its erection in 1541. The park was disparked by Lord Sunderland in 1651.

The Village of Wicken is situated about $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles W.S.W. from Stony Stratford ; a small brook which intersects it was formerly the boundary between the two parishes.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Evangelist, stands at the northern extremity of the village, and was rebuilt, except the tower, in 1758, by Thomas Prowse, Esq., the husband of Elizabeth, the grand-daughter and successor of the above-named Charles Hosier, Esq. It is a handsome edifice, consisting of a nave and side aisles, chancel and south porch, and a tower containing five bells. The interior is very neatly fitted up. The stone work of the chancel window, which was inserted by Miss Mordaunt, aunt of the present possessor, in memory of her mother, is a copy of a window in Evesham Abbey ; stained glass has since been substituted for the plain in this window by Lady Penrhyn. Bridges tells us that the church of Wyke Hamon is supposed to have been pulled down about the year 1619, 33 years after the two parishes were united, at which time the bells were removed to Wyke Dyve. The site of this church is known as the old churchyard, or the churchfield close, at the south end of the village. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Preston, rated in the king's books at £15, 1s. 10½d., and now worth about £604 a year. Sir Charles Mordaunt is the patron, and the Rev. E. Cadogan, M.A., incumbent. The rectory consists of 126 acres of glebe, and the tithes of the consolidated parishes.

The Rectory House, built in 1703, stands a considerable distance south of the church. A new wing was added in 1873 by the present rector, at a cost of £300.

A School, which is well attended, was erected in 1839 by Sir John Mordaunt, and a class-room has since been added to it.

Wicken Park, the seat of Sir Charles Mordaunt, and at present occupied by Lord Penrhyn, is situate about 1 mile south of the church. It was originally the park lodge, and was enlarged and converted into a commodious mansion by Mr Hosier.

Charities.—The Bread Fund consists of £84 new 4 per cent annuities, and the dividends are expended in the purchase of bread for the poor. Mrs Sharp, in 1747, left £100, the interest to be laid out in bread for the poor. Edward Whitton, Esq., in 1774, bequeathed £100, for supplying bread to the poor ; the legacy was expended in the purchase of £114, 12s. 8d. old South Sea annuities, and the dividends are applied to the above purpose. Mrs Elizabeth Prowse, in 1810, left one share in the Grand Junction Canal, the interest to be applied to the support of a schoolmaster, and towards the expenses of the Day and Sunday schools. In commemoration of the union of the two parishes of Wyke Dyve and Wyke Hamon, the rector gives 3 bushels of flour, 6 lb. of butter, 6 lb. of currants, and 3s. worth of spice and carraway seeds to be made into cakes, of which every householder has one on Holy Thursday. The rector, in his canon-cals, meets the villagers under an old elm tree, on a spot called "Gospel Bank," near the rectory, and after singing the 100th Psalm, the cakes and 8 gallons of beer are distributed.

WYKEN HURST, or WOOD WICKEN, in this parish, contains one farmhouse, adjoining Whittlebury forest.

Post-Office.—Thomas Green, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Stony Stratford at 7.45 A.M., and are despatched at 6.15 P.M. On Sundays they arrive at 7.45 A.M., and are despatched at 11.20 A.M.

Penrhyn Right Hon. Lord, Wicken Park	Chowler William, stud groom,	Webb George, carpenter
Atkins Mr Richard	Clark Henry, butcher	Webb William, carpenter
Bonham John, gamekeeper	Clark Thomas, shoemaker
Cadogan Rev. Edw. M.A. rector	Foddy John, tailor	Farmers and Graziers.
Canvin Daniel, maltster and vict. White Lion	Gray Thomas, stonemason	Abbey John
Canvin Elizabeth, shopkeeper	Green John, baker and shopkpr.	Barratt Abraham, Manor-House
Challice Geo. William, National schoolmaster	Marriott William, blacksmith	Bennett Geo. Mount Mill Farm
	Panter Joseph, woodman	Bird John, Dagnell Farm
	Shakeshaft Joseph, carpenter	Chapman George Josiah
	Swan Thos. gardn. Wicken Park	Cooke Thomas, Wicken Hurst

Carrier.—John Panter, to Wolverton Station, Thursday; Stony Stratford, Friday; and Northampton, Saturday.

NASSABURGH HUNDRED.

THE hundred of Nassaburgh, or, as it was formerly called, Nassus Burgi, the Nass or Ness of Burgh, from its situation stretching out in the form of a promontory between the rivers Welland and Nene, from Easton to their confluence at Crowland, the ancient course of the latter river being to the south of its present direction. It is also called the soke or liberty of Peterborough, and comprehends the city of Peterborough, and 23 parishes, 3 chapelries, and 12 hamlets. It is bounded on the east and south by the Nene, which separates it from Cambridgeshire and Huntingdonshire, on the west by Willibrook hundred, and on the north by the Welland, which divides it from Lincolnshire. It occupies the north-east angle of the county; is of an irregular shape, and comprises 51,695 statute acres, extending about 14 miles in length from east to west, and 8 miles in breadth from north to south at its widest points. "It was a woody solitary country," says Bridges, "till Adulphus abbat of Burgh, after his promotion, in 972, cut down the woods, erected manor-houses and granges, and let the lands to farm for certain rents. Abbat Turolde afterwards improved and cultivated it, granting out of the estate of the church feods to several knights, who, in the waste places which Adulphus had cleared from wood, built towns and villages, which still retain the names of their founders." This district was formerly in two parts, one was called the hundred of Burgh, with its members, and the other Nassaburgh, or Langdyke hundred. In the 9th of Edward II. (1315) it was called Nassaburgh hundred, and the Abbot of Peterborough was then lord of it. After the dissolution of the abbey, Nasso Burgi, or Nesse of the Borough, was granted on the erection of the see of Peterborough to the bishop and his successors. In the 19th of Elizabeth (1576) it was surrendered to the crown by Bishop Scambler, reserving to the bishopric the annual rent of £3, 6s. 8d.; and in the following year it was granted to William Lord Burghley, Sir Thomas Cecil, his son and heir, and the heirs of the said Lord Burghley. The Marquis of Exeter is the present lord; but the hundred of Burgh, or Burgh of St Peter, with its members, remain with the Dean and Chapter. The following enumeration shows the names of the places and their area, as collected from the parish rate-books, with the number of houses and the population in 1871, and the present rateable value and gross estimated rental of each parish.

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Peterborough.....								£	£
Minster Close Precincts.		27	1	...	140	129	269
St John Baptist.....	3,624	2,957	79	33	6,851	7,255	14,106	54,127	63,148
St Mark's.....
St Mary's.....								7,394	8,428
St Paul's.....
Dogsthorpe, hamlet.....	1,339	108	6	...	233	248	481
Eastfield, hamlet.....		22	1	1	48	54	102
Newark, hamlet, including Oxney.....	976	55	1	...	£ 132	112	244	2,440	2,624
Longthorpe.....	1,390	66	2	...	134	103	297	2,627	2,874
Bainton.....	960	43	3	...	92	102	184	2,002	2,221
Barnack.....		136	10	...	283	304	587	3,911	4,408
Pilsgate, hamlet.....	4,686	29	1	...	78	81	159	1,500	1,677
Southorpe, hamlet.....		40	119	99	218	2,183	2,458
Castor.....	3,473	156	1	1	334	346	680	5,686	6,117
Ailsworth, hamlet.....	1,324	85	2	...	217	177	394
Sutton, hamlet.....	888	24	44	55	99	1,089	1,270
Upton, chapelry.....	1,180	23	51	56	107	1,507	1,611
Eton.....
Woodcroft, hamlet.....	1,262	31	88	83	171	2,661	2,858
Eye.....	2,682	330	18	...	687	709	1,396	6,039	6,689
Glington.....	1,489	94	1	1	182	231	413	3,445	3,725
Helpstone.....	1,754	153	3	2	373	363	736	5,440	6,245
Marholme.....	1,368	31	2	...	78	69	147	1,774	2,257
Maxey.....	1,701	83	4	...	170	196	366	3,421	3,737
Deeping Gate, hamlet.....	637	49	103	105	208	1,304	1,420
Newborough.....	5,091	151	4	...	366	349	715	8,258	9,293
Borough Fen (ville).....	2,829	30	3	...	81	73	154	4,333	5,002
Northborough.....	717	60	1	...	122	123	245	1,485	1,618
Paston.....	929	26	1	...	58	64	122	1,422	1,517
Gunthorpe, hamlet.....	215	13	2	...	27	29	56	404	...
Walton, hamlet.....	900	49	2	1	81	119	200	2,750	2,853
Werrington, chapelry.....	1,403	168	19	1	350	368	718	4,199	4,683
Peakirk.....	570	54	5	...	122	119	241	1,598	1,738
Stamford Baron, St Martin.....		283	13	...	734	777	1,511
Wothorpe, hamlet.....	1,522	11	3	...	25	29	54	7,038	8,128
Thornhaugh.....	2,554	58	3	...	121	137	258	2,511	2,776
Ufford.....	1,830	38	2	...	77	84	161
Ashton, hamlet.....	797	22	2	...	63	58	121	3,164	3,484
Wansford.....	447	26	59	74	133	788	889
Wittering.....	2,577	57	1	1	129	141	270	2,482	2,766
	53,114	5,588	196	41	12,799	13,481	26,333	148,982	168,514

THE CHARITIES OF NASSABURGH HUNDRED, as abstracted from the Parliamentary Reports. See also the histories of the towns, parishes, &c.

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what places and purposes applied.	Annual value.
1602.	English's gift (£100).....	Forty poor people.....	£ 30 0 0
"	Simon Gunton (£100).....	Ditto.....
"	Ditto.....	To eight poor people.....	1 4 0
1691.	Rd. Goodwin (£50).....	Fifteen poor widows. Merged in the other charities.
"	Dr Howarth (£20).....	Twenty-four poor men, 2s. 6d. each	3 0 0
"	Bishop Towers (£10).....	Candles to the poor.....	1 10 0
"	Rt. Dickenson (£50).....	Sixty poor, 2s. 6d. each.....	7 10 0

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purpose applied.	Annual value.
1703.	John Dickinson (£100).....	Sixty aged poor in sums of 5s. each at Christmas	£15 0 0
1669.	Robert Orme (£150).....	Twelve poor people.....	30 0 0
	Added out of the town stock £15, 10s. }
1690.	Dr Thomas White (£240).....	Twenty poor families or persons...	10 0 0
1706.	John Sparks (£50).....	Twenty poor.....	4 0 0
	Elizabeth Sparks (£50).....	Thirty-one poor widows	3 17 6
1707.	James Lowry (£100).....	Forty poor people.....	5 0 0
	Ditto (£20).....	Teaching sixteen poor children	10 0 0
	Ann Ireland (£100).....
1719.	Mary Ireland (£125).....	Poor, bread	6 0 0
1722.	Ann Hunt (£50).....	Twenty poor widows.....	5 0 0
	William Wing (£50).....	Ditto.....
1726.	Henry Billings (£24).....	Coal to poor.....	1 4 0
1734.	Mary Sheffield (£10).....	Poor.....	1 10 0
1719.	Thos. Deacon (28 acres of land, the rent to be distributed to aged persons ; Ditto, 231 acres 25 poles and 2 cottages), for clothing and educating twenty poor boys*.....		400 0 0
1826.	Wm. Squire (£500), poor of the hamlets of Peterborough, at 5s. each.....		15 0 0
1772.	Mary Langton, (£945, 7s. 4d., 3 per cent., to poor persons at 2s. 6d. each. Sambrook's Charity (£400).....	Poor	28 7 2
1781.	Matthew Wildbore (rent-charge), bell-ringers £5, bread to poor 10s., and 21s. for preaching an annual sermon.....		12 0 0
	The Grammar School, Minster Almshouse, and Cosins Charity, belonging to the Dean and Chapter, were not inquired into by the Commissioners. N.B. —The above sums have all been expended in the purchase of landed property, the rents of which are applied by the town feoffees in accordance with the wills of the different donors.		6 11 0
	The Poor's Estate (34 acres).....	Bainton parish, poor.....	54 0 0
	The Poor's Estate (51 acres and a few cottages), Barnack parish, poor and school.....		72 10 0
1734.	Rt. Wright (rent).....	Castor parish, bread to poor, lost.	2 12 0
	Town Land.....	Sutton chapelry, poor	9 15 0
	Poor's Estate.....	Helpstone & Etton parishes, school	40 0 0
1811.	John Porter (rent).....	Ditto, poor.....	2 0 0
	Sir William Fitzwilliams.....	Marholme parish, almshouses.....	12 13 4
1638.	William Budd (£10).....	Ditto, poor.....	0 10 0
1597.	Lord Burghley (£100 a year), Stamford Baron, St Martin's Parish Hospital, for thirteen poor men.....		100 0 0
	The descendants of the founder (£60, 1s. 8d. a year), ditto, ditto.....		60 1 8
1608.	Thomas Bellott (rent-charge of £16 a year), ditto, ditto.....		16 0 0
1596.	The Burghley Charities (133½ acres), ditto, school, poor, apprenticing children, &c.....		123 0 0
	Earl & Countess of Exeter's Charity	Ditto, bread to poor.....	5 0 0
	Catharine Gregory and others (£16)	Ditto, ditto.....	0 16 0
1682.	Dame A. Thorold (3 a. 3 r. 14 p.)..	Ditto, poor.....	30 0 0
1694.	Thos. Kettleborough (2 a. 30 p.)...	Ditto, poor.....
	Commissioners of Enclosure (1 r. 4 p. of Borough Fen), ditto, poor.....		0 10 6
	Lady Jane Buck (£20).....	Ditto, poor.....	0 15 6
1822.	Fryer's Charity.....	Ditto, poor.....	3 15 8
1484.	Wm. Gerard (the Church Estate)...	Maxey parish.....	114 0 0
1666.	Susan Worsley (23 acres).....	Ditto, poor.....	50 0 0
1745.	Mary Walsham (£100, now £156, 5s., 3 per cent. consols), ditto, poor....		4 13 4
1823.	Jane Baines (£19, 19s.).....	Ditto, poor widows.....	0 10 0
	Town Lands (7 a. 3 r.), Northborough parish, repairs of the church.....		18 5 0
	Church Estate (16 a. 1 r. 13 p.), Paston parish, repairs of the church		30 0 0
1635.	Edwd. Mountsteven (estate), ditto, almshouses for six poor persons.....		20 0 0
1693.	Thomas Spicer (rent).....	Gunthorpe hamlet, poor.....	lost.
1755.	John Goodwin (£100).....	Werrington hamlet, poor.....	5 0 0
1707.	Rev. Thos. Woolsey (£40) }	Thornhaugh parish, school, and poor widows	3 0 0
	Sundry donations (£20).... }
	Rev. J. Bourne £10, and G. Quarles and Mrs Hanger £5 each, Ufford parish, poor.....		0 15 0
1812.	Commissioners of Enclosure (4 a. 3 r. 36 p.), Wansford parish, school....		11 7 0
			£1376 13 8

* As the Bishop and Dean of Peterborough are constituted visitors of this charity by the will of the donor, the Commissioners made no inquiry into the management of the trust or the application of the income.

HISTORY OF THE CITY OF PETERBOROUGH.

PETERBOROUGH is an ancient and well-built city, parliamentary and municipal borough and market town, the seat of the diocese to which it gives name, and the head of the hundred of Nassaburgh and Soke or Liberty of Peterborough, over which it has long enjoyed separate jurisdiction. It occupies a pleasant situation on the borders of the fens, and on the northern bank of the river Nene, which divides it from Huntingdonshire, and is bounded on the east by Whittlesey, on the west by Castor, and on the north by Paston. It is distant 42 miles N.E. from Northampton; 13 S.E. from Stamford; 53 from Lincoln; 84 from Norwich; 80 from Oxford; 31 from Cambridge; 20 from Huntingdon; 40 from Bedford; 53 from Leicester; 38 from Lynn; and 81 N. by W. from London by the high road, 102½ by the Eastern Counties Railway, 110½ by the London and North-Western, and 76½ miles by the Great Northern line. Peterborough is singularly favoured by railway communication (see Article on Railways, page 5). The Great Northern, the Midland, and the Eastern Counties, &c., are all represented here. The Great Northern and the Midland Companies have large and important stations, and extensive works, sheds, and warehouses in the vicinity; those belonging to the former are situated in the hamlet of New England, about a mile from the city; and those of the latter are in the hamlet of Spittal. These works afford employment to great numbers of the inhabitants, whose rapid increase may in a great measure be attributed to the influx of people consequent on the extension of the railway system to the city and neighbourhood, which have nearly trebled their population since 1841. When the census was then taken, the city and its hamlets numbered 6959 inhabitants: in 1851 there were 9920; in 1861, 11,732; in 1871, 15,499; and in the last three years (to 1873) the number had increased to 20,100 souls. The ancient parish of Peterborough (St John the Baptist's), which comprised the hamlets of Dogsthorpe, Eastfield, Newark (with Oxney), and the chapelry of Longthorpe, contains 7399 acres, of the rateable value, including buildings, &c., of £66,588; and a gross estimated rental of £77,074. The area, independent of the hamlets of Dogsthorpe, Eastfield, Newark (with Oxney), and Longthorpe, is 3624 acres, of which the Fitzwilliam family, the Lord Bishop of the diocese, and the Dean and Chapter, are the principal owners.

Government and Franchise.—The government of the city was formerly vested in the lord paramount, the custos rotulorum (the keeper of the rolls), and magistrates appointed by the crown, with powers equal to those of judges of assize, and in a high bailiff of the city appointed by the Dean and Chapter, as lords of the manor. The magistrates appointed by the lord of the hundred of Nassaburgh hold sessions of the peace quarterly in the sessions court in the gaol, of which Lord Kesteven is chairman, and petty sessions weekly on Wednesday, of which Charles Isham Strong, Esq., is chairman. Constables and other officers are chosen at the court leet held annually. This system, however, is now superseded by municipal government. A royal charter of incorporation, dated the 17th March 1874, has just been granted, and the new borough, which comprises the city and the precincts of the cathedral, and that part of the parliamentary borough which includes Woodstone and Fletton, on the south side of the river in Huntingdonshire, has an estimated population of 22,000; it is divided into three wards, north, south, and east, and the government is vested in a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors, whose election will take place on the 28th May in the present year, 1874. By the same Act the borough is provided with a commission of the peace, under which the regular courts will be held, and quarterly courts of session, at which the corporation is empowered to try capital offences, &c. "The charter was obtained, after a long and costly opposition on the part of the lord paramount, the custos rotulorum, and the justices of the liberty."

Peterborough returns two members to the British Parliament. This privilege was conferred on the inhabitants in the first year of the reign of Edward IV. (1461), when the right of election was vested in the inhabitants within the precincts of the minster being householders not receiving alms, and in the other inhabitants within the city paying "scot and lot;" and which right was exercised till the passing of the Reform Act in 1832, and is extended to the hamlets. The returning officer is Henry Pearson Gates, Esq., whose office will cease on the election of the mayor under the recently-obtained charter. The parliamentary borough comprehends the entire parish and the minster precincts; and the present members are Thompson Hankey, Esq., and George Hammond Whalley, Esq. The revising barrister is L. B. Gaches, Esq., of the Common Law Bar. Peterborough is one of the polling places for the Northern Division of the county; and the title of Earl of Peterborough (now extinct) was conferred on the Mordaunt family by Charles the First. The arms of the city are those of the deanery, the Dean and Chapter being lords of the manor.

The river Nene, which now divides the newly-formed municipal borough, is navigable to Northampton; and some years ago an important project was entertained, the object of which was to improve the navigation of the river to Wisbeach, connecting that town with Peterborough, so as to enable vessels of considerable size to navigate between the two places. Through some cause, however, the project failed, after a "large amount of money had been uselessly expended at Wisbeach by the River Commissioners, who are now without resources; and the once beautiful Nene has in consequence, become a neglected rivulet, and bids well to become a nuisance." It was also in contemplation to improve the navigation from Peterborough to Lynn, and a general survey of the Nene was made several years ago by an eminent engineer for that purpose, and for the better drainage and security of the meadows in the Nene valley against the periodical floods to which it is subject through the heavy rains and the consequent overflow of that river.

The ancient parish of Peterborough, that of St John the Baptist, has recently been divided, and three new parishes formed out of it—viz., St Mark's, St Mary's, and St Paul's—which comprise the suburban hamlets, and for each of which a new church has been erected. The ancient chapelry of Longthorpe, which may be said to form a fifth division, has also been separated from the mother church, and its old chapel of ease has in consequence been raised to the dignity of a parish church. The city contains several good streets, public buildings, and well-stocked shops, is brilliantly lighted with gas, and has a plentiful supply of water. The trade of the place is chiefly in corn, malt, coal, and timber, and the transit by the various railways of live and dead stock and other agricultural produce to the London and other markets. The market days are Wednesday and Saturday—the former for live stock, and the latter for live and dead stock and general produce, and they are well supplied and attended. The fairs are on the 10th of July and 2d of October. The former is for the sale of wood, cattle, horses, &c.; and the latter for horses, and stock of all kinds, wood, and general purposes.

Early History.—Peterborough was anciently called Medeshamstede, from, it is said, a deep hole or gulf in the river Nene known as "Medes Well." Camden, quoting from Robert de Swaffham, says, "In the middle of this river there is a place like a whirlpool, so deep and cold that in summer no swimmer can go to the bottom, and yet it is never frozen in winter, for there is a spring continually bubbling up with water." The Saxon Chronicle gives a similar account of this phenomenon; and though it has been denied that there is such a place in the river, yet the fact of its existence is testified by many, and it is supposed to be only a short distance above Orton Stanch. In a note to the above quotation, Camden states that swimmers in his time commonly dived to the bottom. The most probable etymology, however, of the word Medeshamstede, is that given by Britton in his "History of Peterborough Cathedral"—namely,

"mede or mead, a meadow; ham, a sheltered habitation; and sted, stead, or stad, a bank, station, or place of rest." "Peterborough," says Bridges, "oweth its increase, if not its origin, to the famous monastery which was founded there about 500 years before the Conquest. The prosperity of the town," he adds, "entirely depended upon that of the monastery; and whatever calamities at any time befell the latter, the former was equally involved in them. Accordingly we find when the Danes, with Harewaldus la Wake, in the time of Abbot Turolf, attacked the convent at Bolehithe Gate, and the monks, resisting them, set fire to the adjacent buildings, the conflagration became so general, that but one house in the town, as we learn from the Saxon Chronicle, escaped the flames."

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, "Burgh" (Peterborough) consisted of 8 hides of land, which was then held by the abbot. There was a mill of the annual value of 5s., 40 acres of meadow, and a wood one mile in length and four furlongs in breadth; and the whole had been valued in the reign of Edward the Confessor at 20s., but was now rated at £10. In the reign of Henry II. it was certified that there were 70 hides, 3½ virgates, in the demesne of the Abbot of Peterborough, which included the hamlets with their dependencies, and the several members of the city. In this reign the abbey obtained a grant for two eight-day fairs to be held here—the first commenced on the second Sunday in Lent, and the second on the feast of St Oswald (the 5th of August); and a third fair of eight days, commencing on the feast of St Peter and St Paul (June 9th), was granted in the first of Richard I. (1189). In Bridges' time a fair was held here on the feast of St Matthew, the charter for which was granted for Northolm in the 34th of Edward I. (1305), but it was "translated" to Peterborough for convenience. This charter was confirmed by Henry VI., and the fair was directed to be held at the bridge near the "Neene," in the counties of Northampton and Huntingdon. This fair is still held in the same place on the 2d of October. In the 9th of Edward II. (1315) the abbot was lord of Peterborough and its members. The abbey was free from all suits at hundred courts, gelds, and exactions; from the payment of toll and customs in all fairs, markets, passages of bridges, ways, and ports, as well without as within the realm of England; and these privileges were confirmed to the dean and chapter in the reigns of Henry VIII. and Queen Elizabeth. There are two manors appertaining to Peterborough. Burgh or Boroughbury manor, which includes the hamlets of Dogsthorpe, Eastfield, and Newark, was granted on the erection of the see in the 33d of Henry VIII. (1541), to the bishop and his successors; and the other, or Peterborough manor, was given to the dean and chapter.

THE ABBEY.

The foundation of the great Benedictine Abbey of Peterborough, which became one of the wealthiest and most powerful in England, was laid, according to the Saxon Chronicle, in the year 655, by Oswi, King of Northumbria, and Peada, the first Christian King of Mercia, and son of Penda, one of the last of the Saxon pagan kings of England, and the fiercest of the Saxon chieftains. Penda, after having devastated the territories of the East Angles, the West Saxons, and the Northumbrian kings, was at length defeated and slain in November 655, in a great battle fought with Oswi on the river Air, in Yorkshire (see pages 45, 46). Oswi succeeded to the power of Penda, but gave the province of South Mercia to Peada, who about three years before had embraced Christianity, and married Alfhleda, the daughter of Oswi. "The two princes, Oswi and Peada," in the words of the chronicler, "came together and said they would rear a minster to the glory of Christ and the honour of St Peter." This was Peterborough, the first monastic establishment, and (with the exception, perhaps, of Lichfield, the seat of the Mercian bishopric), the first resting-place of Christianity in central England.

The site chosen for the new monastery was Medeshamstede, "the meadow homestead," in North Gyrwa-land, which at that time was inhabited by a people called the Girvians, or Gyrvii, from the word gyr, which in the Anglo-Saxon signifies a fen. The foundations were laid on a rising ground above the river

Nene, overlooking a wide extent of fen country on one side, and a rich district of woods and meadow-land on the other side. The building was commenced in the presence of the two kings, Peada and Oswi, who, says the Saxon Chronicle, "began the ground-wall, and wrought thereon." But upon the death of Peada, who was murdered during the festival of Easter in the following year, the work was entrusted to a monk named Saxulf, a man of eminent piety, and possessed of considerable wealth. Having completed the monastery, Saxulf became its first abbot, and continued to preside over it until 674, when he was consecrated to the see of Mercia by Archbishop Theodore. Three years after the death of Peada, the Mercians revolted against the rule of Oswi, reasserted their independence, and set up Wulfere, or Wulphere, Peada's brother, and the youngest son of Penda, as their king. This prince, at the commencement of his reign, made great professions of religion, promised to promote to the utmost of his power the building of churches and the restoration of those that were in a dilapidated state. But in violation of these solemn promises, he became a persecutor, and used every means to suppress Christianity; and it is even asserted that he murdered his two sons, who had been converted by St Chad. At length, however, stricken with deep remorse, he went to St Chad, confessed his great sin, promised to expiate the offence to the utmost of his power by the performance of whatever penance he might see fit to impose upon him. St Chad desired him to restore the Christian religion, to repair its ruined temples, and to found new ones. The story of his conversion was curiously painted in the windows of the western cloister of the cathedral; but these windows, with the cloister itself, were destroyed by Cromwell's soldiers at the time of the great rebellion.

Wulphere having become thus converted, encouraged by his example and influence the promotion of Christianity. He greatly favoured the rising Monastery of Medeshamstede, and granted to it many privileges and endowments; and in this he was assisted by his brother Ethelred, and his two sisters, Kyneburgha and Kyniswitha; and on its completion by the noble Saxulf, "it was hallowed in the names of St Peter, St Paul, and St Andrew," by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Rochester, and other prelates, in the presence of Wulphere and his brother Ethelred. The monastery was now in a flourishing state, and at the request of the king and his successor it had great privileges conferred on it by Popes Vitalian and Agatho. Under the fostering care of Ethelred, who had succeeded to the throne of Mercia on the death of Wulphere, the monastery continued to advance in wealth and importance. He built a residence for the abbot, and after a reign of thirty years he resigned his crown in favour of his nephew Coenred, and retired to the Monastery of Bardeny, which he had founded, and of which house he was afterwards elected abbot, and died there in 716.

In the year 870, two hundred and fifteen years after its foundation by Peada, the monastery was entirely destroyed by the Danes, during the rule of Hedda, the seventh abbot, who was himself, with all his monks, slain in the attack. At this period, according to the Chronicle of Ingulphus, it contained a brotherhood of more than eighty monks. It is said that as the Danes were carrying off their booty, two waggons laden with the plunder were with their horses overthrown, and sunk in a deep pit in Nene, near where the bridge stands. In clearing the river near this place in 1820, a dagger was found, which is believed to have belonged to these Danes. It is now kept in a case in the hall of the bishop's palace.

For nearly a century the monastery lay in ruins, but in 966-71 it was restored to its former splendour by Athelwald, Bishop of Winchester, who also restored the Monastery of Ely, which, like its sister of Medeshamstede, was involved in the destruction caused by the Danes in 870. "This prelate was as distinguished a constructor and architect under King Edgar as his successor William of Wykeham was under Edward III." Upon its completion the king, attended by Dunston, Archbishop of Canterbury, Oswald, Archbishop of York, and many other nobles and persons of distinction, visited the restored church, and offered large oblations of land and of gold and silver. The abbey having been confirmed by Edgar in all its ancient privileges, Adulphus, who was chancellor to King Edgar, was made abbot, and afterwards Archbishop of York. He was succeeded by Kenulphus, who surrounded the monastery with a wall of defence; and it was probably from this circumstance that the name was changed from Medeshamstede to that of Burgh. The name Gildenburgh was sometimes given to it from a part of the minster roofs having been gilt by Abbot Leofric; but as the great church was dedicated to St Peter, it finally took and retained the name of Peterburgh. Kenulphus was made Bishop of Winchester. The next abbot was Elsinus, who acquired for his church numerous relics of the saints, including the incorruptible arm of St Oswald of Northumbria, some earth from the battle-field on which he fell, and the body of St Florentinus, brought from Normandy. Elsinus died in 1055.

Leofric was appointed Abbot of Peterborough in 1057. He was a relative of Edward the Confessor, by whose favour he also held the monasteries of Crowland, Thorney, Coventry, and Burton at the same time. He joined the army of Harold at the period of the Norman invasion, but was not present at the great battle of Hastings. He died in the same year on his return to Peterborough, and was succeeded in the abbacy by Brand, who was the abbot that knighted the brave Hereward. Peterborough, like Ely and the other monasteries of the fen country, had been a stronghold of Saxon feeling, and had at first supported the claims of Edgar the Atheling; consequently, on the death of Brand in 1069, Thorold or Turolde, a Norman, was appointed abbot by the Conqueror. In the same year, Hereward, who had joined the Danes under Sweyne in the Isle of Ely, attacked the monastery, but the monks offering a strong resistance, they were unable for some time to force an entrance. They therefore set fire to the houses near the gate, and thus, having burned down nearly the whole of the town, together with the conventual buildings, they succeeded in their object, plundered the abbey, and returned to Ely laden with much booty, including some relics, which were carried off to Denmark. On another occasion the abbot was made prisoner by Hereward, and compelled to pay thirty marks for his ransom. Abbot Turolde, in order to guard against these repeated attacks of the Danes, raised a mound on the north side of the abbey, and built a tower upon it. This account, however, is now thought apocryphal, though the mound is still in existence, and is known by the name of Tout Hill. Turolde died in 1100, and was succeeded by Godric, a brother of Brand, the monks having paid 300 marks to the king for the privilege of electing him. He was soon deposed, however, and the abbey remained in the king's hands for four years. From this period none but churchmen of Norman birth were permitted to hold the high dignity of Abbot of Peterborough.

Ernulf, Prior of Christ Church, Canterbury, who succeeded to the abbacy in 1107, began to build a refectory, finished the chapter-house, and erected a new dormitory. Having been advanced to the see of Rochester in 1114, John of Sees or de Sais, a monk of Sais in Normandy, was the next abbot. It was he who commenced the building of the choir of the existing cathedral after the destructive fire in 1116, which consumed the greater part of the monastery, leaving nothing but the new buildings raised by Ernulf; the flames also catching the village, burnt nearly the whole of it to the ground. Such was the end of the glorious old Monastery of Peterborough, which had flourished, in spite of Danish fury and kingly tyranny, for 461 years; and to such circumstances are we indebted for the present magnificent cathedral, whose foundation was laid on the 8th of the Ides of March, A.D. 1117. Martin of Bec or de Vecti, formerly Prior of St Neots, succeeded to the abbacy in 1133, and ruled with great prudence during the troublous times of King Stephen. He completed the choir (begun by De Sais) and the transept aisles in 1143, in which year it was dedicated with great pomp and ceremony by the Bishop of Lincoln, many abbots, barons, and knights being present. This abbot built a new gate to the monastery, raised a new village on the west side of it, built a bridge over the Nene about the year 1140, altered the place of wharfage, and erected several new houses in the town. The castle which stood on Mount Thorold, or "Tout Hill," as it is now called, is supposed to have been demolished by him. He ruled twenty-two years, and died in 1155.

William de Waterville was the next abbot, formerly chaplain to Henry II., and, like his predecessor, was very zealous in the work of improvement. He founded an hospital for the sick at Spittalfield, built the Chapel of St Thomas à Becket, near the outer gate of the abbey, the chancel of which is now used as the grammar or chapter school; he completed St Martin's Church, and built St Michael's Nunnery near Stamford; and after a rule of twenty years, he was deposed in 1175, and was succeeded, after an interval of two years, by Benedict. This abbot was keeper of the great seal to Richard I., and for whose ransom he sold the chalices; he built the great gateway leading to the monastery, and the whole of the nave from the lantern to the front of the church, which then ended with the two most western pillars of the nave. The painted roof of the nave is also ascribed to him. After Benedict had been appointed to the abbacy of Peterborough in 1177, "finding the great establishment almost entirely destitute of relics, he returned to his own cathedral (Canterbury), and carried off with him the flagstones immediately surrounding the sacred spot (of Becket's murder), with which he formed two altars in the conventual church of his new appointment, besides two vases of blood, and parts of Becket's clothing" (Stanley's "Historical Memorials of Canterbury," from Robert of Swaffham).

Having governed this monastery for nearly seventeen years, Abbot Benedict died in 1193, and was succeeded by Andreas, who died in 1201, and whose body was entombed in the south aisle of the choir, with his two predecessors. Acharius, Prior of St Albans, succeeded in 1200, and Robert de Lindsey in 1214. During the rule of this abbot he had thirty of the windows of the church filled with glass, at an immense expense, an example which was soon followed by others. He attended the fourth Lateran Council, 1215.

Alexander de Holderness succeeded De Lindsey in 1222. He made many improvements in the monastery; enriched it with money and relics, and furnished the church with the crystal vessel wherein the blood of St Thomas à Becket was kept. Alexander died in 1226. Mr G. S. Phillips, in his "Guide to the Cathedral," relates the following interesting anecdote respecting this abbot:—

"On the 2d of April 1830, when the workmen were making a foundation in the cathedral church for the erection of a new choir, they discovered beneath one of the slabs a stone coffin, which their curiosity led them to open. They were surprised to find that it contained the body of a man with a large coarse garment around it, equipped with boots, and having a crosier by its side. There were several very remarkable things connected with this discovery. The abbot's boots were what our modern Crispins call 'rights and lefts,' and in a good state of preservation. The crosier was perfect, and a part of the body was hard and of a copper colour, whilst the other part was decomposed. The body was headless, and a piece of lead was found lying in place of the skull, with this inscription upon it, Abbas: Alexandr: Whether the head of this abbot was cut off by the monks to perform some wonderful cure after his entombment, or whether it was for some other purpose, we cannot say; it is rather remarkable, however, that this abbot died on the very day when he entered the monastery to take up his abode there!"

Martin de Ramsey was the next abbot. He disforested several lands in the neighbourhood of Peterborough, and added them to the possessions of the monastery, and having ruled six years, died in 1232, and was succeeded by Walter de St Edmunds. During the government of this abbot the monastery was re-dedicated and consecrated with holy oil by the Bishops of Lincoln and Exeter (1238), in compliance with a decree of the constitution of Otto, which obliged all churches not consecrated with holy oil to have that ceremony performed within two years. It is generally believed that the western transept of the cathedral was built by him. He entertained Henry III., the queen, and the young prince twice at Peterborough. He also "gave sixty marks towards the marriage of the Princess Margaret with Alexander III., King of Scotland," and increased the number of his monks to 110. Gunton says, "He was pious and merciful to all, exacting nothing unduly of his tenants, whether rich or poor; but if any poor man or woman made their necessities known to him, he would burst into tears, and take compassion upon them." He went thrice to Rome during his abbacy, and died in 1245. William de Hotot was the next abbot; he resigned, but was buried here before the altar of St Benedict. He was succeeded in 1249 by John de Caletto, Prior of Winchester, a relation to Queen Eleanor. Whilst he was abbot of this monastery, the king made him chief justice, and he fulfilled the duties of that office in person, appointing a deputy to govern the monastery during his absence. This abbot is said to have been a great builder; and it is probable that the refectory and south cloister were rebuilt by him, and that the door by which the bishop usually enters the cathedral was inserted at the same time. The Chapel of St Lawrence, which stood at the east end of the Infirmary Church, seems to have been erected about this time. There was an entrance into this chapel from the Infirmary Church through an arch, which is still standing, the chapel having been converted into a prebendal house. He died in London in 1262, and was buried here on the south side of the choir. Robert de Sutton, who first joined the side of the barons, and then that of Henry III., and was compelled to pay heavy fines in consequence, was elected in the same year. This abbot sumptuously entertained King Edward I. at Peterborough. He took up arms against Henry III., and died abroad in 1274, in returning from the Council of Lyons, to which he was summoned by Pope Gregory X., and was buried in a monastery near Benonia. His heart was interred here before St Oswald's altar.

He was succeeded in the same year by Richard de London, who, we are told by Gunton, "erected the great steeple wherein the bells hang, when he was a sacrist," but he is not certain which of the two steeples it is, there being two. The northern steeple of the west front is the supposed one, the southern tower being of later erection. It was during this abbacy that Prior Parys built and endowed the Lady Chapel. Abbot Richard died in 1295; in his reign the library and monastery lands were increased considerably. William de Woodford, the next abbot, ruled but four years, and was succeeded in 1299 by Godfrey de Croyland, who was remarkable for his hospitality and sumptuous entertainments. The king and queen, with their retinues, were provided for here; and once Prince Edward came accompanied by Peter Gaveston, when the abbot presented them with two magnificent robes. Godfrey made several improvements to this monastery, built the great gate-tower, over which was the "Knight's Chamber." He died in 1321. Adam de Botheby, his successor, was also visited by King Edward III., his queen, and the royal household, who kept the Easter festival here in 1327, on which occasion the abbot expended nearly £500 in entertaining his royal and noble visitors; and Prince Edward and his sisters and servants were likewise hospitably entertained during a stay of eight days. This abbot died in 1338, and Henry de Murcot was installed in the same year. Robert Ramsey succeeded Henry de Murcot, and after a reign of eight years, he was followed by Henry de Overton, who died in 1391. Nicholas was the next abbot, and during his rule the public library of the monastery contained 1700 books.

William Genge, the first mitred Abbot of Peterborough, was elected in 1396. In the supplement to Gunton's history it is stated "that they put on mitres in token they had episcopal jurisdiction, and being advanced to the dignity of barons, and to sit in Parliament, which no other abbots had done." For the Abbot of Burgh (St Peter) sat in Parliament in the fourth year of Edward III., as appears by the summons to Parliament at Winton. During his reign the parish church was pulled down and removed from St John's close to the middle of the town, where it now stands. The cause of this removal was that in the winter season the parishioners "could not, on account of the waters, attend church but with the utmost difficulty," and a memorial being made of this circumstance to the Bishop of Lincoln, he ordered the change to be effected. The nave of St Thomas à Becket's Chapel having been taken down about this time, the materials were given to the inhabitants to rebuild their church with. John Deeping, who was installed in 1408, ruled for thirty years; and Richard Ashton, his successor, filled the chair for thirty-three years. He resigned in 1471, and William Ramsey, the next abbot, with the assistance of Prior Maldon, erected a "brazen eagle" in the church, to which the Bible and mass-book were chained.

Robert Kirton was the next abbot; he was elected in 1496, and in the nineteenth year of his rule the irregularities of the monks were notorious. "It is remarkable," observes Mr Phillips, "that this is the first instance on record of any depravity amongst the monks of this monastery. Whether the tyrannical conduct of Henry VIII. tended in any measure to render the monks reckless of their own behaviour, and regardless of the character of their monastery, which had never before been impeached, we must leave for the reader to determine. It is at least worth remembering that these disgraceful proceedings occurred during the reign of Henry." Abbot Kirton enlarged and beautified the monastery; erected that part to the east of the choir known as the New Building, or Lady Chapel, as it is sometimes erroneously called; the chamber in the Abbey House, or Bishop's Palace, called "Heaven Gate Chamber;" and the gateway leading to the deanery, which bears his signature in hieroglyphics, viz., a kirk and a tun under it. This gate is an excellent specimen of architecture, and in a good state of preservation. This abbot died in 1528, after a rule of thirty-two years.

John Chambers, a native of Peterborough, was the last abbot and first bishop. During his abbacy, Queen Catherine of Aragon, the first wife of Henry VIII., died at Kimbolton Castle, in Huntingdonshire, July 1, 1535, and was buried on the north side of the choir of the Abbey Church; and this is the reason assigned for its preservation, while so many others were destroyed, for though Henry had cast her off some time before, he is said to have retained much affection for her. Replying to a suggestion made by one of his courtiers, as to how well it would become his greatness to erect a fair monument for her, he said, "Yes, I will leave her one of the goodliest in the kingdom," meaning this church.

This famous Benedictine abbey had steadily increased in importance, and at the time of the dissolution it was one of the noblest and most wealthy in Britain; its abbot ranked next to the Abbot of St Albans in the House of Lords; kings, lords, bishops, and all ranks of people, upon visiting the abbey, were obliged to put off their shoes at its gate; and it was privileged by the Pope to receive the vows and impart the apostolical benediction to any Briton not being able to undertake a journey to Rome, who should visit it. It was visited, as we have seen, by many of the English monarchs on their way to or from the north. Cardinal Wolsey, in the height of his power, kept the Easter festival at Peterborough in great state in 1528. On Palm Sunday, we are told, he carried palm in solemn procession; on Maundy Thursday he washed and kissed the feet of fifty-nine poor people, giving to each 12d., three ells of canvas for a shirt, a pair of shoes, and some red herrings; and on the Easter Sunday he went in procession to the church in his cardinal's vestments, sang high mass, and gave benediction to the congregation. But, alas! all its beauty, splendour, riches, and power cannot save it from its impending doom. The commissioners are despatched to take an inventory of its effects, and that enormous spoliation which is veiled under the soft word dissolution has commenced.

"There can be little question," says Mr Thorn, in his "Rambles by Rivers," "that at the Reformation the monks had become more open to censure than at any previous period. It is impossible to read the notices of them that occur in writers of all descriptions without feeling this. Nor can it, perhaps, be said that there was not need for some great change at the time of the dissolution of monasteries in 1537. But in palliation of that measure nothing can be said. It is the largest, coarsest, and most unprovoked robbery that monarch ever committed on his subjects. Every reason put forward to justify it was a plain untruth.

From the beginning to the end every step taken was equally vile. Sometimes the detestable evidence accumulated by Henry's commissioners is adduced in his favour; but those commissioners were the greatest scoundrels in this country, excepting their master. The extent of the robbery is extraordinary. It is settled that at least a fifth of the entire land in the kingdom then belonged to the monasteries! The amount of misery involved in the treatment of the monks and nuns must have been inconceivably great."

"The dissolution of the religious houses in England," writes Mr Phillips, "is one of the most important events recorded in our national history. It changed the whole aspect of civil and ecclesiastical affairs, and produced an entire revolution in the scheme of legislation. Those institutions, which had prospered in our island for centuries, were all rooted up and destroyed, and that too by the imperious fiat of a monster second to none in infamy, cruelty, and crime. With a heart brutalised by sensuality, with feelings unacquainted with the common sympathies of our nature, and with passions unaccustomed to control, Henry VIII. ascended the throne of England a fit instrument for the persecutions and horrors which he accomplished. He was brought up a Catholic, and originally destined for the Roman Church. When he ascended the throne, he married Catherine of Aragon, who was the reputed widow of his brother Arthur. This event was hailed with joy by the people, and was sanctioned by the Papal authority. The reader will bear in mind the fact of this marriage, as it was one of the chief causes of the revolutions which we have just mentioned. The person whom Henry appointed his prime minister was Wolsey, a man of low origin, but possessed of extraordinary talent, which gave him immense influence with his sovereign. It was he who directed the movements of the whole machinery of the State; and being made a cardinal by the Pope, exercised little less than absolute authority over the religion of the country. The pomp and splendour of his retinue was equal, if not superior, to that of the king. He held in his hands the destinies of all the nobles by whom he was surrounded; his word was fate—his will law. It cannot be surprising, then, that a Catholic, possessed of such vast influence, should have been the stay and bulwark of his religion; and it is very probable that if Wolsey had never lived, Catholicism would have had a shorter duration than it obtained in the reign of Henry; for men's actions are always obedient to the circumstances in which they are placed, as the conduct of Henry will sufficiently testify.

"Hitherto, then, we perceive that Henry and Catholicism were at peace. He was not yet placed in that situation which afterwards made him declare war against it. The Continental Reformers only excited his destructiveness, and Luther's writings, which were making their way into England with an astonishing rapidity, caused him to write a book against the new doctrines which Luther taught and promulgated (see pp. 88, 89). All these circumstances, then, were working in favour of the Catholic religion; but the time was soon to come when more powerful influences were to operate upon the king, and stronger motives were to direct his movements. Queen Catherine, who had been married to Henry a great number of years, at length displeased him, and he affected to have, at this remote period, such strong compunctions about his marriage with her, on account of her being his brother's widow, that nothing but a divorce could make him happy. The secret cause, however, of this sudden change was discovered in his affection for Anne Boleyn. In order to obtain the divorce he applied to the Pope, who refusing to grant it, Henry appealed to the universities as a last resource, and they declared his marriage with Catherine illegal. During this debate about the legality of the marriage sprang up Cranmer, the most weak, cruel, and bigoted of Henry's accomplices. It was he who divorced the queen, and for this service he was soon after appointed arbiter of civil and religious affairs. Wolsey fell from power with the queen, for not daring to offend the Pope, and relying on his influence with his sovereign, he overreached himself, by tampering with the king too long, and ultimately fell a victim to his own subtlety.

"Thus the principal support of the Catholic religion was lopped away, and the king having been excommunicated by the Pope, set his threats at defiance, made a new creed for his subjects, and ordered Cranmer to burn and destroy all who did not immediately become converts to it. He finally threw off all submission to the Pope, and resolving to show how little he regarded his authority, he broke up all the monastic institutions of the country, robbed them of their wealth, and put most of the monks to death. Chambers, who was the Abbot of Peterborough before those changes commenced, was retained in office by the king—the monastery being converted into a cathedral and the abbot into a bishop." The abbey was very rich in relics, amongst the most prized of which was St Oswald's arm, which is said to have performed many miracles. By a survey of the lands and revenues which the abbey held in the 26th of Henry VIII. (1535), they amounted to £1979, 8s. 5d., which after deductions, amounting to £257, 13s. 5d., left the clear annual income of £1721, 15s. From its foundation by Peada, King of Mercia, in 655, to its suppression by Henry VIII. in 1541, it was governed by forty-five abbots.

THE CATHEDRAL.

The present venerable structure, where England's ancient kings, warriors, and nobles have bowed down in humble adoration of Him who is the King of kings, is the third that has occupied the same site. The first was founded, as already stated, in 655, by Oswi, King of Northumbria, and Peada, King of the Mercians, and brother of St Kyneburgha, the foundress of Castor. This conventual church of the great Benedictine Abbey of Medeshamstede was entirely destroyed, as we have seen, in 870 by the Danes, who murdered its abbot, Hedda, with all his monks. After remaining in a state of desolation for about a century, a second church, founded by King Edgar, was erected. This building was again partially destroyed by fire in another attack of the Danes in 1069; but its final destruction in 1116, together with all the conventual buildings, was the result of an accident, and in the following year, 1117, was commenced the present beautiful fabric, which occupied in all 120 years in building (exclusive of the west front), and was consecrated on the 4th October 1237. Four abbots were engaged in its construction—John de Sais, Martin de Vecti, William de Waterville, and Benedict. "The nave," says Mr Murray, "was thus formed by gradual, and probably irregular, advances from east to west, and was meant to terminate with two towers three bays east of the present west front. Happily a unity of design was adhered to throughout, although the style of architecture mostly in use at the time of the erection of the most westerly bays was becoming lighter, a fact which transpires in the various details of this and other parts of the edifice."

The plan of the building is identical with that of most other English cathedrals, and consists of a nave with side aisles, transepts, and choir, with a tower rising from four arches in the centre. It is one of the three Norman cathedrals which exist in this country, the other two being Ely and Norwich. Of these the earliest is Norwich (1091–1119), which affords the most perfect example of an early Norman church remaining in England. Mr Paley, in his remarks on the architecture of Peterborough Cathedral, says: "Though inferior in size, richness, and multiplicity of parts to several others in the kingdom, yet it claims a high place among them all in respect of its antiquity, its stately architecture, and its present high state of preservation. It is surpassed only by York, Lincoln, Ely, Salisbury, Canterbury, Winchester, Wells, and perhaps Durham, all of which may be called cathedrals of the first class. Of those of the second class it ranks decidedly the first, and next after it I should place Lichfield, Gloucester, Exeter, Bristol, Norwich, and Worcester, as forming the second class."

The extreme length of the edifice from east to west is 471 feet, the breadth of the west front 156 feet, and the height of each of the pinnacles at its corners from the ground to the top is nearly the same. The height of the central tower is 150 feet; the distance from the west door to the screen at the entrance to the choir is 267 feet, from this screen to that behind the altar 117 feet, from the altar to the east window 38 feet, so that the distance from the west door to the east window is 422 feet. The length of the cross aisles or transepts, including the diameter of the lantern, is 180 feet. The breadth of the nave from the north to the south wall is 78 feet—that is, half the breadth of the west front—and its height from the floor to its painted roof 81 feet; the height of the lantern within the church is 135 feet, and its height without 150 feet. The entire church is built of Barnack stone, from the quarries near Stamford, known as the “hills and holes of Barnack.” It is a close-grained and most durable freestone, to which Northampton is indebted for many of the fine churches which distinguish and adorn the county. These quarries had been worked from a very early period to about the beginning of the fifteenth century, when they became exhausted.

The architectural character of the principal portions of the cathedral, according to the authority just quoted, bears marks more or less defined of eight different periods of construction, and are as follow: 1. The choir and eastern aisles of transept (Early Norman); 2. Completion of transepts and eastern end of nave (Middle Norman); 3. Central portion of nave (Late Norman); 4. Western transept, including western bay of nave (Transition Norman); 5. West front, with towers and portico (First Pointed or Early English); 6. Windows of nave, aisles, transept aisles, and arches into Lady Chapel (Geometric, or Early Second Pointed); 7. Central or lantern tower, spires to west front, and various other portions of the edifice, windows, tracery, &c. (Late Second Pointed or Decorated); and 8. Chapel behind the apse, tracery in the Norman and early windows (Third Pointed, or Perpendicular).

The Church.—Choir and eastern aisles of transept were built by Abbots John of Seez or de Sais and Martin of Bec, 1117–33; the transept, three stories of the tower, and St Thomas à Becket's Chapel, by Abbot William de Waterville, 1155–77; the nave and the gate leading to the monastery, with the chamber over it, and probably the western transept, by Abbot Benedict, who ruled from 1177–94. Robert de Lindsey in 1214 commenced glazing the windows, which before this time are said to have been stuffed with straw. The transepts at the west end of the nave are supposed by some to have been built between 1200 and 1222, and by others from 1233 to 1246. The Infirmary was built from 1248–61; the Lady Chapel, in the north choir, between 1174 and 1296; the central porch (not the great front), at the end of the thirteenth century; and the chapels at the east end between 1440 and 1500. The eastern aisles, or new buildings, begun in 1438, and completed in 1496–1528, by Abbots Ashton and Kirton. The Bishop's Gate-house, on the south side of the minster-yard, was erected at the beginning of the fourteenth century, and the bow window and “Heaven Gate Chamber,” in the Bishop's Palace, and the gate leading to the deanery, in the sixteenth century. “From the apse of the choir to the west front the cathedral affords an excellent example of the gradual changes in style from the Early Norman to fully-developed Early English; whilst the Perpendicular work of the new building is equally interesting and scarcely of less value.”

The Western Gateway.—“Before entering the close,” says Mr Murray, “the visitor should place himself in front of the market-house, and remark from that point the view of the west front, and the western gateway of the abbey precincts, rising just as they did six hundred years ago above the old “burgh” or town, which gradually sprang up under the protection of the Benedictines; the scene is picturesque.” The western gateway, like the nave of the cathedral, was erected by Abbot Benedict; and its Norman vault, groined with plain cross ribs, is in exact agreement with the vaulting of the aisles. On either side is a Norman arcade, one of the arches of which, north and south, is larger than the rest, and is pierced for a door. The west front is faced with Perpendicular work, and a story in the same architectural style above the gate now occupies the place of a chapel of St Nicholas, also part of Benedict's design. The window above the arch on the east side was formed of portions of a Perpendicular shrine, said to have belonged to St Ebba; the other portions are in the apse of the cathedral. "It was at this gateway of 'Peterborough the Proud,' as the abbey was popularly called, that all visitors, of whatever rank, put off their shoes before entering the holy precincts."

The West Front.—In passing beneath the arch of the main gateway leading into the close, a most striking view of the magnificent west front of the cathedral breaks upon the visitor. "This noble front," says Mr Davys, "is almost entirely built in the style known as Early English Gothic, of which it is perhaps the finest example we have now left us. It is matter of great surprise," he adds, "that we have no record handed down to us of the exact date of its erection; and the name of the architect under whose direction this original and beautiful design was carried out is also buried in obscurity. The style of the western transepts is Transition Norman, and in some places almost Early English; and as the former gave place to the latter in this country about the beginning of the thirteenth century, it would seem that these transepts were built about that time—probably during the government of Acharius (1200-14), the work being carried on and completed by his successor, Robert de Lindsey; and the mixture of Early English work with that of the Transition Norman (which occurs in some instances) may thus be satisfactorily accounted for. "It would therefore appear," continues Mr Davys, "that the western transepts of the monastic church were erected before the time of Walter de St Edmund, who began his rule in 1223, and that the building of the west front in all probability followed immediately after." Britton, another popular writer, also refers the building of the west front to the time of Acharius and Robert of Lindsey. It would seem, however, that though it was probably begun in the time of the latter abbot, it was not finished before the time of John de Caletto, who was elected to the abbacy in 1249. The reason assigned for this opinion is the similarity of some of its details to those of the Infirmary Church, which was erected by this abbot, and of which some beautiful portions are still to be seen.

On the north of the entrance is the chancel of St Thomas à Becket's Chapel, originally founded by Abbots de Waterville and Benedict, the latter of whom had been a monk at Canterbury at the time of Becket's murder, of which he wrote a narrative. This chancel, which now serves as a grammar-school, is of Late Decorated, or rather Early Perpendicular character; and the beautiful tracery of the east window is very interesting and worthy of notice, as is also the pierced cross which crowns the gable above it. On the right or south side, leading to what was once the abbot's lodgings, now the episcopal palace, is the beautiful gateway or entrance, which calls for special mention. It is in the Early Decorated style, with a groined roof springing from clustered shafts; an arcade lines its interior walls; at the angles are square turrets, in each of which is a niche containing a figure, and a third figure is placed in the gable. The arrangement on either side of this gateway is the same. The statues on the north side are those of Edward II., Abbot Godfrey of Crowland, and the prior of the abbey, wearing the Benedictine habit. On the south side are the figures of St Peter, St Paul, and St Andrew, the three saints to whom the church was originally dedicated. Above the gateway is a room called the Knight's Chamber, in which guests of distinguished rank were lodged; the windows of this room are of a later date than the gateway itself.

In front of this gateway, over an open space of green sward, rise the three enormous arches of the west front of the cathedral, or, more strictly speaking, "the gigantic west porch." "This porch, which is of the purest type of Early English architecture," writes Mr Murray, "dates in all probability between the years 1200 and 1222, during which period Acharius and Robert of Lindsey were abbots; and it is remarkable that neither of the local chroniclers has recorded the building of it, or that of the western transept behind it. The work," he adds, quoting from Mr F. A. Paley, "seems, however, to be coeval with the chapter-house at Lincoln, and the west porch of Ely, both of which were built shortly after the year 1200, and have very florid and elaborate details. . . . The fineness of the masonry, and the close jointing of the deeply-moulded arch stones, are unsurpassed by anything of this period in the kingdom."

These three great arches are 81 feet in height, the centre one being narrower than the other two, and the acute angle at the top consequently the least, but the angles of the gables above have been wisely made equal. This inequality of the arches has been variously accounted for, but none of the accounts seem quite satisfactory. The arches are supported by triangular piers, entirely and boldly detached from the west wall. They are faced with banded shafts, and beyond them, north and south, rises a square turret, capped with a spire and pinnacles. The arches themselves support gables enriched with arcades and niches, and having in each a circular "rose" window; and a turret, terminating in a small spire, rises between each gable. The work of the arches, gables, and turrets is entirely Early English, but the spires and pinnacles which terminate the flanking turrets belong to the Late Decorated period. The capitals and leaf ornaments of the shafts which line the piers, as well as the mouldings of the arches themselves, are very graceful, and of purely Early English character. The turrets are octangular and in two stages, the upper one of which is pierced by narrow lights, bordered by chevron moulding. The spires by which they are capped rise slightly above the gables, which are of equal height and width. On each gable is an open cross, that in the centre being the richest. In a niche at the top of the central gable is a figure of St Peter with the keys, and in the two side niches are those of St Paul and St Andrew; the three saints to whom the church, at its solemn consecration in 1237, had been re-dedicated by the Bishops of Lincoln and Exeter. The consecration took place in obedience to a decree of the council convened in London in the same year by Cardinal Otto, legate of Pope Gregory IX., which ordered "that all churches and cathedrals, not having been consecrated with holy oil, though built of old, should be solemnly dedicated within two years." The west front has thirty figures remaining in their niches; and in the niches on either side of the circular windows are six small figures, said to be those of the six kings of England from the Conquest to the time of the erection of the west front. At the base of each gable, in a graceful arcade, are nine figures of apostles, each having a circular nimbus.

The flanking turrets are enriched with blank arcades of varying size and details; and the spire and pinnacles which crown the south turret are in the Decorated style, and extremely beautiful. Between the central piers of the front, rising to about half their height, is a highly enriched parvise, or porch, with an upper chamber of the Late Decorated type, added apparently about the year 1370. The bosses on the vault of the porch exhibit a fine enriched composition. On one of them is an unusual representation of the Blessed Trinity—viz., the Holy Spirit in the form of a dove proceeding out of the "glory of the Father." The room above now serves as a chapter library. Various arcades enrich the west wall of the church within the arches; and in the opening of each arch is a doorway, above which windows of Decorated work are inserted. The three doorways are unusually fine; the central one is divided into two arches by a shaft, the base of which displays a Benedictine tortured by demons—a perpetual "sermon in stone" for the monks.

The Lady Chapel and the north tower are of Early English work of the thirteenth century. The former was built by Prior Parys, and consecrated about 1290; he was himself buried at its entrance, where this inscription was visible in Gunton's day: "Hic jacet Willielmus Parys quondam Prior Burgi, cujus animæ misereatur Deus. Amen. Pater noster. Ave Maria." This chapel was entirely destroyed by the Puritans in 1643. The latter was erected for the bells by Abbot Richard de London while he was a sacrist; two of the bells were given by himself, and called Les Londreis from him, and a third was given by Abbot de Caletto, and dedicated to St Oswald.

The Nave, which is a continuation of the choir, is perhaps the last building of any magnitude that was erected in the pure Norman style in this country, having been built between the years 1177 and 1193, so that some time before its completion the Norman must have given place to the Transition Norman, which was introduced about that period, and which prevailed in England during the reigns of Richard I. and his brother John, and of which style the magnificent choir of Canterbury Cathedral is a striking example. The architect, however, doubtless thought it better to complete his work in the style in which he had begun it, though by a minute examination of the structure the architectural student will observe, in many parts of it, a great leaning to the then newly-introduced Transition style. It bears a marked resemblance to the nave of Ely Cathedral, which was completed in 1174; and its length from the west transept to the western piers of the central tower is 211 feet; the width without the aisles 33 feet, and the height 81 feet. It consists of ten bays, has massive cylindrical piers, with smaller shafts set against them, and well-moulded circular arches. The triforium, which closely resembles that of Ely, has a wide semicircular arch, with zigzag moulding, embracing two smaller ones, divided by a single shaft. The clerestory above has the semicircular arches, circumscribed by a pointed hood moulding—the central one, which is higher than the rest, springs from slender shafts set on the capitals of those below. “Immediately above the fourth pillar on the north side, the column which supports the triforium arch, as well as that of the clerestory above it, has its capitals enriched with Early English foliage in place of the plain cushion-capital which is elsewhere seen. This seems to mark that the Norman work of Benedict is assimilated to and built in conformity with the rest, in a style then becoming obsolete” (Mr Paley). The mouldings of the bases of the piers in this part are also Early English, differing entirely from the rest, which are plain Norman. Eastward of the last bay of Benedict’s work the tympana of the triforium are hatched, like those of the transepts, whilst all the rest are plain. The hood-mould of the two eastern arches is deeper than the rest, and the capitals of the shafts plainer and heavier. In this direction the distinction appears sufficiently evident; and a still more evident change at the west end is pointed out by Mr Paley, as indicative of the termination in that direction of Abbot Benedict’s work. He says: “The third pillar from the west end, on each side, is considerably larger and wider than any others, and it also projects further into the aisles. The arch also springing from it westward is of a much greater span. The opposite vaulting-shafts, in the aisle walls, are brought forward beyond the line of the rest, to meet the pillars in question, so that the arch across the aisles is in this part very much contracted, and instead of being a mere groin-rib, like the rest, is a strong-moulded arch, of considerable depth in the soffit. The wider nave arch, with its massive and complex pillars, was the entrance into the tower from each side of the nave; the thicker aisle wall opposite to it was, in fact, the tower wall. These peculiarities sufficiently indicate the existence of the lower portions of two Norman towers.” A very handsome pulpit of Mansfield stone and Devonshire and Greek green marble has just been erected in the nave, near the organ-screen, at a cost of about £700, and was raised to the memory of the late Rev. John James, D.D., formerly a canon of the cathedral, by the deceased gentleman’s family. It is a magnificent structure, and will supply a want long felt at the Sunday evening service.

“In the south triforium gallery, also, there is the springing of a transverse arch, evidently the eastern arch of a south-west tower intended to have been erected there. There is, however, no satisfactory reason for believing these towers to mark the western termination of Abbot Benedict’s work. His original design seems to have been changed during the progress of the work, consequently the towers were abandoned, and two more bays were added to the nave, besides the western transept, which is entirely of Transitional character, distinct from that of the nave, with the exception of the one capital, and of the bases before mentioned, which agree in style with the transept, and the two additional west bays, which approach to it. The present Early English portico was in existence when Robert Swaffham and Abbot John wrote, and they expressly assert that the nave was the work of Benedict. In accordance with the statement of these chroniclers, the Rev. G. A. Poole, in an able paper 'On the Abbey Church of Peterborough,' read before the Architectural Society of Northampton in 1855, maintains that Abbot Benedict was the builder of the entire nave and western transept. It has been suggested, however, that his predecessor, Abbot de Waterville, in order to secure the safety of the central tower which he had erected, must necessarily have built some portion of the nave. The capitals of the triforium shafts and of the main piers in the two bays above named are deserving of special notice."—Murray's Eastern Cathedrals.

Between each bay of the nave a single shaft rises from the floor to the roof; and these shafts formerly supported the rafters of the great pictured or painted ceiling of the nave. "When the tower-arches were changed from round to pointed, this remarkable ceiling, which is clearly of the twelfth century, was raised from a flat to its present shape, which is half octagonal. It is painted in lozenge-shaped divisions, of which the central and alternate lines on each side contain figures, most of which are seated, and represent royal and ecclesiastical personages, intermixed with very curious grotesques, in colours. The bordering and smaller lozenges are painted in black and white, with narrow red lines. The painting on the upper part of the walls, between the ceiling and the Norman cornice, on which it originally rested, is the work of the fourteenth century. This painting on the walls bears shields of arms of that date, and its general character is quite distinct from that of the ceiling itself. The vaulting or semicircular shafts which separate the bays of the nave are all terminated in the same manner, sloped off at the top to the Norman string moulding, which forms a cornice; and on each shaft is a sort of tongue, evidently part of the original design, so that they never had, nor intended to have, capitals; nor is there any trace of capitals in the walls above the ceiling, as has been rashly asserted; the side walls are in fact not high enough above the ceiling to admit of them. The original design was evidently intended for a flat painted ceiling; and although the only other example known in this country of such a ceiling is the one at St Albans, there is abundant evidence that it was the usual covering of an Early Norman nave, and of any wide central space, whether nave, or chancel, or transept. On the Continent there are many examples of flat ceilings of the twelfth century, although we are not aware that any have retained their ancient painting, and therefore this remarkable ceiling may be unique."—Eastern Cathedrals.

"Here, then," says Mr O. W. Davys, "we have an example of a Norman painted roof, which, with the exception of the transept roof of this cathedral, is perhaps the oldest now extant in this kingdom; and though many years have passed away since it was constructed, it is nearly as perfect as it was when first placed in its present position by Abbot Benedict." On the wall of the nave, on the north side of the great west door, hangs a portrait, with some verses beneath, of "Old Scarlett," a sexton and gravedigger of Peterborough, who buried two generations in the city, or, as Gunton says, "he buried the town twice over." He interred two queens—Catherine of Aragon and Mary of Scotland—in the cathedral; he died in 1594, aged ninety-eight years. "The portrait," says Mr Murray, "is curious as an example of costume, but is scarcely a fitting ornament for the nave of a cathedral." The Rev. T. James, late hon. canon, says, "Old Scarlett, 'who buried the town twice over,' and whose portrait, now in the nave of the cathedral, would be better placed in the chapter-house or elsewhere." The Rev. O. W. Davys speaks of it thus, "Though we do not presume to doubt of the worthiness of the old man here represented, yet we cannot conceal our sentiments as to the unsuitableness of such a picture and such an inscription in such a situation." "It is doubtless a great curiosity," writes the Rev. W. D. Sweeting; "but it is quite out of place in the house of God." Mr Walcott calls it "a king of spades." We think he ought rather to have dubbed him a "knight of the spade." The only exception, we believe, to the general condemnation of poor Old Scarlet's picture, or rather to its being honoured with a place in the cathedral, is Mr Craddock, who "unaccountably speaks in very high terms of its value in its present position."

The North and South Aisles are formed by massive ranges of pillars supporting vast arches of singular simplicity and beauty. The vaulting of these aisles is Norman, with bold and massive cross ribs. An arcade of intersecting arches runs below the windows, which are late Early English insertions, unusual in form, flat arched, of five lights, and have plate tracery. The aisle walls were apparently raised when these windows were inserted. The triforium is now lighted by large Decorated windows of three lights, of fourteenth-century date, and had originally a steep roof sloping outwards. In the third bay from the west of the south aisle is the "abbot's door," an Early English doorway, opening into what was the ancient cloister, and corresponding with another door in the south cloister walk which led to the abbot's lodgings.

The Eastern Aisles are divided from the transept by massive piers, alternately round and octangular, with plain-cushioned capitals, and supporting arches which are slightly stilted. Each, which has a plain rib in the soffit, is surrounded by a billet moulding. The triforium above resembles that in the nave, except in having many of the tympana hatched. The clerestory is the same as on the west side; vaulting shafts rise to the roof between the arches; and a chevroned string-course, with a plain moulding above it, runs at the foot of the triforium. "The 'heaviness' of the masses, and the style of ornamentation; the billet, chevron, and indented or hatched moulding being alone used, sufficiently indicate the early date of these aisles, which precisely resemble the choir in all their details. 'It seems to be one continuous piece of work throughout.' The difference between this portion and the rest of the transept will be at once recognised by comparing the mouldings of the entrance arches of the choir aisles with those into the nave aisles opposite. The ceilings of both transepts are of the same date as that of the nave, which they resemble, except in being plainer; they are painted black and white in medallions. Unlike the nave ceiling, however, these of the transepts remain in their original position, and have never been raised. They may, therefore, lay claim to a yet higher antiquity."

The Transepts.—The eastern arches of both transepts, which, like the choir, belong to the earliest part of the church, were built by Abbots John of Seez and Martin of Bec, A.D. 1118–33; the rest of the transepts being the work of Abbot de Waterville, 1155–77. The arrangement of both the transepts is the same; the termination of each, north and south, is alike—each having three tiers of semicircular-headed windows, with a wall arcade below the lowest tier, the two upper being in the lines of the triforium and clerestory. The same arrangement of windows exists in the western wall of both transepts, with the exception of the clerestory tier, which resembles that of the nave in having a high central light, with a lower arch, forming an arcade passage on either side. The lowest tier of windows in the south transept have the billet moulding above them, and are straight-sided, whilst those opposite in the north transept are splayed, which was an evident improvement. The windows throughout the transepts, except those in the eastern aisles, are filled with Perpendicular tracery.

The North Transept, from which its eastern aisle is divided by open screen-work, has some stalls and canopies, removed from the choir and placed against the north wall; among these are three shafts of Early English character with gilt capitals. The east wall below the windows is hung with tapestry of the sixteenth century, representing the "delivery of St Peter from prison," and the "healing of the lame man at the gate of the Temple." The windows of this aisle are filled with Perpendicular tracery, except that nearest to the choir, which is Geometrical. A Norman doorway in the north wall opens to a staircase leading to the roof. Two closed arches in the northern and central bays on the east side formed the entrance to a very beautiful "Lady Chapel" of the Early English period, about 1274, which after the Restoration was demolished in order that the materials might be used to repair the great damage done to the cathedral by Cromwell's troopers. "The Lady Chapel," says Mr Murray, "must have been a magnificent structure, rivalling that of Ely, which is in the same situation. The lower part of the gable of the roof can be seen against the outer wall of the clerestory of this transept, and shows that the chapel was considerably higher than the side wall. The southern bay of the aisle of the transept has an Early English window, which seems to show the pattern of those of the Lady Chapel, and which is also used in the south transept. There was the width of one bay between the Lady Chapel and the north aisle of the chancel, and a chantry chapel was erected in this space in the fifteenth century, of which there are traces in the wall of the aisle; and there was a passage from the aisle to the Lady Chapel, of which the arch remains in the third bay. There are two chantry chapels, dedicated to St John and St James, in the aisle of this transept, besides the one in the Lady Chapel.

The South Transept.—The eastern aisle of this transept is lighted by three Early English windows, the tracery in the heads of which is of the earliest kind, consisting of foliated circles only. This aisle was divided into three chapels by stone partitions of the same date as the aisle itself, one of which has an interesting Norman arcade. These chapels or altars were dedicated respectively to St Oswald, St Benedict, and St Kyneburgha, and their connection with the history of the place is obvious. The uncorrupted arm of St Oswald was the great relic of the house; St Benedict was the founder of the rule under which they lived; and St Kyneburgha was the sister of King Peada, the founder of the monastery, and was herself the foundress of a convent and church at Castor in 650, where she died and was buried, and from whence her remains, with those of her sister, St Kyniswitha, were removed to Peterborough by Abbot Elsinus in the beginning of the eleventh century (see CASTOR). In the west wall of this transept a Decorated doorway opens to a small building of the Transition Norman character, now used partly as a music-school and partly as the chapter-house. It was anciently known as the "Chapel of the Ostrie,"—a corruption, according to Mr Paley, of "hostelry," or guest-house. There were at the time of the dissolution, it is said, at least eighteen separate altars in connection with the church, and they were all doubtless served by members of the foundation, but had not separate endowments like the chantries in parish churches.

The West Transept was added to the nave during the great Transition period, and was, like the nave itself, probably the work of Benedict (1177-93). It extends across the nave, and projects one bay on either side. The vaulting and arch-moulding are much enriched, and of Transition Norman character. Lofty arches, parallel with the nave aisles, support towers of which no portion, except one stage of the north tower, was completed at the same time as the transept. The windows in the bays beyond the towers are adorned with Early English tracery. These windows have transoms with cusped headings to the lower lights of an unusual and early example, and the Norman clerestory windows above are filled with Perpendicular tracery. An Early English arcade, pierced for three doorways, runs along the west wall, having a wall-passage running through their jambs, and above each doorway is a window with Perpendicular tracery. The old font, which is of the Early English type, has been restored, and is now placed under the great south window; and the bells, which hang in the north-west tower, are rung from the floor of this transept. The view up the nave aisles, with their long perspective of circular vaulting-ribs, is very striking.

The Choir was built by the two abbots, John of Seez (1118-25) and Martin of Bec (1133-55), the intervening abbot, Henry of Anjou, "who lived," says the Saxon Chronicle, "even as a drone in a hive," having done nothing for it. The choir, as far as the apse, is of four bays. Its massive piers are entirely hidden by the tabernacle-work of the stalls. The arrangement and details of the triforium and clerestory precisely resemble those of the eastern transept aisles, except that the piers which alternate with the round ones are ten and twelve sided instead of octangular. The unusual havoc committed here by Cromwell and his marauders, who visited Peterborough in 1643, on their way to besiege Crowland, was fearful, and will account for the present condition of the choir, all the ancient furniture of which has disappeared. The ancient fittings and richly-stained windows with which it was so elaborately furnished—some of which ranked amongst the finest in the kingdom—and the greater part of which remained until long after the Reformation, were entirely demolished.

In defiance of special orders to "do no injury to the church," these fanatical wretches destroyed everything valuable and interesting in it. They broke open its doors, and demolished its windows; the organs were pulled down and trampled upon, the prayer-books were torn in pieces, and the seats, stalls, and wainscots demolished. They robbed and rifled the tombs, and violated the monuments of the dead, including those of the two queens, Catherine of Aragon and Mary of Scotland. "They broke down the rails that enclosed the tomb of Catherine, and carried away the black velvet pall that covered the hearse—overthrew the hearse itself, and displaced the gravestone that lay over the body, and have left nothing now remaining of that tomb but only a monument of their own shame and villany. The like they would have done to the Queen of Scots, but that her hearse and pall were removed with her body to Westminster;" but her royal arms and escutcheons which did remain near the place where she had been interred were involved in the general destruction. It is narrated in the "Mercurius Rusticus," and quoted by Murray, that "one of the soldiers having charged his musket to shatter down the statues of the four Evangelists in the roof above the communion-table, by the rebound of his own shot was struck blind." The cloisters were then pulled down and destroyed, the chapter-house broken open, and all the charters and early records belonging to the cathedral were burned or demolished. They broke in pieces the superb reredos of carved stone, painted, gilt, and inlaid with plates of silver. They broke and defaced or injured the glorious font, the painting on the ceiling of the nave, and the beautiful cloister, for which the cathedral was remarkable. The minster was assigned to the towns-people as a general workshop, and for public worship; the soldiers appropriated such rich church vestments as they could find, and until their departure they were daily exercised by their officers in the nave of the cathedral. It is probable that no cathedral in England was more completely "set to rights," or underwent more wanton destruction at the hands of Cromwell and his Puritanical troopers. Yes, that arch-dismantler violated its sanctity; and in the mad fanaticism which then raged throughout England, our sacred edifices were polluted, plundered, and profaned in the most irreverent and disgraceful manner, and this by way of "doing God a service." With the exception, perhaps, of the destruction and confiscations which took place on the dissolution of the religious establishments in the previous century, more wanton and sacrilegious devastation was occasioned at this time by the party hostile to the Established Church, than had ever before been committed since the ravages of the ancient Danish invaders.

After the destruction so recently perpetrated by Cromwell, the inhabitants endeavoured once more to repair their minster. "The Lady Chapel was demolished to supply materials for the purpose, and the boards from the roof of this chapel were used as backs to the stalls in the choir, where they continued until the choir was resealed by Dean Lockier. In the latter part of the eighteenth century Dean Tarrant had the church repaved. The fragments which remained of the numerous windows of stained glass with which it was once enriched, were collected by Dean Kipling, and placed in two windows above the altar in the choir. These fragments, which are very beautiful, once formed portions of a series of windows in the church, representing the life of St Peter, which may be gathered from the fragments of texts referring to the life of the patron saint. At one time a wooden spire surmounted the present north-west spire, and a wooden octagon, formerly on the lantern tower, was removed by Dean Kipling, and the present corner turrets erected. The state of the building got gradually worse until the year 1827, previous to which time the choir was composed of deal; but at the suggestion of the Dean and Chapter, the sum of more than £5000 was shortly contributed towards the erection of a new choir and altar screen. The work was carried out under the auspices of Dean Monk, through whose exertions the whole was completed in 1830, and the edifice once more restored. The organ-screen is composed of clunch-stone, decorated with spiral turrets; and the choir and altar screen are of Norway oak, elaborately carved; the stalls and woodwork are of the same material. The choir, after its restoration, was greatly admired, and was thought to present a more beautiful appearance than any other in the kingdom. The woodwork was executed by Mr F. Ruddle, and the stonework by Mr J. Thompson, both of Peterborough, from the designs of Mr Blore. A brass plate under the present organ-screen commemorates the event. Miss Harriet Martineau mentions this subject in her "History of England during the Thirty Years' Peace." She says, "A new choir, of great beauty, was erected in Peterborough Cathedral during this period, and the church was made once more what it was before it was devastated by the Puritans. The expense was defrayed by a subscription within the diocese, and the work was superintended by the dean, Dr Monk, who had become Bishop of Gloucester before it was finished."

The roof of the choir, which dates apparently from the close of the fifteenth century, is of wood, with pendent bosses; and the whole has been coloured, the bosses gilt, and the medallions containing angels painted between the groining ribs. The date of this roof is not ascertained, but "whatever may be its age, it seems to indicate," says Mr Paley, "that the choir was not covered with a flat ceiling like the nave and transepts, but probably with an open timber roof, something like the nave of Ely Cathedral. Had there been a flat ceiling, it would surely be retained for the sake of uniformity." Besides the two queens, there were buried here, on the south side of the choir, two Archbishops of York—Elfricus, who died at Southwell in 1051, and Kinsius, who was chaplain to Edward the Confessor, and died in 1059. Both had been monks of Peterborough, but no memorials of these prelates have been preserved. In 1226, Richard de Mansco, Bishop of Durham and Chancellor of England, died here.

"It may interest some readers," says Mr Paley, "to give a brief concluding sketch of the appearance presented by the choir of this noble church at the time of the dissolution of the monasteries, and with little change for a hundred years afterwards." He says: "At the entrance of the choir where the organ now stands, was a rood-loft and rood, both of wood, coloured and gilded, the work of Abbot Robert Kirton. In this loft there was an altar with a frontal of coloured cloth, and eighteen images of saints, all richly gilt. The sides of the choir were fitted with very ancient and curious screen-work, erected in the time of William of Waterville, who built the Norman transept. This screen was painted with rude pictures of Scripture stories, with legends underneath them, many of which are given by Gunton. Both sides were adorned 'after an old decent manner,' with hangings of tapestry, sixteen in number, which were perhaps suspended from the triforium. On the north side, above the tomb of Queen Catherine, were several banners of silk, bravely garnished with heraldic devices and royal achievements. There were two 'desks of latten' (that is, eagle desks of brass) in the centre of the choir, used in the recitation of the offices of the breviary. Along the sides extended low wooden desks and seats richly carved, of which a good part is still preserved in the north transept aisle. A pair of great organs was placed on high in the rood-loft, and a smaller pair in some other part of the choir. Between two of the great pillars on the north side stood the lofty and magnificent hearse of Queen Catherine, over the spot where her body still rests undisturbed in the north aisle. This hearse was covered with a black velvet pall, with a large cross of silver tissue worked upon it. It was enriched on the sides with the arms and badges (the pomegranate, &c.) of Aragon. Within the hearse there appears to have been a small altar, on which masses were said for the repose of her soul. Near to this hearse, and therefore somewhat removed from the end of the apse, was the high altar, with its magnificent reredos, or screen,—a structure,' says Gunton, 'of stone most exquisitely carved, and beautified with gilding and painting;’ it was ascended unto by about a dozen steps, and from its basis reared after the manner of a comely wall some six foot high, upon which were several curious pilasters supporting a fair arched roof, whereon were three goodly spires, reaching almost to the top of the church; the whole frame dilating itself to each side, all gilded and painted, saving some void plain places, which were anciently filled up with plates of silver, as has been mentioned in the inventory. The altar itself was of goodly freestone, plated with silver, well gilt—that is, having a tabula, or frontal, of precious metal, as was not uncommon in ancient times. On the altar was a crucifix, and a pyx or tabernacle of copper enamelled for reserving the blessed sacrament. Mention is made of ‘seven basins hanging, with four candlesticks.’ The basins contained ever-burning lamps, some of which were placed before the high altar, others within the hearse. The space in front of the altar was carpeted with ten pieces of stuff, probably richly dight with sacred emblems and devices ecclesiastical. The abbot’s chair was of stone, placed near the altar, and adjoining the south end. The walls around the apse and by the altar-screen were painted with heraldic lions and other devices, the vestiges of which may yet be distinctly seen. In the centre of the choir there hung a great corona, or candelabrum, holding eighteen lights; and there was another ‘bow candlestick’ near the brass eagle. Immediately over the high altar screen was a large pointed oval, or vesica piscis, with a painting of our Saviour coming to judgment, attended by apostles and saints. The windows were all filled with stained glass, as were those of the new building beyond the choir. Here also were three altars, on each of which stood a triptych with a painting of the Passion. Monuments and brass effigies there were in great variety, all of which, with the rest of the furniture enumerated above, and a vast deal besides, were ravaged and destroyed, or carried off, by Cromwell’s soldiers in the year 1643.”

Whilst the soldiers were thus employed in their work of sacrilege and plunder, they found a great parchment book, which was no other than “Swapham,” a curious manuscript, written by a monk named Hugh Candidus, containing a history of the abbey from its foundation till 1217, when it was written. It was redeemed at the time for 10s. by the precentor of the church, who had concealed it. The following memorandum is written on the first leaf of it: “This book was hid in the church by me, Humphrey Austin, February 1642. And found by one of Coll. Cromwelle souldyers when they pul’d downe all the seats in the quire, April 22th, 1643. And I making inquirie amongst them for an old Latin Bible which were lost, I found out at last the partie who had it, and I gave him for the book tenn shillings as you see by this acquittance. The coppie of his acquittance: ‘I pray let this scripture book alone for he hath paid me for it; therefore I would desire you to let it alone, by me Henry Topcliffe, souldyer under Capt. Cromwell, Coll. Cromwell’s sonn; therefore I pray let it alone.—By me Henry Topcliffe.’” The following account of the preservation of this ancient record is given by Dean Patrick: “One book, indeed, and but one,” he says, “still remains, which was happily redeemed from the fire by the then precentor of the church, Mr Humphrey Austin, who, knowing the great value of it, first hid it in February 1642, under a seat in the quire; and when it was found by a soldier on the 22d of April 1643 (when all the seats were pulled down), rescued it again by the offer of ten shillings, ‘for that old Latin Bible,’ as he called it, and about which he pretended to inquire. The name of the Bible, by the help of the ten shillings, preserved this precious treasure from the flames.” It is still preserved in the library.

The Central Tower, at the intersection of the nave and eastern transept, was originally built, as already stated, by Abbot de Waterville (1155–77), and formed a lantern of four stages. In consequence of its weight being found too heavy for the central piers to support, it was subsequently taken down nearly as far as the crowns of the great arches. The east and west arches were altered from semicircular to pointed. The Norman arches, north and west, which have chevron mouldings, remain; and the pointed hoods, inserted above the two round arches, mark real arches of construction, devised to remove the weight from the crowns of the latter. The strong courses of masonry for this purpose may be seen from below when the sun shines brightly on the walls. The present tower and lantern, which dates from about 1340, is decorated, and has two lofty windows on each side, with a blind arcade of richly-decorated tracery between and beyond them. At the angles are octagonal turrets; and graceful vaulting-shafts of wood, in groups of three, carry the old lierne roof, in the centre boss of which is "the Saviour holding a globe." The wooden vaulting, as well as the entire lantern, were no doubt rendered necessary for the support of the south-east pier, which had suffered from the weight of the Norman tower, and which is "much crippled and bound with iron. The great pillars on the east side have settled very considerably on their foundations, dragging down their adjoining triforium and clerestory arches in a remarkable manner." The tower was originally surmounted by a wooden octagon, "which bore, or was intended to bear, a timber spire covered with lead." The octagon was removed by Dr Kipling, who was made Dean of Peterborough in 1798, when the turrets, which rise above the tower, were added. It has already been observed that it was a part of Abbot Benedict's design, that the nave was to terminate with two towers, three bays from the present west front; but whether these towers were actually built, or either of them, is now uncertain. Some inferences drawn from the chronicles, as indicating the probable erection, is pointed out by Mr Poole, who says, "Although these towers are never mentioned in any of the chronicles, I think their existence, and even something of their history, may be collected from the various ways in which the central tower is designated. Candidus, who lived and wrote while they were in existence, calls the central tower magistra turris, the chief tower, plainly inferring the existence of others. Swapham, who most likely remembered them, and witnessed their destruction, still gives to the central tower a distinctive name, turris chori, the tower of the choir, as distinguished from the western towers. Abbot John, who had, most likely, never seen these western towers, simply calls the central tower turris, the tower." Early in the fourteenth century, and of the purest Decorated work, is the south-west spire, called the bishop's spire, from its contiguity to the palace. The north-west spire, which is in the Perpendicular style, is at least a century later, nor is it of equal height. "It has very little merit, and suffers much by comparison with its fairer sister." There is a fine view of the west transept, and of the enriched western wall and its windows; from beneath the central tower, which has an unusual effect, and is well seen from this point.

The Apse.—A Norman arch, of which only the pillars remain, originally divided the apse from the choir, of which it forms the eastern end; and, notwithstanding the changes that have been made, in order to connect it with the new building beyond, the apse still remains a fine example of a Norman termination. It has a modern screen of Decorated work of the fourteenth century, richly diapered in gold and colour, extending across the back of it. Above the level of this screen were originally three tiers of Norman windows, five in each tier. The three central windows of the lowest tier were filled with Perpendicular tracery of the same date as the new building, into which they look. The two side windows of this tier are built up; but the Decorated tracery which remains in them proves that this tier of windows had been altered before undergoing a second change on the erection of the new building. The triforium windows, in the second tier, whilst they retain their circular headings, are, like the clerestory windows above them, filled with Decorated tracery of the same date, and doubtless inserted at the same time. An interesting Norman arcade is seen below the triforium window range, at the back of the wall-passage in which they are set. The windows are filled with stained glass, most of which is modern; that in the two central lights, however, consists of ancient fragments collected from different parts of the church.

The flat roof of the apse, like the eastern screen, has been excellently decorated from the designs of Sir Gilbert Scott. In the centre is our Saviour in majesty ; surrounding Him, in medallions placed among the branches of a vine, which clusters over the pale blue ground of the ceiling, are half figures of the apostles. The whole is bordered by an inscription : " I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me, the same shall bring forth much fruit : for without me ye can do nothing."

The South Choir Aisle is of the same date as the choir itself. The windows are of the early geometrical type, and of the same date and character as those in the nave ; and the wall beneath them is lined by an interesting and plainly moulded Norman arcade. There is a noticeable difference between the choir and the transepts—the distinction of their wall arcades—that of the transepts being single, whilst in the choir aisles it is double and intersected. The vaulting is similar to that of the eastern transept aisles. At the west end of the aisle, under a heavy Norman arch enriched with billet-moulding, is an effigy attributed to Abbot Andreas (1193–1200). He is robed in rich apparel, and treads on a dragon, the mouth of which is pierced by his staff. In his left hand is a book of statutes usually placed in the hands of Benedictine abbots, and supposed to represent the statutes of their order ; and in his right he carries the abbatial staff, which is plain, and turned to the left or inwards, denoting a domestic rule (a bishop's staff is generally much enriched, and turned to the right or outwards, indicating an external jurisdiction). Three more effigies of early abbots, said to have been brought from the chapter-house, are placed under the south wall of this aisle. All hold the book of statutes, and two of them are of early Decorated character. There is another effigy, but much shattered, placed under the wall of the choir. The eastern bay of this and of the opposite aisle are Early English, and have slender vaulting-shafts, with a leafed boss in the centre of the roof. The two bays thus formed chapters at the ends of the choir aisles, the original Norman terminations of which, according to Mr Paley, were square and not apsidal. There is a good double piscina in the south wall.

The tomb in which the remains of Mary Queen of Scots rested until their removal to Westminster, is marked by a black marble slab, directly over the south door of the choir at the entrance to the south aisle. Over this was erected to her memory a superb monument, which remained perfect till the Great Rebellion. The execution of the queen took place on February 8, 1587, at Fotheringhay Castle, and her body was brought here for interment on the 30th of July. The chariot in which it was conveyed was covered with black cloth, and was met at the entrance of the cathedral by Bishop Howland, who conducted it in solemn procession to the vault, in which it was immediately laid. On the following day a funeral service was performed, the Countess of Bedford being the chief mourner. A lofty hearse hung with black velvet, was erected over her resting-place, and was removed with the body to Westminster, where it was interred on the 11th October 1612. The autograph letter of her son, James I., requesting the removal of the body to Westminster, remains in the possession of the Dean and Chapter. (For a more full account of the trial and execution of this ill-fated queen, see Fotheringhay).

The New Building is a long parallelogram of five bays, and forms in effect a third transept, extending across and now forming the eastern end of the cathedral. It is entered from the choir-aisle, through an arch with square ornaments, characteristic of Perpendicular work, in the hollow of the moulding. Among these ornaments appear the Tudor rose, the pomegranate of Catherine of Aragon, the fleur-de-lis, the rebus of Abbot Kirton (a kirk on a tun), and some armorial bearings. It is said the want of shrine-room for the display of relics, in which Peterborough was especially rich, was the cause which led to the erection of this transept, which is similar to an eastern transept formerly existing in Fountains Abbey, near Ripon, Yorkshire, and which still remains at Durham, where the "Chapel of the Nine Altars," as it is called, was the work of Bishop Poore in 1228–41. It also so closely resembles, in almost all its details, King's College Chapel, Cambridge, which was in process of building at the same time, that it has been said "the same master mind would seem to have conceived both." The new building, so called, was commenced during the abbacy of Richard Ashton, who began his rule in 1439, but it was not completed until the time of Abbot Kirton (1496-1528), the immediate predecessor of John Chambers, who was the last Abbot, and first Bishop of Peterborough. Between each bay are very massive plain buttresses, on each of which is placed the sitting figure of an apostle; and the space between is filled with a rich and graceful parapet, on which are the letters R. A., and R. K., the initials of Richard Ashton and Robert Kirton, together with their devices—an ash-tree on a tun, and a kirk on a tun, and which may still be traced on the parapet and on the buttresses. On the parapet are also the alternate monograms I. H. S. and M. (Jesus and Mary). The fine groined roof, which is adorned with beautiful fan-tracery, is worthy of especial notice. The windows were originally filled with very fine stained glass, which, it is much to be regretted, has all disappeared, and “the central window alone,” says Mr Murray, “is now filled with wretched harlequin quarrels, than which the simplest white glass would be infinitely preferable.” On the bosses are the arms of England, Edward the Confessor, and Peterborough.

The Norman choir apse was adapted to the new building, and its Norman shafts and Norman wall still remain; and at the side of the entrance arches, these shafts are fitted with Perpendicular capitals. Portions of the Norman string course, much weather-worn, may also be observed, as well as the Decorated tracery still remaining in the closed windows, north and south. “The body of the aperture in the three easternmost is left open, and continued down to the ground in the form of lofty archways, though the lower parts are now blocked by the modern altar-screen, as they were formerly by steps leading from the back of the high altar. The marks of these steps may yet be seen in the south-east archway, within the chapel, as well as the hinges of the folding-doors, by which the retro-choir, or space behind the high altar, was enclosed.”—Mr Paley, quoted by Murray.

Under one of these arches at the back of the apse is the monument, long supposed to be the one erected by Godric, Abbot of Crowland, over the monks of Medeshamstede, who, with their abbot, Hedda, were slaughtered by a band of savage Danes in 870. They had already destroyed Crowland Abbey, and during their assault on Medeshamstede the brother of the Danish Jarl was killed by a stone thrown from the walls. In revenge, after an entrance had been forced, the Jarl, with his own hand, slew the abbot and all the surviving monks. They then, as already stated, plundered the abbey and burned it to the ground; but after their departure from the country a few of the dispersed monks of Crowland returned to their ruined monastery, and elected Godric for their abbot. Having as far as possible arranged his own community, Godric visited Medeshamstede, where, says Ingulphus, “he collected the mangled bodies of the monks—eighty-four in number—and interred them in one large grave, over which he raised a pyramidal stone three feet long, three feet high, and one foot broad, on which were cut the images of the deceased abbot and his monks; and it is said that every remaining year of his life he visited this monument, over which he pitched a tent, in which, during two days, he said masses for the repose of the souls of those buried beneath.”

Such, in substance, is the narrative of Ingulphus, the chronicler of Crowland; but although the tomb agrees very closely with the measurements here given, Mr M. H. Bloxam, a good authority in sepulchral lore, who read a paper on the monumental remains of Peterborough Cathedral, at a meeting of the Archæological Institute in 1861, was of opinion that the stone was a sculptured monument erected over the relics of St Kyneburgha and St Kyniswitha, which, as stated above, were removed hither from Castor by Abbot Elsinus. Though this stone is commonly accounted a memorial of Abbot Hedda and his monks (870), and is said to be the oldest Christian monument now extant in England, its details do not warrant so early a date being assigned to it. It is certainly a work of the eleventh century, which date would agree with that of the removal of the bodies of these saints by Elsinus, who was abbot from 1005 to 1065. The monument, says Mr Murray, "is a mass either of Purbeck, or of a somewhat similar marble, full of minute shells. . . . On either of the upright sides are six much-worn figures, the details of which are very difficult to distinguish. All have the nimbus—a plain circular heading round the heads, except one, which has the cruciform nimbus distinctive of our Lord, indicated by double lines proceeding from the head to the exterior beading. The dress of all is alike—a long robe with a shorter sleeved vestment over it. They carry emblems which seem to vary, but most have books, and some bear palm branches. All are under a circular arcade, with a kind of double-leaf ornament springing from the intersections. The sloping top of the stone is divided into four partitions, with rude sculpture of leafage and birds, one of which may perhaps represent a peacock, a favourite emblem of the resurrection. Circles and knots of intersected lines mark the early character of the whole work. The two sides are plain, except that on the south side the date 870 has been carved in modern Arabic numerals." Although the dress of the figures is that of the twelfth century, Mr Murray suggests that they are probably those of the Saviour and His Apostles, who are usually represented as carrying books; and "it is not impossible," he adds, "that the monument, which may in reality be that of an early abbot, is the actual stone described by Ingulphus, whose narrative has been proved to be a composition of much later date."

The effigy of an abbot of early English date is placed in the recess behind the altar, and on the adjoining wall is the monument of Bishop Cumberland, who died in 1718, with an inscription from a poetical address to the bishop, by Dupont, Dean of Peterborough, whose own monument remains in the north choir aisle. On the same wall is another monument to Bishop White Kennett, who died in 1728. There was also a large one erected during his own lifetime by Sir Humphrey Orme, for himself and his family; but he survived his own monument, having lived to see its destruction by the Puritans in 1643. On the wall adjoining "Abbot Hedda's monument," is one to the memory of Thomas Deacon, the founder of a charity school at Peterborough, and in many other respects a benefactor to the city. He reclines on the summit of his sarcophagus, attired in a Ramillies wig, with one hand resting on a skull, whilst with the other he points to the record of his virtues which he left behind him. Against the north wall of the apse is another monument, composed of fragments of various dates, arranged as a memorial to some unknown person. The Perpendicular portions of it belonged to a shrine which contained relics of St Ebba, the sister of St Oswald, and the instructress of St Etheldreda of Ely. The most important portions of this shrine now form the window above the arch of the gateway as already noticed.

The North Choir Aisle is an exact resemblance of the aisle of the south choir, the first bay of each being of Early English character. In this aisle one of the original Norman window openings has been preserved. It is filled, however, with Perpendicular tracery, and with modern stained glass, and overlooks a slab of blue stone, close to the north choir door, beneath which rest the remains of Queen Catherine of Aragon. "In contemplating the humble grave of one to whose existence, though it may be but incidentally," writes Mr Paley, "this nation owes the greatest change that ever was brought about in it, and upon the accident of whose burial here depended the preservation of this fine abbey, and its conversion into a cathedral church; there is no monument in England that can fairly be called more deeply interesting than this one, though few indeed of those who daily trample on it, and are fast obliterating the simple words, 'Queen Catherine, A.D. 1536,' appear to entertain a thought about it. Not one in five hundred, we dare aver, recalls her dying words in Shakespeare's 'King Henry VIII.'

"When I am dead

Let me be used with honour: strew me o'er
With maiden flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaste wife to my grave: embalm me,
Then lay me forth: although unqueened, yet still
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me."

Many banners with heraldic devices and royal achievements hung above this tomb; and a lofty hearse, covered with a black velvet pall, marked with a cross of silver tissue, and enriched on the sides with the arms and badges of Aragon, remained on it until the destruction wrought by Cromwell's soldiers. Queen Catherine, the closing scene of whose life it is scarcely possible to imagine otherwise than as Shakespeare has painted it, died at Kimbolton Castle, in Huntingdonshire, January 8th, 1535, and was interred in this aisle with much of the state befitting "a queen, and daughter to a king."

An excellent view of the exterior of the cathedral is obtained from the north-east angle of the churchyard; the chapel with its rich Perpendicular work, the Norman apse terminating above it, and the many lines of towers and spires which group most picturesquely, contrast well with the surrounding foliage. The transept gables are of great beauty; Early English in style, and of the same date and character as the west front. The first stage of the north transept tower above the roof is Transition Norman, of the same date as the transept; the upper stage and pinnacles are Early English, but of later date than the west front. The exterior of the eastern apse is much enriched, and very striking. Buttress turrets, capped with spires, rise at its junction with the choir. Norman pillars run up between the windows; an interesting arcade passes round below the upper tier of windows, and in the parapet above, which is an addition of the Early Decorated period, are circular medallions, enclosing trefoils, from which half emerge figures of kings and ecclesiastics.

Proceeding eastward of the cathedral, we arrive in front of the arches of the infirmary, built by Abbot de Caletto about the middle of the thirteenth century. These arches, which are now built into the walls of the prebendal houses, are among the chief surviving relics of the monastic buildings. A short distance to the east we are presented with a glimpse of the ruins of the chapel of the infirmary (dedicated to St Lawrence), and the great hall, with their splendid arches and thick columns. In the walls, in one of the bishop's gardens, are portions of the refectory. The present archdeacon's house is said to have been the kitchen of the infirmary; but the Rev. W. D. Sweeting believes it was always a residence. The present deanery was formerly the residence of the prior. From the southern side of the cathedral we enter the square, where are the ruins of the cloisters, whose southern and western walls still remain, and contain a singular variety of tracery, mouldings, columns, and doorways. Some of the arches of the original Norman cloister which occupied the place of the Laurel Court, the site of the cloister destroyed by Cromwell's troopers, still remain in the western wall, the "cheese moulding" on one of which indicates its early date. At the south-west angle is a fine Norman doorway, the tympanum of which is enriched with foliage and twisted dragons. Another cloister of Perpendicular date occupied the site of two earlier ones. Some portions of its lavatories remain, and the stained glass in its windows is said to have ranked among the finest in England. In the south wall of the cloister is a much enriched Early English doorway, once an entrance to the abbot's lodge—the present palace—and immediately opposite is the abbot's door, opening to the nave of the cathedral.

Peterborough, which takes the highest place among the English cathedrals of the second class, as already stated, has one unique feature, viz.—the grand triple arch of its truly magnificent west front, which, regarded as a composition, is perhaps without a parallel. Mr Ferguson ("Handbook of Architecture," p. 869, quoted by Murray), says, "As a portico, using the term in its classical sense, the west front of Peterborough is the grandest and finest in Europe, though wanting in the accompaniments which would enable it to rival some of the great façades of Continental cathedrals." "And," adds Mr Murray, "there is no similar arrangement on an important scale in England, although on the Continent it is not uncommon, as at Amiens and Chartres, but nowhere is the triple entrance to the sanctuary—typical, it is usually considered, of the Holy Trinity—grander or more emphatically marked. The effects of light and shade produced by the great piers and arches of this 'magnificent front of columel work,' as Fuller calls it, are wonderful. The upper portion of the space within them is generally in deep shadow, even at sunset, when the rest of the front is glowing with rosy light: this moment should be watched for by the visitor, and the effect of a full moon is still more impressive."

"We have now," in the words of the Rev. Mr Poole, "gradually built up what may well be called a noble minster, and a glance at the plan thus completed will show a Latin cross, the feet resting on two steps, and the head terminating originally in an apse, to which a transept yet farther east has been added. The cross is of that form which is commonly found in old representations of the Rood, where the figure of the Crucified is attended by the Blessed Virgin and the Beloved Disciple, kneeling one on either side, on a step at the foot of the cross, while the inscription over the head appears on a scroll crossing the upper part of the tree. We have, then, in the ground plan of Peterborough Cathedral the highest and most completely developed symbolism of the doctrine of the cross of which a Christian church is capable.* "I would rather suggest than assert," adds Mr Poole, "that the upper step of the two, which is found in all churches with a western transept only, as Wells, for instance, and Peterborough before the addition of the façade, is fairly to be assigned to the two sainted witnesses of our Lord's death; and that the lower step is to be assigned to the approach of the disciples generally; and in the lowest place even of this lower step, is well placed the galilee, the porch of penitents, and the court where their penance was to be awarded."—Rev. G. A. Poole, on the Abbey Church of Peterborough.

The following extract from an eloquent discourse delivered by a popular preacher, the Rev. Henry Melvill, B.D., will not, we trust, be deemed out of place in concluding this hasty sketch of our noble cathedral. Mr Melvill says—"If it be fitting that the palaces of our kings bear evidence of the illustriousness of the party to whose use they are devoted, what is to be said of the churches of our God? There ought not to be in a Christian land more sumptuous structures than those which are expressly dedicated to the Almighty. It is no good sign when palaces are more and more costly, and churches less and less noble. There is no finer saying in scripture than that of David to Nathan, 'See now I dwell in an house of cedar, but the ark of God dwelleth within curtains.' It shamed this righteous monarch to be more splendidly lodged than the sacred emblem of the Divine presence; he could not enjoy his cedar palace whilst there were only curtains to enclose the ark. He rifled the world that its Maker might have a habitation, massive with richness and sparkling with glories; and when Solomon had completed the gorgeous fabric, there was not on the face of the earth a monarch, whose dwelling could rival that reared for the universal King. And this King took possession of the noble sanctuary with every demonstration that He approved the piety which had dedicated to Him the marble, and the jasper, and the gold. After this let no man say that the meanness of a structure is no reason against its fitness for God's service. In one sense it is no reason; God requires not the majesty of architecture in order that He may condescend to the taking up His abode, and giving audience to His people; but at least our piety should be shown by our readiness to dedicate the best that we have unto God. If God is to have a house at all, that house should be the noblest that we have the power of rearing; bearing such proportion as our ability can effectuate, to the greatness of the Being who is to show Himself within its walls. Otherwise, if our churches be inferior to our other structures, less splendid in design, less rich in architecture, we give the strongest of all possible proofs, that we are less disposed to do honour to God than to ourselves ; that we think the ' curtains ' good enough for the ark, and reserve the ' cedar ' for our own habitation. It was not thus with our ancestors, whom we are ready enough to accuse of superstition, but in whom there must have been better and loftier feelings. Witness the cathedrals which yet crest our land ; mightier and more sumptuous, as they ought to be, than even our palaces. Say not that a mere dark superstition actuated the men, who designed and executed these sublime edifices. The long-drawn aisles, the fretted roofs, the dim recesses, the soaring spires, all witness that the architect had grand thoughts of God, and strove to embody them in combinations of the wood and the stone, even as the poet his conceptions in the melodies of verse, or the orator his in the majesty of eloquence. It is a cold and withered piety which catches no inspiration from the structure, as a man walks beneath arches which seem designed to bear up the sky ; and hears the rich symphony wandering amid the forest of pillars as the voice of the Lord God circulated among the trees of the garden. And there must have been piety, lofty and ardent piety, in those who could plan structures that thus seem to furnish instances of their piety to successive generations. The cathedral, with its awe-inciting vastness, its storied windows, its mellowed light, its deepened shadows, appears like the rich volume of some old divine ; we gather from the work the mind of the author, and it is a mind which has grown great in musing upon God." Thus justly and beautifully argues Mr Melvill in his " Miscellaneous Sermons," v. iii. p. 407.

* The Cross being the instrument of our redemption, was always considered as the distinguishing symbol of Christianity. A cross was borne in front of the missionaries when they announced the doctrine of the gospel to Ethelbert. A cross was erected by Oswald, the exiled king of Northumbria, and venerated by his followers, before they ventured to face the numerous and victorious host of the Britons. A cross, in many districts, supplied the place of an oratory, and around it the thane and his retainers frequently assembled to perform their devotions, and in the principal churches, a cross of silver was displayed on the altar, and proclaimed the victory of Christ over the gods of paganism.—Lingard's "Antiquities of the Anglo-Saxon Church," vol. ii. p. 113.

THE DIOCESE OF PETERBOROUGH.

This city was anciently annexed to the diocese of Lincoln, from which it was separated at the dissolution and erected into a distinct see with a diocese, consisting of the counties of Northampton and Rutland, under the title of the archdeaconry of Northampton, and divided into the deaneries of Alstow hundred, Okeham Soca, Rutland deanery, or Martinsley, East hundred, Peterborough, Wrاندike hundred, Weldon, Oundle, Higham Ferrers, Rothwell, Haddon, Daventry, Northampton, Preston, Brackley. Leicestershire has been added from the diocese of Lincoln : it consists of the archdeaconry of Leicester, and is divided into the deaneries of Framland, Goscot, Ackley, Sparkenhoe, Goodlaxton, Leicester, Gartree. The number of benefices in this diocese returned to the Commissioners in 1873, inclusive of sinecure rectories, but exclusive of benefices annexed to other preferments, was 567, the archdeaconry of Northampton comprising 328, and the archdeaconry of Leicester 239.

Provision has been made for the increase of the average annual income of the bishop to the sum of £4500. The amount of the average net income of the dean and chapter or corporation of the cathedral, as a corporation aggregate during the three years ending 1873, was £7500. The corporation consists of the dean and four prebendaries, who have also houses assigned to them. The fabric of the cathedral has been usually repaired out of the corporate revenues of the dean and chapter assisted occasionally by the public contributions.

ABBOTS OF PETERBOROUGH, FROM 656 TO 1541.

	A.D.		A.D.		A.D.
1 Saxulphus	656	17 Ernulphus	1107	31 Robert de Sutton	1262
2 Cuthbaldus	673	18 John of Salisbury	1118	32 Richard de London ...	1274
3 Egbaldus	716	19 Henricus de Angeli ...	1127	33 Wm. de Woodford ...	1295
4 Pusa		20 Martinus de Vecti ...	1133	34 Geoffrey de Croyland	1299
5 Beonna		21 Wm. de Waterville ...	1155	35 Adam de Boothby	1321
6 Celredus		22 Benedict	1177	36 Henry de Morcot	1338
7 Hedda	833	23 Andreas	1193	37 Robert de Ramsey ...	1353
8 Adulphus	972	24 Acharius	1200	38 Henry de Overton	1361
9 Kenulphus	992	25 Robert de Lindsey ...	1214	39 Nicholas de Elnes-
10 Elsinus	1005	26 Alexander de Hold-		towe	1391
11 Arwinus	1055	derness	1222	40 William Genge	1397
12 Leofricus	1057	27 Martin de Ramsey ...	1226	41 John Deeping	1409
13 Brando	1066	28 Walter de St Ed-		42 Richard Ashton	1439
14 Turaldus	1069	munda	1233	43 William Ramsey	1471
15 Godricus	1100	29 William de Hotot ...	1246	44 Robert Kirton	1496
16 Matthias	1103	30 John de Caletto	1249	45 John Chambers	1528

BISHOPS OF PETERBOROUGH, FROM 1541 TO 1874.

	A.D.		A.D.		A.D.
1 John Chambers	1541	10 Benjamin Laney	1660	19 Robert Lamb	1764
2 David Poole	1556	11 Joseph Henshaw	1663	20 John Hinchcliffe	1769
3 Edmund Scambler	1560	12 William Lloyd	1679	21 Spencer Madan	1794
4 Richard Howland	1584	13 Thomas White	1685	22 John Parsons	1813
5 Thomas Dove	1600	14 Richd. Cumberland	1691	23 Herbert Marsh	1819
6 William Pierse	1630	15 White Kennett	1718	24 George Davys	1839
7 Augustin Lindsell	1632	16 Robert Clavering	1728	25 Francis Jeune	1864
8 Francis Dee	1634	17 John Thomas	1747	26 Wm. Connor Magee	1868
9 John Towers	1638	18 Richard Terrick	1757

DEANS OF PETERBOROUGH.

	A.D.		A.D.		A.D.
1 Francis Abree, alias Leycester	1541	13 John Towers	1632	25 Francis Lockier	1724
2 Gerard Carlton	1543	14 Thomas Jackson	1638	26 John Thomas	1740
3 James Curthop	1549	15 John Cosin	1640	27 Robert Lamb	1744
4 John Boxall	1557	16 Edward Rainbow	1660	28 Charles Tarrant	1764
5 William Latymer	1560	17 James Duport	1664	29 C. Manners Sutton	1791
6 Richard Fletcher	1585	18 Simon Patrick	1679	30 Peter Peckard	1792
7 Thomas Nevill	1589	19 Richard Kidder	1689	31 Thomas Kipling	1798
8 John Palmer	1597	20 Samuel Freeman	1691	32 James Henry Monk	1822
9 Richard Cleyton	1607	21 White Kennett	1707	33 Thomas Turton	1830
10 George Meriton	1612	22 Richard Reynolds	1718	34 George Butler	1842
11 Henry Beaumont	1616	23 Edward Gee	1721	35 Augustus Page Saund- ers	1853
12 William Pierse	1622	24 John Mandeville	1722

ANNALS OF THE BISHOPS.

The new diocese, established in 1541, consisted of a bishop, a dean, six canons or prebendaries, and an archdeacon. Besides these the statutes directed that there should be six minor canons chosen. Upon the dissolution of the abbey, the king seized the revenues, amounting to the yearly value of £733 (equal to £4600 of our money); he made a threefold division of them, reserving to himself one-third part, and assigning another third part to the maintenance of the bishop, and the remaining one to the dean and chapter.

John Chambers, who, in the words of Gunton, the historian, "loved to sleep in a whole skin, and desired to die in his nest," was the last Abbot and first Bishop of Peterborough. He resigned the abbey to Henry VIII. on the 1st March 1540, and was then granted an annual pension of £266; but in the following year, letters patent were issued for converting the monastic church into the cathedral of a new diocese, which was to extend over the counties of Northampton and Rutland, hitherto comprised in the great diocese of Lincoln. The temporalities were delivered to him on the 14th of September, and he was consecrated on the 22d of October 1541. He retained the abbot's residence as his palace. Bishop Chambers erected for himself in the cathedral a beautiful monumental statue in white chalk, which was destroyed by Cromwell's soldiers in 1643, and having governed his new diocese for fifteen years, he died in 1556.

David Poole or Pole, LL.D., Fellow of All Souls, and Dean of Arches, the next bishop, was consecrated on the 15th of August 1556, having been appointed by the Pope, in the reign of Queen Mary, for at this time Catholicity was restored. Bishop Poole governed during the remainder of Mary's reign; but, refusing to acknowledge the supremacy of Elizabeth, in 1559, he was dismissed, imprisoned, and died (it is said) in retirement and misery on one of the farms belonging to the see, in 1568.

"It may not be considered too great a digression," writes Mr Phillips, in his "Guide to the Cathedral," "if we say a few words about this 'good Queen Bess,' as her fraudulent historians call her. Indeed we cannot let this opportunity pass, of showing Elizabeth in her true colours. It is a duty which every writer owes to the public, and after the specimen of her charity which we have just recorded, we are sure our remarks will not be unacceptable. Be it known, then, that during the reign of her sister Mary, Elizabeth professed to be a most zealous Catholic. She attended mass, and could count her beads with the rapidity and devotion of a saint. Yet, notwithstanding these outward appearances, Queen Mary knew the treachery and deception of her sister's heart, and was never confident of her actions. She long suspected her sister's conduct, and when dying, requested that Elizabeth would no longer deceive her as to her real character. With a great oath, Elizabeth said she hoped 'the earth would open and swallow her up, if she were not in heart and soul a Catholic.' No sooner, however, was Elizabeth queen than she declared herself a Protestant, and began her reign by dismissing from office all those who were not after her way of thinking. Hence David Poole's degradation: It would require too much space to write out a fair statement of Elizabeth's character in this work: if, however, the blackest perjury—the most base and open licentiousness—the most horrid sacrifices to the Protestant faith—the cruelest hatred and persecution of a young and lovely queen, who threw herself upon Elizabeth for protection; if imprisoning her for upwards of eighteen years for an alleged crime of which she had no right to be an arbiter, and the final murder of that queen, are sufficient virtues to make Elizabeth worthy the commendation of posterity, we will leave her to their homage, and smother the indignation which the black catalogue of her crimes arouses within us."

Edmund Scambler, who had been chaplain to Archbishop Parker, was elected to the see of Peterborough in 1560, and translated to that of Norwich in 1584. During his long episcopate at Peterborough, he alienated much of the land belonging to the see. "As if," says Gunton, "King Henry had not taken enough, and the bishop himself would take away more." "The greater part of the alienated estates," says Murray, "passed into the hands of Cecil, who surrounded his mansion-house at Burleigh with the spoils of the see of Peterborough." "At the commencement of the Reformation, and during the reigns of Edward VI. and Mary," he adds, quoting from "Hallam's Constitutional History," chap. iv., "the alienation of church property had gone so far, that in the beginning of Elizabeth's reign statutes were made, disabling ecclesiastical proprietors from granting away their lands, except on leases for three lives, or twenty-one years. But an unfortunate reservation was made in favour of the crown. The queen, therefore, and her courtiers who obtained grants from her, continued to prey upon their succulent victims. Cecil, however, was not more mercenary and rapacious than the rest of Elizabeth's courtiers, with the exception of Walsingham, who spent his own estate in her service, and left not sufficient to pay his debts."

Richard Howland, Master of St John's College, Cambridge, and in whose time Mary Queen of Scots was interred in the cathedral, was the next bishop. He was succeeded in 1600 by Thomas Dove, Dean of Norwich, and chaplain to Queen Elizabeth, who was wont to call him "the Dove with silver wings," from "his eloquent preaching and reverend aspect." He kept great hospitality during his long episcopate of thirty years. His son erected a handsome monument to his memory, which was destroyed in 1643 by Cromwell's troops.

William Peirs, formerly Dean of Peterborough, was next appointed to the see. He is said to have been a man of great attainments, and after a rule of two years he was translated to the bishopric of Bath.

Augustine Lindsell was inducted to the bishopric in 1632. The parsonage of Castor was added to the cathedral during the presidency of this bishop. He was translated to Hereford in 1634, and in the same year Francis Dee, Dean of Chichester, was elected his successor. During his lifetime he gave the impropriate parsonage of Pagham, in Sussex, to St John's College, Cambridge, for the support of two fellows and two scholars, to be elected out of Peterborough school. On his death, in 1638, John Towers, then dean, was promoted to the see of Peterborough. In 1640 he was summoned to Parliament by the king. An opinion generally prevailed at this time that bishops should not occupy seats in Parliament, which roused Towers to such a degree of revenge, that he and eleven other bishops entered a protest against all laws, &c., that had been passed during their absence from Parliament. For this petty display of spirit, they were imprisoned for nearly six months, and whilst in prison the scenes were enacted by Cromwell's soldiers which are recorded at page 606. Soon after the accession of Bishop Towers, the "great commission for draining the fens" was opened at Peterborough. The commissioners sat for some days in the great hall of the palace, and their decisions were henceforth known as "Peterborough law." He was for some time in attendance on Charles I., and died in obscurity in 1648, just twenty days before his master, and for twelve years the cathedral continued in a state of ruin and desolation until the restoration of Charles II. to the throne.

Benjamin Laney, Master of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, and Dean of Rochester, was inducted in 1660, and was a liberal benefactor to the cathedral. It was partly restored after the desecration, and used as a parish church by the inhabitants. "Dean Cosin renewed the ancient usage, and settled the church and choir in a proper order." Bishop Laney attended Charles II. in his exile, and was translated to Lincoln in 1663.

Joseph Henshaw, Dean of Chichester, was the next bishop. He was considered a learned man; was the author of a work of some reputation, entitled "Horæ Successivæ;" he died in London in 1678, and was buried with his wife in the church of East Lavant, Sussex.

William Lloyd, Bishop of Llandaff, was preferred to this see in 1679, and to that of Norwich, in 1685. Refusing to take the oaths of allegiance to William and Mary, he was deprived of his bishopric in 1690, and died in Hammersmith, near London, in 1710. He was the longest lived of the nonjuring bishops.

Thomas White was inducted in 1685, and dismissed in 1690, having refused to take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy on the accession of William III. He was one of the seven bishops sent to the Tower.

Richard Cumberland, a prelate deeply learned in the Oriental languages, mathematics, and anatomy, and a voluminous author, was elected in 1691, and died October 9th, 1718. His great grandson, Richard Cumberland, author of "The Observer," writing of him, says, "He had no pretensions to quick and brilliant talents. His mind was fitted for elaborate and profound researches, as his works more fully testify." Bishop Cumberland was the author of a work entitled, "De Legibus Naturæ Disputatio Philosophica," a refutation of the "free principles" of Hobbes. This book went through several editions in Latin and English, both in this country and on the Continent. He also wrote, "Origines Gentium Antiquissimæ," or "Attempts for Discovering the Times of the first Planting of Nations." His monument is in the new building, as already noticed.

William Kennett, eleven years dean of this cathedral, succeeded in the same year. He was a learned and distinguished prelate, a renowned antiquary, and the author of several useful and interesting works. He died on the 19th December 1728. Bishop Kennett was born at Dover in 1660, was educated at Westminster and Oxford, and became successively Vicar at Ambrosden, in Oxfordshire, rector of Shottesbroke, Berkshire, and Dean and Bishop of Peterborough. Besides his smaller literary works, in which he replied to the arguments of Atterbury respecting the history and rights of the Convocation, he wrote "Parochial Antiquities: a History of Ambrosden, Bicester, and the Neighbourhood," 4to, 1695, which was republished at Oxford in 1818; "A Complete History of England," 3 vols. folio, 1706. The third volume contains the history from Charles I. to William III. The chapter library was greatly enriched by Bishop Kennett, whose monument is also in the new building.

Robert Clavering, of whom little is said except that he was a pluralist, was the next bishop. He was translated to Peterborough from Llandaff.

John Thomas, tutor to George III., was consecrated in 1747. During his prelacy a society was established at Peterborough, called the "Gentlemen's Society," whose object was to encourage antiquarian research and literature in general. Britton says, "A spirit of rivalry pervaded at that time in the formation of such institutes, and we find that besides the chief or head at London, called the Society of Antiquaries, there were others at Spalding, Stamford, Doncaster, Wisbeach, Lincoln, Worcester, and Dublin." Bishop Thomas was translated to Sarum in 1757, and to Winchester in 1761.

Richard Terrick, his successor, was translated to London in 1764.

Robert Lamb, formerly Dean of Peterborough, succeeded him, and died in 1769.

John Hinchcliffe was the next bishop. He rose to the high station which he occupied from one of the lowest in society. His father was a stable-keeper in London, and getting him into Westminster school, he succeeded so well in his studies, that he went to Cambridge, and sat for a fellowship, which he obtained in 1750. He afterwards married a lady with a fortune of £15,000, and previously to his promotion to the see of Peterborough, he was appointed Master of Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1789 he was appointed to the Deanery of Durham, which he held with his bishopric until his death in 1794, after a presidency of nearly twenty-five years. Historians speak very favourably of his character.

Spencer Madan, formerly a prebendary here, and afterwards Bishop of Bristol, from which see he was translated to Peterborough. After ruling nineteen years, he died in 1813.

John Parsons, Master of Balliol College, Oxford, was nominated in the same year, and is said to have been an able reformer of University abuses, and an honest liberal man. He retained the mastership until his death. He died at Oxford in 1819, and was buried in the chapel of the College.

Herbert Marsh, a native of London, and Fellow of St John's College, Cambridge, where he had been Lady Margaret's Professor of Divinity, was the next bishop. He resided at Gottingen for several years with a view to his improvement in modern languages; and whilst there undertook the translation of "Michaelis' Introduction to the New Testament," to which he added explanatory and supplemental notes. In 1792 he published "An Essay on the Usefulness of Theological Learning." He likewise published "An Essay on the English National Credit," and "A History of the Politics of Great Britain and France," and several other works. In 1816, he was appointed Bishop of Llandaff, and translated to the see of Peterborough in 1819. He died on the 1st May 1839, and was succeeded in the same year by George Davys, formerly a Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, and who took a wrangler's degree in 1803. He subsequently became Curate of Littlebury, and in 1814, of Chesterford; this latter curacy he held until Dr Blomfield, the present Bishop of London, was presented to that living, when Mr Davys became Curate of Swaffham Prior; he afterwards removed to Kensington, and was appointed tutor to the Princess Victoria, our present Queen. Shortly after this he was presented to the Rectory of All-Hallows, London, and in 1831 to the Deanery of Chester, on which occasion he took the degree of D.D.

Francis Jeune, D.C.L., formerly head-master of Birmingham, Dean of Jersey, master of Pembroke, Oxford, and Dean of Lincoln, succeeded Bishop Davys in 1864, and on his decease in 1868 was succeeded by William Connor Magee, D.D. and D.C.L., the present bishop, who was consecrated 1868, was formerly Scholar of Trinity College, Dublin; subsequently Assistant Minister of the Octagon Chapel, Bath, and Prebendary of Wells; Minister of Quebec Chapel, London; Rector of Enniskillen, Precentor of Clogher, Dean of Cork and of the Chapel-Royal, Dublin.

The following is the substance of the schemes and decrees to which the Ecclesiastical Commissioners of England obtained the sanction of the Crown:—That all parishes, which are locally situated in one diocese, and under the jurisdiction of another, be made subject to that see within which they are locally situated; that certain new dioceses should be created, and that such apportionment or exchange of ecclesiastical patronage should be made among the archbishops and bishops, so as to leave an average yearly income of £15,000 to the Archbishop of Canterbury; £10,000 to the Archbishop of York; £10,000 to the Bishop of London; £8000 to the Bishop of Durham; £7000 to the Bishop of Winchester; £5000 to the Bishops of Ely, Worcester, and Bath and Wells, respectively; £5200 to the Bishop of Asaph and Bangor; and that out of the funds arising in the said dioceses, over and above the said incomes, the commissioners should grant such stipends to the other bishops as should make their average annual incomes not less than £4000, nor more than £5000.

The following is a list of the manors belonging to the Bishop and Dean and Chapter of Peterborough:—

BISHOP'S MANORS.

Boroughbury, in Peterborough
Eye
Buckden with the members in Huntingdonshire

DEAN AND CHAPTER'S MANORS.

Peterborough
Werrington
Walton
Paston, Gunthorpe, and Thwaites
Glinton with Peakirk
Irthingborough

In Northamptonshire

Steward—Henry Pearson Gates, Esq. Peterborough; Acting Deputy-Steward—Andrew Percival, Esq. Peterborough

DIGNITARIES OF THE DIOCESE.

BISHOP—The Right Rev. WILLIAM CONNOR MAGEE, D.D., and D.C.L. (£4500). Consecrated 1868, in the room of Dr Jeune, deceased. Formerly Scholar of Trinity College, Dublin; subsequently Assistant Minister of the Octagon Chapel, Bath, and Prebendary of Wells; Minister of Quebec Chapel, London; Rector of Enniskillen; Precentor of Clogher; Dean of Cork; Dean of the Chapel Royal, Dublin. B.A. 1842, M.A. & B.D. 1854, D.D. 1860. D.C.L. Oxon. 1870. Palace—Peterborough

DEAN—The Very Rev. Augustus P. Saunders, D.D., 1853. Formerly Student of Christ Church, Oxford; late Head Master of Charter House School. Deanery—Peterborough Archdeacons.

Northampton—Counties of Northampton and Rutland.—Ven. Owen Davys, M.A., 1842. St John's College, Cambridge. B.A., 1817. Canon of Peterborough as Archdeacon. Rector of Fiskerton, Lincolnshire, 1846. Precincts—Peterborough

Leicester—County of Leicester.—Ven. Henry Fearon, B.D., 1863. Late Fellow of Emmanuel College, Cambridge. B.A., 1824. Rector of Loughborough, 1848. Hon. Canon of Peterborough, 1848. Archdeacon, 1863.

Rectory—Loughborough
Chancellor of the Diocese—Rev. William Wales, M.A., Rector of Uppingham

Bishop's Chaplains.

Rev. B. F. Westcott, D.D., Trinity College, Cambridge

Rev. A. S. Farrar, D.D., Queen's College, Oxford

Rev. H. Jellett, M.A., Trinity College, Dublin

Rev. F. H. Thicknesse, M.A., Brasenose College, Oxford

Secretary to the Bishop.—H. P. Gates, Esq., Diocesan Registry, Peterborough.

Members of Convocation.

Very Rev. A. P. Saunders, D.D., Dean of the Cathedral

Ven. H. Fearon, B.D. Archdeacon of Leicester
Ven. O. Davys, M.A. Archdeacon of Northampton
M. Argles, M.A., Proctor for the Cathedral Chapter

Lord Alwyne Compton, M.A.,
Rector of Castle Ashby
Asheton Pownall, M.A., Rector of South Kilworth

Proctors for the Clergy

Canons Residentiary.

IV. Ven. Owen Davys, M.A., 1842, Canonry annexed to the Archdeaconry

II. Marsham Argles, M.A., 1849, Rector of Barnack

III. Henry Pratt, M.A., 1851, Rector of Shepton Mallett, Somerset

I. Brooke Foss Westcott, D.D., 1863, Regius Prof. of Divinity, Cambridge

Honorary Canons.

II. John Manuel Echazaz, M.A., 1844, Rector of Appleby

IV. Edw. Thomas Vaughan, M.A., 1846, Vicar of Harpenden

VII. Worshipful W. Wales, M.A., 1846, Chancellor of Diocese, Rector of Uppingham

X. Ven. Henry Fearon, B.D., 1848, Archdeacon of Leicester, Rector of Loughborough

XIII. John Babington, M.A., 1849, Rector of Walton-on-the-Wolds

XVI. Hon. Andrew Godfrey Stuart, M.A., 1850, Rector of Cottesmore

XVII. Marmaduke Vavasour, M.A., 1851, Vicar of Ashby-de-la-Zouch

XX. John Pridesaux Lightfoot, D.D., 1853, Rector of Exeter College, Oxford

XXI. James Drummond, M.A., 1853, Rector of Galby

XXIV. Gilbert Beresford, B.D., 1854, Rector of Hoby-cum-Rotherby

XII. Charles Arnold, M.A., 1854, Rector of Tinwell

IV. William Fry, M.A., 1856, Leicester

IX. Lord A. Compton, M.A., 1856, Rector of Castle Ashby

XIX. Alex. Leslie Bromhead, M.A., 1863, Rector of Winwick

VIII. Wm. Cape, M.A., 1864, Rector of Glinton

V. William Hill, M.A., 1865, Vicar of St John the Baptist, Peterborough

I. R. S. C. Blacker, M.A., 1869, Rector of Marholm

XXIII. Henry V. Broughton, M.A., 1869, Rector of Polebrook

XV. Thomas Yard, M.A., 1870, Rector of Ashwell

- xiv. W. L. Collins, M.A., 1871, Rector of Lowick
- xvii. E. H. L. Willea, M.A., 1871, Vicar of Ashby Magna
- iii. Henry Lindsay, M.A., 1871, Rector of Kettering
- xi. Frederic John Norman, M.A., 1872, Rector of Bottesford
- xviii. David Jas. Vaughan, M.A., 1872, Vicar of St Martin's, Leicester

Minor Canons.

- i. C. Daymond, M.A., 1865
 - ii. W. F. Wilkinson, M.A., 1870, Precentor and Sacristan
 - iii. T. H. Vines, M.A., 1871
- Cathedral Grammar School.*—Governors—The Dean and Chapter. Head Master—Rev. Edward Bower Whyley, M.A., 1860. Second Master—Rev. W. D. Sweeting, M.A., 1861
- Architect.*—Sir Gilbert Scott, Spring Gardens, London
- Chapter Clerk.*—H. P. Gates, Esq. J.P.
- Cathedral Librarian.*—Mr J. Cattel

Churches.—Until within the last few years Peterborough possessed but one parish, that of St John the Baptist. It is now, as has been stated, divided into five distinct parishes; the four new ones being St Mark's, St Mary's, St Paul's, and the ancient chapelry of Longthorpe; the church for the latter is the old chapel of ease (St Botolph's), while for the other three new churches have been erected.

The Old Parish Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, originally stood east of the cathedral, where the main part of the town was also situated. The gradual removal of the better class of houses to the west of the minster, is said to be due to the erection of the bridge by Abbot Martin, about the middle of the twelfth century, and where a new bridge has recently been erected, and which will be found noticed at length further on. In 1291 the rectory, appropriated to the sacrist, was valued at £36, 13s. 4d., and the vicarage at £6, 13s. 4d. In the king's books this is valued at £15, 13s. 4d., and the improved yearly value, returned to the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty was £66, os. 5d. The advowson of the living was vested in the abbey till the dissolution, when it passed to the bishop of the diocese and his successors. There were several guilds belonging to this church, but no chantries seem to have been founded in it.

The present church is a large and noble structure of stone, situated nearly in the centre of the city, and was erected in the beginning of the fifteenth century. In 1401 the parishioners having complained to the Bishop of Lincoln that their church was too far off, and that they were frequently prevented by the waters from attending divine service, prayed for its removal to a more convenient place. Having obtained the bishop's licence, which was afterwards confirmed by Pope Boniface, the parishioners rebuilt the church, as already stated, in its present situation, and completed it in 1407, when it was opened with great solemnity by Abbot Genge. This fine old edifice consists of a nave with north and south aisles and chapels, an embattled chancel of two bays, with aisles, south porch, and an elegant embattled tower, adorned with pinnacles and vanes, and containing a peal of eight bells, and a clock which strikes the hours and quarters. Both the nave and the chancel have clerestories, containing in all ten windows of three lights each. All the windows in the aisles are of four lights, having plain intersecting tracery; the east window is of five lights. There are entrances both to the chancel aisles and the tower; and there were both north and west doors, but the former is blocked up. The vestry-room, where parochial meetings are held, is at the west end of the south aisle. Here is a large picture of Charles I.; also two curious specimens of ancient embroidery, worked up into a cushion, and supposed to have formed part of an altar cloth or of a vestment. In each the work is in the form of a cross about two feet in length, having in the centre the figure of our Lord on the cross, and in the arms of the cross are angels bearing cups. Above, in one, is a dove; in the other, a dove upheld by the Father, who is represented as the "Ancient of Days." In the south porch, which is a very fine one, there is a stone-groined roof with carved bosses, the centre one having a crucifixion. The book society which has been in existence more than a century, has a library here which contains about 3000 volumes.

There are numerous wall tablets and monuments, but none of very great interest. Within the altar rails are two large monuments in different coloured marbles, one on each side; that on the south is to John and Elizabeth Wildbore; the one on the north to Matthew Wildbore, their son, who was twice M.P. for the city, and died in 1781. On the staircase leading to the north gallery is a beautiful marble monument by Flaxman, to the memory of William Squire. There was in the chancel a large and beautiful altar piece, painted by Sir R. K. Porter, representative of the "Transfiguration," but this, it is said, has been sold. The belfry windows of four lights are large and transomed, and the east window, which was erected by subscription, represents St John the Baptist, with the inscription, "Glory to God in the highest, and peace and good will to all men." The benefice is a vicarage, yearly value £750, in the patronage of the bishop, and incumbency of the Rev. William Hill, M.A. The tithes, &c., were commuted in 1815 for 160 acres of land. The Vicarage-house is in Priestgate.

St Mark's Church, situated in the Lincoln road, is an interesting edifice, erected in 1856 at a cost of £3400. It is built in the flowing Decorated style of the Early English period, and consists of a nave with aisles and south porch, chancel with aisles, a north-east tower and spire, with vestry beneath, and containing one bell. The nave, which is of five bays with octagonal piers and plain arches, has three dormer windows on each side of the roof, which form a quasi clerestory. The gables both of the nave and chancel are surmounted with crosses; all the windows are partly glazed with tinted glass; and the west window of four lights, the gift of G. H. Whalley, Esq., M.P., is richly painted, and represents in the blazon of episcopacy the armorial ensigns of the twenty-eight sees of England. A fine east window of five lights, inserted in 1867, is the gift of Mr John Thompson, builder; it represents our Saviour as the Good Shepherd, and the four Evangelists on either side. In the same year was erected a beautiful stone reredos, consisting of five arches resting on marble pillars, and enclosing the orthodox tablets of the commandments, the creed, and the Lord's Prayer. The chancel roof is divided into squares; within the chancel are a reading-desk and lectern. In the north chancel aisle is placed the organ, and the church, which is furnished throughout with low open seats, will accommodate 650 persons; 400 of the sittings are free. The living is a vicarage endowed by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners with £300 a year, is in the gift of the bishop, and incumbency of the Rev. J. N. B. Woodroffe, M.A.

The Vicarage House, situated in tastefully laid-out grounds near the church, was built in 1859 by the late Bishop Davys at a cost of £1200. The parish of St Mark comprises a rather populous district in the suburbs of the city, extending through the hamlets of Newton, Spital, Westwood, Lincoln road, Boroughbury, and Westgate. In connection with the church is a mission-house, situated in the Cromwell road, built in 1872-3, at a cost of £300. It is proposed to erect a curate's residence adjoining at a further cost of £500. Opposite the church is an ancient and very interesting building, one of the old tithe barns in excellent order, of best thirteenth century work, and strictly ecclesiastical in character. On the east side are two large porches; and the roof is supported by massive timbers, resembling in their arrangement a wooden nave and aisles. There was another large building in the neighbourhood of a cruciform shape, called the "Sacristan's Barn," which was demolished, and the site is now occupied by railway works.

St Mary's Church was built in 1860, on a site given by the Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam, at a cost of £3000. There is sitting space for 500. The building is constructed of rough grey stone, with dressings of Ketton stone. Its style is Early English of the Pointed type, and it consists of a nave, south aisle, and a short chancel terminating in an apse. The nave is divided from the aisle by five arches, supported by circular columns, having large square capitals and carved foliage beneath. These are of stone, but the arches are of red and white brick, as are also the arches of the chancel and of the west window. The main entrance to the church is gabled above, and surmounted by a small bell cot containing one bell, but there is no porch. The nave roof extends over the aisle, without either clerestory or parapet. The windows of the apse, which are filled with stained glass, were presented by the congregation. One of these windows, representing "The Last Supper," is a memorial to the late Earl Fitzwilliam, the founder of the parish. At the north and south of the chancel arch are the pulpit and reading-desk; the former is a circular one of stone, with good carving. The seats are open, and have wooden floors, but the rest of the building is laid with tiles. The windows are of various designs; at the west there are three large lancets under one arch; two windows on the north and one on the south side have three trefoiled lancets, the centre light being doubly trefoiled. Others, in the south aisle, are square-headed, with shouldered cusps of two and three lights. In the apse are six short lancets, twice trefoiled, all of which have stained glass. Each light has one scene, and an explanatory text. There is a small organ at the west end, and near the south door is a circular font standing on six polished marble shafts. "The style of the building is foreign rather than English, and may perhaps be called Continental First Pointed." So says the Rev. W. D. Sweeting, M.A., in his interesting "Notes on Parish Churches," to which we are much indebted. The living is a vicarage worth £300 per annum, in the incumbency of the Rev. William Robert Thomas, M.A. The patronage is vested in the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough, to whom it has been transferred, by exchange, from the Fitzwilliam family.

The Vicarage House, which stands in the hamlet of Eastfield, about half a mile from the church, is a good building, erected in 1869, on land belonging to the vicarage, at a cost of £1500.

The Schools, with residence for the teachers adjoining the church, are conducted on the National system. There is also in the parish of St Mary's, and about a quarter of a mile east of the cathedral, an old building called Lou, now a farmhouse, which was formerly a cell to the abbey, and was supplied by the monks, who had a chapel here dedicated to the Holy Trinity, traces of which are still visible.

St Paul's.—This church, situate in the hamlet of New England, was built in 1869, at a cost of £5000. The great Northern Railway Company were the principal contributors towards its erection. It is a stone structure in the Middle Pointed style of the Early English type, and consists of a nave, north and south aisles and chancel, with a low square tower which is covered with a high-pitched roof, terminating in a vane. The living is a vicarage worth £300 a year, in the gift of the bishop of the diocese, and incumbency of the Rev. Charles R. Ball, M.A. This parish was also erected by an order in Council out of the parish of St John the Baptist; it forms a populous suburb to the city, and comprises the hamlets of Millfield and New England, with a population of more than 2000. Here are commodious schools erected by the Great Northern Railway Company, who have extensive engineering works in the neighbourhood. The company also support the master and mistresses of these schools, who are appointed under the government system of education.

DOGSTHORPE is a hamlet in the parish of St John the Baptist, two miles north of Peterborough, containing 1339 acres, of the rateable value of £7394, and an estimated gross rental of £8428. The population in 1841 was 514; in 1851, 707; in 1861, 425; and in 1871, 481. The land is chiefly arable, and belongs principally to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. Before the dissolution of the religious houses, it was part of the possessions of Peterborough Abbey; and after its suppression, was given, with the Boroughbury Manor, of which it is a member, to the bishop of the diocese and his successors. There is a small dissenting chapel in the village.

EASTFIELD is another of the hamlets belonging to the mother church, about one mile north-east by east from Peterborough, and two from Eye, on the Thorney road. Its area, including the hamlets of Newark and Oxney, is about 976 acres, and the population in 1871 was 102. The rateable value is £2440, and the gross estimated rental £2624.

NEWARK is a hamlet in the parish of St Mary, consisting of several scattered houses, from one and a half to two miles north of the city. Its acreage, as stated above, is included with that of Eastfield, and both are members of the manor of Boroughbury. The land, which is flat and chiefly arable, belongs principally to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. The population in 1851 was 284; in 1861, 307; and in 1871, 244. There was formerly a chapel here, dedicated to St Mary Magdalen, which stood in a field called Chapel-close; and a "church school" was built in 1872 by subscription, at a cost of £400. The site was given by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and the building is constructed of white brick, with red brick dressings, and consists of one pace or nave, chancel, and entrance porch, over which is raised a small belfry, containing one bell. The chancel, which is laid with encaustic tiles, has a vestry and ante-room attached.

Caer-dyke, where the fens begin, is supposed to be the work of the Romans; and near Newark, in this neighbourhood, it was forty feet in width from bank to bank. Bridges tells us that it was forty miles in length, extending from the Nene, a little below Peterborough, to the Witham, about three miles below Lincoln. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel in the village, which is constructed of brick, and was built by subscription in 1870.

OXNEY, about three miles north-east from Peterborough, was formerly a considerable cell to the abbey of Peterborough. The enclosure, which is moated round, contains seven or eight acres, and several marks of antiquity still remain. In the thirty-third of Henry III. (1249) the monks of Peterborough obtained the grant of a fair here for eight days. There was a chapel dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, under the care of a warden; and at Spitalfields, another hamlet near the city, stood an infirmary or hospital, dedicated to St Leonard, which consisted of a prior and seven brethren; and here, too, was a chapel dedicated to All Saints.

LONGTHORPE.—This village is pleasantly situated on the Stamford Road, about two miles south by west of Peterborough. Until the year 1850 Longthorpe was a chapelry to Peterborough. It is now a district parish, one of the four that have been formed, as we have just seen, out of the ancient parish of St John the Baptist. In early records it is simply written Thorp; in Domesday Book it is Torp. The name is a very common one, and was given frequently to the villages lying near large towns. The Rev. W. D. Sweeting, quoting from the Rev. J. Taylor, says, "Thorpe always indicates Danish as opposed to Norwegian settlements, which were 'thwaites.'" "The word thwaite," he adds, "occurs forty-three times in Cumberland, and not once in Lincolnshire, while thorpe, the chief Danish test-word, which occurs sixty-three times in Lincolnshire, is found only once in Cumberland." In Lincolnshire, though the word is spelt as in the present case, it is generally pronounced "thorp." The population of Longthorpe, in 1841, was 251; in 1851, 262; in 1861, 294; and in 1871, 297. The area is 1390 acres, belonging principally to the executors of the late G. W. Fitzwilliam, the dean and chapter of Peterborough (the lords of the manor), and Charles Isham Strong, Esq., of Thorpe Hall. This handsome mansion, situated in the small but beautiful demesne of Thorpe Park, is in the Italian style of architecture, and was thoroughly restored by the late Rev. R. W. Strong, M.A., who added two new lodges to it. The rateable value of the parish is £2627, and the gross estimated rental £2874. Here is a very ancient specimen of architecture, of the same date as the church, and supposed to have belonged to the old manor house or court lodge. It was fortified with corner towers, one of which remains. The lower story is vaulted, and the windows have shouldered heads.

The old chapel of ease, like the mother church at Peterborough, was found to be in an inconvenient position, from the gradual removal of the dwellings from its vicinity, and, upon the petition of the inhabitants, the old chapel was taken down and rebuilt in its present situation, "at the instance and charges of Sir William de Thorp," and with the permission of Robert de Sutton, who was Abbot of Peterborough from 1262 to 1273. The old chapel was dedicated to St Botolph, and it is reasonable to suppose, remarks Mr Sweeting, that the present one has the same dedication. Bridges says, "Of this chapel there is no remains, nor is the situation of it now known." It is mentioned, however, in a deed of William, Vicar of Burgh, for the exchange of land lying between Westwoode and the Chapel of St Botolph, in the time of Abbot Andreas, who died about the year 1200.

The present church, which is plain and simple in construction, is of the Early English character, of the date of 1262-73, as above stated, and consists of a nave and two aisles, with a spacious chancel. It is built of coarse rubble, "without a buttress or string-course in any part of it, and having everywhere, except at the east and the west ends, its original windows of two plain lancet lights." The nave is of three bays, with slender piers standing on square bases. There is no chancel arch, nor any indications of a screen. The windows are double lancets, trefoiled, except at the north-west and south-west of the chancel, where there are single low side windows. To the north is a square aumbry, to the south a trefoiled piscina. There were altars also in each aisle, the brackets still remaining; that in the north aisle being a very fine one. There are north and south doors, and the seats are new and open. "Although used for six centuries as a chapel to Peterborough," observes Mr Sweeting, "there is reason for supposing that it was not consecrated till the seventeenth century, when (in 1683) some repairs were effected, the object being to have the chapel consecrated in order that the inhabitants might have right of burial." The rev. gentleman must surely be in error on this subject. It is doubtless true that the ceremony of consecrating the burial ground was not performed until the time indicated, but it is very improbable that the chapel, in which the "Divine Mysteries" were regularly celebrated, was allowed to remain for centuries unconsecrated. The living is a vicarage in the patronage of the Fitzwilliam family, and incumbency of the Rev. Arthur James Skrimshire, M.A. and M.D. The Vicarage House is situate near the church.

The Catholics have a small chapel in Queen street, dedicated to the Holy Family and St Peter, with priest's house and school attached; it was built in 1856, at a cost of £1200. The Very Rev. Canon Seed is the priest.

CHAPELS.—The Independents have two chapels in the city; one in Westgate, erected in 1859, at a cost of £3000. It is a good building, of white brick, with stone dressings, and will seat 720. The Rev. Alexander Murray is the minister. The other, in Priestgate, is also a good building, and will accommodate 700; it was built in 1865, at a cost of £4500. Rev. E. S. Jackson is the minister. The General Baptists have also two chapels here. The one in Queen street was erected in 1869, for 800 hearers, at a cost of £4300; and that at New Fletton was built in 1858, to seat 250, at a cost of £506. The Rev. Thomas Barrass and Rev. Henry Watts are the ministers. The Particular Baptists have a place of worship in Chapel street, erected in 1855, for the accommodation of 500 hearers, at a cost of £750. They have another chapel in Westgate, rebuilt in 1852, for 350 persons, at a cost of £1000. The Wesleyan Methodist chapel in Wentworth street, which was built in 1834, and is now (1874) being rebuilt in the Italian style, at a cost of £5000, will seat 1040. The Wesleyan chapel in New England, which was erected in 1866 at a cost of £650, will hold 250. The United Methodist Free Church in Boroughbury was built in 1866, to seat 340, at a cost of about £900, including purchase of site and minister's house adjoining. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel in the New road, which was built in 1862, for 660 hearers, at a cost of £1679; and another in Cobden street, erected in 1871, to seat 240, at a cost of £360.

Schools.—The Cathedral, Grammar, or Chapter School in the Minster Precincts forms part of the cathedral foundation; the statutes of the cathedral providing for the appointment of 2 masters and 20 grammar scholars, who receive a free education, and in addition £4 each per annum. There are two exhibitions at St John's College, Cambridge, founded by Mr Mount Steven, of Paston, to which boys educated here or at Oundle have a preferential claim. Rev. E.

B. Whyley, M.A., head master; Rev. W. D. Sweeting, M.A., second master; and three assistant masters.

St Peter's Training College for Schoolmasters is a large brick building, designed by Sir Gilbert Scott; it has a frontage 240 feet, stands on two acres of ground, and was opened 28th May 1864. The college has accommodation for forty-six students; it is intended for the supply of the diocese of Peterborough, Ely, and Lincoln, and is governed by a committee of twenty members, elected annually from those dioceses, in equal proportions of laymen and clergy. The Bishops of Peterborough, Ely, and Lincoln, and the Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, are patrons of the institution. The Bishop of Peterborough is visitor. The Rev. Charles Daymond, M.A., is the principal, and the Rev. John Dart, M.A., vice-principal, who are assisted by two tutors.

Peterborough Practising School. Here the students practice the art of teaching and school management to 250 boys, who are under the care of a head master, assisted by college students and pupil teachers. It is a handsome stone building, situated in the Training College grounds, from designs by Sir Gilbert Scott.

Deacon's and Ireland's Charity School, situate in Cowgate, was founded in 1721, for clothing and educating twenty poor boys, who are, after completing their education, placed out as apprentices.

The National School, established in 1823, is a large, commodious, plain building. It is supported principally by voluntary subscription, Government grant, and school pence; and from the treasurer's report for the year ending December 1870, it appears that the receipts of the year, including the balance of the preceding year, was £309, and the amount of disbursements, &c., £8, 12s. 6d., leaving a balance of £300, 9s. 1d.; and the British School (boys), Brook Street, erected in 1859, at a cost of £1300. The British School (infants), is situate in Westgate; and the National School (St John's), Chapel Place, for girls and infants; the former erected in 1860, the latter in 1864, are supported by subscription and Government grants.

National School, New England, erected by the Great Northern Railway Company in 1855, is supported by subscription and Government grants; and the National School (St Paul's), is situate in Millfield. The Catholic School, Queen street, was erected in 1868. The Infant School in New Town is supported principally by annual subscriptions, and a triennial sermon, to be preached in the parish church.

Charitable Institutions.—The Dispensary and Infirmary, rebuilt in 1845, is a plain building. The vice-presidents are the Duke of Bedford, the Lord Bishop of Peterborough, and the Dean of Peterborough. The trustees are the Earl Fitzwilliam, the Earl of Carysfort, the Archdeacon of Northampton, J. M. Heathcote, Esq., J. W. Childers, Esq., Lord Sherard, W. Wells, Esq., P. L. Thompson, Esq., Lord Chesham, J. W. Russell, Esq., Rev. M. Argles, Rev. H. Pratt, Rev. Professor Westcott, and Thomas Walker, M.D.; Mr Rowell, treasurer; Rev. W. Cape, hon. secretary; Wm. Paley, M.D., physician; T. J. Walker, M.D., surgeon; T. Walker, M.D., consulting-surgeon; J. R. Burton, house-surgeon and secretary. The institution is supported by subscription; and the report for the year ending January 1st, 1874, states the number of physician's patients treated during the past year to be 1708, the number of surgeon's patients 790, and the number received into the infirmary 149. The receipts of the same year, including a balance of £151, 15s. 7d. from the former account, was £1542, 8s.; and the total expenditure of the year was £1190.

The Peterborough Diocesan Church Building Association is an excellent institution; and amongst the societies for the advancement of religion may be noticed those for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge and the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts.

The Market House is an ancient building in the Market Place, constructed on arches, and bearing date 1671. It is surmounted by the royal arms, gaudily carved and gilded, and an illuminated clock. The removal of this, now almost useless building, used for the sale of eggs, poultry, butter, &c., together with a few dilapidated houses adjoining, would add very much to the beauty of the town, extend the market place, and throw open to view the parish church, which is much hidden by them.

The Corn Exchange, a neat building in the Italian style, erected near the church, on the site of the old theatre, at a cost of £2700, raised in shares of £25 each—the present capital is £3500. It was opened on the 2d of October 1848, by a company of shareholders, and consists of a spacious market room, lighted by a handsome lantern roof, supported by stone Corinthian pillars, which divide the room into three compartments; a committee and cloak rooms, and a gallery at one end. The building was lengthened in 1855, at a cost of £2500, and another compartment was added to the width of the building in 1870, at a cost of £3000.

The Liberty Jail and House of Correction stands on the Thorpe road, a short distance west of the city, and was erected at a cost of £10,000. It is a handsome stone structure, in the Norman style. The front building comprises the sessions court, magistrates' room, jury room, clerks' offices, turnkeys' rooms, debtors' prison, &c. The main building includes the governor's residence and offices; accommodation for twenty-five male and ten female prisoners. The arrangement is on the same principle as the model prison at Pentonville. The building was erected in 1842, from the design of Mr Donthorne, by Messrs Royce and Woolston, and Mr Ruddle of Peterborough. Mr William and Miss Fanny Preston are the governor and matron; the Rev. Arthur James Skrimshire, M.A. and M.D., chaplain; and Mr Thomas Southam, surgeon.

The Assembly Room, in Wentworth street, attached to the Wentworth Hotel, is a large and commodious room, covered by a glass or lantern roof. It was erected in 1853, and opened on 17th January 1854, by the late Earl Fitzwilliam, when a ball was given for the benefit of the Infirmary; it is well adapted for public meetings, concerts, lectures, &c.

Peterborough Literary Institution is situate in Wentworth street, and consists of 300 members, who, by quarterly instalments, pay an annual subscription of either 12s., 8s., or 4s. Members paying 12s. have access to and the use of the reading-room during the whole of the day; members paying 8s. are not entitled to the use of the reading-room before six o'clock in the evening; and members paying 4s. are entitled to the use of the library only. The library contains about 2400 volumes. The reading-room is supplied with the leading magazines, periodicals, and the London, provincial, and local daily and weekly newspapers. The income for the last year was £171, 3s. 7d., the expenditure £150, 16s. 1d., which left a balance in hand on 21st January 1873 of £20, 7s. 6d. The Lord Bishop is the president; J. F. Bentley, Esq., treasurer; Wm. Eaton, secretary; and William Edwards, librarian.

The New Cattle Market was established here in 1867, by a company of shareholders, at a cost of £10,000, raised in £10 shares. The land was purchased from the late Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam, and the present capital of the company is £12,500. The market is well attended with fat stock on Wednesday, and on Saturday with every description of live stock. It is well fitted up with cattle and sheep pens, and a covered shed for pigs, calves, &c. There are two entrances to it, one from the junction of the Long Causeway and Westgate and the other from New road. It is a spacious erection, supplying a want long felt. The market for general produce is held in the market place in front of the market, and is supplied abundantly.

The Gasworks, situate on the Thorney road, were established in 1829, by Mr James Sawyer, who sold them to the present company in September 1868—the said company being incorporated by Act of Parliament, 26th June 1868. The present capital is about £30,000, in £10 shares. There are three gas-holders, which will contain 130,000 cubic feet; there are 290 public lamps. Gas is supplied to the consumers at 4s. 6d. per 1000; and the present annual consumption is upwards of 30,000,000 cubic feet. Mr James Moon is the manager.

The Cemetery is situated in Eastfield road, in the parish of St Mary, and covers an area of $5\frac{1}{4}$ acres, purchased from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners in accordance with clause 52 of the Local Act, and who have assigned £20 a year (being the bishop's interest in the freehold) to the parish in which it is situated. It was established in 1858, at a cost of £3100, and is tastefully laid out. There are two neat chapels for the use of Churchmen and Dissenters respectively. These are separated by an arch, which is surmounted by a spire. There is a residence within the grounds for the curator.

The County Court and Probate Office, situate in the New road, is a plain building of white brick, with red brick dressings relieved with stone springs. It was erected by Her Majesty's Commissioners of Works, at a cost of £2500, and opened in July 1873. On the ground floor are the offices of the probate departments, the chief clerk's room, the public office, and strong room. On the west, on the same or ground floor, is the county court department, containing the registrar's, high bailiff's, and public offices. The second floor is taken up by the large court hall and registrar's room. The court is held monthly on Tuesday, and the district comprises the following places:—Ailesworth, Alwalton, Borough Fen, Caldecot, Castor, Chesterton, Deeping Gate, Denton, Etton, Eye and Eye Green, Farcet, Fletton, Folksworth, Glatton, Glinton, Gunthorpe, Haddon, Helpstone, Holme and Fen, Marholme, Maxey, Morborn, Newborough, Northborough, Overton Longville, Overton Waterville, Paston, Peakirk, Peterborough, Stanground, Stilton, Sutton, Thorney, Upton, Walton, Washingley, Water Newton, Werrington, Whittlesey, Woodstone, and Yaxley.

The Union Bank is composed of twenty-two members, who pay each 2s. per month. This club has an excellent library, to which the members have access daily. Mr John Hill is the librarian.

Peterborough Billiards and Chess Rooms are situate in Cumbergate, and were established in 1867, at a cost of £1000, raised in 200 £5 shares. There are 143 members, each of whom are shareholders, and eight directors; most of the latter reside in the town. The Chess-room is on the same landing as the Billiard-room, and both rooms are fitted up with every necessary accommodation and convenience. Mr William Wilkins, solicitor, is the secretary.

Masonic Lodge (St Peter's, No. 646) is a brick building, situate in Boroughbury, erected in 1864, at a cost of £1500. It consists of throne-room, lodge-room, robing-rooms, &c. It was opened and dedicated by his Grace the Duke of Manchester on November 4, 1864. The present number of members is about ninety. The Oddfellows and Foresters have lodges in the city.

Northamptonshire (6th) Rifle Volunteer Corps, established in 1860, and a part of the administrative battalion of the company. Its effective strength is 160 of all ranks in two companies. The Orderly-room, in Queen street, is a brick building, erected in 1869 at a cost of £1800. The property is vested in trustees; it is used as a drill hall, and let for concerts, public lectures, &c.; it is 80 feet long, by 40 feet in width. T. Walker, captain; J. Beecroft, second captain; John Graves, G. F. D. Gaches, and Alfred Leeds, lieutenants; Sgt. W. Fowler, drill instructor.

First Northamptonshire Rifle Volunteer Engineers, embodied in 1867, comprises 100 men of all ranks. Leonard John Deacon, first captain; G. W. Harrison, first lieutenant; J. C. Lound, second lieutenant; Sergeant George Henry Middleton, drill instructor.

Railway Stations.—The station for the Eastern Counties, and the London and North-Western railways, is situate in the parish of Fletton, on the south side of the river Nene, which is here crossed by a bridge from Peterborough. It is a very extensive and handsome station, distant from Ely $30\frac{1}{4}$ miles; from Stamford $13\frac{1}{2}$, from Syston 45, from Northampton $42\frac{1}{2}$, and from Blisworth $47\frac{1}{2}$ miles. At this station the trains run on one or the other of half a dozen sidings, and under a spacious iron roofing, supported by iron pillars, which form six wide avenues. The roofing is walled at each side; is of great height, 410 feet long, and 228 feet wide. On both sides there are large stone platforms. There is a range of large brick buildings on the right, comprising refreshment and waiting-rooms, booking-offices, warehouses, engine-houses, porters' lodges, &c. The Eastern Counties Company enlarged it very much, built new warehouses, engine-houses, and a large wharf close to the river, from which there are tramways to the main line, to facilitate the loading and unloading of goods. Close to the station, ranges of houses, some three stories high, have been built for the clerks and others. A constables' lodge is erected near it. The Crown Inn adjoins the entrance, for the accommodation of passengers. The Great Northern Railway Station, the entrance to which is from Cowgate, is a large and handsome structure, having commodious refreshment-rooms, &c., and every necessary accommodation. The line was opened from London to York in 1858, and the company have extensive works at New England, for the repair of locomotives, &c., where they employ about 400 hands. The Midland Company have also extensive works for a like purpose close to the Great Northern Station. The Great Northern Hotel, which stands close to the station, is a large and commodious building.

Banks.—There are three banks and a savings-bank in Peterborough. According to the report of the Savings-bank, for the year ending 5th January 1874, the amount of deposits was £49,167, 16s. 11d., and the number of depositors 1731, exclusive of 31 charities and 23 friendly societies.

The Almshouses, in the Minster Precincts, for eight aged persons, were rebuilt about 27 years since; and of the almshouses in St John Street, for 44 poor persons, 17 were rebuilt in 1845. The Hon. E. Wortley, formerly M.P. for this city, gave a very good house, with extensive premises, in 1744, as a workhouse for the poor, but when the Union Workhouse was built, it fell into the hands of the feoffees, who converted it into rooms for aged and infirm persons, and added a new front to it in 1837. The inmates receive 2s. 6d. to 3s., and 4 lbs. of bread each per week.

The Union Workhouse, situate on the Thorpe road, about half a mile west of the city, is a substantial building, erected in 1836, at a cost of about £4000. It was enlarged in 1860. A new chapel was erected in 1864, and a fever ward and two vagrant wards were added in 1870: it will now accommodate 370 persons. The union comprehends 42 parishes:—Ailsworth, Alwalton, Borough Fen, Caldecot, Castor, Chesterton, Denton, Farcet, Fletton, Folksworth, Glatton, Haddon, Holme, Morborne, Overton Longville, Overton Waterville, Peterborough, Stan- ground, Stilton, Sutton, Upton, Washingley, Water-Newton, Woodstone, Yaxley, Crowland, Deeping Gate, Etton, Eye, Glinton, Gunthorpe, Holpstone, Marholm, Maxey, Newborough, Northborough, Paston, Peakirk, Thorney, Walton, and Werrington, and embraces an area of upwards of 120 square miles. The Hon. Chas. Fitzwilliam is the chairman of the Board of Guardians, Edward Vergette, jun., clerk; Rev. Arthur James Skrimshire, M.A. and M.D., chaplain; Mr Thomas Southam, surgeon; Mr Richard and Mrs C. S. Greenlay, master and matron; and Mr E. B. and Mrs E. M. Popplewell are the teachers of the school.

Peterborough Bridge.—The new bridge over the river Nene, which is the boundary of Northamptonshire and Huntingdonshire, and is about 140 feet wide at this point, has been recently erected at the joint expense of the two counties and the inhabitants of Peterborough, and was opened for public traffic on the 13th of December 1872. A bridge has existed here from a very early period. The first which history records was built in 1140 by an abbot of Peterborough (Martin of Bec), who, as well as several of his successors, exercised the privilege of levying tolls on passengers and traffic which passed over it. The old bridge, which has just been replaced, being in a most dilapidated condition, the Improvement Commissioners memorialised the Court of Quarter Sessions of the two counties upon its insecurity. This raised the question as to their liability to repair it, for although the bridge connects the two counties, it is really within the Liberty of Peterborough, which does not contribute towards either county rate. The opinion of counsel, taken some years ago, upon this very point, was adverse to the counties resisting an indictment which had been issued against them for not repairing the bridge; and this opinion was held to be so conclusive that it was considered perfectly hopeless to attempt to upset it. The counties therefore, acting under the advice of their own counsel, admitted their liability, the result of which is the present substantial bridge, which, though comparatively modified in its architectural character, is a handsome structure nevertheless.

It is a wrought-iron girdle bridge, about 150 feet in length, and 30 feet in width, clear of the parapets. It has three openings, the central opening being 75 feet in width, having a clear waterway from the ordinary water-height of 9 feet 5 inches, and the two side-openings are 37 feet 6 inches in width. It is supported by four wrought-iron cylinders, which form four pillars with moulded caps. These cylinders, which are five feet in diameter, are filled with concrete, and stand upon the rock some sixteen feet beneath the ordinary water-level. The roadway is pitched with granite squares, resting on a bed of concrete: and there is a footpath on either side, made of Yorkshire paving. These are within the parapets, and are supported by ornamental cantilevers attached to the main longitudinal girders. The parapets, which are ornamental, are terminated by eight stone piers, four on either side, the piers having a pinnacle termination. The four centre piers, which rise out of the four cylindrical supports, are surmounted by gas lamps, and on the panels of the cast-iron piers of parapets are placed the arms of the lord-lieutenants of the two counties. The arms of the city are carved on the panels of the stone piers at the Peterborough end. The work was carried out under the guidance of Mr Fowler, the eminent engineer, of London, and the builders were Messrs Handyside and Co. of Derby, whose tender for £5426, for the construction of the bridge was accepted, and the contract entered into at the Midsummer Sessions 1871. The official opening of the bridge was conducted with much rejoicing. The bishop and clergy, the members for the city, the magistrates of the Liberty of Peterborough, and many of the nobility and gentry of the neighbourhood. The city authorities met in the Town Hall at 1.30 P.M., from whence they marched in procession over the bridge to the Crown Hotel, where they were met by the joint-committees of the two counties and several noblemen and gentlemen who joined the procession; and having returned, the bridge was declared open for public traffic by the Right Hon. George Ward Hunt, M.P., amid much cheering from the crowd. In the evening a grand banquet to celebrate the event was held at the Great Northern Hotel.

MAGISTRATES FOR THE LIBERTY OF PETERBOROUGH.

Lord Paramount—Marquis of Exeter.

Chairman of Quarter Sessions—The Right Hon. Lord Kesteven, Casewick Park, Stamford.

Marquis of Exeter, Burghley House	E. A. Skrimshire, Esq., Stanground, Peterboro'
Hon. C. W. Fitzwilliam, M.P., Alwalton	C. O. Eaton, Esq., Tolthorp House, Stamford
W. L. Hopkinson, Esq., M.D., St Martin's, Stamford	The Mayor of Stamford
T. Walker, Esq., M.D., Peterborough	Rev. Joseph Pratt, Paston
W. Paley, Esq., M.D., Peterborough	C. I. Strong, Esq., Thorpe Hall
J. M. Heathcote, Esq., Conington Castle, Stilton	H. H. English, Esq., Westwood House
C. Trollope, Esq., Casewick Park	Rev. W. Cape, Minster Precincts
Arthur Trollope, Esq., Casewick Park	Rev. Marsham Argles, Barnack
Thomas Life, Esq., Peterborough	J. L. Jackson, Esq., Bainton House, Stamford
A. W. English, Esq., Aislaby Lodge, Whitby	J. Yeoman, Esq., Milton, Peterborough
J. M. Vipan, Esq., Stibbington Hall, Wansford	Joseph Phillips, Esq., for the St Martin's Stamford Baron Division of the said Liberty

Magistrates' Clerk—N. Wilkinson, Esq. High Constable—Mr G. Bristow, Long Causeway.

PETERBOROUGH DIRECTORY.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank, Long Causeway.—Russell Hodeon, postmaster. Letters arrive from all parts at 7 A.M.; from London and the south at 10.30 A.M., and London at 5; and are despatched at 9.15 A.M., 12.45, 3.45, 7, and at 9.30 P.M. Delivery commences on Sunday from all parts at 7 A.M. and the despatches to the north, and north-west, and west of England are at 4, and to all parts at 10 P.M. There are sub-offices at New Fletton and Bridge Foot, and the pillar-boxes are in New-road, Great Northern, Great Northern Platform, Boroughbury, and London road.

ADAMS Frederick Robert, grocer, Cowgate
 Adams John, corn miller and baker, Millfield
 Adams Matthew, beerhouse, City road
 Aldgate James, draper, 1 Market place
 Alexander Miss Margaret, mistress, British School, Millfield
 Allen Mrs Esther, painter, Grove st. Fletton
 Allen John, grocer, Westwood street
 Allen Joseph, greengrocer, Shropshire place
 Allen Thomas, horse and carriage proprietor, Long causeway
 Allen William, shoemaker, Millfield
 Allison John, carpenter, Bridge place, Fletton
 Allsopp & Sons, brewers, 2 Long causeway
 Alsop Frederick Negus, seed and sack dealer, St John street
 Ambrose Charles, glass and china dealer (Phipps & Ambrose), Narrow street
 Amies Thomas, ironmonger, bar-iron merchant, bell hanger and gasfitter, Long causeway, h. Broad Bridge street.
 Anderson Mrs My. Ann, shopkr. St Leonard st.
 Andrew Edw. baker & shopkr. Gladstone st.
 Andrew Thos. plumber, 12 Narrow Bridge st.
 Anker Chas. Jph. fishmonger, Broad Bridge st.
 Archer Wm. Hy. piano tuner, Boroughbury
 Arnold Mr Edward, Alma road
 Arnold James Franklin, accountant, Priestgate, h. Lincoln road
 Arthur James, travelling draper, 3 Nelson st.
 Arthy Mr Joseph, London road
 Ashley William, baker, Grove st. New Fletton
 Ashworth Joseph, baker, St John st. North
 Askham Frederick, coal dealer, Chapel street
 Atkinson William, foreman, Great N. Railway
 Attenborough Henry, clerk, Miriam terrace
 Atter Frederic, solicitor (Brown, A. & B.), h. Lincoln road
 Austin John, beerhouse, Westgate
 BACK Miss Catherine, school, 27 Cowgate
 Back Robert, watchmaker, Cowgate
 Bailey Mrs Ann, 7 Albion terrace, Fletton
 Bailey David, shoemaker, Grove street, Fletton
 Bailey Saml. Cross, manager, 7 Albion ter. Fletton
 Bailey Thomas, builder, Cemetery end
 Baines Jonathan, tailor & draper, 13 Broad st.
 Bains Miss Louisa, teacher, National School (St Paul's), New England
 Baker Alfred, professor of music, Oundle road
 Baker Mrs Martha, dressmaker, &c. Priestgate
 Baker, Mrs Penelope, 12 Crescent
 Baldwin Hy. draper and beerh. New England
 Ball Miss Hanh. Mary, St Paul's ter. Lincoln rd.
 Ball Rev. Charles R. M.A. vicar, St Paul's, New England
 Ball William, photographer, Broad Bridge st.
 Bamber Stephen William, foreman, 39 New rd.
 Bannister Miss Sarah, Cromwell road
 Bannister Frederick Samuel, shopkeeper and draper, Whalleys
 Bannister Thomas, blacksmith and corn and flour dealer, Cumbergate
 Banyard James Spicer, tobacco manufacturer, 3 St John's street; h. Cambridge
 Barber George, surgeon, Broad Bridge street
 Barber John, vict. New Inn, and horsebreaker, Lincoln road
 Barford and Perkins, engineers, ironfounders, &c. Queen street
 Barford William (& Perkins), h. Lincoln road
 Barker Alfred, blacksmith and beerh. Millfield

Barker Mrs Mary, London road
 Barlow Edward, beerhouse, Westwood street
 Barnes Mrs Catherine, milliner, &c. 8 Priestgate
 Barnes Mrs Mary Eliza, dyer, and register office, St John street
 Barnes Thomas Jackson, banker's clerk, 3 Souvenir terrace, New road
 Barnes John, tinner, &c. 8 Priestgate
 Barnsdale Geo. foreman carpenter, Queen st.
 Barrass Rev. Thomas (Baptist), Oundle road
 Barratt Fred. Reeves, prof. of music, New road
 Barratt John, shopkeeper, Hampden row
 Barrett Henry, clothes dealer, Westgate
 Barrett Thomas Lawrence, draper, Long causeway and Midgate, h. Brook street
 Barrett William, tobacconist, Westgate
 Barron Wm. Simmons, artist, 30 New road
 Barton John, district local superintendent, Great Eastern Railway, Nene view
 Basford William, chimney sweeper, Chapel st.
 Bates John, shopkeeper, Cobden street
 Battersby Mr James, Monument street
 Baynes John, beerhouse, 29 Wood street
 Bays Edward John, clerk, Lincoln road
 Bays James Scott, wine and spirit merchant, 1 Queen street
 Beale Mrs Mary Ann, vict. New Inn, New rd.
 Bean, Miss May, dressmaker, 21 Cowgate
 Beaver William, corn and flour dealer, 15 Long causeway, h. 11 North street
 Beckett Rev. Charles, M.D. curate of St John's, North street
 Beckett Mr Robert, 15 Albion terrace, Fletton
 Beckett Thomas, draper, 43 Narrow Bridge st.
 Bedford John, cattle dealer, 16 New road
 Bedwell Geo. piano tuner, 6 Albion ter. Fletton
 Beeby Alexander, & Son (John Henry) coal merchants, 2 Market place
 Beech Henry, painter, Bell's pl. Boroughbury
 Beesley Mrs Mary, school, Eastgate
 Beeson Thomas, com. traveller, 2 City road
 Bell Alfred, travelling tea dlr. St Leonard st
 Bell Thomas, shoemaker, Westgate
 Bell Wm. travelling tea dealer, 10 Market pl.
 Bentley John Flowers, manager, Midland Bank
 Benton William, horse dealer, New road
 Bescoby Mrs Catherine, Lincoln road East
 Beswick Mrs Sussannah, Priestgate
 Bettles William, market gardener, Alma road
 Bickmore Rich. Parsons, com. trav. Lincoln rd.
 Binckes Mrs Annie, regia. office, 36 Narrow st.
 Binckes William Edward, tailor and hatter, 36 Narrow Bridge street
 Bingham Thomas, tailor and draper, 25 Narrow street; house, Lincoln road
 Bird Charles, beerhouse, Westgate
 Bird Mrs Elizabeth, beerhouse, Midgate
 Bird Mrs Sarah, Spring Villas, Fletton
 Birmingham Wagon Coy. (Limited), wagon mfrs. and repairers, Gt. Eastern Rly. station
 Blackman Thomas, photographer, 14 Westgate
 Blackwell Francis, leathercutter and beer retailer, 28 Westgate
 Blackwell John, blacksmith, Westgate
 Blades James, jun. tailor, Priestgate
 Blair William, travelling draper, 23 Westgate
 Blake Miss Catherine, baker, Albert place
 Blake John Lamb, compositor, Brook street
 Blakeney Mrs Sarah, Crawthorne road
 Bland John, shopkeeper, Albert place
 Bland Joseph, goods manager, 7 Crescent
 Blatch Mrs Eliza, Belmont place, London rd.

- Blyton William, draper, 30 Narrow Bridge st.
 Bodger Wm. grocer, agent for W. & A. Gilbey, wine and spirit mercta. 33 Broad Bridge st.
 Bolton Rob. baker and shopkr. Park st. Fletton
 Bond Robert, com. traveller, London road
 Bonner Charles, shopkeeper, Cobden street
 Bonnett Mrs Eliz. beerhouse, St John's st. North
 Boon George, greengrocer, Milton street
 Boon Joseph, beerhouse, Park street, Fletton
 Booth Bros. coal merta. Gt. Eastern Rly. stn.
 Booth David Henry (Brothers), h. Ipswich.
 Booth Wm. (Bro.), h. Eastwood Notts
 Booth Ingram, grocer, Alma road
 Booth Samuel, grocer and druggist, Grove street, Fletton
 Booth Thos. Ingram, Palmerston rd. Woodston
 Bossett Henry, shoemaker, Wellington lane
 Bottomley Henry, farmer, New England
 Bourne, Mrs Harriet, vict. Wheel, Midgate
 Bousfield Charles, draper, 22 Long causeway
 Bower Joseph (Executors of), coal and corn merchants, Broad Bridge street
 Bowers Mrs Eliz. corn mer. Broad Bridge st.
 Bowland William, victualler, Star, Star lane
 Bradley Mrs Harriet, Westgate
 Bradshaw Mrs Mary Ann, school, New road
 Brainsby Thos. & Son (John Thos.), coach-builders, 10 Long causeway, h. Westgate Brakes Simon, whitesmith, Midgate
 Bright Richard, chemist, 29 Broad Bridge st.
 Brighty Geo. agt. for R. Warwick & Sons, brewers, Priestgate, h. Belmont pl. London rd.
 Bristow George, & Son, auctioneers, Market place, h. Fletton
 Bristow Misses Mary Ann and Jane, milliners,
 &c. Market place
 Bristow Jas. (Geo. & Son), wine & spirit mercht.
 Market place, h. Manor House, Fletton
 Bristow John, blacksmith, Clifton's yard, Narrow street
 Bristow John, painter and tobacconist, 35 Narrow Bridge street
 Brooks Mr Charles, 16 Albion terrace, Fletton
 Brooks Thomas, shopman, Neville place
 Brooks Wm. bootmaker, 31 Narrow Bridge st.
 Brooks William, baker, &c. Westwood street
 Brooksbank Hugh, lay clerk, Monument st.
 Broughton & Wyman, solicitors, 11 Cowgate
 Broughton John (B. & Wyman), Cowgate
 Broughton John Longstaff, painter, 5 New rd.
 Brown, Atter, & Brown, solicitors, 20 Westgate
 Brown Chas. shopkeeper, Cobden street
 Brown Mrs Elizabeth, London road
 Brown Mrs Frances, shopkeeper, St Mary's st.
 Brown Francis (B. Atter, & B.), 20 Westgate
 Brown George, beerhouse, 29 Cowgate
 Brown James, fishmonger, 2 Broad Bridge st.
 Brown John, cattle dealer, 26 New road
 Brown Joseph, beerhouse, Eastgate
 Brown Matt. railway agent & carrier, coal mert.
 tanner, and farmer, Gt. N. yard, h. Priestgate
 Brown Maurice (B. Atter, & B.), 20 Westgate
 Brown Robert, cowkeeper, Wellington lane
 Brown Thomas, cowkeeper, Fengate
 Brown Wm. Francis, beerhouse, Westwood st.
 Brownley James, travelling draper, Neville pl.
 Bruce Mrs Sarah, greengrocer, Crawthorne st.
 Bruden William, verger, 39 Cowgate
 Bruster John, wine and spirit merchant, 8
 Cumbergate
 Buckle & Vergette, solicitors, New Market st.
 Buckle Frank Geo. accountant, &c. St John st.
 Buckle John William (B. & Vergette), h.
 Lincoln road
 Buffam Miss Elizabeth, dressmaker, Albert pl.
 Bull Mrs Catherine, shopkr. St John st. North
 Bull George Charles, reporter, Lincoln rd. East
 Bull John, photographer, City road
 Bull John, shoemaker, St John street North
 Bull William, insurance agent and carrier for Sutton & Co. 10 Cumbergate
 Bullamore Richard, baker & shopkr. City rd.
 Bullen Mrs Mary Ann, beerhouse, City road
 Bullock Mr John Death, Oundle road
 Bunting Wm. farmer, &c. Cromwell road
 Burchby John Wright, auctioneer and valuer,
 3 Boroughbury
 Burgess Thomas, builder and machine maker,
 King's Head yard, Broad street
 Burlingham Daniel Catlin, watchmaker, &c.
 Market place, and Lynn
 Burton Mr James, 6 City terrace, New road
 Burton John, beerhouse, Eastgate
 Burton John Randall, house surgeon and secretary, Infirmary
 Burton William, saddler, Long causeway
 Butler Thomas, beerhouse, St Mary's street
 CADGE & COLMAN, corn millers & merchants,
 Great Eastern Station yard
 Calthrop Rev. Francis James, M.A. curate of St Mary's, 26 New road
 Campion John, potato dealer, Chapel street
 Candell Edward, butcher, Bright street
 Candell Henry, beerhouse, Bright street
 Canwell Mr George, Woodstone
 Cape Rev. William, M.A. hon. canon and rector of Glinton, Minster precincts
 Carnell Mrs Rebecca, currier, &c. Midgate
 Carpenter Mr John, Lincoln road East
 Carr Mrs Eliza, 5 Crescent
 Carr Rev. John Henry (United Methodist),
 Boroughbury
 Carritt Mrs Annie, lodg. 4 Albion ter. Fletton
 Carter Wm. ironmr. (Cliffe & Co.), h. St Neots
 Carter William, vict. Royal Oak, Fletton road
 Casbon John, nursery and seedsman, Millfield
 Caswell Mrs Sarah, school, Cromwell road
 Caster George, currier and leather merchant,
 Broad Bridge street, h. London road
 Cattel Jas. Esq. West End Cottage, Thorpe rd.
 Cave Mrs Mary Ann, vict. Wellington, St John street North
 Chadwell Thomas, printer and bookseller, 9
 Narrow Bridge street
 Champion Mr William, Cromwell road
 Chandler Mrs Sarah, shopkeeper, New England
 Chapman Mrs Mary, dressmaker, Gladstone st.
 Chapman Wm. wheelwright, Wellington lane,
 h. 36 New road
 Chappell George, book-keeper, North street
 Chappell James, tailor & draper, 52 Narrow st.
 Charlton Mrs Ann, milliner, Cowgate
 Chattle William, builder, Hampden road
 Cherrington Jas. jobber, City terrace, New rd.
 Cherrington Philip Whisker, draper, Long causeway, h. 14 New road
 Cherrington Richard, cattle salesman, Dogathorpe road
 Cheshire Miss Eliza, Cowgate
 Christian Robt. bootmaker, 31 Long causeway
 Christian Robt. jun. bootmaker, 15 Narrow st.
 Clapham Mrs Sarah, Lincoln road
 Clarabut Edward, coml. travel. 5 Cromwell rd.

Clarabut William, silk mercer, draper, laceman, agent to the Patent Metallic Coffin Co. 51 Narrow Bridge street
 Claridge Mr William, 5 West View terrace
 Clarke Joseph Slatterie, proprietor and publisher of the Peterborough Advertiser, bookseller, &c. Mkt. pl. h. Oak ter. London road
 Clarke Wm. vict. White Horse, 3 Cumbergate
 Claypole John, music and pianoforte dealer, 24 Narrow Bridge street
 Cliffe & Carter, ironmongers, haberdashers, &c. Westgate and St Neots
 Cliffe William (Cliffe & Carter), Westgate
 Clift Mr Thomas, Miriam terrace, Eastfield rd.
 Close William, vict. Blue Bell, 20 Cowgate
 Coates Geo. vict. Peterborough Hotel, Cowgate
 Cockshot Thos. com. trav. St Mark's Villas
 Coe John, manager, 3 St John street
 Colam Matthias, chemist and druggist, New road.
 Cole Edgar, railway clerk, Gladstone street
 Cole James, lodgekeeper, Cemetery
 Collier Mrs Sarah, vict. Falcon, Cowgate
 Collin Miss Thomasina, mistress, British School (infants), Westgate
 Collings Henry, butcher, 34 Long causeway
 Collingwood Mr William, 21 Westgate
 Colls Charles, painter, Midgate
 Colman Samuel Crackenthorp, corn miller and mer. (Cadge & C.) h. 7 Broad Bridge st.
 Comisiong Joseph Watson, sur. Boroughbury
 Congreve Mrs Sarah, Neville place
 Cook Mrs Ann, shopkeeper, Cromwell road
 Cook Thomas, shopkeeper, 21 Wood street
 Cooke Everett Parker, shopman, St George's terrace
 Cooke John, railway clerk, Millfield, New rd.
 Cooke Lewis, tinner, &c. St John street north
 Co-operative Stores (Industrial), bakers and grocers, New England; Wm. Smith, manager
 Copley Joseph, bank cashier, London road
 Corble John, station inspector, Gt. N. Rly.
 Core John, vict. Angel Hotel, family and com. and posting house, 47 Narrow Bridge street
 Cornall Mrs Rebecca, currier, &c. Midgate
 Cortching John, cattle dealer, Thorpe road
 Cotton Mrs Eliza, Cromwell road
 Cotton Richard, shoemaker, Cemetery road
 Coulson George, clerk, Cromwell road
 Craddock Chas. Edwd. vict. Wentworth Family & Commercial Hotel, Wentworth street
 Craig James M'Callum, tailor, draper, and outfitter, Market place
 Craig Joseph Brown, auctioneer, New road
 Crane Miss Dora, Spring Villas, Fletton
 Crawley William, whipmaker, Priestgate
 Crick Charles, corn merchant, Priestgate
 Crisp Mrs Catherine, 10 New road
 Criss John, shoe and clothes dealer, Westgate
 Culpin Henry, tailor, Monument street
 Cunningham John Allison, wine and spirit merchant, Long causeway
 Cunningham William, beerhouse, Midgate
 Curtis John, shoemaker, Albert place
 Cupit Edward, vict. Locomotive, New England
 Cutlack Charles, brewer, maltster, wine and spirit merchant, Phoenix Brewery, Priestgate, and Yaxley
 DANCE Mrs Catherine, Lincoln road
 Dandy Robert l'On, grocer and provision merchant, 4 Church street, h. Priestgate

Dart Rev. John, M.A. vice-principal St Peter's Training College
 Davidson Robert, surv. of taxes, h. 4 Broad st.
 Davis Abraham, blacksmith, New road
 Davis Christopher, butcher, Midgate
 Davis Edward, butcher and vict. Britannia, Eastgate
 Davis Thomas, j. blacksmith, Swan's place
 Davys Ven. Owen, M.A. Archdeacon of Northampton, Minster precincts
 Dawson Jph. baker & pork butcher, St Mary's st.
 Dawson Mrs Mary, ropemaker, St John's st.
 Day Zachariah, beerhouse, City road
 Daymond Rev. Charles, M.A. principal St Peter's Training College
 Deacon & Wilkins, solicitors, Cross street
 Deacon Leonard John (D. & Wilkins), h. 7 Priestgate
 Deakins Mrs Mary, straw hat mkr. Chapel st.
 Deakins William, tailor, Chapel street
 Dean Mr John, Westgate cottage
 Dean John Thomas, horsebreaker and coal dealer, 3 Albert place
 Decamp Henry, shoemaker, Cumbergate
 Dennis Mrs Isabella, 11 New road
 Dennison Benj. master British School, New rd.
 Desbrow John, vict. Boy's Head, Woodstone
 Dickens John, stonemason, Eastfield road
 Dickinson Thomas, baker and flour dealer, Long causeway
 Dimbleby Mrs Caroline, vict. Royal Arms, Broad Bridge street
 Dixon John, shopman, Lincoln road
 Dobbs John, tinner and brazier, Westgate
 Dodd Arthur, chief clerk, G.N.R. Neville pl.
 Dodson Henry, farmer, Eastgate
 Dodson Thomas, butcher, Midgate
 Dold Leopold, wtchmkr. 26 Narrow Bridge st.
 Done John, railway guard, Neville place
 Doubleday Mrs Ann, London road
 Dow William, beerhouse, 4 New road
 Drake Mr John, 29 New road
 Drewery William, beerhouse, City road
 Duddington Mrs Ann, school, Lincoln road
 Dudley James, beerhouse, Whalley street
 Dunn Horace Chas. coml. travllr. Cromwell rd.
 Durham Wm. George, railway clk. Cobden st.
 EAGLE Harold, farmer, Fengate
 Earle Geo. shopkeeper, 23 Westwood street
 Eastwood Jesse, railway clerk, Millfield
 Eatherley Wm. ironmgr. 42 Narrow Bridge st.
 Eayrs John, whitesmith & bellhanger, Broad street
 Eddif Mr Charles, Westgate
 Edmonds George, wine and spirit merchant, 5 Narrow Bridge street
 Edmunds Mrs Charlotte, Westgate
 Edwardes Charles Bidwell, land-agent, Minster precincts
 Edwards Amos, bookselr. &c. 5 Long causeway
 Edwards Frederick Rea, sack contractor, New Priestgate
 Edwards Geo. basketmkr. &c. St Mary's st.
 Edwards Mr John R. Albert place
 Edwards Mrs Mary, 6 Crescent
 Edwards Mrs Sarah Frances, shopkr. Millfield
 Edwards William, librarian, Literary Institution, h. Albert place
 Egboro James, greengrocer, Westgate
 Elkington Chrstr. j. wheelwrt. Eastfield rd.
 Ellis & Everard, coal merts. Midland Railway

Ellis James Aldgate, artist, Neville place
 Ellis Mr John, Saxon villas, London road
 Ellis Joseph, tailor, Eastgate
 Ellis Mr Joseph, Dogthorpe road
 Elmor Enos, vict. Spittal Bridge, Westwood st.
 Elsey Henry, draper, Market pl. h. Cobden st.
 English Brothers, timber merchants, Great Eastern Station yard
 English Edward, clerk, 14 Broad Bridge st.
 English Miss Eliza, dressmkr. &c. 25 Cowgate
 English Henry Hempden, J.P. (Bros.) Westwood House
 English John, parish clerk, Market place
 English Thomas, painter, Cromwell road
 Eveleigh Thomas, goods manager Great Eastern Railway, London road
 Everard Edward, agent for Ellis & Everard, Grosvenor Villas, Lincoln road
 Ewart James William, grocer, 10 Narrow st.
 Ewart Mr Thomas, Cromwell road
 Exley Chas. wine and spirit merchant, 2 Narrow street, h. Wisbeach
 Exton Joseph, shoemaker, Wellington lane
 Eyre Elijah, & Co. brewers and spirit merchants, North street, and Lynn
 Eyre Joseph, tailor, draper, and outfitter, 40 Narrow Bridge street

 FAIRWEATHER John, coal merchant, Bridge pl.
 Feast Robert, beerhouse, Eastgate
 Fendelow John, manager, Westwood street
 Fisher Albert Townsend, agent for Allsopp & Co. brewers, 2 Long causeway, h. Grosvenor Villas, Lincoln road
 Flinton Mr Wm. 5 Alma terrace, London rd.
 Flowers Miss Hannah, shopkr. New England
 Flowers William, potato dealer, Eastgate
 Fogg Mr Edward, Lincoln road east
 Foote Chas. cabt. mkr. & paprhngt. 5 Market pl.
 Foister George Beaumont, draper (Gollings & F.), 13 Narrow street
 Fox John, auctnr. & survr. 14 Narrow Bridge st.
 Freear Mrs Mary, vict. Golden Lion, New Fletton
 Freeman Mrs Sarah, Priestgate
 Friaby Mr George, Providential place
 Fuller Rev. Walter (Wesleyan), 36 New road
 Fuller William Reeves, vict. Crown Railway Hotel, Fletton road
 Furnace Robert, joiner, Crawthorne street
 Furnace Mrs Sarah, cab proprietor, South pl.

 GACHES George Fitzroy Dean, solicitor, Minster gateway, h. North street
 Gaches Henry Cecil, B.A. Mansion House
 Gaches William Daniel, solicitor, New road, h. Mansion House
 Gammon Miss Mary Louisa, National school-mistress, Millfield
 Gardener William, blacksmith, St Mary's st.
 Garner Mrs Lucy, London road
 Garratt Mrs Alice, beerhouse, New England
 Garrett Mrs Elizabeth, Dogthorpe road
 Garrett Mr Paul, Spring Villas, Fletton
 Gates Henry Pearson, J.P. secretary to the bishop and registrar of the diocese, Minster precincts; h. The Vineyard
 Gates Mrs Uranie, teacher of French and German, 28 New Road
 Gates William, post-office clerk, 28 New road
 Gaunt George, butcher, 28 Long causeway
 Gaunt Wm. tailor & drpr. 56 Narrow Bridge st.

Genn George, grocer, New road
 Genn Robert, coal agent, Swan's place
 Gibbe Miss Anne, mist. Brit. sch. New Fletton
 Gibbs Francis, poulterer and shopkeeper, 27 Long causeway
 Gibbs James Reed, register office, 13 North st.
 Gibson Mrs Margt. school, South st. Fletton
 Gifford Wm. sadr. Cumbergate, h. 42 New rd.
 Gilbert John, asphalt manufacturer and refreshment-rooms, 3 Long causeway
 Gilby John, beerhouse, Millfield
 Giles Mr Joseph, 7 City terrace, New road
 Gillings George, hairdresser and tobacconist, 28 Cowgate; h. Providential place
 Glew Alfred, chemist, 50 Narrow Bridge st.
 Glitheroe Henry, taxidermist, St John street
 Goddard Edw. grocer, 41 Narrow Bridge st.
 Godfrey Thomas, coal agent, London road
 Gogay Joseph, shopkeeper, 17 Westgate
 Gollings & Foster, drapers and upholsterers, 13 Narrow street
 Gollings Joseph (G. & Foster), h. Woodstone
 Goodacre John, harness maker, Milton street
 Goodacre John William, commer. traveller, 4 West view terrace, Lincoln road
 Goodman Wm. nurseryman & florist, New rd.
 Goodwin Mr Charles, Woodston
 Goodwin Geo. furniture dlr. Broad Bridge st.
 Goodyer Fred. baker & shopkeeper, 38 New rd.
 Goodyer Wm. grocer & dealer in wines, Midgate
 Gosnold Misses Emma & Clara, school, New Priestgate
 Gosnold Mr George, New Priestgate
 Gossford Mrs Mary Elizabeth, dressmaker, &c., Chapel place
 Goude George, carp. & builder, Wellington la.
 Graves John, solicitor (Rutland & G.), h. Fletton Springs
 Gray Alfred Wm. Post-O. clerk, Cromwell rd.
 Gray George, vict. Black Swan, 38 Narrow Bridge street
Great Northern Hotel, Samuel Moore, manager
 Green Miss Mary Ann, dressmkr. 22 Wood st.
 Green Henry, coal merchant, 10 Crescent
 Green John Henry, ironmonger, haberdasher, &c. Long causeway; h. Minster precincts
 Green Thomas, baker, Oundle road
 Green William, baker, Millfield
 Green Wm. commercial traveller, Lincoln rd.
 Greenlay Richard, master Union Workhouse
 Greenwood George, coal dlr. 29 Westwood st.
 Gregory John Wm. nailmaker, Albert place
 Gregory Samuel, grocer, Oundle road
 Gresswell John William, vet. sur. Westgate
 Griffin Luke, railway clerk, 10 Albion terrace, New Fletton

 HALL Miss Elizabeth Laura Sinclair, school, Monument street
 Hall Mrs Fanny, beerhouse, Oundle road
 Hall Mrs Harriet, shopkeeper, Westwood st.
 Hall Mrs Mary, dressmaker, &c. St John st. N.
 Hall Mrs Susan Frances, lodgings, 13 Cowgate
 Hall Edwin Henry, pork butcher, City road
 Hall Henry James, manager, Eastfield
 Hall John, baker & confec. 40 Broad Bridge st.
 Hall William, beerhouse, City road
 Hamberstone Hy. blacksmith, Woodstone
 Hamblin Edward Townsend, printer, book-seller, and stationer, 6 Narrow street
 Hamer Henry, baker & shopkr. St John st. N.
 Hammerton John, herbalist, Millfield

Hammond Joseph, registrar of marriages, and collector to the guardians, New road
 Hanbury Rich. Savill, M.D. 4 Broad Bridge st.
 Hancock John, beerhouse, St John st. north
 Hardy Miss Frances, milliner, &c. Priestgate
 Hardy Jeremiah, shoemaker, Millfield
 Hardy Mr John, Cromwell road
 Hardy Robert, assistant overseer, Spring Villas
 Hardy Robert, tinner, &c. Priestgate
 Harker Jabez, grocer, City road
 Harley John, lay clerk, Millfield
 Harris William, grocer, 45 Broad Bridge street
 Harrison George, corn merchant and maltster, Church street; h. 8 St Mark's Villas
 Harrison Mrs Mary Jane, Lincoln road
 Harrison Mrs Sarah, dressmaker, &c. Dogsthorpe road
 Harrison Stephen, shopkeeper, Cumbergate
 Harrison Thos. tailor & town crier, Swan's pl.
 Harrison Thomas Wm. cashier, Cromwell rd.
 Hart Mark William, grocer, and agent to W. & A. Gilbey, Priestgate
 Hart Thomas, shopkeeper, Oundle road
 Hartley George, manager Birmingham Waggon Coy. Great Eastern Cottages, Fletton
 Hartliffe Joseph, clerk, London road
 Hasdell Mrs Ann, straw-hat maker, Albert pl.
 Hayes & Son, coachbuilders, Chapel street
 Hayes Miss Clara Elizabeth, dressmaker, &c. Monument street
 Hayes Henry (Hayes & Son), h. New road
 Hayes John (Hayes & Son), h. Stamford
 Head Misses Sarah & Harriet, sch. Westgate
 Heald George, Midland station-master Great Northern Railway; h. Gladstone street.
 Heanley Marshall, chemist and soda-water manufacturer, Market place
 Heanley Mr William, 10 North street
 Heath William, furniture broker, Cowgate
 Heeley Joseph, foreman, Boroughbury
 Hegney Miss Janet, mist. Catho. sch. Queen st.
 Hemment Wm. & John, boatbuilders, Broad st.
 Hemment Jno. (Wm. & Jno.); h. Brd. Bridge st.
 Hemment William (Wm. & Jno.); h. Woodston
 Hemment Mrs Susan, lodgings, 5 North street
 Henson Reuben, cowkeeper, Broomfield
 Henson Mr Thomas, Cromwell road
 Henson Wm. china, glass, &c. dealer, Eastgate
 Herbert John Arthur, stay mft. (King & H.); h. Yazley
 Hill Mr Benjamin, Whitesed street
 Hill Chas. steam-plough manager, Lincoln rd.
 Hill Charles Cooper, clerk, 4 Crescent
 Hill Charles Squires, shopkeeper, 6 Westgate
 Hill Mrs Sarah, 13 New road
 Hill Stephen, baker and shopkpr. Cemetery end
 Hill Thomas, wine and spirit, coal, corn, and timber mercht. Bridge wharf, h. Woodston
 Hill Walter, building surveyor, New Priestgate
 Hill Rev. William, M.A. vicar St John's and Surrogate, Priestgate
 Hillam Mrs Eliz. vict. Queen's Head, Broad st.
 Hillam John, beerhouse, St Leonard's street
 Hinch Miss Elizab. dressmkr. &c. St Mary's st.
 Hiscox Brothers, timber and slate merchants, Bridge House yard
 Hiscox Francis (H. Bros.), h. Broad Bridge st.
 Hobbs Edwin Rodhouse, confectioner and eating-house, 28 Narrow Bridge street
 Hobbs John, timber buyer, Westgate
 Hobbs William, clerk, Cromwell road
 Hodson Russell, postmaster, Long causeway

Holden Geo. Wm. outfitter, &c. 17 Narrow st.
 Holdich Benjamin, cabinetmkr. 12 Cumbergate
 Holdich Benjamin Edward, cabinetmaker and furniture broker, 37 Cowgate
 Holdich Frederick, farmer, Fengate
 Holdich Mr James, 34 New road
 Holdich Mr Thos. White, 13 Albion ter. Fletton
 Holdich White, corn miller, New road
 Holleywell Mrs Ann Eliza, gunmaker and tobacconist, Wentworth street
 Hollis William Laxton, blacksmith and vict. Rose and Crown, Broad street
 Holmes John, foundry manager, 2 Cobden terrace, New road
 Hooke Matt. cabinetmkr. 44 Broad Bridge st.
 Hopkins Rich. vict. Fox and Hounds, Eastgate
 Hornsey Thos. C. corn merchant, Boroughbury
 Hortor Mrs Charlotte, hairdr. 54 Narrow Br. st.
 Hortor James, hairdresser, 30 Long causeway
 House John, nursery and seedsman, confctr. and vict. Vine, and refreshmt. rooms, 9 Church st.
 Howard Frederick, shoemaker, Lincoln road
 Howell John Cawthorn, draper (Sharp & H.); h. 12 Albion terrace, New Fletton
 Howes Henry, beerhouse, City road
 Hubbard William, basketmaker, Westgate
 Hudson Mrs Elizabeth, Boroughbury
 Hull Geo. shopkpr. and beerhse. New England
 Hull John, cattle salesman, South place
 Hunns Jno. And. watchmkr. 21 Narrow Br. st.
 Hunt George, station-master, Great Northern
 Hunt Wm. commercial traveller, Cromwell rd.
 Hunt William, vict. Locomotive, Albert place
 Hunting George & Joseph, coal merchants, Great Eastern Railway station
 Hunting George (G. & J.), and vict. Swiss Cottage, Broad street, New Fletton
 Hunting Joseph (G. & J.), and tobacconist, 20 Narrow Bridge street
 Hurrey Peake George, shopkeeper, Millfield
 Hurst Jas. superintendent of police, Milton st.
 Hutchinson Joseph, draper, 4 Cowgate

IND, COOPE, & Co. brewers, &c. Long causeway; William D. Nichols, agent
 Ireland Mr George, South street, Fletton
 Ireland Miss Julia Ann, Alma place, Fletton
 Ireland William, carpenter, Cobden street
 Irens John Richard, cattle dlr. Dogsthorpe rd.
 Ireson Mr Charles, Dogsthorpe road
 Isley, George Jas. vict. Ostrich, Brook street

JACKS John, pork butcher, Boroughbury
 Jackson Rev. Edgar Slanway (Indpt.) Genevater.
 Jackson Edward, vict. Windmill, Millfield
 Jackson Edward, blacksmith, City road
 Jackson Mr James Thornton, 8 Albion terrace, New Fletton
 Jackson Thomas, 18 Nelson street
 Jackson Thomas, butcher, Milton square
 Jackson William Thomas, fishmonger and beerhouse, Wellington lane
 Jakes Alfred Arthur, fishmgr. 8 Long causeway
 Jakes John, auctioneer and vict. Salmon and Compasses, Long causeway
 Jakes John Frederick, plumber, Cross street
 Jamblin Mr John, London road
 Jamson Samuel, shopkeeper, Woodstone
 Jarman Robert Brown, shopkpr. St Mary's st.
 Jauncey George, cutler, 25 Broad street
 Jaye Henry, manager, Boroughbury
 Jefferson Thomas, shoedealet, Cowgate

Jelley Miss Elizabeth Rebecca, London road
 Jelley Henry Herbert, commercial traveller,
 Monument street
 Johnson George Wilkinson, lime and coal merchant, Lincoln road east
 Johnson Mr John, Priestgate
 Johnson John, muffin-maker, Cromwell road
 Johnson Mr Thomas, Cromwell road
 Jolly Mrs Sarah, beerhouse, Midgate
 Jones Mrs Maria, shopkeeper, City road
 Jones David Darby, assistant master of King's school, South place
 Jones Richard, farmer, Woodston
 Jones Mr William, Oundle road, Woodston
 Julian Mr Charles, Allen's lane
 Julyan George Langham, tailor and outfitter,
 57 Narrow Bridge street

KEECH John, hairdresser and tobacconist, 3
 Broad Bridge street
 Keens Miss Ann, New road
 Keaton Haydn, organist, Minster precincts
 Kenyon James, foreman, Oundle road
 Kenyon John, locomotive supt. Woodstone
 Kerrey John, beerhouse, Cemetery road
 Ketcher Mrs Ann, Eastfield road
 Key William, ropemaker and seedsman, 17
 Long causeway, h. 3 Westwood Street
 Kind Edward, cabinetmaker, Cowgate
 King & Herbert, stay manufacturers, North st.
 King Hy. (King & Herbert), h. Fletton spring
 King Mr John, 9 Albion terrace, Fletton
 King Wm. beerho. and shopkr. Wellington le.
 King William, vict. Church street
 King William, farmer, Fengate
 King Miss Harriet, teacher National School
 (St John's), Chapel place
 King's Grammar school, Minster precincts;
 Rev. Edward Bower Whyley, M.A. principal
 Kirby John Wilsom, inspector of works Great Northern Railway
 Kneeshaw, Jabez, draper, &c. Narrow street
 Knighton Mr Isaac, London road

LAMMIE John, travelling draper, 25 New road
 Langley John, builder, Westgate
 Larratt Robert Webster, corn, flour, &c. merchant, Bridge House, Broad Bridge street
 Laughton George, vict. Ferry Boat, Woodston
 Lawson Jph. baker & shopkr. Bridge pl. Fletton
 Lawton John, shoemaker, Westwood street
 Lawton W. Hollis, vict. Rose & Crown, Broad st.
 Layton Jas. Cathedral sexton, Minster precincts
 Layton Jas. jun. assist. sexton, Minster precincts
 Lazenby J. W. vict. Steam-Engine, Cromwell rd.
 Leach Reuben (& Son), and auctioneer, 30
 Broad Bridge street
 Leach William & Son, general dealers, 30
 Broad Bridge street
 Leach Immer, general dealer, Brook street
 Leader Sam. Rouning, builder, Monument st.
 Lee Henry, coal dealer and beerhouse, Millfield
 Leigh Geo. Wm. bootmkr. 4 Narrow Bridge st.
 Leighton Daniel, coml. trav. St Leonard's st.
 Letall Benjn. vict. Peacock, London rd. Fletton
 Lewin George, butcher, 10 Church street
 Lewis Henry, blacksmith, Monument street
 Ley John, greengrocer, &c. Cowgate
 Life Thomas, Esq. J.P. Mansion House
 Lill Thomas, clerk, Cromwell road
 Lilley Edwin John, auctioneer, Lincoln rd. E.
 Limbach William, pork butcher, 33 Narrow st.

Lines Miss Elizabeth, mistress National School
 (St Mary's), St John street north
 Little Mr George Paul, 33 New road
 Little Henry, farmer, Boroughbury
 Little William, coal merchant, Great Northern Rail. station; h. 1 Albion ter. Lincoln road
 Loal Hy. Wells, chemist, 46 Narrow Bridge st.
 Louder John, shoemaker, Westgate
 Louder Robert, shoemaker, Woodston
 Louder William, shoemaker, 46 Wood street
 Lound John Copeman, saddler, 55 Narrow
 Bridge street, h. Queen street
 Lucas Mrs Ann, lodgings, 3 North street
 Lyon Mrs Hannah Mary, Cromwell road.

MACHIN Thomas, builder, Monument street
 Mackinder Richard & Son (Joseph), veterinary surgeons, 2 North street
 Mackley Mrs Mary, beerhouse, 25 Westgate
 Maddocks John, shoemaker, Millfield
 Maddocks & Page, brewers, Peterborough Brewery
 Maddocks John Frederick (M. & P.); h. St Leonard's street
 Magee Right Rev. Wm. Connor, D.D. & D.C.L.
 Lord Bishop of Peterborough, The Palace
 Maltby Robert, baker, &c. Milton street
 Manley Patrick, trav. tea dealer, 32 New road
 Mann Mr George, South view, Fletton
 Mann George, butcher, Wood street
 Mann George Thomas, butcher, St Mary's st.
 Mann James, shoemaker, St Leonard's street
 Manning Geo. manager, Cross Keys, Narrow st.
 Mansell Mrs. Dean's court, Minster precincts
 Manson Cornelius, watchmr. 35 L. causeway
 Manton Edward Thomas, brewer's manager,
 Ashley villas, Boroughbury
 Manton Mrs Elizabeth, Lincoln road east
 Maples Mr Thomas, Cromwell road
 March Miss Mary Ann, dressmaker, Eastgate
 March Thomas, shoemaker, Eastgate
 Marshall Miss Lucy, 1 North street
 Markham Cornelius Aubrey, currier, St John st.
 Markham Cornelius Aubrey, jun. pork butcher,
 Market place
 Markland Mark, locomotive supt. Gladstone st.
 Markling William, basketmaker, &c. Clifton's yard, Narrow street
 Marlier Edouard, hairdresser, perfumer, and
 Berlin wool repository, 25 Long causeway
 Marriott John George, baker and confectioner,
 33 Long causeway and Bridge street
 Marriott Mr Joseph, Chapel street
 Marshall Mrs Martha Eliza, 5 Albion terrace,
 Lincoln road
 Marshall Thomas Casson, pawnbroker, &c.
 Wentworth street
 Martin Jph. carpenter and builder, Reform st.
 Martin Major Robert C. superintending recruiting officer, 9 North street
 Martin Mrs Mildred, 5 Nelson street
 Mason John, baker and shopkeeper, Eastgate
 Mason William, cabinetmaker, 7 Cowgate
 Matthew Mrs Mary Jane, New Priestgate
 Matley Miss Ruth, Priestgate
 Maw John, goods manager, L. & N.W. Rly.
 Maxwell Felix, prof. cricketer, Cromwell rd.
 Mayo Samuel, manager National Provincial Bank, 11 Narrow Bridge street
 Mays Thos. saddler and beerhouse, Albert pl.
 M'Kenzie John, trav. draper, South place
 M'Kerrow Charles, trav. draper, 27 Westgate
 M'Tier Rev. Albert Hy. (Weasleyan) 11 Crescent

Merrikin Mrs Cassandra, New Priestgate
 Middleton John Hy. drill instructor, Neville pl.
 Midwell Mr William, Chapel street
 Midland Banking Company, Church street ;
 John Flowers Bentley, manager
 Miles Miss Eliz. dressmkr. &c. Palmerston rd.
 Miller John, clothier, Midgate
 Miller John, jun. (j) tailor, Midgate
 Mills George, district superintendent Prudential Insurance Company, Cromwell road
 Mills Thomas, Esq. The Tower, Fletton
 Mitchell Miss Margaret, mistress National School (Infants, St Paul's), Millfield
 Mitchell Thos. Brown, com. trav. Eastfield rd.
 Mobb John, shoemaker, Broad Bridge street
 Mobbs Mr David, Woodston
 Molaher John, chimney sweeper, City road
 Moon William James, manager Gasworks,
 Geneva terrace, Boroughbury
 Moore John Whitehead, farmer, Millfield
 Moore Matthew, shopman, Brook street
 Moore Samuel, manager, Great Northern Hotel
 Morley Frederick, manager, Broad Bridge st.
 Morley John Limber, pawnbroker, 43 Broad
 Bridge street
 Morley Timothy, beerhouse, Cumbergate
 Morling Geo. vict. Saracen's Head, Broad st.
 Morris Mrs Alice, Lincoln road east
 Morris Miss Mary Ann, drpr. Broad Bridge st.
 Morris Mr Thomas, Lincoln road east
 Morris Mr Thomas, jun. 5 St Paul's terrace,
 Lincoln road
 Morton George, gardener, Westgate
 Muir Albert James, clerk, Cromwell road
 Muir Mr Thomas, Cromwell road
 Mullett John, confectioner, &c. 19 Midgate
 Mumford & Townsend, architects and surveyors, Market place
 Mumford Charles (M. & T.) ; house, Wisbeach
 Murdoch Wm. trav. draper, Cromwell road
 Murray Rev. Andrew (Independent) Westgate

NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK, Narrow street ;
 Samuel Mayo, manager
 Neale Mrs Elizabeth, shopkeeper, Millfield
 Neale Geo. pianoforte and music dealer, and baby linen warehouse, Narrow Bridge st.
 Neale Jas. carriage foreman Gt. N. Rly. station
 Neale Thos. baker and shopkpr. St John's st. N.
 Nelson William, beerhouse, St Leonard's street
 Newbon John, wheelwright, Boroughbury
 Newbon Mrs Mary, Swan's place
 Newman Mrs Ann, lodgings, 11 Nelson street
 Newton Mrs Ann, miller & baker, Fengate
 Newton Edward, editor Peterborough Adver- tiser, 1 Albion terrace, Fletton
 Newton John, blacksmith, Fitzwilliam street
 Newton Jph. refrunt. rooms, Broad Bridge st.
 Nicholls Wm. strkpr. G. N. Ry. Dogthorpe rd.
 Nichols & Co. wine & spirit merts. L. causeway
 Nichols Mr George, London road
 Nichols Wm. DL (N. & Co.), Long causeway
 Nicholson Mrs. Thorpe road
 Nightingale Henry, fancy repository, 16
 Narrow Bridge street
 Nixon, Mr John Parr, London road
 Noble Fredk. & Son, coachbuilders, Cowgate
 Noble Frederick, butcher, Russell street
 Noble Fredk. Ed. lay clk. & extn. St John st.
 Noble George (Fk. and Son); h. Cromwell rd.
 Noble John, plumber and vict. Horse and
 Jockey, City road

Noble Mrs Rebecca, 2 New road
 Noble Richd. stonemsn. Cross st. New Fletton
 North Leonard, market gardener, Star lane
 Norton James, station-matr. Gt. Eastern Ry.
 Nurse Mrs Hannah, shopkeeper, 24 Westgate

O'CONNOR Bernard, marine store dealer,
 Monument street
 Odlin Mrs Juliana, London road
 Offen Saml. Danl. suprvsr. of excise, 27 New rd.
 Ogden Mrs Frances Eliz. lodgns. 17 Nelson st.
 Ogilvie Charles Edward Walker, civil engineer
 G. N. Ry. Co. 7 Crescent
 Oldham Mrs Mary, London road
 Oliver Charles, coml. traveller, Cromwell rd.

PAGE Miss Ellen, teacher National school
 (St John's), Chapel place
 Page Sidney John, brewer (Madocks & P.) ; h.
 St Leonard's street
 Paley Wm. M.D. J.P. physician, Thorpe road
 Palmer Mr Augustus, London road
 Palmer Bridgfoot, vict. Boat, Broad Bridge st.
 Palmer Benjamin, vict. Crown, New England
 Palmer James Edwin, dentist, Priestgate
 Palmer John, shoemaker, Gladstone street
 Palmer Wm. vict. Pony's Head, St Leonard's st.
 Palmer Wm. vict. City Hotel, 1 Broad Bridge st.
 Pank Mrs Cath. 2 West View ter. Lincoln road
 Parker John, shoemaker, Broad street
 Parker Robert, hairdrsr. & tobacconist, Midgt.
 Parnell John, chemist, 8 Market place
 Parnell Mrs My. El. vict. Cherrytree, Oundle rd.
 Parnell Mr William, Oundle road
 Parnell Wm. Henry, saddler, Narrow street
 Parr Thomas, sergeant-major, London road
 Parrish Samuel, shopkeeper, Westwood street
 Parsons Abraham, shoemaker, Eastgate
 Parsons Peter, shoemkr. St John st. north
 Patston Miss Catherine, New road
 Patston Matthew, gardener and seedsman, St
 John street north
 Paviour Whatley, wchmkr. 8 Narrow Bridge st.
 Payling, Mrs Sarah, shopkeeper, Westwood st.
 Peach Peter, bldr. & contrtr. Boroughbury
 Peach Mr Samuel, London road
 Peach Wm. coaldlr. & beerhouse, Albert pl.
 Peake John, joiner, Alma road
 Peaks Charles Philip, vict. Spread Eagle, 39
 Broad street
 Peaks William Shepherd, vict. Wagon and Horses, 33 Narrow street
 Pearce Mrs Ann Shepherd, South place
 Pearce Mrs Harriet, Priestgate
 Pears Mr James, 1 Crescent
 Pears Mrs Mary Elizabeth, Eastfield road
 Pearson John Hudspith, chemist, Narrow
 Bridge street
 Pearson Josiah, tailor, Chapel street
 Pearson William, station inspr. G. E. Ry. Stn.
 Pentelow William, draper, 34 Narrow street
 Pentney Miss Hephzibah, register office, 18
 Narrow street
 Pentney Mr William, Cromwell road
 Pentney William, grocer, 31 Broad Bridge st.,
 h. Lime-tree House, London road
 Pentney William Henry, bookseller, 18 Narrow
 Bridge street
 Pepper John, shopkeeper, 15 Westgate
 Pepper Thos. vict. Fitzwilliam Arms, Wood st.
 Percival & Son, solicitors, Minster precincts
 Percival Mrs Dean's court, Minster precincts

Percival Andrew (& Son), Minster precincts
Percival John Andrew (Percival & Son), Minster precincts

Percival Jph. crn. & flr. dlr. 16 Long causeway
Perkins Levi, vict. Wheat Sheaf, Midgate

Perkins Thos. wchmkr. 49 Narrow Bridge st.

Petchey Edward, vict. Anchor, City road

Peterborough Advertiser (Joseph Slatterie
Clarke, proprietor & publisher), Market pl.

Peterborough and Huntingdonshire Standard
(Robert Clayton Snape, editor), Cross street

Pheasant Joseph, bootmkr. 9 Long causeway

Phillips Mrs Sarah, butcher and vict. Eight Bells, Millfield

Phillips Mrs Susan, 9 Cumbergate

Phipps & Ambrose, glass, china, &c. dealers,
23 Narrow street

Phipps Miss Eleanor (P. & A.), Narrow Bridgest.

Pilcher Walter, com. traveller, London road

Pine John, shopkeeper, Gladstone street

Pitts John, watchmaker, Broad street

Plant Mr John, Westwood street

Plant Robert, beerhouse, Hampden road

Plumtree John, & Son (John Thos.) grocers,
&c. 24 Long causeway and Lincoln

Poles Mr Samuel, London road

Pope Edward, foreman, Queen street

Popp George, pork butcher, Whalley street

Popplewell Ed. B. schmstr. Union Workhouse

Porteous Joseph, trav. tea dlr. 11 Market pl.

Porter Mrs Anne, 1 Souvenir ter. New road

Porter Wm. carpenter, &c. Gladstone street

Potts Charles, clerk, Lincoln road

Preston Mrs Elizabeth, Cromwell road

Preston Wm. governor of gaol, Thorpe road

Price George, traveller, New road

Provost Mrs Ann, New road

QUINCEY Miss Sarah, dressmaker, 16 Nelson st.

Quincey Christmas, nrtry. & seedsman, Market place

Quincey Edwin, grocer & jobber, Cromwell rd.

RAINER Rosalia Haworth, agent for Chaplin &
Horne, h. Spring villas, Fletton

Ranby Low Ths. vict. Talbot, 29 Long causeway

Randall Henry, brewer's traveller, Cemetery rd.

Rands Mrs Sarah, dressmaker, New road

Rands David, clothes dealer, City road

Rands Fran. cabt. mkr. and capentr. 8 New rd.

Rastall Mrs M. Ann, straw-hatm. Wellington la.

Ratcliffe Chas. magr. spirit stores, 5 Narrow st.

Rawlings William, baker, &c. Midgate

Read Ed. Fuller, cabt. maker, Wentworth st.

Redfern Frank, commercial trav. Cromwell rd.

Redhead Dan. Hy. butcher, 23 Long causeway

Redhead Henry, shoemaker, Eastgate

Redhead Thomas, beerhouse, St John st. north

Redhead William, beerhouse, Wellington lane

Redshaw Thos. clothes dealer, St John st. north

Reynolds John James, dyer, Albert place

Richards Mrs Ellen, blacksmith, 6 Cumbergate

Richardson Mrs Ann, joiner and bldr. Cowgate

Richardson Wm. veterinary surgn. and vict.

Spirit Vault, Cowgate, h. St John st.

Richer Rbt. fish curer and fruiterer, 5 Westgate

Richmond Rev. Rbt. (Primitive), Monument st.

Rickman Alex. James, ironmonger, 2 Cowgate

Rimes Mrs Sarah, 3 Albion ter. New Fletton

Rintoul Chas. Wm. corn and flour dlr. New rd.

Rippon John, coal and lime mert. Cemetery rd.

Rist Abram, gardener and seedsman, Millfield

Roberts Chas. & Son (Chas.), corn mers. Gt.

N. Rly. station, hs. 3 and 2 St Mark's villas

Roberts Mrs Martha, lodgings, Cromwell rd.

Roberts Rt. com. trav. 2 Souvenir ter. New rd.

Roberts Robert, shopman, New road

Roberts William, farmer, 7 St Mark's villas

Robinson Mrs Martha, shopkeeper, Cobden st.

Robinson Mrs Mary, cowkeeper, Westgate

Robinson Mr Samuel, New road

Robinson Mr William, Oundle road

Roffe George, postman, Monument street

Rogers John, general dealer, 8 Cowgate

Rogerson John, beerhouse, Westgate

Roughton Wm. wood turner, Wellington lane

Rouse Fred. locomotive supt. Gt. N. Railway

Row James Ley, farmer, Woodston House

Rowell Miss Harriet, London road

Rowell James, beerhouse, Oundle road

Rowell William, manager, Stamford, Spalding, and Boston Bank, Market place

Royce Mrs Elizabeth, New Priestgate

Royce John William, stonemason, Bright st.

Rudd William Hillam, beerhouse, Westgate

Ruddle Francis, contractor, Wood street

Ruddle James, architect and town surveyor,

North street; house, Boroughbury

Rutherford Thos. Melville, com. trav. New rd.

Rutland & Graves, solicitors, 4 Priestgate

Ryan Patrick, travelling draper, 15 New road

St PETER's Training College for Schoolmasters,

Rev. Chas. Daymond, M.A. principal

Saldarini Joseph, optician, Cowgate

Sallibank Miss Fanny, straw-hat mr. Nelson st.

Samwell Francis, foreman printer, Oundle rd.

Samworth Mr Thomas, New road

Samworth Wm. butcher, 47 Broad Bridge st.

Sanders William, clerk, Swan's place

Sanderson William, corn buyer, Ashley Villas

Santall Frederick, com. traveller, Priestgate

Sargeant Edward Baker, printer and book-

seller, 29 Narrow Bridge street

Sargeant Jno. baker & beerhouse, Cumbergate

Sargeant John, artist, 2 Crescent

Sargeant Mrs Mary, beerhouse, Star lane

Saunders Very Rev. Augustus Page, D.D. dean,

The Deanery

Saunders Edwin Freer, com. trav. Crawthorne rd.

Savage John, shopkeeper, Shropshire row

Saviger Mr John, St Leonard's street

Savings Bank, St John street; Frank George

Buckle, actuary

Sawyer & Son, watchmakers, &c. 3 Westgate

Sawyer Mr James, 9 Priestgate

Sawyer Mr Thos. Cook, Crawthorne rd.

Sawyer Walter Chas. (& Son), h. St George's terrace

Sawyer Wm. Henry (& Son), 3 Westgate

Schoeppler Mr Louis, Brook street

Sooley Thos. vict. Bull & Com. Hotel, Westgate

Scotney John, carrier, Albert place

Scotney Wm. Henry, plumber, Cowgate

Seabrook Wm. normal master of training school,

New road

Sergeant Wm. John, rate collec. Boroughbury

Searjeant Joseph, butcher, 41 New road

Searson Samuel, corn merch. Broad Bridge st.

Seaton Thos. greengrocer, Trowel's Court, St

John street

Seed Very Rev. Thomas, Catholic canon of

Northampton, Queen street

Selby Mr Thomas James, London rd. Fletton

Sellers Mrs Elizabeth, & Sons (Ebenezer and Timothy), basketmakers, New road
 Senior Jno. baker & shopkr. St John st. north
 Sowell Thomas, beerhouse, Cemetery road
 Shacklock Mrs Elizth. shopkr. St John st. N.
 Sharmman Mr John, Woodston
 Sharp & Howell, drapers, 38 Broad Bridge st.
 Sharp Fred. Wm. (S. & H.), 38 Broad Bridge st.
 Sharp Thos. Dean, woolstapler, chem. manure mer. & sack cont. Broad st. h. Dogsthorpe
 Sharp Wm. shopkeeper, City road
 Shaw John, cooper, St John street north
 Shaw Matthew, cattle dealer, Star lane
 Shaw Mr Robert, Albert place
 Shaw Samuel, cooper, Eastfield road
 Shrive Edwd. vict. White Hart, Long causeway
 Shrive, Mrs Elizabeth, Eastgate
 Shrive Samuel, butcher, 46 Broad Bridge st.
 Shrive, Thomas, vict. Swan, Midgate
 Silcox John, shopkeeper, Lincoln road
 Simpson Miss Ann, Lincoln road
 Simpson Mrs Emma, London road
 Simpson John, coal agent, Fitzwilliam street
 Simpson Mr William, London road
 Sizer John, vict. White Hart, New England
 Skaffe Robert, clothes dealer, Westgate
 Skrimshire Rev. Arthur Charles, B.A. third master Grammar School
 Slide Martin, com. traveller, Cromwell road
 Sly John, shoemaker, St Mary's street
 Smalley Alban, tailor, 5 Nelson street
 Smart James, joiner and builder, Chapel st.
 Smedley Robert, solicitor, Westgate
 Smith Alfred Ogle, post-office clk. Lincoln rd.
 Smith Chas. chimney sweeper, Hampden rd.
 Smith Charles, shopkeeper, South street
 Smith Ed. John, vict. White Lion, Church st.
 Smith Mrs Elizabeth, Bridge place, Fletton
 Smith Miss Frances, school, Chapel street
 Smith Miss Jane, Cowgate
 Smith John, turnkey, New gaol
 Smith Joseph, shoemaker, St John's street
 Smith Miss Mary, dressmaker, &c., Brook st.
 Smith Mrs Mary, Westgate
 Smith Mrs Mary, beerhouse, St John st. N.
 Smith Mrs Mary Ann, beerh. Westwood st.
 Smith Mrs Mary Ann, lodgings, 4 North st.
 Smith Samuel Bilton, solicitor, 81 Priestgate
 Smith Thomas, school, Broad Bridge street
 Smith Thos. waggon inspector Gt. Nor. Rail.
 Smith Wm. manager Co-oper. store, New Eng.
 Smith Wm. baker and shopkeeper, Woodston
 Snape Robert Clayton, editor Peterborough and Hunts Standard, h. New road
 Snow Mr William, 12 North street
 Southam Mrs Catherine, 3 St Paul's terrace, Lincoln road
 Southam Mrs Mary, lodgings, 2 St Mary's terrace, New road
 Southam George Thomas Mitchell, M.D. surgeon, Thorpe road
 Southam Thomas, surgeon, Thorpe road
 Sower Geo. pork butcher, St John st. north
 Spearer George, pork butcher, Midgate
 Speechley Misses Agnes and Isabella, school, New Priestgate
 Speechley Edward, cowkeeper, Fengate
 Speechley Mrs Elizabeth, Poplar row
 Speechley Frank, butcher, City road
 Speechley Richard, wheelwright, Fengate
 Speechley William, beerhouse, Gladstone st.
 Speechley William, cowkeeper, New road

Spencer John Thomas, builder, Whitsed st.
 Spencer Mr Leonard, Woodlands, Fletton
 Spendelow John, beerhouse, Westgate
 Sprigge Mrs Fanny, New Fletton
 Spriggs Geo. bricklayer & build. Gladstone st.
 Spriggs Luke, cooper, 26 Westgate
 Squire Thomas, shoemaker and greengrocer, St John street north
 Standhope Henry, shopkeeper, Eastfield road
 Stanford, Spalding, & Boston Banking Compy. Market place; William Rowell, manager
 Stanford Alfred, draper, 45 Narrow Bridge st.
 Stanford Jno. foreman millr. London rd. Fletton
 Stanley Stephen, butcher, Midgate
 Stapleton Harvey, corn merchant, Cowgate
 Starmore Thos. vict. Eight Bells, Westwood st.
 Steels William, vict. George and Dragon, 2 Cambergate
 Stephens Richard, stonemason, Eastfield road
 Stephenson Robert, hairdresser, City road
 Stevenson, Mrs Catherine, baker, Cowgate
 Steward John, plumber, h. Albert place
 Steward Robert, plumber, Albert place
 Stiles Daniel Booth, stonemas. Wellington la.
 Stiles William Ball, stonemas., Wellington la.
 Stocks Miss Fanny, dressmaker, &c. City rd.
 Stocks James, fishmonger, City road
 Stocks Josiah, cowkeeper, Crawthorne road
 Storrar Alex. eating-ho. 27 Narrow Bridge st.
 Stott David, shopman, 24 New road
 Strangward Mrs Elizabeth, Cromwell road
 Strickland Mrs Mary Ann, pastry cook, St John street
 Strickland William, painter, &c. 36 Cowgate
 Sturton & Sons, chemists and druggists, 42 Broad Bridge street
 Sturton Mrs Elizab. 4 St Paul's ter. Lincoln rd.
 Sturton John Rowland (& Sons), h. Oundle rd.
 Sturton Richd. (& Sons), 42 Broad Bridge st.
 Sutton John, carpenter, Chapel place
 Sutton Jonathan, shopkeeper, Gladstone st.
 Swallow Joshua, vict. Bell & Oak, Market pl.
 Swallow Mrs Sarah, hairdresser, &c. Long causeway
 Swallow William, cabinetmaker, Chapel st.
 Sweeting Rev. Walt. Debenham, M.A. second master Grammar School, Minster precincts
 Swift Samuel, lay clerk, Cemetery road
 Swinton John, butcher, Russell street
 Sykes Thomas, butcher, Gladstone street
 Symonds George Ed. farmer, Westwood Farm
 TABOR George, wheelwright, St John's road
 Talbot John & Thomas, saddlers, St Mary's st.
 Taverner Mrs Elizab. school, 5 Market street
 Taylor Benjamin, high bailiff County Court, Souvenir House, New road
 Taylor Brothers (Robert & John), drapers, 48 Narrow Bridge street
 Taylor Mrs Lucy, London road
 Taylor John, shoemaker, Westwood street
 Taylor William, greengrocer, Cemetery road
 Tebbs Charles, butcher, Midgate
 Tebbs Thomas, cowkeeper, Star lane
 Tebbs William, assistant overseer, Thorpe rd.
 Temple Miss Sarah, dressmaker, Cromwell rd.
 Templeman William, shoemaker, St Mary's st.
 Thomas Rev. William Robert, M.A. vicar St Mary's & Surrogate, Vicarage, Eastfield rd.
 Thompson Mrs Ann, Westgate
 Thompson Mrs C. H. 1 St Mark's villas
 Thompson Mrs Frances, Millfield

Thompson, Geo. refreshmt.-rooms, 13 Cowgate
 Thompson Geo. wood turner, Boroughbury
 Thompson John, builder and contractor, Wood st. ; house, The Lindens, Lincoln road
 Thompson John, painter, Broad Bridge street
 Thompson Josiah Rob. butcher, 5 Church st.
 Thompson Richard, shoemaker, St Mary's st.
 Thompson Robert, relieving officer
 Thompson Thomas, relieving officer
 Thomson William, M.D. surgeon, Priestgate
 Thorpe Mr Matthew, London road
 Threfall John, master Natl. Sch. New England
 Thurlow John, shoemaker, Oundle road
 Thurlow Jno. jun. shoemkr, Grove st. Fletton
 Thurstun John, ironmger. 7 Narrow Bridge st.
 Timms Thomas, whitesmith, New road
 Tinley Samuel, coal agent, Westgate
 Tipping Mrs Eliz. Mary, 37 New road
 Todd Henry James, baker, 3 Church street
 Todd Mrs Harriet, greengrocer, Milton square
 Tomlinson John, tutor St Peter's Training Col.
 Tompson, Rev. Reginald, M.A. rector, Woodston
 Tonkin Rev. Benjamin (Primitive) Brook st.
 Tood Charles, shopkeeper, St Mary's street
 Towlet Edward, whitesmith, Westgate
 Townsend Henry Milnes, architect (Mumford & T.), h. 2 St Paul's terrace, Lincoln road
 Trowell Mrs Charlotte, London road
 Trowell Mrs Charlotte, Alma place, Fletton
 Trundle, Rev. George, B.A. assistant master of King's school, Dean's court
 Truswell Albert, tailor, Russell street
 Tuck Charles, cattle dlr. Spring villas, Fletton
 Turner Misses, 14 Nelson street
 Turner Nathaniel, shopman, 3 Crescent
 Turner R. Panther, homp. chemist, Market pl.
 Turner Wm. Berlin wool dlr. 26 Long causeway
 Tyler, Mrs Ann, Grove street, Fletton
 Tyler Miss Eliza, school, Cobden street

UNDERWOOD Miss Jane, Cowgate

VALE Charles, shopkeeper, Shropshire row
 Vergette Edward, linen and woollen draper, tailor, outfitter, and hatter, 4 Market place
 Vergette Edward, jun. solicitor (Buckle & V.), Priestgate
 Vergette George, ironmonger, 6 Market place
 Vergette William, grocer and tallow chandler, 20 Long causeway ; house, 1 Westgate
 Vincent Wm. com. trav. Woodlands, Fletton
 Vines Rev. Thomas Hotchkin, M.A. minor canon, Minster precincts

WADSLEY Mr Philip, Lincoln road east
 Wadsworth Charles, beerhouse, St Mary's st.
 Wakefield Charles, tailor, Nelson street
 Walden Mark, baker and shopkeeper, 17 Albion terrace, Fletton
 Waldon John, foreman Gt. Northern Railway
 Wales Rev. Wm. M.A. chancellor of the diocese ; house, The Rectory, Uppingham
 Walker Mrs Charlotte, Brook street
 Walker Charles, com. traveller, Cromwell road
 Walker Charles Fred. joiner, &c. Cemetery rd.
 Walker John, manure manufacturer, Fengate
 Walker Thomas, beerhouse, St Mary's street
 Walker Thos. M.D. J.P. surgeon, 19 Westgate
 Walker Thos. Jas. M.D. surgeon, 18 Westgate
 Walker Wm. greengrocer, St John st. north
 Waller Edmund, M.D. surg. 8 Broad Bridge st.
 Wallis George, builder, Cromwell road

Walters George, eating-house, 1 Albert place
 Walters John Elijah, baker, &c. Westgate
 Ward Miss Susan, butcher, 28 Broad Bridge st.
 Ward John, beerhouse and shopkeeper, St John street north
 Ward Samuel Speechley, butcher, Wood st.
 Warren Reuben, baker, &c. 29 Westgate
 Warwick R. & Sons, brewers, &c. Priestgate and Newark-on-Trent ; Geo. Brighty, agent
 Warwick Mrs Mary, 9 Crescent
 Waterfield Charles tailor, 24 Wood street
 Waterfield David, tailor, Millfield
 Waterfield George, cabinetmaker, 12 Westgate
 Waterfield Joseph, furniture broker, 15 Broad Bridge street
 Waterfield Wm. Caleb, hairdresser, 9 Market pl.
 Watkins Mrs Hannah, shopkr. New England
 Watson Henry, wholes. confecr. Lincoln rd. E.
 Watts John, vict. Northern Dining Rooms, 22 Cowgate
 Watts Rev. Henry (Baptist) 11 Albion terrace, New Fletton
 Watts Robert Bellamy, baker and shopkeeper, Whalley street
 Webb John, baker, Eastgate
 Webb Thomas Peter, coal dealer, Woodston
 Webster John Newman, joiner and builder, 74 Wood street
 Weldon John, shopkeeper, Bread street, and beer retailer, Palmerston road
 Weller Mr Robert, Lincoln road east
 Wells James, cooper, 41 Broad street
 Wells John, shoemaker, Westwood street
 Wenlock Thos. glass and china dlr. 1 Midgate
 West Miss Eliza, straw-hat mkr. 21 Cowgate
 West Robert Stream, hairdresser. 5 Cross street
 Westcott Rev. Brooke Foss, D.D. Minst. precincts
 Westley Mrs Elizabeth, Gladstone street
 Wheatley John, cottager, Wellington lane
 Wheatly Wm. danc. mast. 2 Albion ter. Fletton
 Wheeler John, national schoolmast. 5 City ter.
 Wherry John, comm. agent, Cromwell road
 Whesterby John, school, Cowgate
 White Francis, painter, and vict. Bull and Dolphin, 32 Broad Bridge street
 Whiteman Chas. Crow, drapr. Broad Bridge st.
 Whitised Mrs Sophia, Geneva ter. Boroughbury
 Whittle Edward Rippon, cabinetmakr. Westgate
 Whittle Mrs Elizbth. greengrocer, 38 Wood st.
 Whitton William Howard, goods agent, Great Northern Railway Station yard
 Whitwell Ewen, druggist & groc. P.O. Millfield
 Whitwell Jno. farmer, Springfield House
 Whyte Thomas, clothes dealer, St John street
 Whyley Rev. Edward Bower, head master Grammar School, Minster precincts
 Wiggington Joseph, chemist & druggist, 18, and grocer, 28 Long causeway
 Wilkins William, solicitor (Deacon & W.), h. Priestgate
 Wilkinson Matthew, solicitor, Long causeway, h. Cromwell road
 Wilkinson Nelson, solicitor, Long causeway
 Wilkinson, Rev. William Farley, M.A. precentor, Minster precincts
 Williams, Mrs Mary, Lincoln road east.
 Williamson Chas. Edward, excise, Allen's lane
 Williamson William, fishmonger, Cowgate
 Willis Wm. James, plumber, &c. 15 Westgate
 Willmott Mrs Mary, lodgings, 9 North street
 Willoughby Mrs Ellen, school, Westgate
 Willson Stephen, chemist, 6 Long causeway

Wilson Geo. Woodward, coal agt. Eastfield rd.
 Wilson Henry, butcher, New road
 Wilson John, shoemaker, Albert place
 Wilson Joseph, shoemaker, Westwood street
 Wilson Thos. tailor, cloth. & hatr. 9 Westgate
 Wilson Zachariah, shoemaker, Brook street
 Wilton Mrs. bootmaker, 3 Priestgate
 Wingrove Robert, hairdresser, New England
 Wingrove William, beerhouse, New England
 Winter George, shoemaker, City road
 Wire Mrs Ann, shopkeeper, Milton street
 Wood Alfred, lay clerk, 1 City ter. New road
 Wood Samuel, butcher, Oundle road
 Woodall John, blacksmith, Milton street
 Wooden Edw. locomotive foreman Gt. N. Rail.
 Woodroffe Rev. John Nunn Blacker, M.A.
 vicar, St Mark's Vicarage
 Wool Mr George, London road
 Wordsley Foundry Co. iron and brass founders,
 Gt. Eastern Railway; John Holmes, manager
 Worrall George, tailor, 2 St John street
 Wright Charles, carpenter, Woodston

Wright Edward, shopkeeper, Alma road
 Wright Frederick, fishmonger, City road
 Wright James, chim.-sweep. St John st. N.
 Wright, John David, builder, South place
 Wright John, cowkeeper, Fengate
 Wright Josiah, beerhouse, Millfield
 Wright Robt. supt. cattle mkt. Boroughbury
 Wright Thos. baker & shopkpr. New England
 Wright Thos. thresh.-machine owner, Fengate
 Wright William, cowkeeper, Eastgate
 Wright Wm. chimney-sweep. Wellington lane
 Wykes Misses Lizzie & Sarah, school, 35 New rd.
 Wyman George, solicitor (Broughton & W.),
 h. Priestgate
 Wyman Mr Thomas, Star lane
 Wyman Thomas, farmer, Cromwell road

YATES Miss Mary R. shopkr. Palmerston road
 Yeates Misses Laura, Emily, and Marian school, Cromwell road
 Young John, wheelwright, Milton street

CLASSIFICATION OF TRADES AND PROFESSIONS.

Academies and Schools.

(Marked * take Boarders.)

Back Miss Cath. 27 Cowgate
 Bannister Miss R. 13 Cumberg.
 Beesbey Mrs Mary, Eastgate
 *Bradshaw Mrs M. A. New rd.
 British School (boys), New road—Benjamin Dennison
 British School (infants), Westgate—Miss Thomasina Collin British School, Millfield—Miss
 Margaret Alexander
 British School, New Fletton
 —Miss Ann Gibbe, mistress
 Casswell Mrs S. Cromwell rd.
 Catholic, Queen street—Miss
 Janet Hegney
 Deacon's & Ireland's Free
 School, Cowgate
 Duddington Mrs A. Lincoln rd.
 Gates Mrs Uranie (French & German), 28 New road
 Gibson Mrs Margaret, South st.
 Gosnold Misses Emma & Clara,
 New Priestgate
 Hall Miss E. L.S. Monument st.
 Head Misses S. & H. Westgate
 *King's Grammar School,
 Minster precincts—Rev.
 Ed. Bower Whyley, M.A.
 head master; Rev. Walter Debenham Sweeting, M.A.
 second master; Rev. Arthur
 Charles Skrimshire, M.A.
 Rev. Geo. Trundle, B.A. and
 D.D. Jones, assistant masters
 National, Nelson street—John
 Wheeler and Miss Mary
 Louisa Gammon, teachers
 National (St Mary's), St John
 st.—Miss Elizabeth Lines
 National (St John's), Chapel place (girls and infants)—

Miss Harriet King and Miss
 Ellen Page
 National (St Paul's), New England—Miss L. Bains, teacher
 National (St Paul's) (infants),
 Millfield—Miss Mrgt. Mitchell
 National (St Mark's), Cromwell
 road
 *St Peter's Training College
 (for schoolmasters)—Rev.
 Charles Daymond, M.A.
 principal; Rev. John Dart,
 M.A. vice-principal; John
 Tomlinson, tutor; William
 Seabrook, normal master
 Smith Miss Frances, Chapel st.
 *Smith Thos. Broad Bridge st.
 Speechley Misses Agnes and Isabella, New Priestgate
 Taverner Mrs Eliz. 5 Market st.
 Tyler Miss Eliza. Cobden st.
 Whesterby John, Cowgate
 Willoughby Mrs Ellen, Westgt.
 Wykes Misses Liz. & Sar. New rd.
 Yeates Misses Laura Emily and Marian, Cromwell road

Accountants.

Arnold Jas. Frklyn. Priestgate
 Buckle Frank Geo. St John st.

Agents—Wine & Spirit.

Bodger William (W. & A. Gilbey), 33 Broad Bridge street Dandy Robert l'On (wine) (Travis & Sons), 4 Church street Ewart Jas. Wm. (Williams &
 Co.) 10 Narrow street
 Hart Mark William (W. & A.
 Gilbey), Priestgate

Architects & Surveyors.

Mumford & Townsend, Mrkt.pl.
 Ruddle James, North street

Artists.

Barron W. Simmons, 30 New rd.
 Ellis Jas. Aldgate, Neville pl.
 Sargeant John, 2 Crescent

Attorneys.

Broughton & Wyman, 11 Cowgt.
 Brown, Atter & Brown, 20 Westg.
 Buckle & Vergette, New Mrkt.st.
 Deacon & Wilkins, Cross street
 Gaches G.F.D. Minster gateway.
 Gaches Wm. Danl. New road
 Percival & Son, Minster precincts.
 Rutland & Graves, 4 Priestgate
 Smedley Robert, Westgate
 Smith Saml. Bilton, Priestgate
 Wilkinson Matt. Lg. causeway
 Wilkinson Nelson, Lg. causeway.

Auctioneers and Appraisers.

Bristow Geo. & Son, Market pl.
 Burchby J. W. 3 Boroughbury
 Craig Joseph Brown, New road
 Fox John, 14 Narrow street
 Jakes John, Long causeway
 Leach Reuben, 30 Broad street
 Lilley Edwin J. Lincoln rd. E.

Bakers.

Adams John, Millfield
 Andrew Edward, Gladstone st.
 Ashley Wm. Grove st. Fletton
 Ashworth Jph. St John st. N.
 Blake Miss Cath. Albert pl.
 Bolton Robt. Park st. Fletton
 Brooks William, Westwood st.
 Bullamore Richard, City road
 Co-oprtve. stores, New England
 Dawson Joseph, St Mary's st.
 Dickinson Thos. Long causeway.
 Goodyer Fred. 38 New road
 Green Thomas, Oundle road

Green William, Millfield
Hall John, 40 Broad Bridge st.
Hamer Hen. St John st. north
Hill Stephen, Cemetery road
Lawson Jph. Bridge pl. Fletton
Maltby Robert, Milton street
Mason John, Eastgate
Neale Thos. St John st. north
Newton Mrs Ann, Fengate
Rawlings William, Midgate
Sargeant John, Cumbergate
Senior John, St John st. north
Smith William, Woodaton
Stevenson Mrs Cath. 12 Cowgate
Todd Henry Jas. 3 Church st.
Walden M. 17 Albion ter. Flet.
Walters John Elijah, Westgate
Warren Reuben, 29 Westgate
Watts Rt. Bellamy, Whalley st.
Webb, John, Eastgate
Wright Thomas, New England

Banks.

Midland Bank. Co. Church st.
(draw on Lon. & Co. Bank)—
John Flowers Bentley, man.
Nat. Prov. Bank of Eng. Narrow st.—Samuel Mayo, man.
Savings Bank, St John street—
Frank Geo. Buckle, actuary
Stamford, Spalding, & Boston
Bank. Co. Market pl. (draw on Lon. & Westmins. Bank)
—William Rowell, manager

Basketmakers.

Edwards George, St Mary's st.
Hubbard William, Westgate
Markling Wm. Clifton's yard
Sellers Mrs Eliz. & Sons, New rd.

Baths.

British Workm.'s Club, City rd.
Colam M. (medicated), New rd.
Wentworth Baths, Wentworth hotel

Berlin Wool Dealers.

Marlier E. 25 Long causeway
Neale George, Narrow street
Swallow Mrs Sar. Long causeway.
Turner Wm. 26 Long causeway

Blacksmiths.

Bannister Thos. Cumbergate
Barker Alfred, Millfield
Blackwell John, Westgate
Bristow J. Clifton's yd. Narrow street
Davis Abraham, New road
Gardener Wm. St Mary's st.
Hollis Wm. Laxton, Broad st.
Humberstone Hy. Woodston
Jackson Edward, City road
Lewis Henry, Monument st.
Newton John, Fitzwilliam st.
Richards Mrs Elln. 6 Cumbergt.
Woodall John, Milton street

Boat Builders.

Hemment Wm. & John, Broad
Bridge street

Booksellers & Stationers.

(Marked * are Printers.

Marked † are Binders.)

Chadwell Thos. 9 Narrow st.
*Clarke Jph. Slatterie, Mrkt. pl.
Edwards Amos, Long causeway
*†Hamblin E. T. 6 Narrow st.
Pentney Wm. Hy. 8 Narrow st.
Sargeant Edwd. B. 29 Narrow st.

Boot and Shoe Makers.

Allan William, Millfield
Bailey David, Grove st. Fletton
Bell Thomas, Westgate
Bossett Henry, Wellington lane
Brooks William, 31 Narrow st.
Bull John, St John st. north
Christian Rt. 31 Long causeway
Christian Rt. jun. 15 Narrow st.
Cotton Richard, Cemetery rd.
Criss John (dealer), Westgate
Curtis John, Albert place
Decamp Henry, Cumbergate
Exton Joseph, Wellington lane
Hardy Jeremiah, Millfield
Howard Fredk. Lincoln road
Jefferson Thos. (deal.), Cowgate
Lawton John, Westwood st.
Louder John, Westgate
Louder Robert, Woodaton
Louder William, 46 Wood st.
Maddock John, Millfield
Mann James, St Leonard's st.
March Thomas, Eastgate
Mobb John, Broad street
Palmer John, Gladstone street
Parker John, Broad street
Parsons Abraham, Eastgate
Parsons Peter, St John st. N.
Pheasant Jos. 9 Long causeway
Redhead Henry, Eastgate
Sly John, St Mary's street
Smith Joseph, St John's street
Squire Thos. St John st. N.
Taylor John, Westwood street
Templeman W. St Mary's st.
Thompson Rich. St Mary's st.
Thurlow Jno. Grove st. Fletton
Thurlow John, sen. Oundle rd.
Wells John, Westwood street
Wilson John, Albert place
Wilson Joseph, Westwood st.
Wilson Zachariah, Brook street
Wilton Mrs. 3 Priestgate
Winter George, City road

Brewers.

Allsopp & Sons (stores), 2 Long causeway,—A. T. Fisher, agt.
Cutlack Charles, Phoenix Brewery and Yaxley
Eyre, Elijah, & Co. (stores),
North st.—E. T. Manton, agt.
Ind, Coope, & Co. (stores)—Wm.
Dl. Nichols, agt. Lg. causeway.
Madocks & Page, Peterbo. Brewery.
Warwick R. & Sons (stores),—
Geo. Brighty, agt. Priestgate

Building Societies.

Freehold Land Society—Rd.
W. Tow, secretary

Peterboro' & District Permanent & Benefit Building Society—
J. W. Harrison, sec. Cromw. Lrd

Butchers.

(Marked * are Pork Butchers.)

Candell Edward, Bright street.
Collings Hy. 34 Long causeway
Davis Christopher, Midgate
Davis Edward, Eastgate
Dawson Joseph, St Mary's st.
Dodson Thomas, Midgate
Gaunt Geo. 28 Long causeway
*Hall Edwin Henry, City road
*Jacks John, Boroughbury
Jackson Thomas, Milton square
Leven George, 10 Church st.
*Limbach Wm. 33 Narrow st.
Mann George, 31 Wood street
Mann Geo. Thos. St Mary's st.
*Markham Cornls. A. Market pl.
Noble Frederick, Russell street
Phillips Mrs Sarah, Millfield
Popp George, Whalley street
Redhead Dl. Hy. Lg. causeway
Samworth Wm. 47 Broad st.
Searjeant Joseph, 41 New road
Shrive Sam. 46 Broad Bridge st.
*Sower Geo. St John st. north
*Spearer George, Midgate
Speechley Frank, City road
Stanley Stephen, Midgate
Swinton John, Russell street
Sykes Thomas, Gladstone st.
Tebbs Charles, Midgate
Thompson Josa. Rt. 5 Church st.
Ward Miss Susan, 28 Broad st.
Ward Sam. Speechley, Wood st.
Wilson Henry, New road
Wood Samuel, Oundle road

Cabinetmakers.

Footo Charles, 5 Market place
Holdich Ben. 12 Cumbergate
Holdich Ben. Edw. 37 Cowgate
Hooke Mat. 44 Broad Bridge st.
Kind Edward, Cowgate
Mason William, 7 Cowgate
Rands Francis, New road
Read Ed. Fuller, Wentworth st.
Swallow William, Chapel street
Waterfield George, 12 Westgate
Whittle Ed. Rippon, 16 Westgte.

Cattle Dealers.

Bedford John, 16 New road
Brown John, 26 New road
Cotching John, Thorpe road

Chemists and Druggists.

Booth Sam. Grove st. Fletton
Bright Rd. 29 Broad Bridge st.
Colam Matthias, New road
Glew Alfred, 50 Narrow street
Heanley Marshall, Market pl.
Loal Hy. Wells, 46 Narrow st.
Parnell John, 8 Market place
Pearson John H. 1 Narrow st.
Sturton & Sons, 42 Broad st.
Turner R. P. (hoptic.) 7 Mrkt. pl.

Whitwell Ewen, Millfield
Wigginton J. 18 Lg. causeway
Willson Sph. 6 Long causeway

Chimney-Sweepers.

Basford William, Chapel street
Molsher John, City road
Smith Charles, Hampden road
Wright Jas. St John st. north
Wright Wm. Wellington lane

China, Glass, &c. Dealers.

Henson William, Eastgate
Phipps & Ambr. 23 Narrow st.
Wenlock Thomas, 1 Midgate

Clothes Dealers.

Barrett Henry, Westgate
Criss John, Westgate
Ley John, Cowgate
Rands David, City road
Redshaw Thos. St John st. north
Skaife Robert, Westgate
Whyte Thos. St John st. north

Clothiers.

Chappell James, 52 Narrow st.
Craig James M'C. Market pl.
Eyre Jph. 39 and 40 Narrow st.
Gaunt William, 56 Narrow st.
Holden Geo. Wm. 17 Narrow st.
Julyan G. Lngm. 57 Narrow st.
Marshall T. Casson, Wentwth.st.
Miller John, Midgate
Vergette Ed. 4 and 5 Market pl.
Wilson Thomas, 9 Westgate

Coachbuilders.

Brainsby & Son, 10 L. causeway
Hayes & Son, Chapel street
Noble Fred. & Son, Cowgate

Coal Dealers.

Askham Frederick, Chapel st.
Dean John Thos. 3 Albert pl.
Greenwood G. 29 Westwood st.
Lee Henry, Millfield
Peach William, Albert place
Webb Thos. Peter, Woodston

Coal Merchants.

Beeby Alex. & Son, Market pl.
Booth Bros. Gt. E. Rly. station
Bower J. (Exors. of), Broad st.
Brown Mat. Gt. Northern yard
Ellis & Everard, Midland Rwy.
Fairweather John, Bridge place
Green Henry, 10 Crescent
Hill Thomas, Bridge wharf
Hunting G. & J. Gt. E. Rwy.
Little Wm. Gt. N. Rail. station
Rippon John, Cemetery road

Confectioners.

Hall John, 40 Broad Bridge st.
Hobbs Edwin R. 28 Narrow st.
House John, 9 Church street
Marriott J. G. 38 L. causeway
Mullett John, 19 Midgate
Storror Alex. 27 Narrow street
Strickland Mrs M. A. St John st.
Watson H. (whol.) Lincoln rd. E.

Coopers.

Shaw John, St John st. north
Shaw Samuel, Eastfield road
Spriggs Luke, 26 Westgate
Wells James, 41 Broad Br. st.

Corn-Merchants.

(* Corn & Flour Dealers.)

*Bannister Thos. Cumbergate
*Beaver Wm. 15 Long causeway
Bower Jph. (Exors. of), Broad st.
Cadge & Colman, Gt. E. station
Colman Sam. C. 7 Broad Br. st.
Crick Charles, 6 Priestgate
Harrison George, Church street
Hill Thomas, Bridge wharf
Larratt Robt. W. Broad Br. st.
*Percival Jph. 16 L. causeway
*Rintoul Chas. Wm. New rd.
Roberts C. & Son, Gt. N. statn.
Searson Sam. Broad Bridge st.
Stapleton Harvey, Cowgate

Corn-Millers.

Adams John, Millfield
Cadge & Colman, Gt. E. station
Holdich White, New road
Newton Mrs Ann, Fengate

Cowkeepers, &c.

Brown Robt. Wellington lane
Brown Thomas, Fengate
Dean John Thos. 3 Albert pl.
Henson Reuben, Broomfield
Robinson Mrs Mary, Westgate
Speechley Edward, Fengate
Speechley William, New road
Stocks Josiah, Crowthorne rd.
Tabbs Thomas, Star lane
Wright John, Fengate
Wright William, Eastgate

Curriers and Leather Cutters.

(* Leather Cutters only.)

*Blackwell Fras. 28 Westgate
Carnall Mrs Rebecca, Midgate
Caster Geo. Broad Bridge st.
Markham Corn. A. St John st.

Dentists.

Palmer Jas. Edwin, Priestgate

Dyers.

Barnes Mrs My. Eliza, St John st.
Reynolds John Jas. Albert place

Eating-Houses and Refreshment-Rooms.

Close William, 20 Cowgate
Gilbert John, 3 Long causeway
Hobbs Edwin R. 28 Narrow st.
House John, 9 Church street
Newton Jph. Broad Bridge st.
Storror Alex. 27 Narrow street
Strickland Mrs M. A. St John st.
Thompson George, 15 Cowgate
Walters George, 1 Albert place
Watts John, 22 Cowgate

Engineers and Machinists.

Barford & Perkins, Queen st.

Farmers.

Bottomley Hy. New England
Brown Matthew, Priestgate
Bunting Wm. Cromwell road
Dodson Henry, Eastgate
Eagle Harold, Fengate
Holdich Frederick, Fengate
Jones Richard, Woodston
King William, Fengate
Little Henry, Boroughbury
Moore Jno. Whitehead, Millfield
Roberts Wm. 7 St Mark's villas
Row Jas. L. Woodston House
Symonds George Edward, Westwood Farm
Vergette George, Market place
Whitwell John, Millfield
Wyman Thomas, Cromwell rd.

Fire and Life Offices.

Atlas, George Bristow & Son,
Market place
Bristol & London, J. B. Craig,
New road
British Empire Mutual, Rev.
Thomas Barrass, London rd.
Caledonian, John Bruster, 8
Cumbergate
Clerical, Medical, Legal, & General, M. Wilkinson, L. causy.
County (fire) & Provident (life),
William Rowell, Market pl.
Eagle (life), Wm. Richardson,
Cowgate; E. H. Loal, Narrow st.; B. Sargeant, Narrow st.
Gresham, E. Kind, 33 Cowgate
Hailstorm, William Beaver, 15
Long causeway
Imperial (life), George F. D.
Gaches, Minster gateway
Imperial (fire and life), George
Wyman, Cowgate
Liverpool & London & Globe,
L. J. Deacon, 7 Priestgate;
E. J. Lilley, Lincoln rd. E.;
A. J. Rickman, Church st.;
S. W. Bamber, 39 New road
London Assurance Corporation,
Robt. Jno. Dandy, 4 Church st.
Midland Counties, Wm. Beaver,
15 Long causeway
National Provident, Henry J.
Hall, Market place
North British & Mercantile,
Joseph B. Craig, New road
Norwich Union, Leonard J.
Deacon, 7 Priestgate; Henry
Nicholson, Thorpe lawn
Phoenix (fire), Nelson Wilkinson, Long causeway
Phoenix (fire) & Pelican (life),
Francis Brown, 20 Westgate
Provident (life), Wm. Rowell,
Market place
Prudential (life), George Mills,
Cromwell road
Railway Passengers, Alex. J.
Rickman, Cowgate
Royal, Jno. Graves, 4 Priestgate

Royal Exchange, Robt. Smedley, Westgate
Scottish Equitable, John Thurston, Narrow street
Scottish Provincial, John Thurston, Narrow street
Scottish Union, Samuel Mayo, Narrow street; Silvanus Geo. Daniel, Lincoln road
Standard (life), John Graves, 4 Priestgate; Leonard John Deacon, 7 Priestgate
Suffolk Alliance, Edward B. Sargeant, 29 Narrow street
Sun, S.C.W. Buckle, Newmkt. st.
United Temperance & General, R. Bright, 29 Broad street
Whittington (life), Wm. Bull, 10 Cumbergate
Yorkshire, Thos. Hill, Br. wharf

Fishmongers.

(* Game Dealers.)

*Anker Chas. Jph. Broad st.
 *Brown Jas. 2 Broad Bridge st.
 Jackson W. Thos. Wellington ln.
 *Jakes A. A. 8 Long causeway
 Richer Robt. (curer), 5 Westgate
 Stocks James, City road
 Wright Frederick, City road

Furniture Brokers.

Goodwin Geo. Broad Bridge st.
 Heath William, Cowgate
 Holdich Benj. Edwd. 37 Cowgate
 Waterfield Joseph, 15 Broad st.

Gasfitters.

Amies Thos. Long causeway
 Jakes John Fred. Cross street
 Noble John, City road
 Thurston John, 7 Narrow st.
 Timms Thomas, New road
 Willis William J. 15 Westgate

General Dealers.

Jackson Edward, City road
 Leach W. & Son, 30 Broad st.
 Leach Immer, Brook street
 Rogers John, 8 Cowgate

Greengrocers.

Allen Joseph, Shropshire place
 Boon George, Milton street
 Bruce Mrs S. Crawthorne st.
 Egboro James, Westgate
 Flowers William, Eastgate
 Ley John, Cowgate
 Seaton T. Trowel act. St John st.
 Squire Thomas, St John street
 Taylor Wm. Cemetery road
 Todd Mrs Harriet, Milton sq.
 Walker Wm. St John st. north
 Whittle Mrs Eliz. 38 Wood st.

Grocers and Tea Dealers.

(Marked * are Wine Dealers.)

See also Shopkeepers.)

Adams Frank Robert, Cowgate
 Allen John, Westwood street
 *Bodger Wm. 33 Broad Bridge st.
 Booth Ingram, Alma road
 Booth Sam. Grove st. Fletton
Co-operative Stores, New Eng.
 *Dandy Rob. 1 On, 4 Church st.
 Ewart Jas. Wm. 16 Narrow st.
 Genn George, New road
 Goddard Edward, 41 Narrow st.
 *Goodyer William, Midgate
 Gregory Samuel, Oundle road
 Harker Jabez, City road
 Harris William, 45 Broad street
 *Hart Mark Wm. Priestgate
 Pentney Wm. 31 Broad Bridge st.
 *Plumtree J. & Son, 24 L. causey.
 Quincey Edwin, Cromwell rd.
 Vergette Wm. 20 L. causeway

Whitwell Ewen, Millfield
 Wigginton Jph. 28 L. causeway

Gunmaker.

Holleywell Mrs A. E. Wentw. st.

Hairdressers.

Gillings George, 28 Cowgate
 Hortor Mrs Charlotte, Narrow st.
 Hortor Jas. 30 Long causeway
 Keech John, 3 Broad Bridge st.
 Marlier E. 25 Long causeway
 Parker Robert, Midgate
 Stephenson Robert, City road
 Swallow Mrs Sar. L. causeway
 Waterfield W. Caleb, 9 Market pl.
 West Robert Stream, 5 Cross st.
 Wingrove Robt. New England

Hatters.

Binckles Wm. E. 36 Narrow st.
 Chappell Jas. 52 Narrow st.
 Craig James M'C. Market place
 Eyre Jos. 40 Narrow Bridge st.
 Gaunt Wm. 56 Narrow Bridge st.
 Holden Geo. W. 17 Narrow st.
 Julian Geo. L. 57 Narrow st.
 Vergette Edward, 4 Market pl.
 Wilson Thomas, 9 Westgate

Horse and Carriage Proprietors.

Core John, Narrow Bridge st.
 Fuller Wm. Reeves, Fletton rd.
 Furnace Mrs Sarah, South pl.
 Palmer Wm. 1 Broad Bridge st.
 Ranby L. T. Long causeway
 Scoley Thomas, Westgate

Horse Breakers.

Barber John, Lincoln road
 Dean John Thos. 3 Albert pl.

Hotels, Inns, and Taverns.

(Marked * are Posting-Houses.)

Anchor, Edward Petchey, City road
Angel Hotel (family, commercial, and posting-house), John Core, Narrow street
Bell and Oak, Joshua Swallow, Market place
Black Swan, George Gray, 38 Narrow street
Blue Bell, William Close, 20 Cowgate
Boat, Bridgfoot Palmer, Broad Bridge street
Boy's Head, John Desbrow, Woodston
Britannia, Edward Davis, Eastfield
 Bull* (family and commercial), Thomas Scoley, Westgate
Bull and Dolphin, Francis White, 32 Broad st.
Cherry Tree, Mrs Mary E. Parnell, Oundle rd.
City Hotel, Wm. Palmer, 1 Broad street
Cross Keys, George Neale, 22 Narrow street
 Crown* (Raily.) Wm. Reeves Fuller, Fletton rd.
Crown, Benjamin Palmer, New England
Eight Bells, Mrs Sarah Phillips, Millfield
Eight Bells, Thomas Starmore, Westwood st.
Falcon, Mrs Sarah Collier, Cowgate
Ferry Boat, George Laughton, Woodston
Fitzwilliam Arms, Thos. Pepper, 45 Wood st.

Fox and Hounds, Richard Hopkins, Eastgate.
George and Dragon, Wm. Steels, 2 Cumbergt.
Golden Lion, Mrs Mary Freear, New Fletton
Great Northern Hotel, Samuel Moore, manager
Greyhound, James Bristow, 14 Market place
Horse and Jockey, John Noble, City road
Locomotive, Edward Cupit, New England
Locomotive, William Hunt, Albert place
New Inn, Mrs Mary Ann Beale, New road
New Inn, John Barber, Lincoln road
Northern Dining-Rooms, John Watts, 22 Cowg.
Ostrich, George James Isley, 6 North street
Peacock, Benj. Letall, London road, Fletton
Peterborough Hotel, George Coates, Cowgate
Pony's Head, William Palmer, St Leonard's st.
Queen's Head, Mrs Elizabeth Hillam, Broad st.
Rose and Crown, Wm. Laxton Hollis, Broad st.
Royal Arms, Mrs Caroline Dimbleby, Broad st.
Royal Oak, William Carter, Fletton road
Salmon & Compasses, Jno. Jakes, 8 L. causeway
Saracen's Head, George Morling, Broad street
Spirit Vaults, William Richardson, Cowgate
Spittal Bridge, Enos Elmor, Westwood street
Spread Eagle, Chas. Philip Peaks, 39 Broad st.
Star, William Bowland, Star lane

Steam-Engine, John William Lazenby, Cromwell road

Sheaf, Thomas Shrive, Midgate

Swiss Cottage, Geo. Hunting, Broad st. Fletton

Talbot, Low Thos. Ranby, 29 Long Causeway

Vine, John House, 9 Church street

Wagon & Horses, W. Shep. Peaks, Narrow st.

Wellington, Mrs Mary Ann Cave, St John street N.

Wentworth Hotel (family & commercial), Cha. Edward Craddock, Wentworth street,

Wheat Sheaf, Levi Perkins, Midgate

Wheel, Mrs Harriet Bourne, Midgate

White Hart, John Sizer, New England

White Hart, Ed. Shrive, 36 Long causeway

White Horse, William Clarke, 3 Cumbergate

White Lion, Edward John Smith, 7 Church st.

Windmill, Edward Jackson, Millfield

Beerhouses.

Adams Matthew, City road
Austin John, Westgate
Baldwin Henry, New England
Barker Alfred, Millfield
Barlow Edward, Westwood st.
Baynes John, 29 Wood street
Bird Charles, Westgate
Bird Mrs Eliza, Midgate
Blackwell F. (outd.), 28 Westgt.
Bonnatt Mrs E. St John st. N.
Boon Joseph, Park st. Fletton
Brown George, 29 Cowgate
Brown Joseph, Eastgate
Brown Wm. F. Westwood st.
Bullen Mrs Mary Ann, City rd.
Burton John, Eastgate
Butler Thomas, St Mary's st.
Candell Henry, Bright street
Cunningham William, Midgate
Day Zachariah, City road
Dow William, New road
Drewery William, City road
Dudley James, Whalley street
Feast Robert, Eastgate
Garraatt Mrs Alice, New Engld.
Gilbert John, 3 Long causeway
Gilby John, Millfield
Hall Mrs Fanny, Oundle road
Hall William, City road
Hancock John, St John st. N.
Hillam John, St Leonard's st.
Hobbs Edwin R. 28 Narrow st.
Howes Henry, City road
Hull George, New England
Jackson W. T. Wellington lane
Jolly Mrs Sarah, Midgate
Kerrey John, Cemetery road
King William, Wellington lane
Lee Henry, Millfield
Mackley Mrs Mgt. 25 Westgt. st
Morley Timothy, Cumbergate
Nelson Wm. St Leonard's st.
Peach William, Albert place
Plant Robert, Hampden road
Redhead Thos. St John st. N.
Redhead Wm. Wellington ln.
Rogerson John, Westgate
Rowell James, Oundle road
Rudd Wm. Hillam, Westgate
Sargeant John, Cumbergate
Sargeant Mrs Mary, Star lane
Sawell Thomas, Cemetery rd.
Smith Mrs M. A. Westwood st.
Smith Mrs Mary, St John st. N.
Speechley Wm. Gladstone st.
Spenslow John, Westgate
Wadsworth Chas. St Mary's st.
Walker Thomas, St Mary's st.
Ward John, St John street
Weldon John, Palmerston road

Wilson Thomas, 13 Westgate
Wingrove William, New Engd.
Wright Josiah, Millfield

Iron Founders.

Barford & Perkins (&agriculral. implmt. makers), Queen st.
Wordsley Foundry Co. Great Eastern Railway yard.

Ironmongers.

Amies Thomas, Long causeway
Cliffe & Carter, Westgate
Dobbs John, Westgate
Eatherley Wm. 42 Narrow st.
Green & Herbert, Long caswy.
Rickman Alex. Jas. 2 Cowgate
Thurstun John, 7 Narrow st.
Vergette Geo. 6 Market pl.

Joiners and Builders.

(Marked * are Carpenters.)

* Allison John, Bridge place
Bailey Thomas, Cemetery end
Burgess Thos. (machine mkr.), King's Head yard, Broad st.
Chattle William, Hampden rd.
* Furnis Robert, Crawthorne st.
Goude George, Wellington lane
Langley John, Westgate
Leader Sam. R. Monument st.
Machin Thomas, Monument st.
* Martin Joseph, Reform street
Peache Peter, Boroughbury
Peake John, Alma road
* Porter William, Gladstone st.
Richardson Mrs Anne, Cowgate
Smart James, Chapel street
* Spencer Jno. Thos. Whitsea st.
Spriggs George, Gladstone st.
* Sutton John, Albert place.
Thompson John, Wood street
Walker Chas. Fred. Cemetery rd.
Wallis George, Cromwell road
Webster John N. 74 Wood st.
* Wright Charles, Woodston
Wright John David, South pl.

Linen and Woollen Drapers.

(* Travelling Drapers.)

Aldgate James, 1 Market place
* Arthur James, 3 Nelson st.
Baldwin Henry, New England
Bannister Fred. S. Whalley st.
Barrett Thos. Lawrence, Midgate
Beckett Thomas, 43 Narrow st.
* Blair William, 23 Westgate
Blyth William, 30 Narrow st.
Bousfield C. 22 Long causeway
* Brownley James, Neville pl.

Cherrington P.W. 14 Lg. causy.
Clarabut Wm. 51 Narrow st.
Craig Jas. M'Callum, Market pl.
Elsey Henry, Market place
Gollings & Foster, 13 Narrow st.
Hutchinson Joseph, 4 Cowgate
Kneeshaw Jabez, 19 Narrow st.
* Lammie John, 25 New road
* M'Kenzie John, South place
* M'Kerrow Chas. 27 Westgate
Morris Miss M. Ann, Broad st.
* Murdoch Wm. Cromwell rd.
Pentelow Wm. 34 Narrow st.
* Ryan Patrick, 15 New road
Sharp & Howell, 38 Broad st.
Stanford Alfred, 45 Narrow st.
Taylor Brothers, 48 Narrow st.
Vergette Edw. 4 & 5 Mkt. pl.
Whiteman C. Crow, Broad st.

Lodgings.

Bradley, Mrs Harriet, Westgate
Carritt Mrs Annie, 4 Albion ter.
Hall Mrs Sus. F. 13 Cowgate
Hemmant Mrs Sus. F. 5 North st.
Lucas Mrs Ann, 3 North street
Newman Mrs Ann, 11 Nelson st.
Ogden Mrs Fras. E. 17 Nelson st.
Roberts Mrs Ma. Cromwell rd.
Smith Mrs Mary Ann, 4 North st.
Southam Mrs Mary, New road
Willmott Mrs Mary, 9 North st.

Maltsters.

Cutlack Charles, Priestgate
Harrison George, Church street
Hill Thomas, Bridge wharf
Phipps P. and R. Thorpe road

Market Gardeners.

North Leonard, Star lane
Riat Abraham, Millfield

Milliners and Dress-makers.

Baker Mrs Martha, Priestgate
Barnes Mrs Cather, 8 Priestgate
Bean Miss Mary, 21 Cowgate
Bristow Misses Mary Ann and Jane, Market place
Buffam Miss Elizth. Albert pl.
Chapman Mrs My. Gladstone st.
English Miss Eliza, 25 Cowgate
Gosford Mrs My. Elizth. Chap. pl.
Green Miss My. Ann, 22 Wood st.
Hall Mrs Mary, St John st. N.
Hardy Miss Frances, Priestgate
Harrison Mrs S. Dogthorpe rd.
Hayes Miss C. E. Monument st.
Hinch Miss Elizth. St Mary's st.
Kneeshaw Jabez, 19 Narrow st.

March Miss Mary Ann, Eastgate
 Miles Miss Elizth. Palmerston rd.
 Quincey Miss Sarah, 16 Nelson st.
 Randa Mrs Sarah, New road
 Smith Miss Mary, Brook street
 Stocks Miss Fanny, City road
 Temple Miss Sarah, Cromwell rd.
 Turner Wm. 26 Long causeway

Newspapers.

Peterborough Advertiser (Sat.) J.
 Slatterie Clarke, Market pl.
Peterborough and Huntingdon-shire Standard (Sat.), Robt.
 Clayton Snape, edit. Cross st.

Nursery & Seedsmen.

Casbon John, Millfield
 Goodman William, New road
 House John, 9 Church street
 Key Wm. 17 Long causeway
 Patston Matth. St John st. N.
 Quincey Christmas, Market pl.

Painters.

Allen Mrs Esther, Grove street,
 New Fletton
 Barrow W. Sims. 30 New road
 Beech Hy. Bell's pl. Boro'bury
 Bristow John, 35 Narrow st.
 Broughton J. Longstaff, New rd.
 Colla Charles, Midgate
 English Thomas, Cromwell rd.
 Strickland Wm. 36 Cowgate
 White Fras. 32 Broad Bridge st.

Paperhangers.

Bristow John, 35 Narrow st.
 Foote Charles, 5 Market place
 Strickland Wm. 36 Cowgate
 Whittle E. Rippon, 16 Westgate.

Pawnbrokers.

Marshall Ts. C. Wentworth rd.
 Morley J. Limber, 43 Broad st.

Photographers.

Ball William, Broad Bridge st.
 Blackman Thos. 14 Westgate
 Bull John, City road

Physicians.

Paley William, Thorpe road
 Walker Thomas, 19 Westgate

Pianoforte and Musical Instrument Dealers.

(* Professors of Music.)

*Archer W. H. 11 Boroughbury
 *Baker Alfred, Oundle road
 *Barratt Fred. Reeves. New rd.
 Bedwell George, 6 Albion ter.
 New Fletton
 Chadwell Thos. 9 Narrow st.
 Clappole John, 24 Narrow st.
 Neale George, 37 Narrow st.
 Wheatley Wm. 2 Albion ter.
 Fletton

Plumbers and Glaziers.

Andrew Thomas, 12 Narrow st.
 Jakes John Fredk. Cross street
 Noble John, City road
 Scotney Wm. Hy. 5 Cowgate
 Steward Robert, Albert place
 Willis Wm. Jas. 15 Westgate

Poulterer.

Gibbs Francis, 27 Long causew.

Railway Carriers.

Brown Mat. G.N. Railway yd.
 Bull William (Sutton & Co.),
 10 Cumbergate
 Chaplin & Horne, Narrow st.
 R. H. Rainer, agent
 Scotney John (L. & N. W. Ry.),
 Albert place

Register Offices for Servants.

Barnes Mrs M. E. St John st.
 Binckes Mrs An. 36 Narrow st.
 Gibbs James Reed, 13 North st.
 Pentney Miss H. 18 Narrow st.

Rope and Twine Makers.

Dawson Mrs Mary, St John st.
 Key Wm. 17 Long causeway

Sack Merchants and Dealers.

Dawson Mrs Mary, St John st.
 Edwards F. Rea, New Priestgt.
 Key Wm. 17 Long causeway
 Sharp Thomas Dean, Broad st.

Saddlers and Harness Makers.

Burton Wm. Long causeway
 Gifford William, Cumbergate
 Goodacre John, Milton street
 Lound John C. 55 Narrow st.
 Mays Thomas, Albert place
 Parnell Wm. Henry, Narrow st.
 Talbot Jon. & Tho. St Mary's st.

Sewing-Machine Agents.

Clarabut William (Wheeler &
 Wilson) 51 Narrow street
 Hall Hy. Jas. (Wiers) Market pl.
 Vergette E. (Wanser) Market pl.

Shopkeepers.

Adams John, Millfield
 Andrew Edward, Gladstone st.
 Anderson Mrs Mary Ann, St
 Leonard's street
 Bannister F. S. Whalley st.
 Barratt John, Hampden row
 Bates John, Cobden street
 Blake Miss Catherine, Albert pl.
 Bland John, Albert place
 Bolton Robt. Park st. Fletton
 Bonner Charles, Cobden street
 Brown Charles, Cobden street
 Brown Mrs Frances, St Mary's st.
 Bull Mrs C. St John st. north

Bullamore Richard, City road
 Chandler Mrs Sarah, New Eng.
 Cook Mrs Ann, Cromwell road
 Cook Thomas, 21 Wood street
 Earle George, 23 Westwood st.
 Edwards Mrs Sarah F. Millfield
 Flowers Miss H. New England
 Gibbs Fras. 27 Long causeway
 Gilbert John, 3 Long causeway
 Gogay Joseph, 17 Westgate
 Goodyer Frederick, 38 New rd.
 Hall Mrs Harriet, Westwood st.
 Hamer Hy. St John st. north
 Harrison Stephen, Cumbergate
 Hart Thomas, Oundle road
 Hill Charles S. 6 Westgate
 Hill Stephen, Cemetery road
 Hull George, New England
 Hurrey Peake George, Millfield
 Jamson Samuel, Woodston
 Jarman R. Brown, St Mary's st.
 Jones Mrs Maria, City road
 King Wm. Wellington lane
 Lawson Jph. Bridge pl. Fletton
 Mason John, Eastgate
 Neale Mrs Elizabeth, Millfield
 Neale Tho. St John st. north
 Nurse Mrs Hannah, 24 Westgate
 Parrish Samuel, Westwood st.
 Patston Matthew, St John st.
 Payling Mrs Sarah, Westwood st.
 Pepper John, 15 Westgate
 Pine John, Gladstone street
 Robinson Mrs Mar. Cobden st.
 Savage John, Shropshire row
 Senior John, St John st. north
 Shacklock Mrs E. St John st. N.
 Sharp William, City road
 Silcox John, Lincoln road
 Smith Charles, South street
 Smith William, Woodston
 Standhope Henry, Eastfield rd.
 Sutton Jonathan, Gladstone st.
 Tood Charles, St Mary's street
 Tyler Mrs Ann, Grovest. Fletton
 Vale Charles, Shropshire row
 Walden M. 17 Albion ter. Flet.
 Walters Jno. Elisha, Westgate
 Ward John, St John st. north
 Warren Reuben, 29 Westgate
 Watkins Mrs Han. New Engl.
 Watts Rob. Bellamy, Whalley st.
 Weldon John, Broad st. Fletton
 Westley Mrs Eliz. Gladstone st.
 Wire Mrs Ann, Milton street
 Wright Edward, Alma road
 Wright Thomas, New England
 Yates Miss M. R. Palmerston rd.

Slate Merchants.

English Bros. Gt. E. station yd.
 Hiscox Bros. Bridge House yd.
 Rippon John, Cemetery road

Soda-Water, &c., Manufacturers.

Glew Alfred, Narrow Bridge st.
 Heanley Marshall, Market place

Stay Manufacturers.

King & Herbert, North street

Stone and Marble Masons.

Dickens John, Eastfield road
Noble Richard, Cross st. Fletton
Royce John William, Bright st.
Stephens Richard, Eastfield rd.
Stiles Dl. Bth. Wellington ln.
Stiles Wm. Ball, Wellington ln.

Straw-Hat Makers.

Deakins Mrs Mary, Chapel st.
Hardy Miss Frances, Priestgate
Hasdell Mrs Ann, Albert place
Rastall Mrs M. A. Wellington ln.
Salibank Miss Fy. 15 Nelson st.
West Miss Eliza, 21 Cowgate

Surgeons.

Barber Geo. Broad Bridge st.
Commissiong J. W. Boroughbury
Hanbury Rd. S. M. D. 4 Broad st.
Southam G.T. M. M. D. Thrp. rd.
Southam Thomas, Thorpe rd.
Thomson Wm. M. D. Priestgate
Walker Thos. M. D. 19 Westgate
Walker T. J. M. D. 18 Westgate
Waller Edmd. M. D. 8 Broad st.

Surveyors.

Fox John, Narrow street
Ruddle James, Boroughbury

Tailors.

(Marked * are Drapers.)

*Baines Jonathan, 13 Broad st.
*Binckes Wm. Ed. 36 Narrow st.
*Bingham Thos. 25 Narrow st.
Blades James, jun. Priestgate
*Chappell James, 52 Narrow st.
*Craig Jas. M'C. Market place
Culpin Henry, Monument st.
Deakins William, Chapel street
Ellis Joseph, Eastgate
*Eyre Jos. 39 and 40 Narrow st.
*Gaunt William, 56 Narrow st.
Harrison Thomas, Swan's place
*Holden Geo. Wm. 17 Narrow st.
*Juryan G. Lngm. 57 Narrow st.
Pearson Josiah, Chapel street
Smalley Alban, 5 Nelson street
Truswell Albert, Russell street
*Vergette Ed. 4 and 5 Market pl.
Waterfield Charles, 19 Nelson st.
Waterfield Charles, 24 Wood st.

Public Officers.

Lord Paramount for the Liberty of Peterborough
—The Marquis of Exeter
Chairman of Quarter Sessions—Lord Kesteven
Chairman of Petty Sessions—C. S. Strong.
Clerk to the Commissioners of Land, Property,
Income, and Assessed Taxes—Nelson Wilkinson, Long causeway
Clerk to Commissioners of Paving and Lighting—Nelson Wilkinson, Long causeway
Clerk to Peterborough Improvement and Cemetery Commissioners and to Local Sanitary Authority—G. F. D. Gaches, Minster gateway
Clerk of the Peace for the Liberty of Peterborough—William Lawrence

Waterfield David, Millfield
*Wilson Thomas, 9 Westgate
*Worrall George, 2 St John st.

Tanner.

Brown Matthew, Priestgate

Tea Dealers (Travelling).

Bell Alfred, St Leonard's street
Bell William, 10 Market place
Blair William, 23 Westgate
Manley Patrick, 32 New road
Porteous Joseph, 11 Market pl.

Timber Merchants.

English Bros. Gt. E. station yd.
Hill Thomas, Bridge wharf
Hiscox Bros. Bridge House yd.

Tinners and Braziers.

Amies Thos. Long causeway
Barnes John, 8 Priestgate
Cooke Lewis, St John st. N.
Dobbs John, Westgate
Hardy Robert, Priestgate
Thurston John, 7 Narrow st.

Tobaccoonists.

Banyard J. S. (mfr.) 3 St John st.
Barrett William, Westgate
Bristow John, 35 Narrow st.
Gillings George, 28 Cowgate
Holleywell Mrs Ann E. Wentworth street
Hunting Joseph, 20 Narrow st.
Keech John, 3 Broad Bridge st.
Parker Robert, Midgate

Turners (Wood).

Roughton Wm. Wellington le
Thompson Geo. Boroughbury.

Undertakers.

Aldgate James, 1 Market place
Allen Thomas, Long causeway
Clarabut Wm. (agt. Patent Me-tallie Coffin Co.), 51 Narrow st.
Elsey Henry, Long causeway
Holdich Benj. 12 Cumbergate
Martin Joseph, Reform street
Stanford Alfred, 45 Narrow st.
Sutton John, Albert place

Taylor Brothers, 48 Narrow st.
Vergette Edw. 4 & 5 Market pl.

Upholsterers.

Footte Charles, 5 Market place
Gollings & Foster, 13 Narrow st.
Hooke Mat. 44 Broad Bridge st.
Kind Edward, 33 Cowgate
Mason William, 7 Cowgate

Veterinary Surgeons.

Gresswell John Wm. Westgate
Mackinder Rd. & Son, 2 North st.
Richardson William, Cowgate

Watchmakers and Jewellers.

(Marked * are Silversmiths.)

Back Robert, Cowgate
*Burlingham Dan. C. Markt. pl.
Dold Leopold, 26 Narrow st.
Hunns Jno. And. 21 Narrow st.
Manson C. 35 Long causeway
*Paviour Whatley, 8 Narrow st.
Perkins Thomas, 49 Narrow st.
Pitts John, Broad street
*Sawyer & Son, 3 Westgate

Wheelwrights.

Chapman Wm. Wellington le
Newbon John, Boroughbury
Speechley Richard, Fengate
Tabor George, St John's road
Young John, Milton street

Whitesmiths.

Amies Thomas, Long causeway
Brakes Simon, Midgate
Eayrs John, Broad Bridge st.
Thurstun John, 7 Narrow st.
Timms Thomas, New road
Towler Edward, Westgate

Wine & Spirit Merchants.

Bays James Scott, 1 Queen st.
Bristow James, Market place
Bruster John, 8 Cumbergate
Cunningham J. A. 32 Lg. causew.
Cutlack Charles, Priestgate
Edmonds George, 5 Narrow st.
Exley Charles, 2 Narrow st.
Eyre Elijah, & Co. North st.
Hill Thomas, Bridge wharf
Nichols & Co. Long causeway

Deputy-Clerk of the Peace for the Liberty of Peterborough—Leonard John Deacon
Clerk to the Guardians of Peterborough Union
—Edward Vergette, jun.
Clerk to the Magistrates for the Liberty of Peterborough—Nelson Wilkinson
Clerk to Commissioners of Taxes for Norman
Cross, and to the Norman Cross Highway
Board—Leonard John Deacon
Clerk to the Board of Guardians—Joseph
Hammond, New road
Clerk to Yaxley Fen Drainage Commissioners—
John Graves, 4 Priestgate
Collector of Queen's Taxes—Ewen Whitwell,
Millfield
Collector of Improvement Rates—W. J. Seargeant, Boroughbury

Collector of Nene Navigation Tolls—W. Brown, Hill's yard
Collector of Poor - Rates—William Tebbs, Thorpe road
Coroner for the City and Liberty of Peterborough—Andrew Percival, Minster precincts
Coroner for the Norman Cross Division—Wm. Daniel Gaches, County Court and Probate Offices, New road
District Registrar of the Court of Probate at Peterborough—H. P. Gates, Minster precincts
High Bailiff and Returning Officer—Henry Pearson Gates, Minster precincts
High Constable for the Liberty of Peterborough—George Bristow, Market place
Inspector of Nuisances and Town Surveyor—James Ruddle, Boroughbury
Registrar of Marriages—Joseph Hammond, New road
Registrar of Births and Deaths—Thomas Southam; James Cattel, deputy Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages for Crowland District—Robert Taverner
Relieving Officer—for the Peterborough district, Thomas Thompson, Narrow Bridge street; for the Crowland District, Robert John Thompson
Secretary to the Bishop—Henry Pearson Gates, New road
Sheriff's Officers—George Bristow & Son, Market place
Superintendent of Police, Inspector of Weights and Measures, and Lodging-Houses Billet Master, &c.—James Hurst, Police Station
Superintendent Registrar—Edward Vergette, jun. New Market street
Deputy—F. G. Buckle, Savings' Bank
Surveyor of Taxes—R. Davidson, Priestgate
Town Bailiff—John Barber, Cowgate
Town Crier—Thos. Harrison, Swan pl. Midgate

Public Establishments.

Assembly Rooms, Wentworth street—John Ellis, proprietor
Billiard and Chess Rooms, Cumbergate
Cathedral Library—James Cattel, librarian
Cattle Market (new), Long causeway
Cemetery, Eastfield road—Jas. Cole, lodge kpr.
Consistory Court—Rev. William Wales, M.A. chancellor of the diocese; Hy. Pearson Gates, registrar
Corn Exchange, Church street—Edward Vergette, jun. secretary
County Court, New road—Edmond Beales, Esq. judge; William. D. Gaches, registrar; Benjamin Taylor, high bailiff
Court of Common Pleas, New road—Hy. Pearson Gates, sergeant-at-mace; Nelson Wilkinson, judge; Benjamin Taylor, bailiff
Court of Probate, New road—Henry Pearson Gates, district registrar
Fire Brigade
Gaol and Sessions House, Thorpe road—Wm. Preston, governor
Gas Works—John Graves, secy. 4 Priestgate
Infirmary and Dispensary, Priestgate—J. R. Burton, house surgeon & secretary; M. Colam, dispenser
Inland Revenue Office, Angel Hotel—S. D. Offen, supervisor; C. E. Williamson, officer
Mechanics' Institute and Reading-Rooms, Wentworth street—William Edwards, librarian

Police Station, Milton st.—James Hurst, supt.
Stamp Office, Narrow Bridge st.—John Fox, sub-distributor
Town Surveyor's Office, North street—James Ruddle, surveyor
Union Workhouse—Richard Greenlay, master
Working Men's Conservative Club, Cross st.—William Edwards, secretary

PLACES OF WORSHIP.

Cathedral.

Lord Bishop—Right Rev. William Connor Magee, D.D. and D.C.L.
Dean—The Very Rev. A. P. Saunders, D.D.
Chancellor of the Diocese—Rev. Wm. Wales, M.A.
Chapter Clerk—H. P. Gates, Esq.
Registrar of the Diocese of Peterborough—H. P. Gates, Esq.
Librarian—Mr James Cattel;
Organist—Mr Haydn Keeton

Churches.

St John Baptist's—Rev. Wm. Hill, M.A. vicar; Rev. Chas. Beckett, M.D. curate; John English, parish clerk
St John Baptist's, Longthorpe—Rev. A. J. Skrimshire, M.A. and M.D. vicar
St Mark's, Lincoln road—Rev. J. N. B. Woodroffe, vicar; Edwd. R. Whittle, parish vergor
St Mary's, New road—Rev. Wm. Robt. Thomas, M.A. vicar; Rev. Fras. Jas. Calthrop, M.A. curate; John Campion, parish clerk
St Paul's, New England—Rev. Chas. R. Ball, M.A. vicar
Catholic (Holy Family and St Peter), Queen street—Very Rev. Canon Thomas Seed

Chapels.

Baptist, Queen st.—Rev. Thomas Barras
Baptist, New Fletton—Rev. Henry Watts
Baptist (Particular), Westgate
Baptist (Particular), Chapel st.—minis. various Independent, Westgate—Rev. Alex. Murray
Independent, Priestgate—Rev. E. S. Jackson
Primitive Methodist, Cobden street—
Primitive Methodist, New road—Rev. Benjamin Tomkins and Rev. Robert Richmond
United Methodist Free Church, Boroughbury—Rev. Henry Carr
Wesleyan Methodist, Wentworth st.—Rev. A. M'Tier, Rev. W. Fuller, & Rev. John Newell

Railways.

Great Eastern and London & North-Western & Midland—James Norton, station-master; Thos. Everleigh, goods agent; John Barton, local supt.; Wm. Pearson, station inspector; John Bland, goods agent for Midland; Mark Markland, locomotive supt. for Midland; John Maw, goods agent for L. & N. W.; and J. Kenyon, locom. supt. for L. & N. W.
Great Northern—Geo. Hunt, station-master; C. E. W. Ogilvie, civil engineer; Wm. H. Whitton, goods agent; Fred. Rouse, locomotive supt.; Wm. Nicholls, storekeeper; John Corble, station inspector; Matthew Brown, carrying agent; George Heald, station-master for Midland.

Carriers.

Baston—Edward Edis, Three Tuns, Saturday
Bourne—John Scotney (L. & N. W. Ry.),
Monday, Wednesday, and Friday
Coates—James Reid, Windmill, Saturday
Coates—Isaac German, Three Tuns, Saturday
Coates—George Hart, Three Tuns, Saturday
Crowland—Matthew Brown (G. N. Ry.), daily; calls at Three Tuns for parcels
Crowland—Abraham Blood, Talbot, Wed. & Sat.
Crowland—Edw. Everitt, Wheel, Wed. & Sat.
Deeping and Bourne—George Shrive, Live and Let Live, daily mail-cart
Deeping, St James—Baines, Windmill, Sat.
Elton—Thos. Goodwin, Windmill, Wed. & Sat.
Eye—Thomas Broughton, White Hart, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday
Farcet—John Fincham, Windmill, Wed. & Sat.
Gedney Hill—Thos. Seaton, White Hart, Sat.
Gedney Hill—Wm. Jackson, Windmill, Sat.
Gidding (Great)—Geo. Garratt, Windmill, Wed.
Gidding (Great)—Stn. Garratt, Windmill, Sat.
Gidding (Gt.)—M. Southwell, Three Tuns, Sat.
Glatton—J. Savage, King's Head, Wed. & Sat.
Ginton—F. Woobley, Three Tuns, Wed. & Sat.
Helpston—F. Wool, Three Tuns, Wed. & Sat.
Holme—Wm. Cox, Wagon and Horses, Sat.
Holme—Wm. Mason, Black Swan, Wednesday

Langtoft—J. Walling, Three Tuns, Saturday
Lutton—Dav. Head, Wagon and Horses, Sat.
Nassington—O. Walter, Windmill, Saturday
Nassington—Wm. Walter, Windmill, Saturday
Newborough—Jas. Johnson, White Hart, Sat.
Northborough—Wm. Meadows, Greyhound, Sat.
Northborough—Peter Kellam, Three Tuns, Sat.
Oundle—T. Goodwin, Windmill, Wed. & Sat.
Peakirk—Francis Wool, Three Tuns, Saturday
Ramsey—John Ingle, Windmill, Saturday
Ramsey Fen—B. Slote, Three Tuns, Saturday
Sawtry—T. Bellamy, Three Tuns, Wed. & Sat.
Sawtry—Z. Church, Three Tuns, Wed. & Sat.
Sawtry—Joseph Lewis, Three Tuns, Saturday
Stilton & Sawtry—W. See, Talbot, m.-cart daily
Thorney—Mrs Alcock, Talbot, Tu. Thur. & Sat.
Thorney—Ts. Mee, White Hart, Wed. & Sat.
Wansford—Frederick Shrive (mail-cart), Live and Let Live, daily
Warmington—Jas. Todd, Windmill, Saturday
Whaplode Drove—Jas. Waterfall, Talbot, Sat.
Whittlesey—W. Carter, Three Tuns, Tu. & Sat.
Whittlesey—John German, Talbot, daily
Whittlesey—S. Holding, Black Swan yd. daily
Whittlesey, Thorney, and Croyland—Hodson's mail-cart, post-office, daily
Woodnewton—B. Laudin, White Hart, Saturday
Yaxley—B. Brighty, Windmill, daily
Yaxley—John Bell, Windmill, Saturday

DOGSTHORPE HAMLET.

Allatt William, valuer
Annis Thomas, gardener
Appleby Mrs Elizabeth
Bolthamley Henry, cowkeeper
Chappell Thomas, blacksmith
Cook Robert, beerhouse
Dudley John, cowkeeper
Dudley Philip, cowkeeper

Hanger Wm. baker & shopkr.
Jarvis John, shoemaker
Matthews Jas. Louis, cattle dlr.
Payne John, cowkeeper
Perkins Richd. butcher, farmer, and vict. Bell
Phillips John, gardener
Simmons Mrs M. earthen w. dlr.

Sturton Mr John, Grange

Farmers.

Edis Isaac (and machine owner)
Hopkinson John
Parker Thos. (and brickmaker)

EASTFIELD HAMLET.

Hall Henry James, manager
Henson Thomas, cattle dealer
Knighton Mr Richard
Middleton — vict. Wheat Sheaf
Taylor Mrs Mary

Ward Mr Thomas
Farmers.
Fevre John Turner
Pawlett William

Southwell William
Stanley Samuel
Stanley Stephen
Turner George

NEWARK HAMLET.

Barker John, shoemaker
Bird Thomas, beerhouse
Branston Robt. bakr. & shopkr.
Copeland Thomas, beerhouse
Henson John, gardener

Sculthorpe Miss Sarh. schlmist.
Farmers.
Harrison William

Pank John, Ozney
Smith Sydney
Smith Thomas
Turner John
Turner Samuel

LONGTHORPE HAMLET.

Anker Chas. shopkr. & fruiterer
Gee Robt. Francis, beer retailer
Lincoln T. vict. Fox & Hounds
Morlin Godfrey, carpr. & joiner
Rollings John, coal merchant
Samworth John, carpenter

Skrimshire Rev. Arthur James,
M.A. and M.D. vicar
Strong Charles Isham, Esq.
J.P. Thorpe Hall
Valentine Robert, cattle dealer

Farmers.

Row James Ley
Rowell George Allen
Symonds George Edward
Walker Robert
Warwick James

BAINTON PARISH.

Bainton or Badington, on the borders of Lincolnshire, is bounded on the south by Barnack, and the hamlet of Ashton, on the east by Etton and Maxey, on the west by the hamlet of Pilsgate, and on the north by Lincolnshire. It contains 960 acres; and its population in 1801 was 134; in 1831, 171; in 1841, 161; and in 1871, 194 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £2002, and the gross estimated rental £2221. The principal proprietors are Lord Kesteven, lord of the manor, and the executors of the late Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam. The soil generally is of a light gravelly nature. The lands of this parish and the hamlet of Ashton were held of the manors of Peterborough, Lolham, Barnack, and Torpel.

The Village of Bainton, which is rather compact, is situate about five miles east of Stamford. Here is an ancient cross.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is an ancient stone structure, consisting of nave, chancel, north aisle and chapel, south porch, and a square tower containing four bells, and surmounted by a broach spire. It exhibits some interesting specimens of Early English character, and also of Curvilinear or late Decorated work. The north ground story is in the Early Lancet style; and the south side and chancel arch are of the Decorated type. There are fine sedilia, and the font, which is much admired, is apparently of two dates, the Lancet and the late Decorated. In the chapel attached to the north aisle is a handsome monumental tablet by Westmacott, to the memory of Maria, wife of Robert Henson, who died in 1805. The living is a curacy, annexed to the rectory of Ufford; the Rev. Thomas Paley, B.D., is the incumbent.

Bainton Hall, the property of Lord Kesteven, is now in the occupation of John L. Jackson, Esq.

Charity.—The poor's estate consists of 34 acres of land, and several small tenements, the rents of which, about £54 a year, after deducting certain quit-rents, tithes, and the land-tax, together with £5 a year to the schoolmistress for teaching the children of the parish free, and a ton of coals for the use of the school, amounting altogether to about £23, is distributed to the poor.

The School was built in 1819 by Sir John Trollope, out of the accumulated rents of the charity.

Barron Edward, gamekeeper
Burbidge Miss Ann
Hackett Mr John
Jackson John Ley, Esq., Bainton Hall
Mann Geo. vict. Blue Boar

Mann George, jun. castrator
Popple James, shoemaker
Shelton Thomas, stonemason & shopkeeper
Ward Wm. baker & shopkeeper
Watson Mrs Emily, schoolmrs.

Farmers and Graziers.

Hunt Samuel, h. Ketton
Otter Mrs Elizabeth
Stokes John
Tipping Mrs Ann Maria
Truss John, the Heath

Letters received through Barnack Post-Office.

BARNACK PARISH.

This parish, which includes the hamlets of Pilsgate and Southorpe, is bounded on the east by Bainton, on the south by Upton and Sutton, in Castor parish, on the west by Thornhaugh and Wittering, and by the river Welland on the north. It contains, exclusive of the hamlets, 2022 acres; and its population in 1801 was 613; in 1831, 812; in 1841, 860; in 1861, 581; and in 1871, 587 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3911, and the estimated gross rental £4408. "Barnack," says Bridges, "hath been famous for its stone quarries, the largest, perhaps, of any inland place in the kingdom. The monasteries of Peterborough, Crowland, Thorney, and Ramsey, with the fine churches of Holland, in Lincolnshire, and Marshland, in Norfolk, were built chiefly of this stone. It is very durable, but not easy to dress, and will saw only with sand, like marble; neither has it a beautiful whiteness. Little of it is now dug, and since these quarries have been disused, the town hath decreased in number of inhabitants and houses." An old Roman road, called from its breadth the Forty-foot way or Landike way, crossed this parish about two miles, entering at Southorpe grounds, and passing through Barnack field, by Burghley Park to Stamford. Many crosses were formerly erected in this parish, but the foundations of most of them have been removed, and their sites are scarcely known. About half of Burghley Park is in this parish.

Manor.—When the Danes ravaged and laid waste this neighbourhood in 1013, the lordship of Bernake was part of the possessions of the monastery of St Pega or Peykirke. This monastery was declared in 1048 to belong to Peterborough Abbey, and Siward, Earl of Northumberland, recovered possession of this manor. His son and successor Waltheof, Earl of Northampton, gave it to Croyland Abbey for completing the church and other buildings of the convent. After the death of Waltheof, who was beheaded at Winchester in 1076, and buried at Croyland (see page 100), this manor was seized into the hands of the crown. At the time of the Domesday survey William Fitz Ansulf, to whom Otbert was under-tenant, held 3 hides of land here, which was then valued at £4. Before the Conquest it was the freehold of Bundi and rated at 20s. Gervase Paganel, the successor of Fitz Ansulf in the honor of Dudley, possessed it in the reign of Henry II. It afterwards passed to the family of De Bernak, and in the 9th of Edward II. (1315), Hugh de Bernak was lord of the manor, and with this family it continued for several generations. In the 9th of Henry VII. (1493), John Vincent was seized of it, and in the 23d of Henry VIII. (1531), Sir Robert Brudenell was possessed of it. In the 22d of Elizabeth (1580), William Lord Burleigh levied a fine of it, and the Marquis of Exeter is the present lord of Barnack and Pilsgate, who, with Mr Thomas Close, are the principal land-owners. The lands formerly in the possession of the Abbey of Peterborough were given at its suppression to the Dean and Chapter.

The Village of Barnack, which is large, is situate on the Stamford road, about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of that town, and 9 west of Peterborough. The ground near the village where the quarries were formerly worked is now known by the simple but expressive title of the Hills and Holes. A Provident Society was established here in 1847, since which date the funds have increased from £40 to £900.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, is a very ancient structure, famous for its Saxon work, and consists of a nave of the Transition period, with aisles and chapels, a chancel in the Decorated style, south porch of Early English character, and a tower of the old Saxon type, containing four bells, and surmounted by a beautiful spire of the Early English period. "The tower arch," says Mr Sharp of Dallington Hall, "is ante-Norman, both as to style and date, that is, earlier than anything the Normans brought over to England, and as a sample of Saxon work it is unique." There are two remarkable ground stories, north and south, most admirable examples of the Transitional period; and there are three arches remarkable for their size and width of span. In the south arcade are banded shafts and nascent foliage of the Lancet period in strong relief. The south porch is very beautiful, and there is an arcade of four arches on each side, in one of which the Transitional volute is stamped on the columns. The east window is Curvilinear (late Decorated); and the sedilia and the piscinas are of the same period. It is traditionally asserted that the church was burned by the Danish king Sweyn, and that his son Canute built the tower in order to repair the damage done by his father. The benefice is a rectory in the Deanery of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £28, 10s., and now valued at £1035 per annum. The advowson is in the bishop, and the Rev. Canon Argles, M.A., is the rector. The tithes were commuted for a corn-rent in the year 1800.

The Wesleyan Chapel in the village was built in 1829; and there is a National School, erected by the Marquis of Exeter, and supported by contributions and the weekly payments of the children, aided by a Government grant; and there is also an Infant School built by the rector in 1871.

Charity.—The poor's estate consists of 51 acres of land, and several houses and tenements, which let, according to the commissioners' report, for £72, 10s. per annum. This sum, after deducting about £8 a year for tithe, and paying £25 a year to the school, is expended upon the poor of the parish.

PILESGATE or PILSGATE is a small hamlet in this parish, distant about three-quarters of a mile from Barnack, and nearly 3 from Stamford. It contains 811 acres; the rateable value of which is £1499, 10s., and the gross estimated rental is £1677. The population in 1871 was 159 souls. In the village was formerly a chapel, the site of which, says Bridges, was walled in.

SOUTHORPE is another hamlet in this parish, and is situated about 1 mile from Barnack, and 5 from Stamford. The population in 1871 was 218 souls. Ralph H. C. Nevile, Esq., and the Marquis of Exeter, own the whole of the soil; the rateable value is £2182, 13s., and the gross estimated rental £2458, 6s. The manor of Southorpe formerly belonged to the abbey of Peterborough, and the abbots had a mansion here called Southorpe Hall, which they used as a summer residence, but at the dissolution it was given to the bishop and his successors. In the nineteenth of Elizabeth (1576), Bishop Scambler surrendered it to the crown, and in the year following it was granted to William Lord Burleigh, with whose descendants it continued to the present time. There was formerly a chapel of ease to Barnack at Walcot.

Walcot Hall, the seat of Ralph H. C. Nevile, Esq., is an ancient and pleasantly situated mansion in this hamlet, about half a mile south of Barnack.

Post, Money-Order Office, and Savings Bank.—John Wigginton, postmaster. Letters arrive from Peterborough at 7.50 A.M., and are despatched at 5.55 P.M.

(Marked 1 reside at Southorpe and 2 at Pilegate).

Argles Rev. Canon Marsham, M.A. rector	Jefferies James, saddler	Wigginton John, grocer and shoemaker
Avery John, station-master	Joyce Reuben, cottager	Wigginton Samuel, shoemaker
Alderman Wm. beerh. & joinr.	Lattimore James, cottager	Wilson Mr William
Barron John, stonemason	2 Lattimore John, cottager	Woods Edward, butcher
Batten The Misses, Manor House	Martin Mr John	Woods John Edward, butcher
Blacklock Robert, coal agent	Martin Miss Mary, day school
2 Bloodworth Thos. cottager	Martin Wm. baker & shopkr.
Brown Peter, miller & baker	Meadows Mr John
Canner Mark, grocer & draper	Mease Samuel, gardener	Farmers.
Clarke Robert, blacksmith	Mitchell Rev. Harry, curate	(Marked * are Yeomen.)
2 Collins Charles, shopkeeper	Morris Jas. miller, Barnack Mill	1 Blyth George
Cox Matthew, beerhs. New Inn	1 Nevile Ralph H. C., Esq., Walcot Hall	* Close Thomas, Barnack Villa
Cox Thomas, wheelwright	Newbon Mrs Susan, cottager	2 Dalton Mrs Ann
Dalby John, baker	Owen John, station-master	* Dickens John Thomas
Dalton Robert Sisson, maltster	1 Sanders Charles, shopkeeper	1 Flint Henry
Dawson Mrs Elizabeth	Sardeson Chas. miller & baker	1 Gimson Edward (& miller)
Dickens Mrs Ann	Sharpe John, baker	Southorpe Mill
Dunn James, vict. Red Lion	Shelton Edward, stonemason	1 Herring Edward
Exton John Ths. carpenter, &c.	1 Simpson David, gamekeeper	2 Hunt & Company
2 Goodwin Thomas, cottager	Sneath John, blacksmith	Hunt Edward
Gray William, machineman	Squires Jph. beerh. & shoemkr.	2 James Leonard
Hayden Francis, wheelwright and blacksmith	Turner John, vict. Millstone , and parish-clerk	Morris James (and corn-miller)
2 Hunt Geo. brewer (Hunt & Co.)	Walter Isaiah, tailor	Barnack Mill
2 Hunt Mrs Julia	Watson William, butcher	2 Morton James
Inckley John P. shoemaker	Whitman Thos. Natl. schoolmr.	Palmer Henry
		* Sardeson Charles (& miller)
		1 Woods John, High Farm
		1 Woolhouse John

CASTOR PARISH.

Castor, or Castre, includes the hamlet of Ailesworth, and is bounded on the south by the river Nene, which divides it from Huntingdonshire; on the north by Marholm, on the east by Thorpe, and on the west by Sutton. The parish, with its hamlet, contains 4797 acres, of the rateable value of £5686, and a gross estimated rental of £6117. The population, in 1801, was 815; in 1831, 1198; in 1841, 1313; in 1851, 1153; in 1861, 745; and in 1871, 680. The land is principally arable, of a gravelly nature, resting on a subsoil of limestone, with which the parish abounds. The manorial rights belong to George Wentworth Fitzwilliam (now a minor), and the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, who are also owners of about two-thirds of the soil.

Manor.—King Edgar gave Castor to the abbey of Peterborough when it was rebuilt, after being burned down by the Danes about the year 870. At the time of the Domesday survey, the abbey held here three hides of land, which remained in its possession until the dissolution of the monasteries by Henry VIII. In the twenty-sixth of that king's reign (1534), the income of this lordship was valued at £34, 9s. 2d. per annum, the perquisites of the court 5s. 10d., and the profits arising from 105 acres of wood rated at £10, 8s. 7d. Upon the erection of the See of Peterborough, this manor was conferred upon the Dean and Chapter, and there was another manor here containing three hides, which at the time of the Conqueror's survey was held by five knights of the abbot of Peterborough. In the first of Richard I. (1189), the manor was in the hands of Turolde de Castre, and descended to his posterity. Those manors were called Butler's and Turolde's manors. In the sixteenth of James I. (1618), Sir William Fitzwilliam, who had held them by fealty and a certain annual-rent of the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough, died seized of them. From this nobleman they descended to his son and his successors, and have continued with the family to the present time.

Castor, from the Latin Castra, a camp, occupies the site of an important Roman colony, and was formerly the station Durobrovis or Durobrivæ, mentioned by Antoninus. Numerous vestiges of the occupancy of the Anglo-Romans have been discovered in various places, and Mr E. T. Artis, of Milton, in 1820-27, having devoted much research in exploring the vicinity, succeeded in bringing to light several interesting objects—fragments of mosaic pavements, Roman baths, excavated remains of Roman buildings, &c. In 1822, Mr Artis discovered some magnificent remains of Roman pavements, and of a Roman building, also the remains of a Roman pottery—the oven, modelling tools, earthen vessels, bottles, &c., in which were indented figures, inscriptions, and dedications, fragments of red-ware in relief, and parts of moulded heads, probably intended as ornaments for urns. In a field called Pailgrounds, near Helpstone, a Roman pavement was found in 1827, and human skeletons and other antiquities were discovered in a field between Orton Longville and Woodston, near Peterborough. Log canoes, with spears and spear-heads of iron and brass, fishing implements, &c., were found in the bog which forms the bank of the old river, at its junction with the Nene at Horsey, near Peterborough. There is in the British Museum a canoe of similar construction, but more modern, which was brought from the Sandwich Islands by Captain Cook. Camden, in his "Magna Britannia," says, "Doubtless this has been a place of more than ordinary note, because in the fields adjoining such quantities of Roman coins are thrown up, that one would really think they had been sown there; almost all of them are of copper. They are the coins of many emperors, from Trajan to Valens. The Roman road, Ermine street, passed from Castor and Waternewton, at the south side of the Nene, where several extensive Roman buildings and antiquities have also been discovered. In Castorfield, near Gunwade ferry, are two long stones, standing upon a balk, which erroneous tradition hath given out to be two draughts of arrows from Alwalton churchyard thither, the one of Robin Hood, the other of Little John; but the truth is, they were set up to testify that the carriages of stone from Barnack to Gunwade ferry, and from thence to be conveyed to St Edmundsbury, should pass that way toll free. They are still called St Edmund's stones, and the balk, St Edmund's balk. The stones on the top are nicked after the manner of arrows, in memory of St Edmund, who was shot to death with arrows."

About the middle of the seventh century, during the Anglo-Saxon period, a convent was founded here by St Kyneburgha, the third of four daughters of Penda, the pagan King of the Mercians, and the wife of Alfred, King of Northumbria, who, says Bridges, "quitted the splendour and royalty of a court to preside over the virgins of her own convent. From her it hath the name of Kyneburgcaster, and by abbreviation, Castre, which it still retains." A branch of the Roman road here, which forms a ridge in Castorfield, is still, it is said, known as "Lady Connybarrow's Way," and is evidently a corruption of Kyneburgha. She alone, of the four daughters of Penda, was married; and the convent which she built here, and which is supposed to have stood on the bank of the river Nene, was destroyed by the Danes in the year 1010. St Kyneburgha built the church of Castor in 650, and here she died and was buried. In the beginning of the eleventh century, her body, with that of her sister, St Kyniswitha, were removed by Abbot Elsinus to Peterborough, where a shrine was placed over their remains. The anniversary of their translation was kept by the monks on the 7th of March. Mr M. H. Bloxam, a high authority in sepulchral lore, is of opinion that the stone now preserved in the new building of the cathedral, was a sculptured monument erected over the relics of these saints. (See Peterborough, page 605.)

The Church of St Kyneburgha is a noble and spacious structure, occupying a commanding situation on a gentle acclivity, "the village itself nestling around it." The plan of the building is cruciform, and exhibits a remarkable combination of architectural styles, principally Norman, with some fine specimens of Early English and Decorated character, which have been added at different periods. It consists of a chancel, nave, with aisles and clerestory, north door and south porch, north and south transepts, the latter having an eastern aisle, and a magnificent tower of great beauty, which rises from the intersection, and displays almost every variety of Anglo-Norman moulding and ornament, and is, according to Mr Paley, a type of the central tower of Peterborough Cathedral. It stands on four massive piers, the capitals and bases of which have been restored, and is surmounted by battlements, and a pyramidal spire of pure Decorated work of the fourteenth century. The battlements exhibit some curious sculpture, and the two upper stories of the tower present a very enriched appearance, being embellished with two open arches, and continued tiers of large and small arcades, with windows, niches, parapet, &c.; and the scallop moulding with which the masonry is covered gives it the appearance of overlapping scales. Nearly all the details of this church are of great beauty; but the Norman work, especially the tower, is by far the richest work of its date in the neighbourhood, and is probably not surpassed by any parish church in the kingdom.

The nave roof, which is a very good one of flat open woodwork, has been restored, and the ceiling is decorated with angels presenting shields, darts, &c., and others holding the arms of the See of Peterborough, and models of the church. The aisles are separated from the nave by three arches. These and the south arch of the transept are of geometric work, dating about 1250. The present inner doorway, which is supposed to be the original outer one, would seem to be contemporary with the building of the aisles; it is of massive oak, cross framed, and having the original lock and key, which, from their great size and strength, are very curious and interesting relics of early times. The key is nearly 15 inches in length, and has been handed down for about six hundred years. The door of this aisle has been elaborately carved, and round its margin there is this inscription, embossed on the wood:—

✠ RICARDVS BEBY RECTOR ECCLEIE DE CASTRE FECIT.

No rector of this name, however, appears in any of the registers. In the south transept are three windows, one of three lights with plain-headed circles, which seem to have originally had quatrefoils in them. The eastern aisle of this transept has two windows, with plain intersecting tracery, and at the east end of the south side is a segmental arch, with part of a floriated cross beneath. The north transept is raised above the floor, and is separated from the aisle by a stone screen, which once held the image and shrine of St Kyneburgha, and where her remains had been deposited previous to their removal to Peterborough. An embattled staircase in the north transept leads to the bell-roof, which is low and flat; above it is a curious chamber, once occupied probably by a priest or a monk; it has a Perpendicular roof, with wall-pieces, corbels, and some good figures, similar to those in the nave roof; and here is an interesting little chest, about three feet long, once used as the alms-box. In the north wall is a double aumbry, or place where alms were deposited for distribution to the poor; and on this wall are some interesting fresco paintings, much obliterated; the lower one representing the martyrdom of St Catherine, and the one above appears to be the hurling of the wicked into hell. In this aisle are two Decorated windows of three and five lights, with square heads and net tracery, and the nave arcade on this side has octagonal piers and pointed arches. The Norman pillars, on which the central tower rests, have peculiarly carved capitals; that on the north side of the chancel arch represents Samson killing the lion, and a boar hunt; that in the north transept describes the figure of a woodman cutting down trees, an animal browsing on a tree, and other figures of animals. On the other capital is the figure of a man gathering grapes, and in the south transept, on the west capital, are two warriors fighting with maces.

The chancel contains, amongst other interesting details, two broad sedilia, with arches supported on a corbel, and two piscinas, one double, and very richly carved, the other cinquefoiled, with a singular square flue. The seats in the nave are low and open, and the ancient custom of dividing the sexes is here retained. In the walls of the churchyard are numerous remains of coped coffin lids, many of them bearing floriated crosses. In the south wall, on the outside, are two sepulchral recesses; beneath one of them is a stone coffin of the thirteenth century, and on the inside, in the transept, is a stone effigy of a priest. On the 4th June 1795, the tower was struck by lightning, which did considerable damage, destroying both the clock and clock-house, and melting the bell wire; but the whole was restored, and the present clock put up in 1818, at a cost of £84. The benefice is a rectory of the yearly value of about £610, to which is attached 166 acres of glebe, 6 acres of which are in the parish of Newborough. The advowson is in the bishop, and the Rev. John James Beresford, B.D., is the incumbent. The Rectory is a good residence, situate near the church.

The Independent Chapel here was built in 1848.

The National School was erected in 1829 by the late Earl Fitzwilliam, by whom it was entirely supported, and since his decease it has been chiefly maintained by his successor, the late Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam, who appointed the present master from the training college at Peterborough. There is an Infant School in the village, erected by the late incumbent in 1861, which is supported principally by the present rector. Both these schools are aided by Government grants and the weekly payments of the children; they are well attended, the former having an average of about sixty boys and girls together. The infants' school has an average of eighty.

The Village of Castor, which is long and scattered, is 4 miles west from Peterborough by the high road, $5\frac{1}{2}$ by rail, and 1 mile from the Castor Station of the London and North-Western Railway.

Milton House is the seat and property of George Wentworth Fitzwilliam, now a minor in his eighth year, eldest son of the Hon. George Wentworth Fitzwilliam, lately deceased, who was third son of Charles William Wentworth, D.C.L., third Earl Fitzwilliam, born in 1817, married 1865. The mansion is now occupied by the Hon. Mrs G. W. Fitzwilliam, widow of the late Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam, who holds it in right of G. W. Fitzwilliam, her eldest son. The present mansion, which was partly erected in the reign of Henry V., and completed in that of Henry VIII., was the residence of Sir William Fitzwilliam, high sheriff of this county in 1523 and 1528, and it still contains characteristics of the period in which it was built. Amongst the pictures here is one of Mary of Scotland, painted in 1582, and inscribed, "This picture was given to Sir William Fitzwilliam by Mary Queen of Scots, on the morning of her execution, for the humane treatment she had met with during her imprisonment at Fotheringhay, whereof he was governor." The mansion is situated in Milton Park, about $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles from the village, on the road to Peterborough; the park is finely wooded and well stocked with deer, and is much frequented by pleasure parties from the surrounding neighbourhoods.

Charity.—Robert Wright, in 1734, left a rent charge of £2, 12s. per annum, to be distributed in bread to the poor. This charity, which was lost for some years, is now restored.

AILESWORTH is a hamlet in the parish, and adjoining the village of Castor. It has an area of 1324 acres, of the rateable value of £1419, and a gross estimated rental of £1670. It contained, in 1871, 87 houses and 394 inhabitants; and the tithes were commuted in 1844 for £208, 7s. 10d. The soil belongs principally to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

SUTTON, another hamlet in this parish, was formerly a chapelry, but is now constituted a vicarage. The area is about 888 acres, situated on the northern bank of the Nene; and contained in 1841 a population of 121; in 1851, 129; in 1861, 112; and in 1871, 99, inhabiting several dispersed cottages, and two or three farmhouses. It is distant two miles from Castor, two E.S.E. from Wansford, and six W. from Peterborough. The soil consists of loam and clay; and the principal proprietors are Mrs Hopkinson, Rev. William Hopkinson, and the Hon. Charles Wentworth Fitzwilliam. The Ecclesiastical Commissioners possess a small portion of the land. The manor of Sutton was given at a very early period by Thorold Fitz Antekil to the abbey of Burgh, where it remained till the dissolution, when it was conferred on the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough, who are its present possessors.

The Church, dedicated to St Michael, is an ancient edifice, consisting of a chancel, nave and south aisle, chantry and bell turret, with one bell. It was restored in 1867, from designs by Mr Sykes, at a cost of £800, when the chancel and chantry were rebuilt, and the church fitted up with open sittings. Two stained windows were added at the same time—that to the east by the Rev. William Hopkinson, commemorative of his uncle; the other, in memory of Mr Palmer, was erected by his widow. The living is a vicarage of the yearly value of £240, in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough, and incumbency of the Rev. William Murton, M.A.

UPTON.—This is a hamlet and chapelry also in the parish of Castor, from which it is distant about two miles, three from Wansford, and six west from Peterborough. It contains 1180 acres, of the rateable value of £1507; its estimated gross rental is £1611; and the population in 1841 was 113, and in 1871, 107. The executors of the Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam are lords of the manor, and, with the exception of 10 acres of glebe, the entire owners of the soil. The division of the branches of the Roman road called the "Forty-foot way" and "Long-ditch" occurs near the village.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, is an ancient stone building of mixed styles of architecture, and consists of a nave, north aisle, and chancel; the latter was built by the parishioners in 1842, when the church was repaired by the then bishop of the diocese. In 1863 it was newly roofed, and otherwise considerably restored. In the north aisle is a handsome monument, in memory, it is supposed, of William Dove, the son of Bishop Dove, the chaplain to Queen Elizabeth, who styled him her "Silver Dove," and by whose recommendation he was elected Bishop of Peterborough in 1600. The bishop resided at the manor-house of Upton, which, it is supposed, had previously been a residence in connection with the monastery of Peterborough. In an orchard near the church there is a curious sun-dial. The living is a vicarage, valued at £240 a year, in the gift of the bishop, and incumbency of the Rev. William Andrew, M.A. The tithes were commuted for £239.

Letters received through the Peterborough Post-Office.

(Marked 1 reside at Ailesworth.)

Fitzwilliam, The Hon. Mrs G. Wentworth, Milton House	Bodman Joseph Baker, surgn.	Darby John Thos. wheelwright
Almond Mr John	1 Boyall William, cottager	Darby William, shopkeeper
Andrew Rev. Wm. M.A. vicar of Upton & rural dean, The Elms	1 Briggs William, wheelwright	1 Drake Mrs Mary, cottager
1 Ball Mrs Catherine, coal mer.	Carter Geo. huntsman, Milton	1 Drake Robert, cottager
Beresford Rev. John James, B.D., rector	Chappell Samuel, blacksmith	1 Ellis William, cottager
	Christmas Thomas, shopkpr.	1 Fitz John Thomas, shopkpr.
	Cooke John, carpenter	Fox James, tailor
	1 Coulson John, cottager	Fox William, annuitant

Freeman Richard, miller	Samworth Mrs Elizab. butcher	Yeoman John, Esq. land agent, Milton Ferry
1 Gaskell Mr John Robert	Sewell John, cottager	Farmers and Graziers.
Gibbons Thomas, machineman	Sharpe Mrs Jane, shopkr. & bkr.	Berridge William
Glass Henry, nationl. schoolmr.	1 Sharpe Robt. Geo. grocer & bkr.	Callow Thomas
Goodyer Mrs Emma, grocer & bkr.	1 Smart Edward, blacksmith	1 Carter Thomas
Hales John, stonem & builder.	Smith Charles & Letitia, vict.	Carter Thomas, jun.
Hart John, carpenter	Royal Oak	Darby John Thomas
1 Hobbs George, beerh. Barley Mow	Smith Mrs Sarah, The Grove	Dickens Mrs Ann
Horden Wm. parish clerk & P.-O.	1 Smith Thos. Hill, vict. Wheat Sheaf , and contractor	FitzJohn Richard
Hunt John, baker and shopkr.	Stanger James, shoemaker	FitzJohn Richard, jun.
Jacques George, gamekeeper, Milton Ferry	Sykes Alf. architot. Milton Ferry	1 Howson Francis
Lee Geo. house steward, Milton	Upchurch John, vict. George & Dragon	Hunt Mrs Frances
1 Newbon Wm. blacksmith	Warwarr —, butcher	Longfoot Richard
Oliver Mrs Catherine, shoemkr.	Warraker Jno. gardener, Milton	Marriott Jon. Ths. Bellsiz Ldg.
Panter Edward, shoemaker	White F. A. Esq., Castor House	Popple Joseph
Panter Mrs Elizab. shoemaker	Wilson James, beerhouse	1 Popple William
Popple Samuel, vict. Fitz-Williams Arms and baker	Wootton Wm. tailor & shopkr.	Sewell John
	Wright Mrs Mary, Church close	1 Sisney Edmund Hilsworth

SUTTON AND UPTON DIRECTORY.

(Marked 1 reside at Upton.)

1 Almond John, farmer, Upton Lodge	Hopkinson Mrs Mary Ann, Manor House	1 Tebbutt Mrs John (Mary Ann), farmer, Manor House
1 Dickens Mrs Sophia, shopkeeper	Murton Rev. Wm. M.A. vicar	1 Tebbutt Mrs Wm. (Mary A.) farmer
	Palmer Mrs Sarah, farmer
	Pauley Samuel, shopkeeper

Letters received through the Peterborough Post-Office.

ETTON PARISH

Includes the hamlet of Woodcroft, and is bounded on the east and south by Northborough and Marholm, on the west by Helpston, and on the north by Maxey. It contains 1262 acres, of the rateable value of £2661, and an estimated gross rental of £2858; and its population in 1801 was 95; in 1831, 118; in 1841, 118; in 1851, 146; in 1861, 160; and in 1871, 171 souls. The soil is various, and belongs principally to the executors of the Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam (lords of the manor), and Mr Daniel Webster. The Midland and Great Northern Railways pass through this parish, which was one of the lordships that was wasted by the Danes, under Sweyn, in 1013.

Manor.—Etton anciently belonged to the abbey of Peterborough, and the earliest possessor of it on record is Anketil de St Medard, who held it of the abbot, by knight's service. In the reign of Edward II., this manor was in the hands of Bartholomew de Badlesmere, who having refused admittance to Isabel, the King's consort, to his principal seat, Leeds Castle, in Kent, and joined the rebellious barons, was beheaded at Canterbury, and his estates confiscated to the crown. Having conveyed this manor, some time before his decease, to John Russell, it again reverted to the family of St Medard. The family of De Northburgh were the next possessors of Etton; and in 1405, Sir Thomas Rempston was lord of the manor. In 1484, it was in the possession of Thomas Pulter, Esq.; and in the seventeenth of Henry VIII. (1525), it belonged to Sir William Fitzwilliam, Knt, from whom it lineally descended to the late Hon. George W. Fitzwilliam, whose son, G. W. Fitzwilliam, its present lord, is now a minor.

The Village of Etton is small, and situate about seven miles N. by W. from Peterborough, and three nearly south from Market Deeping.

The Church, dedicated to St Stephen, is an ancient stone edifice, consisting of chancel, nave, side aisles, south porch, and a small square tower, containing three bells, and surmounted by a hexagonal spire. It has specimens of Norman and Saxon architecture. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Peterborough, rated in the King's books at £9, 9s. 2½d., and now worth about £400 per annum. The tithes were commuted for 200 acres of land. The patronage is in the Fitzwilliam family, and the Rev. Charles Mossop, M.A., is the incumbent. The Rectory House, which stands in the village, is a substantial Gothic dwelling, built by the present rector. The Sunday School is supported by voluntary contributions.

WOODCROFT is a hamlet in this parish, about one mile south of Etton, and three and a half south of Market Deeping. The Old Manor House, called Woodcroft Castle, the residence of Joseph Spencer, Esq., is supposed to have been built in the thirteenth century; it is surrounded by a moat, and is celebrated in history for the gallant defence made by its little garrison, under the direction of the Rev. Dr Hudson, a native of Westmoreland, and chaplain to Charles I., who lost his life in defending the place against the parliamentary troops, on the 6th of June 1648. His death was marked by the most savage ferocity, as he was killed in the moat into which he fell, after his fingers were chopped off while clinging to the parapet. The use made of this incident by Sir Walter Scott, in his novel of "Woodstock," is well known. The executors of the late Hon. George W. Fitzwilliam are lords of the manor.

Post Office.—Letters received here through the Market Deeping Post-Office.

Mossop Rev. Chas. M.A. rector	Farmers and Graziers.	Smith Henry, Woodcroft
Neaverson Charles, parish clerk	Edgson Mrs Isabella	Spencer Jos. Woodcroft Castle
White James, wheelwright	Pears Mrs Mary Ann	Whitehead William

EYE PARISH.

Eye, or as it is called in ancient records, Eya, or Eea, or the island lying north of Peterborough, from its frequently being surrounded by water in winter, before the drainage of the fen. The name has remained for centuries almost unchanged; it is derived from Ea, which in the Anglo-Saxon signifies an island. The parish is bounded on the east by Cambridgeshire, on the south and west by the borough of Peterborough, and on the north by Borough Fen. It contains 2682 acres; its population in 1801 was 501; in 1831, 1122; in 1841, 1359; in 1851, 1442; in 1861, 1375; in 1871, 1396 souls. The estimated gross rental of the parish is £6689, and the rateable value is £6039. The principal owners of the land are the Ecclesiastical Commissioners (lords of the manor), the Duke of Bedford, Edward Samuel Knipe, Esq., George Moore, Esq., and Doctor Baumgartner. The surrounding country is flat, and principally arable.

Manor.—No mention being made of Eye in the Domesday Book, it is supposed to have been included in the survey of Peterborough, more especially as we find it in the possession of the abbey at an early period. Upon the erection of the see of Peterborough, after the dissolution of the abbey, the manor of Eye, with the tithes and tithe barn, were given to the bishop and his successors, and the bishop holds a court leet and court baron.

EYEBURY was a cell to the convent, in the liberty of Eye, of which it was a member. At the suppression, it was let to Sir John Russell, at the annual rent of £13, 6s. 8d., and in the thirty-third of Henry VIII. (1541), he obtained a grant of the manor and capital messuage, and certain other lands which belonged to the abbey. His descendant, the Duke of Bedford, is the present possessor.

NORTHOLM was another cell to the abbey, and a member of Eye. The monks obtained the privilege of a weekly market here on Thursday, and an annual fair for two days, beginning on the feast of the exaltation of the Holy Cross. In 1541 the manor was given to the bishop of the diocese, and the cell converted into a farmhouse. There was formerly a chapel in connection with it.

SINGLESOLT, or SINGLESOLE, with the marsh of Peakirk and Eye, and the hermitage of Singlesholt, was conformed to the convent of Burgh, in the first of Richard I. (1189). About the year 1290 a chapel, dedicated to St Michael, was built here, "of wood and stone, covered with lead, and having in it seven glass windows, of elegant workmanship." In 1541 this manor also was given to the bishop and his successors.

The Village of Eye, which is both pleasant and improving, is about half a mile in length, and situate on high ground about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. of Peterborough. Bridges tells us that in his time it contained nearly a hundred families, and that the inhabitants formerly supported themselves by fishing and fowling. An alarming incendiary fire broke out here in November 1848, in the stackyard of a farmer, which, aided by a hurricane then blowing, made dreadful havoc, and in a short time consumed several stacks of corn, out-buildings, cottages, &c., and had not the wind providentially veered to the south, the village must have been totally destroyed.

The Church, dedicated to St Matthew the Evangelist, is a handsome cruciform structure, in the Early English style, erected in 1846, at a cost of £3000, on the site of the old chapel, which was consecrated in 1543, and which, according to Mr Paley, belonged to the Geometric or Early Decorated era, and is consequently of a date at least two centuries earlier. This old chapel was served by a monk from the abbey, and the chaplain was obliged every year to present his key at the altar in token of his holding it at the pleasure of the abbey.

The present church has neither aisles nor clerestory. It consists of a nave, chancel, transepts, and tower, in which are two bells, and from which rises a very fine spire, 180 feet in height, built in 1857 by subscription, at an additional expense of £700; and a new organ was added, at a further cost of £350. The spire is without parapet, and is visible at a great distance. At its base are two-light windows, and near the summit are smaller lights. The belfry windows are of two lights, with quatrefoil in the head. The nave has on each side four trefoiled lancets, and at each end of the transepts are two-light windows, with pointed quatrefoils above. The east window is a handsome triplet, filled with memorial stained glass, and represents the principal scenes in the life of our Lord. In the centre light are the Crucifixion, the Resurrection, and the Ascension. It was executed by Gibbs, of London, and is the gift of Miss Moore. The pulpit and desk are at the east corner of the north transept. The sanctuary is raised three steps above the floor of the nave, which has a plain timber roof; and there is a gallery at the west end. There are two entrances, one under the tower, and the other at the north end of the north transept. The great defect of the church is the short chancel, to which a small vestry is attached. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Peterborough, valued in the king's books at £16, and now worth about £370 a year. The patronage is vested in the bishop, and the Rev. George Thurnell, M.A., is the incumbent. The Vicarage House stands at the east end of the village.

The Methodist Chapel here was rebuilt in 1823, and a "United Free Church," belonging to the same body, was erected in 1851.

The National School, for boys and girls, was built in 1855, at a cost of £1100; and an Infant School for 200 children is about to be erected.

A small Cemetery was formed here in 1866, at the expense of the ratepayers. And there is a station near the village belonging to the Midland Railway, which passes through the parish.

Post-Office.—William Parr, sub-postmaster. Letters received through Peterborough Post-Office.

Andrew James, carpenter
Aahling Alfred, tailor
Bainton George, tailor
Beecroft John, Esq.
Broughton Thos. carrier, Green
Brown James, shopkeeper and horse clipper
Canwell John, rat catcher
Chadband Geo. grocer & draper
Chapman Samuel, coal dealer
Collins Jph. miller & corn mert.
Cook Edward, beerhouse
Cook William, brewer
Cooper John, beerhouse
Copeland Thomas, beerhouse
Deboo James, rat catcher
Dickinson Jno. Tho. nat. schlmr.

Fletcher Daniel, shopkeeper
Fletcher Mr Thomas
Forth John, carpenter
Fowler Jno. farm bailiff, Eyebury
Green Francis, sen. shopkpr.
Greenfield Wm. beerho. Green
Griffin Mr Daniel
Griffin Joseph, butcher
Hall Mrs Eliz. H. shopkeeper
Harrod Thomas, baker
Hawkins John, machineman
Howett Robert, sexton
Ivens Mrs Ann
Langley Wm. bricklar. & buildr.
Leeds Mrs —, Eyebury
Ley Wm. baker & shopkeeper
Little Mr Charles

Little Mr Joseph
Love James, carpenter
Moore Miss Catherine
Moore Mrs Elizabeth
Moore George, Esq.
Moore Miss Kate
Moore Wm. salesman & tax colr.
Morris John, watchmaker
Nix Benj. baker & corn dealer
Odum John, corn miller
Oldham Henry, baker, Green
Parr Wm. grocer, druggist, & P.O.
Pask Geo. gardener & brewer
Southwell Thomas, cooper
Spies Robt. baker & shopkpr.
Spires Thos. butcher & beerho.
Steels James, grocer & draper.

Steels Thomas, harness maker
 Stimpson Samuel, machineman
 Taverner Robert, registrar of births, deaths, and marriag.
 for Crowland district
 Thompson Jas. station master
 Thompson Robt. reliev. officer
 Thurnell Rev. Geo. M. A. rector
 Twelvetree Charles, carpenter
 Whittle Mr James George
 Williamson, George, baker
 Wright William, coal dealer

Inns and Taverns.

Blue Boar, Samuel Love, and carpenter
Grey Hound, Fredk. Hunting,
The Green
Red Lion, John Copeland
Spade and Shovel, Thos. Steels

Blacksmiths.

Hogg James
 Jones Charles
 Porter Daniel

Boot and Shoe Makers.

Andrews James
 Bonfield William
 Copeland Samuel
 Griggs John, The Green
 Squires Henry
 Stocks James

Butchers.

Griffin Mrs Hannah
 Griffin Joseph
 Inglett William
 Sharp Charles

Farmers.

Beecroft John

Beharrell Thomas, The Green
 Broughton John
 Cotterrill George, Northolm
 Edwards Thos. Foster, Tanholt
 Fowler John
 Griffin Wm. Cue, The Green
 Griffin Php. Powder Blue Farm
 Holmes Mr David
 Leeds Alfred, Eyebury
 Moore William George
 Pank Henry, Singlesole Farm
 Richardson Thomas
 Twelvetree John
 Twelvetree Robert

Wheelwrights.

Cox H. C.
 Griffin William Cue, The Green
 Steels William
 Tilley Robert

GLINTON PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Peakirk, on the south by Werrington, on the west by Etton, and on the north by the river Welland and Northborough. It contains 1489 acres; its population in 1801 was 314; in 1831, 414; in 1841, 404; in 1851, 428; in 1861, 421; and in 1871, 407 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3445; and the estimated gross rental, £3725. The principal proprietors are the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough (the lords of the manor), and Messrs Isaac Scott, James Webster, Henry Webster, James Cartwright, W. B. Giles, Mrs C. Webster, and Samuel Vergette. The lordship is low ground, and of a gravelly or stony soil. Glinton was formerly a hamlet in the liberty of Peakirk. This lordship belonged originally to the monastery of St Pega, at Peakirk, but was afterwards given to the abbey of Peterborough. At the time of the general survey the abbey held three hides here, which, with 100 acres of meadow, and a wood 10 furlongs in length and 9 in breadth, was valued then and before the Conquest at 60s. Glinton continued in the possession of the monks till the dissolution of the religious houses, and at that period their estate was valued at £57, 13s. 8d., and the profits of a court at 10s. 2d. In the 33d of Henry VIII. (1541), the manor with the lands and tenements which the abbey held here, were granted to the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough.

The Village of Glinton, which is pretty large, is situate about 3 miles S.S.E. of Market Deeping, and 6 miles north from Peterborough.

The Church, dedicated to St Benedict, or St Thomas of Canterbury, according to some writers, is an ancient stone structure, consisting of a nave with clerestory and aisles, south porch, north door, an embattled chancel with a north chantry for a lady chapel, and a quadrangular tower containing a peal of six large bells, and surmounted by a beautiful and lofty octagonal spire, said to be the finest in the county. The general architectural style of the building appears to be of the Late Decorated, while that of the tower and spire is partly of the Perpendicular character. The church was restored at a cost of £700 in 1855, when it was fitted throughout with low open carved oak seats; those in the chancel are arranged as stalls against a low screen, and all are ornamented with carved poppy heads of various designs. The oak pulpit, which stands on a stone stem, is beautifully carved; opposite is the reading desk, and between them, set in a stone socket, is a fine lectern with one revolving desk. This was made after the model of an old one, a fragment of which was accidentally discovered at Peakirk. A massive square Norman font, with a richly carved bason, stands at the south door. Under the south-east chancel window is a bench for sedilia, and a remarkable drain for the piscina. In the chantry, under a pointed canopy, is a richly decorated piscina; there is another piscina in the south aisle. The living is a rectory valued at £400 per annum, in the patronage of the Dean and

Chapter of Peterborough, and incumbency of the Rev. William Cape, M.A. In 1809 the Commissioners of Enclosure allotted to the rector 179a. 4p. of land in Ginton, and 116a. 2r. 17p. in Peakirk, in lieu of tithes.

The National School is endowed with about £40 a year, arising from land purchased with £100 left by Anne Ireland in 1711. It was built in 1845 by subscription, and is supported partly by the weekly payments of the children, and partly by the trustees, who make the master's salary equal to £60 a year.

The church estate consists of thirty acres and several tenements which let for about £77 a year.

Post-Office.—Letters received through the Market Deeping Post-Office.

Ashling Geo. tailor & shopkr.	Pollard Jno. national schoolmr.	Webster Mrs Fanny
Burgess Misses Mary and Jane	Pridmore James, butcher	Webster Jas. jun. grocer & drapr.
Burbidge John, cottager	Pridmore Wm. grocer & draper	Williams Mr Benjamin
George William, beerhouse	Quincey John, machineman
Griffin Miss Ann	Robinson Henry, cottager	Farmers.
Howell Thomas, beerhouse and harness maker	Sargeant, Mr Edward	(Marked * are Yeomen.)
Hubbard John, tailor	Scott Isaac, gentleman	*Giles William Bodger
Parnham Wm. land surveyor and rate collector	Simpson Edward, blacksmith & agricultural implement mkr.	Kew John
Patchett Mrs Jane, vict. Blue Bell	Smith Geo. vict. Six Bells	Smith Maurice
Percival Mrs Sarah	Vergette Mrs Lydia	Smith William
	Vickers Arthur, carpenter and vict. Crown	*Vergette Samuel
		*Webster George
		*Webster James

HELPSTON PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Etton, on the south by Marholm, and on the north and west by Maxey. It contains 1754 acres, and its population in 1801 was 314; in 1831, 414; in 1841, 513; in 1851, 697; in 1861, 763; and in 1871, 736 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £5440, and the estimated gross rental £6245. Limestone is found here in abundance, and there is a limekiln, as well as a brick and tile manufactory, in the parish. The executors of the Hon. George W. Fitzwilliam are lords of the manor of Helpston, and Lord Kesteven is the lord of Torpel Manor. The principal landowners are the executors just named, Christ's College, Cambridge, Mr Charles Simpson, and Mr Daniel Webster.

Manor.—The lordship of Helpston anciently belonged to the monastery of Peakirk; there is no mention made of it in Domesday Book, but in the year 1146 it was confirmed to the abbey of Peterborough, by Pope Eugenius, and in the first of Richard I. (1189), was held by Roger de Helpeston of the abbot, by the service of a fourth part of one knight's fee. In the sixth of Edward II. (1312), John de Higham levied a fine of it, and from him it passed to Thomas Wake. In the third of Henry V. (1416), Richard Tyndale died seized of this lordship, which was held of the abbot of Peterborough, by knight's service. It was afterwards in the possession of the family of Mowlesworth, and in the reign of Henry VIII. it passed from them to the Fitzwilliam family, with whom it still continues.

The Village of Helpston, situated about seven miles from Peterborough and four from Market Deeping, is long and straggling, but from the excellent stonework of many of the houses, and the ancient and beautiful village cross, which is contemporary with the spire, and stands in the centre, it has a very picturesque appearance. The head of the cross is gone, but the steps, base, and shaft remain perfect. The descendants of David Clapham, a noted proctor in the Arches, who died in 1551, resided here. The etymology of the name, as given by Bridges, is Helpo's Town. Near the cross is a monument of Ketton stone, built in 1869 by subscription, to the memory of John Clare, the "Northamptonshire peasant poet," and author of several excellent poems, who was born here July 13th, 1793, and died May 20th, 1864, in the Northampton Lunatic Asylum, where he had been an inmate for some years. The Midland Railway Company have a station here about half a mile from the village ; and here also are the extensive paper mills of Alfred Towgood, Esq., for the manufacture of air-dried brown paper. The mills are worked by means of a perpetual spring which rises in the farm of Mr T. P. Wright. The Methodist Reformers have a small chapel here, built in 1863 by subscription ; and the Primitive Methodists' chapel was built in 1871, at a cost of £280 ; the former will hold 250, and the latter 300 hearers. The National School, with a residence for the teachers, was erected in 1856 from funds out of the poor's estate, which consists of about 19 acres of land, seven cottages, and a blacksmith's shop, which now let for £40 a year, and which is appropriated to the maintenance of the school. In 1811, John Porter left a rent-charge of £40 a year to the poor of this parish ; but the charity is now transferred to a coal and clothing club belonging to Helpston and Etton parishes.

The Church, dedicated to St Botolph, is a very ancient structure, consisting of a nave with clerestory and aisles, south porch, chancel, and a fine square, octagonal tower, containing four bells, and surmounted by a low pyramidal spire. The belfry, which is at the top of the octagon, has windows of two lights of net tracery ; and the spire has two-light windows in the non-cardinal faces ; the lowest stage has trefoiled openings ; and beneath the embattled summit of the octagon is a string of ball-flowers. The church was extensively repaired in 1847, when it was newly roofed and repewed ; and in 1865 the tower and spire were taken down and rebuilt, and the three arches, communicating respectively with the nave and the two aisles, were also rebuilt. It has specimens of various styles of architecture. The capitals of the arches are pure Norman work, whilst their two corbels possess the Early English, and the arch the Transitional character. The lower part of the tower belongs to Early Norman of the thirteenth century, and the upper part has been converted into the present beautiful tower and spire of the Decorated style of the fourteenth century. There is a handsome arcade with a circular arch in the Transitional portion of the edifice, and an admirable Transitional doorway with the volute of the same order, at the top of the capital ; and there is also an arcade of three arches in the chancel, supposed to be an Easter sepulchre.* The chancel has three lofty windows of two lights, which were originally of great height and beauty. The east window of the south aisle, which is considered the gem of the church, is a beautiful specimen of the Curvilinear or Late Decorated design ; it is of three lights with segmental head, and beneath it is a string course adorned with the ball-flower, the ornament of that period, which runs round a bracket at the south end. Here are three sedilia and a piscina, separated by trefoiled headed shafts. In the north wall is a chantry door now blocked up, and on the altar steps are specimens of Norman tiling arranged in circular pattern, with a border. Engravings of these tiles are given in Parker's "Glossary," in which the date assigned to them is the early part of the thirteenth century. In the south aisle formerly stood an altar or monument under a magnificent Decorated window of two lights ; and in the north aisle, on a slab of blue marble, are the remains of a curious inscription. By the pulling down of the tower during the late restoration, the foundations were found to be Saxon, and many interesting remains were discovered from two to seven feet below the surface, and extending into the churchyard ; and some sepulchral slabs of the thirteenth century were also found in the masonry of the tower above the level of the aisle roof. The south porch, which is Perpendicular, contains the base of a holy-water bason. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Peterborough, rated in the King's books at £8, 3s. 6d., the lord of the manor then claiming 3s. 2d. yearly, the tenths were 16s. 0½d. It was returned at £50, but is now worth only about £108 per annum. The patronage is in the Fitzwilliam family, and the Rev. John A. L. Campbell, M.A., is the incumbent. The Master, Fellows, and Scholars of Christ's College, Cambridge, are the impropiators of the great or rectorial tithes, in lieu of which, and of the rights of common, 346a. 2r. 4p. were awarded at the enclosure of this and several of the adjoining parishes in 1809.

* The "Easter Sepulchre" represents the place where the body of the dead Christ was laid after the crucifixion on Good Friday.

Bain Mrs Jane, shopkeeper
 Bellars Miss Mary Ann
 Bloodworth Joseph, clerk and coal-agent
 Campbell Rev. John A. Legh, M.A. vicar
 Chapman Thomas, coal-dealer
 Clare John, beerho. & carpentr.
 Cluff George, beerhouse
 Coatman Mark, shoemaker
 Crowson Wm. mason & builder, lime burner, & parish clerk
 Curtis William, stallkeeper
 Eady George, beerhouse
 Goodfellow Robert, butcher
 Gregory John, baker & beerho.
 Hibbins Rt. D. vict. Exeter Arms

Hodges Miss, schoolmistress
 Joyce John, blacksmith and vict. Blue Bell
 Kettle Mrs Eliz. strawhatmkr.
 Langley Mrs Sarah, shopkeeper
 Large Miss Mary
 Nicholls John, natnl. schoolmr.
 Nidd Mrs Eliza Downing
 Redmile William, blacksmith
 Shillaker Henry, grocer, draper, baker, and sub-postmaster
 Smith John, butcher & beerho.
 Stewart Jno. clk. in paper mills
 Taylor William, stationmaster
 Towgood Alfred, paper manufacturer, h. St Neots

Ward George, tailor
 Ward John, vict. Railway Hotel
 Woodward Enoch, shoemaker and land-surveyor

Farmers and Graziers.

Bellars Wm. Manor House
 Browning David
 Chapman Francis
 Johnson Edward Southam
 Martin Siason, Heath Farm
 Pearce William Wortham
 Smith Wm. (and cattle-dealer)
 Snow John
 Wood Thomas
 Wright Thomas Parish

MARHOLM PARISH

Is situated partly on low ground, and is bounded on the east by Werrington, on the south by Castor, on the west by Ufford and Southorpe, and on the north by Glinton, Barnack, and Helpston. It contains 1368 acres, and its population in 1801 was 109; in 1831, 174; in 1841, 197; in 1851, 171; in 1861, 171; in 1871, 147 souls. The estimated gross rental of the parish is £2257, and the rateable value £1774. The soil is of a gravelly and sandy nature, intermixed with limestone, and about half of the parish is arable. The executors of the Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam are lords of the manor, and owners of the whole parish. Before the conquest, Marholm or Marham is supposed by some to have been famous for its quarries of stone, which it supplied for the building of Ramsey Abbey.

Manor.—The De Watervills possessed this lordship in the beginning of the reign of Henry III., and with them it continued for many generations. It afterwards came into the possession of the family of Wyttebury, and in the fifteenth of Henry VII. (1500), Richard Wyttebury did homage to the abbot of Peterborough for 3½ knight's fees in Milton, Marholm, and Thorp. This gentleman sold the lordship and advowson to Sir William Fitzwilliam, who levied a fine of them in 1503, and from whom they lineally descended to the late proprietor, the Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam, whose son is now a minor.

The Village of Marholm, which consists of a few scattered houses, is situate about 4½ miles N.W. by W. from Peterborough.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, or according to some to St Guthlac, is a small ancient structure consisting of nave, chancel, aisles, and porch, which were added at its restoration in 1868, together with new pulpit, reading desk, and open oak sittings, &c., at a cost of £2000, chiefly contributed by the Fitzwilliam family, in memory of their father and grandfather. The churchyard was enclosed at the same time with handsome iron railings by the parishioners. There were aisles previous to the fifteenth century, but they were destroyed about 1480. The tower is of Norman date with embattlements, but devoid of ornamentation; and the nave is of Early English character. Some of the windows, which are very good, are filled with stained glass; and under one of the arches of the nave, on a finely carved altar tomb, is the recumbent effigy of a knight. The tomb, which was formerly much mutilated, has been restored, and is supposed to belong to Lord Southampton; the date is about the year 1500. The chancel, which is of the same date as the tomb, is in the Perpendicular style; and the roof, which is now open, is decorated with a few helmets and small arms. There are some fine monuments to the Milton family, the oldest of which consists of two brass effigies standing erect under a canopy; these figures represent a knight in a surcoat, and his lady in a mantel, emblazoned with the Fitzwilliam and other arms, and from the mouth of each proceeds a label, upon which is written "Prohibere nefas;" on the opposite side is an altar-tomb, upon which are two life-size figures, in a recumbent position, of Sir William Fitzwilliam, who died in 1534, and Ann his wife, and other members of the family; these are of stone, painted and elaborately carved. On the north wall is a marble monument to William, Earl Fitzwilliam, and Anna his countess, who died, the former in 1719, and the latter in 1727. The living is a rectory rated in the king's book at £9, 2s. 3½d, but now valued at £315 per annum, in the patronage of the Fitzwilliam family, and incumbency of the Rev. Robert S. C. Blacker, M.A. There were formerly two chantries in this church, one founded in honour of the patron saint by Sir William Thorpe and Dame Ann, his wife, and the other by Sir William Fitzwilliam, for one priest and four poor men. The former chantry was valued in 1535 at £4, 13s. 4d., and the latter at £17, 13s. 4d. The Rectory House, a good residence, was built in 1848, and enlarged by the present rector.

The School, which was built here in 1864 by the Fitzwilliam family, who are also its principal supporters.

Here are Alms-houses for four poor persons, endowed by the Fitzwilliam family with £12, 13s. 4d. per annum, which was paid by the Merchant Tailors' Company, London, on a receipt being presented to them, signed by the late Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam. This arrangement will doubtless be carried out by his successor.

Budd's Gift.—William Budd, in 1638, bequeathed £10 to the poor of Marholm. The principal is in the hands of the Fitzwilliam family, who pay as interest 10s. yearly to the rector, and which is distributed with the sacrament money to the poor. The Rev. Christopher Hodgson, late rector, bequeathed in 1849 £50, the interest to repair his tombstone when requisite, the remainder of the interest to go to the poor.

Blacker Rev. Robert Shapland
Carew, M.A. rector
Boyer H. Wood, steward and farmer.

Parish William, blacksmith
Stimson Mrs Mary, vict. Fitz- william Arms.
Wright James, cottager.

Farmers.

Allott George, Willows
Mann George
Mann William (and auctionr.)

MAXEY PARISH,

On the river Welland, and borders of Lincolnshire, by which it is bounded on the north; Northborough forms its boundary on the east, Helpston on the south, and Bainton on the west. It includes the hamlet of Deeping Gate, and contains 1701 acres. Its rateable value is £3421, and the estimated gross rental of the parish is £3737. The population, including the hamlet, in 1801, was 457; in 1831, 576; in 1841, 611; in 1851, 411; in 1861, 419; and in 1871, 474 souls. The executors of the Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam (lords of the manor), Mrs Sisson, Daniel C. Cox, William Fludger, Esq., Messrs John Porter, T. and J. Measures, and Joseph B. Manby, are the principal proprietors.

Manor.—Maxey, or Makeseye, was one of the manors belonging to St Pega's monastery at Peakirk, which the Danes depopulated in 1013, and which Edmer, a knight, lord of Holbrook, recovered possession of in 1048. In 1146 it was confirmed to Martin, Abbot of Peterborough, by Pope Eugenius III. At this period it was in the hands of Roger de Torpel, and Geoffrey de la Mare, and with their descendants or successors it continued for many generations. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Geoffrey de la Mare, Nicholas de Hetton, John de Hecham, and Thomas Wake, were lords of Maxey, with its members. The lands held by Roger Torpel, called Torpel's Manor, were afterwards held by Queen Eleanor, and passed to Edmund of Woodstock, Earl of Kent. The manor of Maxey subsequently passed, through the Somerset family, to Margaret, wife to Edmund Tudor, Earl of Richmond, and mother of Henry VII.; on whose death, in the first of Henry VIII. (1509), it fell to the crown. In the third of Elizabeth (1560), it was granted to Sir William Cecyll, Knight, and from one of his descendants, the Earls of Exeter, it passed by purchase to the Fitzwilliam family. The possessions of the abbey of Peterborough here, at the dissolution, were valued at £106, os. 10d. yearly, and given to the dean and chapter in the thirty-third of Henry VIII. (1541).

The ancient Manor-House, formerly called Maxey Castle, was encompassed

by a moat, and is supposed to be the remains of a castle that formerly stood here at the point now called Castle End; it was the residence of the Countess of Richmond, but is now a farmhouse, and except some slight remains of the moat, no vestiges are now in existence.

The Village of Maxey, which is very straggling, is situate about 1 mile S. by W. of Market Deeping, 8 N.W. from Peterborough, and 8 nearly E. from Stamford.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is of ancient date; it stands about half a mile west of the village, and was erected on the great level of the Fen, the site having been raised as a precaution against the floods which formerly inundated the district. It consists of a nave, side aisles, chancel, chantry, south porch, and a tower containing six bells. It was entirely restored in 1863-4, at a cost of £1200, when it was repewed and paved with encaustic tiles, and a new pulpit, reading-desk, and altar rails, &c., were also added. It is partly in the Norman, Early English, and Perpendicular styles. The nave, piers, and belfry arch are Norman, and the tower, which is of the same character, and of three stages, is enriched with an arcade of circular arches, and Machicolation ornaments, or apertures, through which hot substances were poured upon assailants. The nave, piers, and belfry arch are Norman, though the former is said to pertain to the Early Romanesque. The chancel is rich in sculpture; the chantry very spacious, and the entire church abounds with architectural and other features very interesting to the ecclesiologist. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £10, and now valued at £304. The Dean and Chapter of Peterborough are the patrons, and the Rev. Charles Cookson, B.A., is the incumbent. The dean and chapter, as impropiators, have 142a. 3r. 21p. in Maxey, awarded at the enclosure in 1809, in lieu of tithes and rights of common, and 73a. 1r. 26p. in Deeping Gate; and the vicar has about 123a. 2r. 5p. allotted in Maxey, and 24a. 2r. 4p. in Deeping Gate and Newborough for the like rights.

A small Independent Chapel was erected in the village in 1809, and rebuilt in 1862; and the National School, built by subscription in 1833, is supported by church funds and subscriptions, and the weekly pence of the children.

Antiquities.—Lolham Bridges, of which the ruins of eleven arches still remain, are situated about a mile westward of the village; they are of great antiquity, and supposed to have been built by the Romans, for the purpose of carrying the Ermine Street road to Lincoln, over the fens adjoining the river Welland.

DEEPING GATE is a hamlet in this parish, on the south side of the Welland, over which there is a stone bridge to St James' Deeping, in Lincolnshire. It contains 637 acres, its rateable value is £1304, and the gross estimated rental £1420. The hamlet had a population of 201 in 1841; in 1851, 230; in 1861, 224; and in 1871, it contained 49 houses and 208 inhabitants.

Charities.—The church estate yields about £114 a year. Susan Worsley, in 1666, left an estate now consisting of 23 acres to the poor, which lets for £50 per annum. Mary Walsham, in 1745, left £100, with which the sum of £156, 5s., 3 per cent. consols was purchased, and the dividends, £4, 13s. 4d. per annum, after deducting the necessary expenses, are distributed to the poor. The interest of £19, 19s., at 2½ per cent., left by Mrs Jane Baines, in 1823, is distributed to poor widows. John Dunning, in 1623, left property invested in land yielding £5, 2s. 6d. a year, which is given to the poor at Midsummer.

(Marked 1 reside at Deeping Gate.)

1 Bains Mrs Sus. vict. Cuckoo Inn
Black Stephen, cowkeeper
Bloodworth Wm. wheelwright
Burbidge Mrs Maria, shopkpr. and harness maker
1 Burton John, ropemaker
Clapton Miss Cath. schoolmrs.
1 Clarke William, cottager

1 Collishaw Richard, cottager
Cookson Rev. Chas. B.A. vicar
Cutforth Henry, cottager
Green Thomas, cottager
1 Gunn Samuel, millwright
1 Harker William, cottager
1 Hides Thos. market gardener and tax collector
1 Huffer William, poulterer
1 Lake John, cottager
Larratt Thos. baker & butcher

1 Leaton William, cottager
Loweth Isaac, corn miller,
Maxey Mill
1 M'Mahon James Thomas, physician and surgeon
Peach Robert, cottager
Pearson William, tailor & vict.
White Horse
Percival Hy. parish clk. & gardr.
Pope Robert, carpenter
Porter Mr John

1 Sharpe Jno. Crutchfield, Esq. Mazey House	Farmers and Graziers.	Kemp William, Lolham Hall
Smith Henry, shopkeeper	(Marked * are Yeomen.)	1 Lake Baker
Smith Thomas, cottager	1 Baker John	Larrett Mrs Frances
1 Spendlow Geo. shoemaker	* Bellars John	Lawson George
1 Tagg Nicholas, cottager	* Cox Daniel Cole	* Measures Thomas and James
Tailby Jno. H. beerhouse	Griffin Robert	Moulds John
1 Townsend Edward, cottager	1 Huffer John	Smith James Valentine, Wal-
Waters Henry vict. Blue Bell	1 Huffer John, jun.	drum Hall
1 York Thos. vict. Black Bell	Johnson Edward, Manor House	Webster Daniel, Nunton
		Woolley Joseph

Carrier.—William Collingham, to Stamford on Friday.

NEWBOROUGH PARISH.

Newborough is an extensive parish, formed by Act of Parliament in 1823. It is bounded on the south by the parish of Paston, on the west by Peakirk, on the east by Eye, and on the north by Crowland. It contains 5091 acres, of the rateable value of £8258, and a gross estimated rental of £9293; and its population in 1801 was 129; in 1831, 340; in 1841, 572; in 1851, 879; in 1861, 806; and in 1871, 713 souls. This district, which was formerly an open common, is principally arable, and a portion of it is used as arable land; it has been greatly improved by drainage.

The Village of Newborough, which is very small, is situate about five miles north of Peterborough, four and a half south of Crowland, and five from Market Deeping. Here is a Primitive Methodist Chapel, built in 1858, and enlarged in 1869. The Dean and Chapter of Peterborough, the executors of the Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam, and the Marquis of Exeter, are the principal landowners; the two latter families are lords of the manor.

The Church, dedicated to St Bartholomew, was erected in 1830, and is a brick structure, with a small square tower, in which are two bells. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Peterborough, valued at about £300 per annum, in the patronage of the Crown, and incumbency of the Rev. George Arthur Willan, M.A. The Vicarage House is a substantial building near the church.

There is a small school in the village, which was erected in 1852, and a Sunday school, aided by the lords of the manor and other landowners of the parish, and is supported by subscription, Government grant, and school pence.

Letters are received here through the Peterborough Post-office.

Austin William, tailor	Sargeant Alfred, beerhouse	Bellairs William
Banks John, vict. Bull	Sargeant William, cottager	Chapman Molesbury Vine
Barton John, blacksmith, butcher, and beerhouse	Smithers Thomas, cottager	Cole Thos. (yeom.) Peakirk Moor
Butler William, baker, grocer, and post-office	Townsend Edward, beerhouse	Collins Charles Frederick
Crow Edward, wheelwright	Walden Joseph, shoemaker	Cotterill Edward
Dale Mrs Sarah, shopkeeper	Whitfield Thos. machineman	Culpin Charles
Darlow James, vict. Crown	Willan, Rev. Geo. Arthur, M.A. vicar	Fletcher Howard
Godfrey John, cottager	Williams Jno. Bradley, rate colr.	Jesson Robert
Kew James, stonemason	Wortley Frederick, cottager	Lemon Robert, jun.
Kew William, stonemason		Morris George
Law Felix, butcher	Farmers and Graziers.	Odum John
Love Thomas, shopkeeper	Bailey Mrs Ann	Speechley James
Monk Jesse, vict. Red Cow	Barnes William	Vergette Edward, Turves
Rowlett Edward, cottager	Baxter John	Vergette Robert, h. Coates
Saywell William, blacksmith	Baxter John Barton	Whitfield John, Milking Nook
	Beharrell Thomas, Eye Green	Wilson William
		Wortley William

BOROUGH FEN VILLE,

Or Oldborough. This hamlet (formerly extra-parochial) is an extensive tract of very valuable grass and arable land, occupying the north side of, and locally situated in, the parish of Newborough, about five miles N.N.E. of Peterborough. It contains 2829 acres, and several scattered houses; and its population in 1801 was 116; in 1831, 200; in 1841, 192; in 1851, 200; in 1861, 202; and in 1871, 154 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £4333, and the gross estimated rental £5002. Sir Eardley Gideon Culling Eardley, Bart., is the lord of the manor and owner of the soil. This place, as well as Newborough and a considerable district of country, has been greatly improved by drainage. Formerly this was very imperfectly accomplished, although a great number of wind-engines and powerful steam-engines were employed for that purpose. The land, which is divided into several farms, is principally used for grazing. The celebrated "Decoy Farm," which has for many years been occupied by Mr Joseph Williams, the present proprietor, and his forefathers, who have held it for several generations, acquired its name on account of their successful exertions in the capture of wild fowl, and is well worthy of a visit from travellers.

Letters are received through the Peterborough Post-Office.

Ball John, vict. Three Horse Shoes	Griffin William	Vergette Robert Parr
Farmers and Graziers.	Maxwell Geo. Sutton, h. Walton	Vergette Thomas
Griffin John	Odum Martin Rowell, h. Parcet	Vergette Thomas Henry
Griffin Robert Henry	Fen	Williams Joseph, Decoy Farm
	Vergette Benjamin

NORTHBOROUGH PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Peakirk on the east, by Glinton on the south, Etton and Maxey on the west, and on the north by Deeping Gate. It contains 717 acres; its population in 1801 was 192; in 1831, 227; in 1841, 272; in 1851, 260; in 1861, 240; in 1871, 245 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1485, and the estimated gross rental £1618. The soil is alluvial on a clay and silt subsoil. The executors of the Hon. George W. Fitzwilliam, and the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough, are lords of the manor; the former are the principal land proprietors.

Manor.—The lordship of Northborough, or as it was anciently called, Northburc, and Northburgh, was part of the possessions of the monastery of St Pega, and depopulated, with other neighbouring manors, in 1013, by the Danes. In 1048, the abbot was ejected from this monastery, which was adjudged to belong to Peterborough. The family of De la Mare subsequently held it for many generations under the Abbot of Peterborough. Little else is known of it till the reign of Henry VIII., when it passed into the possession of the Fitzwilliam family. In the reign of Henry III., Geoffrey de Northburc gave to Abbot Walter and the convent of Peterborough, a capital messuage, with several lands, rents, and tenements, which were afterwards appropriated to the chamberlain of the abbey, and, in 1535, the profits accruing from them to the office of chamberlain were rated only at £29, os. 1d. yearly. In the 33d of Henry VIII. (1541), these lands, &c., were granted by the name of Northborow manor, to the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough, to whom it still belongs; and the other manor is now in the possession of the Fitzwilliam family. The priory of Stamford and the abbey of Croyland had formerly possessions in this parish.

Northborough Manor House, the remains of an old castle, now occupied by a farmer, is the property of the executors of the Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam; it is of the Decorated English character, and some of its portions and details are very beautiful. It was formerly the residence of Sir John Claypole, the husband of Elizabeth, the favourite daughter of Oliver Cromwell, who died here, and was buried in Henry VII.'s Chapel at Westminster. Cromwell's wife also died here, and was buried in the church, where there is a tomb dated 1594, supposed to contain her remains. In this parish on the road to Peterborough are also the remains of a very ancient bridge of sixteen arches.

The Village of Northborough, which is long and straggling, is situate about 7 miles N.N.W. from Peterborough, and 2 miles south of Market Deeping.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, is a small ancient stone structure, consisting of a chancel, nave, north and south aisles, and south porch, with bell gable in which are two niches with semicircular arches containing two bells. In the church is a chantry, called Claypole's Chapel, in which are some monuments to the memory of different members of the Cromwell and Claypole families;

it also contains a very ancient stone font. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £10, 19s. 7d., and now worth about £345 per annum. The Dean and Chapter of Peterborough are the patrons; and the Rev. William Amers White, B.A., is the incumbent.

The Rectory, which stands close to the church, was rebuilt by the present rector in 1857.

There is a small Primitive Methodist Chapel erected in the village in 1869 by subscription.

Charity.—The town lands, consisting of 7a. 3r., are let for £18, 5s. per annum. This sum is applied to the repairs of the church, with the exception of 2s., which are appropriated to the poor.

Letters are received here through the Market Deeping Post-Office.

Adcock William, cottager
Bellairs William, cottager
Benstead John, vict. Pack Horse and poulterer
Brown John, blacksmith
Cade William, shopkeeper
Chapman John, shopkeeper and machineman
Clare William, cottager
Clarke Joseph, butcher
Dixon James, cottager
Dixon John, cottager
Earl Christopher, cottager

English Thomas, shoemaker
Jenkinson Mrs Sarah, cottager
Kellam Peter, cottager
Lake John, cottager
Meadows William, cottager
Medwell William, cottager
Nichol John, wheelwright
Perkins John, cottager
Quincey Thomas, cottager
Ridlington Mrs Sarah, cottager
Ringham Joseph, cottager
Sefton James, shoemaker
Smith Thomas, cottager

White Rev. Wm. A., B.A. rector
Wykes John, parish clerk
Wykes Wm. vict. Red Lion

Farmers.

(Marked * are Yeomen.)

*Cole William
Jenkinson Robert
Medwell John
Preston Francis, Manor House
Smith Thomas
Todd Henry
*Walden Thomas

PASTON PARISH

Includes the hamlets of Gunthorpe and Walton, and the chapelry of Werrington. It is situated on a low gravelly soil on the edge of the fen, and is bounded on the east by Dogsthorpe and Eye, and on the south by Longthorpe and Peterborough, on the north by Borough Fen, and on the west by Marholm and Helpstone. It contains 929 acres; its rateable value is £1422, and the estimated gross rental £1517. Its population in 1801 was 55; in 1831, 836; in 1841, 962; in 1861, 99; and in 1871, 122 souls. The Bishop of Peterborough and Maurice Cole, Esq., are lords of the manor, and the principal owners are Thomas White, Esq., Maurice Cole, Esq., the Rev. J. Pratt, M.A., Frederick St Lawrence Pratt, Esq., and John Bark Hardy, Esq.

Manor.—A knight's fee here, held by Ralph Tot, was confirmed to the abbey of Peterborough, by Pope Eugenius in 1146. In the 12th of Edward III. (1338), Giles de Badlesmere died seized of Paston Manor, and on the partition of his estate, it descended to his sister Maud, the wife of John de Vere, Earl of Oxford, and in his family it continued for several generations. This manor was given to the Bishop of Peterborough and his successors on the erection of the see.

Another manor here, called Peverels, from its ancient possessors, who held it of the convent of Peterborough; from the Peverel family it passed through several intermediate possessors to Maurice Cole, Esq., the present proprietor.

The Village of Paston, which consists of four detached farm-houses, and a few dispersed cottages, stands 2½ miles north of Peterborough, a short distance to the east of the high road to Lincoln, which passes through the parish; and forms, with its church, which is embosomed in trees, a pleasing object.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient structure, consisting of a nave with aisles and clerestory, chancel, north and south door, and north chantry, south porch, and a west tower containing three bells, and surmounted by a spire of great beauty, having lancets on the north and south sides of its lowest stage, and a two-light window on the west. In the next stage the belfry window has a large quatrefoil in a circle. The staircase turret stands out in bold relief, and with its pyramidal top accords well with the outline of the spire, at the foot of which are two-light geometrical windows with pannelled tracery. Both the spire and the turret are adorned with the ballflower cornice, which also appears on the lower spire windows on the south and east sides. The most ancient parts of the present edifice are the lower part of the tower and the chancel and aisles, which belong to the thirteenth century. The chantry is divided from the chancel by two arches of Early English character, and east of these two is a third arch, beneath which is the door to the vestry, occupying, probably, the site of an original one. The north aisle has Early Decorated work, but the nave arcade, the entire south aisle, and the body of the church, are in the Perpendicular style. The nave has four bays, supported by octagonal piers and well-proportioned arches, and the south aisle and the clerestory have windows of three lights each. All the Perpendicular work, including the nave roof and lofty chancel screen, date from the middle of the fifteenth century. There are three sedilia of later date than the arches above-named, which belong, as also does the spire, to the first quarter of the fourteenth century, or about the year 1320. The east end of the chantry is railed off, and is now used as a baptistery, in which is an octagonal font. There are several monuments and tablets in different parts of the church, but none of them are remarkable either for antiquity or importance. In the chancel floor is a handsome incised cross with a black-letter inscription round the edge, but the name of the parish is obliterated. And under a canopy in the south wall of the chancel is a figure in a praying posture, with a long inscription, to Edmund Mountsteven, of Paston, who was an important benefactor to this and other parishes and institutions, as set forth in his will, dated 9th February 1635.]

In the taxation of 1291 the church was valued at £6, deducting pensions and portions to the abbey. In the king's books the gross value of the rectory was £14, 11s. 8d.; the archdeacon's fees 8s. 7d.; and the tenth amounted to £1, 6s. 9½d. The living, which includes the chapelry of Werrington, is now worth about £700 per annum, in the deanery of Peterborough, patronage of the bishop of the diocese, and incumbency of the Rev. Joseph Pratt, M.A. The church will accommodate 600 hearers. The tithes were commuted for £300, of which £140 belongs to the bishop as owner of two-thirds of the great tithes. The remaining portion of the living arises from ancient glebe land, allotted by the Commissioners of Enclosure to the bishop and rector, in lieu of tithes. The Rectory is a commodious residence near the church.

Paston Hall, now occupied by Mrs Strong, is the property of Maurice Cole, Esq., and his sisters.

Charities.—On Paston Green are six small almshouses, supported by an annual payment of £20 out of the Peverel Manor, now belonging to the Cole family; this rent-charge was bequeathed by Edmund Mountsteven, who died 4th March 1635. The church land consists of 16a. 1r. 13p., of fen land in Whittlesea, and lets for £30 a year, to be applied to the repairs of Paston church. John Goodwin in 1755 bequeathed £100, the interest to be distributed amongst the poor of Werrington at Christmas and Easter; and his will, dated 9th February preceding, provides that his body should be buried in the chancel at the feet of his beloved father, and that his monument shall cost less than £30. He left £5 to the repairs of the church, £10 to the repairs of the chancel, £10 to the poor, and land for the erection of an almshouse on the green. In another clause of the will he sets forth that a licenced minister, "dwelling within the soak of Peterborough, and not being advanced to a benefice of £30 a year, shall yearly for ever, by the appointment of the bishop of the diocese, preach one sermon at Paston church, on the day of the month in the year on which it shall please God to call me to his mercy out of this miserable world; and my will is that there shall be paid to the said minister presently after the sermon, 40s. of current English money, provided always that no minister shall preach the said sermon and receive the 40s. two years together." He also founded two fellowships, and two scholarships at St John's College, Cambridge, for boys from the King's School, Peterborough, leaving £1000 for that purpose, with which the College purchased lands at Leafeld in Rutland. In the abstract of charitable donations published by order of Parliament in 1786 the bequest to this parish is said to produce £18 a year—

£12 being paid to the almshouses, 30s. for coal, 30s. for repairs, and £3 for apprenticing poor children. In 1538, T. Ryley left 6s. 8d. for "one honest vestment for the hye aluter in the paryshe church of Paston . . . and to every poor house within the paryshe of Paston one strike of barley, and half a strike of malte; and to every one of my godchildren xiid." In 1539 John Couper 'of Thorppe in the parish of Paston' (supposed to be Dogsthorp), left "to the sacrament of Paston 6d., and to the bells three strike of barley." In 1569 Joan Baudrie of Walton, left 3s. 4d. to the repairs of the church; and to the parson her "Ouldewhiche," a like sum was left in 1609 by Alice Clement.

Gunthorpe is a hamlet consisting of four farm houses and a few cottages, about a quarter of a mile north of Paston, and three miles north of Peterborough. Its population in 1841 was 64; in 1861, 66; in 1871, 56. It contains 215 acres; its rateable value is £404, and the gross estimated rental about £470.

Walton is another hamlet in this parish, containing a few good houses, about a mile south-west of Paston. Its population in 1841 was 179; in 1861, 209; in 1871, 200 souls. Its rateable value is £2750; the estimated gross rental is £2853. The manor, which formerly belonged to the abbey of Peterborough, was granted in 1541 to the bishop of that see. The Dean and Chapter of Peterborough, and the eldest son (now a minor) of the late Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam, are the principal proprietors. The Midland and Great Northern Railways pass through the parish. The former has a station in this hamlet.

WERRINGTON is a chapelry in this parish, containing 1403 acres, of the rateable value of £4199, and of the gross estimated rental of £4683. The population in 1801 was 372; in 1831, 537; in 1841, 629; in 1861, 697; and in 1871, 718 souls. The village, which is about half a mile in length, is pleasantly situated on a slight incline, running nearly due east and west, about 3½ miles N. by W. of Peterborough, on the road to Market Deeping, from which it is distant about five miles. In Domesday Book the name is spelt Widerintone; from this it passed through the several forms of Wytherington, Widerington, Weryngton, Wirington, Werington, to its present orthography. It has the same root as Warrington; both names signify a town or settlement of the Varini, a German clan, who are placed by Tacitus in juxtaposition with the Angli.

The soil, which is chiefly of a gravelly nature, belongs principally to the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough, Mrs Elizabeth Moore, C. J. Beakley, Esq., C. W. Griffin, and W. E. Griffin, Esquires. The manor of Werrington belonged to the abbey of Peterborough till the dissolution, when it was transferred to the bishop and his successors. The village feast is held here on the first Sunday in July, and the old custom of strewing the church with grass on that day is discontinued. Bridges mentions the custom in these words,—“On the feast Sunday it is a custom to strew the church with grass or hay, cut in the Innhams, a meadow, which on that account claims to be tithe-free.”

The Church, or chapel of ease, dedicated to St John the Baptist, and, according to some, to the Blessed Virgin and St John the Baptist. The latter is probably the correct dedication, as old wills and documental writings speak of an altar to the Blessed Virgin. A Lady Chapel is therefore indicated, and this probably was the old chantry, apparently coeval with the church, which has been destroyed. This ancient and interesting little edifice contains a nave, aisles, south porch, and Decorated chancel, with stone seats round it. There is neither tower nor spire, but there is a bellcot containing two small bells, between the nave and the chancel. The various parts of the building are of different dates and styles; the most ancient portion is probably the old chancel arch, within which the present arch has been formed—the latter one, which is Norman work, has zigzag capitals. The interior door of the porch was formerly the outer door of the old church, and is also of Norman date, about the middle of the twelfth century. About the beginning of that century the aisles were added. They are of Early English character. The nave arches, too, are of this period, and round-headed. In the east window, which is of four lights, are good examples of net tracery. The south porch has an elegant outer arch, and is of Decorated work, as is also the arch between the north aisle and the destroyed chantry. The old octagonal font, near the south door, is very striking. It stands on eight dwarf shafts, and is of the twelfth century. The chancel was restored in 1870, and the whole fabric stands much in need of a thorough restoration. Divine service is performed here every Sunday by the Rector of Paston, or his curate, who generally resides in the village. The Wesleyans have a chapel here, built in 1835, and the Primitive Methodists' Chapel was built in 1860. The National School is supported by voluntary contributions, aided by Government grant and the weekly pence of the school. An Infant School was erected in 1869, at a cost of £230.

Charity.—In 1755 John Goodwin left £100 to poor widows of Werrington, which now produce £5 a year.

(Marked 1 are at Paston, 2 at Gunthorpe, and 3 at Walton.)

Austin Wm. Mark, beerhouse	2 Moulds Thomas, cottager	1 Furnace Thomas
3 Belton John, shopkeeper	3 Pitts Edward, shopkeeper	3 Johnson Thomas
3 Brown Thomas Malcolm, M.D. and surgeon	1 Pratt Rev. Joseph, M.A. rector	3 Maxwell George Sutton
2 Foreman David, cottager	1 Strong Mrs, Paston Hall	3 Odam Mrs Maria
3 Chapman Thos. vict. Royal Oak	3 Vaisey Jas. vict. Paul Pry	1 Pooley William
1 Hadman Edward, milkman		*Pratt Fred. St Laurence, ho. Gretford, Lincolnshire
3 Kenney Miss Amelia	Farmers.	2 Simpson William
2 Miller Mrs Ann	1 Brown Thomas	3 Winn George
	3 Cotterill Edward (yeoman)

Werrington.—Letters arrive through the Peterborough Post-Office.

Barnes Wm. wheelwright and machineman	Lawson George, butcher	Talbot William, harness maker
Boyden Thomas, vict. Cock	Lynn Thomas, blacksmith and vict. Three Horse Shoes	Warner James, cottager
Brown John, beehive maker	Meadows John Thos. gardener	Williamson Jno. grocer & P.-O.
Dyson Robert, shopkeeper	Moore Rev. John Charles, B.A.	Wye Robert, shoemaker
Ellis Robt. vict. Wheat Sheaf	Oldham Marston, miller & baker	Farmers.
Ford Henry, blacksmith	Peacock James, shoemaker	(Marked * are Yeomen.)
Griffin Mr William Ervin	Peacock Jos. beerhs. & shopkr.	*Griffin Clement Whitehead, The Hall
Hadman Jno. baker & shopkr.	Pitts Edward, wheelwright and parish clerk of Paston	Hadman Henry
Hales William, gardener	Pitts Geo. tailor & parish clerk	Hadman Robert
Hayter Thos. Geo. schoolmaster	Pyne Hy. bricklayer & mason	*Hardy Jno. Bank, Manor House
Hodgson John, shoemaker	Smith Philip Hall, baker	Sergeant William
Holdich Mr James	Stimpson Thos. cabinet maker and joiner	Sewter Thos. (and brickmaker)
King Everet, vict. Blue Bell		Southwell John
King Thomas, sand merchant
Kitchen Mrs Mary

PEAKIRK PARISH.

THE parish of Peakirk occupies low ground near the fens, and is bounded on the south by Werrington, on the north by Deeping, St James, and Lincolnshire, on the west by Glinton, and on the east by Borough Fen. It contains only 570 acres of land, of a light, sandy nature, which is chiefly used for grazing purposes. Its rateable value is £1598, and the estimated gross rental £1738. The population of the parish in 1801 was 132; in 1831, 191; in 1841, 192; in 1851, 223; in 1861, 246; and in 1871, 241 persons. The principal proprietors are Miss A. Webster, William L. Hopkinson, Esq., and Messrs William Giles, Thomas Cole, and James Webster. The Dean and Chapter of Peterborough are lords of the manor. There was a Monastery or Cell here, which was founded by St Pega, about A.D. 716. She was descended of a noble family, and was sister to St Guthlac, Abbot of Crowland. After she had deposited some relics (including St Bartholomew's whip and St Guthlac's psaltery) in the hands of the Abbot of Crowland, and having devoted two years in the privacy of her cell to meditation and prayer, and other penitential exercises, she went to Rome, where she died and was buried, and where a church was afterwards dedicated in her honour, but its site, it is said, is now unknown. This parish, from its close connection with Peterborough, is often mentioned in the chronicles. They state that after the country had been depopulated by the Danes in 871, Gored,

King of Mercia, seized the territories belonging to Pegekirk, the isle of Ely, and other lands and religious houses. Peakirk afterwards held several neighbouring manors, which are stated by Ingulf, in 1013, to have been included in the district which had been entirely destroyed by King Sweyn, who landed with a powerful fleet and army in 1010. Wulgatus, Abbot of Peakirk, in 1048, after having maintained a long and vexatious contest with the abbey of Peterborough, was ejected from his monastery, and all his manors were taken from him, it being adjudged that the Abbot of Burgh had established his claim. But Edward the Confessor afterwards made amends to the dispossessed Wulgatus, by appointing him at the next vacancy to the abbacy of Crowland.

Manor.—Peakirk is not mentioned in Domesday Book, but it is supposed to have been comprehended in the estimate of Glinton. The manor of Peakirk, which belonged to the abbey of Burgh till the dissolution, was given, on the erection of the see in 1541, to the dean and chapter, who are now lords of it. The abbey of Crowland had also possessions in this parish; Wegat, butler to King Witlaf, having, about the year 833, given to it three virgates of land.

The Village of Peakirk is distant about five and a half miles north by west from Peterborough, and three south-east from Market Deeping. The Great Northern Railway, which passes through the parish, has a station on the Boston branch, near the village. The orthography of the name has passed through several variations: Pegekirk, Pegekirke, Pegecyrcan, Peychurch, Peichirche, Peichirch, Peykirk, Peykirka, and finally Peakirk, its present form. Both the parish and neighbourhood were also known as Pegeland or Payland, from St Pega, the foundress of the parish.

The Church, dedicated to St Pega, is an ancient structure, consisting of a nave with clerestory, north and south aisles, south porch and north door, chancel, with north vestry and chantry, and at the west is a bell gable campanile, in lieu of a tower, with a triple bellicôt, but only two are occupied. The building was originally Norman, but many additions and alterations have left it a combination of styles—of Norman, Transition, and Gothic character. On entering through the south porch, and its lofty archway of Early English date, there is an inner arch of the Norman type, which appears to have been the original exterior arch of the Norman porch. In the vestry, which is divided from the chantry by an ancient stone wall, is preserved the stem of a Decorated lectern, "a rich and rare piece of woodwork," set in a heavy stone base. All the windows in the body of the church are filled with stained glass, and were presented by the late rector, Miss Alice Webster, and others. The subjects depicted in the east window are—"The Saviour Knocking at the Door," "Moses Smiting the Rock," "The Baptism of the Saviour," "Woman of Samaria," "The Disciples at Emmaus." The south porch, which was originally added in the beginning of the thirteenth century, was rebuilt in 1848; and further restorations were effected in 1853, when the oak fittings were introduced. The low open seats are of oak, as are also the reading desk, altar, and pulpit rails; the latter, which is rather large for the size of the church, has some very good carving. Both the aisles were much altered during the Decorated Period, when the north aisle was nearly rebuilt. There are three bays to the nave; those on the north side are Norman, with round arches and piers; those on the south are Early English, with pointed arches and round piers and capitals. The chancel, with its lofty pointed arch and semi-circular piers, is adorned with Transitional foliage under the capitals. Its windows are Perpendicular; that at the east end has five lights, and the two on the south side three lights each. The sanctuary is raised on two steps; on each side of the altar, in the north and south walls, are two alabaster tablets, incised with the sacred monogram; one surmounted by a crown of thorns, the other by a crown. There is a plain piscina, with pointed arch and round bason. The clerestory windows are trefoiled lancets. The chantry has a broad Perpendicular window of three lights, with cinquefoiled head and some fragments of ancient stained glass. In the south aisle are Decorated windows of three lights, enriched with ballflowers, and at its east end is a large octagonal font. The interior door of the south porch is of good Norman work, and the outer door, which is Early English, has round piers and a pointed arch. The living is a rectory in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough, and incumbency of the Rev. Edward James, M.A.; it is rated in the king's books at £18, 3s. 11½d., and now valued at £370 per annum. The Rectory is a good residence near the church; and there are Infant and Sunday Schools in the village.

Charities.—Mrs Ann Ireland bequeathed, in 1712, a sum of money which is invested in land, now producing £30 per annum, for the education of the poor of the parishes of Peakirk and Glington. There is also £3 per annum derived from money in the funds left in 1800, called Walton's Charity; and the same amount from Barnard's Charity, left in 1837, which is in part expended on the preservation of certain tombs, and the remainder is given in coals to the poor. M^{de}. Tildesley de Bosset left, in 1867, a legacy of £500, which yields nearly £15 per annum, for the education of the poor of the parishes of Peakirk and Glington in the principles of the Established Church. There is also a small estate, the proceeds of which are applied to the repairs of the church.

Letters are received through the Market Deeping Post-Office.

Catling Atkinson Joseph, station master	Lewin George, shoemaker	Young Hy. clerk & coal agent
Eatherley Mrs J. shopkeeper and parish clerk	Luff Mrs Lucy, harness maker	Farmers.
Day James, cottager	Neaverson Wm. carpenter, coal merchant & vict. Railway Inn	Bodger Benjamin
Day John, cottager	Sage William, vict. Bull	Cole Mrs Sarah
Freeman John, shopkeeper	Steel Thomas, gravel merchant	Percival George
Giles Mrs Mary	Tewson Edward, vict. Boat	Tyers John
James Rev. Edward, M.A. rector	Webster Miss Alice	Webster James, yeoman
	Wool Francis, carrier	Webster Robert

STAMFORD ST MARTIN OR STAMFORD BARON PARISH.

THIS village and parish, situated on the southern side of the Welland, forms a suburb to, and is mostly in the borough of Stamford, in Lincolnshire, which occupies the northern bank of the river, which is here spanned by a handsome stone bridge of five arches, built by the Marquis of Exeter, at a cost of £12,000. The parish, which includes the hamlet of Wothorpe, contains an area of 1522 acres of land, the rateable value of which is £7037, and the estimated gross rental £8127, 17s. The population in 1801 was 1067; in 1831, 1274; in 1841, 1443; in 1851, 1733; and in 1871, 1606 persons. Besides the Burghley Park demesne, which comprises a large portion of the parish, the Marquis of Exeter is the principal owner of the land and lord of the manor. A valuable bed of ironstone was found in this parish in 1870, and is now being successfully worked. The Midland Railway Company have a station here. This place was anciently called "Stamford south of the Welland," or "Stamford beyond the Bridge," but obtained the name of Stamford St Martin from the patron saint of the parish. It received the name of Stamford Baron about the middle of the 15th century, when the suffix was added, probably on account of "its being part of those lands which the Abbot of Peterborough held per baroniam;" or which is still more probable, from the strong castle or baronial mansion which, according to Marianus, was built here, on the site now called the "Nuns' Farm," by Edward the elder, who also fortified the southern bank of the river to prevent the inroads of the Danes, who frequently occupied its northern side. Stamford Baron is said to have been also defended by five gates, though it does not appear to have been walled. The house now occupied by the Rev. D. E. Jones is said to be the one in which the Stamford Mercury was first printed in 1714, previous to its being printed in the town of Stamford. This place had also the privilege of a mint, granted by Athelston, during the Saxon Heptarchy, to the monks of Peterborough, and which privilege they enjoyed till the reign of Stephen.

Manor.—Though Stamford Saint Martin or Stamford Baron is not mentioned in Domesday Book, yet, in the following reign of Henry I., there were 42 tenants here with land adjoining their houses, and 17 who had houses without land belonging to the abbey of Peterborough; and William de Waterville, who was elected abbot in 1155, bought all the village on this side the bridge of Stamford. When a survey of the possessions of the abbey was taken in 1535, its revenues in Stamford were rated at £18, 14s. 4d.; and after the dissolution of the religious houses and the confiscation of the property belonging to them, this manor was given to the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough.

Priory.—Within the limits of Stamford Baron was a priory for Benedictine nuns, with a conventual church, dedicated to St Mary and St Michael, and founded soon after the year 1155, by William de Waterville, Abbot of Burgh. He placed in it a prior and forty nuns, and endowed it with the church of St Martin. It was subsequently endowed with that of All Saints, Stamford, and other churches. This establishment was subject to the abbey of Burgh. After the dissolution, the site of the priory, with the demesne lands and the rectory and advowson of the church of St Martin, which were valued at £71, 18s. 10d. were granted to Richard Cecyll, to be held in capite by the fee farm rent of £3, 9s., which rent-charge, in the seventh of Edward VI. (1553), was given up to Sir William Cecil. In course of descent these possessions came to Brownlow, the present Marquis of Exeter.

Hospitals.—At the south end of the bridge was an hospital and chapel, dedicated to St John and St Thomas of Canterbury. It occupied the site of Lord Burghley's hospital and the George Inn, and was founded by Brando, probably a monk of Peterborough Abbey, between the years 1173 and 1181. The Pope took this hospital under his especial protection. The revenues were to be divided into three equal portions, of which, one was to be applied to the support of a chantry priest for the celebration of the Divine offices; another to the maintenance of the sick and infirm within the hospital, and the reception and relief of poor travellers who passed that way; and the third portion to the support of the master and his family. The particular endowment of this hospital is not known, but by the Commissioners' Survey, in the second of Edward VI. (1549), it was returned worth £11, 4s. 11d. In the thirty-third of Henry VIII. (1541), it was granted to the bishop of the diocese and his successors. Next to the George Inn was the House of St Sepulchre, founded for the purpose of entertaining all Pilgrims and Knights of the Holy Sepulchre, on their journey to Jerusalem. These knights were called Knights of St John, and they accompanied the pilgrims for protection. At the south end of St Martins stood St Giles' Hospital for lepers; there was a chapel attached to it, and it was endowed with lands for the support of a priest and several poor lepers, but its founder is not known. It is first mentioned in a grant by Richard I.; and in the registers of St Martin's parish, commencing in 1572, are recorded the burial of several inmates from Spittlehouse down to the 17th century.

The Church.—The first church which was built here between 1133 and 1147, by Martin de Victi, Abbot of Peterborough, was given in 1156 to the nunnery of St Michael's by William de Waterville, Abbot of Burgh. The present edifice, dedicated to St Martin, stands in the High Street, and is a fine structure in the Decorated style, consisting of a spacious and lofty nave, north and south aisles and chancel, and an embattled tower in which are three bells. It was built about the year 1482 by John Roscal or Russell, Bishop of Lincoln, and it would seem that the roof was in progress during the life of Thomas Scott, alias Rotherham, as his arms are impaled with the ancient coat of the see of York; and also the arms of Chadworth (Bishop Russell's predecessor in the see of Lincoln, who died in 1471), are on the corbels of the roof, so that it is very probable the church was commenced before his death. Most of the ancient stained glass was brought from the dissolved college of Tattershall in Lincolnshire. There are some fine monuments to the Burghley family. Besides the Lord Treasurer, who with many of his successors were buried here, it may be mentioned that William Wissing, an artist of celebrity, both in historical subjects and portrait painting, and who died September 10th, 1687, was buried here; and Dr Cyril Jackson, father of the Bishop of Oxford, was also interred here. Archbishop Laud was sometime curate of this church. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £7, 13s. 9d., and now worth about £215 per annum, in the gift of the Marquis of Exeter, and incumbency of the Rev. Ellis Bowden Were, M.A., and the Rev. A. R. Webster, M.A., is curate in charge. The tithes were commuted for land in 1795.

The Burghley Manor.—In the reign of the Confessor, Burghlei "was let to farm by the abbey of Burgh (Peterborough), to Alfgar, the king's chaplain;" and at the time of the Conqueror's survey, Geoffrey held three hides here under the abbey. The manor was afterwards held by a family named from the lordship, De Burglee, or Burgleye, from whom it passed to the De la Poles; and in the fifth of Henry VII. (1489), Elizabeth Milton, of Stamford, died seized of it. Henry Wykes, clerk, was her successor, and the manor was at this time certified to be held of the abbey of Peterborough, by the annual payment of 11s. 6d. and suit at the hundred court of Landyke. In the twentieth of Henry VIII. (1528), a fine was levied of possessions here, between David Cecil, senior, and Henry Humpost, otherwise Chambers. This David Cecil was the ancestor of the Earls of Exeter, and in the fifth of the same reign (1513) he was appointed one of the king's sergeants-at-arms. His son, Richard, was made one of the pages of the crown; and that eminent statesman, Sir William Cecil, son and heir to Richard, was born at Bourn in 1520, created Lord Burghley in 1571, and, after filling the offices of Secretary of State and Custos Brevium, he was raised by Queen Elizabeth to the exalted station of Lord High Treasurer of England, made a Knight of the Garter, and created Baron of Burleigh. He was the first of the Cecils who possessed Stamford Barony, and one of his descendants purchased the manor of Stamford in 1747. His son, William, Lord Burleigh, was advanced to the dignity of Earl of Exeter. "This is the first precedent," writes Bridges, "of a person being raised to the title of earl of the principal city of a county when another had the dignity of the same county, Charles Blount being then Earl of Devonshire. It is remarkable that Sir Robert Cecil, his younger brother, was the same day raised to the Earldom of Salisbury; but he being created in the morning, and Lord Burleigh in the afternoon, the descendants of the younger branch of the family have right of precedency over the elder. In 1605, Thomas Cecil, second Baron Burleigh, was created Earl of Exeter, but the titles of Duke and Marquis of Exeter had been held, at different periods from 1397, by the families of Beaufort, Holland, and Courteney. Henry Cecil, the tenth Earl, was created Marquis of Exeter in 1801, and died in 1804, when he was succeeded by the Right Hon. Brownlow Cecil, D.C.L., who died in 1867, when the titles and estates devolved to his eldest son, the Most Noble William Alleyne Cecil, the present Marquis and Earl of Exeter and Baron Burghley, by Isabella, daughter of W. S. Poyntz, Esq., of Cowdray Castle, Kent; was born in 1825; married, in 1848, Georgiana, daughter of the second Earl of Longford; is hereditary Grand Almoner, J.P., and D.L., for the counties of Northampton and Rutland; colonel of the Northamptonshire Militia, and late captain of the Gentlemen-at-arms. He was Treasurer of the Household, 1866-71; M.P. for South Lincolnshire, 1847-57, and for North Northamptonshire, 1857-67. Residences—Burghley House, Stamford; Grosvenor Place House, London; and Brookfield House, Isle of Wight. His son and heir is Brownlow Henry George, Lord Burghley, who was born in 1849, and is a lieutenant in the Grenadier Guards."

Burghley or Burleigh House, the beautiful seat of the Marquis of Exeter, is situated about 1½ mile S.E. of Stamford, in an extensive and richly-wooded park. It is an immense pile composed of freestone, and forming a parallelogram, enclosing a large court of 110 feet by 70 feet, and is remarkable for its rich display of sumptuous decorations and ornaments. This magnificent mansion, one of the noblest monuments of aristocratic splendour in the country, was built in the reign of Elizabeth, on the site of a very ancient structure, by the illustrious Lord Treasurer Burghley, and has been much adorned by his successors, particularly by John and Brownlow, Earls of Exeter, the latter of whom enriched it with some of the choicest specimens of the arts, among which stand pre-eminent a most extensive and valuable collection of pictures; and two libraries containing many choice and curious manuscripts, with a variety of statues and carving of the most elegant workmanship; and amongst the costly furniture, so abundantly distributed throughout the mansion, is the state bed which was occupied by the Queen on her visit to Burghley House in 1844. The principal entrance is on the north front, which opens into a spacious hall, handsomely paved in squares of black and white marble, and supported by twelve Ionic columns of Sienna scagliola. From the hall are communications leading to the various suites of apartments, all of which are of magnificent proportions, and fitted up in a style of elegance corresponding with the external appearance of the mansion. The south front overlooks a gently sloping lawn, skirted by a beautiful expanse of water, over which and an extensive tract of country beyond, extending into the counties of Rutland, Leicester, and Lincoln, it commands some varied and picturesque views, enlivened by the spires of Stamford, and by the numerous churches and mansions of the nobility and gentry which enrich and adorn the landscape. The approach to this princely mansion is from the great north road, which borders the park on the west, and through a handsome lodge, from which the drive winds through a beautifully undulating ground for nearly a mile, when the mansion, ornamented with a variety of turrets, cupolas, and pinnacles, presenting more the appearance of a beautiful temple than a domestic habitation, breaks upon the view in all its pride of grace and beauty. The park, which was also made by the Lord Treasurer Burghley, is truly delightful, abounding as it does in scenic beauties, and adorned with noble trees, amongst which are some venerable oaks. In architectural grandeur, splendour of decoration, and wealth of artistic treasures, there are few if any amongst the palatial residences of our nobility that surpass Burghley House. On the 23d of April 1603, James I., on his journey from Scotland, visited Burghley, and the next day being Easter Sunday, the Bishop of Lincoln preached before him. On the 27th he left Burghley, and dined at Sir Anthony Mildmay's at Apethorpe, on his way to Sir Oliver Cromwell's at Hitchingbrook.

Charities.—An hospital or bedehouses, for thirteen poor men, was founded here by William Lord Burghley, in or about the year 1597, and endowed with a rent-charge of £100 per annum, charged on lands in Cliffe Park, in the parish of King's Cliffe. The premises are in good repair. Thomas Bellott, who was steward to the founder in 1608, granted a rent-charge of £16 a year, to be applied to the payment of 40s. a year to each of two nurses, to attend on the poor men in the hospital, and for augmenting their allowance. The Marquis of Exeter, the descendant of the founder, adds £80 per annum to the funds of the hospital, and keeps the premises in repair. Henry Fryer, Esq., in 1822, gave by will £2000, for the support of six poor widows of "bedesmen," who, at the time of their death, should be upon the foundation of this or Truesdale's hospital in Stamford. The inmates of Lord Burghley's hospital receive each about 3s per week, except the warden, who receives 5s. 6d., and two nurses receive each 40s. a year. The six poor widows receive each 3s. 6d. per week. Here is a parochial school, in which ten boys and ten girls are educated and clothed from the Charity of Lady Dorothy Burghley, which consists of 131 acres of land at Miningsby in Lincolnshire, the rents whereof, £200 a year, are also expended upon the support of the poor, and the apprenticing poor children of this parish. For the other Charities, see table prefixed to the hundred.

The Stamford poor law Union Workhouse stands in this parish. The Union contains 37 parishes, and embraces an area of 80 square miles, and a population of more than 18,200. The following are the parishes:—All Saints, St George, St John, St Michael, St Mary, St Martin, Ashton, Barholm, Braceborough, Bainton, Barnack, Colly Weston, Casterton Magna, Casterton Parva, Clipsham, Duddington, Easton, Essendine, Greatford, Kotton, Pilsgate, Pickworth, Ryhall, Stow, Southorpe, Stibbington, Tallington, Thornhaugh, Tinwell, Tixover, Uffington, Ufford, West Deeping, Wilsthorpe, Wansford, Wittering, and Wothorpe: and the officers are—John Greenwood, master, and Mrs Sarah Rollinson, matron; John Mitchell Heward, surgeon; Rev. Edward H. Everett, chaplain; Thomas Laxton, clerk to the board of guardians; and Mrs Eliza Thisleton, schoolmistress. The average number of inmates for the past year was 180, and the average weekly expense of each was 3s. 6d.

Worthorpe, about 2 miles west of Burghley, is a hamlet in this parish. There was a mansion here which was also erected by the Lord Treasurer Burghley, and in which the Duke of Buckingham resided in the reign of Charles II. It is now in ruins.

Post-Office.—See Stamford.

Exeter The Most Noble the Marquis of,
Burghley House

ANDREWS Mrs Mary, 58 St Martin street
BAKER Miss Mary, 11 Burghley lane
Barnes John, plumber & glazier, Church st.
Bentham Isaac, assessor and collector of taxes,
and insurance agent, 35 St Martin street
Bell Mrs Ann, greengrocer, 6 St Martin st.
Betta James, hairdresser, 8 St Martin street
Billesdon Henry, cowkeeper, Water street
Boor Mr James, 8 Burghley lane
Brown Richard & Sons, nura. & seeds m. Worthorpe
Browning Edward, architect and surveyor, the Elms Office, Broad street, Stamford
Browning, Rev. Henry B. rector, St George's,
37 St Martin street
Bullivant Edw. shoem. & shopkpr. 1 Burghley la.
CASTER Mrs Mary, 30 St Martin street
Cayley Geo. Esq. banker, Worthorpe House
Clay Miss Sarah, 18 St Martin street
Chambers John, baker, 65 St Martin street
Cony Miss Ann, 59 St Martin street
Corby Jph. architect's clerk, 62 St Martin st.
Cornwell James, shopkeeper, 18 Water street
DABBS John, solicitor, 43 St Martin st.
Dance Miss Sar. mill. & dressm. 15 St Martin st.
Dixon Jas. par. clk. and rate coll. 2 Burghley la.
Duncomb John, butcher, 10 St Martin street
EATON William, M.D. 38 St Martin st.
Edis Wm. teacher of music, 4 Burghley lane
Elliott Alfred, carpenter, &c. 68 St Martin st.
FINCH John, baker, St Martin street
GARFITT Robert, tailor, St Martin street
Gilbert Richard, gardener, Burghley
Gedfrey John, timber and slate merchant,
Midland Railway, h. 42 St Martin street
Goodliff George, baker, St Martin street
Goodrich Chas. Hy. coal agent, 46 St Martin st.
Gutteridge William Edward, collector, Inland
Revenue, St Martin street
HANDSON Chas. maltster, Water st. h. The Nuns
Harris Mrs Selina, mistress, St Martin's sch.
Hatfield Mrs Frances Ann, 45 St Martin st.
Hewitt Francis A. stock and share broker and insurance agent, 60 St Martin street
Hewitt Hilary, land surveyor, 22 St Martin st.
Hibbins John & Paine Thomas, coachbuilders,
St Martin street
Hicks Mrs Julia, housekeeper, Burghley House
Higgs Mrs Eliza, 53 St Martin street
Hildyard Rev. Alexander, M.A. curate of Easton, 36 St Martin street and Wothorpe
Holmes Edward, baker, St Martin street
Hopkinson Wm. Launder, Esq. M.D. J.P. 40
St Martin street
JONES Rev. Denis Edward, B.A. rector, St
John's, 52 St Martin street
KELHAM John Hy. clerk, 12 Burghley lane
Knight Henry, master, St Martin's school

LINFOOT, Robert, station-master (Stamford & Essendyne), Water street
Lowe Mrs Mary Ann, 67 St Martin street
Lunby Henry, manufacturer of terra cotta
wares, St Martin's Terra Cotta Works
MASON Mr George, 9 Burghley lane
Matkin Joseph, compositor, 7 Burghley lane
Molecey Mrs Elizabeth, 66 St Martin street
Morris Mrs Mary, 17 St Martin street
Munton Claudius, farrier, Church lane
Musson George, draper, 34 St Martin street
NEWBY William, tailor, 6 Burghley lane
PEARSON Henry, baker, Water street
Pepper John, butcher, 3 St Martin street
Phillips Joseph, solicitor (Thompson, Phillips, & Evans), h. Water street, office Barn Hill
Pollard Joseph, grocer, 13 St Martin street
Provost Wright, chemist & drug. 4 St Martin st.
ROBERTS John, builder (Roberts Bros.), 55 St
Martin street
Robertson Miss C. St Martin street
Robinson Fredk. Wm. painter & photographer,
21 St Martin street
Rollinson Fredk. master, Union Workhouse
Russell Edw. gardener, Burghley
SANDERSON James, Esq. land agent to the Marquis of Exeter, office, St Martin street,
h. 11 Pall Mall, East London
Savidge Hy. cabinetmaker, &c. 27 St Martin st.
Scotney Mr Ezekiel, St Martin street
Scotney John, groc. & shoem. 12 St Martin st.
Simpson Mrs Eliz. milliner & dressmaker, 13
Burghley lane
Simpson Mrs Rebecca, Back street
Simpson Justin, reporter, 13 Burghley lane
TAYLOR Alfred John, clerk, 29 St Martin st.
Thorold, Mr Charles, 56 St Martin street
Tiptaft Wm. artificial manure agt. Church st.
Tyron Miss Ann Frances, 24 St Martin street
WALDEN, William, tinner and brazier, Malting yard, Water street
Wallis Mrs Sarah, antique glass and furniture
dealer, 54 St Martin street
Walton John Atkinson, farm steward to the Marquis of Exeter, Burghley Park
Ward Miss Sarah, Union schoolmistress
Ward Wm. station master, Midland Railway
Watson Elijah, shopkeeper, Water street
Wattam John, vetery. surgn. 19 St Martin st.
Webster Rev. A. R. M.A. curate, St Martin's
Wilford Francis, clerk, Water street
Wilson Joseph D. beerhouse, Water street
Wingfield, the Misses, 33 St Martin street
Wingfield Rev. George, M.A. 30 St Martin st.
Wood Charles, pianoforte tuner and music
dealer, 11 St Martin street
Wood James, gunmaker, 14 St Martin street
Woodward A. hairdr. and turncock, St Martin st.
Wright John, ale and porter traveller, Back st.

Brewers and Maltsters.
 Hunt & Co. Water street
 Phillips Joseph, Water street
 Whincup Henry, St Martin st.

Coal Merchants.
 Beal Alfred, Mid. Rwy. station
 Ellis & Everard, Mid. Rwy. stn.
 Grant Thos. Gt. Nor. Rwy. stn.
 Paradise Jno. W. jun. Mid. R. stn.
 Parker & Burton, Mid. Ry. stn.
 Spademan & Son, Mid. Ry. stn.

Inns and Taverns.
Anchor, William Thompson, St
 Martin street
Beehive, John Mason, Water st.
Bull & Swan, John Haycock,
 25 St Martin street
Exeter Arms, Bartholomew Aldwinckle, Water street
Fox and Hounds, John T. Scotney, Water street

George Hotel (commercial and posting-house), Hy. Whincup,
 St Martin street
Red Cow, Rob. Baines, Church la.
Sun and Railway Inn, Michael
 Parrish, Church street
Telegraph Inn, Theophilus
 Simpson, Back street
White Lion, John Naylor,
 Church lane

THORNHAUGH PARISH.

Thornhaugh or Thornhaw, is bounded by the parishes of Barnack and Wittering on the east and north; and by Wansford on the south and west. It contains an area of 2554 acres of the rateable value of £2511; the gross estimated rental is £2776, 6s. 6d.; and its population in 1801 was 214; in 1831, 271; in 1841, 295; in 1851, 184; in 1861, 243; and in 1871, 258 souls. The Duke of Bedford is lord of the manor and proprietor of the whole parish. Of the old stone manor house, which stood here, and was formerly the residence of the family of St. Medard or Semare, scarcely a vestige remains. Bridges tell us that "the building was embattled all round, and had a small embattled hexagonal tower; that the woods and the whole estate were then called Bedford Purlieu; and that a Major Cambridge, who in Oliver Cromwell's time held this house by lease from the Russell family, was shot to death by mistake for a deer."

Manor.—The lordship of Thornhaugh is not mentioned in Domesday Book; the name first occurs in the bull of Pope Eugenius dated 1146, when he confirmed, amongst other possessions, the fee of Anketil of St Medard in Thornhaw to the abbey of Burgh. By inquisition taken in the 24th of Edward I. (1296), Geoffery de St Medard was certified to hold here, and in the adjoining parishes, four knight's fees of the Abbot of Burgh. In the 9th of Edward II. (1315), the manor was in the possession of Nicholas de St Medard, who died here in 1327, and was buried in the parish church where he had founded a chantry. To him succeeded John, his son, who, in the 3rd of Edward III. (1330), was presented in the court of King's bench, because being of full age he had not taken upon him the order of knighthood. He died in 1334, and was also interred in Thornhaugh church. From him the manor descended lineally to Thomas Seymark, who, in the 30th of Henry VI. (1452), levied a fine of it with the advowson of the church. After having continued in this family for many generations, the manor passed in marriage with his daughter Anne Seymark to William Sapcote, Esq., who was succeeded by his son Sir Guy Sapcote, whose daughter Anne carried it in marriage to Sir John Broughton, Kt., who levied a fine of it in the 18th of Henry VIII. (1527). The next possessor of this lordship was Sir John Russell, Kt., who was advanced to the title of Lord Russell, of Cheneys, in the county of Buckingham in 1538, and created Earl of Bedford in 1550. This lordship has continued in the possession of the Bedford family to the present time.

The Village of Thornhaugh, which is very small, is situate about one mile north by north-west from Wansford, and nine west north-west from Peterborough.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, is an ancient structure, consisting of a nave, north aisle and chancel, and a square embattled tower, containing three bells. The living is a rectory with the perpetual curacy of Wansford annexed, in the deanery of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £17, 1s. 3d., and now worth £485 per annum. The tithes were commuted in 1839 for a rent-charge of £382, 9s. 2d. The Duke of Bedford is patron, and the Rev. Henry Fuller, M.A., incumbent. The church contains some monuments to the Russell family. The Rectory House stands near the church. There is a good School here built by the Duke of Bedford, by whom it is principally supported.

Sibberton, now a single house, is supposed, from ruins and stones which have been dug up, to have consisted of several houses.

Fuller Rev. Hen. M.A. Rectory
 Jackson Isaac, blacksmith
 Kingston George, baker
 Lilley Timothy, coal dealer
 Mossendew George, shopkeeper

Pither Miss, schoolmistress
 Stokes William, shopkeeper.

Farmers and Graziers.

Bodger Jonathan
 Brittin Geo. Frđ. Manor House

Burnham Henry, New Farm
 Everitt John Hy. Thornhaugh
Lodge
 Gordon Francis, The Oaks
 Percival Thos, jun., Sibberton

UFFORD PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Barnack and Bainton on the north; the Roman road, of which Lolham Bridges form a part, on the east; and Thornhaugh and Marholme on the south and west. Bainton was formerly a chapelry in this parish, but is now an independent parish. Ufford includes the hamlet of Ashton, and contains an area of 2237 acres (of which 797 belong to Ashton), and the population in 1801 was 120; in 1831, 309; in 1841, 286; in 1851, 297; in 1861, 307; and in 1871, 282. The rateable value of the parish is £3164, 7s., of which £1330 belongs to Ashton; and the gross estimated rental is £3484, of which sum £1872, 6d. belongs to Ashton. Lord Kesteven is lord of the manor and the principal proprietor.

Manor.—At an early period Ufford, or Uffworth, belonged to the abbey of Peterborough, and was held of the abbot by the family of Torpel. In the nineteenth of Henry VII. (1503), Robert Halley, Esq., died seized of a manor here, held by the Lady Margaret, Countess of Richmond, by suit of court at her manor of Torpel. This manor subsequently passed to the Phelipps, and Mollesworths, and through several intermediate possessors to the family of Trollope. There was another principal manor here called Torpel Manor, which in the first of Richard I. (1189), was in the possession of Roger de Torpel, who paid £5 into the Exchequer for enclosing his woods, and making a park here. Sir Ralph de Camois was the successor of the Torpel family, and his son of the same name in the forty-eighth of Henry III. (1263), obtained a grant of a weekly market here on Thursday, and an annual fair for three days, beginning on the eve of the feast of St Giles. By inquisition taken at his death, it was found that he had held this with other manors of the Abbot of Burgh by the service of six knight's fees. Edward II. gave these possessions to Edmund of Woodstock, Earl of Kent, his brother, in the thirteenth of his reign (1319). From his descendants it passed to the Somerset family, and descended to Margaret, the wife of Edmund Tudor, Earl of Richmond, and by him to the mother of Henry VII. In the twenty-ninth of Henry VIII. (1537), it was given to Sir William Fitzwilliam, Knight, and upon his death without issue it reverted to the crown. In the sixteenth of James I. (1618), another possessor of the same name died seized of certain lands here, which were held of the lord of the Torpel manor. Lord Kesteven is now lord of this manor.

The Village of Ufford, which is small, stands on rising ground, 8 miles N.W. by W. of Peterborough, 5 miles S.W. from Stamford, and 1 from Barnack. The parish is intersected by the river Welland and the Roman road from Castor to Lincoln; also by the Midland, and Stamford, and Essendine Railways.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, is an ancient stone structure, and consists of chancel, nave, and side aisles, with square tower containing three bells. It was restored in 1860, when an ancient rood screen in front of the chancel was removed (with the consent of the bishop) by the present rector. It was resealed and a new pulpit and reading-desk erected. The font is ancient, and covered by a handsomely carved canopy. The living is a rectory with the curacy of Bainton annexed, in the deanery of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £26, 13s. 4d., and its net annual value, including Bainton, is about £680. It is in the gift of St John's College, Cambridge, and incumbency of the Rev. Thomas Paley, B.D.

Ufford Hall retains traces of its ancient splendour. It was built in the sixteenth century, and enlarged in 1751.

The Rectory is a good residence, adjoining the church; and The School, erected in 1859, by the late Sir John Trollope, is principally supported by Lord Kesteven.

Charity.—Mrs Edge, in 1724, left a farm of land in this parish, which now lets for £135 a year, to be given to six decayed gentlewomen.

ASHTON is a hamlet in this parish, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles east by north from Wansford, and 9 from Peterborough. It contains 797 acres, and its population in 1801 was 96; in 1831, 126; in 1841, 101; and in 1871, 121 souls. Lord Kesteven is the lord of the manor and principal owner of the soil.

Letters received through Barnack Post-Office.

(Marked 1 reside at Ashton.)

Bailey Mr Smalley
Berridge Benj. cattle dealer
Bloodworth Edward, vict. White Hart
Chatterton Samuel, miller and baker, Lolham Mill
1 Cook William, cottager
Crowson Joseph, shopkeeper
Crowson Mrs My. Ann, schoolm.

Hayes Miss Ellen, dressmaker
Herring James, blacksmith
1 Hydes William, cottager
Jesson William, shoemaker
1 Johnson John, carpenter
1 Newbon William, wheelwright
Paley Rev. Thomas, B.D. rector
Shelton William, stonemason
Wyles John, carpenter

Farmers and Graziers.

Bloodworth Edward
Cave Francis
1 Grossmith John
Hayes John
Johnson George Wolsey
1 Nidd James
Nottingham Thomas (yeoman)
1 Ward David
Young Giles

Carriers.—William Cottingham to Stamford on Friday.

WANSFORD PARISH

Is situated on the north side of the river Nene, by which it is divided from Stibbington, in Huntingdonshire. It was formerly a chapelry to Thornhaugh, but it is now an independent parish, containing 447 acres. Its population in 1801 was 148; in 1831, 179; in 1841, 205; in 1851, 186; in 1861, 180; and in 1871, 133 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £788, and the gross estimated rental £889. The river is crossed here by an ancient bridge of thirteen arches; it was repaired in 1674, and widened and rebuilt in 1795. The land in this neighbourhood is highly cultivated, but is subject to frequent floods. The Duke of Bedford is lord of the manor, and owner of the whole parish.

Manor.—This lordship is not mentioned in Domesday Book, but it was formerly held by the St Medard family, under the abbey of Peterborough. The manor is supposed to have been afterwards included in the liberty of Thornhaugh; and there was another manor here and in Stibbington, in the hands of William de Lisours, in the reign of Henry II. His daughter carried it in marriage to Humphrey de Bassingburn, from whose descendants it passed to the Folkesworths, and from them, through several intermediate possessors, to the Bedford family.

The Village of Wansford, Wandsford, or Wansford-in-Wood, as it is generally called, is situated on the London road, 8 miles west from Peterborough. Here is a regular post-office, and also a large inn, known as the Haycock Hotel, standing in both counties. The Queen, when Princess Victoria, on her journey to York in 1836, accompanied by her mother the Duchess of Kent, and her ladies-in-waiting, slept at the Haycock Hotel.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is an ancient edifice, consisting of a body and north aisle, south porch, square tower surmounted by a spire containing two bells. The living is a perpetual curacy, subordinate to the rectory of Thornhaugh. The Rev. Henry Fuller, M.A., rector of Thornhaugh, is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1807.

The School is endowed with the interest of £40, which was left, in 1707, by the Rev. Thomas Woolsey, and the rent of 4a. 2r. 20p., allotted in the parish of Maxey, now let for £12 a year, in lieu of certain land given to the school by a Mrs Russell, and 1r. 6p. awarded at the enclosure of Borough fen. The interest of £20, the amount of sundry donations, is distributed amongst poor widows of this parish and Thornhaugh.

Wansford is noted for the story of a man who, in the haymaking time, was carried down the stream from this place towards Wisbeach, by the sudden rising of the river during the night, as he slept on a haycock. He was seen by some fishermen, and rescued from his perilous situation, almost in the open sea, and being asked where he lived, he answered, "At Wansford, in England;" by which appellation the village is now frequently designated; and, notwithstanding the improbability of the story, it is firmly believed by many of the country people. The hero of the tale, however, is supposed to be the famous Barnaby Harrington, better known as "Drunken Barnabee," who has given an account of the adventures of his journey from London to Westmoreland. Wansford was formerly celebrated as a posting town, but this business has fallen away considerably since the introduction of railways.

Post, Money-Order, Savings Bank, and Telegraph Office.—Mr Robert Bodger, postmaster. Letters arrive from Peterborough, per mail car, at 5.10, and by messenger at 11.35 A.M., and are despatched at 8.25 P.M.

Bodger Robert, postmaster	Peach Thos. Edward, vict.	Stokes Samuel, butcher
Brice Wm. baker & parish clk.	Marquis of Granby	Strickson Hy. harness-maker
Colbon Christopher, stonemason	Percival Thomas, brewer, malt-	Wheatley Frederick, station-
Eayres George, cooper	ster, farmer, & vict. Haycock	master, Wansford road
Fullard Mrs Sarah Ann, timber	Hotel	Wilson John, farmer
and coal merchant	Smith Mrs Caroline, farmer	Wright Chas. ale & porter agt.
Louth Michael, hairdresser	Southam Francis, surgeon	farmer & vict. Mermaid

WITTERING PARISH.

Wittering or Whittering, or as it is called in Domesday Book, Witeringham, is situated on high ground, and is bounded on the east by Barnack, on the south by Thornhaugh, on the west by Easton, and on the north by Stamford St Martin's. It contains 2577 acres; its rateable value is £2482; gross estimated rental, £2766; and its population in 1801 was 194; in 1831, 216; in 1841, 261; in 1851, 262; in 1861, 235; and in 1871, 270 souls. The soil is principally arable, of a light sandy nature, and there is about 20 acres of woodland. The parish is well supplied with excellent springs, and here are some good quarries, the stone of which is very suitable for building purposes. Tradition says that the Danes received a memorable defeat on Whittering heath or plain. The Marquis of Exeter is lord of the manor, and owner of the whole parish, except a few acres of glebe.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Anchetil de St Medard held 9 hides of land here of the Abbot of Burgh (Peterborough). There were three mills of the yearly rent of 19s., and a wood 2 miles long and 1 broad, and the whole was then valued at £11. Before the Conquest it was rated at £3. Richard, his son and successor, married Mabel Ridel, and his descendants bore the name of Ridel, and were possessed of this manor, till the reign of Edward IV. From this family it passed probably by marriage to Robert Halley, who died in the nineteenth of Henry VII. (1503), and was succeeded by his son John, whose daughter left it to her son Antony Stydoliffe. The descendants of this family continued in the possession of the lordship till about the latter end of the reign of William III., when it was purchased by the Cecil family for £6500, and from whom it descended lineally to the Marquis of Exeter, the present proprietor.

The Village of Wittering, which is small and scattered, is distant about 2½ miles N.W. by W. of Wansford, and 3 from Stamford.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands a little south of the village. It is an ancient stone structure, consisting of a nave and clerestory, north aisle and porch, chancel, south porch, and tower, containing three bells, and surmounted by a spire. At the end of the side aisle is a mortuary chapel. The nave is Norman of the twelfth century; the chancel is remarkable for the construction of the rood arch, which is considered to be of the pure style of Saxon architecture. The living is a discharged rectory in the deanery of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £8, os. 10d., and now worth about £112 per annum. The Marquis of Exeter is the patron, and the Rev. Edward H. Everett is the incumbent. The Rectory House, a neat stone building, stands a little west of the church, and the School, which is held in the rectory, is supported by the rector, the Marquis of Exeter, and by voluntary contribution.

The spire having been struck by lightning was repaired in 1866, and the church was restored in 1870, when it was newly roofed and floored, and furnished with open oak sittings, two new windows, and a south porch. These improvements were effected by subscription, at a cost of nearly £1000.

It is said that a priory stood here as early as the year 1308, but little is known of it. It was probably a cell to the abbey of Peterborough.

Letters received through Wansford Post-Office.

Brice Mrs Hannah, schoolmrs.
Cox Simpson, blacksmith
Everett Rev. Henry, rector
Munton John, baker
Roberts Charles, shopkeeper
Roffe Peter, shoemaker
Roffe William, shoemaker
Sheffield Mrs Eliz. shopkeeper

Todd Mr Samuel
Turnell Mr Christopher
Watts Robert, carpenter
Williamson John, carpenter

Farmers and Graziers.

Bowman Joseph, h. Duddington

Caswell George, Lodge, h. Stamford Hotel, Stamford
Flint Charles, Lodge
Hockney John
Hodgkin Henry
Porter Henry Wm. Lodge
Whincup Henry Holdsforth, Manor House

WILLYBROOK HUNDRED.

WILLYBROOK, or Willibrook Hundred, at the north-eastern end of the county, is bounded by Nassaburgh Hundred, and a part of Huntingdonshire on the east, on the south and west by Polebrook and Corby Hundreds, and on the north by the river Welland, which divides it from Rutlandshire. It extends about twelve miles from north to south, and about eight at its widest point from east to west, and covers an area of 31,000 statute acres. In the eighth year of the reign of Henry III. (1223), Ralph, Earl of Chester and Lincoln, held this hundred; and it continued in the hands of the Crown or its grantees till the time of Charles I., when it was granted to Mildmay, Earl of Westmoreland, at the yearly rent of 36s. 2d., and continued with his descendants. Bridges says that the hundred derives its name from "the Willow-brook stream, which hath its rise in Dene-park, and passing through Bulwick, takes its course by Cliffe and Apethorpe, and joins the Nene near Fotheringhay." Willybrook hundred is divided into fourteen parishes, of which the following is an enumeration, showing the number of acres (from the rate books), population, and number of houses in 1871, with the present rateable value, and gross estimated rental.

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Apethorpe	1,669	57	119	124	243	£ 2,005	£ 2,360
Colley Weston	1,511	98	6	1	207	207	414	2,671	2,992
Cotterstock	675	42	80	111	191	1,259	1,487
Duddington	1,342	85	5	...	186	197	383	2,420	2,692
Easton	3,323	221	9	...	483	470	953	5,021	5,660
Fotheringhay	3,112	52	119	110	229	3,644	4,281
Glaphorpe	1,413	78	4	...	191	179	370	1,616	1,895
King's Cliffe	2,224	302	19	...	613	646	1,259	6,512	7,652
Lutton (part of).....	1,400	37	87	76	163	1,652	1,929
Nassington.....	1,543	156	326	303	629	3,579	4,181
Southwick	1,354	59	140	125	265	4,578	5,295
Tansor.....	1,410	64	5	...	115	116	231	2,258	2,660
Wood-Newton	1,022	102	7	1	242	249	491	2,263	2,641
Yarwell	9,080	87	1	...	211	184	395	1,990	2,362
	31,078	1,440	56	2	3,119	3,097	6,216	41,408	48,087

CHARITIES OF WILLYBROOK HUNDRED, as abstracted from the last Parliamentary reports. See also the histories of the parishes :—

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purpose applied.	Annual value.
1618.	Lady Grace Mildmay (estate).....	Apethorpe, Woodnewton, Nassington, and Yarwell, for apprenticing children	£36 0 0
	Ditto	For preaching sermons at Apethorpe, and bread to the poor	12 0 0
1658.	Clement Bellamy (rents).....	Cotterstock parish, apprenticing children	5 0 0
1677.	William Jackson (rent)	Duddington parish, school	10 0 0
	Town Land	Ditto, poor.....	11 5 0
1670.	Richard Garford (3 houses in London)	Easton parish, school and apprenticing children	65 0 0
1766.	Brownlow, Earl of Exeter	A house and garden for schoolmaster
1766.	Countess of Exeter (£50)	Ditto, ditto	1 10 0
1818.	Commissioners of Inclosure (1a. } 1r. 31p.)	Ditto, school	5 0 0
	Donors unknown (400 3 per cents)...	Ditto, ditto	12 0 0
	Benefaction Fund (£75)	Ditto, poor	3 0 0
	Town Estate	Ditto, poor and church repairs..	62 15 0
	Queen Elizabeth	Fotheringhay parish, grammar school	20 0 0
1664.	Earl of Newport (rent)	Ditto, poor.....	30 0 0
1672.	Robert Roane	Ditto, ditto	2 0 0
	Donors unknown (£100 3 per cents)	Ditto, Sunday-school	3 0 0
1658.	Clement Bellamy (rents).....	Glaphorne parish, apprenticing children	5 0 0
1765.	John Webb (£10)	Ditto, bread to poor	0 10 0
1688.	Jno. Thorpe (3 houses) in King's Cliffe	Almshouses for 3 persons
	Ann de Rippe (£100)	Ditto, ditto.....	3 0 0
1688.	Rd. Wildbore (rent)	Ditto, schools	5 0 0
	Eliz. Hutchinson and Wm. Law	Ditto, almshouse and school, about	650 0 0
1869.	Rev. John Law (£700 3 per cents)..	Ditto, poor	21 0 0
1869.	Mrs Louise Perry (£600 3 per cents.)	Ditto, schools.....	18 0 0
	Mrs Bonney (£454 1s. 1d. 3 per cents.)	Ditto, clothing club and Sunday school	13 12 5
	Town Land (11 acres).....	Lutton parish, poor	34 10 0
	Church and Poor's Land)	Nassington parish	27 0 0
	Benefaction fund	Ditto	0 8 0
1819.	Miss Males (£100)	Ditto, church Sunday-school....	5 0 0
	Poor's Land and Stock	Southwick parish	49 0 0
1658.	Clement Bellamy	Tansor parish, apprentg. childn.	5 0 0
	Town Estate	Ditto, poor	40 0 0
1819.	Cave (land)	Ditto, poor.....	5 5 0
	Church Estate	Woodnewton parish	34 10 0
	Church and Poor's Estate	Yarwell parish	29 10 0
	Poor's money (£40).....	Ditto, poor.....	2 0 0
			£1,226 15 5

APETHORPE PARISH.

Apethorpe parish was formerly a chapelry to Nassington, but is now an independent parish, containing 1669 acres (exclusive of the area of a part of Rockingham Forest, 750 acres), of the rateable value of £2005. Its population in 1801 was 231; in 1831, 297; in 1841, 269; in 1851, 281; in 1861, 248; and in 1871, 243 souls. The gross estimated rental is £2360. The boundaries of the parish are formed by Nassington on the east, by Newton on the south, on the west by King's Cliffe, and on the north by Yarwell. The Earl of Westmoreland is lord of the manor, and principal proprietor of the soil.

Manor.—Apethorpe is not mentioned in Domesday Book, but in the estimate of hides in the reign of Henry II., it was certified to contain two hides, which were in the hands of the crown. In the fifteenth of Henry III. (1230), Ranulph Brito obtained a grant of this manor. It afterwards reverted to the crown, and was given to John de Lacy, and reverting again to the crown, it was granted to John de Clavering in the reign of Edward II. It afterwards passed into the possession of the Dalton family; and in the reign of Henry VII., Henry Keble, alderman of London, died seized of it. In the reign of Edward VI., the manor and park of Apethorpe, which was again in the hands of the crown, was given in exchange for other lands to Sir Walter Mildmay, Kt., between whom and George Keble a fine was levied of it in the seventh of the same reign. Sir Walter Mildmay was Chancellor of the Exchequer, and founder of Emmanuel College. On the occasion of his founding this college, Queen Elizabeth told him at court she heard he had erected a Puritan foundation; to which he replied, he had set an acorn which, when it became an oak, God alone knew what would be the fruit of it. Sir Anthony Mildmay, his son and successor, was succeeded by his daughter and heiress, Mary, the wife of Francis Fane, who died in 1617. Sir Francis Fane, in 1624, was advanced to the titles of Baron Burghersh and Earl of Westmoreland. From this nobleman the manor of Apethorpe descended lineally to the present Earl—Francis William Henry Fane, the twelfth Earl of Westmoreland, eldest surviving son of John Fane, the eleventh Earl, by Priscilla Anne, daughter of the third Earl of Mornington, was born in 1825; married, in 1857, Adelaide Ida, daughter of first Earl of Howe; succeeded his father in 1859; is a colonel in the army, and late captain of the Coldstream Guards. Residences—Apethorpe Hall, Wansford; Guards' Club and 41 Hill Street, Berkeley Square, London. Heir, his son, Lord Burghersh, born 1859.

The Village of Apethorpe, which is small, is situate on the Oundle and King's Cliffe road, about 4 miles N.W. from Wansford and $1\frac{1}{4}$ S. of King's Cliffe.

The Church is dedicated to Saint Leonard, and consists of a nave, with clerestory, chancel, side aisles, south chancel, chapel, or place of sepulture, south porch, and an embattled tower, surmounted by a spire, and containing four bells. It contains a sumptuous marble monument to the memory of Sir Anthony Mildmay and his wife, Grace, Lady Mildmay, who died, the former in 1617, and the latter in 1620. The living is a vicarage annexed to Woodnewton, in the gift of the Bishop of Peterborough, and the Rev. Henry M. Roxby, M.A., is the incumbent.

The School, which is a stone building, was erected by the Dowager Countess of Westmoreland in 1846.

Apethorpe Hall, the splendid seat of the Earl of Westmoreland, stands a little south of the village, and was erected in the reign of Queen Elizabeth by Sir Walter Mildmay. On the accession of James VI. of Scotland to the crown of England, he visited this mansion on his journey to London in 1603. It was here he first noticed Villiers, afterwards Duke of Buckingham, and here are chambers still called the King's and the Duke's chamber. The mansion contains several excellent family and other portraits.

Charities.—Grace, Lady Mildmay, in 1618, left a rent-charge of £36 per annum, for apprenticing children in Apethorpe, Woodnewton, Nassington, and Yarwell; she also left £10 per annum to be paid to the minister for preaching sermons on certain days, £2 for the poor, £10 for reading homilies, and £8 for poor scholars in Emmanuel College, Cambridge, which seems to have been lost; but the Earl of Westmoreland pays £10 a year to the incumbent of Apethorpe, and 50s. to be distributed in bread to the poor, as well as certain sums to the day and Sunday school, which may have originated from, or are made in respect of, these local charities.

Post-Office.—William Lucas, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Mansford at 3 P.M., and are despatched at 6.55 P.M.

Westmoreland, The Right Hon. the Earl of, Apethorpe Hall	Ireson Mr Thomas	Taylor Dan. shoemr. & shopkr.
Ball Mrs Kath. & Miss Elizab.	Johnson Thos. carptr. & baker	Farmers and Graziers.
Burrows Mrs Mary, shopkr.	Lucas Wm. game dir. & par. cl.	Browning Fredk. Manor House
Chapman John, cooper	Lucas William, schoolmaster	Gregory William Henry
Chapman Wm. wheelwright, h. Peterborough	Pain John, gamekr. Morchay Lawn	Gregory Mrs Sophia
Ewart William, gardener, Hall	Pain Geo. gamekr. Jack's Green	Reedman Wm. Blufield Lodge , h. Nassington
Gregory Mrs Sophia, vict. Buf-falo's Head	Pain William, stonemason	Reeve William, Lodge
	Palmer John, hawker
	Palmer Tho. mangr of gas wrks.

Carrier.—William Lucas to Stamford on Tuesday and Friday.

COLLEY WESTON PARISH

Is divided from Rutlandshire on the north and north-west by the Welland, and is bounded by Easton on the east, by King's Cliffe on the south, and Duddington on the west. It contains 1511 acres; its population in 1801 was 294; in 1831, 394; in 1841, 434; in 1851, 471; in 1861, 473; and in 1871, 414 souls. The gross estimated rental is £2992, and the rateable value £2671. The soil varies in quality, and the principal proprietors are the Marquis of Exeter and Mr Thomas Close. Slate and limestone quarries are numerous and extensive in this parish, and the latter is considered the finest in the county. Here was an old palace, the building of which was commenced by Lord Cromwell, and completed by Margaret, Countess of Richmond, mother of Henry VII. Queen Elizabeth visited this mansion on the 3d of August 1566.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Ralph de Limesi, to whom Holwin was under-tenant, held of the crown 2 hides of land in Weston. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 20s., 12 acres of meadow, and a wood, and the whole was rated at £6. In the preceding reign it was held by Earl Morcar, and valued at £5. In the reign of Henry II. these 2 hides were in the hands of William Fitz-Helewyn. In Henry III.'s time, Peter de Weston held this manor; and in the 5th of Edward I. (1276), Elias de Hanvill died seized of it. In the 15th of Edward II. (1321), Nicholas de Segrave died seized of it; and in the reign of Edward III., John Hotham, Bishop of Ely, was possessed of it. From the family of Hotham it passed through the Despencers, Lovells, Earls of Stafford, and others to the Cromwells. In the reign of Henry VI., Ralph, Lord Cromwell, "began the structure of a fair house here." The manor soon after fell to the crown, and was granted to Margaret, Countess of Richmond, who died seized of it in the 1st of Henry VIII. (1509). At her death it again reverted to the crown. David Cecil was appointed steward of it; and it subsequently passed to the family of Tyron. It is now in the possession of the Marquis of Exeter. The Manor-house, bearing date 1696, stands in the centre of the village.

The Village of Weston, called Colyn, or Colley Weston, to distinguish it from the other Westons in the county, is pleasantly situated on rising ground, overlooking the Welland, 18½ miles N. of Kettering, and 3½ S.W. of Stamford.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, is an ancient structure, consisting of a nave, north aisle, north and south chancels, south porch, clerestory and square tower, with pinnacles and two bells. It was restored in 1857, at a cost of £450, when it was furnished with open carved oak sittings, pulpit, lectern, reading-desk, and chancel stalls; and the east and west windows were filled with stained glass by the rector. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £12, 9s. 7d., and now worth about £400 per annum. The tithes were commuted in 1839, for a rent-charge of £291, 18s. 6d. The Lord Chancellor is the patron, and the Rev. Nicholas Bourne Milnes, M.A., is the incumbent. The Rectory House, a neat stone building, stands near the church.

Certain lands in this parish, formerly part of the possessions of the priory of St Michael, near Stamford, in the 7th of Edward VI. (1553), were given to Sir William Cecil, Knight, and are now the property of the Marquis of Exeter.

Letters are received through Stamford at 8.30 A.M., and the wall-box is cleared at 5.20 P.M.

Berridge Benj. vict. White Swan
Bird William, shoemaker
Close James, slater
Close Levi, slater
Close Robert, slater
Close William, slater
Dawes Wm. beerhs. & shopkr.
Elger William, schoolmaster
Fitzjohn Daniel, slater
Fitzjohn Richard, slater
Goodwin Thos. shoemaker and parish clerk
Hand Wm. slater and plasterer

Hibbins William, slater
Islip John, wheelwright
Lomas Edward, slater
Lomas Geo. slater & lime-burner
Martin Thomas, gardener
Martin Wm. gunsmith & beerh.
Milnes Rev. Nicholas Bourne,
M.A. rector
Ridlington Mrs Mary, shopkr.
Sellars Francis, slater
Sharp Wm. butcher and vict.
Slaters' Arms
Skinner Henry, baker

Stokes Charles, vict. Blue Ball
Stokes Thos. wood & coal deahr.
Tasker Mr William
Tyers Henry, beerhouse and machineman
Chappell Wyles, blacksmith

Farmers.

Buckworth Miss Elizabeth
Close William
Close William, Poplars
Colston Joseph, h. Benefield
Stokes Thomas, h. Glaistor
Walter John

COTTERSTOCK PARISH

Is bounded on the east by the river Nene, on the south by Oundle, on the west by Glapthorne, and on the north by Fotheringhay. It contains 675 acres, of the rateable value of £12,591; the gross estimated rental is £14,871; and its population in 1801 was 136; in 1831, 161; in 1841, 204; in 1851, 176; in 1861, 211; in 1871, 191 souls. The soil is in general a strong clay, with a subsoil of a clayey nature, and the principal proprietors are—General Viscount Melville, G.C.B. (the lord of the manor), Captain Rickett, F.C.S., and Mr John Everest.

Manor.—Two knights held 3 hides of land here, of the Abbot of Peterborough, at the time of the Domesday survey; there were 24 acres of meadow and a wood, 6 furlongs in length and 4 in breadth, and the whole was valued at 60s., though in the Confessor's reign it was rated only at 5s. In the reign of Henry II., Richard Fitzhugh, and Robert, an infant, held this lordship of the same Abbey. Ralph de Camois held it in the fifth of Edward I. (1276), and from this family it passed to John Gifford, clerk, a canon of the cathedral of York. In the eleventh of Edward III. (1337), he founded a chantry or college here, for a provost and 13 chaplains, and endowed it with this manor and the advowson of the church, with 2 mills, an acre of meadow, a fishery of the river Nene, &c. In the twentieth of this reign (1347), the provost of the chantry levied a fine of the manor. Here was also a second manor in the possession of the family of Holt, from which it passed to the family of Norwich, and afterwards reverted to the Crown. It subsequently came into the hands of the Kirkham family, and in Bridges' time the Earl of Cardigan was lord of the manor.

The Village of Cotterstock, or Cotherstock, which is small, contains a few good houses, and is situate about two miles N.N.E. of Oundle.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, is an ancient structure, consisting of a nave and side aisles, chancel, and a square embattled tower containing four bells; but the chief features of interest, says an archæological report, of this church, is the chancel, which is a very admirable work of the Curvilinear period, and of ogee character, with a number of cups producing very singular foliation. The window shows a very peculiar and beautiful form of Curvilinear tracery. There is a Norman doorway at the west end; a beautiful south porch, and a north porch of the Rectilinear period. The nave is Late Transitional, or Early Lancet. The tower arch is of the same date. There are fine specimens of sedilia and piscina, with ogee arches crocketed with finials. The roof of the porch is groined, and the bosses are very interesting, the central one being the Holy of Holies, and four others, representing as many of the apostles. The living is a discharged vicarage, united to that of Glapthorne, in the deanery of Oundle, returned at £100 per annum. General Viscount Melville is the patron, and the Rev. Alfred James Abbey is incumbent. The Vicarage House stands in the centre of the village. The tithes were commuted in 1813, for land.

Cotterstock Hall, the seat of the Marquis of Huntly, was built by Mr Norton. It was at this house that Dryden, the poet, wrote his fables, and spent the two last summers of his life. In 1736 and 1798, tessellated pavements, and other Roman antiquities, were found in the gilded acre, and other parts of this parish, of which Captain Rickett, H.C.S., has an interesting drawing. The Peterborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway passes near this parish.

Charity.—The poor have an interest in Bellamy's charity, for the apprenticeship of children.

Letters arrive through the Oundle Post-Office at 6.45 A.M., box cleared at 6.20 P.M.

Huntly, the Most Noble the Marquis of, Cotterstock Hall	Everest Mrs Caroline, corn and coal merchant	Quincey Sanders, vict. Gate
Abbey Alfred James, M.A.	Postescue John, farmer, Lodge	Rickett Captain James, H.C.S.
Berridge Edwin, carpenter	Garner William, cottager	Smith Mrs Elizabeth
Bucknell J. shopkr. & shmr.	Green James, baker	Smith Robt. miller and farmer
		Warren William, blacksmith

DUDDINGTON PARISH.

The boundaries of Duddington, or Doddington, are formed by Colley Weston on the east, by King's Cliffe on the south, by Wakerley on the west, and by the river Welland, which separates it from Rutlandshire, on the north. The parish lies on a descent to the river, and contains 1342 acres; its population in 1801 was 295; in 1831, 364; in 1841, 413; in 1851, 401; in 1861, 422; and in 1871, 383 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £2420; and the gross estimated rental £2692, 8s. The soil on the S.E. of the parish is a heavy clay; on the N.E. a light gravelly nature; there is some limestone in the parish, most of the land is arable, and the principal proprietors are William Goddard Jackson, Esq., the Marquis of Exeter, and E. H. C. Monckton, Esq., the lord of the manor.

Manor.—Dodintone, which contained 1 hide of land, was in the hands of the crown at the time of the Conqueror's survey. This lordship was an ancient demesne, and when in the hands of the crown paid £15 annually into the exchequer. In the reign of Richard I., it came into the possession of Richard de le Hay, and was carried in marriage by his daughter, to the De Ayencurt, or Deincourt family, with which it continued till the reign of Henry VI., when it again passed in marriage to William Lord Lovell, and Ralph Lord Cromwell, with Alice and Margaret, sisters of William Lord Deyncourt, who died in his minority. After the decease of Lady Cromwell, Alice Lady Lovell inherited her share of this manor, and her successor was Francis Viscount Lovell, her grandson. After having twice reverted to the crown, it was granted in the reign of Henry VIII. to William, Lord Burleigh, who shortly after levied a fine of it. The late Marquis of Exeter sold the manorial rights to — Jackson, Esq., of Stamford, whose son, Thomas H. Jackson, sold them, in 1843, to John Monckton, Esq. of Fineshade Abbey, from whom they descended to the present proprietor.

The Village of Duddington is pleasantly situated, five miles S.W. by S. of Stamford. It contains several excellent old buildings, occupied by farmers, amongst which may be noticed the Old Manor House, now occupied by William Goddard Jackson, jun., Esq. Belmont House, the seat of Major Frederick Bowman, is a good building of stone, erected in 1828, near the entrance of the village.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, consists of a nave, north and south aisles, chancel, and tower, surmounted by a small pyramidal spire, and one bell. It is principally of the Norman and Early English styles. It was restored in 1844, when it was reseated, the chancel newly roofed, and a new oak pulpit, reading desk, and altar rails added. The living is a vicarage worth £115, in the gift of the Bishop of Peterborough, and incumbency of the Rev. Edward Freer Green, L.M. The Marquis of Exeter is lay impropiator, and there are 36 acres of glebe land. The Vicarage House is a neat building erected in 1854.

The School is endowed with a rent-charge of £10 per annum, left in 1677 by William Jackson, and is principally supported by William Goddard Jackson, Esq.; and the town, or poor's land, yields about £11, 5s. per annum, which is distributed to poor parishioners at Christmas.

The Independents have a place of worship in the village.

By virtue of a charter, granted in the reign of Elizabeth, the inhabitants of Duddington are free from certain toll throughout the kingdom.

Post, Money-Order, Savings Bank, and Telegraph Office.—Letters from Stamford at 9 A.M., despatched at 5 P.M. Money orders granted and paid from 9 A.M. till 6 P.M. Edward Wheelband, sub-postmaster.

Alderman William, baker
Astin James, miller, h. Ketton
Barnes Chas. vict. Windmill
Bowman Major Frederick,
Belmont House
Bowman Joseph Orlando, Esq.
Belmont House

Bradshaw the Misses Susannah,
Ann & Kathrn. Rose Cottage
Elliott Augusts & Jno. Hy. joinrs.
& bldrs. grocers & ironmrs.
Gaskell the Misses Maria, Caroline, and Susan
Green Rev. E. Freer, L. M. vicar

Hibbins William, baker
Islip John, wheelwright
Jackson William Goddard,
Esq. jun. J.P. Manor House
Jelly John Wm. tailor
Langley Rd. pianoforte tuner
Newton John, shoemaker

Payne Jeremiah, shoemaker, and vict. Royal Oak	Todd Isaac, shopkeeper and parish clerk	Farmers.
Payne Joseph, higgler	Warrington Mrs Sarah, baker	Dainty John
Pick Francis, wheelwright	Wheelband Edw. schoolmast.	Gregory Thomas (and butcher)
Sefton James, vict. Crown	Wyles Robert, blacksmith and shopkeeper	Langley John, h. Uppingham
Sharpe Jabez, shoemaker and shopkeeper	Wyles William, sexton	Percival Thomas
Tipping Robert, blacksmith		Sculthorpe Thomas, Dash
		Stokes Charles
		Stokes Samuel

EASTON PARISH.

Easton, Eston, or, from its situation, Easton on the Hill, is bounded on the east by Worthorpe, on the S.E. and S.W. by Wittering and Colley Weston, and on the north by the river Welland, which separates it from Rutlandshire. It contains 3323 acres; and its population in 1801 was 579; in 1831, 769; in 1841, 883; in 1851, 1066; in 1861, 984; in 1871, 953 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £5021, and the gross estimated rental is £5660. The soil varies little, and is of a red sandy nature, upon a red rock, or light slate stone. There are about 430 acres of woodland in the parish, and the arable and pasture land is very productive. The Marquis of Exeter (lord of the manor), Mr Thomas Rayson, and Brown's Hospital, Stamford; Mrs Mary Turnell, and George and Thomas Woodward, are the principal proprietors. Easton was once as famed for its slate quarries as Colley Weston, and its stone is considered of a superior quality.

Manor.—At the time of the Norman survey, this lordship contained 1½ hide of land, which was held by Rolland, who held of Eudo, who held of the crown. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 20s., 8 acres of meadow, and a wood 3 furlongs in length and 2 in breadth, and the whole was valued at £6. In the Confessor's reign, it was the freehold of Drondi, and was rated at 20s. In the reign of Henry II., Simon de Lindon held 2 hides here, and from this family it passed to Alianore, late Queen Consort of England. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Margaret, Queen of England, was Lady of Easton. Edward III. settled it upon Edmund of Woodstock, Earl of Kent, and his heirs. His daughter Joane, for her beauty, was called the Fair Maid of Kent. From the noble family of Kent, this manor passed to the noble family of Salisbury, from which it was carried in marriage to George, Duke of Clarence, brother to King Edward IV., and descended to his son and successor, who was created Earl of Warwick. This nobleman was beheaded by Henry VII., and on his decease Easton fell to the crown. In the twenty-fifth of Elizabeth (1582), William, Lord Burleigh, levied a fine of it, and in the nineteenth of Charles I. (1643), David, Earl of Exeter, died seized of it, and transmitted it to his posterity. The priories of Stamford and Coventry, the abbey of Crowland, and the college of Fotheringhay, had each possessions in this parish.

The Village of Easton, which is neat and pleasantly situated, is composed of two streets of good stone houses and cottages, covered with grey slate, and well supplied with excellent water. It is distant two miles S.W. by S. of Stamford.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands at the north end of the village, in a conspicuous situation. It is a neat edifice, consisting of a nave, north and south aisles, and chapels, chancel, south porch and clerestory, and a freestone tower, 75 feet in height, surmounted by four handsome turrets, each 25 feet high. The south chapel was rebuilt in 1848 at the expense of the parish, the pillars and arches of the nave were cleaned at the same time, and the tower arch opened by the removal of a singing gallery. The view from the tower (which contains four bells), is extensive and beautiful; Boston Church and Ely Cathedral, distant about 32 miles, being visible to the naked eye. The town of Stamford is seen to much advantage from the churchyard, it being 160 feet above the level of the bridge, by which the river is crossed there. The tower of this church was used as a station by the ordnance surveyors in 1843. A fine organ, built by Holdich of London, was lately erected in the church, at a cost of about £230, which was raised by subscription. On the wall of the south chapel is an inscription to the memory of Richard de Linden (lord of this manor), which is dated 1230. The benefice is a rectory, in the deanery of Peterborough, rated in the king's books at £19, 8s. 9d., and now worth about £484 per annum, arising from a corn rent of £340, paid by the Marquis of Exeter, and about 72 acres of glebe. The Marquis of Exeter is patron of the living, and the Rev. W. H. Charlton, M.A., is the incumbent.

Gas Works were established here in 1863 at a cost of £1525, raised in £5 shares. Gas is supplied to the inhabitants at 7s. 6d. per 1000 cubic feet. Mr John Taylor is the secretary.

A bed of Iron-stone was found in the parish in 1870, and is now raised in considerable quantities. A Wesleyan Chapel was erected here in 1827.

The School was founded and endowed in 1670, for the education, clothing, and apprenticing of four boys, by Richard Garford, with three houses in Crutched-friars, London. Besides the rent of these houses, which, according to the commissioner's report, is £65 per annum, the school has the interest of £600 3 per cent. consols, the principal of which was made by a saving from the rents, from time to time, with £50 added, in 1766, by the Countess of Exeter, that 6 girls might be added to the free scholars. The Earl of Exeter gave a house for the master in 1766. Here is also a Girls' School built in 1830, which is supported entirely by the Marchioness of Exeter. For the other charities, which now yield £70, 2s. 8d., see the table prefixed to this hundred.

Easton Boys' School, Richard Garford's Charity.—In the year 1866 an entire alteration took place in the arrangement of this charity. New trustees were appointed by the charity commissioners, and an entirely new scheme drawn up, under which the school was thrown open to the whole parish on the payment of a nominal sum by each boy, an exception being made in the case of four boys, who are still educated, clothed, and apprenticed, free of cost, in compliance with the terms of Richard Garford's will. The education of the six girls, formerly belonging to the school, is now transferred to the excellent National School for girls in the same place. In 1867 large and handsome school premises were built, a site in the centre of the parish having been procured for the purpose by an exchange of the school property for land belonging to the Marquis of Exeter. A new street was at the same time procured contiguous to the said building, thereby opening a direct communication in the main part of the parish, the want of which had long been a source of inconvenience. The total cost of the building and improvements connected with it was £1200. The new schoolroom, which is 45 feet by 18 feet, and contains a class-room 18 feet by 12 feet, was formally opened by Dr Jeune, late Bishop of Peterborough, in February 1868.

Post and Money Order-Office and Savings Bank.—George Bartram, postmaster. Letters arrive from Stamford per messenger, and are despatched at 6 P.M. Money-Orders from 9 A.M. till 6 P.M.

Barr John, stonemason	Gilbert Whitehead, baker and shopkeeper	Merriditt William, woodman
Bowder Mrs Ann, limeburner	Gilbert William, slater	Morton Mrs Fanny
Bradshaw Luke, cottager	Greenwood Mrs Mary	Naylor George, gardener
Brown Mr William	Hand Mrs Mary Ann, shopkr.	Newbon John, tailor
Chapman Hy. beerhs. & cooper	Hill Daniel, slater	Oddy Mr —, schoolmaster
Chapman Thomas, vict. Bell	Hubbard Mrs Elizabeth & Son (John), masons and builders	Peasgood Henry A. baker
Chappell Benjamin, slater	Ireland David, tailor	Perkins James, joiner & builder
Charlton Rev. William Henry, M.A. rector	Jackson Thomas, sawyer	Perkins Samuel, painter
Charity Edward, vict. The Oak	Jackson Wm. limeburnr. & slatr.	Perkins William, stonecutter
Clarke Edward, tailor	Jackson William, shoemaker	Pocock Thomas, gamekeeper
Cole Thomas, beerhs. & shopkr.	Jackson William, wheelwright	Porter Andrew, cottager
Collin Wm. vict. Slaters' Arms	Jenvey Theodore, painter and land-surveyor	Porter Mr Daniel
Cox William, blacksmith	Lomas John, grocer	Porter Miss Elizabeth
Day Charles, Esq. land agent	Lumby Frederick, butcher	Pridmore Mrs Ann, cottager
Day Neville, Esq.	Martin Atten, coal-dealer	Pridmore Mrs Eliz. schoomrs.
Dexter John, higgler	Manby Mrs Elizabeth	Quincer Jas. vict. Exeter Arms
Dexter William, miller	Manby Geo. Wm. groc. & drap.	Reading Mr Henry
Dexter Wm. beerhs. & shoemr.	Medwell Edward, wheelwright and carpenter	Shelton Martin, painter & glazr.
Dixon Henry, tailor	Medwell Robert, slater	Smart Miss Sophia, schoolmra.
Duncomb Thos. butcher & far.		Stickland Mr Morgan
Duncomb William, gardener		Taylor John, land surveyor, sec. to Gas Co. and parish clerk
Dunn Edw. mangr. Gas Works		Taylor Robert, tailor

Taylor William, tailor	Woodward Thomas, collar and harness maker	Hill Mrs Ann
Towler Hy. furrier & skin mert.	Wymer John, insurance agent	Peagood George
Tyler Francis, blacksmith		Porter John
Tyler George, beerhouse	Farmers.	Porter Isaac
Walter Wm. slater & limeburnr.		Smith Thomas
Wilford John, fishmonger	Dainty Albert	Taylor John
Woodward Jas. land surveyor	Dainty William	Thomson Lawrence
Woodward John E. shoemaker	Dexter Mrs Elizabeth	Whitehead Mrs Frances
Woodward Newman, cottager	Dring Charles	Woodward Allen
Woodward Thos. stonemason	Greenwood James Porter	Woodwood George

FOTHERINGHAY PARISH

Is bounded on the east by the river Nene, which divides it from Huntingdonshire, on the south by the parish of Oundle, and on the west and north by Glapthorne, Newton, and Nassington. It contains 3112 acres, of the rateable value of £3644, including £787 for railway property. The gross estimated rental is £4281: and its population in 1801 was 307; in 1831, 280; in 1841, 230; in 1851, 261; in 1861, 246; and in 1871, 229 souls. The soil varies from a strong loam to a light gravelly land; and Lord Overstone is the lord of the manor, and owner of all the parish, except the church land. The Peterborough branch of the North-Western Railway passes through the parish¹

Manor.—At the time of the general survey the Countess Judith held 6 hides of land in Fodringea, which, with a mill of the yearly value of 8s., 40 acres of meadow, and a wood, was valued at £12. In the Confessor's time it was the freehold of Turchil, and rated at £8. Maud, daughter of the Countess Judith, by her husband, Earl Waltheof, carried this manor in marriage to Simon de St Liz, first Earl of Northampton, and, after his decease, to David, King of Scotland. King David's successor, as lord of Fotheringhay, was Henry, Earl of Huntingdon, from whom it descended to his sons Malcolm and William, successively kings of Scotland. In the reign of Henry III. it was in the hands of the Earls of Albemarle, from whom it passed to the crown. In the second of Edward II. (1309), the Earl of Richmond obtained a grant to himself and his heirs of this manor, with the privilege of a weekly market on Wednesday, and an annual fair "on the eve, day, and morrow of St Michael." In the ninth of the same reign he was lord of Fotheringhay. It was afterwards in the possession of the Countess of Pembroke, from whom it passed to Edmund of Langley, Earl of Cambridge, afterwards Duke of York. Edward Plantagenet, Duke of York, one of his descendants, commanded the vanguard, composed of English archers, at the battle of Agincourt, in 1415, and by his courage and conduct was signally instrumental in obtaining that important victory, though he lost his own life in the field. Another Richard, Duke of York, was slain at the battle of Wakefield, in 1459. In the ninth of Edward IV. (1469), Cicely, the king's mother, gave up to him her right in this manor. The manor and castle were given by Henry VII. to Elizabeth, his consort, to hold for her life; and Henry VIII. settled it in dower upon Queen Catherine. In Queen Elizabeth's time Sir William Fitzwilliam was governor of the castle, and summoned by the commissioners for the execution of Queen Mary of Scotland. In the first of James I., the castle and manor were granted to Charles Lord Mountjoye, afterwards created Earl of Devonshire, and with his successors it continued for several generations. The manor and estate afterwards passed by purchase through several possessors to the late Lewis Loyd, Esq., from whom they devolved to his son, Samuel Jones Loyd, the present Lord Overstone.

The Castle.—At a very early period Fotheringhay became a place of considerable importance from its castle, which stood at the eastern extremity of the town, and was originally built by Simon de St Liz, the second Earl of Northampton, about the beginning of the twelfth century; it was afterwards rebuilt and enlarged, in the reign of Edward III., by Edmund of Langley, Duke of York, who added the keep or highest fortification, in the form of a horse fetterlock, which, with a falcon, was the favourite device of the family of York. It was built of stone, surrounded by embattled walls and a deep moat, and enclosed an area of 10 acres. It was the scene of many memorable events, and was conspicuous as the seat of the Plantagenets and the birthplace of Richard, Duke of York, afterward Richard III., who was born here in 1443. Edward IV., in 1469, on the insurrection of the Northmen, visited Fotheringhay, where the queen awaited his arrival; and in the twenty-second of his reign (1482), he had an interview here with Alexander, King of Scotland, who then promised to do homage to the King of England for the realm of Scotland, within six months after he should be in possession of the crown. Leland, in the time of Henry VIII., describes it as being at that time "a castle fair, and meatly strong, with very good lodgings in it, defended by double ditches, with a very ancient and strong keep." In the reign of Queen Mary, this castle, from being the residence of a prince, became a state prison, and it is noted in English history as the place of confinement, trial, and execution of the unfortunate Mary, Queen of Scots, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

"The beauty, accomplishments, and hard fortune of that extraordinary princess," says Archdeacon H. K. Bonney, in his concise "History of Fotheringhay," "who was a captive eighteen years, have given such an interest to the place in which she suffered, that the stranger is apt to imagine he shall find something on the spot to gratify his curiosity. He will regret that the ground on which it stood, with the surrounding moats, and small fragments of the walls near the river, and on the east of the mount, are the only remains of this once strong and memorable castle." "The unhappy Queen of Scots," says Mr G. S. Phillips, "fell a victim to the vanity and brutal jealousy of Elizabeth, in the castle of Fotheringhay. For eighteen years had this inhuman monster confined her, without the remotest shadow of a right; having no other apology for her conduct but that she was her rival in beauty. The unfortunate queen bore her bitter wrongs with a spirit worthy of her fathers, and submitted to the indignities which were heaped upon her with the calmest resignation: conscious of her own innocence, she felt not the pangs of guilt; proud of her honour, she compromised no portion of her dignity, but submitted to her fate without murmur, without reproach. When told that she was ordered to be executed, she gave way to none of those weaknesses which are so common to all those who have not looked forward to death with magnanimity, as the terminator of miseries; for to her the message was as the rainbow of a bright hope—the sunshine of immortality smiling through the tears of life. Her conduct at this hour was worthy of so great and noble a being. She pursued her studies as usual; and, like the Socrates of Greece, she only tried to soothe the feelings of those around her, who were weeping over her unhappy destiny. On the morning of her untimely end, she read over her will to her servants, and then prepared for her execution.

"Then did she appear herself, after this manner;—in borrowed hair, a brown, having on her head a dressing of lawn, edged with bone-lace, and above that a veil of the same, bowed out with wire, and her cuffs suitable; about her neck a pomander chain, and an Agnus Dei hanging at a black ribband; a crucifix in her hand, a pair of beads at her girdle, with a golden cross at the end. Her uppermost gown was of black satin, printed, training upon the ground, with long hanging sleeves, trimmed with akorn buttons of jet and pearl, the sleeves over the arms being cut, to give sight to a pair of purple velvet underneath; her kirtle, as her gown, was of black printed satin; her boddice of crimson satin, unlaced in the back, the skirts being of crimson velvet; her stockings of worsted, watchet, clocked, and edged at the top with silver, and under them a pair of white; her shoes of Spanish leather, with the rough side outward."—Guntton's History of the Church of Peterborough, p. 74.

In this mournful suit Mary came forth, through the great hall, to the scaffold. Whilst in the hall, she told the commissioners she had two requests to make of them; one was that they would see the legacies she had left to her servants paid, and the other that they would allow her to have some of her people about her at her death. The first request was granted, but the other was refused.

With a breaking heart, the unhappy queen besought the commissioners to grant her this last favour, the only one that a dying woman had to ask, and the last duty that her poor friends could do for her. Her eloquent appeal softened the hearts of the bloodthirsty ministers of Elizabeth's cruelty, and she was ordered to choose six of her attendants.

Everything was now prepared for the execution ; but even now the wretches who were employed by Elizabeth to destroy her, could not refrain from adding insult to the savage mocking of justice which they were about to perform. The Dean of Peterborough,—we will record his name, that every honest heart may hold it in contempt and infamy,—Doctor Fletcher,—not only called upon her at this last moment to relinquish that faith and those hopes which she had cherished during her whole life ; but in a speech which occupied nearly two hours in the delivery, upbraided her with treachery and treason towards the virgin queen, Elizabeth, and vindicated her conduct in putting so resolute a heretic to death. He then called upon Mary to join him in prayer, but she answered she would pray by herself ; notwithstanding which, Fletcher inflicted a long and insulting prayer upon the queen, which she endeavoured not to hear by attention to her own devotions. The executioners then began to unrobe her, and she said, with a smile, 'that she had not been accustomed to be handled by such rough grooms, nor to undress before such company.' She then sought the block herself, and her head was severed from her body by three strokes." Thus perished this ill-fated queen, on the 8th of February 1587, and after her remains had lain here for six months, they were removed, on the night of the 31st of July, to Peterborough Cathedral, and committed to a vault prepared for them on the south side of the choir, close to the bishop's throne, which was immediately closed, without the performance of any religious service ; a rich hearse was erected, however, near the grave ; the choir and church were hung with black ; and the performance of the funeral service took place on the following afternoon, and was attended by thousands of spectators, and many of the nobility, the heralds, and other officers of the crown. Those of the kingdom of Scotland, who had thus far beheld the fate of their queen, here stopped and bade an adieu to her remains for the last time ; but they indignantly refused either to enter the church, or to be present at the last ceremonies. The service was read by the dean, and a sermon was preached by the Bishop of Lincoln, who, steering between a fear of Protestantism on the one hand, and a respect due to deceased Popery on the other, treated only of the miseries annexed to the vale of mortality. A short time after her burial, some fearless pen wrote a Latin epitaph, which spoke loudly against the cruel tyranny of Elizabeth. It was, however, speedily removed, and nothing but a plain slab now indicates the spot where one of the most amiable and hapless of women was buried. After she had rested in this tomb for twenty-five years, she was removed to Westminster Abbey by the desire of her son, King James I., on the 11th October 1612. In the latter part of his reign, the castle was consigned to ruin.

Mr Buckingham, writing on this subject, says, "True it is difficult even for contemporaries to arrive at an accurate judgment, perhaps more so than for their successors, since they are more blinded by party feelings ; but party prejudices, like family likenesses, are hereditary, hence misrepresentations of motives and character are handed down from father to son for many generations. So it has been with Mary of Scotland and Elizabeth Tudor. From boyhood to maturer years men have read of one as being at best of dubious character, of the other as of a glorious maiden Queen. But veritas temporis filia. At last justice—tardy justice—is beginning to be rendered to both, and whilst the dark shadow falls with increasing blackness on the fame of the depraved woman, whose sensual licentiousness, abandoned life, and horribly despairing death, have so long been veiled by encomiastic writers, through ignorance or design, her murdered victim's name is enveloped with an increasing splendour as time dispels the clouds with which malignity and falsehood sought to obscure the brightness of her glory, who was indubitably a martyr, if not a saint. Endowed with every quality which in woman is most highly prized, she endured, with an unexampled heroism, which true religion alone could impart, miseries and persecutions without an equal in the history of the world. And though it may have been the lot of others to fill a more distinguished station amid the nations of the earth, and to exercise a more material influence over the destinies of their fellow-beings, yet, so long as the pure and simple excellence of a spotless heart is allowed to rise superior to the mere perfections of person or mind, and to command the respect, as it enchains the sympathy and affection of mankind, the name of Mary Stuart will shine with a pure and holy lustre, which, deriving its brilliance, not from those achievements to which frail and feeble men accord their highest praise, but from the unfailing source of spotless integrity of heart, will grow in radiance in each succeeding age, and attain its highest glory when vice and error shall have faded from the world, and rectitude and virtue shall be recognised as the brightest jewels of a monarch's crown."—Memoirs of Mary Stuart, Queen of Scotland, by L. Stanhope F. Buckingham, vol. ii.

A Nunnery was founded here by Simon de St Liz, the builder of the castle ; but having completed his foundation at De la Pre near Northampton, he removed the nuns to that place.

The College, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and All Saints, was erected on the site of the nunnery. It is said to have been designed by Edmund of Langley, 5th son of Edward III. ; carried on by his son Edward, Duke of York, and Richard Duke of York ; and completed by Edward IV. It was endowed with the alien priory of Newent, and the priory of Anebury, and the society consisted of a master, 8 clerks, and 13 choristers, who had a common seal. It was further endowed with lands by the Duke of York, in the beginning of the reign of Henry V., and on the accession of Edward IV. to the throne, he gave it a new charter, 300 acres of land, various privileges and liberties, and soon after he added the manor of Beckeford, in Worcestershire, with many other manors in several counties. From the survey of the possessions of the college, taken in the year 1535, it appears they were valued at £489, 15s. 9d., out of which was deducted for rents resolute to lords of different manors, fees to stewards, bailiffs, &c., £80, 3s. 10d. After the suppression, this college was given to the Duke of Northumberland, when, with the choir of the church, it was pulled down.

The Village of Fotheringhay is pleasantly situated in a beautiful and fertile country, on the north bank of the river Nene, which, winding to the eastward, divides it from Huntingdonshire. It is about 4 miles N.N.E. from Oundle, 82 N.W. by W. from London, and on the Peterborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway. It was formerly a market town of considerable size and importance, and has now an annual fair for horses on the 5th of July.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and All Saints, is a handsome structure, and is a part of the original Collegiate Church, the college, it is supposed, having stood on the south side, communicating with the church by means of cloisters. It consists only of a nave with north and south aisles, and though there are apparent evidences of a chancel, there is no actual proof of one having ever existed. The tower, which is of two stages, is octagonal, a crocketed pyramidal ornament rising from each angle ; and under it is a good specimen of fan-tracery groining. The plan of the church is of considerable extent, and it affords a good example of the Perpendicular style. It also contains a bold and well-defined font, and on either side are buttresses with crockets and finials. Within the communion rails are two monuments, one to Richard Plantagenet Duke of York, nephew of Edward Duke of York, and father of Edward IV., slain at the battle of Wakefield in the thirty-seventh of Henry VI., 1459 ; and here too is buried, Cicely Duchess of York, his wife, daughter of Ralph Neville, first Earl of Westmoreland, who died in 1495. The other is in memory of Edward Duke of York, who died on the field of Agincourt in the third of Henry V., 1415. These monuments are stated to have been erected in 1573. Queen Elizabeth in one of her tours visited Fotheringhay, and observing the neglected state of the graves of her ancestors, the Dukes of York, amongst the ruins of the choir, she ordered their bodies to be removed into the church, and deposited on each side of the communion table, and monuments to be erected over them. This interesting church, which is approached from the road by an embowered avenue of trees, forms a prominent feature in the landscape for miles round. The benefice is a vicarage in the deanery of Oundle, returned at £140, and now worth about £200 per annum. The advowson is vested in Lord Overstone, and the Rev. Alfred Augustus Longhurst, M.A., is the incumbent. Close to the church stands the Vicarage, a very commodious residence.

In the reign of Edward III., there was another religious establishment here, called the "Ermytage," which was founded by John De Balliol, who was possessed of one moiety of this estate in right of his wife, in the twenty-second of Henry III. (1237). The abbot of Sawtree held it with one carucate of land, to find a chaplain to perform Divine service in it three times a week, for the souls of John Balliol and his ancestors, formerly kings of Scotland, and lords of the castle of Fotheringhay.

The Grammar School here, supposed to have been founded and endowed by Queen Elizabeth, with £20 a year to be paid out of the exchequer, was, by order of the Charity Commissioners, dated 16th October 1860, converted into a parochial school, under the management of the incumbent and churchwardens for the time being, acting under the official trustees of charitable funds. The scholars are subject to a payment not exceeding 2d. per week, towards the support of the school. The master has a house and garden also, and the amount of endowment is paid out of the fee farm rents of the county.

The other charities of the parish are a rent-charge of £30 per annum, subject to £5 land-tax, left to the poor, in 1664, by the Earl of Newport; 40s. a year for the same purpose, by Robert Roane, in 1672; and the interest of £100 3 per cent. reduced annuities, with which the Sunday-school is endowed.

Letters arrive through the Oundle Post-Office at 8 A.M. Letter Box cleared at 5.30 P.M.

Beal Jph. draper & parish clk.
Berridge Charles, farm bailiff
Briar William, cottager
Burrell John, stonemason
Jacklin, Mrs —
Longhurst Rev. Alfred Augustus, M.A. vicar

Rowlatt Thomas, shopkeeper
and blacksmith
Saunders John, shopkeeper and market gardener
Tebbutt Jonas, relieving officer
Wade Jno. bkr. & vict. Falcon
Wake Capt. Chas. R.N. Manor
House

Weldon Wm. stn.-mstr. Elton
Farmers and Graziers.
Barlow Robert, Park Lodge
Bonser James, Walcot Farm
Craig John
Fabling Thomas
Newton John Albion, Lodge
Simpkin Ben. Castle Farm

Carrier.—Thomas Laxton, to Oundle, on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday.

GLAPTHORNE PARISH.

Glapthorne, or Clapthorne, stands in a low situation, and is bounded on the east and south by Cotterstock and Oundle, and on the west and north by Southwick, Bulwick, and Newton. It contains 1415 acres; its population in 1801 was 315; in 1831, 353; in 1841, 427; in 1851, 457; in 1861, 396; in 1871, 370 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1616, and the gross estimated rental £1895. The Countess of Cardigan is lady of the manor and principal proprietor.

Manor.—Glapthorne is not named in the Domesday survey, but, in the reign of Henry II., Geoffrey de Normanvill held 1½ hide, Ridel and Hugh half a hide and 1 virgate, Fulk de Lisures three parts of a hide of land here. In the reign of Henry III., Richard Torpel possessed this manor, and from this family it passed to that of Camoys. In the reign of Edward III., it was in the possession of the Earl of Stafford, and upon the attainder of the Duke of Buckingham, in the reign of Henry VIII., he was found to be seized of it. Having then fallen to the crown, it was granted, in the thirtieth of the same reign (1538), to Thomas, Lord Cromwell, whose son, Gregory, died seized of it in the fifth of Edward VI. (1551). It afterwards passed into the family of Brudenell, and is now in the hands of the Countess of Cardigan, the widow of the late Earl of Cardigan, who was the lineal representative of that family.

The Village of Glapthorn, which is small, is distant about $1\frac{3}{4}$ mile N.N.W. from Oundle.

The Church, dedicated to St. Leonard, consists of a nave and side aisles, chancel and north chapel, south porch, and a plain coped tower containing three bells. The living, which is a discharged vicarage, annexed to that of Cotterstock, is in the gift of General Viscount Melville. The Rev. Alfred James Abbey, M.A., is incumbent.

Letters are received through the Oundle Post-Office. Letter Box cleared at 6.20 P.M.

Freeman Mr James
Hancock Mrs Eliz. vict. Royal Oak
Hancock Hy. grocer & butcher
Hudson George, carpenter
Hudson Thomas, wheelwright
Hull Thomas, hawker
Meadows Hy. grocer, carpenter, and vict. Crown

Palmer Jonas, tailor
Palmer William, cottager
Radbourne Rich. schoolmaster
Rowlett Samuel, blacksmith
Sanders Fred. gamekeeper
Taylor David, hawker
Woodcock John, cottager

FARMERS.

Browning John Osborne, Manor House
Carley Thomas, The Lodge
Kirby Charles Henry
Kirkby Mrs Hannah
Rollingson Samuel, The Lodge

KING'S CLIFFE PARISH.

The boundaries of King's Cliffe, or Cliff Regis, are formed by Apethorpe on the east, Southwick on the south, Blatherwick on the west, and Colly Weston and Duddington on the north. It includes the two places called Spa Lodge and Westhay, and contains 3642 acres; its population in 1801 was 876; in 1831, 1173; in 1841, 1278; in 1851, 1407; in 1861, 1388; in 1871, 1259 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £6512, and the gross estimated rental, £7652. The principal proprietors of the soil, which varies from a strong clay to a light red soil, are the Marquis of Exeter (lord of the manor), Earl of Westmoreland, Mr Thomas James Law, Mrs Addy, and Thomas Embleton Fox, Esq.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Clive, which contained 1 hide and two virgates, was in the hands of the crown, and with a mill of the yearly rent of 12d., 4 acres of meadow, and a wood 1 mile long and half a mile broad, was rated at £10. In the preceding reign it was the freehold of Earl Algar, and valued at £7. In the reign of Henry II., this lordship contained $1\frac{1}{4}$ hide and half a virgate. Henry III. settled it on Alionmore, his consort, and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), it was in the hands of Margery, Queen of England. In the second of Edward IV. (1462), a great part of the town was burned down, and the tenants had a remission of two years' rent. The lordship long continued in the hands of the Crown, and was leased to the Earls of Exeter, who collected the farm rents, but the Marquis of Exeter is the present lord.

The Village of King's Cliffe, which is pretty large, and consists of three long streets, is situated on an eminence about seven and a half miles N.N.W. of Oundle. This was formerly the chief town of the east bailiwick of Rockingham forest; it had a charter for a weekly market, on Tuesday, which is now fallen into disuse; and there was also an early grant for a three days' fair, beginning on St Luke's eve. A royal residence, or hunting seat, stood at the south side of the churchyard, near the place called Hall Yard; and from coals having been discovered amongst the ruins, it is supposed the mansion was burned down, in 1462, at the great conflagration. There were large fish-pools or ponds attached to this mansion, which were supplied by the rivulet which now crosses Bridge street. "In old historians," writes Bridges, "mention is made of a battle fought at King's Clive, about the year 778. Adelbald and Heardbert, commanders under Ethelred, King of the Northumbrians, rising in rebellion against him, slew here Aldulph, son of Bosa, who was general of his army." In this parish is a chalybeate spring, similar to that at Tunbridge Wells. The principal trade of the place is the manufacture of wood turners' goods. The new line of railway from Seaton to Wansford will have a station here, in Park Street.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is cruciform, in the Early English, Perpendicular, and Decorated styles, and consists of nave, chancel, and side aisles, north and south transepts, north and south porches, and a square tower, surmounted by a spire, and containing five bells. It was thoroughly restored by voluntary subscription in 1863, at a cost of £1400. The new sittings are open, and of carved oak. The pulpit was restored and placed on a new base of ketton stone, and the chancel newly floored and furnished with carved oak stalls. When the ceiling which covered the chancel was removed, a handsome roof of open woodwork was discovered; the font, which is ancient, and bearing figures of the evangelists, was removed from the north transept to the west end of the nave, and placed on a stem and four small shafts of ketton stone. A new east window of stained glass, to the memory of Archdeacon Bonney, late rector of the parish, was erected at the cost of his sister, Mrs Nevison; and a new organ was placed in the north transept in 1865. The living is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13, 16s. 3d., and now worth £800 per annum, in the gift of the Earl of Westmoreland and incumbency of the Rev. Edward Dupre, M.A.

The Rectory-House, which stands in the centre of the village, is a commodious residence with handsomely arranged grounds, having a lake at the bottom, which is supplied from the Nene; it was enlarged by the present rector in 1863.

The Independent Chapel, West street, erected in 1846, will seat about 200 persons. The Calvinistic Chapel, West street, was erected in 1840, and the Wesleyan Chapel, Bridge street, was built in 1823.

The Endowed Schools, Park street, were removed in 1873 to the present building, formerly a private house, which was purchased for £750, and admirably fitted up at a further cost of about £1400. They consist of two separate rooms for boys and girls, capable of holding 100 each, with class-rooms and two houses for the teachers. They are now (1874) about to come under Government inspection, and the present average attendance is—boys, 70; girls, 40. There are 22 boys instructed, clothed, and apprenticed from Mrs Elizabeth Hutchinson's charity, bequeathed in 1744; and 22 girls are instructed and clothed out of the Rev. William Law's bequest in 1747. These charities consist of a farm at Aslockton Abbey, in Nottinghamshire, a farm at Northorpe in Lincolnshire, and land in this parish, together with accumulated funds vested in the three per cent. consols, the whole realising at present from £600 to £700 per annum, out of which the master and mistress receive £150 yearly, and the ex-master receives a pension of £25 per annum, with a house, &c., and eight widows, from the age of sixty, are to be provided for in every way. In 1688 Richard Wildbore left a rent-charge of £5 per annum to the school of this parish. The British School is also well attended.

The other charities of the parish are:—The interest of £100 left by Ann de Rippe, about the year 1688; John Thorpe, Esq., in 1688, gave three houses or tenements in Park street, to be inhabited free by three poor women, which are kept in repair by the parish. Rev. John Law of Elvetham, Hants, in 1869 left £700 3 per cent. consols, the interest to be expended in warm clothing to the deserving poor of the parish, at the discretion of the rector and church-wardens, on St Thomas's day. Mrs Louisa Perry, in 1869, left £600 3 per cent. consols, the interest to be applied to the Sunday schools. Mrs Bonney, wife of the late Archdeacon Bonney, left £454, 1s. 1d. 3 per cent. consols, the interest to be applied to the clothing club and Church Sunday school.

Biography.—The Rev. Wm. Law, a celebrated polemical and nonjuring divine, was born here in 1686, and died in 1761. He is well known as the author of "The Serious Call," "The Spirit of Prayer," "The Spirit of Love," and "The Way to Divine Knowledge." He is more remarkable as the translator of the works of that extraordinary German mystic, Jacob Bohme or Behmen.

Gas-Works were established here in 1860 by a company of shareholders, at a cost of £1900, raised in £5 shares. There are twenty-one public and four private lamps. Gas is supplied to consumers at 7s. 6d. per 1000 cubic feet. Mr Edward Owen is lessee.

WEST-HAY, formerly extra-parochial, is $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile N.W. by N. of Cliffe, and is the property of the Marquis of Exeter.

MORE or MOREHAY, commonly called Spa Lodge, was also an extra-parochial district, about one mile west of Cliffe, and the property of the Earl of Westmoreland.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank.—John Thomas Bailey, postmaster. Letters arrive from Wansford at 7 A.M. and 4 P.M., and are despatched at 7 P.M. On Sunday they arrive at 7 A.M., and are despatched at 7 P.M.

Adams Mr Wm. West street
Bainton Mr Thomas
Bennet Jno. Cornish, police serg.
Blake Jno. Lucas, sadlr. West st.
Blake Wm. blkemth. West st.
Brooks Wm. master, Endowed

Schools

Brown Mr Rich. sen. West st.
Bullimore Benj. hawk. West st.
Chapman Jno. gardnr. West st.
Cunnington Jno. coop. West st.
Cunnington Wm. brewer and maltster, West street
Denniss Mr Wm. Park Villa
Dixon Elijah, grocr. wood trnr.
beer retlr. & news agt. West st.
Dixon Miss Elizabeth, mistress,
British School

Dixon Gamble, par. clk. Bridge st.
Dixon Mr Henry, Park street
Dupre Rev. Edw. B.A. rector
Eudall Charles, veterinary surgeon, Park street
Foster Chas. druggist, Park st.
Gaudern Miss Hannah Fanny,
straw-bonnet maker, High st.
Giles George, timber merchant,
Park street
Green Robt. farm bailf. West st.
Gutteridge Jas. gamekeeper,
Westhay Lodge

Hand Alfred, slater, Bridge st.
Henson Mrs Louisa, West st.
Holmes Mr Robert, High street
Howes Miss Catherine, West st.
Jobson Wm. watchmkr. West st.
Kirk Thos. cot. Apethorpe road
Law Mrs Ellen, Hog lane
Lowe Miss Jane, West street
Morgan Miss Bridget, West st.
Naylor John, stonecutter and builder, West st.
O'Brien Charles Algernon de Stafford, Esq. Hermitage Ho.
Owen Ed. photographer, lessee of Gasworks, and emigration agent, Bridge street
Palmer Jas. hurdlemkr. West st.
Palmer Thos. hawk. Bridge st.
Raven William, inland revenue officer, West street
Rosenberg Adolphus, jeweller, &c. Park street
Royce Richd. cottager, Park st.
Siddons Wm. road surveyor, West street
Slingsby Jph. carpnt. Park st.
Smith Joseph, chimney sweep. Park street
Stanyon Charles, ironmonger, tinner and brazier, Bridge st.
Walker Mrs Eleanor, West st.

Walker Wm. currier, West st.
Wood Miss Elizabeth, Bridge st.
Worrow Groome, millwright,
Park street

Bakers.

Slingsby Jph. jun. Park street
Skinner John Morris, West st.
Thompson Thomas, Hog lane
Wade John, Park street
Wadwell William, West street

Blacksmiths.

Blake William, West street
Saddington Danl. (& engineer),
West street
Stanyon Charles, Bridge street

Boot and Shoe Makers.

Close John, West street
Elderkin James, Spout Hall
Little Robert, Park street
Nichols Henry, West street
Nichols John, Hog lane
Saunders William, West street
Sumpter George, West street
Skinner John Morris, West st.
Taylor Stephen, Bridge street

Butchers.

Bailey Matthew, High street
Brown Richard, West street
Walker John Thomas, Park st.

Corn Millers.

Clarke Obed
Slingsby Jph. jun. Park street

Farmers and Graziers.

Cave Edward, West street
Cunnington Thomas, West st.
Dainty Charles, Park street
Dainty William, Westhay Farm
Drakes Jph. Westhay cottage
Law Thomas James (yeoman),
Hall yard
Rate William, West street
Royce John, West street
Wadwell William, West street

Fire and Life Offices.

British Equitable—Chas. Stanyon, Bridge street
Midland (fire, life, and hail)—
Elijah Dixon, West street
Medical and General—Thomas
Cunnington, West street
Provincial (fire) and Alliance
(life)—John Thomas Bailey,
High street

Railway Passengers' Accidental
—Edward Owen, Bridge st.
United Kingdom and General
Provident Institution (life)—
Edward Owen, Bridge street

Grocers and Drapers.

Bailey John Thomas, High st.
Dixon Elijah, West street
Edgson Edward, Park street
Green William, West street
Harlock George, Park street
Hill William (draper), High st.
Patrick John, West street

Inns and Taverns.

Cross Keys—William Hy. Fane
(and posting house), High st.
Golden Ball—Reuben Dixon,
Bridge street
Red Lion—Mrs Harriet Dixon,
Park street
Wheat Sheaf—Amos Palmer (& fishmonger), Park street
Wheel—John Hill, West street
Windmill—Jno. Martin, West st.

Beerhouses.

Cunnington John, West street
Dixon Elijah (out-dr.) West st.
Hill William, High street
Skinner Richard, West street
Wragby John, West street

Maltsters.

Bonser James, West street, h.
Woodnewton
Cunnington William, West st.

Plumbers, Painters, &c.

Hawkes Edwin James, Park st.
Wragby John, West street

Stonemasons.

Herson William, High street
Naylor John, West street

Surgeons.

Dain Fred. Robt. Manor House
Skinner Wm. Annable, Park st.

Tailors.

Bloom Charles, West street
Burrows Wm. A. West street
Davison Henry, West street
Edgson Edward, Park street

Wheelwrights.

Stokes Chas. (& carpnt.) Park st.
Palmer George, West street

Wood Turners, Carvers,
&c.

Bailey John, High street

Bollans William, West street
Dixon Elijah, West street
Dixon Isaac, Apethorpe road
Dixon Leonard, Park street

Dixon Levi, sen. Park street
Dixon Levi, jun. Park street
Green Ventross, West street
Hill William, High street

Carrier.—Mrs Alice Kingston, to Stamford, Monday and Friday.

LUTTON PARISH,

Which is partly in the hundred of Norman Cross, Huntingdonshire, but principally in this hundred, is bounded on the east by Glatton in Hunts, on the south by Hemington, on the west by Ashton, and on the north by Warmington. In 1420, it was named Ludyington-upon-the-Wold, and it contains 1400 acres; its population in 1801 was 155; in 1831, 171; in 1841, 158; in 1851, 199; in 1861, 196; in 1871, 203 souls. The gross estimated rental of the parish is £1929, and the rateable value £1652. The largest landowners are the exrs. of the late Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam (lords of the manor), and Baron Rothschild.

Manor.—The Abbot of Peterborough, to whom William was under-tenant, had 2½ hides of land, in Lidintone, at the time of the Domesday survey, and the abbey of Ramsey held half a hide here at the same time. The former was then valued at 40s., and the latter at 5s. In the reign of Henry II., Ralph Fitzwilliam held the 2½ hides of the fee of the abbey of Burgh, and Ramsey Abbey still held the half a hide. In the reign of Edward I., John Marmion was possessed of this manor, and from him it descended to his son. It was afterwards divided in moieties, and little is known of it till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when we find it in the hands of Lord Dacre, who conveyed it to Robert Loftys, who levied a fine of it, and from whom it descended to his posterity. Lord Westmoreland was in possession of it about a century since, but it is now the property of the Fitzwilliam family.

The Village of Lutton, which is small, is 5 miles S.E. from Oundle.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, is an ancient edifice, consisting of a nave and side-aisles, chancel, south porch, and a tower containing four bells. The living is a rectory, with that of Washingley, in Hunts, united, in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £21, 11s. 5½d., and now valued at about £300 per annum. The tithes were commuted in 1843 for a rent-charge of £225. There are 38 acres of glebe, and the rector receives an annual payment of £6, 13s. 4d. from Washingley. The exrs. of the Hon. George Fitzwilliam are the patrons, and the Rev. Charles J. Gibbon, M.A., is the incumbent. The Rectory House, built in 1856, is a commodious building, and stands at the south end of the village.

The Town Land, about 12 acres, now lets for £34, 10s. per annum.

The Wesleyans have a place of worship here, a cottage given for the purpose by the late Earl Fitzwilliam.

Post-Office.—Letters received through the Oundle Post-Office.

Bodger Henry, blacksmith
Boor John, cottager
Burton Francis, cottager
Burton Richard, cottager
Clark William, carpenter
Craythorn James, cottager

Gibbon Rev. Charles Iliffe,
M.A. rector
Pashler Wm. baker and vict.
Milton Arms
Russell John and Robert, beer-house and farmers
Stanger William, cottager

Tate Geo. cottager
Weston James, shopkeeper

Farmers and Graziers.

Brawn Thomas, Manor House
Marshall Nathaniel
Martin Stephen

Carrier.—David Head, to Oundle, Mon. and Thurs., and to Peterborough, Wed. and Sat.

NASSINGTON PARISH

Is bounded on the east by the river Nene, on the south by Fotheringhay, by Rockingham forest on the west, and Yarwell on the north. It contains 2406 acres; its population in 1801 was 441; in 1831, 601; in 1841, 721; in 1851, 795; in 1861, 718; and in 1871, 629 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3579; and the gross estimated rental £4181. The soil is principally a cold clay and gravel, the greater part of the parish is arable, and the Earl of Westmoreland (the lord of the manor), and Messrs Alfred Whitney and Henry Mossop, are the largest owners. The Peterborough branch of the London and North Western Railway passes through a small portion of this parish.

Manor.—Nassintone contained 6 hides of land, and was in the hands of the crown, at the time of the Norman survey. There were 2 mills at the yearly rent of 30s. 8d., and 40 acres of meadow, and a wood a mile in length and half a mile in breadth, and the whole was then rated at £30. It continued with the crown till the reign of King John, who granted certain lands here, and at Yarwell, of the value of 25 marks, to David, Earl of Huntingdon, to be held by the service of one knight's fee. In the eighteenth of Edward I. (1289), Dervorguilla, wife of John Balliol, died seized of Nassington and Yarwell, which were held of the crown in capite, and taxed by the king's justices as one township, leaving John Balliol, her son and successor. They were afterwards seized into the hands of the crown, and by Edward I. given to John de Britain, Earl of Richmond, and his heirs for ever. These manors being in the possession of the lords of Fotheringhay, were then considered members of that lordship. In the first of Henry VIII., Nassington was granted to Catherine, queen of England, for her life, and at her death it reverted to the crown, and devolved successively to Edward VI., Queen Mary, and Queen Elizabeth. In the reign of James I. Sir Anthony Mildmay, knight, purchased it for £450, and left it at his decease to his daughter, Lady Mary Fane, wife to Sir Francis Fane, afterwards countess of Westmoreland, and in this family it still continues.

The Village of Nassington, which is nearly a mile in length, stands about six miles north of Oundle, two and a half from Wansford, and ten N.W. from Peterborough.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is of Early Norman date, and consists of a nave, chancel, side-aisles, and tower, with crocketed spire, and containing five bells; it also contains a very handsomely carved stone font. The living is a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of Yarwell attached, rated in the king's books at £7, 13s. 4d.; returned at £143, 9s. 3d., and now worth about £300 per annum. The patronage was formerly vested in Archdeacon Bonney, in virtue of his office as prebendary of Lincoln Cathedral, this benefice being a peculiar in that diocese, but in 1845 the archdeacon was deprived of the prebendaryship by the ecclesiastical law. The patronage is now vested in the Bishop of Peterborough; Rev. Henry S. Bagshaw, L.L.B., Emanuel College, Cambridge, is curate in charge, and the Rev. Hewitt Linton, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land in 1777.

The Vicarage House, a neat building, and the residence of the curate, stands near the church.

There is an Independent Chapel here, which will seat about 200 persons, and a granary has been converted into a Methodist Chapel.

The National School, erected in 1862, is supported by Government grant, school-pence, and £6 from the proceeds of the Church and Poors' Land.

Charities.—Lady Grace Mildmay, in 1618, left £12 per annum for apprenticing poor children; the rents of the church and Poors' Land, consisting of 6a. 2r. 6p. and a few cottages, now let for £27 a year, of which sum £2, 10s. goes to the school, £2, 10s. is given to the poor at Christmas, and the remainder is appropriated to the repairs of the church. There is also the interest of £20 called the Benefaction Fund, and a bequest of £5 per annum; together with the interest of £100 left in 1819 by Miss Males, for the church Sunday School.

Post-Office at Mr Laxton Speed's.—Letters arrive per Mail Cart from Wansford at 6.30 A.M., and are despatched at 7.30 P.M. No delivery on Sunday.

Alderman George, baker	Branston Mrs Ann, vict. Three	Dixon Geo. tailor & shopkpr.
Bagshaw Rev. Henry S., LLB.	Mill Bells	Dixon Luke, tailor
curate in charge	Beeson William, blacksmith	Fenn Mrs Eliza, coal mercht.
Bird W. vict. Three Horse Shoes	Coates George, carpenter	Harper Benjamin, baker
Blake Mrs Mary, beerh. Bale	Dixon Alfred, tailor	Hill Joseph, shopkeeper

Jones Mrs Mary, shopkeeper
 Kirkby William, baker
 Kirby William, shoemaker
 Knowles Wm. Bowring, beerhs.
 Lock Ben. vict. Queen's Head
 Lock Jas. engineer, machinist and timber merchant
 Lock John, timber merchant
 Lovell James, cattle salesman
 Minall Geo. schoolmaster

Mould George, shoemaker and vict. Plough
 Newborn William, shoemaker
 Palmer John, shopkeeper
 Reedman Wm. timber mercht.
 machineman & farmer
 Speed Laxton, shoemkr. shopkr.
 Stafford John, machine, and agri. implemt. mkr. & whelt.
 Walter Isaiah, ropemaker
 Whitney Mr Alfred B.

Wilson Daniel, butcher and
 vict. Black Horse

Farmers and Graziers.

Gaudern Cha. Nassington Lodge
 Gregory John
 Reeve Richard
 Speed Robert Laxton
 Turnill Chpr. Sulchay Lodge
 Whitney Alfred
 Wilson William

Carriers.—Isaiah Walter and Obed Walter to Oundle, Thursday, Stamford, Friday, and Peterborough, Saturday.

SOUTHWICK PARISH

Is bounded on the east and south by Apethorpe and Glapthorne, and on the west and north by King's Cliffe. It contains 4579 acres, of the rateable value of £4578, and the gross estimated rental is £5295; its population in 1801 was 104; in 1831, 154; in 1841, 171; in 1851, 152; in 1861, 131; and in 1871, 265 souls. The parish is watered by a branch of the Nene; the soil is principally a strong clay. The Rev. G. H. W. Capron (the lord of the manor), the Earl of Westmoreland, the Countess of Cardigan, and Lord Overstone, are the principal proprietors. Crosswayhandlodge, in the forest of Rockingham, formerly extra-parochial, now belongs to this parish.

Manor.—This lordship is not mentioned in the Domesday survey; but in the reign of Henry II., William de Lisurs held one hide of land here. In the reign of Henry III., Thomas Knivett held this manor, and with his successors it continued for several generations. It was held under the De Montforts. From the family of Knivett it passed in marriage to that of Lynne, William Lynne dying seized of it, in the third of Henry VIII. (1511). The lordship continued with this family also for generations, indeed there are few manors that have passed through fewer families. It passed by purchase to the late owner in 1839, at whose death in 1872 he was succeeded by his son, the Rev. G. H. W. Capron, the present owner.

The Village of Southwick is situate about three miles N.N.W. of Oundle.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a neat edifice, consisting of a nave and chancel with square tower, surmounted by a spire, and containing two bells. The church was restored in 1864, when new windows were put in, principally at the expense of the patron. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £8, 7s. 6d., and its present value is about £150 per annum. The Rev. G. H. W. Capron is the present patron, and the Rev. Thomas Rd. Browne, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land at the enclosure. In the chancel is a beautiful monument to the Lynne family.

Southwick Hall, the seat and property of the Rev. G. H. W. Capron, is an ancient structure, situate at the east end of the village. It was repaired by its late owner in 1848.

Perio Grounds, in ancient records called the township of Perio, is within the liberty of Southwick. The name of Perio Grounds, according to local tradition, originated from an exclamation of Mary, Queen of Scots, while passing by here on her way to Fotheringhay, when, catching sight of the castle for the first time, she exclaimed, with a sudden presentiment of her fate, "Perio!" (I perish). Here was formerly an hospital, priory, or chantry, dedicated to St John and St Martin, to which belonged three chaplains; but the founder, or the nature of the endowment, are alike unknown. At the survey, in 1535, the profits of Perio chantry were valued at £5, 9s. 9d., but it does not appear to whom they were given.

Charities.—The Poors' Land, consisting of 10a. 1r. 22p., lets for about £41, 10s. per annum; the poors' stock consists of £250 three per cent.

consols. Mrs Mary Lynne, a few years since, left the interest of £500 to be distributed at the discretion of the vicar.

Letters are received through the Oundle Post-Office. Letter-Box cleared at 4.35 P.M.

Capron Rev. George H. W. Southwick Hall	Hill James, gamekeeper	Farmers and Graziers.
Brown Rev. Thomas Richard, M.A. vicar	Jillens Joseph, farm bailiff,	Browning Jas. Apethorpe Lodge
Bradshaw Benjamin Miller, Perio Mill	Blackmorethick Lodge	Freeman Tn. Southwick Grange
Gathercole Rev. Michael Au- gustus, M.A. curate	Langford Thomas, shopkeepr.	Hollis John, Forest Farm
	Rose Edward, shopkeeper and vict. Shuckburgh Arms,	James Fred. (& assor. of taxes)
	Shrive John, farm bailiff, Stone Pit Lodge	Mash Mrs Ann
		Whitney Hudson, Crossway- hand Lodge

TANSOR PARISH.

Tansor, or Tansover, situated on the banks of the Nene, is bounded on the east and south by Warmington and Polebrook, and on the west and north by Oundle and Fotheringhay. It contains 1410 acres; its population in 1801 was 167; in 1831, 255; in 1841, 303; in 1851, 256; in 1861, 248; and in 1871, 231 souls. The gross estimated rental of the parish is £2660; and the rateable value £2258. The Peterborough branch of the London and North Western Railway passes through the parish. The soil is of a gravelly nature, but very productive; and the Earl of Westmoreland (lord of the manor), General Viscount Melville, Messrs John Linnell, John Cunningham, and Henry Mossop, are the principal proprietors.

Manor.—Tanesour consisted of six hides of land at the time of the general survey, and was in the hands of the crown. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 10s., 12 acres of meadow, and a wood, and the whole was rated in the Confessor's time at £20, but was now advanced to £30. In the reign of Henry II., this lordship was in the hands of Hatvil de St James, and in Henry III.'s time, Roald Fitz-Alan and Ralph de Camoys held one knight's fee here of the honor of Clare. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Ralph de Camoys levied a fine of this manor, and in the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), his successor, John Camoys, and John Gifford accounted for half a knight's fee here. The moiety of this manor in the possession of the Camoys, continued with them for several generations; and the Gifford moiety passed to the families of Holt and Norwich, and in the first of Charles I. (1625), John Norwich, Esq., was in possession of it. The Camoys moiety passed, in the reign of Henry VIII., into the hands of Sir Guy Woolston, Knight, from whose family it passed to the Kebles. Escheating afterwards to the crown, the manor of Tansor was granted, in the fifth of Edward VI. (1551), to Sir Walter Mildmay, Knight. His granddaughter carried it in marriage to Sir Francis Fane, Knight, who was created Earl of Westmoreland in 1624, and with his descendants it still continues.

The Village of Tansor, which is small, is situated on an eminence, about 2 miles N.N.E. of Oundle.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is an ancient edifice, built about the year 1150, consisting of a nave, chancel, north and south aisles, north and south porches, and a square ivy-mantled tower containing three bells. This church represents various styles of architecture. The ground story of the west part of the nave belongs to the Transitional period, as do also the north door and lower part of the font. The east part of the nave is of Lancet character, as are also the chancel, and double piscina, and the tower arch. Three windows in the south aisle are Geometrical. One window in the north aisle, and the upper part of the font, are Curvilinear, and the east window is Rectilinear. In the Lancet period the church appears to have been entirely remodelled. The font is rather interesting, the supports being Transitional, and the upper part having the ball-flower of the Decorated period, but of an enormous size. There are some splendid old seats, said to have been brought from the college church at Fotheringhay. A new organ was placed in the nave in 1861. The benefice is a rectory, valued in the king's books at £13, 12s. 11d., but now worth about £400 per annum. The advowson belongs to the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, and the Rev. Henry T. Liveing, M.A., is the rector. The tithes were commuted at the enclosure in 1777 for 240 acres. In the chancel is a fine brass, date 1440, to a former (Catholic) rector of this parish (Rev. J. Cole). Two former rectors of the parish were raised to the episcopal bench—viz., Dr Porter, Bishop of Clougher, and Dr Middleton, first Bishop of Calcutta.

The Rectory House, a handsome stone structure near the church, was built in 1862 by the present rector.

Charities.—The yearly sum of £5 is received from Bellamy's charity, for apprenticing poor children. The town estate consists of an allotment of 16 acres, now let for £40 a year, which sum is applied by direction of the rector to the purchase of coals, which are distributed to the poor at Christmas.

Letters arrive through the Oundle Post-Office at 7 A.M. Letter-Box cleared at 6 P.M.

Blackshaw Mr William
Bradshaw James, parish clerk
Hudson Timothy, shoemaker
Ireson Jno. Watts, stonemason builder, grocer, & baker
Living Rev. Henry Thomas,
M.A. rector
Newton Mrs Elizabeth Marr

Plowright Mr Thomas
Preston Josiah, beerh. & farmer
Sawford William, miller, baker, farmer, & vict. White Horse
Farmers.
(*Marked * are Yeomen.*)
Bonser George Smith, Lodge

*Cunnington John, Lodge
Godfrey Mrs Philippa, Manor
House
*Linnell John
Pitts Charles, Lodge
Siddons Henry

WOOD-NEWTON PARISH

Is bounded on the east and south by Nassington and Glapthorne, and on the west and north by Apethorpe. It was formerly a chapelry to Nassington, but is now an independent parish. It contains 1020 acres; its population in 1801 was 268; in 1831, 449; in 1841, 483; in 1851, 256; in 1861, 529; in 1871, 491 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £2264; and the gross estimated rental £2641. The Earl of Westmoreland is lord of the manor, and principal landowner.

Manor.—This lordship is not mentioned in the Domesday survey, but in the reign of Henry II., Robert de Cerney held 3 hides of land here of the fee of Marmion. It passed soon after into the possession of the family of Engaine, and Henry Engaine, who died in 1261, gave it to the priory of Fineshade, founded by Richard Engaine, his ancestor. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), the prior of that convent was lord of Newton. From the survey of the possessions of the priory, made in 1535, the yearly profits arising from this manor were valued at £16; and after the dissolution, it was given to Edward, Lord Clynton. In the reign of Henry VIII., this manor was in the possession of Sir William Blount, Lord Mountjoy, and afterwards passed to the hands of the crown. In the fifth of Edward VI. (1551), it was granted to Sir Walter Mildmay, knight, whose granddaughter and heir, Mary, carried it in marriage to Sir Francis Fane, knight, afterwards created Earl of Westmoreland.

The Village of Wood-Newton, so called to distinguish it from the other Newtons in the county, is pretty large, and stands on the road from Oundle to King's Cliffe, about 4½ miles N. by W. of the former town.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a very ancient structure, and stands at the top of the village, consisting of nave, chancel, south aisle, and porch, with square embattled tower containing two bells. It has been recently restored. The living is a vicarage with Apethorpe annexed, worth £300 per annum, in the deanery of Oundle, in the gift of the Bishop of Peterborough, and incumbency of the Rev. Henry Meux Roxby, M.A.

The Vicarage House, which stands near the church, is a handsome brick building with stone dressings, erected in 1871 at a cost of about £2000, towards which the Ecclesiastical Commissioners gave £1400.

Here is a small Wesleyan Chapel erected in 1840.

Charities.—Lady Mildmay, in 1618, left £9 per annum for apprenticing poor children here; and the church estate, left by Wm. Porter, consists of 16 acres, a cottage and garden, which let for £34, 10s. a year.

Letters are received through the Wansford Post-Office at 8 A.M. and 2 P.M.

Barfield Samuel, wheelwright, carptr. & coachbuilder	Jacob James, gardener	Spendlove Samuel, shoemaker
Bollans Mrs Rebecca, gardener	Jacob Thomas, gardener	Strickson Wm. harness-maker
Carley Richard, baker	King John, gardener	Wade Charles, baker
Cook James, cottager	Landin James, gardener
Desbrow Ezekiel, tailor	Landin Robert, gardener	Farmers and Graziers.
Desbrow Mr Robert	Morris Samuel, blacksmith	Bonser Thomas, h. at Ellon ,
Fermedows Wm. beerhouse and jobber	Mould John, shoemaker	Huntingtonshire
Fermedows William, jun. jobber and vict. Swan	Mould John, gardener	Hardy John Thomas
Hardy Mrs Mary	Mould Simmons, shopkeeper	Hardy Thomas
Hardy John Thomas, vict. Horse and Jockey	Mould William, carpenter	Landin William
Jacobson William, stonemason	Paine Jno. vict. Hare & Hounds	Mould Simmons
	Richardson William, butcher	Needham Francis (and miller)
	Roxby Rev. Hy. M., M.A. vicar	Paine John
	Skinner John, stonemason	Rimington Francis, Manor House
	Spendlove Mrs Frances, shopkr.

Carriers.—John King, to Oundle, on Tues., Thurs., and Sat.; James Landin, Robert Landin, and Mrs Rebecca Bollans, to Stamford, on Tuesday and Friday.

YARWELL PARISH

Is bounded by Nassington on the east, south, and west, and by Wansford on the north. It contains 1830 acres; and its rateable value is £1990; the gross estimated rental is £2362; and its population in 1801 was 225; in 1831, 369; in 1841, 389; in 1851, 450; in 1861, 417; in 1871, 395 souls. The soil is various, but principally a cold clay. The greater part of the parish is arable, and the Earl of Westmoreland is lord of the manor, and the principal landowner.

Manor.—Yarwell, or Jarewell, is not mentioned in the Domesday survey, but in the reign of Henry II. it was certified that William de Lisurs held 1 hide of land here and in Southwick. In succeeding times Nassington and Yarwell were accounted one lordship or township, and being reputed members of Fotheringhay had always the same possessors (see Nassington parish). In the seventh of Edward VI. (1553), it was granted by the crown to Sir Walter Mildmay, knight, and was carried in marriage with other neighbouring manors, by his granddaughter Mary, to Sir Francis Fane, afterwards Earl of Westmoreland, and with his descendants it still continues. Yarwell was formerly within the bounds of Rockingham Forest.

Sulchay Walk and Lodge, formerly extra-parochial, and included in the liberty of Yarwell, and containing 1060 acres, were formerly the residences of officers pertaining to King's-Cliffe-bailiwick, within the limits of Rockingham Forest, and the office of forester was anciently held by the family of Yarwell. In the reign of Henry VIII. Henry Keeble was forester, and was succeeded by his grandson, from whom the forestership, with other lands and manors, passed to William Lord Mountjoy. These possessions were afterwards granted by the crown to Sir Walter Mildmay, knight, from whom they descended through his granddaughter to the Earl Westmoreland, whose descendant is the present possessor.

The Village of Yarwell is about 1¼ mile S. by W. of Wansford.

The Church, dedicated to St Mary Magdalene, is an ancient structure, consisting of nave, chancel, and square tower containing three bells. The north and south aisles, having given way, were removed in 1782. The living is a curacy annexed to the vicarage of Nassington, of which the Rev. H. Linton is incumbent; the Rev. Samuel Flood, B.A., is the minister in charge. The tithes were commuted in 1840; the award of rent-charge is £74, 2s. 6d. to the improPRIATORS, and £187, 7s. to the vicar.

There is a neat Wesleyan Methodist Chapel in the village, erected in 1840; and there is a mixed school now being erected by voluntary subscription, Government and other grants, on a site given by Lord Westmoreland, at a cost of about £300. It is a substantial building of stone, and will accommodate 80 children, and consists of school-room, class-room, south porch, and bell turret.

Charities.—Lady Grace Mildmay, in 1618, left £9 per annum for apprenticing poor children belonging to this parish. The church and poor's estate consists of 18 acres, which lets for about £29, 10s. per annum, half of which is expended upon the repairs of the Church, and the other half distributed at Christmas to the poor. The interest of £40, called the poor's money, is distributed on St Thomas's day to the poor.

Post-Office at Mr William Beeson's. Letters arrive from Wansford at 6.15 A.M. and at 12.35 P.M., and are despatched thereto at 7.30 P.M.

Beeson Mrs Mary, grocer & drapr.
Beeson Wm. general smith, rate
& tax collr. & post-office
Blades Thomas, shoemaker
Dickens Robert, wheelwright
and blacksmith
Flood Rev. Samuel, M.A. minister in charge
Glithero John, vict. Angel
Gregory Edward, baker

Hubbard David, cottager
Hubbard William, stonemason
Ireson George, stonemason
Ireson Oakley, stonemason
Ireson Richard, stonemason
Ireson Samuel, stonemason
Ireson Thomas, stonemason
Kent Robt. V. market gardnr.
Parkinson John, tailor

Peach Joseph, cottager
Stevens Stephen, beerhouse

Farmers and Graziers.

Blowfield Jonathan
Jelley Hy. miller, corn-factor,
and maltster, Yarwell Mills
Jelley Thomas Henry
Southam Hy. ho. Stibbington

POLEBROOK HUNDRED.

THE boundaries of this hundred are formed by the hundred of Willybrook on the north, by Huntingdonshire on the east, by the hundreds of Huxlow and Navisford on the south, and on the west by the hundred of Corby. In form it is not unlike the figure 8; but it has also a detached portion, lying between Willybrook hundred and Hunts. It extends over an area of 19,899 acres, exclusive of the parishes of Thurning and Winwick, portions of which are in Hunts. Pochebroc or Pokebroc, as it was anciently written, was one of the eight hundreds possessed by the abbey of Burgh (Peterborough). In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), it was called Polebrook, and the Abbot of Peterborough was lord of it. After the suppression of that house, Henry VIII. settled it with Huxlow and Navisford hundreds, as the jointure of Queen Catherine, his consort, during her life; upon her decease it reverted to the crown, and in the ninth of James I. (1611), it was granted to John Eldred, and William Whitmore, Esqs. It soon after passed into the possession of the family of Montague, and descended lineally to the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry. It is divided into nine parishes, including the market town of Oundle, and the following is an enumeration of the acreage (taken from the rate-books), the number of houses, and population in 1871, together with the rateable value and gross estimated rental of each place:—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Barnwell, St Andrews.....	1,520	59	6	—	116	116	232	£ 2,411	£ 2,712
Benefield, Upper.....	4,468	70	3	—	182	157	339	5,934	7,074
„ Lower.....		42	—	—	96	108	204
Hemington.....	1,309	32	—	—	84	92	176	1,466	1,727
Luddington in the Brook (part of).....	620	18	1	—	50	41	91	998	1,179
Oundle.....	4,975	598	40	—	1,377	1,491	2,868	14,548	17,207
Ashton, ham.....		38	1	—	77	76	153
Polebrook.....	2,716	101	11	—	227	214	441	3,256	3,593
Armston, ham.....		4	—	—	9	11	20
Thurning (part of).....	1,001	17	1	—	38	33	71	1,276	1,541
Warmington.....	3,731	167	5	—	376	319	695	5,662	6,623
Winwick.....	959	30	3	—	66	62	128	1,829	2,185
	21,299	1,176	71	—	2,698	2,720	5,418	37,380	43,841

CHARITIES OF POLEBROOK HUNDRED, as abstracted from the Parliamentary reports. See also the histories of the towns, parishes, &c.

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purpose applied.	Annual value.
1604.	Rev. Nicholas Latham.....	Barnwell St Andrew and Barnwell All Saints, hospital and schools.....	£567 0 0
1620.	Ditto (72a. 3r. 19p. ...)	Ditto, charitable purposes.....	60 0 0
	The Mortgage Doles.....	Ditto, poor.....	0 13 4
	Church Estate (13a. 4p.).....	Benefield parish.....	20 0 0
	Poors' land.....	Ditto.....	4 5 0
	Poors' money (£80).....	Ditto.....	4 0 0
1783.	Rev. Francis Broade (£300).....	Ditto, school.....	20 0 0
	Ditto (£100).....	Ditto, poor.....	4 10 0
1669.	Rev. Nicholas Latham.....	Hemington and Luddington } parish, school.....	17 10 0
	Montague Dole.....	Hemington parish, ditto.....	0 13 4
	Ditto.....	Luddington, ditto.....	0 13 4

THE CHARITIES OF OUNDLE.

	The Feoffee, or Town Estate (43a. 3r. 23p.).....	Public purposes.....	117 13 5
1723.	John Clifton (£300).....	Two poor blind persons.....	15 0 0
1556.	Sir William Laxton (estate).....	Grammar school.....	1057 10 0
	Ditto.....	Ditto, almshouse.....	166 12 0
1658.	Clement Bellamy.....	For apprenticing children.....	5 0 0
1697.	Ann Taylor (2a. 8p.).....	To a poor scholar.....	5 5 0
1611.	Rev. Nicholas Latham (estate).....	Hospital and school.....	600 0 0
1743.	Stephen Bramston (a warehouse) to the master of the hospital and school.....	10 0 0
1801.	John Paine, tenements free for poor Dissenters.....	0 0 0
	Ditto (£300), minister and congregation of Protestant Dissenters.....	15 0 0
1705.	Jemima Creed (20 acres).....	Hamlet of Ashton, school.....	57 10 0
1611.	Rev. Nicholas Latham (rent).....	Polebrook parish, poor.....	2 0 0
1862.	Rev. Charles Isham (£100, 3 per cents.).....	Six poor widows.....	3 0 0
	School Endowment.....	Warmington parish.....	6 0 0
	Poors' Money (£100).....	Ditto, poor.....	3 10 0
			£2763 5 5

BARNWELL ST ANDREW AND ALL SAINTS PARISHES.

Barnwell St Andrew, so called from the patron saint of the church, and to distinguish it from Barnwell All Saints, is bounded by the latter parish and Clapton on the south, on the east by Ashton, on the west by Aldwinkle and the river Nene, and on the north by Oundle. It contains 1520 acres; its population in 1801 was 154; in 1831, 284; in 1841, 282; in 1861, 240; in 1871, 332 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £2410, 14s.; and the estimated gross rental, £2712. The soil is principally a clay or strong loam; the agriculture of the lordship has been much improved, and the Duke of Buccleuch is the lord of the manor, and principal proprietor. There are nearly 300 acres of woodland in this parish. Barnwell, it is said, derives its name from its numerous wells and springs, which in the olden time were famed for the cure of diseases in children; hence the name Bairn (child) well. In the reign of Henry III., the Barnwells were distinguished by the name of King's Barnwell, and Barnwell le Moigne.

The Castle.—Barnwell Castle was supposed to have been built by Reginald le Moigne, in the reign of Henry I. (A.D. 1132); but according to the best authority, the present castle was built in 1264, in the reign of Henry III., by Berengarius le Moigne, but by an investigation made the third year of Edward I. (1274), the said Berengarius was found to have forfeited all right to the estate, and was compelled, de warranto, in 1279, to cede the castle and manor to William, Abbot of Ramsey, in the county of Huntingdon, to which abbey it belonged, till the general suppression in the reign of Henry VIII. ; Sir Edward Montague, Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench, purchased it of that monarch, in the thirty-second of his reign (1540), and repaired and beautified it, and it subsequently became the baronial residence of his noble descendants. The remains now standing are four circular massy bastion towers, each forming an angle of a quadrangular court; the great gateway to the south flanked by similar towers, a small door on the west, now built up, with doors into the bastions, and a great portion of the walls, which are three feet thick throughout. These remains are seated on a hill, a short distance from the village. Roman coins and other antiquities have been found in the neighbourhood.

Manor.—Barnwell consisted of 6 hides of land at the time of the general survey, which were in the possession of the Abbot of Ramsey. There were two mills of the yearly rent of 24s., 40 acres of meadow, and a wood, and the whole, which was valued before the Conquest at 30s., was then advanced to £4. In the reign of Henry II., these 6 hides were in the hands of Reginald le Moigne. In the fifty-fourth of Henry III. (1269), Berenger le Moigne had a grant of weekly markets here, on Monday and Friday, with an eight-day one, commencing on the eve of the festival of St Michael. In the fourth of Edward I. (1275), this market was suppressed, as being prejudicial to the Abbot of Peterborough's market at Oundle. In the sixth of the same reign, the Abbot of Ramsey having obtained this manor from Berenger le Moigne, obtained a licence for a weekly market to be held on Wednesday, and the annual fair to continue as before. As has been stated above, the manor of Barnwell continued with the abbey of Ramsey till its dissolution, when it passed into the hands of Sir Edward Montague, Knight, and descended to his posterity. Both the Barnwells, with the adjoining lordships of Hemington, Luddington, and the hamlets of Armston and Kingsthorpe, on the death of the last Duke of Montague, became the property of the late Lord Montague, of Dilton, in right of his mother, the Duchess Dowager of Buccleuch and Queensberry, daughter of the said Duke. On the death of Henry James, Baron Montague, in 1845, the title [became extinct, and these estates descended to his nephew, the present Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry.

The Village of Barnwell consists of one long street of straggling houses. A brook runs through the centre, and is crossed by rustic bridges; the side road is planted with elm trees, and forms a pretty rural picture. It stands about 2 miles S.E. of Oundle; and at a short distance from the village is a station on the Peterborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway. Barnwell, from its situation, is much subject to floods; on the 17th of June 1721, a heavy rain, accompanied with thunder and lightning, inundated the village; the water rising to the height of 5 or 6 feet in the houses, drowned several sheep, and in subsiding, carried a waggon laden with wood along with it for 200 yards.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, consists of a nave and side-aisles, of the Curvilinear date, and with a reredos of very remarkable work, at the end of each; a south porch and chancel, and a tower, containing two bells, and surmounted by one of those beautiful spires so characteristic of this part of the county. The chancel, which dates 200 years later than the nave, is in the Perpendicular style, and has been much improved and embellished by the present rector. A large east window with five lights, designed by Sir Gilbert Scott, was inserted in 1851. The arch has recently been opened in the north wall, in connection with a small side chapel (Latham's Chapel), lately added, to contain the monument of the Rev. Nicholas Latham, which formerly stood in the chancel. The organ has also been removed to this chapel, which is separated from the nave by a back screen. The old piscina discovered under Latham's monument, is now placed in the south wall, and enlarged to form a credence table—a foot pace for the altar has also been added. The floor of the chancel is of black and white marble, and is separated from the nave by a low stone screen with brass gate. The style of this "little model church," as it is termed by a local archæologist (Mr Sharp), "may be described as altogether Lancet, except two Curvilinear windows, and the spire. The corbel shafts which support the chancel arch, and the richly moulded capitals, form a good example of Lancet work of the very best kind." The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Oundle, consolidated since 1830 with Barnwell All Saints, rated in the king's books at £17, 2s., but now worth about £480 per annum. The right of patronage, which formerly belonged to the abbey of Ramsey, is now in the Duke of Buccleuch, as lord of the manor. The Rev. George W. Huntingford, M.A., is the present rector.

The Rectory House, which stands west of the church, is a good building now undergoing a thorough repair, principally at the expense of the Duke of Buccleuch, and when completed will have a very handsome appearance.

In the chancel is the monument to the memory of the Rev. Nicholas Latham, a local benefactor, and for fifty-one years "parson of this parish," and founder of the hospital. He died on the 4th of August 1620.

The Hospital, for a warden and eleven poor persons, called "Parson Latham's Hospital," was founded and endowed in the second of James I. (1604), by the Rev. Nicholas Latham, rector of this parish. The hospital is now being rebuilt on the same site; it consists of a quadrangle 50 feet wide, with a handsome hall, and 12 rooms with recesses for beds, &c. The cost of the building will be over £2000, derived from Latham's charity and the munificence of the Duke of Buccleuch. The inmates receive the following weekly sums—viz., the warden, 8s. 6d., sub-warden, 8s. 4d., eight others of the corporation, 8s. each, two juniors, 7s. 6d. each, and two nurses receive 4s. 6d. each, for attending upon the sick. Of this pay, 1s. per week to each is added out of Bigley's charity. The pensioners are chosen by the rector and churchwardens, and three of the principal inhabitants of the place are appointed as bailiffs or managers of the hospital and its estates.

The Boys' School, erected and endowed by "Parson Latham," is also a good substantial building. An unlimited number of boys are taught free, but fifteen only receive a blue coat once a year from Latham's charity. The master's yearly salary at present is £60, with a residence. The schools of Brigstock, Weekly or Warkton, and Hemington or Luddington, were also to receive sums yearly out of the hospital estates, and exhibitions for 2 scholarships in Cambridge were founded. By deed, dated 6th January 1620, the same Nicholas Latham granted to certain trustees an estate in Shelton parish for the use of the poor. This property consists of 72a. 3r. 19p., and lets for about £60 per annum. It is believed to be the intention of the Duke of Buccleuch to build new schools in a short time, better adapted to the present wants.

William Bigley, gent., of Edmonton, who died in 1824, and was buried in this parish church, was also a great benefactor to Barnwell. He was born here of poor parents, and educated at Latham's school, apprenticed out of that charity to a baker at Oundle, from whence he went to London, and acquired considerable property. By will, dated July 20th, 1824, he devised £4000, new 4 per cent. bank annuities in trust, till the interest amounted to £300, when it was to be applied to the erection of a new schoolhouse, for 15 poor girls, of Barnwell and Oundle. Then £1000 of the principal sum of £4000, was to be invested, and out of the proceeds £20 a year to be allowed to the school-mistress, and £1 to the clothing of each of the girls; the surplus to be paid to the mistress, for providing fire, candles, &c.

Another £1000, the interest to be paid as follows—£20 a year to increase the salary of the master of Latham's school. Ten boys to be added to that school, and £10 of the annual proceeds of the said £1000 to be applied to their clothing, and £5 to apprentice one of the boys annually. The other £2000 he left in trust to the trustees of Latham's Hospital, to pay and apply the dividends thereof every year, to and amongst the poor pensioners of the said hospital, &c. The Duke of Buccleuch gave the ground, and a new girls' school was built, which with the old school and hospital, the church, and the picturesque ruins of the castle, render Barnwell an interesting village.

This place is also noted for the salubrity of its air, and the longevity of its inhabitants, as the obituary of its hospital shows. Its first warden, John Orton, died in 1607, at the advanced age of 101 years.

Worthy.—Mr Thomas Bell, late of this village, was the author of “The Ruins of Liveden,” a poem, and other works.

Post-Office.—William Allen, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Oundle at 7.30 A.M., and are despatched to Northampton at 6.10 P.M.

Austin Joseph, blacksmith	Parker Rowland, schoolmaster	Stevens James, painter, paper-
Chapman Richard, butcher	and organist, The Cottage	hanger, & gravestone engvr.
Cooper Jas. corn & flour dealer	Payne William, station-master	Tomlin Mrs Ann, dressmaker
Gascoigne George, wheelwright	Pratt William, parish clerk	Wright Thos. bailiff to Duke
Haynes Miss Mary, schoolmistress	Quincey John, vict. Montague	of Buccleuch
Hollis Thomas, sawyer	Arms	Farmers and Graziers.
Huntingford Rev. Geo. Wm.	Russell Wm. George, baker, &c.	Baker George Fred. (and mil-
M. A. rector	Sharp John, village crier	ler), Barnwell Mill
Kisbee Thomas, shopkeeper	Slater Robert, carpenter	Bletsae Bernard (yeoman)
Kisbee William W. stonemason	Smith Mr James	Bletsae Mrs Fanny, Lodge
Maddison Daniel, molecatcher	Smith Thomas, shoemaker	Fortescue James, Lodge
Ogilvie Robert John, grocer	Stevens Daniel, land surveyor,	Russell William, West Lodge
and provision dealer	painter, decorator, & grave-	Smith Mrs Emma, Lodge
	stone engraver	Smith Mrs Charlotte

BENEFIELD PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Oundle, on the south by Brigstock, on the west by Weldon, and on the north by Southwick. It includes the villages of Upper and Lower Benefield, and contains 4468 acres, in which there is an extra-parochial lodge, now annexed to Southwick. The population in 1801 was 354; in 1831, 519; in 1841, 348; in 1851, 539; in 1861, 536; in 1871, 543 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £5934, and the gross estimated rental £7074. Jesse Watts Russell, Esq., is the lord of the manor, and principal proprietor. At the west of the church stood an ancient castle, encompassed by a moat, enclosing about an acre of ground; and a little from Lower Benefield, are nine hollows in the fields called the Swallows, through which the land-floods occasionally flow and disappear—a phenomenon, the explanation of which is involved in much doubt.

Manor.—Benefield consisted of three hides of land at the time of the Conqueror's survey, which were held of the crown, by Richard Fitz Gislebert. There were five acres of meadow and wood, and the whole was valued at 10s. In the reign of Henry II. two of these hides were in the hands of William de Lisurs, and another was of the fee of the abbey of Burgh. In the eighteenth of King John (1217), this manor was given to Baldwin de Guisnes; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Humphrey de Bassingbourne, and John de L'Isle, were lords of Benefield and its members. In the eleventh of Henry VIII. (1519), Eleanor Melton, relict of Sir John Melton, died seized of this manor, held of the abbey of Peterborough, and was succeeded by Sir John Zouche, her son, by her first husband, John Zouche, Esq. In the reign of Charles I., the Earl of Warwick was lord of the manor and castle of Benefield; and when it passed from this family is not known. It was afterwards in the possession of the family of Middleton, from which it passed by purchase to the Earl of Powis. The Knights Hospitallers of St John of Jerusalem had possessions in this parish.

The Village of Lower Benefield, which is small, is situate about three and a half miles west of Oundle. Upper Benefield is somewhat larger, and contains a good inn; it is about one mile N.W. of the former. The lord of the manor, who is a very improving landlord, has built several houses in the parish.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, occupies an elevated situation in the lower village. It was rebuilt, except the chancel, in 1847, and is partly in the Early English, and partly in the Decorated style. It is one of the prettiest churches in the county, and certainly the most superbly fitted up. It consists of a nave, side aisles, chancel, a side chapel, and a square tower containing five bells, and surmounted by a handsome spire. The chancel is separated from the nave by a beautifully carved oak screen, surmounted by a crowned rood cross; and the pulpit, altar, and reredos, are of elegantly carved stone; the altar and reredos being richly gilded. The sedilia has been renewed and richly painted and gilded; the choir stalls, lectern, and prayer desk are of elegantly carved oak. There is an organ by Holdich, and the font is of Caen stone, octagonal in form, and exceedingly rich. The roof of the chancel is painted, gilded, and starred; the east window, and eight others, are filled with richly stained glass, the former being a copy of a window in Ely Cathedral. The floor of the whole church is laid with encaustic tiles, and may with confidence be pronounced a perfect gem. Mr Derrick of Oxford was the architect, and Jesse Watts Russell, Esq., the patron, defrayed the cost of nearly the whole, and presented a Bible magnificently bound, which cost eighty guineas.

The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Oundle, valued in the king's books at £35, 9s. 7d., and now worth about £600 per annum. The Rev. C. C. Spencer, M.A., is the rector, and the Rev. A. Lendrum, M.A., curate in charge. The tithes were commuted in 1820 for about 336 acres of land, and now returned at 470 acres, belonging to the rectory. The Rectory House, a commodious residence, stands adjacent to the church.

Here is a day and Sunday-school endowed with £20, the interest of £300 left by the Rev. Francis Broade in 1783. In addition to this sum, J. W. Russell, Esq., pays £80, and the rector adds the remainder to the amount of £100. The Rev. F. Broade also left the interest of £100 to the poor.

Biggin Hall, an ancient mansion, situated in a beautiful park, is the occasional residence of Jesse Watts Russell, Esq., and now occupied by his son J. D. Russell, Esq., J.P.

Post-Office.—Mrs Jane Cunningham, sub-postmistress. Letters arrive from Oundle at 8.10 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 5.30 P.M.

(Marked 1 reside at Upper Benefield.)

1 Barret James, baker
Berridge Thomas, shopkeeper
Bell Robert, shoemaker
Berkeley Miles, Esq.
Bullock Jas. Maxwell, school-master and organist
1 Carley Austin, vict. Wheat Sheaf.
Chapman William, butcher
1 Colston Mrs Elizabeth
1 Cunningham Edward, butcher and shopkeeper
Cunnington Mrs Jane, shopkeeper, post-office
1 Dixon William, jobber
1 Dolby Joseph, cottager

Everest Mrs Elizabeth
Gilby Samuel, blacksmith
1 Height Charles, cottager
1 Hudson Mrs Ann
Lendrum Rev. Alexander, M.A. curate in charge
Lilley Mrs Elizabeth
Meadows Jno. builder & farmer
Osborne John, gamekeeper
1 Streather Thos. stonemason
Pirrell Joseph, baker
1 Wood John, wheelwright

Farmers and Graziers.

1 Ball William

1 Bellamy John
1 Carley Austin
1 Colston John
1 Daris John
Dewar Octavius S.
1 Dixon William
Eaton George
Everest Ed. Springwood Lodge
Everett Mrs Maria, Rectory Farm
Freeman Thomas, Lodge
1 Marsh Thos. Yokehill Lodge
Preston William
1 Sharman Thomas Samuel, Benefield Grange

HEMINGTON PARISH

Is bounded by Lutton and Luddington on the south, Thurning on the west, and Polebrook and Kingsthorpe on the north. It contains 1309 acres, of the rateable value of £1466. Its population in 1801 was 106; in 1831, 133; in 1841, 147; in 1851, 175; in 1861, 152; and in 1871, 176 souls. The gross estimated rental is £1727. The soil is in general a stiff clay, and the Duke of Buccleuch is lord of the manor, and owner of the whole. The noble family of Montague, so distinguished for its wealth and influence in the annals of Northamptonshire, took its rise in this parish.

Manor.—The Abbot of Ramsey held 2½ hides of land in Hemington at the time of the general survey. There were 10 acres of meadow, and in the Confessor's reign the whole had been valued at 10s., but was now advanced to 20s.

Berengerius le Moyne held these in the reign of Henry II. ; in the time of Henry III., Sir Richard de Heminton, knight, was lord of this manor, and with his descendants it continued till the reign of Henry VI. Here was also another manor held of the fee of Burgh. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), the Abbots of Ramsey and Burgh, John de Hemington, John Sandown, and John Bardown, were lords of Hemington and its members. In the fourth of Henry VII. (1488), Robert Est of London, in consideration of £100, conveyed the manor of Hemington to Thomas Montague, gent. This Thomas Montague was the ancestor of the illustrious house of that name, and from him this manor, with other neighbouring lordships, lineally descended to the present noble proprietor. (See Barnwell St Andrew parish.) After the dissolution of the religious houses, the lands here belonging to the abbey of Ramsey were sold by letters patent to Sir Edward Montague for £343. Other possessions here, belonging to the nunnery of Hinchbrook, came also by purchase to the Montague family. About a quarter of a mile eastward of the church, are the remains of the old manor-house, once the ancestral residence of this noble family. It was surrounded by a moat, enclosing about 8 acres. It is now converted into tenements, in one of which, still entire and unmutated, is an ancient chimney-piece of fine stone, reaching to the ceiling, about 9 feet in width, with fluted columns, and of a most elegant and elaborate design.

The Village of Hemington, which is very small, is about 4½ miles S.E. by E. of Oundle. It is situated high, on level ground.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter and St Paul, stands east of the village, and consists of nave, chancel, west tower, and south porch ; but before its restoration in 1872, there was no chancel or porch, while the nave, with its square-headed windows (taken from the ruins of the old hall), had an entirely domestic appearance, and the tower alone (of fifteenth century date), survived of the mediæval building. At the expense of the Duke of Buccleuch, the whole has been restored under the direction of Mr R. Herbert Carpenter, and the late William Slater, architects. The new works are carried out in the style of the fourteenth century. The east window of the chancel is of three lights, with rich tracery, and under it is a reredos, formed by three arches, in which is painted the Crucifixion, by Mr D. Bell. There is a priests' door, and on each side is a two-light window. The chancel arch is a reproduction of an arch which had formerly existed, and of which a few stones had been built up in the wall ; these stones are inserted in the new work. The nave has had new two-light windows inserted instead of the square ones, which have been transferred to the vicarage, but its original oak roof of Jacobean date remains. In the chancel are fixed the magnificent old oak stalls which, patched and dilapidated as they were, proved to have originally been brought from Fotheringhay Castle Chapel, or from the church there. They are of a singular shape, the ends curling round in the form of a bishop's pastoral staff. The carving of these, and of the "misereres" is of great beauty, as are the angels carved on the stall divisions. Besides these, portions of carved screenwork and tracery were found ; these have been worked up in the new pulpit. The body was rebuilt in 1666. The living is a vicarage, annexed to Luddington in the Brook, in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £6, 9s. 7d., and returned at £130. Here are some ancient oak stalls, said to have been brought from the collegiate church of Fotheringhay upon its demolition, amongst them being the dean's seat. The Duke of Buccleuch is the patron, and the Rev. Benjamin N. Cherry, B.A., incumbent.

The Vicarage, a neat building, stands near the church, and was erected by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1849.

The School was also erected by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1855, and is entirely supported by him.

Post-Office.—Letters arrive through Oundle.

Barnes Samuel, parish clerk
Barrett John, farm bailiff
Cherry Rev. Benj. N., B.A. vicar
Ducker Miss, schoolmistress

Kirk Henry, vict. Bill & Hatchet
Sanders Joseph, shoemaker
Walter Joseph, jobber

Farmers and Graziers.
Cooper Henry, Hemington House
Crawley Strickson, Hemington Lodge

LUDDINGTON IN THE BROOK (PART OF) PARISH.

This parish is partly in the hundred of Leightonstone, county of Huntingdon, but principally in this hundred. The whole parish, according to the parliamentary returns, contains only 620 acres; its population in 1801 was 104; in 1831, 117; in 1841, 139; in 1851, 130; in 1861, 128; and in 1871, 104 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £998; and the gross estimated rental £1179. The Duke of Buccleuch is the present lord of the manor, and principal proprietor. The boundaries of the parish are formed by Huntingdonshire on the east, by Winwick on the south, by Thurning and Hemington on the west, and by Lutton on the north. "The situation," says Bridges, "is low and dirty, and from a rivulet which sometimes overflows the town, it is called Luddington in the Brook."

Manor.—At the time of the general survey, Walter held 1½ hide here of the Abbot of Peterborough. In the preceding reign it was rated at 10s., and was now valued at 30s. In the twentieth of Edward I. (1291), John Marmiun was lord of Lullington; and in the thirty-second of the same reign, John Undale gave it up to the Abbot and convent of Peterborough, and their successors for ever. This manor continued with the abbey till its dissolution, when it fell to the crown, and was granted in consideration of £301, 5s. 10d. to Sir Edward Montague, knight, Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench, and from him it descended lineally to the present noble proprietor.

The Village of Luddington is about seven miles south of Oundle.

The Church, dedicated to St Margaret, consists of nave, chancel, south aisle, and porch, and a west tower and spire, and has been thoroughly restored at the expense of the Duke of Buccleuch, under the direction of Mr R. Herbert Carpenter, architect. Although the church is almost entirely of fifteenth century date, there are remains of thirteenth century work in the buttresses at the west end of the nave, and in the windows of the chancel, which, having been preserved in a poor and dilapidated modern chancel, have again been inserted in the present new chancel; they are of curious and beautiful detail, and the new east window is designed in harmony with them. On the north side of the nave are remaining the foundations of the thirteenth century north aisle. This north wall is of fifteenth century date, and has large windows and a stone turret stairs leading out to the point where the roodloft formerly existed. The roofs have been entirely renewed in conformity with the style of the church, and some new seats have been added to the ancient ones. The tower and spire are singularly small; and the new low spire is a reproduction of, and addition to, a portion of an old one which was only carried up a few feet and then finished by a wooden roof—for what reason is not known. The living is a rectory, with Hemington annexed, in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £8, 8s. 9d., and now valued at £250 per annum. The Duke of Buccleuch is patron, and the Rev. Benjamin N. Cherry, B.A., is the incumbent. The tithes, moduses, &c., were commuted in 1807.

A New School was erected here in 1854 by the Duke of Buccleuch, who is also the supporter of it.

Letters are received here through the Oundle Post-office.

Butterworth Reuben, vict.
Lamb and Flag

Farmers and Graziers.
Cheney James
Fletcher William, Lodge

Hilliam John L.
Nixon Joseph
Pentelow Ekin and William

OUNDLÉ PARISH

Includes the market town of Oundle, the hamlets of Ashton and the members, Biggin, Churchfield, and Elmington, the latter of which is locally situated in Willybrook Hundred. It is bounded on the east and south by the river Nene, on the west by Benefield and Stoke, and on the north by Glapthorne. It contains 4975 acres; and its population in 1801, including the hamlets, was 2068 ; in 1831, 2450 ; in 1841, 3037 ; in 1851, 2913 ; in 1861, 3040 ; in 1871, 2868 souls. The gross estimated rental is £17,207 ; and the rateable value, including the hamlet of Ashton, is £14,548. The principal proprietors are Jesse Watts Russell, Esq. (the lord of the manor), J. W. Smith, Esq. (lord of the rectorial manor), and the vicar.

Manor.—Oundle was amongst the earliest possessions of the monastery of Medeshamstede, afterwards called Burgh, and now Peterborough. At the time of the Conqueror's survey, the Abbot of Burgh held 6 hides of land at Undele. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 20s., and 250 eels ; 50 acres of meadow, and a wood 3 miles long and 2 broad, and the whole, including 25s., the profits of the market, was then valued £11. The manor of Oundle continued in the possession of the Abbey of Peterborough till the dissolution of the religious houses in the reign of Henry VIII. In the fifty-second of Henry III. (1267), the abbot obtained the privilege of a fourteen days' fair here, beginning on the Feast of the Ascension. In the third of Edward VI. (1549), the manor fair, market, and "sheriff's turn," were granted to John, Earl of Bedford, who had farmed them under the abbey, with the advowson of the vicarage, at the yearly rent of £172, os. 3d. This manor continued with the Dukes of Bedford for several generations. In the sixth of Charles I. (1631), Francis, Duke of Bedford, was the principal undertaker in the great and expensive work of draining those fens called the Great Level, and since named Bedford Levels, extending into the counties of Northampton, Cambridge, Huntingdon, Norfolk, and Lincoln. The Earl of Powis was Lord of Oundle in Bridge's time, and J. W. Russell, Esq., is the present lord.

THE TOWN OF OUNDLE.

Oundle is a clean, regular, and compact market town, seated on a gently declining ground, surrounded on three sides by the river Nene, which, at a short distance, encompasses it in the form of a crescent ; the river is crossed by two bridges, one of which is an object of some curiosity from its great length and numerous arches. In repairing one of these bridges a few years since, a stone was discovered with an inscription relating to the rebuilding of the structures so long since as 1570, after it had been "borne down by the waters' extremitie." It is situated 37 miles N.E. of Northampton, 13 S.W. by W. of Peterborough, 8 nearly N. of Thrapston, and 78 N.W. by N. from London.

There are several beautiful seats in the neighbourhood. And in the vicinity are also several mineral springs, strongly impregnated with iron, and considered valuable for their tonic qualities. The surrounding country yields to no part of Northamptonshire in productiveness ; the surface is pleasantly diversified and ornamented with noble woods ; and the fine river, while it fertilises the land, enhances the beauty of the general landscape.

"Beda reportethe that Wilfride, first the Byshop of Northumberland, and then of Southsex, had a monasterie in Oundale, where he dyed, and was from thence translated to Ripon. . . . Kinge John, in the latter end of his reigne, burned the storehouses that the monks of Peterborough had at Oundle, like as he spoyled the hole countrie before him."

There is a station on the Peterborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway, about half a mile from the town. Oundle consists of a good market place, in the centre of which is a market house and three well-built streets, which are paved and lighted with gas. The market is held on Thursday, and fairs for horses, sheep, and horned cattle, but now for horses only, on the 25th of February, and a pleasure fair on Whitmonday, and for all sorts of stock and cheese on the 12th of October. There was formerly a fair on the 21st of August, but it has fallen into disuse.

The Cemetery, situated about a quarter of a mile from the town on the Stoke road, was opened in 1859 at a cost of £2650. It is tastefully laid out, having a gradual rise from the road, and is approached by a neat stone lodge. The Chapel is a handsome building of stone surmounted by a small crocketed spire, and divided in the usual way for the accommodation of the Church of England and Dissenters.

Banks.—Here are branches of the Stamford, Spalding, and Boston Banking Company; the Midland Banking Company, and a Savings-Bank, established in 1818, at which the rate of interest allowed is £2, 17s. per cent. According to the report of this institution, published November 20, 1873, the amount deposited was £32,804, 16s, belonging to 1005 depositors. The neighbouring clergy and gentry act as managers, and Mr Thomas F. Shepherd is acting secretary.

The Municipal Government is vested in an unlimited number of Commissioners for the better improvement of the town, in accordance with an Act of Parliament obtained in 1825. The County Police have a station here for the division of Oundle. Petty Sessions are held once a fortnight in the Town Hall, at which two or more of the following magistrates preside:—Lord Lyveden, (chairman); Earl of Westmoreland; Lord Lilford; Hon. George Ward Hunt; J. D. Watts Russell, Esq.; John William Smith, Esq.; Rev. S. H. Capron; Rev. W. H. Charlton; Charles Ormston Eaton, Esq.; Rev. W. Hopkinson; William Goddard Jackson, jun., Esq., and Colonel Thomas Tryon—E. C. Sherard, clerk. The County Court, for the recovery of debts under £50, is held here monthly, and the district comprises the following parishes, &c., Apethorpe, Arniston, Ashton, Barnwell All Saints, Barnwell St Andrew, Benefield, Blatherwyck, Bulwick, Cotterstock, Deene, Deenthorpe, Elton (Huntingdon), Fotheringhay, Great and Little Gidding (Huntingdon), Glapthorne, Hemington, King's Cliffe, Lilford, Luddington (partly in Huntingdon), Luton (partly in Huntingdon), Nassington, Oundle, Pilton, Polebrook, Southwick, Stoke Doyle, Tansor, Thorpe Achurch, Thurning (partly in Huntingdon), Wadenhoe, Warmington, Weldon (Great and Little), Winwick (partly in Huntingdon), Woodnewton, and Yarwell. The court-leet and court baron of Jesse Watts Russell, Esq. (lord of the manor), is held annually in October; the court of the Duke of Buccleuch, for the liberty and hundred of Polebrook, in the same month; and John William Smith, Esq., possessor of the rectory manor, holds his court once in two or three years.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, is in the Early English style, and belongs principally to the Early Geometrical period, of which it is a good example, with clerestory of Decorated character. It consists of a nave, chancel, north and south aisles, and transepts, chantry chapels, and a fine embattled tower, surmounted by a beautiful crocketed hexagonal spire 210 feet in height. The tower, which is of magnificent design, belongs to the Curvilinear (or Decorated) period, contains a fine peal of eight bells, which were rehung in 1873 at a cost of over £200. Its slender, yet becoming buttresses carried up to the top, and unconnected with the four noble octagonal turrets that rise from the parapetted battlement, pierced with the cross, give to the whole building a noble and graceful appearance. There is a crypt under the south transept with finely groined roof, the ribs moulded and bases enriched with foliage. The spire was rebuilt in the seventeenth century, which will account for the novel crockets, which are flat. The bases and pillars of the arcades, as well as the arches which rest upon them, are very fine, especially those in the north arcade which are most magnificent. There is in the chancel a splendid reredos with battlemented moulding. The centre piece is a representation of the "Last Supper," composed of alabaster, incised and inlaid with pale chocolate cement—the treatment being very effective. On either side is an arcade of two cinque-foil arches, with marble shafts and foliated capitals. The spandrels of the arches are enriched with natural foliage. The whole is a work of great merit, designed and executed by Clayton & Bell, and Cox & Son. In the chancel, too, are Decorated sedilia, three in number, with cinquefoil arches, surmounted with flat ogee arches, with crocketed labels and finials. A beautiful stained glass window was erected in 1864, representative of the chief events in the life of our Saviour. The pulpit is supposed to have been erected in the year 1550, and is usually designated the "Reformation pulpit;" it is disfigured by gaudy colouring. There are several ancient monuments in the church ; a fine brass lectern of the fifteenth century, to which is attached a tradition which says that it originally belonged to Fotheringhay Church, from whence it was carried off by the Puritans and thrown into the river, and afterwards fished out and brought to Oundle. There is a very fine organ in the chancel, raised ten feet from the floor, which was built by Walker of London. In the south aisle is a spiral monument to the memory of the Rev. John Shillibeer, M.A., head master of the grammar school, erected by his pupils. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the deanery to which it gives name, rated in the king's books at £13, 6s. 8d., and now worth about £627 per annum, a greater portion of which arises from private donations. The advowson is vested in the Bishop of Peterborough, and the Rev. Charles Hopkins, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land in 1807. This beautiful church was thoroughly restored in 1864, at a cost of £6000. The Vicarage House is large and commodious, and stands adjacent to the church in New street.

A Fraternity or Guild, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, St John and St George, was established here by Mrs John Wyat, who endowed it with revenue for two priests, who, at the time of the suppression, had each a salary of £5, 6s. 8d. In the lower part of the Guild-hall, seven poor widows had their lodging, with certain allowances of wood and other necessaries.

The services of the Catholic Church are performed occasionally by the Very Rev. Canon Seed, of Peterborough, in a small chapel in the house of Miss S. Jinks, West street, where they have been conducted for upwards of 64 years. The Hon. and Rev. George Spencer, brother to the late Earl Spencer, and rector of Great Brington, afterwards Father Ignatius of the Order of the Passion, preached his first sermon here as a Catholic priest.

The Independents.—This body first formed a congregation at Oundle in the year 1690. Their present chapel in West street was built in 1864, at a cost of nearly £2000. It is a substantial building of stone in the Gothic style, capable of seating 500 persons. The Rev. John Beaty Hart is the minister.

The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel in West street was erected in 1842, and re-seated in 1866 at a cost of £300. The Baptist Chapel, erected in 1852, is also in West street, and is a plain stone building.

Charitable Institutions, Schools, &c.—Laxton's grammar-school and almshouse, situated in Church street, were founded and endowed, in 1556, by Sir William Laxton, knight, son of John Laxton, of Oundle; he was bred a grocer in London, of which city he was lord mayor in 1554. The school was established, and still continues to be held on the site of the old Guild-hall, or Fraternity-house, which was purchased by Lady Laxton, wife of Sir William Laxton. The Grocers' Company of London were appointed trustees. The Rev. J. F. Stansbury, D.D., is the head master, and resides in a commodious house in the churchyard, where he has extensive accommodation for boarders; Rev. H. Weightman, M.A., is the mathematical master; R. P. Brereton, B.A., is the classical master; Rev. J. A. Stansbury, M.A., is the third master; Mons. J. A. Brandstoetter is the German and French master; and W. Armstrong is the writing and English master, besides 5 assistant monitors. In consequence of a decision before the Master of the Rolls, in 1843, the Grocers' Company received a beneficial interest in the school, and it was made as it were their own property. A few of the principal inhabitants of Oundle entered a suit in Chancery, in the above year, against the Grocers' Company, to oblige them to expend the full amount of the income of the charity upon the hospital and school. In the schedule, the rental of the Laxton estates, consisting of several messuages in London, was stated to have been originally £167 per annum, and the payments directed to be made £82, 16s. per annum. The estate has since increased to about £5000 a year, and the company had also a sum of £8645, 3 per cent. consols, which had arisen from the sale of part of the estate, under the London Bridge Act. By the decision of the court it appears they have power to expend it as they please; however, we are informed that the company are well disposed towards the town, and that they will expend the whole income of the charity upon the school; and we are glad to see that it has in consequence once more become a flourishing establishment. The premises have been considerably enlarged by purchases made of late years by the Grocers' Company, to the amount of nearly £1500, for additional buildings and a playground. Improvements have been made in the head master's house for the purpose of enabling him to take a large number of boarders. The money expended in repairs and improvements since 1808 amounts to a large sum. Three or four persons in Oundle, or its neighbourhood, are appointed as local trustees to direct and superintend the almshouse, pay the stipends of the inmates, &c. The school is conducted pursuant to the terms of the foundation, as a grammar-school for instruction in the Latin and Greek languages, to which mathematics, German, French, and the usual English course have been added. It is open to the world on payment of two guineas a year. The head master, as well as the mathematical and classical masters, are appointed by the company, and the rest by head master at his own cost. In 1870, the net annual income of the school was, from Grocers' Company £1057, 10s.; from parents for entrance and school fees, £210, 13s.; and from exhibitions, £75—making a total of £1343, 3s.

Almshouse.—The lower floor of the schoolhouse contains a common room or kitchen, and 8 sleeping apartments for 7 almsmen and a nurse. The clothing supplied is a suit of clothes every year for each of the men; and the almsmen and nurse are provided with a Christmas dinner, and with medical attendance and medicines, and an allowance of wood and coals. The following are the annual payments at present made by the Grocers' Company, exclusive of the expense of repairs, which is considerable, viz.:—To seven almsmen, at 5s. a week, £91; to the nurse, 6s. a week, £15, 12s.; clothing on an average, £33; medical relief, &c., on an average, £15; fuel, ditto, £12; total, £166, 12s.

Latham's Hospital and Blue-Coat School.—Rev. Nicholas Latham, rector of Barnwell St Andrew for upwards of 50 years, founded and endowed this noble institution in 1616, for the education and clothing of 30 poor men's sons, and maintenance of 18 poor women. The hospital and school, situate in North street, are in excellent repair, and the apartments comfortable and commodious. They are entered through two courtyards, with ornamental gateways, bearing the crest of the donor. The whole of the premises underwent a thorough repair at a cost of £800, by the direction and under the superintendence of J. Smith, Esq., one of the the bailiffs of the hospital, in 1837. The inmates are a warden, subwarden, 12 corporation women, 2 nurses, and 2 firewomen. The warden receives 7s. per week, and the subwarden, 5s. 9d.; the 12 corporation women, 5s. 3d. each; the nurses 4s. 6d. each; and the firewomen 4s. 9d. each. Dinner is provided for them on Sundays, Christmas Day, and on the annual account day in March. Firing is supplied also, and a medical man provided for them. Each woman receives a new gown at Whitsuntide, and 5s. per quarter for washing. The school, in which 30 boys are educated and clothed, is well conducted by both a reading and writing master. The Duke of Buccleuch was appointed by the founder, special visitor to the establishment, and the present bailiffs or trustees are J. W. Smith, Esq., and G. M. Edmonds, Esq. The income of the charity is about £600 per annum.

Paine's Almshouses consist of 4 tenements, left by John Paine, in 1801, to be given rent free to poor Protestant Dissenters. He also bequeathed £300, the interest thereof to be for the use of the minister and congregation of Protestant Dissenters (Independents), for the time being.

The other Charities of the town are the feoffees or town estates, consisting of 43a. 3r. 24p., which let for £60, 5s. per annum. In 1860 three acres were sold to the burial board for the present cemetery for £315, which sum was vested in the three per cent. consols in the purchase of £336, 18s., and the present income of the remainder of the estate is £107, 10s., making a total of £117, 13s. 5d. per annum. The interest of £300, left in 1723, by John Clifton, to two poor blind persons; the rent of a piece of land (£5, 5s. per annum), left in 1697, by Ann Taylor, to a poor scholar at the free school; £5 a year for apprenticing children, left by Clement Bellamy, in 1658; and the rent of a warehouse, left in 1743, by Stephen Bramston, to the writing master of Parson Latham's school. This parish is entitled in common with Barnwell St Andrew, to have 15 poor girls educated and clothed, under William Bigley's will (see Charities of Barnwell St Andrew Parish).

Miss Simco bequeathed £15 per annum to the vicar of Oundle, about 40 years ago, for the benefit of the poor of the parish; and William Walcott, in 1827, left £500 for the use of the National School, and for founding a Church of England School under particular circumstances.

Oundle Literary and Scientific Institution, established in 1856, is held in the town hall; the reading room and library are open on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings, from 8 till 10 P.M. Subscriptions—Honorary members 10s. per annum, ordinary members 1s. per quarter. Captain Rickett, H.C.S., president; Alfred King, secretary.

The National School, at the north end of the town, was erected in 1840, and is a good building, including master's residence. It is divided into mixed and infant schools, will accommodate 290, and the average attendance is 100 boys and girls, and 60 infants. The British School, West Street, is a plain building, erected in 1843, and will accommodate 160, average attendance 145.

The Benefit Societies in Oundle are the Oddfellows', the Foresters', the Union Provident, and the Tradesmen's.

The Union Workhouse, erected in 1837, on the Glapthorne road, at a cost of £5000, is a good building capable of accommodating 150 persons. The following 37 parishes or townships are comprehended in the union, extending over an area of 101 square miles:—Oundle, Ashton, Armston, Apethorpe, the two Barnwells, Benefield, Blatherwyck, Bulwick, Cotterstock, Deene, Deenethorpe, Fotheringhay, Glapthorne, Hemington, King's Cliffe, Lilford, Luddington, Lutton, Nassington, Pilton, Polebrook, Southwick, Stoke Doyle, Tansor, Thorpe Achurch, Wadenhoe, Warmington, Great Weldon, Little Weldon, Woodnewton, Yarwell, Elton, Great Gidding, Little Gidding, Thurning, and Winwick. Captain James Rickett, H.C.S., is chairman of the board of guardians; Mr William Russell, vice-ditto; Mr Robert Richardson, solicitor, clerk; Mr Thomas J. Warrilow is master, Miss Martha Russell, matron; and the medical officers are Mr Daniel Tomlinson for the Oundle district, Mr Robert Dain for King's Cliffe, Dr Greaves for the Weldon district, and Mr W. B. Calcott for Barnwell district and union house; the relieving officers are Mr James Gann, jun., for Oundle district, and Mr J. Tebbutt for Fotheringhay district; Mrs Sarah Jemima Warrilow, schoolmistress; William Cheney, porter. The average weekly number of paupers received during the past year was 100, and the average weekly expense of each 3s.

ASHTON is a hamlet in this parish, containing a few scattered farm-houses, on the eastern side of the Nene, about 1 mile east of Oundle. Its population in 1841 was 172; in 1861, 177; in 1871, 153; and J. W. Smith, Esq., is lord of the manor. Here is a free school, founded and endowed, in 1705, by Jemima Creed, with a field, containing about 20 acres, which yields about £57, 10s. per annum. £200 3 per cent consols were purchased in 1829 by the trustees, with £175, 12s. 3d., being the amount of an accumulated fund in their hands. The schoolroom is licensed for divine service, which is conducted on Sunday afternoon by the vicar of Oundle or his curate.

BIGGIN hamlet, containing the mansion and demesne of J. W. Russell, Esq., the proprietor, is partly in this and partly in Benefield parish. The hall is at present occupied by J. D. Watts Russell, Esq.

CHURCHFIELD contains two farm houses, and is the property of Lord Lyveden. It is about 2 miles west from Oundle. Here was formerly a chapel-of-ease to Oundle.

ELMINGTON, another member of this parish, situate about 1 mile N.W. from Oundle, consists of two farm houses. Foundations of buildings having been ploughed up near the house, it is supposed to have once been a considerable hamlet. It is now the property of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and Baron Rothschild. Here was also a chapel pertaining to the mother church at Oundle.

OUNDLÉ DIRECTORY.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank, Market place, Robert Turner, postmaster. Letters arrive at 7.30 and 11.30 A.M., and are despatched at 6.45, 10.30, and 11.30 A.M., and at 5.45 and 8 P.M.

ADAMS Mrs Rachel, shopkeeper, New street
Alford Edward, vict. Ship, West street
Alford Francis, stonemason & beerho. West st.
Alford George, jun. stonemason, Benefield rd.
Alford Walter, higgler, Benefield road
Allen Mrs Charlotte, shopkeeper, North street
Allen George, beerhouse, West street
Andrews Robert, shoemaker, West street
Anees William, shopkeeper, West street
Armstrong Mrs Mary, Benefield terrace
Armstrong Henry William, writing master, grammar-school
Arnold Mr William, West street
Ashby Benj. blacksmith & machinist, West st.
Atkins William, clerk, North street

BAILEY John, higgler, New street
Baker Mrs Mary Ann, New road villas
Baker Mr Robert, West street
Ball Thomas, butcher, Market place
Barnes James, shoemaker, Market place
Barnes Thomas, brewer and maltster, New st.
Beal Misses Elizth. & Betsey, Bradley's cottage
Beal Josiah, linen draper, silk mercer, and clothier, Market place.

Beal Thomas, watchmaker, jeweller, &c. Market place

Beeham Miss Martha Elizabeth, West street
Bell Jas. dep. bailiff, Co. Court, St O'Sythe's la.
Bell Mrs Martha, New street
Berridge Robt. builder, cabinet m. &c. North st.
Binder Mrs Christina, grocer & baker, West st.
Binder Millin, builder & cabinetmak. West st.
Blackwell William, blacksmith, St O'Sythe's la.
Bloom Thomas, tailor and draper, Market pl.
Blowfield Miss Ann, Market place
Blyth Walter, grocer, &c. West street
Brandstoetter Mons. Joseph, French and German master of grammar-school
Brereton Robert Pearson, B.A. classical master, grammar-school

Brighty John, coal & corn mercht. North st.
Britchfield John, hairdr. &c. St O'Sythe's lane
Broughton Wm. mast. of Latham's sch. North st.
Brown Alfred, baker & shopkeeper, North st.
Brown Mrs Elizth. dressmaker, &c. West st.
Brown Mr James, Benefield road
Brown Jph. shoemr. & beerho. St O'Sythe's la.
Brown Capt. Lawrence Chas. Herne Lodge
Brown Mrs Mary, beerhouse, Benefield road
Brundell Miss Eliza, fancy repository, North st.
Brundell Mrs Matilda, dressmaker, North st.
Bullivant John Wm. grocer and tallow chand. Market place

Bullivant Mr Thomas, Market place
Bunning Miss Ann Rebecca, mistress, St Ann's Infant school, Benefield road
Bunning Mrs Elizabeth, North street
Bunning Geo. Fredk. paint. plumb. &c. West st.
Bunning John, farmer and vict. Red Lion, New st.
Burbidge John, shoemaker and beerh. West st.

CALCOTT Wallace Berkley, surgeon, West st.
Carr Mrs Ann, boarding school, West street

Carr Mrs Elizabeth, Stoke road
Carter James, shopkeeper, Benefield road
Chapman John, butcher, West street
Chettle Mrs Mildred, St O'Sythe's lane
Chew John, grocer & prov. dealer, Market pl.
Chew William, farmer, Ashton Wold
Clarke John Saunders, estate agent and surveyor, Bramston House
Clarke Staffurth, watchmaker, New street
Clarke Thomas, gardener, St O'Sythe's lane
Cliffe Thomas, butcher, New street
Coaten Wm. painter, plumber, &c. Market pl.
Coates James, lawyer's clerk, New street
Colbourne Rev. John, B.A. Benefield terrace
Collier William, shoemaker, St O'Sythe's la.
Comfort Rev. Isaap (Baptist), Inkerman Cottage
Cooper Robert, blacksmith, Church street
Co-operative Stores, grocers, &c. Timon Stuart, manager, West street
Coulson William, tailor and draper, North st.
Creaser John, tailor and draper, Market place
Cunnington Mrs Harriet, vict. Crown, Market pl.
Curtis Wm. jun. brewery manager, West st.

DAKIN Daniel, shoemaker, East backway
Danford Mr William, West street
Davis Edward, shoedealet, North street
Deacon Samuel, auctioneer and estate agent, New street, h. Polebrook Hall
D'Abbs Miss Harriet, school, Market place
Dew Charles, basket maker & shopkpr. New st.
Dixon Frederick, clerk, West street
Dixon Mr Nathan, West street
Dixon Nathan, jun. clerk, West street
Dolby Mrs Annie, fancy repository, New st.
Dolby John Meadows, builder, &c. New street
Dolby Joseph, land surveyor, New street
Dolby William, sheriff's officer, West street
Donegani Austin, fishmonger, &c. Market pl.
Drage Joseph, farmer, Wakerley Lodge
Drage Joseph, vict. Three Horse Shoes, Ashton
Durrans Paul, brewer and maltster, Anchor Brewery, h. The Elms

EAYRS John Vincent, veterinary surgeon and vict. Cross Keys, West street
Edmonds & Pooley, solicitors, North street and Market place
Edmonds Geo. Maxwell (E. & Pooley), h. Berrystead
Ellick & Hill, grocers, wine and spirit mer. West st.
Ellick, Wm. Henry (Ellick & Hill), West st.
Evans Joseph Tarry, inspector of police and weights and measures

Fox Thomas, beerhouse, Glapthorne road
Francis Mrs Harriet, dressmaker, &c. New st.

GANN James, builder and cabinetmr. New st.
Gann James, jun. relieving officer, West st.
Gann John, cabinetmaker, Market place
Gann Thos. cabinetm. & vict. Nag's Head, West st.
Garner Henry, vict. White Lion, North street
Geary Miss Susan. dressm. &c. St O'Sythe's la.

Godfrey Mrs Caroline, Benefield road
Gravelly George, brewery manager, North st.
Gray Charles, confectioner, &c. West street
Gray William, shopkeeper, North street
Green John, tailor and draper, West street
Green William, gardener, New street

HALE Matthew, shoemaker, Stoke road
Hallam Zoar, glass and china dealer, West st.
Hambridge Miss Harriet, dressm. St O'Sythe's la.
Hames John, rate collector, West street
Harris George, greengrocer, West street
Hart Rev. John Beaty (Indpt.) West street
Hartle Rev. James (Wesleyan), West street
Healey Mr Henry, Benefield road
Henry Mr David, West street
Henry Miss Elizabeth, school, West street
Hill James, horse-dealer and farmer, West st.
Hill Joseph, grocer (Ellick Hill), West st.
Hollis Frederick Charles, farmer, Ashton
Holloway Solomon Pierce, beerh. St O'Sythe's la.
Holloway Mr William Williams, Lime House
Hopkins Rev. Charles, M. A. vicar
Howe William, stonemason, North street
Howes Joseph, butcher and dairyman, West st.
Hunt Wm. gardn. & vict. White Hart, New st.

IRELAND George, butcher, North street
Ireland Miss Lucy, dressmaker, &c. North st.
Ireson John William, builder, West street
Ireson Peter, stonemason, West street

JELLISS Mrs Jane, Benefield terrace
Jinks Mrs Mary, West street
Jinks Miss Sophia, West street
Jinks Thomas, carrier, West street

KEEN Mrs Mary Ann, Ashton
King Alfred, printer, bookseller, &c. New st.
King Elmer, cooper, North street
King Elmer George, tailor, New street
King Francis, organist & prof. of music, West st.
King Wm. town-cr. & clothes-dlr. St O'Sythe's la.
Kirby Jude, vict. Green Man, West street
Knowles Henry, bill-poster, West street

LAURIE Thos. Natl. schoolm. Glapthorne rd.
Leaton Mr George, West street
Leayton Orlando, emigration agent, New st.
Lenton William, shoemaker, New street
Lenton Wm. jun. coal, coke, & seed mert. West st.
Little Hack Magnus, farmer, Elmington
Linton & Tomlinson, surgeons, North street
Linton Charles (L. & T.), North street
Lotan Miss Anne, West street
Lotan Henry, vict. Talbot Hotel, New street
Loveday John, saddler, &c. West street
Lyveden Lord, The Right Hon. Fitzpatrick
Henry Vernon, Laundimer House

MADDISON John, tailor and draper, Market pl.
Major Arthur Wm. gard. & seedm. Market pl.
Major Mrs Mary, stay & corsetm. West st.
Markham Chas. printer & bookseller, Market pl.
Marlow Robert, shoemaker, Market place
Marlow Thomas, j. shoemaker, West st.
Martin Mr Joseph Charles, West street
Mays Wm. Vicars, fellmonger, Barnwell road,
h. Thrapston
Millard Alfred, grocer, &c. West street
Mills Mr Edward, Elmington
Mose Thomas Edwards, station-master

NEAL William, vict. Black Horse, Benefield rd.
Noble John Fredk. supt. of police, West st.
Norburn Wm. & Hy. linen & wool. drap. Market pl.
Norburn Mrs Mary, Market place
Nutt Frederic David, manager Midland Banking Company, Market Place

PALMER Robert, whitesmith, West street
Parker Thomas, shoemaker, North street
Parrish John, tailor and grocer, New street
Peach Edward, ironmonger, Market place
Pears Alfred, bank cashier, Stoke lane
Pitts Shadrach, pianoforte tuner, North street
Plant Joseph, confectioner, &c. West street
Pooley Robert Bickerton, solicitor (Edmonds
& P.), h. West street
Prentice Samuel, builder, & beerh. North st.
Price Richard, saddler, &c. New street

RANDS Fred. Wm. paint. plumb. &c. West st.
Rawson Samuel, haberdasher, West street
Redhead (Mrs Charlotte) & Taylor (Miss Mary), glass, &c. dealers, Market place
Redhead Michael, vict. Hind, West street
Redhead Wm. grocer & confectioner, Market pl.
Reed William, vict. Wagon and Horses, Mill la.
Reedman Henry, shoemaker, St O'Sythe's la.
Reeves Mrs Jane, school, West street
Reynolds John, vict. Rose & Crown, Market pl.
Rhimes Mrs Eliz. vict. Railway Hotel, North st.
Richards William, brewer's clerk, North street
Richardson Robt. & Son (Wm.), solr. Market pl.
Rippiner Anthy. mason & furnt. dlr. North st.
Roe Miss Ann, mists. Endowed school, Ashton
Roe Robt. Garrett, master Brit. schol. West st.
Roper Hy. Edward, chem. & drug. Market pl.
Rose Fred. John, saddler, &c. North street
Rowlatt John, basketmaker, Market place
Russell Frederick, farmer, Ashton Wold
Russell Miss Martha, matron, Union workho.
Russell Mrs Mary, New street

SCARISBRICK Edw. pianoforte tuner, North st.
Sculthorpe Mr William, St O'Sythe's lane
Setchell John, butcher, West street
Shelton Thomas, corn merct. &c. North st.
Shepherd Thos. Fairbrother, manager, Stamford,
Spalding, and Boston Bank, New street
Sherard Edward Castel, solicitor, West st.
Shillibeer Mrs Mary, West street
Shrive Fred. ropemkr. & vict. Turk's Head, New st.
Siddons George, civil engineer & surveyor, contractor, and brick and tile maker, West st.
Silk George, dressmaker, &c. Market place
Simpson Joseph, dyer & scourer, North st.
Skelton —, farmer, Oundle Lodge
Smith John, corn miller, Glapthorne road
Smith & Co. brewers, maltsters, wine & spirit merchants, North street
Smith John Wm. J.P. (Smith & Co.) h. Rectory
Smith Mrs Mary, dressmaker, &c. West street
Smith William, farmer, Ashton
Stafford Miss Susan, milliner, &c. Market pl.
Stansbury Rev. John Adolphus, M.A. third master gram. school, Dryden House, North st.
Stansbury Rev. John Fortunatus, D.D. headmaster grammar school, Church yard
Stevens Miss Eliz. mrs. Natl. schol. Glapthorne rd.
Storey Elijah, ironmonger, iron & brass founder,
mach. and agricul. imple. mkr. Market pl.
Suann Mrs Sarah, Benefield terrace

TALBOT Mr Thomas, Stoke road
Tate Mr Andrew Thomas, Market place
Thompson James, shoemaker, West street
Thompson John Richard, lawyer's cl. West st.
Thurby Mark, shoemaker, West st.
Thurby William, chimney-sweeper, West st.
Todd Benj. Leete, hairdresser, &c. New st.
Todd Robert, linen & wool. draper, New st.
Tomlinson Daniel (Linton & T.), h. North st.
Turner Robt. chemist & druggist, Market pl.

WARRILOW Thos. Joseph, mastr. Union workh.
Watson Fredk. Love, shopkeepr, Benefield rd.
Webster Mrs Rebecca, New street
Weightman Rev. Hugh, M.A. mathematical master, grammar school
Wells Hy. gardner. & vict. Half Moon, North st.

Whittam Robt. corn mert. & bakr. Market pl.
Whittington William, beerho. St O'Sythe's la.
Whyman William, shopkeeper, Ashton
Wilson Chs. Colling, solr. Market pl. h. West st.
Wilson Thomas, farmer, Biggin Grange
Wise John Wm. painter, plumber, &c. North st.
Wood John, linen & woollen draper, North st.
Worrall William, clerk, North street
Wright Benjamin, ironmonger, West st.
Wright Henry, tailor & draper, New street
Wright Mr John, Benefield road
Wyles George, shoemaker, West street
Wyles William, shoemaker, Benefield road

YORKE Charles & Fredk. Wm. wine & spirit merchants, West street

TRADES AND PROFESSIONS.

Academies and Schools.

Marked * take boarders.

Blue Coat, North st. William
Broughton
British, West st. Robert G. Roe
D'Abbs Miss Harriet, Market pl.
*Carr Mrs Ann, West street
Free Grammar*, Church yard,
Rev. J. F. Stansbury, D.D., head master
Endowed, Ashton, Mrs Ann Roe
*Henry Miss Elizabeth, West st.
National, Glapthorne rd. Thos.
Laurie & Miss Eliza. Stevens
National St Ann's (infant),
Benefield road, Miss Ann
Rebecca Bunning
Reeves Mrs Jane, West street

Attorneys.

Edmonds & Pooley, North st. and Market place
Richardson R. & Son, Market pl.
Sherard Edw. Castel, West st.
Wilson Chas. Colling, Market pl.

Auctioneer.

Deacon Samuel, New street

Bakera.

Marked * are Confectioners.
Barnes Thomas, New street
Binder Mrs Christiana, West st.
Brown Alfred, North street
*Gray Charles, West street
*Plant Joseph, West street
*Redhead William, Market pl.
Whittam Robert, Market place

Banks.

Midland Banking Co., Market place (draw on London and County Bank, London)—F.
D. Nutt, manager
Stamford, Spalding, and Boston
Banking Co., New st. (draw on Barclay, Bevan, & Co., London)—Thos. F. Shepherd, manager
Savings Bank, New st., open on Mondays from 11 A.M.

till 1 P.M.—Thos. F. Shepherd, actuary and secretary

Basket Makers.

Dew Charles, New street
Rowlatt John, Market place

Blacksmiths.

Ashby Benjamin, West street
Blackwell Wm. St O'Sythe's ln.
Cooper Robert, Church street

Booksellers & Printers.

King Alfred, New street
Markham Charles, Market pl.

Boot and Shoemakers.

Andrews Robert, West street
Barnes James, Market place
Brown Joseph, St O'Sythe's la.
Burbidge John, West street
Collier Wm. St O'Sythe's lane
Dakin Daniel, East backway
Davis Edward, dealer, North st.
Hale Matthew, Stoke road
Lenton William, New street
Marlow Robert, Market place
Parker Thomas, North street
Reedman Henry, St O'Sythe's la.
Thompson James, West street
Thurby Mark, West street
Wyles George, West street
Wyles William, Benefield road

Brewers.

Barnes Thomas, New street
Durrans Paul, Anchor Brewery
Smith & Co. North street

Brick & Tile Manufactr.

Siddons George, West street

Builders, Cabintmkrs. &c.

Berridge Robert, North street
Binder Millin, West street
Dolby John Meadows, New st.
Gann James, New street
Gann John, Market place
Gann Thomas, West street

Ireson John Wm. West street
Prentice Samuel, North street

Butchers.

Ball Thomas, Market place
Chapman John, West street
Cliffe Thomas, New street
Howes Joseph, West street
Ireland George, North street
Letchell John, West street

Chemists and Druggists.

Roper Henry Edwd. Market pl.
Turner Robert, Market place

Coal Merchants.

Brightly John, North street
Lenton William, jun. West st.
Shelton Thomas, North street
Siddons George, West street

Corn Merchants.

Binder Mrs Christiana, West st.
Brightly John, North street
Shelton Thomas, North street
Whittam Robert, Market place

Corn Miller.

Smith John, Glapthorne road

Fancy Repositories.

Brundell Miss Eliza, North st.
Dolby Mrs Annie, New street
Todd Benj. Leete, New street

Farmers.

Bunning John, New street
Chew William, Ashton
Drage Joseph, Wakerley Lodge
Durrans Paul, The Elms
Edmunds Geo. Maxwell, Berry-stead
Hill James, West street
Hollis Fred. Charles, Ashton
Little Hack Magnus, Elmington
Lotan Henry, New street
Russell Frederick, Ashton Wold
Skelton —, Oundle Lodge,
Smith William, Ashton
Wilson Thomas, Biggin Grange

Fire and Life Offices.

Accidental, J. R. Thompson, West street
British Empire Mutual, Wm. Lenton, New street
British Imperial, O. Leayton, New street
County (fire) & Provident (life), Charles Yorke, West st.
Imperial, H.E. Roper, Market pl.
Liverpool and London and Globe, George Siddons, West st.; J. R. Thompson, West st.; C. Markham, Market pl.
Midland Counties, William Dolby, West street
Northern (fire), John Creaser, Market place
Norwich Union, Robt. Richardson, Market place
Ocean and General Travellers (Accidental), O. Leayton, New street
Prudential, O. Leayton, New st.
Queen, S. Pitts, North street
Railway Passengers, Joseph Dolby, New street
Royal, Robt. Turner, Market pl.
Royal Exchange, William Lenton, jun. West street
Royal Farmers, J. Dolby, New st.
Scottish Equitable, Frederick Warter, Market place
Scottish Union, A. King, New st.
Standard (life), T. Talbot, Stoke road
Sun, Wm. Atkins, North st.

Gardeners.

Clarke Thos. St O'Sythe's lane
 Cunnington Mrs H. Market pl.
 Green William, New street
 Hunt William, New street
 Major Arthur Wm. (and seedsman and florist), Market pl.
 Wells Henry, North street

Glass and China Dealers.

Hallam Zoar, West street
 Redhead & Taylor, Market pl.

Grocers, Tea Dealers, &c.

(*Marked * are Provision Dealers.*)
 Binder, Mrs Christiana, West st.
 Blyth Walter, West street
 *Bullivant John Wm. (and tallow-chandler), Market place
 *Co-operative Stores, West st.; Timon Stuart, manager
 *Chew John, Market place
 *Ellick & Hill, West street
 Millard Alfred, West street
 Parrish John, New street
 Redhead William, Market pl.

Hairdressers.

Britchfield Jno. St O'Sythe's la.
 Todd Benj. Leete, New street

Hotels, Inns, and Taverns.

(*Marked * are Posting-Houses.*)
Black Horse, Wm. Neal, Benefield road
Cross Keys, J.V. Eayrs, West st.
Crown, Mrs Harriet Cunnington, Market place
Green Man, Jude Kirby, West st.
Half Moon, Hy. Wells, North st.
Hind, Michael Redhead, West st.
Nag's Head, T. Gann, West st.
Railway Hotel, Mrs E. Rhimes, North street
Red Lion (and posting-house), John Bunning, New street
Rose and Crown, John Reynolds, Market place
Ship, Edward Afford, West st.
Talbot Commercial and Posting-House, Henry Lotan, New st.
Three Horse Shoes, J. Drage, Ashton
Turk's Head, Frederick Shrive (and ropemaker), New street
Wagon and Horses, Wm. Reed, Mill lane
White Lion, H. Garner, North st.
White Hart, Wm. Hunt, New st.

Beerhouses.

Afford Francis, West street
 Allen George, West street
 Brown Joseph, St O'Sythe's la.
 Brown Mrs Mary, Benefield rd.
 Burbidge John, West street
 Fox Thomas, Glapthorne road
 Holloway Solomon Pierce, St O'Sythe's lane
 Prentice Samuel, North street
 Whittington Wm. St O'Sythe's la

Ironmongers.

Peach Edward, Market place
 Storey Elijah, Market place
 Wright Benjamin, West street

Land Surveyors.

Dolby Joseph, New street
 Siddons George (civil engineer), West street

Linen and Woollen Drapers.

Beal Josiah, Market place
 Norburn Wm. & Hy. Market pl.
 Todd Robert, New street
 Wood John, North street

Linseed Cake, Seed, &c., Merchants.

Brightly John, North street
 Lenton William, jun. West st.
 Shelton Thomas, New street
 Siddons George, West street

Maltsters.

Barnes Thomas, New street
 Durrans Paul, Anchor Brewery
 Smith & Co. North street

Milliners & Dressmakers.

Brown Mrs Elizabeth, West st.
 Brundell Mrs Matilda, North st.
 Francis Mrs Harriet, New st.
 Gentry Miss Sus. St O'Sythe's la.
 Hambridge Miss H. St O'Sythe's lane
 Ireland Miss Lucy, North st.
 Silk George, Market place
 Smith Mrs Mary, West st.
 Stafford Miss Susan, Market pl.

Painters, Plumbers, and Glaziers.

Bunning Geo. Fred. West st.
 Coaten William, Market place
 Rands Fred. Wm. West st.
 Wise John William, North st.

Saddlers and Harness-makers.

Loveday John, West street
 Price Richard, New street
 Rose Fred. John, North street

Shopkeepers.

Adams Mrs Rachel, New st.
 Allan Mrs Charlotte, North st.
 Annes William, West street
 Brown Alfred, North street
 Carter James, Benefield road
 Dew Charles, New street
 Gray William, North street
 Watson Fred. L. Benefield rd.
 Whyman William, Ashton

Stonemasons.

Afford Francis, West street
 Afford Geo. jun. Benefield rd.
 Howe William, North street
 Ireson John Wm. West street
 Ireson Peter, West street
 Rippiner Anthony, North st.

Surgeons.

Calcott Wallace B. West st.
 Linton & Tomlinson, North st.

Tailors.

(*Marked * are Drapers.*)

*Bloom Thomas, Market place
 *Coulson William, North st.
 *Creaser John, Market place
 *Green John, West street
 King Elmer George, New st.
 *Maddison John, Market place
 Parrish John, New street
 *Wright Henry, New street

Tobaccoonists.

Britchfield John, St O'Sythe's la.
 Todd Benjamin L. New street

Upholsterers and Paper-hangers.

Gann James, New street
 Gann John, Market place
 Gann Thomas, West street
 Prentice Samuel, North street

Watchmakers.

Beal Thomas, Market place
Clarke Stafford, New street

Wheelwrights.

Berridge Robert, North street
Binder Millin, West street

Whitesmiths and Bellhangers.

Ashby Benjamin (and machinist), West Street
Peach Edward, Market place
Storey Elijah, Market place
Wright Benjamin, West street

Wine & Spirit Merchants.

Ellick & Hill, West street
Smith & Co. North street
Yorke Charles & Fred. William, West street

Public Officers and Establishments.

Clerk to Commissioners of Income and Land Tax—George M. Edmonds; Wm. Atkins, assistant clerk

Clerk to the Magistrates and to the Trustees of the Turnpike Roads—E. C. Sherard

Clerk to Oundle Union, and Superintendent Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages—Robert Richardson, Market place

Inspector of Weights and Measures—J. T. Evans

Relieving Officer—James Gann, jun. West st.

Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages for the Oundle District—James Gann, jun. West street

Parish Clerk—William Atkins, North street

Burial Board—North street, William Broughton, registrar; W. C. Sherard, clerk.

County Court Office, West st.—Edmond Beales, Esq. judge; E. C. Sherard, registrar; John Cox, high-bailiff; James Bell, under-bailiff

Excise Office, Talbot Hotel, New street

Gas Works, North st.—Alfred King, secretary

Local Board Office—J. R. Thompson, collector,

West st.; John Haimes, rate collector, West st.; Wm. Dolby, urban sanitary inspector,

West st.; John Lotan, rural sanitary inspect.

Police Station—West street—John Frederick

Noble, superintendent; J. T. Evans, inspect.

Stamp Office, New st.—B. Todd, sub-distribr.
Union Workhouse—T. J. Warrilow, master; and Miss Martha Russell, matron

Carriers.

Railway Station (L. & N. W.)—Thos. Edward Mose, sta. mas.; Henry Lotan, parcel agent

Aldwinkle—Lewis Davidson, Crown, Thursday

Brigstock—Wm. Woodhams, Crown, Thursday

Great Gidding—Matthew Southwell, Mrs Garrett, White Hart, and Geo. Garrett, White

Lion, Thursday

King's Cliffe—Thos. Jinks's cart, Monday and

Friday at 8 A.M.

Luddington—Edwin Yeomans, Crown, Thurs.

Lutton—David Head, White Lion, Mon. & Th.

Nassington—William Walter, Crown, Thurs.

Pilton—Noah Dicks, Crown, Thursday

Rannde—J. Nunley, Crown, Thursday.

Thrapston—George Beeby, Crown, Thursday

Thurning—Joseph Short, White Hart, Thurs.

Tichmarsh—Richard Weston, Crown, Thurs.

Wadenhoe—Lewis Davidson, Crown, Thurs.

Warmington—Wm. Noble & Wm. Todd, Crown,

Thursday

Weldon—Mrs Jinks, Crown, Tues. Th. and Sat.

and Benjamin Spencer, Crown, Thurs.

Winwick—James Farrington, Crown, Thurs.

Woodford—George Beeby, Crown, Thursday

POLEBROOK PARISH.

This parish includes the hamlet of Armston, and is bounded on the east by Lutton, on the south by Barnwell, on the west by Oundle, and on the north by Warmington. It contains with the hamlet 2716 acres. Its population in 1801 was 285; in 1831, 417; in 1841, 453; in 1851, 486; in 1861, 485; in 1871, 461 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3256, and the gross estimated rental £3593. The soil is various, nearly the whole is arable, and the principal proprietors are the Duke of Buccleuch (lord of the manor), Baron Rothschild, Right Hon. George Ward Hunt, M.P., and Lady Mary Arnold.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, Pochebroe contained 4 hides of land, which Eustachius held of the abbey of Burgh. Alured held 1½ hide here of Eustachius at the same time. In the reign of Henry II. these estates were in the hands of several persons, and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), the abbots of Peterborough and Thorney, and Robert Porthors, John de Glendon, and Reginald le Moigne, were lords of Polebrook, and its members. In the reigns of Henry VI. and VII., this manor was in the possession of the family of Lovell, and in the following reign it came into the hands of Sir Edward Montague, from whom it descended lineally to the Duke of Buccleuch, the present proprietor.

The Village of Polebrook stands on low ground, about 2½ miles E.S.E. from Oundle.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, comprises a nave, side aisles, transepts, north and south porches, and a square tower containing five bells, and surmounted by a spire. The tower and spire, which belong to the Lancet period, having been damaged by lightning, were rebuilt in 1844-5. The north side of this ancient edifice, this "gem of the valley," as Mr Sharp designates it, is all that now remains of the Transitional church. Its circular arches are very beautiful, and the north transept contains a splendid arcade, remarkable for richness of moulding and beauty of arrangement. There is a fine double piscina with the dog-tooth peculiarly arranged in arches, and there is a handsome corbel shaft which carries the arch between the north aisle and the transept. The foliage of the shaft capitals of the doorway is especially noteworthy, and there is a very beautiful triplet in the east end. The benefice is a rectory in the deanery of Oundle, in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough, and incumbency of the Rev. Henry V. Broughton, M.A. The living was valued in the king's books at £19, 3s. 6½d., and is now worth about £300 a year. An allotment of about 300 acres was awarded to the rector in lieu of tithes at the enclosure in 1790; and there are about 30 acres of glebe annexed to it.

The Rectory House, a commodious residence, occupies a pleasant situation adjoining the churchyard.

The Wesleyans have a chapel in the village; it is a small brick building, erected in 1863 by subscription.

Charity.—Rev. Nicholas Latham, in 1611, left to four persons of this parish 10s. per annum each. Rev. Charles Isham, who died in 1862, left £100 in 3 per cent. consols, the interest to be divided annually at Christmas, between six poor widows of the parish.

The School is supported by voluntary contributions; and there is a clothing club, supported by voluntary contributions.

ARMSTON is a hamlet in this parish, containing four houses, and in 1841, 26 inhabitants. The census of 1871 gives the population with the parish. Kings-thorpe grounds belong to this liberty, and it is supposed that a considerable village stood there formerly. The records of an ancient chapel and hospital at Kingsthorpe are still extant. The Duke of Buccleuch is also the proprietor of this estate.

Letters are received here through the Oundle Post-office at 7 A.M., and the Letter-box is cleared at 6 P.M.

Abbott Samuel, cottager
Baker John, shoemaker
Beasley William, baker
Broughton Rev. Henry Vivian,
M.A. rector
Broughton Rev. H. E. curate
Clarke James, carpenter
Deacon Samuel, estate agent, auctioneer & appraiser, *Pole-
brooke Hall*
Dean Geo. vict. King's Arms
Desbrow John, tailor
Dunn Miss Martha, schoolmrs.

Hatfield Ed. Barker, Esq.
Hunt Wm. vict. Duke's Head
King Reuben, parish clerk
Kyle Jas. gamekpr. Armston
Leigh Wm. stonemason
Mills George, shoemaker
Musson John, butcher
Musson Wm. shopkeeper
Negus Thos. grocer & butcher
Richard Henry, cottager
Slokes Geo. blacksmith
Tebbutt Charles, stonemason
Waters Jno. tailor & shopkpr.

Wright Mrs Elizabeth

Farmers and Graders.

Cattermole James, Lodge
Cattermole William (yeoman)
Chew James, Armston
Deacon Samuel, Hall
Goodfellow William, Lodge
Hilliam William
Hunt Henry
Negus John
Pashler Thomas, Lodge
Pentilow J. Kingsthorpe Lodge

THURNING (PART OF) PARISH.

Thurning, or Thirning, is a parish partly in this and partly in the hundred of Leightonstone, Huntingdonshire. The whole parish contains 1001 acres. Its population in 1801 was 111; in 1831, 140; in 1841, 124; in 1851, 211; in 1861, 214; in 1871, 204 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1276, and the gross estimated rental £1541. Barnwell and Hemington form its boundaries on the north, Hemington on the west, Luddington on the east, and Clapton on the south. The soil is chiefly a cold clay, and the principal proprietors are Mr B. Bletsoe and Messrs John and James Fortescue.

Manor.—At the general survey there were 1½ hide of land here pertaining to the manor of Oundle, in the hands of the abbot of Burgh. In the reign of Henry II., Roger Marmin was in possession of this estate, and it was afterwards held for several generations of the abbot of Burgh by the family of Knyvet. It subsequently became divided and subdivided, and passed through innumerable hands.

The Village of Thurning is situated about 5½ miles S.E. from Oundle.

The Church, dedicated to St James, is a neat edifice in the Early English style, and consists of nave, side aisles, chancel, square tower containing two bells, and surmounted by a small spire; it was thoroughly restored in 1851. The living is a discharged rectory, rated in the king's books at £7, and now worth about £335 per annum, in the diocese of Ely. It is in the gift of Emanuel College, Cambridge, and incumbency of the Rev. Wm. Whall, M.A. The tithes have been commuted for a rent-charge of £180, and there are 60 acres of glebe land. The Rectory House, a good residence, is situated near the church.

Here is a school, on the National system, erected in 1843, and supported by voluntary contribution.

Letters received here through the Oundle Post Office at 8 A.M., and the Box is cleared at 4.50 P.M.

Coles James Allen, shopkeeper
Dakin Miss Elisabeth Mary,
schoolmistress
Gorham Mrs Mary, cottager
Hunt Thos. blacksmith & vict.
Waggon and Horses

Leigh Wm. farmer and vict.
Wheat Sheaf
Reynolds John, cottager
Short Jph. beer rtr. & shoemkr.
Whall Rev. Wm. M.A. rector

Farmers and Grangers.

Bletsae Borrett (yeoman) ho.
Barnwell All Saints
Fortescue John (yeoman)
Goodfellow John
Strickson William

WARMINGTON PARISH

Is partly in a detached portion of this and partly in Willybrook Hundred, and is bounded on the east by the river Nene, which separates it from Huntingdonshire, on the north by Elton, on the west by Cotterstock and Tansor, and on the south by Oundle and Lutton. It contains 3731 acres, of the rateable value of £5662; the gross estimated rental of the parish is £6623; and its population in 1801 was 450; in 1831, 617; in 1841, 640; in 1851, 671; in 1861, 724; and in 1871, 695 souls. The soil varies: some is of a clayey nature, and some a rich loam. The land near the village is of a gravelly nature, producing all kinds of corn, and the principal landowners are the Earl of Carysfort (the lord of the manor), Mr Henry Mossop, exrs. of the late Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam, Rev. F. Hopkins, J. A. Fludgyer, Esq., and Mr Christopher Turnell.

Manor.—Wermintone contained 7½ hides of land at the time of the Conqueror's survey; which, with a mill, of the annual value of 40s., 325 eels, 40a. of meadow, and 1a. of wood, was then valued at £11. It was held by the abbey of Peterborough. In the reign of Henry I. there were eight hides here, and with the abbey they continued till its suppression in the reign of Henry VIII. By the survey then taken, the profits of this manor were valued at £49, 6s. 5d.; those of the watermill £6, 8s. 4d.; and the profits of the court 4s. Queen Catherine, first wife of Henry VIII., was the next possessor, and after her decease it passed to the possession of Sir Robert Kirkham, Kt. It subsequently passed through several intermediate possessors to its present noble owner. A religious house and chapel are supposed to have stood here formerly.

The Village of Warmington, which is large and straggling, is about 3 miles N.E. from Oundle, on the road from that town to Peterborough.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a fine specimen of the Early English character, and consists of a nave, north and south porches, side aisles, and chancel, tower capped by a spire, and containing five bells. The ground story on each side of the church is of the Transitional period; the tower and spire are fine examples of the Lancet period, as is also the west doorway, which is adorned with a profusion of tooth and flower ornaments; and the whole of the belfry windows and the three tiers of spire lights are also filled with tooth ornaments. There are good illustrations of the Lancet period—the clerestory windows, with cusp foliation, coming in approaching the Geometrical. The wooden vaulted roof of the Early English (or Lancet) period is somewhat remarkable. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £13, 6s. 8d., and now worth about £140 per annum. The Earl of Westmoreland is the patron, the Rev. Raper James Hoare, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land in 1744, except those of Eaglethorpe, which amount to about £25 per annum. A portion of Elton Park lies in this parish.

The Ladies Fanny and Charlotte Proby built and endowed three almshouses here in 1860, which are occupied by three aged widows, who receive 10s a week each.

There is a large School in the village, it is in the Elizabethan style; it was erected in 1873, with a class-room and master's house attached, at a cost of about £1000, on land given by the Earl of Carysfort.

The Methodist Chapel, a plain building, is situated in the village.

EAGLETHORPE, or EGILTHORP, is a depopulated hamlet in this parish. In this hamlet formerly stood the ancient residence of the Sapcot family, which was rebuilt by Sir Thomas Proby; and here was also a very beautiful chapel, built by Lady Elizabeth Dinham, widow of the Baron Fitzwarren, in 1443.

Eaglethorpe House, the residence of John Laurance, Esq., is a good building. It contains an ancient door and door-case, brought from Fotheringhay, on which is carved the horse-fetterlock and falcon, the favourite device of the family of York.

Charities.—The school land, consisting of two acres, lets for about £6 per annum, and the poor's money, £100, is in the 3½ per cent. consols. The interest is distributed every two years—1s. to each poor person, and 1s. 6d. to each poor widow.

Post-Office.—John Dempsey, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive at 7.35 A.M., and are despatched to Oundle at 5.30 P.M.

Baxter Mr George
Beal Miss Elizabeth, cottager
Brudenell Job, wheelw. & carptr.
Brudenell John, jobber
Brudenell Valentine, cottager
Bullivant Thomas, cottager
Burdett Avrey, shoemaker
Burdett Mrs Eliza, beerhouse
Carley John, beerhouse
Carter Richard, carpenter, wheelwright, and builder
Craythorn George, baker
Craythorn John, butcher and
vict. Red Lion
Dempsey Jno. grocer, drapr. P.O.
Drinkwater William, shoemkr.
Elson Ezra, land surveyor
Elson Shadrach and Jas. Howell,
butchers
Elson William, shoemaker
Funnell Richard, farm bailiff

Hayes Samuel, miller, War-
mington Mill
Hoare Rev. Raper Jas. M.A. vicar
Holdich Mrs Ann, Rectory House
Howell James, blacksmith
Humberstone Robert, vict.
Hautboy and Fiddle
Ireson Fras. baker and shopkpr.
Laurance John, Esq. land agent,
Eaglethorpe House
Leet Thomas, jobber
Lettice Joseph, shopkeeper
Lilley Marshall, carpenter
Mossop Mr Henry, yeoman
Noble William, coal-dealer
Peplor Samuel, stonemason
Pitts Mr William
Pitts William, pianoforte tuner
Rhymes Frank, shoemaker
Rhymes John, shoemaker

Shuker Mrs Elizabeth
Southwell Mr William
Spaven Francis, schoolmaster
Spendlove William, shoemaker
Todd James, beerhouse
Whitney Mrs Sarah

Farmers and Grangers.
Blott John Thos. (and maltster)
Blott Thomas, Papley Lodge
Davy Frederick, Lodge
Davy Thomas
Godfrey Robert, Warmington
Grange
Fowler John, Papley Lodge
Heyes James, Rectory Farm
Nottingham William
Stokes Thomas
Underwood John Agar Walmsley, Manor House

Carriers.—William Noble and William Todd to Oundle, Thursday; Stamford, Friday; and Peterborough, Saturday; and James Todd to Peterborough, Saturday.

WINWICK (PART OF) PARISH.

Winwick is partly in this hundred, but chiefly in that of Leightonstone, Huntingdonshire. It is bounded on the west by Clapton, on the east by Steeple Gidding in Hunts, on the north by Luddington and Thurning, and on the south by Old Weston. The area of the whole parish is 1672 acres; the gross estimated rental is £2185, and the rateable value £1829. The population in 1801 was 110; in 1831, 326; in 1841, 393; in 1851, 431; in 1861, 380; and in 1871, 339 souls. The soil is of a cold ungenial nature, and nearly the whole is arable. The principal proprietors are the Duke of Buccleuch, Anthony Martin, Esq., and Mr Isaac Knighton. The last-named gentleman having purchased the manor farm some years since, claims the manorial rights of the lordship.

Manor.—Winwick lordship formed part of the possessions of the Abbey of Burgh at an early period, it being of the soke of Oundle. Eustachius held half a hide in this parish of the abbot at the time of the general survey; and in the reign of Henry II. James de Wynewick held half a knight's fee here of the Honor of Burgh. It passed afterwards to the possession of the family of Cardom, and in the reign of Henry II. Sir John Knyvet died seized of it, and it descended to his posterity. After the reign of Henry VI. no distinct mention is made of Winwick manor.

The Village of Winwick is seven and a half miles S.E. from Oundle, and twelve N.W. from Huntingdon.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands in Huntingdonshire, and consists of nave, aisles, chancel, chantry, south porch, and square tower surmounted by a spire containing five bells. It was restored in 1864 chiefly at the expense of the Duke of Buccleuch, when the chancel was rebuilt, and the church fitted up with open sittings, and floored with Minton's tiles, a new pulpit, reading desk, and altar rails erected, and a handsome lectern of carved oak in the form of an eagle placed in front of the chancel. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the diocese of Ely, rated in the king's books at £7, 16s. 10d., and now valued at £70. The Duke of Buccleuch is patron and lay rector, and the Rev. Robert Rowden, M.A., is the present incumbent.

The Vicarage, a handsome Elizabethan building close to the church, was erected by the Duke of Buccleuch. The School, formerly used as a dissenting chapel, is principally supported by his Grace. The Congregational Chapel is a brick building erected in 1864. The Rev. James B. French is the minister. The Charities of the parish amount to £31 per annum, which is distributed to the poor at Christmas.

Post-Office.—Letters arrive from Oundle.

Ashbridge Jas. shopkeeper and vict. Three Horse Shoes	French Rev. Jas. B. (Congregl.)	Rowden Rev. Robt. M.A. Vicar
Bailey George, blacksmith	Jellis Jas. coal mercht. & brick & tile manufr. Manor House	Scarsbrook Mrs My. schoolmrs.
Brown John, miller and baker	Marriott Emanuel, parish clerk	Farmers and Graziers.
Briggs Rt. carpt. & mach. mkr.	Musson Robt. bakr. and farmer	Butterworth John
Chester John, wheelwright	Norwood Thos. carpenter	Fortescue John
Copeland Mrs Susannah, vict.	Richards William, shopkeeper	Gifford William
White Hart	Rose Benjamin, shopkeeper	Hosford John
Farrington James, shopkeeper		Jellis James, Manor House

Carrier.—James Farrington to Oundle, Thursday, and Huntingdon, Saturday.

NAVISFORD HUNDRED.

THE boundaries of Navisford Hundred are formed by a part of Huntingdonshire, and the Hundred of Polebrook on the east, by Higham Ferrars Hundred on the south, and by Huxloe and Polebrook on the west and north. In shape it forms the figure 8, and its area is 13,090 statute acres. Navisford, or Narresford, as it was formerly called, was one of the eight hundreds which the Abbot of Peterborough immemorially possessed. After the dissolution, Henry VIII. granted it for life to Queen Catherine, his first wife; and it afterwards descended with the crown to James I., who granted it, together with the hundreds of Huxloe and Polebrook, to John Eldred and William Whitmore, Esqrs. From these gentlemen it passed by purchase in the eleventh of the same reign (1613), to Sir Edward Montagu, and from him it descended lineally to the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, the present proprietor. Navisford Hundred contains 7 parishes, including the market town of Thrapston, of which the following is an enumeration, showing their area as collected from the ratebooks, the number of houses and population in 1871, together with the rateable value and gross estimated rental of each place :—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Clapton.....	1,920	39	3	...	108	103	211	£ 2,092	£ 2,472
Liveden (part of).....
Pilton.....	1,355	30	1	...	66	83	149	1,724	2,028
Stoke Doyle.....	1,400	29	67	75	142	2,314	2,701
Thorpe Achurch.....	1,494	42	1	...	82	96	178	2,113	2,244
Thrapston.....	1,055	233	18	4	595	638	1,233	5,225	6,353
Titchmarsh.....	3,836	207	16	...	447	436	883	5,994	7,023
Wadenhoe.....	1,100	59	117	136	253	1,505	1,787
	12,160	639	39	4	1482	1567	3,049	20,967	24,668

CHARITIES OF NAVISFORD HUNDRED, as abstracted from the Parliamentary Reports. See also the histories of the parishes, &c.

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purposes applied.	Annual value.
1658.	Rev. Wm. Breton (21 acres).....	Clapton parish, poor.....	£16 5 0
1515.	Thomas Thurlby (15 acres).....	Pilton parish, poor and church..	19 0 0
"	Lord Lilford.....	Ditto, ditto.....	2 0 0
1711.	Richard Ragsdale (rent).....	Ditto, poor.....	0 10 0
1786.	Hewitt's Gift.....	Stoke Doyle parish, poor.....	0 13 0
1853.	George Capron (£200).....	Ditto, poor.....	6 0 0
"	Church Land (12a. 2r. 8p.).....	Thorpe Achurch parish.....	18 0 0
1668.	Sir William Peak £(10).....	Ditto, poor.....	0 10 0
"	Rev. — Basmenel (£20).....	Ditto, ditto.....	1 0 0
1711.	Richard Ragsdale (rent).....	Ditto, ditto.....	1 0 0
1685.	Mary Allen.....	Thrapston parish, ditto.....	1 0
1795.	Mary Ekins (£200).....	Ditto school.....	10 0 0
"	Donor Unknown (£15).....	Ditto, ditto.....
1697.	Edward Pickering (£300).....	Titchmarsh parish, poor.....	39 0 0
"	Church Land (5 acres).....	Ditto.....	12 0 0
1864.	Thomas Knight (£2000).....	Ditto, poor and almshouses.....	70 0 0
1756.	Eliz. Pickering & Fras. Bird (249a. 1r. 39p.), Titchmarsh parish, } hospital for 8 poor women..... }		about 300 0 0
1807.	Frances Pickering (£1500) being the surplus of her estate, do., do. }
"	Fras. Hilditch (£39, 9s. 8d. 3 per cent. consols), Wadenhoe parish, poor		1 4 0 £498 2 0

CLAPTON PARISH.

Clapton, or from its situation Clopton-on-the-Wold, and in Domesday Book, Clotone, is bounded by the county of Huntingdon on the east and south, by the River Nene on the north, and by Thorpe Achurch and Titchmarsh on the west. It contains 1920 acres; its population in 1801 was 88; in 1831, 99; in 1841, 119; in 1851, 136; in 1861, 160; in 1871, 211 souls. The gross estimated rental of the parish is £2471, 12s. 6d., and the rateable value £2092, 7s. 6d. The soil is principally a strong clay, and Wm. Peere Williams Freeman, Esq., of Pylewell Park, Lymington, Hants, is lord of the manor and sole owner.

Manor.—Eustachius Vice-comes de Huntingdon held 3 hides and the third part of half a hide of land here, of the abbey of Burgh (Peterborough), at the time of the Domesday survey. It was valued in the Confessor's time at 10s., but now rated at 40s. Elmar held half a hide here of the abbey at the same time, which was valued at 10s. In the reign of Henry II., Walter de Grauntkott held 1 hide and 1 virgate here of the Crown, and 3½ hides of the fee of the burgh, and Aseylin held half a hide. William de Clopton soon after possessed the whole lordship, and sold it in parcels to several possessors. It subsequently became the property of the family of Hotot, from which it passed by marriage to the Dudleys, about the year 1390, and with them it continued for several generations. Sir William Dudley, of Clapton, was created a baronet 1st of August 1660, but the title is now extinct.

The Manor House, now called Clapton Hall, at present occupied by Mr Edwin Winder, consists of one wing of the former splendid manorial residence of the Dudleys. On the carriage road to the house is a fine ancient arched gateway.

The Village of Clapton consists of the hall, rectory house, one farmhouse, and a few cottages, situate about 5 miles E. by N. of Thrapston.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, about $\frac{1}{4}$ of a mile north-east of the village, is in the Early English style, and consists of nave, chancel, north aisle, south porch, and square saddle-back tower containing one bell, and was built at the expense of the present patron and the rector in 1864, at a cost of £2500. The living, which is a rectory in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £17, 3s. 9d., and now worth £450 per annum, is in the gift of William Peere Williams Freeman, Esq., and the Rev. Edward Cole Shedden, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1839. The Rectory House is pleasantly situated near the church, and was much improved by the present rector. A school, with teacher's residence attached, was erected here in 1864 at the expense of the patron and the rector.

Charity.—Rev. William Breton, in 1658, left 21 acres of land, the rent of which, £16, 5s. per annum, is distributed to the poor.

Letters arrive from Thrapston about 10 A.M.

Hunt Mrs Eunice, beerhouse	Staley Mrs Mary Ann, schlmrs.	Hern Wm. Long Thong Farm
Mundin Mrs Ann, shopkeeper		Winder David Edwin, The Hall
Shedden Rev. Edward Cole,	Farmers and Graziers.	Wood Rowland, Home Farm
M.A. rector	Griffin Wm. Crow's Nest Farm

LIVEDEN PARISH.

Liveden or Lyveden is a lordship consisting of an unfinished building, now in ruins, two farms, and four cottages; the latter, with the remains of the ancient manor house, are in Aldwinkle St Peter parish, in the Hundred of Huxloe, and the land is in the several parishes of Pilton in Navisford Hundred, Oundle in Polebrook Hundred, and Brigstock in the Hundred of Corby. It is divided into Great and Little Liveden, and Potter's Liveden. It is not known in which of these parishes the lordship of Liveden was included at the Domesday survey. In the reign of Henry III., Nicholas de Bassingburne died seized of one knight's fee, situate in Benefield, Adington, and Liveden, which he held here of the abbot of Burgh. Sir John Holt was seized of certain possessions here, in the reign of Richard II., and Nicholas de Tye levied a fine of the manor in fee simple, in the first of Henry IV. (1399). Sir Thomas Tresham, of Rushton, son and heir of Sir William Tresham, Knt., of Sywell, was the next possessor, and from him it passed to his posterity. One of this family, Thomas Tresham, Esq., received the honour of knighthood from Queen Elizabeth, at Kenilworth Castle (see Rushton). "He had an elegant taste in architecture," writes Bridges; "in 1577, he built the market house at Rothwell, and probably began the new manor-house here, in the same kind of style, without completing it." And Fuller observes, that it is "hard to say, whether greater his delight or skill in buildings, though more forward in beginning, than fortunate in finishing his fabrics. He was also a zealous Papist, which afterwards cost him a long confinement in Wisbich Castle. Francis Tresham, in the third of James I., succeeded Sir Thomas, his father; but engaging two years afterwards in the Gunpowder Plot, he was apprehended, imprisoned, and died in the Tower of London." Liveden, now the property of the Rt. Hon. Lord Lyveden, is situated about 4 miles S.W. of Oundle. Here is a very beautiful ruin, called the "New Building," to distinguish it from the old building or manor-house, about a mile westward. It is an unfinished structure, in the form of a cross, consisting of three stories, of which the lower is half under-ground. "This noble edifice," says Mr Bell, in his "Ruins of Liveden," "was erected by Sir Thomas Tresham, of Rushton, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and is a splendid monument of his taste, and one of the finest specimens of the Decorated style of architecture of that age. It is built of freestone of extraordinary close texture, and the masonry is so admirably executed, as to seem but the work of yesterday—the edges of the cornices, and different sculptures, still retaining all their sharpness, freshness, and beauty, and the cement is as strong and hard as the stones themselves." And he adds, "We find the Treshams six times among the list of sheriffs, and five scions of the house among the members for the county." Sir Thomas had four sons and six daughters; two of the latter married noblemen, Lords Stourton and Mounteagle, whose names are connected with the Gunpowder Plot; and a third married Lord Brudenell. It is evident from the sculptured emblems without, and the decorated niches in the interior, that this splendid pile was intended for religious purposes, if not for monastic seclusion. Major Butler, an officer under Cromwell, when stationed at Oundle, where his paternal property lay, with a party of parliamentary forces attempted the entire demolition of the pile; but failing in his purpose, he caused the timber to be sawed out of the walls, and carried to Oundle, where he built with it the house now occupied by J. W. Smith, Esq.

Letters are received here through the Thrapston Post-Office.

PILTON PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Lilford, from which it is separated by the river Nene, on the south by Wadenhoe, on the west by Liveden, by Benefield on the north and west, and by Stoke Doyle and Oundle on the north-east. It contains 1355 acres; the rateable value of the parish is £1724, and the gross estimated rental £2028. Its population in 1801 was 90; in 1831, 131; in 1841, 133; in 1851, 123; in 1861, 144; and in 1871, 149 souls. The principal proprietors are Lord Lilford (the lord of the manor), Lord Lyveden, and the Right Hon. George Ward Hunt, M.P. From a close in this parish, called "Shortfield," on the road to Liveden, 21 churches may be seen on a clear day.

Manor.—The abbot of Burgh to whom Roger was under-tenant, held 2½ hides of land here, at the time of the general survey. There were 8 acres of meadow and a wood, and the whole was valued at 40s. In the fifth of Edward I. (1276), Ralph de Camois died seized of this manor, and with his descendants it continued for several generations. In the thirtieth of Henry VIII. (1538), John Tresham died seized of it, and from his descendants, it passed by purchase, in 1715, to Sir Thomas Powys, Knt. Lord Lilford, the lineal descendant of that family, is the present proprietor.

The old Manor House, now occupied by the rector, formerly belonged to the Treshams, and in which the last of that ancient family lived and died, stands on an eminence near the church, overlooking the beautiful vale of the Nene. The house has been altered and much improved of late years.

The Village of Pilton, which is small, is about 3 miles S.S.W. of Oundle, and connected with Lilford by an elegant stone bridge.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands in a secluded situation, is in the Early English style, and consists of a nave and side aisles, chancel, south porch, and tower containing four bells, and surmounted by a spire. The chancel was rebuilt in 1862, by the Rev. R. Hodgson, the then rector; three new windows were added to it, and a beautiful east window of stained glass was inserted at the same time. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £11, and returned at £136, 11s. 3½d. The Rt. Hon. Lord Lilford is the patron, and the Rev. Francis Greaves Hodgson, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1839 for a rent-charge of £160. For the Charities of this parish, see the table prefixed to the hundred.

Letters are received through Oundle at 8 A.M., and the wall-box is cleared at 6 P.M.

Dicks Noah, carptr. & beer ret.	Selby Thos. Littleton, land agt.	Selby Mrs Louisa
Hodgson Rev. Francis Greaves,		Whitney Thomas, Pilton Lodge
M.A. rector	Farmers and Graziers.
Jeffs John, parish clerk	Bonser John

Carrier.—Noah Dicks to Thrapston on Tuesday, and Oundle on Thursday.

STOKE DOYLE, OR DOILEY PARISH,

Is bounded on the east by the river Nene and Barnwell, on the south and west by Pilton and Liveden, and on the north by Oundle. It contains 1400 acres. Its population in 1801 was 115; in 1831, 165; in 1841, 169; in 1851, 146; in 1861, 149; in 1871, 142 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £2314, and the gross estimated value £2701. A chalybeate spring, which is mentioned both by Morton and Bridges, rises in a meadow, nearly opposite Lilford park, and flows into a stone basin, which is said to have been the old font of Stoke church. The water is pure, and of a strong ferruginous quality. There is some excellent arable and pasture land in the parish, and 44 acres of woodland. The Rev. George Capron, of Southwick Hall, is lord of the manor, and the principal proprietor of the soil. The Misses Hunt have a small estate here.

Manor.—There were 2 hides and 1 virgate of land here, belonging to the manor of Oundle, at the time of the Domesday survey; and there were 10 acres of meadow, and a wood, 1 mile long and 5 furlongs broad, and the whole had been rated, in the Confessor's time, at 10s., but was then advanced to £5, 10s. In the sixth of Edward II. (1312), John Dorley levied a fine of this manor, with the advowson of the church, and from his descendants it passed into the hands of John de Knyghtele. In 1435, Sir Thomas Leuknore, Knt., was lord of the manor, and with his successors it continued till the beginning of the following century. In the reign of Henry VIII. it belonged to the Tresham family, and in the first of Elizabeth (1558), Rd. Tresham, Esq., sold it to John Palmer, Esq. With the Palmers it continued till about the year 1694, when it was purchased by the Lord Chief Baron Ward. It passed by purchase, in 1829, to Geo. Capron, Esq.; at whose death, in 1872, it descended to his son, the Rev. G. Capron, the present owner.

The Manor House was pulled down several years since, and on its site a farmhouse was erected. The handsome iron gates, and the statues of Diana and Apollo, which adorn the entrance of the house at Oundle, the residence of G. M. Edmonds, Esq., were brought from this place. The Right Hon. George Ward Hunt, M.P., is the owner of the house.

The Village of Stoke Doyle, which contains a few good houses, is pleasantly situated about 2 miles S.W. by S. from Oundle.

The Church, dedicated to St. Romnald, is a small handsome edifice of the Grecian character. It was erected in the reign of Queen Anne, and consists of nave, chancel, and tower in which is a peal of five bells. Here is a very handsome monument by Rysbrach to Lord Chief Baron Ward. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £20, 2s. 11d., and returned at £132, 10s. The Rev. George Capron is the patron, and the Rev. C. H. W. Capron, M.A., is the incumbent. The Rectory House is a substantial building near the church; and there is a new school in the village, erected in 1872 by subscription.

The Villa is the property and the residence of the Misses Hunt, who enlarged and beautified it in 1865.

Charities.—Hewitt's gift to the poor, a portion of which yields 13s. per annum. George Capron, Esq., the late proprietor, also gave £200, which is vested in the 3 per cent. consols, and the interest is given to the poor. The Rev.

John Whitehead and Chief Baron Ward's charities, and £6 from an unknown donor, are lost, and cannot now be traced.

Letters are received through Oundle, at 7.3 A.M., and the wall-box is cleared at 6.20 P.M.

Capron Rev. Charles H. W.
M.A. rector
Hunt The Misses, The Villa
Hunt Lieut.-Col. E.I.C.S. The Villa

Hunt Thos. Esq. The Villa
Richards John, farmer, & vict.
Shuckburgh Arms
Warner Wm. parish clerk. & sexton

Farmers and Graziers.
Freeman John
Healey John, Rectory Farm
Langham Joseph, jun.

THORPE ACHURCH PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Clapton, on the south by Tichmarsh, on the west by the river Nene, and on the north by Lilford and Pilton. It contains 1494 acres; and its population in 1801 was 208; in 1831, 240; in 1841, 218; in 1851, 152; in 1861, 209; in 1871, 178 souls. The rateable value of the parish, including railways, &c., is £2113, and the gross estimated rental £2244. The soil is productive, and here is an abundance of limestone. The Right Hon. Lord Lilford is lord of the manor, and owner of the entire parish.

Manor.—This lordship is called in Domesday Book Asechirce, which is supposed to be a corruption of Aas-Kirk—the church by the water. It contained 6½ hides of land at the time of the Norman survey, and these were held by Azelin de Waterville, a Norman, and “two Englishmen,” of the abbot of Burgh. There were 20 acres of meadow, and 6 acres of wood, and the whole, which had been valued in the preceding reign at 20s., were then rated at 55s. In the reign of Henry II. these 6 hides were in the possession of Ascelin de Waterville, and in the thirty-first of Edward I. (1302), Walter de Langton, bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, was lord of the manor. In the first of Edward IV. (1461), the lordships of Achurch and Thorpe were in the hands of the crown, and in the first of Henry VIII. (1509), Margaret, Countess of Richmond and Derby, died seized of them, and after her decease they reverted to the crown. In the fifth of Edward VI. (1551), they were granted by the crown to Sir William Cecyll, Knt., afterwards created Baron of Burghley. From this celebrated nobleman they descended to his son, who in 1598 was created Earl of Exeter. They afterwards passed to the Powys family, and are now possessed by their lineal descendant, the present Lord Lilford.

The Village of Achurch, which is small, is 4 miles N.N.E. from Thrapston.

THORPE, or THORPE WATERVILLE, is a small hamlet in this parish, at which there is a railway station. There is a large barn still standing, at a little distance from the Thrapston road, which bears marks of great antiquity, and the timber of which is of extraordinary workmanship. Tradition relates that formerly some instruments of torture were kept in a part of this building. Though no distinct mention is made in Domesday Book of Thorpe manor, it yet appears in early records to have been the capital manor. The addition of Waterville has been taken from its early possessors. Here was formerly a castle, probably built by Azelin de Waterville.

The Church, which is situated at Achurch, is in the Early English style, and consists of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, north and south transepts, south porch, and square tower surmounted by a spire, and containing four bells. It was thoroughly restored, at a cost of £2200, in 1862, when it was enlarged by the addition of the north aisle and south porch, and fitted up with open oak sittings, and with a fine pulpit of carved oak on a stone base. The church contains several handsome monuments and tablets in marble to the Powys family. The living is a rectory, with the vicarage of Lilford annexed, in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's book at £14, 6s. 3d., and now worth £450 per annum, in the gift of Lord Lilford, and incumbency of the Hon. and Rev. Edward Victor Robert Powys, LL.B. The tithes were commuted for land in 1772. The Rectory House, a stone building in the Elizabethan style, stands near the church.

A Sunday School, with a residence, was erected here in 1868, chiefly by the late Rev. L. C. Powys, rector of Stalbridge, Dorsetshire, in memory of his sister.

Charities.—The church land (12a. 2r. 8p.) yields £18 per annum; Rd. Ragsdale, in 1711, left a rent-charge of 20s. per annum to the poor; Sir Wm. Peak, Knt., Lord Mayor of London, who was born here of poor parentage, left the interest of £10 to the poor in 1668, and the Rev. — Basmenel the interest of £20 for the same purpose.

Eminent Men.—John de Achurch, a monk of Peterborough abbey, compiled the register respecting the affairs of that convent, from himself named Achurch, which is still extant, and kept in the library of the dean and chapter of the cathedral. John Smith, author of "Select Discourses," and other works, was born at Achurch in 1617. The celebrated Robert Brown, founder of the sect called "Brownists," was incumbent of this parish in 1592. (See page 164.)

Letters arrive from Oundle about 8.30 A.M., and the box is cleared at 5.10 P.M.

Chipchase Thos. house steward,
Lisford Hall
Dale Miss Ellen, baker
Darville John, station-master
Green Mrs Jane, shopkeeper
Miller James, vict. Fox

Morris Smith, cottager
Palmer Samuel, cottager
Panther John, sexton
Powys Hon. and Rev. Edward
Victor Robert, LL.B. rector

Farmers and Graziers.
Chew William
Leete Sanders Tabbutt
Selby Millin

THRAPSTON PARISH.

Thrapston, on the south side of the river Nene, is bounded on the east and south by Tichmarsh, and on the west by Denford. It contains 1055 acres; its population in 1801 was 675; in 1831, 1014; in 1841, 1131; in 1851, 1183; in 1861, 1267; in 1871, 1233 souls. It includes the market town of Thrapston, and the rateable value is £5225, 3s. The gross estimated rental of the parish is £6353, 4s. The trustees of the late Thomas Burton, Esq., Yarmouth (the lords of the manor), and Lord Lyveden, are the principal proprietors of the soil. Morton says, "Thrapston is not to be passed by without observation; not for its trade and buildings, but for this, that it is surrounded by a most pleasant country, where they have water, air, and soil, that are exceeded by none. It is at due distance from the woods; and, in a word, enjoys all the natural advantages that can well be wished for by any gentleman, who is pleased to entertain himself with the innocent delights of a country life." The north-east, east, south, and north-west country round is open, and gives the traveller a charming view. On an eminence, half a mile to the south-east of Thrapston, at a single coup d'œil, you may see thirty-six church spires. All the northern parts around are covered with woods, principally belonging to the Duke of Buccleuch. Here also is a beautiful range of meadows and pastures, perhaps not to be equalled in England for length; they stretch uninterruptedly nearly from Peterborough to Northampton, more than thirty miles in length, and in some places nearly two miles in breadth. "Foundations of buildings," says Bridges, "have been found in Paradise-close; and to the north of the church are two mounts, where a castle is supposed to have stood."

Manor.—Odelin held 3 virgates of land of the Bishop of Constance, and Ogerius held 2½ hides in Trapestone, of the Crown, at the time of the Conqueror's survey. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 20s., and the whole was then rated at £3, 10s. In the reign of Henry II., Ralph Fitz-Oger held 2 hides and 1 virgate here, of the fee of Brunne, and Robert Fitz-Odelin 1 hide and 1 virgate, of the fee of Clare. The lands belonging to Ralph Fitz-Oger passed into the hands of Baldwin de Wake, who conveyed them to Robert de Veer. His successor, Baldwin de Veer, in the seventh of King John (1205), gave the king two palfreys for the privilege of a weekly market here, on Tuesday. In the forty-ninth of the same reign (1247), Robert, his son, obtained the liberty of a fair, to begin on the eve of St James the Apostle, and continue three days. This manor continued with the family of De Veer for several generations. In the eighth of James I. (1610), Henry Lord Mordaunt died seized of it, and it descended to his son John, who, in the third of Charles I. (1627), was advanced to the dignity of Earl of Peterborough. The lands here, held of the fee of Clare, were in the possession of the family of Hay, in Henry III.'s time, and subsequently came to the Holt family, from which they were designated Holt's manor in Thrapston. The lordship was afterwards divided amongst freeholders, and the trustees of Thos. Burton, Esq., now possess the greater part of it, as well as the manorial rights. The Manor house stands a little N.W. of the church; large portions of it have been taken down, and human skeletons have been discovered in the garden at the rear of the house.

THE TOWN OF THRAPSTON.—Thrapston is a market town, situate on the river Nene, which is here crossed by a good stone bridge, about twenty miles N.N.W. of Northampton, twenty-one S.W. of Peterborough, and seventy-five N.N.W. of London. It is in general well built; consists of four streets, disposed on the roads from Huntingdon to Kettering, and from Peterborough to Northampton; and occupies a beautiful and remarkably fertile valley. Ironstone was first commenced working here in April 1873, by Mr Thomas Whitehouse of Northampton, who at present employs about forty hands, who turn out about sixty or seventy tons per day. The Nene is navigable from Northampton to Wisbeach, and the Peterborough branch of the London and North-western Railway passes close to the town, at which there is a station; and the Kettering, Thrapston, Huntingdon, and Cambridge Railway, now leased to the Midland Company, has also a station here. By means of the railway communication, the trade of this place, which consists chiefly in grain, the transfer of ironstone, and the importation of timber and coal, is greatly facilitated. There are two foundries and an extensive fellmongery in the town. A bridge of three arches, over which the town is entered from the railway station, suffered so severely during the flood in October 1848, that it had to be rebuilt at the expense of the parish and railway company. The market is held on Tuesday, and is famed for its good supply of corn and pigs; that on the first Tuesday after Michaelmas is as large as a fair. A fair for shoes, pedlary, &c., is held on the first Tuesday in May; and another was usually held on the 5th of August, but notwithstanding several efforts to support it, it has fallen into disuse.

The New Cattle Market, which was incorporated by an Act of Parliament passed in 1870, was established here in 1871 by a company of shareholders in £10 shares, for the sale of fat stock of every description, and horses, sheep, pigs, wool, &c. The Corn Exchange, erected in 1850, is well attended, and will accommodate 500 persons; it is let occasionally for lectures, concerts, &c.

A County Court for the recovery of debts under £50 is held monthly in the Magistrates' Room, attached to the County Police Station. The latter, a stone building erected in 1860, has accommodation for an inspector and two constables; it has three cells, and a room for magisterial purposes attached; the magistrates meet fortnightly.

Gas Works were established here in 1857, at a cost of £1600, by a company of shareholders (limited) in £10 shares. There are two gasholders capable of holding 20,000 cubic feet of gas, which is supplied to the inhabitants at 5s. per 1000.

The Church, dedicated to St James, is a handsome structure, consisting of a nave, north and south aisles, and chancel, and a fine spire steeple containing five bells. The whole of the edifice, except the tower and chancel, was rebuilt in 1845. A beautiful stained glass window, by Wailes of Newcastle, was placed at the east end in 1863, by public subscription, to the memory of the late Mr York; and one on the south side of the chancel to George Eland, Esq., by his family in 1872. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's book at £14, 5s. 5d., and now worth about £400 per annum. The patronage is vested in the Lord Chancellor, and the Rev. Wm. Salmon Bagshaw, M.A., is the rector. The tithes were commuted in 1780 for land. The Rectory House, is a commodious residence, situated in the principal street.

The Baptist Chapel, a good brick building erected in 1787, will accommodate 500 persons. The Rev. J. Seager is the minister. The Methodist Chapel is a small building.

The National School, with master's residence and playground attached, was erected by subscription in 1849, will accommodate 112, average attendance, 67. Attached to the Baptist Chapel is a British School, established in 1851; it will accommodate 100, and is attended by an average of 82.

The Literary Institute was established and opened on 27th October 1873. The Reading Room, in the Market place, is well supplied with the London and provincial papers; and the present number of members is about 100, who pay 2s. each per quarter. There are also societies belonging to the Freemasons, Odd Fellows, and Tradesmen, in the town.

A School in Islip parish is endowed with the interest of £200, left by Mary Ekins, in 1795; and £15 left by some person now unknown, for the instruction of ten children of this parish and that of Islip. Mrs Mary Montague, in 1850, left £750, 3 per cent. consols—the interest, £22, 10s., to be applied to the clothing and educating of 12 girls belonging to this parish, was transferred, by order of the Master of the Rolls, to the National School. For other charities of the parish, see table prefixed to this hundred.

The Union Workhouse, a good stone building, capable of accommodating 200 persons, stands about a quarter of a mile from the town, and was erected in 1836, at a cost of about £4000. The Union comprehends the following 26 parishes, viz.:—Addington (Great and Little), Aldwinkle, All Saints and St. Peter, Brigstock, Brington, Bythorn, Clapton, Chelveston Cum Caldecot, Covington, Denford, Hargrave, Islip, Keyston, Lowick, Molesworth, Ringstead, Raunds, Slipton, Sudborough, Stanwick, Thrapston, Tichmarsh, Twywell, Woodford, and Old Weston. It extends over an area of 62 square miles. Mr John Bullymore of Sudborough is chairman of the board of guardians; Mr Thos. Elderkin of Keyston, vice-chairman; Geoffrey Hawkins, solicitor, clerk; Rev. J. P. Goodman, chaplain; Mr and Mrs Richard T. Wakefield, master and matron. The medical officers are—Mr W. H. Masters, Mr B. Spurgin, Mr T. P. Fernie, Mr J. T. Starling, and Mr Edward Greaves. The average weekly number of paupers received during the past year was 63, and the average weekly expense of each pauper was 4s. 10½d.

Drayton House, in this vicinity, the seat of Mrs Stopford Sackville, is an elegant mansion, built on the ruins of an ancient castle.

Post, Money Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank—Chas. William Ibbs, postmaster. Letters arrive from London and all parts at 7 and 10.20 A.M. and at 6 P.M., and are despatched at 6.50, 10 and 11.45 A.M., and at 6.10, 8.25, and 8.45 P.M. On Sunday arrive at 7 A.M., and are despatched at 5.30 P.M.

ABBOTT Francis Sharp, auctioneer, High street
 Allen Augustus, watchmaker, Market place
 Amos Farmer, draper and grocer, Bridge st.
 Archbould Mrs Catherine, Denford road
 Arnold John, veterinary surgeon, Chancery Ln.
 Arnold Henry, farmer, Huntingdon road
 Bacon William Edward, draper, Market place
 Bagshaw Rev. William Salmon, M.A. rector
 Bargh Aaron, milliner, &c. High street
 Barlow Mrs Elizabeth, staymaker, High street
 Barlow John Dexter, stonemason, High street
 Barritt Jonas, shoe manufacturer, Bridge st.
 Bassford Benjamin, master of British School
 Beardsworth Alfred, painter, &c. High street
 Bland John, sexton, Tichmarsh lane
 Bradshaw John, miller, &c. Thrapston Mill
 Branson Mrs Cath. vict. King's Arms, High st.
 Brown Mrs Esther, vict. Red Lion, High st.
 Brown Mrs Francis, Manor House
 Brown John, baker, High street
 Brown Sam. Bishop, chemist & dentist, High st.
 Bryan Jas. Welch, vict. White Hart, Market pl.

Bullymore Richard, butcher, Market place
 COALES and Allen, brewers, wine and spirit merchants, High street and Northampton:
 Robert Humphrey, agent
 Coates William, builder, Bridge street
 Colls James, insurance agent, High street
 Cooper Richard, beerhouse, High street
 Corby Thos. boarding sch. Hill House Academy
 Crouger Thomas, joiner, White Hart Lane
 DINGLEY William, manager of gasworks
 Dison Mrs Judith Langley, ladies' boarding school, Belmont House
 Dyson Thomas, shoemaker, Tichmarsh lane
 EADY Saml. manager of Union bank, High st.
 Eaton Thomas, butcher, Bridge street
 Eland and Eland, bankers, Market place
 Eland Robert Fowler (E. & E.), Thrapston Ho.
 Eland Stephen Eaton (E. & E.), h. Kettering
 Elwin Robert, saddler, Market place
 FARRINGTON Samuel, vict. Swan, Bridge street
 Fletcher Samuel Thomas, builder, Bridge st.
 French John, insurance agent, High street

GARTON Mrs Mary, beerhouse, Tichmarsh In.
Gaslight and Coke Co. Wm. Ibbs, secretary
HAMBLING Alfred John Wm. draper, High st.
Haviland Fredk. Henry, inland revenue officer
Hawkins General Samuel
Hawkins Geoffry, solicitor, Chancery lane
Heare Henry, fishmonger, Bridge street
Hensman Thos. Duxbury, vict. Masons' Arms
Hill Mrs Frances, Chancery lane
Hillyard Wm. station-master L. & N. W.
Holmes Robert, coal and corn merchant, Midland railway station, h. Denford
Horne Wm. bricklayer, & Co. Chancery lane
Humphrey Robt. brewery agent, High street
IBBS Charles Wm. postmaster, Chancery lane
Ibbs William, bookseller, printer, stationer,
Berlin wool and fancy repository, Bridge st.
KITCHEN Robert, police inspector, High street
LADDS John, coachbuilder, Tichmarsh lane
Leete Mrs Elizabeth, Market place
Lenton William, coal merchant, L. & N. W. railway station, h. Oundle
Lewin Mrs Mary Ann, Tichmarsh lane
Lord Benjamin, saddler, Bridge street
MANSELL Abm. joiner and builder, High st.
Marriott John, tailor, High st. and Tichmarsh
Mason Joseph, photographer, Bridge street
Masters Wm. Hooper, surgeon, Bridge street
Mault John, milliner, Bridge street
Mault William, tailor & hosier, Bridge st.
Mayes Martin, carting agent for Chaplin and Horne, h. Sudborough
Mays William Viccars, fellmonger, hidefactor, woolstapler, and carting agent for the Midland Railway Co. Bridge street
Midland Banking Co. Market place
Munns Levi, chimney sweep, Tichmarsh lane
NORTHAMPTON Brewery Co. High street and Northampton—John Rogers, agent
Northamptonshire Union Bank, High street
PAINTER Samuel, butcher, High street
Palmer Wm. station-master Midland Railw. Co.
Papworth Chas. coachbuilder, White Hart In.
Pars Robert Corelli, chemist, Market place
Payne Mark & Son (Chas. Hy.), ironfounders and engineers, Vulcan Iron Works
Pettit Thomas, shopkeeper, Tichmarsh lane
Pycraft William, painter, &c. Tichmarsh lane
READ Frederick, beerhouse, Bridge street
Read Wm. cabinet-maker and carver, Bridge st.

Richards Stephen, carver, gilder, and picture-frame maker, High street
Richardson Robt. and Son (Wm.), solicitors,
Bridge street, and Oundle
Robinson Mrs Mary, Bridge street
Roe Mrs Maria, Chancery lane
Roe John Thomas, coal and corn merchant and maltster, Chancery lane
Rogers Jn. grocer and ironmonger, Market st.
Rogers John, grocer and wine agent, and agent for Northampton Brewery Co. High street
Rye William, confectioner, eating house, and mail contractor, High street
SANDERSON Richard, grocer, ironmonger, wine and spirit agent, Market place
Savings' Bank, High st.—Steph. Richards, acty.
Seager Rev. James (Baptist), High street
Selby David, grocer and ironmonger, Market pl.
Shadbolt John, blacksmith, Tichmarsh lane
Sharp Jno. Edward, fishmonger, Tichmarsh In.
Sharp Thos. hairdresser & seedman, Market pl.
Siddons George, coal merchant, L. & N. W. railway station, h. Oundle
Smart Mrs Eleanor, shopkpr. Tichmarsh In.
Smith & Grace, ironfounders, engineers, & agriculti. implement mkr. Nene Side Iron Works
Smith Edwin (S. & Grace), h. Bridge street
Smith Geo. (S. & Grace), Nene Side Iron Works
Smith Nat. (S. & Grace), Nene Side Iron Works
Spurgin Branwhite, surgeon
Stevenson Mrs Elizabeth, Tichmarsh lane
Story Joseph, High street
Sutcliffe Isaac, saddler, High street
Sutcliffe John, corn dealer, High street
TAYLOR James Handford and Son (Bryan), auctioneers, High street
Taylor Thomas, furniture, marine store, and small-ware dealer, Bridge street
Triston Mrs Sarah, school, High street
Tusting Robert, draper, [grocer and coal marchant, Bridge street
VOGT Fidelius, watchmaker, Bridge street
WAKEFIELD Rd. Temple, master, workhouse
West, Biddles, and Co. Midland railway station Whitehouse Thos. ironstone master, h. Northampton—Butler Smith, manager
Williams Hugh, surgeon, Bridge street
Wilson John, millwright & vict. King's Head,
Bridge street
Wilson Wm. millwright and vict. Fox, High st.
Woodhouse Walter, master of National school

Academies and Schools.

*Marked * take Boarders.*

British, High st. Benj. Bassford and Miss Mary Ann Clarke
*Corby Thos. Hill Ho. Academy
*Dison Mrs Judith Langley,
Belmont House
National, Walter Woodhouse
Triston Mrs Sarah, High street

Agents—Wine and Spirit.

Rogers John (Travis & Sons),
High street
Sanderson Rd. (W. & A. Gilbey),
High street
Selby David (Spiers & Pond),
High street

Attorneys.

Hawkins Geoffry, Chancery lane
Richardson & Son, Bridge st.

Auctioneers.

Abbott Francis Sharp, High st.
Taylor & Son, High street

Bakers and Confectioners.

Brown John, High street
Chattell, High street
Drage, High street
Rye William (and eating house),
High street

Banks.

Eland & Eland, Market place

(draw on Barclay, Bevan, &
Co. London)

Midland Banking Co. Market pl.
(draw on London and County
Bank, London, on Tuesday
only), F. D. Nutt, manager
Northamptonshire Union bank,
High st. (draw on Williams, Deacon, and Co. London),
Samuel Eady, manager
Savings' Bank, High st. (open Tuesday from 12 till 2 p.m.),
Stephen Richards, actuary

Berlin Wool and Fancy Repository.

Ibbs William, Bridge street

Blacksmith.

Shadbolt John, Tichmarsh lane

Booksellers & Stationers.

Ibbs William, Bridge street
Richards Stephen, High street

Boot and Shoemakers.

Barrit Jonas (manfr.) Bridge st.
Dyson Thomas, Tichmarsh lane

Brewers' Stores.

Coales & Allen, High st. & Northampton, Rt. Humphrey, agnt.
Northampton Brewery Co., High st. and Northampton, John Rogers, agent

Bricklayer.

Horne William, Chancery lane

Butchers.

Bullymore Richard, Market pl.
Eaton Thomas, Bridge street
Painter Samuel, High street
Story Joseph, High street

Chemists and Druggists.

Brown Samuel Bishop, High st.
Pars Robert Corelli, Market pl.

Chimney Sweeper.

Munns Levi, Tichmarsh lane

Coachbuilders.

Ladds John, Titchmarsh lane
Papworth Chas. White Hart lane

Coal Merchants.

Holmes Rt. Midland rly. stat.
Lenton Wm. jun. L. & N. W. railway station, and Oundle
Roe John Thos. Chancery lane
Siddons George, L. & N. W. railway station
Tusting Robert, Bridge street
West, Biddles & Co. Midland railway station

Corn-Merchants.

Holmes Robt. Mid. rly. station
Roe John Thos. Chancery lane
Sutcliffe Jno. (dealer), High st.

Drapers.

Amos Farmer, Bridge street
Bacon Wm. Edward, Market pl.
Bargh A. (& milliner), Bridge st.
Hambling Alf. John M. High st.
Mault J. (& milliner), Bridge st.
Tusting Robert, Bridge street

Farmers and Graziers.

Abbott Francis Sharp, High st.

Arnold Henry, Huntingdon rd.
Bradshaw John, Thrapston mill
Bryan James Welch
Roe John Thos. Chancery lane

Fire and Life Offices.

County (fire) & Provident (life), John French, High street
Liverpool & London & Globe, David Selby, Market place
London Assurance Corporation, Augustus Allen, Market pl.
Pelican (life), Wm. Hillyard, L. & N. W. railway station
Royal, James Coles, High st.
Sun, Wm. Ibbs, Bridge st. and Robert Eland, Market place
Union, Rt. C. Pars, Market pl.

Fish and Game Dealer.

Heare Henry, Bridge street

Furniture Broker.

Taylor Thomas, Bridge street

Grocers.

Amos Farmer, Bridge street
Rogers John, Market place
Rogers John, High street
Sanderson Richard, Market pl.
Selby David, Market place
Tusting Robert, Bridge street

Hairdresser.

Sharp Thomas, Market place

Hotels and Taverns.

Marked * are Posting-Houses.
Foz, Wm. Wilson, High street
King's Arms, C. Branson, High st.
King's Head, J. Wilson, Brdg. st.
Masons' Arms, Thos. Duxbury
Hensman, High street
Red Lion, Mrs E. Brown, High st.
* Swan, St. Farrington, Bridge st.
* White Hart, James Welch Bryan, Market place

Beerhouses.

Cooper Richard, High street
Garton Mrs My. Tichmarsh ln.
Read Frederick, Bridge street

Iron Founders and Engineers.

Payne & Son, Vulcan Iron Works
Smith & Grace (agrl. implt. makers), Nene Side Iron Works

Ironmongers.

Rogers John, Market place
Sanderson Richard, Market pl.
Selby David, Market place

Ironstone Master.

Whitehouse Thomas—Butler Smith, manager

Joiners and Builders.

Coates William, Bridge street
Croager Thos. White Hart lane
Fletcher Saml. Thos. Bridge st.
Hensman Ts. Duxbury, High st.
Mansell Abraham, High street

Maltster.

Roe John Thos. Chancery lane

Millwrights.

Wilson John, Bridge street
Wilson William, High street

Painters, Plumbers, Glaziers, &c.

Beardsworth Alfred, High st.
Pycraft Wm. Tichmarsh lane
Read Frederick, Bridge street

Photographer.

Mason Joseph, Bridge street

Saddlers.

Elvin Robert, Market place
Lord Benjamin, Bridge street
Sutcliffe Isaac, High street

Seedsman.

Sharp Thomas, Market place

Shopkeepers.

Pettit Thos. Tichmarsh lane
Smart Mrs E. Tichmarsh lane

Surgeons.

Masters Wm. Hooper, Bridge st.
Spurgin Branwhite
Williams Hugh, Bridge street

Tailors.

Marriott John, High street
Mault Wm. (& hosier), Brdg. st.
Talbot James, High street

Veterinary Surgeon.

Arnold John, Chancery lane

Watchmakers.

Allen Augustus, Market place
Vogt Fidelius, Bridge street

Wine & Spirit Merchants.

Coales & Allen, High st. & Northampton, Rt. Humphrey, agent

Public Officers.

Clerk to the Magistrates, and to the Union, and to the Trustees of Harborough and Brampton Road, Commissioner to take affidavits in Chancery and Common Law Courts, and perpetual Commissioner to take the acknowledgments of married women, and Clerk to the District Highway Board, and Superintendent Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages for Thrapston District—Geoffry Hawkins

Deputy Registrar—Thomas Ivens, Islip
Surveyor of Highways for Thrapston District—William Dudley, Tichmarsh

Public Establishments.

County Court—Edmond Beales, Esq., judge ; Geoffry Hawkins, registrar ; James Handford Taylor, high bailiff
Gas, Light, & Coke Co.—Wm Ibbs, secretary
Inland Revenue Office—White Hart, Frederick Henry Haviland, officer

Literary Institute—Market place, A. J. W. Hambling, secretary
Police Station—Robert Kitchen, inspector
Stamp Office—Steph. Richards, sub-distributor
Union Workhouse—Rd. T. Wakefield, master

Carriers.

Railway (L. & N. W.)—Wm. Hillyard, station-master ; J. W. Bryan, parcel agt., Market pl.
Railway (Midland)—Wm. Palmer, sta. master ; S. Farrington, parcel agent, Bridge street

FROM THE INNS.

Aldwinkle St Peter,—St John Height, King's Head, Tuesday
Brigstock—Abraham Sturges, Fox, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday
Finedon—George Roberts, Swan, Tuesday
Pilton—Noah Dicks, Fox, Tuesday
Raunds—J. Runley, White Hart, Tuesday, and George Pentilow, Swan, daily
Tichmarsh—Sl. Wilson, Fox, Tues. & Sat.
Woodford—Geo. Beeby, King's Head, Tuesday
Yielding—D. Knight, Swan, Tuesday

TICHMARSH PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Clapton and a part of Huntingdonshire on the east and south, and on the west and north by Thrapston and Achurch. It contains 3836 acres ; its population in 1801 was 569 ; in 1831, 843 ; in 1841, 905 ; in 1851, 883 ; in 1861, 893 ; and in 1871, 883 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £5944, 10s., and the gross estimated rental £7023. The soil towards the south-east of the parish is a strong clay, towards the north-east gravelly, and south-west a mixture of blue clay upon a limestone bottom. It is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture land. Lord Lilford is lord of the manor, and owner of nearly all the parish ; the Duke of Buccleuch is lord paramount.

"In the middle of the town," writes Bridges, "is a small eminence named Chapel Hill, and a place likewise called Castle yard, where several window-frames and door-cases of freestone have been dug up. To the east upon the warren stood the old manor-house, the ruins of which were lately taken down. It was called the Lodge, and the warren sometimes the Grove. John, son to Gilbert Pickering, removed to the present manor-house about the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign. It is embattled on the south side, and hath an embattled turret. There are good springs in different parts of the lordship, and a branch of the Nyne runs through the meadows. To the east is Chequer Hill, which commands a long view of the country."

Manor.—There were two manors at Ticemorse at the time of the Conqueror's survey, one of which, containing 3 hides and 1 virgate, was held of the Abbot of Burgh by Azeline de Waterville ; the other contained 10 hides, and was held by Saswale of Henry de Ferieres, who held of the Crown. The first mentioned manor was then rated at £2, 15s., and the latter at £7. In the reign of Henry II. Ascelin de Waterville held 3 hides and 1 virgate and 3 parts of half a hide here, and Robert de Ferieres possessed 10 hides. In the fifteenth of Edward I. (1286), Sir John Lovell died seized of these 10 hides, and in the possession of this family they continued till the attainder of Francis Viscount Lovell, in the first of Henry VII. (1485), when his estates were escheated to the Crown. In the thirty-third of Edward III. (1359), Sir John Lovell obtained a charter for a weekly market here on Monday, and an annual eight days' fair, to commence on the eve of the Holy Trinity. He had also licence to embattle his manor-house, and convert it to a castle ; but whether the remains in the Castle-yard are vestiges of this building, or of a castle built by the Ferrers family, it is not easy to determine. This manor was next given to the Somerset family, afterwards Earls of Worcester, one of whom sold it, in the seventh of Edward VI. (1553), to Gilbert Pickering. With the Pickerings it continued for several generations. The other manor, in the hands of the family of Waterville, was carried in marriage to Henry de Tichmerse, who levied a fine of it in the eighth of Edward II. (1314). It was subsequently divided between several persons, and in the reign of Henry VIII. the Pickerings had purchased a great part of it. The family of Bury had formerly an estate here, but the descendants were afterwards reduced to poverty, and the estate sold to the Pickerings. Bridges says, "There is a hedge in the fields from them called Bury's Hedge." These manors passed from the Pickerings to the family of Powys, with the lineal descendant of which (Lord Lilford) it still continues.

The Village of Tichmarsh, which is large and straggling, stands about 2 miles east-north-east of Thrapston. Several fine elm trees on the roadside, at the entrance of the village from Thrapston, add much to its beauty. The Thorpe railway station is about half a mile from Tichmarsh.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a large edifice, situate on high ground at the west end of the village, partly in the Early English and partly in the Perpendicular styles, and consists of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, south porch, and embattled square tower containing six bells. "The tower," says Mr Sharp, "with its many pinnacles, forms a conspicuous object in the landscape long before it is reached, and constitutes the special feature of the sacred edifice." There is a little Norman door-head in the chancel, which is the earliest remaining relic of an earlier church; there are three compartments of the Lancet period on the north side, and there is a very singular illustration of the same period on the south side. Late in the Curvilinear, or the Rectilinear, the church, he thinks, "had been entirely rebuilt. There were the responds on each end of the Lancet building. The north doorway is Curvilinear, and also a piscina; and the hagioscope is of the same date." In 1842 the church was partly restored and newly seated at a cost of about £1000, and in 1868 the chancel was beautified, and the east and south-east windows were filled with stained glass, and the handsome reredos of alabaster and Connemara marble is very choice in design and workmanship. It is the gift of the Attenborough family, and in its centre is a splendid jewelled altar cross, with brass standard lights, flanked by effective carvings in relievo, of Abraham offering up his son Isaac, and Melchisedec's offering to Abraham. A new organ has since been placed in the chancel by the same donors and Lord Lilford, at a cost of £400. Here are several monuments to the Creed and Pickering families. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Oundle, valued in the king's books at £45, and now worth about £900 per annum. The patronage is vested in the lord of the manor, and the Rev. F. M. Stopford, M.A., is the rector. The tithes were commuted in 1778 for land, but there are two farms still tithable. The Rectory House, near the church, is a Gothic structure, rebuilt in 1861 by the present rector. In the garden is a magnificent cedar of Libanus.

The Baptists have a small chapel in the village, served from Thrapston; and there is also a Wesleyan Chapel, erected in 1871, to replace an older structure.

The National School, a stone building, was erected in 1842 by subscription, aided by a grant of £120 from the Council of Education.

The Almshouses or Hospital, for 8 poor widows and 2 bedesmen, were founded and endowed, in 1756, by the Pickering family. The inmates receive each 4s. 6d. per week, and a gown, apron, cap, and handkerchief once a year. The houses are in good repair, and were enlarged in 1858 by a donation of the late T. Coales, Esq., and the endowment consists of about 249 acres of land in the county of Huntingdon. The other Charities of the parish are the interest of £300, left to the poor in 1697, by Edward Pickering, Esq. (this sum was vested in land, which is now let in allotments for £39 per annum), and the church land, consisting of 5 acres, which now let for £12 per annum. By a bequest of Mr Thomas Knight, in 1864, the interest of £1000 is distributed annually amongst the poor of the parish, and he also left £1000 to the trustees of the almshouses.

Post-Office.—John Marriott, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Thrapston at 7.5 A.M., and are despatched at 4.35 P.M.

Abbott William, baker
 Adams Thomas, stonemason
 Allen Thos. shkpr. & par. clk.
 Baker John, gentleman
 Bishop Thomas, butcher and victualler, Wheat Sheaf
 Brierley William, victualler, Dog and Partridge
 Brown Miss Fas. shkpr. & bakr.
 Bryon Mr Frederick Harding
 Burgess George, tailor
 Burkitt Thomas, coaldealer
 Dixie Mr Edward William
 Dixon Joseph, gamekeeper
 Eaton George, carpenter
 Eaton Jno. carpenter & builder
 Hawthorn Rev. Roscoe, M.A. curate of Clapton
 Hulley —, beerhouse
 King Thomas, tailor

Leake Warren, wheelwt. black-sm. and agricul. implmt. mkr.
 Leigh Robert, shoemaker
 Letch Thomas, manager, Co-operative Stores
 Mansell George, gardener
 Marriott John, linen & woollen drapr. tailr. & hattr. agt. for the Liverpool, London, & Globe, Briton (life), Norwich (hail-storm), & Accidental Death
 Mickleby Robt. mason & beerho.
 Munday George, gardener
 Morris Fredrick. baker & beerh.
 Quincey Josiah, cottager
 Readyhoff Wm. mastr. Nat. Sch.
 Rippin Thos. brewer & maltstr.
 Robinson James, blacksmith
 Rogers Mr Jonathan
 Shaw William, shopkeeper

Stopford Rev. Frederick Manners, M.A. rector
 Twelvtree George, shoemaker
 Upchurch William, sexton
 Vorley Mrs Eliza, beerhouse
 Vorley Lewis, carpenter
 Warren George, butcher
 Weston Richard, higgler
 Worthington Wm. blacksmith
Farmers and Graziers.
 Attenborough Thomas
 Bishop William
 Dudley Wm. Joseph William-son (and surv. of highways)
 Geary Joseph, The Warren
 Gray Mrs Catherine, Lodge
 Hill George, Lodge
 Hill William (and corn miller)
 King Abner (& assist. overseer)
 Knight Samuel (Executors of) Manor House

Carrier.—Samuel Wilson to Kettering on Friday, and Thrapston, Tuesday and Saturday.

WADENHOE PARISH

Is bounded on the S. and S.E. by the river Nene, on the S. and S.W. by Aldwinkle, and on the N. and N.W. by Pilton. It contains 1100 acres, of the rateable value of £1505, and the gross estimated rental is £1787. Its population in 1801 was 237; in 1831, 252; in 1841, 287; in 1851, 290; in 1861, 270; and in 1871, 253 souls. The soil is clay and limestone subsoil rock; and large beds of ironstone have been recently discovered in the parish. Wadenhoe derives its name from the Saxon word "Waden," a ford, and "hoe," a hill, which describes this place correctly. The Right Hon. George Ward Hunt, M.P., is lord of the manor, and principal proprietor.

Manor.—This lordship consisted of 2 hides of land, which were held by Albericus of the Bishop of Constance, and was valued before the Conquest at £3, but then rated at £4. Albericus held likewise of the same bishop another manor, consisting of 2 hides and half a virgate, which was valued at £3; and Roger held 1½ virgate of the Abbot of Burgh, at the same time. In the reign of Henry II., Alberic de Veer held 2 hides and 1 virgate; Wymunt de Stokes, 1 virgate; Roger, 2 small virgates; Wymer de Chirchfield, half a hide; and Geoffrey de Gonthorp, 2 hides. This manor subsequently passed through the families of De Lacy, and Le Strange, and in the twenty-fourth of Henry VIII. (1532), it passed by fine to Sir William Powlett, Knt. Coming afterwards into the hands of the Crown, it was granted in the fifth of Edward VI. (1551), to Sir Walter Mildmay, Knt., in exchange for other manors, and with his descendants it continued for several generations. After passing through various hands, on the death of Thomas Hunt, Esq., of Oundle, it became the property of Thomas W. Hunt, Esq., his nephew, who with his wife were murdered by banditti, near Poestum in Italy, in 1824. A tablet in the church records the particulars of their melancholy fate. The present proprietor came into possession of the manor in 1853.

The Village of Wadenhoe, which is small, is pleasantly situated about 4½ miles S.W. from Oundle, and about the same distance from Thrapston.

The Church, dedicated to St Michael, is a plain building, consisting of a nave, side-aisles, chancel, north porch, and tower containing three bells. The interior underwent a thorough repair in 1844. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £11, and now worth about £240 per annum. The Right Hon. George Ward Hunt, M.P., is patron; Rev. Robert Roberts, M.A., rector. A neat National School was built here in 1839 by Miss Mary Caroline Hunt.

Wadenhoe House is pleasantly situated near the village; it was rebuilt and enlarged by the present owner in 1858.

Gasworks were established here in 1868 by the lord of the manor, and gas is supplied to the inhabitants at 5s. 6d. per 1000 cubic feet.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank.—William Beealey, postmaster. Letters arrive from Oundle, per messenger, at 8.30 A.M., and are despatched at 4.54 P.M.

Allen Francis, miller & farmer

Beealey Wm. blacksmith, and post-office

Davison Lewis, butchr. & shopkp.

Heighton Miss Eliz. shopkeeper

Hunt Right Hon. George Ward,

M.P. Wadenhoe House

Smith Mrs Sar. vict. Duke's Head

Teague Miss Emma, schoolmtrs.

Wilson William, millwright

Farmers and Graziers.

Allen Francis, Wadenhoe Mill

Clinkard Joseph

Groome Robert

HUXLOE HUNDRED.

THE boundaries of this hundred are formed by Higham Ferrers hundred on the east, by the hundreds of Navisford and Corby on the north, by Rothwell and Orlingbury hundreds on the west, and on the south by the hundred of Ham-fordshoe. Its shape is oblong, but irregular, extending over an area of 41,790 statute acres; its greatest length from its S.W. to its N.E. angles about 13 miles, and its greatest breadth from N. to S. nearly 12 miles. The hundred of Hocheslan was one of the eight hundreds in this county of which the Abbey of Peterborough was possessed soon after its foundation. Part of it in Domesday Book is called Nevesland hundred; but in the reign of Edward I. this division was not existing, and the whole was called Huckleslowe hundred. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), the Abbot of Peterborough was lord of it, and continued till the dissolution, when it was seized by the king, and granted to Queen Catherine for the term of her life. In the ninth of James I. (1611), it was granted to John Eldred and Wm. Whitmore, Esqrs., who, in two years after, sold it to Sir Edward Montagu and his heirs, and it is now in the possession of his lineal descendant, the Duke of Buccleuch. Huxloe hundred contains 22 parishes, including the market-town of Kettering, of which the following is an enumeration, showing the number of acres (according to the rate-books), the rateable value and estimated gross rental, with the number of houses and population of each parish in 1871:—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Addington, Great.....	1,220	66	4	...	163	154	317	1,834	2,173
Addington, Little.....	1,090	76	3	...	155	165	320	1,734	2,061
Aldwinkle, All Saints.....	1,224	79	6	1	171	168	339	1,970	2,299
Aldwinkle, St Peter.....	1,483	44	1	...	112	105	217	1,999	2,351
Barwell, All Saints.....	1,719	26	59	59	118	1,923	2,199
Barton Seagrave.....	1,755	42	2	...	95	105	200	3,731	4,128
Burton Latimer.....	2,615	277	8	1	660	620	1,280	6,605	7,334
Cranford, St Andrew.....	2,229	44	1	...	97	90	187	3,574	4,785
Cranford, St John.....	67	5	162	147	309
Denford.....	1,679	99	4	...	245	213	458	2,387	2,817
Finedon or Thringdon.....	3,549	446	9	...	1,049	1,047	2,096	9,612	10,930
Grafton Underwood.....	1,755	61	1	...	145	140	285	2,069	2,158
Irthlingborough.....	3,545	482	12	2	1,092	1,080	2,172	10,800	12,380
Islip.....	1,354	132	5	...	280	305	585	2,851	3,360
Kettering.....	2,594	1,448	32	15	3,531	3,653	7,184	22,709	27,667
Lilford cum Wigthorpe....	1,501	34	1	...	82	86	168	1,822	2,097
Lowick.....	1,984	82	3	...	199	208	407	2,773	3,277
Slipton.....	752	28	1	...	72	64	136	1,215	1,395
Sudborough.....	1,765	68	3	...	122	150	272	2,066	2,558
Twywell.....	920	84	2	2	202	190	392	1,967	2,282
Warkton.....	1,810	63	149	154	303	2,796	3,037
Woodford.....	2,127	227	10	...	546	520	1,066	5,677	6,614
	38,670	3,975	113	21	9,388	9,423	18,811	92,114	107,902

CHARITIES OF HUXLOE HUNDRED, as abstracted from the Parliamentary Reports. See also the histories of the towns, parishes, &c.

The charities of Barnwell All Saints are included with those of Barnwell St Andrews.

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purposes applied.	Annual value.
1663.	Rev. Rd. Thorpe (land) Aldwinkle..	All Saints & St Peter's parish sch.	£20 0 0
1725.	Wootton's Charity (rent)	Ditto, poor	1 12 0
"	Poor's Land (12a. 35p.)	Ditto, ditto	30 0 0
"	Church Land (32p.)	Ditto, ditto	2 2 0
1754.	Captain Webb (£10)	Ditto, ditto	0 10 0
1773.	Jeffrey Ekins (rent)	Barton Seagrave, poor	1 10 0
1589.	Eliz. Margaret Burbank (10a.)	Burton Latimer parish school ...	48 0 0
1792.	Rev. Samuel Barwick (5a.)	Ditto, school	21 10 0
1804.	Church Land (12a. 2r.)	Ditto, church	24 15 0
1514.	Wm. and Agnes Scott (£10)	Expended in land, 40 acres, poor..	66 7 10
"	Rents of Charity Estates (£40)
"	Mulsee and Hick's Charity (land) ..	Ditto, ditto	12 10 0
"	Richard Hopkins (1a. 3r.)	Ditto, ditto	8 15 0
"	Poor's Allotment (70a.)	Ditto, ditto	109 6 0
"	Luck, Plowright, and other doles ...	Ditto, ditto	3 0 0
1727.	Wm. Dickenson (£60)	{ Ditto, expended in inclosing charity estates
"	Poor's Land (1a. 10p.)	Cranford St And. & St John poor	6 0 0
1580.	Rd. Walter (£500, land)	Finedon parish school	100 0 0
"	By subscription (57a., &c.)	Ditto, girl's charity school	95 0 0
"	Ditto (£228, 11s. 8d. 3 per cents)..	Ditto, ditto	7 0 0
"	Thos. Harvey & Mary Mulso (28a., &c.)	Ditto, poor	60 0 0
1636.	Mrs Joan Mulso (40s. per annum) ..	Ditto, ditto	2 0 0
1725.	Mrs Deborah Hampton (ho. & 16a.)	Ditto, a poor maiden	46 0 0
1813.	Mrs Catherine Whitelock (£100) }	Poor	3 3 0
1818.	Mrs Francis Dolben (£20)
1810.	Mrs Eliz. Whitworth (rent)	Ditto, gowns to 2 poor women...	1 1 0
1728.	William Trigg (rent)	{ Irthlingborough almshouse, school, poor, &c.	17 0 0
1801.	Rd. Glover (rent)	Ditto, poor	10 0 0
"	Church Land (24a.)	Ditto, ditto	96 0 0
1705.	Henry Medbury (lands, &c.)	{ Islip parish, widows of } gross clergymen, poor, &c.	125 11 6
"	Grammar-school Estate	Kettering town and parish	377 10 0
"	Church & Town Allotment (16a. 2r. 6p.)	Ditto, church & apprent. childn...	66 0 0
"	Poor's Allotment (9a. 1r. 17p.)	Ditto, poor	22 0 0
"	William Cave (rent)	Ditto, ditto	1 2 0
"	Christopher Edey (rent)	Ditto, ditto	4 0 0
"	Thomas and Sarah Dawson	Ditto, ditto	4 0 0
"	Hunt's Charity	Ditto, poor widows	46 0 0
1688.	Edmund Sawyer (rent)	Ditto, six almspeople	6 0 0
1782.	Mrs Martha Baker (£200)	Ditto, ditto	6 0 0
1792.	Mrs Ann Aldwinkle	Ditto, ditto	12 0 0
"	Ditto	Ditto, reading to inmates of workh.	2 10 0
"	Ditto	Ditto, Bibles, &c., to poor	1 10 0
"	Ditto	Ditto, poor	14 0 0
1682.	Rachel Sawyer (£100)	Ditto apprenticing childn. (lost)
"	Mrs Eliz. Baker (£150)	Ditto, bread to poor	4 10 0
"	Charity stock (£663, 4s. 4 per cent.)	Ditto, girls' school	26 10 0
"	Sir John Knightley	Ditto, Sunday-school	5 5 0
1769.	Joseph Nunneley (£100)	Ditto, great meeting-house	5 0 0
1781.	Elizabeth Baker (£100)	Ditto, ditto	5 0 0
1826.	Mary Mee (£19, 19s.)	Ditto, ditto	1 0 0
1841.	Thomas Dash (£100)	In aid of Nunneley's Charity	3 0 0
"	Ditto (£50)	Sunday-school	1 10 0
"	Ragsdale's gift	Lilford parish, poor	1 0 0
1770.	William Lascells (£164, 9s. 9d.)	{ Wigsthorpe hamlet, apprentic- ing children, &c.	7 0 0
1725.	Sir John and Lady Eliz. Germain...	Lowick parish, school	90 0 0
"	Poor's Land (7a.)	Ditto, apprenticing children, &c.	24 0 0
"	Church Land (20a.)	Ditto, church	30 0 0
1771.	Mrs Mary Wheat (£30)	Ditto, poor	1 10 0
"	Church Land (10a. 3r.)	Sudborough parish	12 0 0
1781.	The Marchioness of Bath (£600) ..	Ditto, Sunday-school	20 0 0

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To, what place and purpose applied.	Annual value.
1769.	Thomas Ekins (rent)	Twywell parish, poor	1 0 6
1753.	John Harris (£10)	Ditto, ditto	1 0 0
"	Commissioners of Inclosure	Ditto, church	0 8 0
"	Thomas Archer (£36)	Ditto, poor	1 16 0
"	Hunt's Charity	Warkton parish, poor	2 6 10
"	Church (5a. 1r.) land	Ditto	12 10 0
1577.	Peter & Edwd. Grey (land, &c.)	Woodford parish, poor	102 9 4
"	"Whalley's Money"	Ditto, ditto	0 13 4
"	Church Land (14a. 3r. 5p.)	Ditto	40 0 0
Total			£1880 11 4

ADDINGTON (GREAT) PARISH.

Great Addington, or Addington Magna, is bounded on the east by Ringstead, on the north by Woodford, on the west by Burton Latimer, and on the south by Little Addington. It contains 1220 acres; its population in 1801 was 200; in 1831, 282; in 1841, 266; in 1851, 270; in 1861, 302; in 1871, 320 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1834, and the gross estimated rental £2173. The soil is principally a strong clay; and the principal proprietors are Mr James Rennie Wilkinson, Mr Thomas Walters, George Capron, Esq.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Osmund held 1 hide and 1 virgate of land in Edintone, of the Bishop of Constance. In King Edward's time, it was the freehold of Azar, and valued at 10s., but was now advanced to 20s. The abbey of Burgh had 1½ hide, and the abbey of Croyland had 2 hides here at the same time. These estates were then rated at 10s. and 40s. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), the Abbot of Croyland, or Crowland, and Robert de Vere, were lords of this manor, and in the twenty-fifth of Edward III. (1351), Robert de Vere levied a fine of it. With this family it continued till the reign of Henry VIII., when it passed in marriage to John Lord Mordaunt, and with his descendants it continued for several generations. Thomas Andrew, Esq., of Harleston, whose predecessors bought it of Lord Mordaunt, was lord of the manor in Bridges' time. The possessions here belonging to the abbey of Croyland were seized by the Crown at the dissolution, and granted in the fourth of Queen Mary (1556) to Sir Robert Lane, Knt., and Anthony Throgmorton, from whom they passed to the family of Clarke.

The Village of Great Addington, which is small, is situate about 4 miles S. W. of Thrapston, in the vicinity of the Northampton Canal and Peterborough Railway.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is a small ancient structure, consisting of chancel, double nave, north and south aisles, north chapel and vestry, with square tower containing four bells and a clock. The south porch is entered through a handsome Norman arch. In a niche in the wall of the north chapel is a monument to Henry de Vere, Esq., with a recumbent figure, supposed to have been placed there during the reign of Henry VIII., but the date is obliterated. On the opposite wall of this chapel is a piscina, and within the communion rails is a tomb with a fine brass on it to the memory of John Bloxam. The parish register dates back to 1692. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's book at £10, 12s. 8½d., and now worth about £460 per annum. The tithes were commuted for land in 1803. The Rev. Richard Doke, M.A., is both patron and incumbent. A chantry was founded here by Henry de Vere, and endowed with lands, for a "priest to sing for ever for himself and his ancestors." The Rectory House, pleasantly situated at the back of the church, is a substantial stone building, erected in 1678, and thoroughly repaired by the present rector in 1870. The National School is a good stone building, erected in 1873-4, at a cost of £500.

Human Remains.—Near the S.E. end of the village is an elevation called Shooter's-hill, which seems to have been used as a place of burial by the ancient Britons and Romans, several human skeletons and ancient relics having been found there at various periods, but especially in the spring of 1847. Mr Cole, who visited and examined the remains at that time, tells us that, whilst digging for gravel, "the spades of the men employed came in contact, day by day, with many perfect skeletons of human beings, which had been apparently interred with great regularity. Nine or ten were thus disclosed; but according to the reports of the workmen, scores have been noticed in various directions about the field at different times, while they have been occupied in their business of digging for gravel. The skeletons were found within a few feet of the level of the natural soil, and there was no appearance that the earth had ever been raised over them. There was nothing around or about the spot to indicate that a tumulus of any description had been constructed to protect these venerable sepulchres. The sand and the gravel had proved admirably dry preservatives of the several subjects, and there was no indication of their ever having been disturbed, during the long lapse of ages which must have intervened since they were deposited in the soil, until the present period." It is somewhat remarkable that in some cases the face of the body had been placed downwards, and others laid on their sides, whilst in three instances skeletons were found completely headless; and it is curious to notice that, in lieu of the head of each of these subjects, three or four stones had been heaped up. A rudely constructed urn or vase of unbaked clay, called by Druidical antiquaries the drinking-cup, found at the feet of one of the skeletons, is indicative of the antiquity of this burial-place. Spear-heads and daggers, and portions of other ancient warlike instruments, as well as necklaces and other ornaments, were found near some of the skeletons. Here was also found "the Druid sandstone, which is silex and pebbles forming a breccia, in the manner of pudding stone. The Druids held it in great estimation, and used it as a building-stone. Amulets were formed of the pebbles." In an adjoining field is a little tumulus-like elevation, in which skeletons were also found. "From time immemorial," continues Mr Cole, in his lecture on this subject, "the field in which the skeletons were found has been called Shooter's-hill; and the tradition is, that it was so named in consequence of a warlike conflict which took place there, and that in the little tumulus below, the spoils and general treasures were carefully deposited. On the western side of the gravel-pit where the skeletons were found is a rather deep valley; and beyond this striking declivity, the rising ground assumes an elevation greater by 42 feet than that where the interments were disclosed, rising most imposingly and majestically above their compeers, and forming a complete barrier to the vision in that direction—a fine situation for the superstitious, uncivilised aborigines of the island. Along this kind of deep ravine, at certain seasons, we may consider the hollow wind to sweep, as if striking the harp to the wild requiem of the deceased, and at others chanting their eternal dirge; while at the calmer seasons, this beautiful dell impresses the mind with the idea of perfect tranquillity and heartfelt repose; one, presenting an imposing idea, bordering on the sublime; the other calming down the spirit to the charms of the beautiful." Mr Wilkinson, in 1866, while digging gravel near his house in Shooter's Hill, found six complete skeletons, and an iron dagger. Two stone coffins were found on different occasions in opening graves in the churchyard, about 18 inches from the surface, and may now be seen, one in the church, the other in the churchyard.

Letters are received through Thrapston.

Abbott William, carpenter	Harris J. blacksmith, & p. clerk	Coleman Thomas
Coleman Thos. miller & baker	Hudson Law. vict. Leopard	Harris John
Colson Mr Thomas	Hudson William, wheelwright	Linnell Thomas
Doke Rev. Richd. M.A. rector	Knight Geo. vict. Hare & Hounds	Walters T. (yeoman), The Hall
Feary John, shopkeeper	Farmers and Graziers.	Ward John
Gunn George, cottager	Brown Richard, Lodge	Wilkinson Jas. Rennie (yeo.);

ADDINGTON (LITTLE) PARISH

Is bounded on the east by the river Nene, on the west by Finedon, on the north by Great Addington, and on the south by Irthlingborough. It contains 1090 acres, of the rateable value of £1734; and the gross estimated rental is £2061. The population in 1801 was 212; in 1831, 264; in 1841, 229; in 1851, 299; in 1861, 337; and in 1871, 320 souls. The soil is clay and limestone, and ironstone has been recently discovered in the parish. The principal landowners are George Capron, Esq., Messrs Charles Ridgway Laing, Thomas Pashler, and Thomas Walters.

Manor.—The Abbot of Peterborough held 3 hides of land here at the time of the general survey. Hugh de Waterille was the under-tenant, and the estate was valued at 40s. In the reign of Edward I., this manor was in the possession of the family of Bernak; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), the convent of Sulby enjoyed the manorial rights of Little Addington. After the dissolution, this lordship was granted to Edward Humfrey, and it descended to his posterity. The lordship was afterwards divided among several freeholders. The village of Little Addington is about five miles south of Thrapston.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a small edifice, consisting of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, north porch and square tower surmounted by a spire, and containing three bells; it was thoroughly restored and resealed in 1857. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £7, 12s., and now worth £300 per annum, in the patronage and incumbency of the Rev. A. Boodle, M.A. vicar. The tithes are commuted. The Vicarage House, situated at the south end of the village, was erected in 1859; and the National School was built in 1873 at a cost of £300. Here is a Wesleyan Chapel, erected in 1844.

Post-Office.—Robert Wiles, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Thrapston at 9 A.M., and are despatched at 3.55 P.M.

Agar Thos. thresh.-mach. onr.
Brown Miss Cath. schoolmistrs.
Boodle Rev. Adolph, M.A. vicar
Cheney Mrs Frances
Darlow William, beerhouse
Mitchell Mrs Eliz. butcher and vict. Bell

Mitchell William, cottager
Odell Mrs Eliz. shopkeeper
Perkins Wm. baker & pigdealer.
Somes Mr James
Wiles Rt. shopkepr. post-office
Wilson Robert, shoemaker

Farmers and Graziers.

Cave John Thomas
Pashler Thomas (yeoman)
Smith John, Lodge
Smith Robert
Wakefield Thos. Willington]

ALDWINKLE ALL SAINTS AND ST PETER'S PARISHES

Are bounded on the north by Wadenhoe, on the west by Islip and Sudborough, on the south by Titchmarsh, and on the east by the river Nene. These are two distinct parishes and manors, containing together 2707 acres, of the gross estimated rental of £4650, and of the rateable value of £3969. Aldwinkle All Saints has 1224 acres, whose gross estimated rental is £2299, and its rateable value £1970. St Peter's parish has 1483 acres, gross estimated rental £2351, and the rateable value is £1999. The population of Aldwinkle All Saints in 1801 was 349; in 1831, 247; in 1841, 272; in 1851, 370; in 1861, 364; and in 1871, 339. The population of Aldwinkle St Peter's in 1801 was 146; in 1831, 171; in 1841, 183; in 1851, 232; in 1861, 222; and in 1871, 217 souls. These parishes contain some extensive woodlands, and the soil is generally good. A chalybeate spring rises in a plantation belonging to Miss Chapman, who, with Lord Lilford, the lord of the manor, and Mrs Stopford Sackville, are the principal landowners. The river Nene, which flows through Aldwinkle St Peter's, is navigable to the sea, and communicates with the Northampton canal.

Manor.—Eldewincle contained eight hides of land at the time of the Conqueror's survey, five of which were held of Guy de Reinbuedcurt, and three of the Abbot of Burgh. The former estate was then valued at 50s., and the latter at 30s. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Richard de Aldwinkle was one of the lords of Aldwinkle, and with his descendants the estates continued till 1466, when William de Aldwinkle, Esq., died here, and was buried in All Saints church. The other manor, possessed by the Abbey of Peterborough, was in the possession of Walter de Langton, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, in the twenty-ninth of Edward I. (1300); and in the eighth of Edward II. (1314) it was confirmed by the Crown to Thomas Earl of Lancaster. It subsequently passed through various possessors to the Exeter family. Lord Lilford is the present proprietor of both manors, and the principal owner of the land.

The two villages of Aldwinkle All Saints, and St Peter's, are adjacent to each other, about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles north by east from Thrapston.

The Church of All Saints, an ancient stone structure, is considered a beautiful specimen of the Perpendicular and Decorated styles, and consists of a nave and side aisles, chancel, chantry, chapel, south porch, and a fine embattled tower of the Rectilinear period, containing five bells. The tower arch, a very good one of the same period, is blocked up, and an unsightly gallery which occupies the front of it, hides the west window, which is of three lights with Rectilinear tracery, and there is an admirable west doorway of the same period. The chancel was restored in 1863, when it was reroofed and floored, and had new windows inserted. Samuel Sharp, Esq., who is an excellent authority, as well in architectural as in geological science, fixes the date of this church between the years 1230 and 1250. There is a brass monument to Wilkes Aldwinkle, dated 1463. The benefice is a rectory in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's book at £12, 4s. 9d., and now worth £380 per annum; in the patronage of George Capron, Esq., and incumbency of the Rev. Robert Roberts, B.A.

The Rectory House, in which the poet Dryden was born, is a plain stone building opposite the church.

The Church of Saint Peter's is a handsome Gothic building, of various styles, from the Early English to the Perpendicular, and consists of a nave, south aisles, chancel, and south porch, and a square tower surmounted by a spire, and containing three bells. There are illustrations of Lancet work in this church, which was originally Transitional, and one of the capitals belongs to that period. The tower and spire are well proportioned, and form a good example of the Curvilinear period in which they were erected; and the chancel which was built about the same time contained three or four original windows—that in the chancel arch has been lengthened, the addition being divided from the original by a transome. There are some fine specimens of painted glass of the fourteenth century in the east window, and two of its quatrefoil compartments contained memorable effigies of former rectors of the parish. One bore the inscription "Orate pro anima Rogeri Travers condam rectoris istius ecclesiæ;" the other, "Orate pro vite Wilmé Luffwick (Lowick) rectoris istius ecclesiæ." In the chancel is a mural monument to Mrs Davenant, grandmother to Fuller the church historian; and there are others to the family of Sanderson. The living is a rectory rated in the king's book at £11, 6s. 3d., now worth £230 per annum, in the patronage of Lord Lilford, and the Rev. Henry Ward, M.A., is the incumbent.

The Rectory House is a neat stone building, erected in 1867. Here is a Baptist Chapel erected in 1822; and there are two Schools for boys and girls, free to both the parishes, which are endowed with land yielding £20 a year.

There is also a National School belonging to the two parishes, erected in 1872, by subscription; it stands in St Peter's parish, and has a residence for the master attached to it.

These parishes are famous as the birth-places of the poet Dryden, and Fullarton the historian. John Dryden, the celebrated poet laureate to Charles II. and James II., "Glorious John," was born in the rectory house of Aldwinkle All Saints, on the 9th of August 1631; he was son of Erasmus Dryden, of Titchmarsh, and grandson of Sir Erasmus Dryden, of Canons Ashby. His mother was daughter of the Rev. Henry Pickering, rector of the parish. He received the first rudiments of classical learning at Westminster School, under the care of Dr Busby, where for a Thursday night's exercise he translated the third satire of Persius; and the year before he left this school he wrote a poem on the death of Lord Hastings. In 1650 he was elected a scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. In 1658 he published "Heroick Stanzas on the late Lord Protector, Oliver Cromwell, written after his funeral." In 1660 came out his "Astræ Redux, a poem on the happy restoration and return of his sacred majesty, King Charles II." And the same year his panegyric to the king on his coronation. In 1662 he addressed a poem to the Lord Chancellor Hyde, presented on New Year's Day; and the same year he published a satire on the Dutch. His next piece was "Annus Mirabilis, the Year of Wonders, 1666, an Historical Poem."

Upon the death of Sir William Davenant in 1668, he was made poet laureate and historiographer to Charles II., and the same year published his essay on dramatic poetry, dedicated to the Earl of Dorset. The year following, the "Wild Gallant," his first play, appeared, which was followed by many others with such rapidity that in the space of twenty-five years, besides his other numerous poetical writings, he produced twenty-seven dramatic performances, for which he was treated with more severity than justice, and was even publicly ridiculed on the stage, under the character of Bays, in that excellent comedy "The Rehearsal," written by the Duke of Buckingham. He indeed affected to despise its satire, though it is sufficiently plain that he felt all its force, since in his character of Zimri, in his "Absalom and Achitophel," he took a full revenge on the noble author. After the accession of James II. our poet became a Catholic, upon which occasion Mr Thomas Brown published "The reasons of Mr Bays changing his religion considered." In 1687 he published his "Hind and Panther, a poem," which is a direct defence of the Catholic Church, chiefly by way of dialogue between a Hind, who represents the Church of Rome, and a Panther, who sustains the character of the Church of England. At the Revolution, being disqualified by having turned a Catholic, he was dismissed from the office of poet laureate, and succeeded by Thomas Shadwell, against whom he entertained much resentment, as appears from his "Mac Flecknoe," which is one of the severest satires in any language. He published "The Life of St Francis Xavier," translated from the French, and other works too numerous to notice here, which have rendered his name immortal. He married Lady Elizabeth Howard, daughter of the Earl of Berkshire, by whom he had three sons, Charles, John, and Henry. Mr Dryden died on the 1st of May 1701, and was interred in Westminster Abbey, where there is a handsome monument erected to his memory by John Sheffield, Duke of Buckingham.

Dr Thomas Fuller, the celebrated divine and historian, and author of "The Worthies of England," was son of the rector of Aldwinkle St Peter's, and born there in 1608. He also published "The History of the Holy War," "Holy State," "The Church History of Britain," "The History of the University of Cambridge since the Conquest," "History of Waltham Abbey," &c. He died on the 16th of August 1661, and was buried in the chancel of Cranford Church. In 1662 his "History of the Worthies of England" was published. As to his memory, such extraordinary things are related of it as are scarcely credible. It is said that he could repeat five hundred strange and unconnected words after twice hearing, and could repeat a sermon verbatim, if he once heard it. He undertook once, in passing to and from Temple Bar to the furthest part of Cheapside, to tell at his return every sign as it stood in order on both sides of the way, repeating them either backwards or forwards; and he did it exactly. His manner of writing was still more strange and extraordinary, from the top of the page to the bottom, something like the Chinese. We are told that he would write near the margin the first words of every line down to the foot of the paper; then, by beginning at the head again, would so perfectly fill up every one of these lines, as without spaces, interlineations, or contractions, would so connect the ends and beginnings, that the sense would appear as complete as if he had written it in a continued series after the ordinary manner.

For charities of these parishes, see table prefixed to the hundred.

Letters arrive through Thrapston at 10 A.M., and are despatched at 3.45 P.M.

(Marked * reside at Aldwinkle St Peter's.)

*Allen Mr Philip	Hawkins Captain John	*Ward Rev. Henry, M.A. rector of St Peter's
*Andrew John, baker	Holland Edward, hawker	*Ward William, schoolmaster
Andrew John, gamekeeper	Mayes Ebr. shoemaker, & beerh.	*Warden Thos. wheelwright and cabinet-maker
Batson Richardson, farm bailiff	*Mayes Wm., beerh. & shopkpr.	Weeding Mr John
Beasley Thomas, grocer, draper, and blacksmith	McKay Daniel, gamekeeper
Beasley William, blacksmith	*Moisey John, plumber, &c.
Brown John, vict. Rose and Crown , and butcher	Parkins Mrs Mary A. dressmkr.	Farmers and Graziers.
*Chapman Miss Elizabeth	*Pates Rev. Charles (Baptist)	Allen John (and maltster)
Chapman Wm. Sherard, com. agt.	*Prentice Mr William	*Chapman George (& maltster)
Davison Lewis, butcher	*Pridmore James, baker	*Cheney William, Lodge
*French Edmund, shoemaker	Roberts Rev. Robert, M.A. rector of All Saints	*Coales Henry, Lodge
French George, shoemaker	*Stretton William, tailor	*Hill John
French William, cottager	Todd Mrs Lucy, dressmaker	Siddons Mrs Ellen, Lodge
	Walding Mrs Rebecca	Thompson Nathl. & Maile John

Carriers.—St John Height and Samuel Green to Thrapston on Tues. and Oundle on Thurs.

BARNWELL ALL SAINTS, OR KING'S BARNWELL,

Is a parish belonging to the hundred of Huxloe, but locally situated in that of Polebrook, and in ecclesiastical matters consolidated with Barnwell St Andrew, which it adjoins. It contains 1719a. 2r.; its population in 1801 was 86; in 1831, 126; in 1841, 140; in 1861, 115; in 1871, 118 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1923; and the gross estimated rental £2199. The Duke of Buccleuch is lord of the manor and the principal owner of the soil.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, Bernewell, which consisted of 6 hides of land, was in the hands of the king; there were 24 acres of meadow, and the whole, with Tansor, was rated at £30. Robert de Ferrers held Barnwell of the fee of the Crown, in the reign of Henry II. In the ninth of Edward I. (1280), Hugh le Despenser was lord of the manor, and from this family it reverted to the Crown, and was granted in the eleventh of Edward III. (1337), to John Ravensholm, who in the twenty-second of the same reign (1348) obtained the grant of a weekly market here, on Friday, and an annual fair on the festival of St Luke. It afterwards passed into the possession of the family of Stury; and in the reign of Henry VIII., George Kirkham, Esq., of Warmington, was in possession of it. In the thirty-fourth of this reign (1542), Sir Robert Kirkham, Knt., sold it for £314 to John Banaster, who alienated it to Sir Edward Montagu, and from him it descended lineally to the present proprietor. Here was also another manor, which in the reign of Queen Elizabeth was in the possession of the Dudley family, from which it passed to the Montagu family.

The Village of Barnwell All Saints is distant three miles south-east from Oundle.

The Church, which was dedicated to All Saints, was pulled down on the consolidation of this parish with Barnwell St Andrews, by act of parliament, in 1821, except the chancel, which has since been renovated, and now remains as the mausoleum of the Earls of Sandwich, a branch of the noble family of Montagu. Here is a curious alabaster pyramidal monument belonging to that family. This living was a rectory valued in the king's books at £15, 6s. 8d. Roman coins and other antiquities have been found in these parishes. For the charities and directory of this parish, see Barnwell St Andrews.

BARTON SEAGRAVE PARISH

Is bounded by Warkton on the north, Kettering on the west, Burton Latimer on the south, and by Cranford on the east. It contains 1755 acres; and its population in 1801 was 159; in 1831, 203; in 1841, 219; in 1851, 207; in 1861, 199; and in 1871, 200 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3731, and the gross estimated rental £4127, 10s. The soil in general is a deep loam; and the principal owner is Lady Hood. The parish derived its present name from the family of Seagrave, the most eminent member of which was Nicholas de Seagrave, Marshal of England in the time of Edward II. ; but it had been called Barton Hanred, from its previous lords.

Manor.—In the Saxon times, Burred and his kinsmen possessed this lordship, and gave it to the abbey of Burgh, from which it was afterwards unjustly taken by the king's justiciary. At the time of the Domesday survey, the Bishop of Constance had 4 hides here, which, with 2 mills, 40a. of meadow, and 8a. of wood, were valued at £5. In the reign of Henry II., Barton contained 5 hides, and was held by Geoffrey Chamberlain, of the fee of Gloucester. It afterwards passed to the Seagraves, one of whom, the above-named Nicholas, obtained license to make a castle of his manor-house here. The manor was carried in marriage to the Mowbrays, and from them descended to the Duke of Norfolk. About the year 1665 it was purchased of Mr Humfrey, Lord Cullen, and others, by the family of Bridges, and the Duke of Montagu was lord paramount. Mr Tibbits was the late proprietor, and Lady Hood, his grand-daughter, is the present possessor. The convent of Sulby, and the Knights Hospitallers of St John of Jerusalem, had each possessions in this parish.

The Village of Barton Seagrave, surrounded by groves and lofty trees, is situate on a gentle ascent, about two miles S.E. of Kettering. From foundations dug up in several places, this village must have been considerably larger. The castle was surrounded by a moat, and stood westward of the church.

The Church, dedicated to St Botolph, consists of a nave and south aisle, chancel, and a low, broad, embattled tower between the nave and the chancel, and containing four bells and a clock. Though the edifice on the whole is of motley construction, yet it bears several marks of its Saxon origin, and is so far the most interesting fragment of ancient architecture in the neighbourhood. The west end of the church is covered with ivy. On the south side of the tower is a small chamber separated from the rest of the church, in which are some mural tablets, and a vault belonging to the Bridges family. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £10, 17s. 1d., and now worth £500 per annum. The Duke of Buccleuch is patron, and the Hon. and Rev. John Marsham, B.A., is the rector. The tithes have been commuted. The Rectory House stands near the church ; and in the village is an Infant School supported by Lady Hood.

Barton Seagrave Hall, the residence of Lady Hood, is an ancient stone building.

Charities.—Jeffrey Ekins, in 1773, left a rent-charge on land at Twywill of 30s. a year to be given to the poor of this parish at Christmas.

Eminent Men.—John Bridges, Esq., whose name the history of this county (in 2 vols. folio) bears, was a native of this parish, and resided here. It is highly esteemed and considered one of the best county histories ever published. The materials for it were collected by Mr Bridges with great labour, and at an expense, it is said, of several thousand pounds, but he died before these materials could be compiled. The work was thrown into its present shape by the Rev. Peter Whalley, and published in the year 1791. Humphrey Henchman, Bishop of London, was born here in 1592. He was instrumental in promoting the escape of Charles II., and died in 1675.

Letters arrive from Kettering at 7.45 A.M., and the wall-box is cleared at 6 P.M.

Hood Viscountess, The Hall	Hudson Mrs Ann, blacksmith and shopkeeper	Gawthropp Robert William, Barton Lodge
Marsham Hon. and Rev. John, B.A. rector	Watte Hy. farm bailiff & gardnr.	Wallis Saml. Southfield Farm
Tibbits Capt. John Borlase, J.P.D.L. The Hall	Farmers and Graziers.	Woods John
Hudson Miss Ann, schoolmrs.	Dale William, Manor House

BURTON LATIMER PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Cranford on the east, Barton Seagrave on the north, Isham on the west, and Finedon on the south. It contains 2615 acres ; its population in 1801 was 669 ; in 1831, 995 ; in 1841, 965 ; in 1851, 1007; in 1861, 1158; and in 1871, 1280 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £6604, 12s., and the estimated gross rental £7333, 8s. The soil is very good, and yields excellent crops; there is some limestone, much ironstone, but very little gravel in the parish. The principal proprietors are the Rev. Latimer Harper (lord of the manor), Rev. T. Bartlett, rector, and Messrs Samuel Wallis, John Cook Eady, and William Linnell. The lordship is well supplied with excellent springs.

Manor.—At the Conqueror's survey, Guy de Reinbuedcurt held 8½ hides of land here, which, with 2 mills of the yearly rent of 16s., and 20 acres of meadow, were then valued at £6. Richard held 1½ hide here at the same time, of the Bishop of Constance. These two estates were considered afterwards as two distinct manors. In the reign of Henry II., Richard de Reincurt had 8½ hides, and William de Houton 1½ hide; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), John Devereux was Lord of Burton, from whom it passed to the family of De Eylesford. The other manor was held by the family of Plessy or Plesset, until the fourth of Henry V. (1416), when it devolved on John Cammell, with whose descendants it continued till the time of Henry VII., when it passed to John Bouton. It was then certified to be held of the king in capite, by knight's service. In the forty-fifth of Edward III. (1371), the first-mentioned manor, with the advowson of the church, passed from John de Eylesford to William Latimer, Lord of Danby, and his heirs; and with this family it continued till the death of John, Lord Latimer, in the nineteenth of Elizabeth (1576), when it descended to his daughter Catherine, wife of Henry, Earl of Northumberland. The next possessors of it were the family of Bacon, and about a century since, Dr Perkins held it in right of his wife, widow of the late Mr Bacon. In the third of Henry VIII. (1511), Sir Richard Empson, attainted of high treason, possessed a manor here, which was granted to Sir William Compton, Knight. The abbey of Croxton had possessions in this parish.

The Village of Burton Latimer, which is large, healthy, and pleasantly situated, stands about 3½ miles S.E. of Kettering. The Leicester and Bedford branch of the Midland Railway runs through this parish, in which is a station about 1 mile west of the village; and the large flour and chicory mills belonging to Messrs J. & T. Wallis are situated near the station.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a large and very handsome structure, of various styles, from Norman to Perpendicular, consisting of a nave and side aisles, chancel, north porch, and a square embattled tower surmounted by a handsome spire containing five bells. The church underwent several important alterations in 1868, at a cost of £4000, when the tower and spire were rebuilt, and the nave, aisles, and chancel thoroughly restored. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £29, 10s., and now worth about £1100 per annum. The Rev. Francis Browne Newman, M.A., patron, Rev. T. Bartlett, incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1803. The Rectory House, which stands near the church, in extensive pleasure grounds, was newly faced with stone in 1750, by the Rev. Sir J. Dolben, the then rector, and it was considerably enlarged by the Rev. D. B. Bevan, the late rector and patron. A Baptist Chapel was built in 1744, and enlarged in 1832.

The Free School, now used as a National School for boys and girls, is endowed with £48 per annum, arising from 10 acres of land left, in 1589, by Elizabeth Margaret Burbank, and an annuity of £7, under a decree of the Court of Chancery. An Infant School, the property of the patron, is endowed with five acres, left in 1792 by the Rev. Samuel Barwick, which now yields £21, 10s. per annum.

Amongst the Charities of the parish (for which see the table prefixed to this hundred), are the poor's allotment, which consists of 70a., and lets for £109, 6s. per annum; and Scott's charity, 40a. and 7 cottages, rebuilt some years since, which now let for £66, 7s. 10d. There are few rural parishes can boast of so many important charities.

Post, Money-Order, Savings' Bank, and Telegraph Office.—Joseph Moore, postmaster. Letters arrive from Kettering at 8 A.M., and are despatched at 5.15 P.M.

Ambler Abraham, grocer
Ambler Thos. baker & butcher
Ashley Edward, hurdle-maker
Ayres Henry, shopkeeper
Ball Thos. mason and builder
Barber Miss Ann, day school
Brown Wm. vict. Duke's Arms
Burr Brothers, corn millers,
Burton Mill
Cooper John, baker
Craven Josh. miller & corn dlr.
Crozen John Thos. brickmaker
Crozen Thomas, beerhouse
Dickinson Samuel, shoemaker
Downing Joseph, carpenter
Eady John, market gardener
Ellis John, station-master, Isham station
Glover John Green, builder and contractor
Hale Mr John
Harding William, butcher
Harper Miss Ellen
Hensman Samuel, pariah clerk
Industrial Co-operative Store,
Joseph Mason, manager
James David, grocer, draper, and clothier

Lewin Lewis, grocer and draper
Lewis Sam. vict. Wagon & Horses
May Rev. William (Baptist)
Maycock Thomas, butcher
Miller Mr James
Miller Miss Sarah, vict. Horse
and Groom
Moore Jph. grocer, statnr. & agt.
for Royal Fire & Life, & P.O.
Newman Rev. Francis Browne,
M.A. rector
Nichols Mr John
Northam Thos. tailor & draper
Patrick Samuel, tailor
Quincey Edward, land surveyor and vict. Red Cow
Quincey Edward, jun. baker, butcher, and grocer
Quincey Thomas Giles, boot
and shoe agent
Rhoddiss Fred. boot & shoe agt.
Robinson Samuel, baker
Sharp William, grocer, and boot
and shoe agent
Simpson George, carpenter and wheelwright
Simpson Mr Thomas

Stalker David Bourdes, master
of National school
Talbutt George, baker
Taylor Wm. agent for Messrs
Ellis & Everard
Thompson Joseph, saddler and harness maker
Wallis Jno. & Thos. corn mills &
chicory manfacs. Burton Mills
Whitely Miss Mary Ann, mistress Infant school
Wignell Misses Adelaide and Caroline
Wittering John, shopkeeper
Wright Mrs Lucy

Farmers and Graziers.

Coles Thomas
Downing Mrs Hannah
Eady John Cook (yeoman)
Everett James
Herbert William Samuel
Linnell William (yeoman)
Osborne James
Stokes John Northen
Sudborough Mrs Sarah
Rowell John Dean
Walker John

Carrier.—Joseph Miller to Kettering, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday, and to Wellingborough, Wednesday and Saturday.

CRANFORD (ST ANDREW AND ST JOHN) PARISHES.

These two parishes, which are separated from each other by a small stream, lie north-east from Burton Latimer. In early records the lordships are not distinguished, but in later times were accounted separate liberties, and are now independent parishes. They contain 2229 acres, of the rateable value of £3574, and a gross estimated rental of £4785. The population in 1801 was 419; in 1831, 564; in 1841, 598; in 1851, 556; in 1861, 560; and in 1871, 496 souls. The soil of Cranford St Andrew is principally a black clay, that of St John a strong clay, and there is an abundance of limestone, and also of ironstone, in both parishes, which is extensively worked. Both are situated on a band of ironstone running east and west, with Great Oolite and clay to the north and south. The principal proprietors are the Duke of Buccleuch (lord of the manor), and Sir John Blencowe Robinson, Bart. The Midland Railway branch, from Kettering to Huntingdon and Cambridge, passes through Cranford St John, and has a station near the village.

Manor.—At the Domesday survey, Robert held 3 hides in Cranford, of the abbey of Burgh; Godric 1½ hide of the king; Odelin 3 virgates of Guy de Reinbuedcurt; and Robert, of the Bishop of Constance, 1 virgate. The whole was then valued at £4, 10s. In the reign of Henry II., these lots were in the hands of several possessors; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Hugh Daundelyn, Thomas Broune, — Curson, and John De Seymor were lords of Cranford. In the reign of Edward III., Sir John Daundelyn was possessed of a manor here, which continued for many generations with his successors, and was sold by Dr Christopher Coo, in 1715, to Sir James Robinson. Another manor, which had been in the family of Fossebrokes, passed from them to the Maidwells, from whom it came to the Walcots, who sold it to Sir James Robinson, Bart. These manors were in Cranford St Andrew. Another manor in Cranford lordship was possessed by the family of Drayton, in the reign of Richard II., and passed from them to the Lovetts. In the twenty-fourth of Henry VIII. (1532), Sir Edward Montague levied a fine of it, and with his descendants it continued. The Rev. Sir George Stamp Robinson, the seventh baronet, was the son of the Rev. Wm. Villiers Robinson (second son of the fifth baronet), by the daughter of Stamp Brooksbank, Esq. He was born in 1797, succeeded his uncle, the sixth baronet, in 1833, married in 1827, Emma, daughter of R. W. Blencowe, Esq.; educated at Winchester and New College, Oxford; was rector of Cranford from 1822 to 1845, and died 9th of October 1873; and is succeeded by his son, John Blencowe-Robinson, the eighth baronet, who was born in 1830, married in 1861 Winifred, a daughter of the Rev. E. Stewart. The first baronet was Lord Mayor of London, and received his title for services in the cause of Charles II.; he was nephew of Archbishop Laud. Seats, Cranford Hall, Kettering, and Moulton Park, Northampton. Sir John has recently purchased the Moulton Park estate, which adjoins Kingsthorpe, of which parish he is a considerable owner and lord of the manor. Sir John is a J.P. for the county, and Major of the Northamptonshire and Rutland Militia.

The Villages of Cranford St Andrew and St John are adjacent to each other, and pleasantly situated on the main road from Kettering to Thrapston, about four miles east from the former place, and five miles west from the latter.

The Church of Cranford St Andrew is picturesquely situated within the village, and close to the mansion of Sir J. B. Robinson, Bart. It consists of a nave, north aisle, chancel, north and south chantries, south porch, and tower with a transeptal addition to the north aisle, erected by the patron in 1842. It was thoroughly restored in 1847 by the Rev. Sir George Stamp Robinson, and furnished throughout with open oak sittings.

The Church of Cranford St John consists of a nave and side aisles, chancel, north chantry, south porch and vestry, built to resemble a north porch, was added in 1842. The south aisle was built in the same year by the patron "as a memorial of the early translation to the Church in Heaven of two beloved children." The livings have been consolidated in one rectory, in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books—that of St Andrew at £9, 9s. 7d., and that of St John at £12, and are now worth £500 per annum. Sir John Blencowe-Robinson, Bart., is the patron, and the Rev. Frederick Laud Robinson, M.A., incumbent. The tithes of the former parish were commuted in 1775, and of the latter in 1805. The Rectory House, which has been extensively restored, is a good building, pleasantly situated south of the village, where there is a small Baptist Chapel, erected in 1834.

Cranford Hall, the seat of Sir John Blencowe-Robinson, Bart., is a handsome mansion, situated in a beautiful park, a short distance from the village. In the park is a magnificent elm tree; and there is also a remarkable ash tree of large dimensions. Through the park runs a tributary of Nene.

Worthy.—Rev. Eusebius Paget, author of the "History of the Bible," and other works, was born here in the reign of Queen Mary, and died in London in 1617.

ST ANDREW.

Post-Office, Miss E. Draycott, sub-postmistress. Letters arrive from Kettering at 8.30 A.M. and are despatched at 5 P.M.; on Sundays at 11.40 A.M.

Bird John, carter	Robinson Sir John Blencowe, Bart., Cranford Hall and Moulton Park , Northampton	Farmers and Graziers.
Lyon Charles, blacksmith		Walker William
Newman Clifton, gamekeeper		Watts Thomas Robert
Readyhoff William, shopkeeper	Smith Jas. jr. baker & grazier	Woodin Ja. (and land & mineral agt. to Sir J. B. Robinson)
Robinson Rev. F. L. M.A. rector.	Twelftree W. carp. &c. Woolpack

ST JOHN.

Battle W. brewer & spirit mer.	Holland W. jun. vict. Red Lion	Bunning Thomas Yarrad
Childs George, baker	Payne James, tailor	Carriass Benjamin (& butcher)
Draycott Mrs Emma Rosina, grocer and draper	Townsend Wm. station-master.	Hodson Richard (& vict. Stag)
Ellis & Everard, coal merchants.	West, Biddlee, & Co. coal mer.	Smith James, sen.
Holland William, beer retailer	Farmers and Graziers.	Sharman Wm. Bunyon
	Battle Wm. (and brewer, &c.)

DENFORD PARISH

Is bounded on the north by the river Nene, on the west by Ringstead, on the south by Raunds, and on the east by Thrapston. It contains 1679 acres, of the rateable value of £2387; and the gross estimated rental is £2817. The population in 1801 was 267; in 1831, 319; in 1841, 329; in 1851, 329; in 1861, 429; and in 1871, 458 souls. The soil is principally a cold clay, on limestone. The trustees of the late Thos. Burton, Esq. (the lords of the manor), Messrs William Nichols and Thomas Freeman, are the principal landowners.

Manor.—Buried was the Saxon proprietor of Deneford, but at the Norman survey the Bishop of Constance had 5 hides here, which, with 2 mills, of the yearly rent of 20d., and 250 eels, was valued at £8. Afterwards, this manor was held in moieties by various possessors. Richard Chamberlyn died seized of it in the twenty-first of Richard II. (1397), and with his descendants it continued till the reign of Henry VIII., when it passed to the family of Audelett. It subsequently came into the hands of the Reads, and was sold by Joseph Diston, Esq., in 1718, to Jeremiah Sambrook, Esq. This lordship is within the Honor of Gloucester, and the Duke of Buccleuch is lord paramount.

The Village of Denford, which is small, is situated $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile S. from Thrapston.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is in the Early English style, and occupies a delightful situation on the banks of the Nene. It consists of a nave and side aisles, chancel, south porch, tower containing six bells, and surmounted by a spire. In the chancel are seven stalls, four on the north, and three on the south side, separated by three clustered Early English shafts, with excellent capitals, and rich trefoiled arches. The building was thoroughly restored in 1865, at a cost of about £1400, when it was furnished with open deal sittings. The living is a discharged vicarage, united with that of Ringstead, in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £8, 10s., and now worth about £200 per annum. Miss Leggat is the patroness, and the Rev. Edward Sandford is the vicar.

The Vicarage House, very pleasantly situated near the church, is of white brick, erected in 1862 on a site given by the late vicar.

An Infant School was erected here by subscription in 1870.

Post-Office Letter-box—Letters arrive from Thrapston at about 7.30 A.M. and 1.15 P.M., on week-days only, and the box is cleared at 11.20 A.M. and 5.15 P.M.

Arnold John, carpenter
Childs Jno. vict. Rose & Crown
Essex George, baker
Freeman Chas. grocer, tailor & drap.
Freeman Thos. mason & builder
Holmes Robt. corn & coal m't.
Mayes William, vict. Cock

Page Miss Caroline, schoolmist.
Peach Ths. bakr. h. Ringstead Ldg.
Robinson William, butcher
Sandford Rev. Edward, vicar.
Talbot Mrs Abigail, shopkeeper
Webb John, shopkeeper
Whiteman Mr Charles

Farmers and Graziers.

Briggs Mrs Sarah
Foscutt William
Freeman Thomas
Gale Henry, Denford Lodge
Groom George

FINEDON OR THINGDON PARISH

Is bounded on the east and south by Addington, on the north by Burton Latimer, on the west by Harrowden, and on the south by Wellingborough. The Leicester and London (Midland) Railway passes through the parish, and has a station about $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile from the village. The parish contains 3549 acres; its population in 1801 was 866; in 1831, 1292; in 1841, 1378; in 1851, 1588; in 1861, 1840; and in 1871, 2096 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £9612; and the gross estimated rental is £10,930. The soil is clay, iron and limestone. Mrs Dolben, the lady of the manor, Rev. G. W. Paul, Mrs Purvis, the trustees of the late Hon. George Wentworth Fitzwilliam, Francis Brampton Sharp, Esq., and Viscountess Hood, are the principal proprietors.

Manor.—Before the Norman Conquest, Queen Edith held Tingdene, but after that event, it was in the hands of the Crown, and contained 27 hides of land, which, with 3 mills, of the annual rent of 34s., 50s. of meadow, and a wood 1 mile in length and half a mile in breadth, was then valued at £40. In the reign of Henry III., this lordship became divided amongst several possessors, and passed through various hands, and this division continued to subsist for many years. The greater part of the lordship, from the time of Henry IV. till after the year 1660, was in the possession of the family of Mulso, and then it was carried in marriage to Sir Gilbert Dolben, Bart., and John Dolben, Esq., sons of John, archbishop of York, between whom it was divided. Sir Gilbert having purchased his brother's moiety, became lord of the whole, and from him it descended lineally to Frances, wife of the late W. H. J. Mackworth Dolben, Esq., who is the present possessor. The abbey of Croxton and the college of Irthlingborough had each possessions here, which now form part of the manorial estate.

The Village of Finedon or Thingdon, which is large and compact, stands in a secluded situation on low ground, about 3 miles N.N.E. of Wellingborough, 4 N.W. from Higham Ferrers, and 67 from London. A brook passes through it, dividing it from north to south. The shoe trade is carried on here, but the bulk of the inhabitants are engaged at the Finedon iron works, belonging to the Glendon Iron Ore Company, and in agriculture. In Bridges' time one leg of a gallows was still remaining at the east end of the plantation on the hill north of the village.

At the entrance to the village on the Thrapston road, stands an ancient low obelisk. Opposite the end of the principal street in the village is a pump, over which an arch has been built, bearing the word "Welcome," in old English characters carved on stone scroll. A conspicuous ornament to the village is a memorial tower in the Norman style, built by the late W. H. J. Mackworth Dolben, Esq., to the memory of his son, who was lost at sea.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a very elegant and spacious structure, in the Late Decorated style, and consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch, north and south transepts, chancel, and vestry erected in 1846, and a beautiful tower surmounted by a spire, and containing six bells and a clock. The interior is exceedingly neat; over the porch is a parvise, in which is a valuable library, founded by Sir John English Dolben, Bart., in 1788. Here are several valuable editions of the Fathers, and a fine copy of the General Councils, as well as a curious collection of divinity of the age of the Puritans. The date of this church is the early part of the fourteenth century. The organ, built by Christopher Shrider, son-in-law of the celebrated Father Smith, was opened on 17th May 1717, by Dr Croft. J. Kent, who wrote many beautiful anthems, was the first organist. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £10, 17s. 1d., and now worth about £900 per annum. Rev. George Woodfield Paul, M.A., is both patron and incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1805.

The Vicarage House, built in 1688, is a neat residence near the church. In the village is a Wesleyan Chapel, erected in 1822, and enlarged in 1836. A Sunday school in connection with this chapel was erected in 1869, and a new Wesleyan Reform Chapel is now in course of erection. In the village is a Friends' Meeting House, also an Independent Chapel. The National (Boys) School, which stands near the vicarage, was erected in 1595, and enlarged in 1858, and a class-room was added in 1874. It is supported by an endowment of £100 per annum arising from land purchased with £500 left in 1580 by Richard Walter; by Government grant, and the weekly payments of the children. The Girls' and Infant Schools, first established for girls about the year 1714, are situated in the village, and with the boys' school, are conducted on the National Elementary principle. They are supported by endowment of £102 per annum, arising from land and tenements which were purchased by subscription; and the sum of £288, 11s. 8d. three per cent. reduced annuities was also purchased by the same means and added to this charity; also by Government grant, and the children's pence. (For the other charities, see the table prefixed to this hundred.)

Finedon Hall, the seat of Mrs Dolben, is a spacious mansion, situate in a fine park, a little south of the village. The approach is through a long avenue of elm trees, and on the grounds is a lofty round tower of considerable taste and ornament. The ornamental grounds, comprising about ten acres, are handsomely laid out; their chief feature is a pinetum of considerable extent, containing a valuable collection of coniferous trees and shrubs, a magnificent triple avenue of limes, nearly half a mile in length, enclosed by a holly hedge and a fine sheet of water, the resort in the winter season of numerous flocks of wild fowl, which are objects of great attraction. The owner of these grounds grants permission to respectable persons who may apply for leave to view them.

The Temperance Hall is a Gothic building, erected in 1868, at a cost of £1000, including the site and fixtures. There is a Reading and Club-room, which will accommodate about 300. It is built of ironstone with Bathstone dressings; an illuminated clock adorns the front, and was placed there by subscription.

Gas Works were erected here in 1867, by a company of shareholders, at a cost of £2000, in £5 shares. There is one gasholder, and 32 public lamps. Gas is supplied to the inhabitants at 6s. 8d. per 1000 cubic feet; Jabez Arnold, manager; Samuel Wright, secretary.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank—Mrs Mary Chapman, post-mistress. Letters arrive from Wellingborough at 8 A.M. and 2.55 P.M., and are despatched at 9 A.M. and 5.45 P.M.

Abbott George, sawyer
 Arnold Jabez, manager, Gaswks.
 Baker John, farm bailiff
 Birch Worley P. Esq. Ivy cottage
 Brampton Thomas, stonemason
 Burr Bros. (Jas. & Saml.) millers and farmers, Westfield Lodge
 Burr Josiah, maltster & corn mt.
 Clapham John, bricklayer
 Dolben Mrs Fran. Finedon Hall
 Downing Alfred, builder, plumber, painter, and wheelwrt.
 Henson Wm. Hy. builder & contr.
 Howley Mr John
 Iliffe Chas. tombstone engr.
 Jaquest Mrs Mary, fruiterer
 Kay Miss Martha, infnt. schlmrs.
 Kay Miss My. Ann, mta. girl sch.
 Leete Mr Thomas
 Mackworth Misses Martha and Augusta, Debdale Grove
 Mann Geo. C. master Nat. sch.
 Nichols Fred. Thos. & Wm. carters and coal-dealers
 Parker Jno. Thos. asst. shoe mfr.
 Paul Rev. Geo. Woodfield, M.A. vicar
 Paul Misses Maria, Louisa, and Henrietta
 Pressland David, saddler, &c.
 Smith Geo. hairdresser
 Warner Mrs Mary
 Wheatley John, cattle-dealer
 Whitlark John, Esq.
 Wright Charles, plumber, &c.

Bakers.

Bailey Mrs Vincent
 Butlin Mrs Jane
 Chapman Berry
 M'Alister William
 Partridge Thomas
 Vincent Frederick

Blacksmiths.

Dawson Philip, (agrlimp. mkr.)
 Lewis Henry
 Pyle Benjamin

Boot and Shoe Manfrs.

Claypole George Frederick
 Parker John
 Tompkins Job
 Wright Charles

Boot and Shoemakers.

Hodges William
 Phillips James
 Taylor James

Butchers.

Barnwell John
 Harris John
 Leete John Chapman
 Pettitt William Thomas

Farmers and Graziers.

Bayes Mrs Charlotte, Lodge
 Bearn Mrs Alice Mary, Lodge
 Bearn William Hanley
 Brown John David
 Burr Bros. Westfield Lodge
 Chapman Berry
 Clapham Richard
 Hawkes John, Lodge
 Hill William Lea
 Hollis John, Lodge
 Sharp Fras. Brampton, (yeoman and woolstapler)
 Tompkins Mrs Annie
 Wallis George
 Wallis William

Grocers.

(Marked * are Drapers also.)
 Cooper James (and builder)
 *Co-oper. stores (Jno. Warner, manager)
 *Harlock Joseph
 M'Alister William
 Richardson William
 Tompkins Job
 Underwood Samuel
 *Wright John
 *Wright Samuel

Inns and Taverns.

Bell, Nath. Tompkins (& farmer)
Gate, Edward Everett
Mulso Arms, Mrs Spicer

Beerhouses.

Barnwell John (out-door)
 Cooper Jerome
 Smith John (& wheelwright)
 Warner Thomas

Joiners and Carpenters.

(Marked * are Builders.)

*Cooper James
 *Downing Alfred
 *Henson William Henry
 Vincent Frederick
 Wallington Ephraim
 *Whittering James

Machine Boots, &c. Closers.

Brown William
 Claypole Mrs
 Claypole Richard
 Desborough Thomas
 Haseldine William
 Hill Wright
 Hemphrey Mrs Elizabeth
 Hopkins Charles
 Taylor James
 Ward James
 Walker William Mowe
 Willis Newman
 Willis Thomas

Shopkeepers.

Billing Mrs Ruth
 Fox Thomas
 Haseldine William
 Leonard Thomas
 Roberts George
 Walker Charles

Tailors.

Lewis Ephraim
 Spicer John
 Spicer Robert
 Sturman John

Carriers.—Gabriel Wood, for Midland Railway Company; Joseph Clapham, to Thrapston on Tuesday; Wellingborough, Wednesday; Kettering, Friday; and Northampton on Saturday. John Desborough to Wellingborough, daily.

GRAFTON UNDERWOOD PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the east by Slipton, on the west by Warkton, on the north by Brigstock, and on the south by Cranford and Burton Latimer. It is called Grafton Underwood from a wood here, within the jurisdiction of Rockingham forest. It contains 1755a. 2r. 32p.; the rateable value of the parish is £2068, 10s., and the gross estimated rental is £2158. Its population in 1801 was 227; in 1831, 290; in 1841, 281; in 1851, 296; in 1861, 294; and in 1871, 285 souls. The soil is principally a stiff clay, and limestone; the Duke of Buccleuch and Lord Lyveden are the sole owners.

Manor.—Grastone consisted of 3 hides of land at the general survey, which were held by Roger of Robustus Albirs, and valued at 40s.; and Agemund held half a hide here of Eustachius, at the same time, which was rated at 5s. In the reign of Henry II., Richard de Humez, or Humet, held 4 hides here; in the seventh of Edward I. (1278), Robert le Band and Wm. Hanred were lords of Grafton; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Thomas Browne held it of the king in capite, "by the service of keeping a boy to look after a white brachet, with red ears, two days between the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin and the Nativity." In the twelfth of Richard II. (1388), John la Ware was seized of it, and it descended to his posterity. In the reign of Charles I., John, Earl of Peterborough, was possessed of it, and from him it passed through several intermediate possessors, to the present proprietors.

The Village of Grafton Underwood, which is small, is seated about 4 miles E.N.E. of Kettering.

The Church, dedicated to St James, consists of a nave, north and south aisles, south porch and chancel, and a tower containing four bells, and surmounted by a spire. The interior is neat, and in good repair. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £12, 16s. 3d., and now worth about £300 per annum. The Rt. Hon. Lord Lyveden is the patron, and the Hon. and Rev. Courtenay John Vernon, B.A., is the rector. The tithes were commuted for land in 1777. There are several monuments here to the Earls of Ossory, or the Fitz-Patrick family. The Rectory House, pleasantly situated near the church, is a commodious building of stone, erected in 1869 by the late Lord Lyveden.

Free School (mixed) and a teacher's residence were erected by the Duke of Buccleuch, the former in 1855 and the latter in 1867, and is entirely supported by the Duke, and attended by about forty scholars.

Letters are received here through the Kettering post-office.

Bird James, carpenter
Carley Thomas, shoemaker
Cooch Wm. baker and grocer
Hart Mrs Eliza. shopkeeper

Vernon the Hon. & Rev. Courtenay Jno. B.A. J.P. rector
Farmers and Graziers.
Bagshaw Levi
Dawes Josiah William

Downing William
Eady Eli
Linnell Jas. (and beer retailer)
Measures Joseph
Stevenson John Joseph

IRTHLINGBOROUGH PARISH.

The boundaries of Irtlingborough are formed by the river Nene on the south, Finedon on the north, Wellingborough on the west, and Little Harrowden on the east and north-east. It is commonly pronounced Artleborough, and contains 3545 acres of the rateable value of £10,800; the gross estimated rental is £12,380; and the population in 1801 was 811; in 1831, 1262; in 1841, 1339; in 1851, 1578; in 1861, 2000; and in 1871, 2172 souls. The Peterborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway, and the Leicester and London (Midland) Railway, intersect the parish, and their property, which is included in the above-named sum, is rated at £1800, 16s. 6d. The soil is principally a strong clay, and there is an abundance of limestone and also large beds of ironstone in the parish, and these are now extensively worked by Messrs Butlin & Co., who have erected blast furnaces here. The works of the Wellingborough Bar Iron Company are situated in this parish. The principal proprietors are the executors of the late Hon. George Wentworth Fitzwilliam, the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough (the lords of the manor), Miss Lucas, Mrs Roberts, the executors of the late W. W. Manton, the trustees of Glover's Charity, and Messrs Benjamin Allen and John Price.

Manor.—Irthlingborough formed part of the possessions of the abbey of Peterborough, at a very early period, and at the Domesday survey it had 10 hides and 2 virgates of land here. There were 2 mills of the yearly rent of 23s., and the whole was valued at £11. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1295), the abbot held this township in capite of the king. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), the Abbots of Peterborough and Sulby, and Hugh Wake, were lords of Irthlingborough. The lordship continued in the hands of the Abbot of Peterborough or his tenants, till the suppression of the religious houses, in the reign of Henry VIII., when the revenues arising from it were valued at £33, 8s. 1d.; and, on the erection of the bishopric, was granted to the dean and chapter of the cathedral, with whom it still continues. John Pyel, mercer, citizen, and lord mayor of London, who possessed another manor here in the reign of Edward III. (1372), founded a college for a dean, five secular canons, and four clerks, in the parochial church of St Peter, which being in the gift of the Abbot of Peterborough, he obtained the patronage of the canonries, alternately with the founder's heirs. At the dissolution, in 1535, it was valued at £70, 16s. 10d., and the endowment consisted of the rectory and advowson of the vicarage and lands and rents in Wellingborough, Finedon, Northampton, and St Martin's parish, near Ludgate, London. In the third of Henry VIII. (1511), Henry Hodylston was seized of a manor here, held of the Abbot of Peterborough, and which descended to his daughter, wife of Sir Thomas Cheyne, Knight, whose daughter carried it in marriage to Thomas Lord Harrowden, son of Sir Nicholas Vaux, Knight. In 1661, upon the failure of male issue, it passed from this family, and afterwards to the families of Briscoe and Underwood. It subsequently passed to the Dean and Chapter of Peterborough, the present possessors. The family of Vaux, of Great Harrowden, had formerly a mansion here, which stood about 150 yards to the west of the church, and was taken down by one of the Underwood family.

The Village of Irthlingborough, which is large, and consists principally of one street, nearly a mile in length, is pleasantly situated on the north bank of the river Nene, about two miles N. of Higham Ferrers, 5 W. of Wellingborough, 15 from Northampton, and 66 from London. This was formerly a market town, in the middle of which, upon a graduated base, stands the shaft of the ancient market cross, 13 feet in height. This shaft is the standard for adjusting the provincial pole, by which the doles or portions in the adjacent meadows are measured. Boot and shoemaking is the principal employment of the inhabitants. There is a station for this place and Higham Ferrers on the Peterborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway. The river is here crossed by a stone bridge of fifteen arches. Irthlingborough comprises the consolidated parishes of All Saints and St Peter's. The town is lighted with gas from the works of the Irthlingborough Gas Company established in 1868; the charge to consumers is 5s. 5d. per 1000 cubic feet, there are 27 public lamps, and there is also a good supply of water from the neighbouring springs. The Oddfellows (Manchester Unity) and the Foresters have each a lodge in the village.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, is an ancient structure, exhibiting the remains of a building of great architectural taste and beauty. The main portion of the fabric, like that at Higham Ferrers, was erected while the church was merely parochial, though the building received considerable alterations and additions at the time of the institution of the Collegiate Chapter. It consists of a choir or chancel with aisles, a nave with aisles, north and south transepts, and western porch. At a little distance to the west of the latter, stands the most remarkable feature in the church—a fine detached tower or campanile, surmounted by a lofty octagonal turret, in which is a peal of six bells. In the chancel are the collegiate stalls with carved subcellæ. The east window, which is large, has five lights under a single arch without tracery, and is in the Early Decorated style. The west window, of three lights, is of the Late Decorated character; the clerestory windows, four in number, represent the Late Perpendicular; and in the west wall is a square-headed window of four lights, of the Late Decorated type. Over the eastern gable are the remains of a sancti-bell cot. The campanile or tower occupies nearly the whole of the west end of the nave, and has four doorways opening to the cardinal points. It consists of four stages, two of which rise above the church, crowned by an octagon of two stages, finished with a pointed roof or low spire of lead. The three lower stages are supported by buttresses at the angles. To the north-east of the tower are two subterranean vaulted chambers, the entrance to which was opened in 1840, and were found to communicate with each other; and, during the progress of the excavations, a quantity of wood ashes and some pipes were discovered. These chambers bear the traditional name of "Old Marlom's Parlour," but no reason has been preserved for the appellation. The small square-headed windows of the crypt, opening to the east, are locally known as "Cheney Holes," a designation equally unintelligible. Under the south transept is a crypt, approached by a passage in the thickness of the west wall, and entered by a narrow door from the aisle. In the south aisle of the chancel are several ancient tombs, brasses, &c. In the north-east corner of this aisle is the mutilated effigy of a lady supposed to be one of the Cheyne family. On the south side is the monument to the munificent founder of the college, John Pyel, and his wife Joane; their effigies lie on a panelled tomb adorned with quatrefoils, &c. In the north wall of the chancel, and under a beautifully traceried arch, is a stone coffin discovered a few years ago. The old church of All Saints has long been demolished, but traces of the foundation and one gravestone are still to be seen. The benefice is a rectory and vicarage in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, in the patronage of the executors of the late Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam, and incumbency of the Rev. Joseph Vernon Theed, M.A. The living, which was rated in the king's books at £5, 6s. 8d., is now valued at about £300 per annum. There is no rectory at present, but it is hoped the lords of the manor will give a site for the erection of one.

The Baptist Chapel is a stone building, with Sunday-school attached, which will accommodate about 300 hearers. The Rev. John Inward is the minister. The Wesleyan Chapel, a brick building with stone dressings, erected in 1865, will seat about 400. The ground floor is used as a Sunday-school, and the chapel is approached by a double flight of stone steps.

A New School was erected in 1868, in lieu of the old one, at a cost of about £2000; it will accommodate 330 pupils, and is attended by about 200. Adjoining is a good residence for the master. This school is endowed with £17 a year, left by Wm. Trigg in 1728; who at the same time founded and endowed an almshouse for two poor widows, who receive each £2 per annum. The other charities are an annual rent-charge of £10 left to the poor by Richard Glover in 1801; and 24 acres of church land, which lets for £96 per annum.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank.—Charles E. Perkins, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Higham Ferrers at 7.30 A.M., and are despatched at 9.55 A.M. and 6.20 P.M.

Allen Hy. builder & beerhouse	Brightwell Mrs Jane, machine	Cox William, hairdresser
Allen John, builder	closer	Davis Miss Jane Ann, sch'lmsr.
Allen Joseph, builder	Burnell Geo. machine closer	Goodhall Mrs Maria
Allen Mrs Mary	Bullock Wm. chem. and drug,	Green John, stationmaster,
Armsby Mr George	h. Nottingham — Thomas	Ditchford
Ashby Mrs Sarah	Wyatt, manager	Hill H. Angus, corn, coal, and
Bigley Thomas, currier	Calthrop Rev. Francis James,	timber mercht. h. North'om
Berwick Jas. brick & tilemaker	M.A. curate	Hipkins David A. iron master
Berwick Mrs	Chettle Fisher, stonemason	Horn Henry, beerhouse
Brains Joseph C. stonemason	Clark Dainty, draper	Ingyon John, wheelwright
Brampton Chs. grindery dealer	Clark Mrs	Inward Rev. John (Baptist)
Brightwell Jas. machine closer	Cole Stephen, schoolmaster	Lewis Henry, blacksmith

Lilley Thos. boot & shoe manuf.
currier & leather factor, and Wellingborough and London
Loveday William, draper and shoemaker

Maddison John, coal dealer
Maddison Tenent, tailor
Manton Mrs Mary, Irlthing- borough House

Martin Thos. Hy. blksmith, gas
ftr. & thresh. machine ownr.

Massom Wm. machine closer

Mead George, general merchant

Parsons Mrs Jane

Partridge John Chas. clicker

Payne Edward, parchment

manufr. and leather dresser

Perkins Chas. Edward plumber & glazier, st'ner & toyldr.

Perkins Thos. machine closer

Perkins Thomas, police sergt.

Rice James, beerhouse

Robinson Mrs Louisa

Rooksby Jacob, clicker

Saxby John, tailor and draper

Saxby John, junr. coal dealer

Shelton Arthur, butcher

Skerritt Wm. piano. tuner, &

agent for Phoenix Fire and

British Equitable Life Offices

Skinner Wm. Bank, coml. trav.

Smith Richard, corn miller

Spicer Francis, saddler, &c.

Theed Rev. Joseph Vernon,

M.A. rector

Warren Joseph, butcher

West Septimus, brewer

Bakers.

Parsons Caleb

Parsons Davis

Rawlin John West

West James Cornelius

Boot and Shoe Manfrs.

Groome (Geo.) & Bigley (Robinson)

Lilley Thos. & at Wellingboro'

Loveday William

Maddison William

Partridge John

Rookaby Mrs Elizabeth

Rookaby Henry

Sanders Wm. Hy. (and currier)

Saxby Thomas

Spencer John (army contractor)

Manor House

Farmers and Graziers.

Allen Benjamin, Park Farm

Foster Lucas

Freestone Thomas

Groome Charles Seymour

Parsons George, Mere House

Robinson Richard, Lodge

Rye Joseph (and butcher)

Rye Simon Allen (and maltster)

Scarborough John

Thompson Ridley, The Grange

Welford Joseph, Lodge

Grocers.

(Marked * are Drapers also.)

Beall Mrs Elizabeth

Bodaly and Co.

Featherstonhaugh Charles

Gilroy James

*Godfrey Thomas Sanbrookke

*Payne Henry

Pettitt Richard

Rowe Mrs Hannah

Rye Samuel

Saxby Ephraim (and tailor)

Inns, &c.

Bull (commercial), Geo. Corby

Horse Shoe, John George Dun-

more (and butcher)

Railway Inn, Samuel Groome

Sow and Pigs, Joseph Askham

White Horse, Stephen Horn

Carrier.—Ebenezer Millard to Wellingboro' on Mon. Wed. & Friday, & to Northampton on Sat.

ISLIP PARISH

Is bounded on the east by the river Nene, which divides it from Thrapston, on the north by Aldwinkle, on the west by Lowick, and on the south by Woodford. It contains 1354 acres of the rateable value of £2851; the gross estimated rental is £3360; and the population in 1801 was 440; in 1831, 562; in 1841, 547; in 1851, 594; in 1861, 627; and in 1871, 584 souls. The soil varies in quality, but is very rich; and Mrs Stopford Sackville, of Drayton Hall, is lady of the manor and principal owner. The lordship is well supplied with springs and limestone, and also with large beds of ironstone. These are now extensively worked by Mr Plevins, who has also erected on the estate two blast furnaces capable of producing 400 tons of pig iron weekly, and the foundations and underground work are laid out for the addition of four more blast furnaces.

Manor.—Algar held 1 hide and 1 virgate here, of the Bishop of Constance, at the time of the general survey, and in the reign of Henry II., Albericus held 2 hides here of the king. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Simon de Drayton and John de Tolthorpe were lords of Islip and its members. In the third of Edward III. (1329) John de Islip purchased several lands here, which passed from his descendants to the family of Holt, and from the Holts they came to the Norwiches. In the fifth of James I. (1607) Henry Lord Mordaunt died seized of Islip manor; and in the third of Charles I. (1627) John Lord Mordaunt was advanced to the dignity of Earl of Peterborough. It subsequently passed through several intermediate possessors to the present proprietor.

The Village of Islip is situated on a hill, about half a mile N.N.W. of Thrapston.

The Church, dedicated to St Nicholas, is a handsome structure chiefly in the Perpendicular style, consisting of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, south porch, and a fine square tower surmounted by a crocketed spire, and containing five bells and a clock. It was thoroughly restored in 1854. There is a very handsome reredos, with coloured tiles over the communion table, flanked by diaper work, bearing in relieve the symbols of the four evangelists. On the wall of the tower is a mural tablet to the memory of Dame Mary, wife of Sir John Washington, who died in 1624. She is said to be one of the ancestors of George Washington, the hero of American independence. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £15, 6s. 8d., and now worth £400 per annum. Mrs Stopford Sackville is the patron, and the Rev. Nicholas Francis Lightfoot, M.A., incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land in 1800. The Rectory House, which stands north-west of the church, is a substantial stone building.

The School, for boys, girls, and infants, erected here by subscription in 1861, will accommodate eighty children.

Charity.—Henry Medbury, in 1705, left lands, &c., which yield £125, 11s. 6d. per annum, to be expended as follows:—4s. per week each to two poor widows who should occupy two almshouses which he founded here; £5 a year to widows of beneficed clergymen, residing within twenty miles of Islip, and who had not been left £200 each by their husbands, and other small sums to the poor.

Post-Office.—Misses Kezia and Jane Read, sub-postmistresses. Letters arrive from Thrapston at 6.30 A.M., and are despatched at 6.30 p.m.

Bigge Matthew, J. P. land agt.
Belcher Miss Julia (Wilson & Co.)
Binns Misses Margt. and Mary
Clark William, shopkeeper
Clark Wm. jun. carpenter, &c.
Crawley Hy. jobbing gardiner
Dartnell Mrs Eliz. shopkeeper
Drage Mrs Hannah, beerhouse
Fellows Misses Margt. & Carrie
Goodman Rich. painter & plum.
Horn Mrs Ann Maria, hosier
Horn Charles, stonemason
Horn James, stonemason
Hudson Eli, blacksmith

Ivens Thos. relieving officer, &
registr. of births, deaths, mar.
Kemp Mrs Isabella
Knight Wm. mat & rush-coll. mkr.
Lightfoot Rev. Nicholas Francis, M.A. rector
Loveday Rd. mat & rush-coll. mkr.
Moore Mrs Christiana, stay-mkr.
Moore Jno. btchr. vict. Rose and Crown
Packwood James, shoemaker
Plevins, Chas. Hy. ironstone master and iron manufacturer, h. Woodford

Read Misses Kezia and Jane,
shopkeepers, P.O.
Rye William, plumber, &c.
Sharpe Fred. clerk Islip Wharf
Wells Lewis, vict. Woodpack
Wilson & Co. wine & spirit, &c.
porter, timber, slate, coal, &
stone marta. Islip Wharf
Wilson Miss Maria (W. & Co.)

Farmers and Graziers.

Agutter Thomas
Coltupman William
Hill Hy. Cha. (& miller), Islip Mill

KETTERING PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Warkton and Boughton on the east, by Weekley on the north-east, by Glendon and Rothwell on the north, by Thorpe Malsor and Cransley on the west, and by Broughton and Pytchley on the south. It includes the market-town of Kettering, and contains 2594 acres. The rateable value of the town and parish is £22,709, and the gross estimated rental is £27,667. The population of the parish in 1801 was 3011; in 1811, 3242; in 1821, 3668; in 1831, 4099; in 1841, 4867; in 1851, 5198; in 1861, 5845; and in 1871, 7184.

Manor.—Kettering, called in the Saxon times Cytringan, emerges into the light of history about the year 955, and the historical notices of it from that time are clear, though very brief. By Edwy, who came to the throne in 955, it was given to his servant, Elfsige, about the year 976. A hint in the Ely history suggests that this transaction was one of power, rather than of equity. Certainly, in the next reign, it was given (or more probably restored) by a very carefully worded charter, to Peterborough monastery, of which it remained an appendage till the Reformation. Soon after the death of Edgar, an attempt was made to wrest from the abbot and monks this and other possessions; whereupon a convention of nobles was assembled in London, and a decree made in favour of the Ecclesiastics; which decree was ratified eight days afterwards, at a county meeting at Northampton, the people swearing on the cross to use their power in ensuring its execution. The monks, to prevent further intermeddling with their title, obtained to the charter of Edgar the signature of four of his successors. Kettering is mentioned in Domesday book, thus: "The church herself holds 10 hides in Cateringe, there are 16 carrucates of land in the demesne, one carrucate and one woman servant, and 31 villeins, with 10 carrucates; there are also two mills, of the yearly value of 20s., and 107 acres of meadow land, and 3 acres of wood, the yearly value was £10, it is now £11." In the reign of Henry I., there were 40 villeins; in Stephen's reign, the abbot obtained licence to establish a free warren, of which the present Warren Hill is a memorial. In a bull of Pope Pius II., bearing date 1146, occurs the first mention (as far as is known), of a church here. By a new charter of Richard I., the township of Kettering, with the church and mill (not two as in Domesday book), was confirmed to the abbot and convent. In the year 1227, the village rose to the dignity of a town by the grant of a royal charter, allowing the abbot and monks to have "one market in their own manor, every week, on a Friday." At this time, 3 marks were paid yearly to Peterborough, and the value of the ecclesiastical property, exclusive of this pension, was 35 marks. If the mark was 13s. 4d., and Hallam's estimate of the value of money, as compared with corn and meat, be adopted, these 38 marks were equivalent to £600 at the present day. In the year 1321, an inquiry was made by order of the king, and a sworn jury, into the worth of the church property, and the estimate was £57, 3s. 6d. In the year 1480, a felon who had stolen a piece of cloth at Kettering, was imprisoned at Peterborough. He gained his liberty, however, by a bribe of 40s. to his keeper; but the abbot was indicted before two justices of the peace, and forced to give security of six sufficient men for his good behaviour. Henry VIII., appropriating property then worth £34, 13s. 4d. per year to the church, gave the manor with its appurtenances to Lord William Parr, governor of Rockingham Castle. At a later period, the forty-third of Elizabeth (1602), it was in the hands of Sir Edward Montagu. James I. was lord of Kettering manor, and put it in trust for his son, afterwards Charles I., by whom it was sold; and, after many changes, the manorial rights now belong to the Duke of Buccleuch, and George Lewis Watson, Esq., of Rockingham Castle, six parts to the latter, and four to the former.

In 1726, some antique remains were discovered here, consisting chiefly of Roman coins of different emperors; and in a field near Weekley, two human skeletons and a dagger and spear-head were found about twenty-eight years since, by men who were draining the field.

By an Act of Parliament passed in 1803-4, the common or open field of Kettering, which at that time contained 2260 acres, was enclosed. The old enclosure, chiefly belonging to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, contained 340 acres, exclusive of the area on which the town is built. The open field was awarded as follows:—viz., To seventy-five proprietors, 1488 acres; the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, 257 acres; Lord Sondes, 12 acres; the Rector of Kettering, 445 acres; Kettering town and church lands, 17 acres; Grammar School, 32 acres; and Kettering poor, 9 acres; total, 2260 acres. There is a large deposit of ironstone in the parish, and the Kettering Iron Ore Company have extensive quarries with sidings on the Midland Railway, about one mile north of the station.

THE TOWN OF KETTERING

Occupies a pleasant and healthful situation on the summit of a hill, at the bottom of which flows a small stream which empties itself into the Ise brook, a branch of the river Nene. It is fifteen miles N.N.E. from Northampton, the same distance S.W. from Oundle, nine W. from Thrapston, twenty-eight S.W. from Peterborough, twenty-two S.S.W. from Stamford, nine S. by S.E. from Higham Ferrers, seven and a-half S. from Wellingborough, eleven S.E. from Market Harborough, and seventy-four N.W. from London, on the Midland main line of railway from London to Leicester, Sheffield, Leeds, Bradford, and the north. This line was opened in May 1851, and has a station close to the town, where it forms a junction with the Kettering, Thrapston, Huntingdon, and Cambridge branch, which was opened in May 1866. The town consists of several streets, many of which are very irregularly formed, and was first lighted with gas in 1834, by a company whose present capital is £8000, in £25 shares. The works, which are situated at the bottom of Gas Street, have been enlarged at various times, and are at present undergoing considerable alterations. There are two gas-holders capable of holding 60,000 cubic feet, and 120 public lamps. The gas is of superior quality, and the annual consumption is 14,000,000 feet, which is sold to the inhabitants at 5s. rod. per 1000 feet. Water works were established in 1872, by a company incorporated under the "Companies' Act" of 1862, at a cost of about £12,000, and the present capital is £10,000, raised in £5 shares. An ample supply of water is obtained from a spring called "Stone Moses" in the parish of Weekley, where there is a pumping-station, and the reservoir is on the Rockingham road. The principal trade consists in the manufacture of boots and shoes, which gives employment to a considerable number of persons; tanning and currying leather; and the manufacture of stays, brushes, chicory, and mustard. Silk weaving and wool stapling and combing were formerly carried on here to a considerable extent, but those branches have entirely decayed. The weekly Market is held on Friday, and Fairs are held on the Thursday before Easter, Friday before Whitsuntide, Friday before October 11th, and Friday before December 21st, for horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, &c. The Charter for the market, which was granted in the eleventh of Henry III. (1227), runs thus:—"Henry, by grace of God King of England, &c., &c. Know ye that we granted, and by this present confirmed to the Abbot of the burgh of St Peter, and to the monks there serving God, that they may hold one market at their manor at Kettering once every week, on a Friday."

Government.—The town is not incorporated; but the Local Government Act of 1858 has recently been adopted, the board consisting of nine members. The county police have a station here for the division of Kettering. Petty Sessions are held at the police station once a fortnight, and if circumstances require it, oftener, at which two or more of the following magistrates preside, viz., Sir Geoffrey Palmer, Bart. (chairman), Lieut.-Col. Thomas Arthur, Richard Booth, Esq., Oscar William Holden Hambrough, Esq., Sir John Blencowe-Robinson, Bart., William Somerset Rose, Esq., William Capel Clarke Thornhill, Esq., Capt. John Borlase Tibbits, the Hon. and Rev. Courtenay John Vernon, and George Lewis Watson, Esq. Courts Leet and Baron are held annually, and a Baron and Customary Court is also held here. The County Court for the recovery of debts under £50 is held monthly, on Thursday, at the Corn Exchange, and the following parishes and places are within its jurisdiction:—Barton Seagrave, Beanfield Lawns, Broughton, Burton Latimer, Carlton, Corby, Cottingham, Cranford St Andrew, Cranford St John, Cransley, Desborough, Geddington, Glendon, Grafton Underwood, Harrington, Loddington, Middleton, Newton, Oakley Great and Little, Orton, Pipwell, Pytchley, Rothwell, Rushton, Stanion, Thorpe Malsor, Warkton, and Weekley. Here are two banks and a bank for savings. The Kettering 9th Northamptonshire Rifle Volunteers, embodied in 1868, is comprised of 76 men of all ranks. The armoury and orderly room occupies a portion of the Town Hall. J. Barber, lieutenant; W. East, sub-lieutenant; J. Savage, drill-instructor.

Corn Exchange and Town Hall, in the Market Place, is a brick building with stone facings, erected in 1853, by a company of shareholders at a cost of £3000, raised in £5 shares. It consists of a market room 58 feet by 32 feet, which has a semicircular roof partly of glass supported by cast-iron girders. The upper room, or Town Hall, is partly occupied by the volunteers as above stated. The front, on each side of the entrance, is occupied as officers' room, and, as is usual, the room is occasionally let for concerts, lectures, &c., for which purpose it is well adapted. The Temperance Hall, Gold street, was erected in 1864, to accommodate 300, at a cost of £600. Here is a library of nearly 2000 standard works, which is opened weekly for exchange.

The Cemetery, on the London road, close to the town, was opened for interment on the 1st January 1862, and consecrated by the Bishop of Peterborough on the 15th May following. The cost of buildings and purchase of three acres of land was £4000. In 1870 it was enlarged by the addition of two acres, at a further cost of £1000. It is very tastefully laid out and planted with shrubs, and there are two neat chapels, separated in the usual way by an arch-way which is surmounted by a handsome spire; and at the entrance is a house for the curator.

The Parish Church, dedicated to Sts Peter and Paul, is a handsome structure in the Later style of English architecture, consisting of a nave and side aisles, chancel, north and south chantry, north porch with parvise, and a lofty tower and spire of equal height, about 88 feet each, and containing a peal of eight bells, with chimes, which were restored in 1872. The tower (the date of which is about 1450, whilst portions of the church are much earlier) consists of three stages ornamented with double buttresses, and octagonal turrets at the angles, and the whole is surmounted by a handsome hexagonal crocketed spire, with three windows, diminishing in their size towards the top; round the base is an embattled parapet, connected with the angular turrets, and under that an ornamented fascia, with a small hexangular turret, raised at each corner. The edifice, on the whole, is an excellent specimen of the ecclesiastical architecture peculiar to the district, is very generally admired, and forms a conspicuous object from the neighbouring country. On the wall of the north aisle, are the remains of a painting, in distemper, of St James the Greater; and the east window of the chancel, of three lights, was restored in 1848, and filled with stained glass, executed by Mr Ward, of London, as a memorial of respect from the parishioners to the Rev. Dr Corrie, their late rector, who died November 12th, 1846. In the centre are the armorial bearings of the late rector; the side-lights contain the arms of Dr Davys, the then Bishop of Peterborough, quartered with those of the see, and the arms of the patron, quartered with those of the Hon. Mrs Watson. "This ancient and appropriate kind of memorial," says the editor of the architectural notices of the churches of this county, "which, while it commemorates the departed Christian, adds real beauty to the church in which it is erected, is now, it may be hoped, universally taking the place of those mural tablets and sculptures to which walls, windows, piers, and all architectural symmetry and simplicity were mercilessly sacrificed, and which seldom gave any other return for the graces they destroyed than the heathen emblems of urns and sarcophagi, and inverted torches, which have scarcely any intrinsic beauty beyond the material of which they are composed, and which mean, if they mean anything, that the body is burnt, not buried, and that the soul is not alive for ever, but has eternally perished." The living is a discharged rectory in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £34. 13s. 4d. The fate of the church property has been remarkable. In the year 1565 it was held under a lease by the Watson family, and to them the then rector granted two new leases, handing it over to that family till the year 1802, at a yearly rent varying from £36 to £40. A decree in chancery, in the reign of James II., affirmed the legality of the bargain. After that time the lease was wholly forgotten, nor was it suspected the living was worth more than £40 a year. The Rev. Joseph Knight, who held it when the lease expired, having discovered the document, instituted inquiries, and eventually commenced a suit which was not defended, and succeeded in obtaining possession of the property; so that he found himself suddenly raised from a poor parson of £40 per year, to a living which comprised 439 acres of excellent land. The gross value is now £1162 per annum. The rector has manorial rights over a part of the town, including the houses, &c., extending from the front to the back gates of the rectory premises. The patronage of the living came to the lords of Rockingham, after the dissolution of the monasteries; the present patron is George Lewis Watson, Esq., and the Rev. Henry Lindsay, M.A., hon. canon of Peterborough, is the incumbent. Bridges tells us that there was a chantry in this church, "founded and maintained partly by the devotion of the inhabitants, and partly by the revenues of certain lands and tenements, held by copy of court roll to find a stipendiary priest, called the 'morrow massy priest' to sing there for ever;" and that the Puritans, in 1591, are said to have held several meetings in Kettering and its neighbourhood.

St Andrew's, is a chapel of ease, situated in Rockingham road, and is a substantial stone structure in the Decorated style, consisting of nave, chancel, south aisle, and south porch, with bell turret at west end. It was erected by subscription in 1870, at a cost of £4500, and will seat upwards of 500. The architect was G. E. Street, Esq., R.A. A Mission Chapel, in connection with the church, to accommodate 240, is now (1874) in course of erection in Alexandra Street, at an estimated cost, including the site, of £750.

Chapels.—The Independent Chapel, in Gold street, is a spacious brick building, erected in 1723. It will accommodate 950 hearers, and has a Sunday-school and burial-ground attached. A new Sunday-school, with class-rooms capable of holding 400 children, was added to the chapel in 1849, at a cost of £1400, and an Infant School was erected in 1852 at a further cost of about £200. The congregation is under the pastoral care of the Rev. Thomas Toller, who has ministered to its wants for the long term of fifty-two years. A jubilee was held in 1871 to commemorate the event.

The Baptist Chapel, in Gold street, erected by subscription in 1861, at a cost of £4000, is a commodious brick building, capable of seating about 900 persons; the interior is well fitted up, and in connection with it are excellent school-rooms, a good house and garden for the minister, and four cottages. There are endowments of limited amount for the minister and the poor. The Rev. John B. Myers is the present pastor. On the evening of the 1st of October 1792, a few gentlemen met in the house of Mr Gotch, in Lower street, to discuss a project which had long been earnestly considered. The next morning they met in a house opposite, now the residence of Mr J. T. Stockburn, and formed the Baptist Missionary Society. The Revs. Andrew Fuller, John Ryland, William Carey, and other memorable characters, were amongst the founders. A jubilee was held here, in May 1842, to commemorate the event, when upwards of 10,000 people assembled in a large camp, erected at the rear of the above-mentioned house, which is now an object of curiosity, or rather veneration, to many.

The Calvinistic Baptist Chapel, Wadcroft, is a small brick building, erected in 1866, by Mr James Payne, of Great Oakley, whose private property it is; and the Particular Baptist Chapel, in Buccleuch street, has just been erected at an estimated cost of £100. Rev. William Princep is the minister. The Wesleyan Chapel, Silver street, is a large brick building, with stone dressings, erected by subscription in 1867, at a cost of £3400. It is fitted up with open sittings, galleried all round, and will seat upwards of 600, and has Sunday schools attached. The Friends' Meeting House, in North-hall street, is a small edifice of brick, rebuilt in 1869, and to which a small burial-ground is attached.

Schools.—The Grammar School in Gold street is endowed with lands, &c., now worth £377, 10s. per annum. It was rebuilt in 1856, and is open to boys from the town and neighbourhood at a charge to the former of £2, and the latter £4 per annum. Rev. Thomas Widdowson, B.A., is the master.

A Charity School for girls, in which 20 are taught free, is endowed with £22 per annum: and a Sunday School in connection with the church was endowed with £5, 15s. per annum in 1802, by the Rev. Sir John Knightley. Mrs Aldwinkle in 1789 left £50 for this school, the interest of which was paid up to the year 1812, but it now appears to be lost.

The National School for boys in the Horsemarket, a good brick building with Bathstone dressings, having a master's residence attached, was erected in 1872 for 290 scholars, at a cost of £1290. The average attendance is 190. The National School for girls is situated in the Market place; and that for infants, accommodating 180, in Church walk. National School (mixed), North-hall street, was built in 1859 to accommodate 200, at a cost of £935, and its average attendance is 180.

The British School, with class and infant rooms and master's house attached, was erected in 1834; it is situated in School lane, will accommodate 300, and is attended by an average of 280.

The Mission Hall, Northend, is a stone building, erected in 1873, at a cost of about £400, by Mr Joseph Stockburn, and is placed under the charge of an unsectarian committee.

The Almshouse.—An hospital, or almshouse for six poor people, was erected by Edmund Sawyer, in 1688. No writings can be found relating to the foundation or endowment of this hospital. The Duke of Buccleuch, who acts as patron, nominates the six alms-people, who are usually poor widows or aged persons of Kettering or the neighbourhood; and they receive, in equal shares, the yearly sum of £6, paid as a rent-charge out of the Duke's estates near Kettering; the dividends of £200 South Sea annuities, standing in the names of trustees, which stock was bequeathed for the benefit of the alms-people, in equal shares, by Mrs Martha Baker, by will, dated the 19th March 1782; and the sum of £12 a year under the charity of Mrs Ann Aldwinkle. For the other charities of Kettering, which are numerous, see the table prefixed to this hundred.

The Dispensary, for the supply of medicine and surgical attendance, was established in 1801, and is supported by subscription.

The Union Workhouse is capable of accommodating 250 inmates. The Union embraces an area of 77 square miles, and comprehends the following 30 parishes or townships, viz.:—Barton Seagrave, Broughton, Burton Latimer, Carlton, Cranford St Andrew's and St John's, Cransley, Cottingham, Corby, Desborough, Geddington, Glendon, Grafton Underwood, Harrington, Kettering, Loddington, Middleton, Newton, Oakley Great, Oakley Little, Orton, Rothwell, Rushton, Stanion, Thorpe Malsor, Warkton, and Weekley. The Union is divided into three districts for ordinary, and into four for medical relief. Rev. G. E. Maunsell is now chairman; and the Rev. George Hall and Mr William Toller, vice-chairmen; Mr William Marshall, clerk; Rev. Henry Lindsay, chaplain; Mr and Mrs Moore, master and matron; and the medical officers are Mr J. More, for the Rothwell district; Mr J. L. Price and J. W. Dryland, Kettering district; and Mr Thomas L. Greaves, Corby district. The average weekly number of paupers admitted during the past year was 70, and the average weekly expense of each pauper is 4s.

Worthies.—Dr John Gill, a celebrated Baptist divine and oriental scholar, and Mr Brine, a contemporary divine of great excellence and much ability, both in their day well known as authors, were born in this town, about the year 1697. "It's as certain as that John Gill's in the bookseller's shop" was formerly a proverb. Both these preachers belonged to the hyper-Calvinistic school of theology, and it is remarkable that a greater than they, Andrew Fuller, who did far more than any other man in counteracting their peculiar sentiments, should have become a resident of the town in which they were born.

KETTERING DIRECTORY.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank, High Street.—Samuel Woolston, postmaster. Letters arrive from London and all parts at 5.30 A.M. and 1.15 P.M., and are despatched at 10.30 A.M., and at 6.50 and 10 P.M.

ABBOTT & BIRD, shoe manufacturers, Green la.
Abbott George (A. & Bird), h. Rookingham rd.
Abbott George, shopkeeper, Alexandra street
Abraham Rev. Ed. (Weasleyan), Rookingham rd.
Adams Hy. Watts, coml. trav. Rookingham rd.
Adams John Watts, coml. trav. Rookingham rd.
Allen Charles, j. shoemaker Green lane ter.
Allen Joseph, baker, Bakehouse hill
Allen Mrs Martha Howse, Beech House
Althorp James, j. bricklayer, Alexandra st.
Anderson Fred. blacksmith, Freestone row
Andrew Richard, watchmaker, Gold street
Arnsby Geo. fishmonger, &c. Horse market

BAILEY Fred. shoe manufacturer, Victoria st.
Bailey Robert, riveter, Buccleuch street
Baker Joseph, clerk, High street
Baker Mrs Joyce Eliz. fancy repository, High st.
Bamford Samuel, j. bricklayer, Buccleuch st.
Barber Joseph, bank manager, Market place
Barlow Edwd. brick & tile mfr. Weekley rd. h.

Rothwell

Barton Robert, shopkeeper, Albert street
Bates Geo. auctioneer (B. & Robinson), High st.

Battle Mrs Mary Ann, Horse market
Baxter David Rich. cabt. mkr. &c. Market st.
Baxter Thos. grocer, glass & china dlr. High st.
Bayes Chas. farmer & brickmkr. North-hall st.
Bayes Mrs Charlotte, Lower street
Basley Geo. sewing machine mfr. Market st.
Basley Thomas, vict. Vine, Market street
Bell Charles, baker and shopkr. Newland st.
Bell John, corn miller, Kettering Watermill
Bellamy Mrs Elizabeth, beerhouse, Queen st.
Bellamy Jno. buildr. Victoria st. h. Alexandra st.
Benford Frederick, manager, Tanner's lane
Benford George, tailor and draper, Market pl.
Biddles Alf. engine driver, South Parade ter.
Biddles Jacob, coal merchant (West, B. & Co.), house, Market Harborough
Biddles Robert, coal merchant (West, B. & Co.), house, George street
Billson Thomas, blacksmith, Lower street
Bird Arthur, agent for Ellis & Everard, Rockingham road
Bird Thomas (Abbott & B.), h. Newland st.
Bird Thomas, carpenter, Montagu street
Birrell Wm. Robt. shoe manufacturer, Gas st.

Bland William, cooper, Horse market
Blunson Chas. & Co. tailrs. and draprs. High st.
Blount Mrs Elizabeth, baker, Dalkeith place
Blunt & Sampson, boarding-schl. Victoria street
Blunt Miss Sarah Emma (B. & Sampson), Victoria street

Bowers Mrs Elizabeth, Lower street
Bradshaw Jas. Cole, brush-maker, Queen st.
Breakspere George, vict. Sun, Market street
Brewer Charles, fishmonger, West street
Bridgman Mrs Eliz. dressmkr. &c. Market st.
Briggs Thos. builder & carpenter, Tanner's lane
Briggs William, carrier, Rockingham road
Bright Edmund, painter, &c. Job's Yard
Bristow Mrs Eliz. grocer, &c. Market street
Brooks Wm. Weston, master of British school
Brown Mrs Mary, dressmaker, Silver street
Bryan John (Meadows & Co.), h. Silver st.
Buckby Wil. paintr. plumb. &c. Newland st.
Burchell Robt. cabinet-maker, &c. Dalkeith pl.
Burditt Ebenezer, clerk, Gas street
Burt John Bowen, seedsman, Market place, house, Horse market
Buswell Chas. painter, plumber, &c. High st.
Butler Mrs Mary, Lower street

CALDWELL Mrs Ann, Green lane terrace
Cattell Thos. plasterer, Alexandra street
Cattell Wm. grocer, &c. Montagu street
Chapman Alfred Wilson, j. tailor, Green l. ter.
Chapman Mrs Eliz. shopkeeper, Montagu st.
Chapman Geo. tailor and draper, Market place
Chater Wm. shoe manufacturer, Alexandra st.
Cherry John, greengrocer, High street
Chettle Rt. grocer, Mkt. pl. & farmer, Southlands
Church Hy. linen and woollen drpr. Market pl.
Clark William, furniture dealer, Lower street
Clarke David Wilding, tailor, Wadcroft
Clarke George, letter carrier, Market place
Clarke Thomas, shoemaker, Market street
Cleaver Geo. shoemfr. (Spence & C.) h. Wadcroft
Cluff Burges, baker, Montagu street
Cluff John, coal merchant and rate collector, Market place; house, Green lane terrace

Cocker John, shoemaker, High street
Coleman Jas. Albert, baker, Market street
Coleman John, greengrocer, Gibraltar place
Coleman Wm. corn miller, Weekley road
Coleman Wm. jun. corn miller, Rockingham rd.
Coles Mark, manager, Lower street
Collier William, baker, Newland street
Collis Hy. baker and grocer, Rockingham rd.
Coltman John, builder, Victoria street
Coltman Thos. baker and beerhouse, Queen st.
Coltman William, baker, &c. Alexandra street
Cook Mrs Ann, Southland's terrace
Cook Mrs Clara, Green lane terrace
Cooper Mrs Eliz. painter, plumber, &c. Gas st.
Co-operative Society, Bakehouse Hill, and Buccleuch street—G. E. Smith, secretary
Cox Charles, grindery, and leather dealer and shoemaker, Newland street
Cox Fred. j. painter, South Parade terrace
Cox Henry, butcher, North-hall street
Cox John, furniture dealer, Lower street
Craddock John, vict. Three Cocks, Lower st.
Crofts Mrs Sarah, grocer, &c. Gold street
Croot Alfred, vict. New Inn, Market place
Curwen Miss My. Ann, dressmkr. &c. Queen st.

DASH Wm. printer, bookseller, &c. Market pl.
Davison Wm. watch and gunmkr. Market pl.

Dawes Josiah William, auctioneer (Eldred & D.) house, Grafton Underwood
Deacon Jno. Coleman, account. &c. Dalkeith p.
Denston John Thos. chemist, &c. Market pl.
Dickman John, butcher, Rockingham road
Dickman Wm. groc. & beerho. Rockingham rd.
Dines Jph. painter and plum. &c. Alexandra st.
Dobson Mrs, dressmaker, Silver street
Dobson Jph. Rich. vetry. surgeon, Dalkeith pl.
Dorr William, clicker, Buccleuch street
Draper Henry, vict. Royal Hotel, Market place
Dryland John Winter, surgeon, High street
Dyson Mrs My. Ann, dressmkr. Green lane ter.

EADY Mrs Eliza, Newland street
East Mrs, dressmaker, Lower street
East Charles, shoe manufacturer, currier, and leather merchant, Britannia Works
Eaton Mrs Ann, North-hall street
Eaton William, clicker, Green Lane terrace
Eland & Eland, bankers, Market place
Eland Rt. Fowler (Eland & Eland) h. Thrapston
Eland Stephen Eaton (E. & E.), h. Manor House
Eldred & Dawes, auctioneers, Market place
Eldred George, auctioneer (E. & Dawes), and wine and spirit merchant, High street
Ellis & Everard, coal, coke, slate and timber merchants, and manufacturers of artificial manures, Corn Exchange
Ellis Jas. (E. & Everard) h. Glenfield, Leicester
Ellis Chas. agent for West, Biddles, & Co., Rockingham road
Elley, Gibson, & Woolley, shoe manfr. Lower st. & Northampton & Stafford—M. Coles, mgr.
Elworthy William, brewer, wine and spirit merchant and maltster, Gold street
Evans Mrs Elizabeth, Albert street
Everard Brendon (Ellis & E.), h. Bardon Hill, Leicester
Everett Robt. Marah, wine, spirit, ale & porter merchant, Market street
Eyet Mrs Sarah, Freestone row

FAREY W. & T. & Son, shoe manfr. Market st.
Farey Mrs Elizth. bookseller, &c. Gold street
Farey Henry (W. & T. & Son), h. Gold street
Farey Thomas (W. & T. & Son), h. Silver st.
Farrar Frederick, millwright, machinist, wood turner & joiner, Gas street
Felce & Sanders, shoe manfr. Victoria street
Felce Ebenezer, clicker, South Parade terrace
Felce James David, shoe manfr. Albert street
Felce Jas. Fred. (F. & Sanders), h. Victoria st.
Field Samuel, hairdresser, High street
Fish Rev. Henry (Wesleyan), School lane
Flavell William, baker, High street
Flawn Richard, shoe manufacturer, North-hall street, h. Rockingham road
Foster George, shoemaker, Albert street
Foster James, grindery dealer, Horse market
Freer John, j. staymaker, Thorngate Villas
French Rev. Sam. M.A. curate, Dalkeith pl.

GARRARD Wm. solicitor, Gold st. h. Lower st.
Garratt William, farmer, South Lodge
Gas Light & Coke Co. Gas st.—E. Maddocks, sec.
Gibson Edwin Byer, j. carpenter, Buccleuch st.
Gibson Thomas, cowkeeper, George street
Gill Thomas, ironmonger, High street
Gillham Mrs Elizabeth, milliner, &c. High st.
Ginger Mrs My. Rebec. fancy repety. High st.
Glover John, farmer, Workhouse lane

Glover Joseph, shop manager, Newland st.
 Glover Joseph Fred. butcher, Horse market
 Godfrey Chas. watchmaker, silversmith, and optician, High street
 Goode Chas. small-ware dealer, Market street
 Goode Joseph, gardener, &c. North-hall street
 Goodfellow Fras. Wm. currier, &c. Northhall st.
 Goodfellow Frederick, currier, North-hall st.
 Goosey & Son, drapers, hatters, & hosiers, High street and Market street
 Goosey John (G. & Son), h. George street
 Goosey William Gill (G. & Son), h. High st.
 Gotch Miss Charlotte, Newland street
 Gotch Thomas Henry, & Sons, shoe manufrs.
 Richard's Leys, h. Lower street
 Grainger Charles, platelayer, Victoria street
 Gray Robert, butcher, Market street
 Green Jno. Thos. wheelwt. & beerh. Wadcroft
 Groves John, reporter, South Parade terrace

HAINES Thos. com. trav. Green lane terrace
 Hale Edward, china, &c. dr. & grocer, High st.
 Hale James grocer & corn dealer, Horse market,
 h. London

Hales George, clicker, School lane
 Hales John, farmer, Green lane terrace
 Hales Thomas, shoe finisher, School lane
 Hall George, butcher, High street
 Hall Robert, butcher, Newland street
 Hancock & Miller, soda water mfs. Buccleuch st.
 Hancock Geo. (H. & Miller), Buccleuch street
 Hanger Henry, shoe manuf. Victoria street
 Hanger Robert, j. shoemaker, Buccleuch st.
 Hanger Wm. shoemfr. Dalkeith works, h. Silverst.
 Harding Sidney, master Nat. School, Horse mkt.
 Harradine Mrs Mary Ann, vict. George Hotel
 Harris Charles, beerhouse, Silver street
 Harris George, butcher, Lower street
 Hawthorn Mrs Dorothy, farmer, Lower street
 Hawthorn George, shopkeeper, North-hall st.
 Heighton George, tailor & draper, High street
 Heighton Hy. Jas. fancy repository, Gold st.
 Heighton Miss Louisa, fancy toy dr. High st.
 Heighton Thomas, gasfitter, &c. High st.
 Heighton Walter, mechanic, Green lane ter.
 Henson Jno. & Geo. stonemasons, Newland st.
 Henson George (J. & G.), h. Newland st.
 Henson John (J. & G.) h. West street
 Henson Henry Fred. beerhouse, Victoria st.
 Hinks Henry, corn buyer, Southland's terrace
 Hircock William, farmer, Montagu street
 Hitchman Henry, chemist, &c., Market place
 Hooper John, grocer, &c., Victoria street
 Hopwell John, coal merch. Alexandra street
 Horden John, watchmaker, Bakehouse hill
 Horden Peter, pawnbroker, West street
 Horn Sl. & Co. shoe mfrs. Lower st. h. The Grange
 Horn Henry, shoe manager, Gas street
 Howe Jno. Hy. engine driver, Green lane ter.
 Howes John, town hall-keeper, Silver street
 Hughes George, railway guard, Dalkeith pl.
 Hutchen Joseph, currier & leather merchant,
 Thorngate street; h. Ebenezer place

LIFFE Mrs Elizabeth, furniture dealer, High st.
 Liffe John Thomas, tobacconist, High street

JAMES Charles, cabinet-maker, Gold street
 Jaquest James, farmer, Gas street
 Jeffrey Mr George, Buccleuch street
 Jenkinson Mrs Abia, gardener &c. Meeting lane
 Jenkinson Rev. John (Baptist), Meeting lane

Jenkinson John (Meadows & Co.), h. Gold st.
 Jenkinson Wm. j. shoemaker, Green lane ter.
 Jenkinson Wm. Stafford, tailor, &c. High st.
 Jessop George, carpenter, &c., Workhouse yard
 Jobson John William, draper, High street
 Johnson Geo. coal merchant, farmer and vict.
Angel, Dalkeith place
 Johnson John, vict. Duke's Arms, Market st.
 Johnson Robert Winter, architect & town surveyor, George street, and Melton Mowbray
 Johnson Wm. j. shoemaker, Green lane ter.
 Jones Charles, grocer, &c. High street
 Jones John, milliner, &c. Market place
 Jones Lewis, milliner and hosier, Market place
 Jones Thos. draper, hosier, &c. Market place
 Judkins John Gibbs, j. cutter, Newland st.

KEACH Miss Elizabeth, shopkpr. Newland st.
 Keep Mrs Mary Ann, shopkeeper, Gas street
 Kendall Ephraim Hill, grocer, Silver street
 Kettering Brick & Tile Co. Patent Brickworks
 Kettering Iron Ore Compy. ironstone proprs.
 Keyston Mrs Cath. vict. Robin Hood, Northhl. st.
 Keyston Henry Jonathan, grocer & beerhouse,
 Northhall street
 Keyston Thomas, farmer, George street
 Knighton Alfred, photographer, High street

LAMB G. & H. solicitors, West street
 Lamb Geo. Warren (G. & H.), house, Westfield
 Lamb Henry (G. & H.), house, West street
 Lammie James, travelling draper, Barton rd.
 Lancum Thomas, clogger, Workhouse lane
 Larrott John, vict. Talbot, Gas street
 Law Joseph, shoemaker, Market street
 Leech Thomas, ironmonger, High street
 Leicestershire Banking Co. Market place
 Lenton Thomas, brush-maker, High street
 Letts Mrs Ann, marine store dr. Newland st.
 Letts Miss Anne, school, Dalkeith place
 Lewin Wm. grocer & draper, Newland street
 Lewis George & Son, machinists and agricultural implement makers, Albert works
 Lewis George (G. & Son) h. Queen street
 Lewis Thomas (G. & Son), h. Albert street
 Lindsay Rev. Henry, M.A. rector
 Linnell Chas. com. trav. Green lane terrace
 Linnell Jno. clothr. (Wallis & L.) h. Birmingham
 Loader George, hairdresser, Silver street
 Loasby Fred. vict. Half Moon, Market street
 Loasby Thos. shoe manufacturer, Queen street
 Longlow Jno. small-ware dealer, Newland st.

MADDOCKS Edwin, agent for P. & R. Phipps, brewers, Market place, house, Montagu st.
 Manby Saml. carpenter & builder, Dalkeith pl.
 Mander Wm. shoe manufacturer, Horse market
 Manning John, farmer, Tanner's lane
 Manton James, packer, Lower street
 Margetts Abel John, builder, Montagu street
 Marlow Andrew, grocer, &c. Montagu street
 Marlow Frederick, station-master
 Marlow Mrs Sarah, grocer, North-hall street
 Marriott Geo. Edward, shoe mfr. Market st.
 h. Dalkeith place
 Marshall Wm. solicitor, Geo. st. h. Montagu st.
 Marshall Wm. Henry, deputy-superintendent registrar, &c. Green lane terrace
 Martin John, shoemaker, Montagu street
 May Rob. foreman brickmaker, Southland's ter.
 Meadows & Co. shoe mfrs. curriers & tanners,
 Ebenezer place

Meadows Mrs Esther, Gas street
 Meadows Mrs Louisa, acty. of Savings' Bank
 Meadows Mr William, Lower street
 Meadows Wm. jun. (Meadows & Co.) h. Silver st.
 Mehew John, saddler, West street
 Messenger Mrs, Green lane terrace
 Miller Mrs Eliz. vict. Peacock, Lower street
 Miller Misses Elis. & Fran. milliners, &c. Gas st.
 Miller John, soda-water mfr. (Hancock & M.)
 Buccleuch street

Miller Miss Mary Ann, school, Gas street
 Millican & Smith, architects, High st. & Leicester
 Mitton Alfred Elkin, greengr. Workhouse la.
 Mitton Ben. fishmng. & vict. Woolpack, Horse mkt
 Mitton Mrs Mary, Gold street
 Mitton Wm. shoe manufacturer, Church walk
 Mobbs Frederick, machine closer, School lane
 Mobbs Jas. Fisher, shoe manager, London road
 Mobbs Samuel, sexton, Cemetery
 Moore Alfred, clerk, Green lane terrace
 Moore John, master, Union workhouse
 Moore Jonathan, grocer & tobacconist, Gold st.
 Morris Mrs Hannah, Rockingham road
 Morris Mr Joseph, London road
 Mould John, j. mason, Buccleuch street
 Munn James, vict. King's Arms, Lower street
 Myers Rev. John Brown (Baptist), Gold street

NEAL William, clicker, Wood street
 Newberry Fred. Wm. inland rev. officer, Alma pl.
 Newman & Sons, shoe mfrs. Newman street
 Newman John, grindery dealer, High street
 Newman Nathaniel (N. & Sons), h. Market st.
 Newman Nath. jun. (N. & Sons), h. Holly House
 Newman Wm. Jackson (& Sons), h. Green
 lane terrace

Newton Mrs Mary, Green lane terrace
 Nichols James, rope maker, Market street
 Nix Jno. thresh. mach. owner, Rockingham rd.
 Nixon Alfred Sutherland, plumber, painter and skylight manufacturer, Dalkeith place
 Noble John Bamford, ironmonger, High street
 Noble Joseph, registrar of marriages, High st.
 Norman Daniel, police inspr. Police station
 Northampton Brewery Co. Market place, and Northampton, Henry Hitchman, agent

OAKLEY Thomas, land surveyor, Lower street
 Osborne James, tallow chandler, High street,
 h. Burton Latimer

PAGE James, shopkeeper, Montagu street
 Palmer Henry, clothier, Alexandra street
 Panther Charles Thomas, tanner, Lower street
 Panther John, butcher, Silver street
 Parker Christopher, relieving officer & registrar of births and deaths, Alma place
 Parker Thos. chimney sweep, Haslewood lane
 Parkinson John (j.) shoemaker, Green lane ter.
 Patrick Charles (j.) tailor, Green lane terrace
 Patrick Chas. Coleman, pnoft. tnr. Silver st.
 Patrick Matthew Hy. clerk, Green lane terrace
 Patrick Stephen, grocer, grindery dealer and beer retailer, Rockingham road
 Patteson Mrs Hannah, Freestone row
 Patteson Miss Mary Ann, Newland street
 Paybody Robt. vict. Swan, Montagu street
 Payne James, farmer, Montagu street
 Payne John (j.) plumber, So. Parade terrace
 Payne Matthew, carpenter & bldr. Duke street
 Pearson Joseph, coachbuilder, Gold street
 Pentelow John, draper, High street

Percival Benjn. Black, coal marcht. glass & china dealer, Gold street
 Percival Charles, bookseller, &c. Gold street
 Percival Wm. Humphries, wheelwrt. &c. Alma pl.
 Perkins Alfred, baker, &c. Montagu street
 Parris Samuel, ale & porter agt. Horse market
 Petchell Geo. Thos. shoe mf. Mkt. pl. h. Silver st.
 Phipps Pickering & Richard, brewers, wine & spirit mchts. Market pl. and Northampton;
 Edwin Maddocks, agent

Pieroe Edward, Green lane terrace
 Pollard Chas. auctionr. bookseller, &c. High st.
 Preedy Henry Stileman Borrodails, solicitor,
 Gas street, h. Montagu street
 Price John Lowe, surgeon, Gold street
 Pridmore Rich. baker & beerh. Freestone row
 Princep Rev. Wm. (Baptist), Albert street

RAINS Miss Anne Jane, register office, High st.
 Rains Joseph, hairdresser, High street
 Rawlins David Archibald Dixon, solicitor,
 Market place, h. Market Harborough
 Read Hy. Pettifor, baker & confctnr. Market st.
 Reesby Mrs Ann, butcher, Queen street
 Reesby Thomas, butcher, Buccleuch street
 Reesby William, butcher, Montagu street
 Richardson Jno. carpnt. &c. Green lane ter.
 Richardson Thos. draper, &c. Market street
 Roberts Jonathan, veterinary surg. Market st.
 Robinson, Owen & Co., sewing machine mfrs. & tool-makers, Champion Works, h. Dalkeith pl.
 Robinson John, grazier, Rockingham road
 Robinson John, auctioneer (Bates & R.) and farmer, North-hall street
 Robinson Wm. clicker, Newland street
 Rodgers Robert, shepherd, Green lane terrace
 Roughton James John, surgeon, George street
 Russell Robert, beerhouse, Newland street

St JOHN Hon. and Rev. Edmund Tudor, R.A. curate, Thorngate Villas

Salmon Thos. & Co. shear and sickle, boot & shoe machin. manufs. & ironfnders. Victoria Works
 Sampson Brook, professor of music, Lower st.
 Sampson Mrs Mary Ann (Blunt & S.) Victoriast.
 Sanders James, letter carrier, Victoria street
 Sanders Jph. shoe mfr. (Felce & S.) h. Victoria st.
 Sculthorp Samuel, joiner, &c. Silver street
 Sculthorp Mr William, Wellingborough road
 Seekings Mrs Elizabeth, Green lane terrace
 Sharman Charles, builder, &c. Alma place
 Sharp John Jervia, corn merch. & maltster,
 Tanner's lane, h. Broughton
 Shemeld Arthur, tailor, &c. (Blunsom & Co.) h.
 High street

Shortland Jas. vict. Old White Horse, High st.
 Shrive Mrs Charlo. smallware dr. Bakehouse ln.
 Simms Henry, iron-ore agent, Buccleuch ln.
 Simms Thomas, ostler, Green lane terrace
 Simons & Son, shoe mfrs. Newtown
 Simons Alfred (S. & Son), h. Newtown
 Simons Samuel, foreman, Gas street
 Simons William (S. & Son), h. Newtown
 Slater Daniel, cabinet-maker, &c. High street
 Smalley Wm. Robinson, bank mngr. Market pl.
 Smart Fredk. beerhouse, Rockingham road
 Smart Wm. plumber, West st.; h. Montagu st.
 Smith Mrs Ann, Freestone row
 Smith Edward, shoemaker, High street
 Smith Fredk. ironmonger, Newland street
 Smith Geo. Eyet, foreman, Lower street
 Smith Henry Patteson, clerk, Green lane ter

Smith John, grocer, &c. High street
 Smith John, basket-maker, Gold street
 Smith Samuel, hairdresser, Lower street
 Smith Mrs Sarah, Gold street
 Smith Wm. travlg. tea dealer, Alexandra st.
 Smith Wm. agricultural engineer, iron & brass founder, Royal Iron Works, h. Market pl.
 Spence & Cleaver, shoe mfrs. Wadcroft
 Spence Edward (S. & Cleaver), h. High street
 Spence Fredk. cabinetmaker, &c. High street
 Spence Jas. vict. New White Horse, High st.
 Spence Jas. shoemaker, Lower street
 Spence John, shoe mfr. North-hall street
 Spence John, shoe mfr. Freestone row
 Spence Mrs Sarah, milliner, Market place
 Standley Henry, shoe mfr. Albert street
 Stevens —, loco. engineer, Southland's ter.
 Stevenson Joseph, tailor, North end
 Stockburn John Turner, stay mfr. Tanner's lane; h. Lower street
 Stockburn Mr Joseph, Lower street
 Stoker Wm. supt. of police, Dalkeith place
 Stower Richd. asst.-surveyor, George street
 Strange John, grocer, &c. Dalkeith place
 Sudborough William, fishmonger, Job's yard

TAIT Peter (j.) tailor, Green lane terrace
 Tailby John, butcher, High street
 Tansley Geo. hatter and shopkr. Market st.
 Tansley John, shopkeeper, Newland street
 Tansley Wm. farmer & greengrncr. Newland st.
 Taylor Ebenezer, greengrocer, Lower street
 Taylor Mrs Elizabeth, Rockingham road
 Taylor Mr William, Rockingham road
 Thompson Matthew, riveter, Buccleuch st.
 Thursfield John Fincher, chemist, Market pl.
 Tilley Thomas, baker & shopkr. Lower street
 Timson Wm. Ward, shoe mfr. Horse market
 Tingle John, corn dealer, Horse market
 Tingle Thomas, brewery manager, Springfield cottage
 Toller Jph. printer and bookseller, Market pl.
 Toller Rev. Thomas (Indpt.) Gold street
 Toller Mr William, Rockingham road
 Tomkins Edm. Eyre, vict. Wagon & Horses,
 North-hall street
 Toon John, grocer, &c. North-hall street
 Toon William James, clerk, Green lane ter.
 Tordoff Mr John, Montagu street
 Towndrow Oswin, saddler, High street
 Townsend Mr John, Southland's terrace
 Turner Frederick, beerhouse, Job's yard
 Turner Mrs Jane, shopkeeper, Gas street

WADDINGTON Mrs Elizabeth, Dalkeith place
 Waddington Jas. Hawthorn, printer, High st.
 Waddington Richard, bookseller, &c. High st.
 Waddington Mr Thomas, Wadcroft

Wallis J. & T. mustard & chicory mfrs. and corn millers, Tanner's la. & Burton Latimer, and 181 Upper Thames street, London
 Wallis & Linnell, wholesale clothiers, School lane, and Cannon street, Birmingham
 Wallis Frederic (W. & Linnell), h. Gold st.
 Wallis John (J. & T. Wallis), h. Montagu st.
 Wallis Samuel, farmer, Barton Lodge
 Wallis Thos. (J. & T. Wallis), h. Rothwell Lodge
 Warner Thomas, compositor, Green lane ter.
 Watson Samuel, currier, Montagu street
 Wells Fredk. & Co. shoe mfrs. Newland st.
 Wells Fredk. (Wells & Co.), Belmont House
 Wells Jph. grocer, baker & corn dlr. High st.
 Wells Wm. tailor and draper, High street
 West, Biddles, & Co. coal, lime, and salt
 merchants, Market place
 West John (W. Biddles & Co.) h. Little Bowden
 West Thomas (j.) shoemaker, Buccleuch st.
 Wheeler John Hy. watchmaker, Ebenezer pl.
 Widdowson Rev. Thos. B.A. master, Grammar school, Gold street
 Williams Joseph, greengrocer, Meeting lane
 Williamson Jph. Cobley, railway guard, Green
 lane terrace
 Willis Charles, butcher, High street
 Willis Mrs Eliza. gardener & beerho. Market pl.
 Willis Mrs Emma, register office, Gold street
 Willis Jonathan, gardener, &c. Gold street
 Wills Edmund Geo. foreman, So. Parade ter.
 Wilmot J. & Co. stay mfrs. Church walk
 Wilmot Jno. Hughes (J. & Co.) h. Church walk
 Wilmot Mrs Mary, Church walk
 Wilson Brothers, brushmakers, Newland st.
 Wilson Christr. Lee (W. Bros.) h. Birmingham
 Wilson Geo. Isitt (W. Bros.) h. Green lane ter.
 Wilson John, joiner and builder, Queen st.
 Wilson Thos. Miller (W. Bros.) h. Green ln. ter.
 Wilson William, shopkeeper, Gas street
 Winterhalter Lukas, watchmaker, High street
 Woollard Wm. wood-dealer, Hazlewood lane
 Woolston Miss Julia, dressmaker, &c. High st.
 Woolston Saml. postmaster & farmer, High st.
 Worters Mrs Ann Whitworth, schl. Market pl.
 Wright Charles, foreman, North end
 Wright Mr Francis Ellington, Bellevue House
 Wright John, ironmonger, &c. Market street
 Wright Joseph, coal mercht. North-hall street
 Wright William, shoe mfr. Gas street
 Wright Wm. Hy. vict. Fleur-de-lis, Newland st.
 Wright William Tomlin, outler, High street
 Wrigley & Son, shoemakers, Market place
 Wrigley Fredk. (W. & Son), h. Southland's ter.
 Wrigley James (W. & Son), h. Market place
 Wrigley John, shoemaker, Gold street
 Wrigley Raby Chas. (j.) shoemkr. Green la. ter.

YORKE Thomas, grocer, &c. North-hall street

TRADES AND PROFESSIONS.

Academies and Schools.

(Marked * take Boarders.)

*Blunt & Sampson, Victoria st.
British, School-lane, W. W.
 Brooks, Miss Eliza. Palmer
Free (Girls'), Montagu street,
 Mrs Abigail Hiroock
Grammar, Gold street, Rev.
 Thomas Widdowson, B.A.
 Letts Miss Anne, Dalkeith ploe.
 Miller Miss Mary Ann, Gas st.

National, Horse Mkt. S. Harding

National (Girls') Market place,
 Miss Eliza Wills
National, North-hall st., Miss
 Eliz. Hewitt, Miss A. Canham
 *Worters Mrs Ann Whitworth,
 Market place

Agricultural Implement Makers.

Lewis Geo. & Son, Albert Works
 Smith Wm. Royal Iron Works

Agents—Special.

Barker Thomas (H. R. Williams
 & Co. wine merts.) High st.
 Everett Rt. Marsh, Market st.
 Jones Charles (W. & A. Gibbey, wine & spirit mers.), High st.
 Perris Samuel, (ale & porter),
 Horse market

Architects & Surveyors.

Johnson R. W. George street
 Millican and Smith, High st.

Attorneys.

Garrard William, Gold street
Lamb G. & H. West street
Marshall William, George st.
Preedy Hry. S. B. Montagu st.
Rawlins David A. D. Market pl.

Auctioneers.

Bates & Robinson, High street
Eldred and Dawes, Mkt. place
Pollard Charles, High street

Bakers.

Allen Joseph, Bakehouse hill
Bell Charles, Newland street
Blount Mrs Eliza, Dalkeith pl.
Cluff Burges, Montagu street
Coleman Jas. Albert, Market st.
Collier William, Newland st.
Coltman Thomas, Queen street
Coltman Wm. Alexandra street
Flavell William, High street
Perkins Mrs Ann, Montagu st.
Pridmore Richd. Freestone row
Read H. P. (confc.) Market st.
Tilley Thomas, Lower st.
Wells Joseph, High street

Banks.

Eland & Eland, Market place,
(draw on Barclay, Bevan and Co., London)—Wm. Robinson Smalley, manager
Leicestershire Banking Co.
Market place (draw on London and Westminster Bank)
—Joseph Barber, manager
Savings' Bank (open on Friday from 11 A.M. till 12.30 P.M.)—
Mrs Louisa Meadows, actuary

Blacksmiths.

Anderson Fred. Freestone row
Billson Thomas, Lower street
Lewis Geo. & Son (and machinist & agricultural implement makers), Albert Works

Booksellers and Stationers.
(Marked * are Printers.)

*Dash William, Market place
Farey Mrs E. (newsagt.) Gold st.
Percival Charles, Gold street
Pollard Chas. (and old), High st.
*Toller Joseph, Market place
Waddington Richard, High st.
*Waddington J. H. High street

Boot and Shoe Manufactures.

Abbott and Bird, Green lane
Bailey Frederick, Victoria st.
Chater William, Alexandra st.
East Charles, Britannia Works
Elley, Gibson, & Woolley,
Lower street
Farey W. & T. & Son, Market st.
Felce and Sanders, Victoria st.
Felce James D. Albert street
Flawn Richard, North-hall st.

Gotch T. H. & Sons, Richard's Leys

Hanger Henry, Victoria street
Hanger Wm. Dalkeith Works
Horn Samuel and Co. Lower st.
Loasby Thomas, Queen street
Mander William, Horse market
Marriott Geo. Edward, Market st.
Meadows and Co. Ebenezer pl.
Mitton William, Church walk
Newman N. & Sons, Newman st.
Petchell Geo. Thos. Market pl.
Simons and Son, Newtown
Smith Edward, High street
Spence and Cleaver, Wadcroft
Spence John, North-hall street
Spence John, Freestone row
Standley Henry, Albert Works
Timson Wm. Ward, Horse mkt.
Wells Fred. & Co. Newland st.
Wright William, Gas street

Boot and Shoemakers.

Cox Charles, Newland street
Clarke Thomas, Market street
Cocker John, High street
Foster George, Albert street
Law Joseph, Market street
Martin John, Montagu street
Spence James, Lower street
Wrigley and Son, Market street
Wrigley John, Gold street

Brewers.

Elworthy William, Gold street
Northampton Brewery Co.
(stores) Market place, Hy.
Hitchman, agent
Phipps P. & R. (stores), Market
pl. Edwin Maddocks, agent

Brick and Tile Manufactures.

Barlow Edward, Weekley road
Bayes Charles, North-hall st.
Kettering Brick and Tile Co.
Meadows & Co., Victoria Works

Brush Makers.

Bradshaw Jas. Cole, Queen st.
Lenton Thomas, High street
Wilson Brothers, Newland st.

Builders.

Bellamy John, Victoria street
Briggs Thomas, Tanner's lane
Henson J. and G. Newland st.
Manby Samuel, Dalkeith place
Margetts Abel Jno. Montagu st.
Payne Matthew, Duke street
Sharman Charles, Alma place
Wilson John, Queen street

Butchers.

Cox Henry, North-hall street
Dickman Jno. Rockingham rd.
Glover Jph. Fred. Horse markt.
Gray Robert, Market street
Hall George, High street
Hall Robert, Newland street
Harris George, Lower street
Panther John, Silver street

Reesby Mrs Ann, Queen street
Reesby Thomas, Buccleuch st.
Reesby William, Montagu st.
Tailby John, High street
Willis Charles, High street

Cabinet-makers and Upholsterers.

Baxter David Rich. Market st.
Burchell Robert, Dalkeith pl.
James Charles, Gold street
Slater Daniel, High street
Spence Fredk. High street

Chemists and Druggists.

Denston Jno. Thos. Market pl.
Hitchman Henry, Market pl.
Thursfield Jno. F. Market pl.

Chicory and Mustard Manufacturers.

Wallis J. and T. Tanner's lane

Chimney-Sweeper.

Parker Thomas, Haslewood la.

Clothiers (Wholesale).

Palmer Henry, Alexandra st.
Wallis & Linnell, School lane

Coal Merchants.

Cluff John, Market place
Ellis & Everard, Corn exchange
Hopwell John, Alexandra st.
Johnson George, Dalkeith place
Percival Benj. Gold street
West, Biddles, & Co. Corn exch.
Wright Joseph, North-hall st.

Corn Dealers.

(Marked * are Merchants.)

*Biddles Robert, George street
Hale James, Horse market
*Sharp John J. Tanner's lane
Tingle John, Horse market
*Wallis J. & T. Tanner's lane
Wells Joseph, High street

Corn Millers.

Bell John, Kettering water mill
Coleman Wm. Weekley Wad
Coleman Wm. Rockingham rd.
Wallis J. & T. at Burton Latimer

Curriers and Leather Merchants.

East Charles, Britannia Works
Goodfellow F. W. North-hall st.
Goodfellow Fredk. Nth.-hall st.
Hutchen Joseph, Thorgate st.
Meadows & Co. Ebenezer place
Watson Samuel, Montagu st.

Fancy Repositories.

Baker Mrs Joyce Eliza, High st.
Ginger Mrs My. Rebecca, High st.
Heighton Henry Jas. Gold st.
Heighton Miss Louisa, High st.
Waddington Richard, High st.

Farmers and Graziers.

Bayes Charles, North-hall st.
 *Chettle Robert, Southlands
 Draper Henry, Market place
 Garratt William, South Lodge
 Glover John, Workhouse lane
 Hales John, Green lane terrace
 Hawthorn Mrs Dorothy, Lower st.
 Hircock Wm. Montagu street
 Jaquest James, Gas street
 *Johnston George, Dalkeith pl.
 Keyston Thomas, George st.
 Manning John, Tanner's lane
 Payne James, Montagu street
 Robinson Jno. North-hall st.
 *Robinson J. Rockingham rd.
 Tansley Wm. Newland street
 Wallis J. & T. Newland street
 Woolston Samuel, High street

Fire and Life Offices.

Accidental, Rt. Marsh Everett,
 Market st.; John Strange,
 Dalkeith place; and Joseph
 Rains, High street
Atlas, F.E. Wright, Bellevue ho.
Clerical and Medical (life),
 Wm. R. Smalley, Market pl.
County (fire) & Provident (life)
 Henry Lamb, West street
Crown (life)—John Cluff, Market place, and Edwin Mad-docks, Market place
Guardian, T. Salmon, Vict. st.
London Assurance Corporation,
 Jno. H. Wilmot, Church wk.
Norwich Provident, Thomas
 Tingle, Lower street
Norwich Union, John Strange,
 Dalkeith place
Phoenix (fire), Thos. Waddington, Wadcroft
Prudential (life), Wm. Smith,
 Alexandra street
Royal, Hy. J. Heighton, Gold st.
Royal Exchange, Arthur Bird,
 Corn exchange
Scottish Union, H.S.B. Preedy,
 Gas street
Standard (life), Joseph Barber,
 Market place
Sun, Joseph Toller, Market pl.

Fishmongers.

Arnsby George, Horse market
 Brewer Charles, West street
 Mitton Benj. Horse market
 Sudborough Wm. Job's yard

Furniture Dealers.

Clark William, Lower street
 Cox John, Lower street
 Iliffe Mrs Eliz. High street

Gardeners and Seedsmen.

(Marked * are Seedsmen only.)
 *Burt Jno. Bowen, Mkt. pl.
 Goode Joseph, North-hall st.
 Jenkinson Mrs Abis, Meeting la.
 Taylor Ebenezer, Lower st.
 Willis Mrs Eliz. Market place
 Willis Jonathan, Gold street

Gasfitters and Braziers.

Gas, Light & Coke Co. Gas st.
 Heighton Thomas, High street
 Noble Joseph & Son, High st.
 Smith William, Market place
 Wright John, Market place

Glass and China Dealers.

Baxter Thomas, High street
 Hale Edward, High street
 Percival Benj. Black, Gold st.
 Pollard Charles, High street

Greengrocers, &c.

Cherry John, High street
 Coleman Jno. Gibraltar place
 Mitton Alf. Elkin, W'khousela.
 Pollard Charles, High street
 Tansley William, Newland st.
 Taylor Ebenezer, Lower st.
 Williams Joseph, Meeting lane

Grindery and Leather Dealers.

Cox Charles, Newland street
 Foster James, Horse market
 Newman John, High street
 Patrick Steph. Rockingham rd.
 Robinson Owen, Horse market

Grocers, Tea and Provi- sion Dealers.

Abbott George, Alexandra st.
 Barker Thomas, High street
 Barton Robert, Albert street
 Bell Charles, Newland street
 Bristol Mrs Eliz. Market st.
 Chapman Mrs Eliz. Montagu st.
 Cattell William, Montagu st.
 Chettle Robert, Market place
 Collis Henry, Rockingham rd.
 Co-operative (G. E. Smith, sec.)
 Bakehousehill & Buccleuch st.
 Crofts Mrs Sarah, Gold street
 Dickman Wm. Rockingham rd.
 Hale Edward, High street
 Hale James, Horse market
 Hawthorn Geo. North-hall st.
 Hooper John, Victoria street
 Jones Charles, High street
 Keach Miss Eliz. Newland st.
 Keep Mrs Mary Ann, Gas st.
 Kendall Ephraim Hill, Silver st.
 Keyston Hy. Jon. North-hall st.
 Lewis William, Newland st.
 Marlow Andrew, Montagu st.
 Moore Jonathan, Gold street
 Page James, Montagu street
 Patrick Steph. Rockingham rd.
 Smith John, High street
 Staines Henry, Alexandra st.
 Strange John, Dalkeith place
 Tansley George, Market st.
 Tansley John, Newland street
 Tilley Thomas, Lower street
 Toon John, North-hall street
 Turner Mrs Jane, Gas street
 Wells Joseph, High street
 Wilson William, Gas street
 Yorke Thomas, North-hall st.

Hairdressers.

Field Samuel, High street
 Loader George, Silver street
 Rains Joseph, High street
 Smith Samuel, Lower street

Hatter.

Tanaley George, Market st.

Hotels, Inns, and Taverns.

(Marked * are Posting Houses.)

Angel, G. Johnson, Dalkeith pl.
Duke's Arms, J. Johnson, Mkt. st.
Fleur-de-lis, Wm. Hy. Wright,
 Newland street
 *George, Mrs M. A. Harradine
Half Moon, Fred. Loasby, Market street
King's Arms, J. Munn, Lower st.
New Inn, Alf. Croot, Market. pl.
Peacock, Mrs E. Miller, Lower st.
Robin Hood, Mrs Catherine
 Keyston, North-hall street
 *Royal, H. Draper, Market pl.
Sun, G. Breakspear, Market st.
Swan, Rt. Paybody, Montagu st.
Three Cocks, John Craddock,
 Lower street
Talbot, John Larrott, Gas st.
Vine, Thos. Bazley, Market st.
Wagon & Horses, Edmund
 Eyre Tomkins, North-hall st.
White Horse (new), Jas. Spence,
 High street
White Horse (old), Jas. Shortland, High street
Woolpack, Benj. Mitton, Horse market

Beerhouses.

Bellamy Mrs Elizth. Queen st.
 Coltman Thos. Queen street
 Dickman Wm. Rockingham rd.
 Green Jno. Thos. Wadcroft
 Harris Charles, Silver street
 Henson Hy. Fred. Victoria st.
 Horden Peter, West street
 Keyston Hy. Jonth. N.-hall st.
 Patrick Stphn. Rockingham rd.
 Pridmore Richd. Freestone row
 Russell Robert, Newland st.
 Smart Fredk. Rockingham rd.
 Turner Frederick, Job's yard
 Willis Mrs Eliz. Market place

Iron and Brass Founders.

Salmon T. & Co. Victoria Wrks.
 Smith Wm. Royal Iron Works

Ironmongers.

Gill Thomas, High street
 Leech Thomas, High street
 Noble John Bamford, High st.
 Smith Frederick, Newland st.
 Wright John, Market street

Joiners and Carpenters.

Bird Thomas, Montagu street
 Briggs Thomas, Tanner's lane
 Farrar Frederick, Gas street

Jessop Geo. Workhouse yard
 Manby Samuel, Dalkeith place
 Payne Matthew, Duke street
 Sculthorp Samuel, Silver street
 Richardson John, Green ln. ter.
 Wilson John, Queen street

Linen & Woollen Drapers.

Church Henry, Market place
 Goosey & Son, High st. & Mkt. st.
 Jobson John Wm. High street
 Jones Thomas, Market place
 Lammie J. (travgr.) Barton rd.
 Pentelow John, High street
 Richardson Thomas, Market st.
 Wells W. (& clothier), High st.

Maltsters.

Elworthy William, Gold street
 Sharp Jno. Jervis, Tanner's lane

Marine Store Dealer.

Letts Mrs Ann, Newland street

Milliners & Dressmakers.

Brown Mrs Mary, Silver street
 Bridgman Mrs Eliz. Market st.
 Curwen Miss M. Ann, Queen st.
 Dobson Mrs, Silver street
 Dyson Mrs M. A. Green ln. ter.
 East Mrs, Lower street
 Gillham Mrs Eliz. High st.
 Jones John, Market place
 Jones Lewis, Market place
 Miller Misses E. & Frcs. Gas st.
 Spence Mrs Sarah, Market pl.
 Woolston Miss Julia, High st.

Millwrights and Machinists.

Farrar Frederick, Gas street
 Lewis Geo. & Son, Albert Works
 Smith Wm. Royal Iron Works

Painters, Plumbers, and Glaziers.

Bright Edmund, Job's yard
 Buckby William, Newland st.
 Buswell Charles, High street
 Cooper Mrs Elizabeth, Gas st.
 Dines Joseph, Alexandra street

Nixon Alfred Sutherland (and skylight manfr.) Dalkeith pl.
 Smart William, West street

Photographer.

Knighton Alfred, High street

Register Offices for Servants.

Rains Miss Annie Jane, High st.
 Willis Mrs Emma, Gold street

Saddlers.

Mehew John, West street
 Towndrow Oswin, High street

Sewing Machine Manufs.

Robinson Owen and Co. (and tool makrs.), Champion Works

Smallware Dealers.

Goode Charles, Market street
 Longslow John, Newland st.
 Shrive Mrs C. Bakehouse lane

Soda Water Manufs.

Hancock & Miller, Buccleuch st.

Stay Manufacturers.

Stockburn J. T. Tanner's lane
 Wilmot J. & Co. Church walk

Stonemasons.

Bellamy John, Victoria street
 Henson J. & G. Newland street
 Margetts Abel John, Montagu st.
 Sharman Charles, Alma place

Surgeons.

Dryland John Winter, High st.
 Price John Lowe, Gold street
 Roughton Jas. John, George st.

Tailors.

(Marked * are Drapers also.)

* Benford George, Market place
 * Blunsom Chas. & Co. High st.

* Chapman George, Market pl.
 Clarke D. Wilding, Wadcroft
 * Heighton George, High street
 * Jenkinson Wm. Stafford, High st.
 Stevenson Joseph, North end
 * Wells William, High street

Tallow Chandler.

Osborne James, High street

Tanners.

Meadows & Co. Ebenezer place
 Panther Chas. Thos. Lower st.

Tobaccoists.

Iliffe John Thomas, High st.
 Moore Jonathan, Gold street

Veterinary Surgeons.

Dobson Jos. Rich. Dalkeith pl.
 Roberts Jonathan, Market st.

Watchmakers.

Andrews Richard, Gold street
 Davison Wm. Market place
 Godfrey Charles, High street
 Horden John, Bakehouse hill
 Wheeler Jno. Hy. Ebenezer pl.
 Winterhalder Lukas, High st.

Wheelwrights.

Green Jno. Thos. Wadcroft
 Percival Wm. H. Dalkeith pl.

Wine and Spirit Merch.

Eldred George, High street
 Elworthy William, High street
 Everett Robt. Marsh, Markt. st.
 Phipps P. & R. Market pl. &
 Northampton; E. Maddocks, 47

Wood Turner.

Farrar Frederick, Gas street

Wood Dealer.

Woollard Wm. Hazlewood ln.

Public Establishments, Officers, &c.

County Court Office, West street, Richard
 Harington, Esq. judge; George Warren
 Lamb, registrar; J. H. Taylor, high-bailiff;
 John Cox, under-bailiff

Dispensary, George st. J. J. Roughton, surgeon

Gas Light & Coke Co. Gas st. E. Maddocks, sec.

Local Board Office, West st. G. W. Lamb,

clerk; R. W. Johnson, surveyor; John

Cluff, collector; Joseph Rains, inspector

Police Station (county), Little Barton, Wm.

Stoker, supt.; Daniel Norman, inspector

Stamp Office, Market pl. Joseph Toller, sub-dis.

Temperance Hall, Gold street, Joseph Wells,

treasurer; Charles Pollard, secretary

Union Workhouse, John Moore, master

Water Works Office, West street, G. and H.

Lamb, solicitors and secretaries

Clerk to Board of Guardians, Wm. Marshall

Clerk to the Burial Board, William Marshall

Clerk to Commissioners of Income and Land

Tax, William Garrard

Clerk to the Highway Board, G. W. Lamb

Clerk to the Justices of the Kettering division,

G. W. Lamb

Collector of Poor Rates, John Cluff

Collector of Taxes, Geo. Eldred

Coroner for County, William Marshall

Inland Revenue Officer, Fredk. Wm. Newberry

Registrar of Births and Deaths, Christr. Parker

Registrar of Marriages, Joseph Noble

Relieving Officer, C. Parker, Alma place

Superintendent Registrar, Wm. Marshall

Railway (Midland)—F. Marlow, station-master;
Hry. Draper, parcels agent, Royal Hotel

Carriers from the Inns, &c.

Brigstock—Abrm. Sturgess, New White Horse, Friday; and Lucy Woodlands, Sun, Friday
Broughton—William Height, New Inn, Friday
Burton Latimer—Joseph Miller and Stokes, New Inn, Tues. Thurs. Friday, and Satur.
Corby—Daniel Ralph, Old White Horse, Friday
Cottingham—George West, Sun, Friday; and Arthur Stretton, New Inn, Friday
Desborough—See Rothwell
Finedon—Joseph Clapham, New Inn, Friday
Gaddington—Levi Clipston, daily; and Ann Moore, Monday, Wednes. Friday, and Satur.
Harrodden Little—Simeon Smith, Duke's Arms, Friday
Loddington—Samuel Bates, Duke's Arms, Fri.

Northampton—William Briggs, Rockingham road, Wednesday and Saturday
Old—John Chapman, New Inn, Friday
Orlbury—William Driver, New Inn, Friday
Pythley—George Stanley, Duke's Arms, Fri.
Ringstead—Elijah Robinson, Duke's Arms, Fri.
Rockingham—Jno. Wright, Old White Horse, Fri.
Rothwell—William Willis, New Inn, Friday; Thomas Taffs, Market place, daily; and Saunders, mail cart, twice daily
Titchmarsh—St. Wilson, New White Horse, Fri.
Uppingham—William Smith, Peacock, Mon.; and John Wright, Old White Horse, Friday
Weldon—Mrs Elizabeth Jinks, New White Horse, Fri.; John Spence, New Inn, Mon. Wed. Thurs. and Sat.; and Benjamin March, New Inn, Tuesday and Friday

LILFORD PARISH,

Locally situated in the hundred of Polebrook, about 3 miles S. by W. from Oundle, is bounded on the N.W. by the river Nene, over which there is a handsome stone bridge, with fluted pilasters, erected in 1796, which divides it from Pilton and Wadenhoe; on the S.W. by Achurch; on the S.E. by Clapton; and on the east by Barnwell. It includes the hamlet of Wigsthorpe, and contains 1501 acres. The population including the hamlet, in 1801, was 97; in 1831, 127; in 1841, 133; in 1851, 141; in 1861, 179; and in 1871, 168 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1822, and the gross estimated rental £2097. This parish gives the title of baron to the noble family of Powys, who have long been lords of the manor. The soil on the western side of the lordship is very good, but east of the turnpike road it is cold and inferior. In Bridges' time (1721), Lilford consisted of a village of 12 houses, and a church dedicated to St Peter. An act was obtained in 1778 for a consolidation of the livings of Lilford and Achurch, when Lilford church was taken down, and the monuments, &c., removed to the latter church. The village was also levelled to the ground at the same time, and the inhabitants removed to other houses. The Northampton and Peterborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway passes through the parish.

Manor.—Five hides of land in Lilleforde were held by Walter of the countess Judith, at the time of the Domesday survey. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 24s., and 50 acres of meadow, and the whole was then valued at £8. Turchill was the Saxon proprietor. In the reign of Henry II., these 5 hides were held by William Olyfart, of the fee of David, king of Scotland. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1295), William de Murre was lord of Lilford, and from his family it passed to Anthony de Beck, bishop of Durham, who settled it on the family of Willoughby, with which it continued till the fifteenth of Henry VI. (1436), when Robert Lord Willoughby confirmed the possession of it, with other manors, on Richard Yerburch and others. In the fifth of Henry VII. (1490), William Browne of Stamford died seized of it, and left it to Elizabeth his daughter, the wife of John Elmes, Esq., whose descendants sold it to Mr Adams, "a money scrivener," whose estate being afterwards invested in chancery, for payment of his debts, this manor was bought, in 1711, by Sir Thomas Powys, Knt., one of the judges of the queen's bench. His grandson, Thomas Powys, M.P. for this county, was created Lord Lilford on 26th October 1797. Thomas Lyttleton Powys, the present Lord Lilford, is the eldest son of the third lord by Mary Elizabeth, daughter of the third Lord Holland (extinct). He was born in 1833; succeeded in 1861; married, in 1859, Emma Elizabeth, daughter of R. W. Brandling, Esq.; educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford; is a J.P. and D.L. for the county of Northampton; late lieutenant Northampton militia.

Residence—Lilford Hall, Oundle ; Carlton and Travellers' and St James's Clubs, London.

Lilford Hall, the seat of Lord Lilford, is situated in a richly wooded park on the S.E. bank of the river Nene, and just opposite, upon the other bank, across a meadow, and some half mile off, stand the church and the old "Tresham manor house" of Pilton, both of which objects, massing together with a third one—a walnut tree—coeval with the house, and of prodigious bulk, form a background, as seen from Lilford, of very unusual beauty. The Lilford mansion was finished in 1635, the block, of a local stone extremely hard and durable, and so well wrought as to make it a matter of difficulty to detect the joints ; the gables, the windows, and the moulded parts, chiefly of Weldon, but occasionally of Ketton stone. The architect of the building we are describing is unknown. His name in connection with Lilford is forgotten, but his work remains ; and as long as it shall remain, its many picturesque gables, its beautiful bow windows, its handsome porch, and various other attractive features, joined to the skilful arrangement and the altogether happy effect of the whole, will invest the place with a large amount of interest, and forcibly attest that it was no common genius which called them into being.

A School, for the poor children of this and the neighbouring villages of Thorpe Achurch and Pilton, is supported by Lady Lilford.

Charities.—William Lassells, a servant to Thomas Powys, Esq., in 1770, left £100 for the apprenticing of poor boys of this parish. The principal sum has increased by the investment of arrears or accumulations of interest. The sum of 20s. out of Ragsdale's gift is distributed to the poor annually ; and two fat oxen are annually given to the poor of the neighbouring villages at Christmas by Lord Lilford.

WIGSTHORPE is a hamlet in this parish, containing, in 1841, 18 houses and 97 inhabitants. The population, &c., in 1871, is included in that of the parish. There was anciently a chapel here.

Letters are received here through the Oundle Post-Office.

Harlock James, gardener
Jones Samuel, gamekeeper
Langham Thomas, carpenter,
Wigthorpe

Lilford Right Hon. Lord, Lil-
ford Hall
Tuffley Joseph, dairyman
Warner Alfred, schoolmaster

Farmers and Graziers.
Prior Geo. Thomas, Wigthorpe
Tebbutt Chas. Edward, Lilford
Lodge

LOWICK PARISH.

Lowick, or Luffwick, is bounded on the north by Sudborough, on the west and south by Slipton and Twywell, and on the east by Islip. It contains 1984a. 2r. 32p., including roads, of the rateable value of £2772, 10s.; the gross estimated rental is £3276, 15s.; and its population in 1801 was 353; in 1831, 394; in 1841, 430; in 1851, 444; in 1861, 427; and in 1871, 407 souls. The soil is principally a strong clay, and there is a great quantity of limestone in the lordship. Mrs Stopford Sackville is lady of the manor and the principal owner.

Manor.—Edwin and Algar held 2 hides, less 1 virgate, here of the Bishop of Constance at the general survey; and Sibold held 1½ virgate of the Crown at the same time. In Henry II.'s time the lordship was in the hands of several possessors; and in the seventeenth of Edward III. (1343), John de Nowers levied a fine of the manor. It subsequently came into the possession of the family of Greene, one of which, Sir Henry Greene, obtained a grant of a weekly market here in the ninth of Richard II. (1385), to be held on Thursday, and an annual fair for three days, beginning on Whitsunday eve. Henceforth Luffwick continued as a member of Drayton manor. It subsequently came into the possession of the Mordaunt family, afterwards earls of Peterborough, in the reign of Henry VII., and passed from them in marriage to Sir John Germain, about the year 1705. Sir John dying in 1718, the manor of Drayton came to his second wife, Lady Betty, daughter of Charles, second earl of Berkeley. This lady, dying in 1769, bequeathed this estate to Lord George Sackville, the youngest son of the first Duke of Dorset, and in this family it continued till 1843, when by the death of the last duke, the estate descended to his niece, the wife of William Bruce Stopford, Esq., who in 1870 assumed the name and arms of Sackville.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, belongs entirely to the Rectilinear (or Late Perpendicular) period, of which it is an excellent specimen, and of the plainest possible character. Mr Sharp says, "They seldom saw a church designed in the Rectilinear period in which the piers were so low, and the arches and mouldings so plain." It is a handsome edifice, consisting of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, south porch, and a noble embattled tower, with an octagonal lantern on the top of very graceful design. In the tower is a peal of five bells, and there is a "Lady Chapel" at the east end of the south aisle. The church was thoroughly restored in 1869, when it was furnished with open oak sittings, a handsome oak pulpit on a stone pedestal, and a carved oak lectern. It contains several ancient brasses and a tomb to Edward, Earl of Wiltshire, ob. 1499, who in 1498 founded a chantry for two priests in this church, as well as a splendid monument to Sir Walter de Vere, knight, the founder of the church, and his wife. In the chapel adjoining the chancel is a monument to Sir John Germain and his family, and another to Lady Mary Mordaunt, daughter of Henry, Earl of Peterborough, and whose first husband was Henry, Duke of Norfolk. She died in 1705. Among the most recent monuments in Dorset Chapel is a handsome one in marble to the memory of Charles Sackville, the fifth and last Duke of Dorset, K.C., who died in July 1843. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £16, 8s. 11½d, and now worth £450 per annum. Mrs Stopford Sackville is the patroness, and the Rev. William Lucas Collins, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land in 1771. The Rectory House, which stands at the south-west end of the village, is a substantial stone building in the Elizabethan style, erected in 1858.

The Green Coat School was endowed by Sir John and Lady Elizabeth Germain, with £90 per annum, for the education and clothing of poor boys. For the other charities, see the table prefixed to this hundred.

Drayton House, the seat of Mrs Stopford Sackville, is situated about a mile south-west of the village, and is a fine antiquated structure. It is built on the ruins of an ancient castle, and consists of a noble front, with lofty towers at each end, surmounted by turrets and lantern cupolas. The north front retains the characteristic features of the Tudor style of domestic architecture; but the entire structure has undergone great alterations, chiefly about the time of James II. and William III., and it ranks as one of the finest houses in the county. It is supposed to have been erected about the latter end of Henry VI.'s reign, by Henry Greene, Esq., who was twice sheriff of this county. Here is a considerable collection of pictures and portraits by some of the most eminent masters.

Post-Office.—Thomas Warren, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Thrapston at 6.30 A.M., and are despatched at 6.30 P.M.

Brown George, gardener	Freeman William, shoemaker	Tilley Thomas, under-steward
Brown Geo. shoemkr. & par. clk.	Harris Joseph, carpenter	Tolson Miss Mary Ann
Bugby Joseph, baker & farmer	Jervis Mr John	Wadsworth John, baker
Burton Mrs My. vict. White Horse	Jones John, gamekeeper	Warren Thomas, blacksmith,
Burton Mrs Matilda, grocer and beer retailer	March Robert, rake maker	grocer, Post-Office .
Collins Rev. William Lucas, M.A. rector	Mault Mrs Elizabeth, shopkpr.
Cunnington Thos. threshing machine owner	Randall Geo. Wm. mr. Nat. Sci.
Death Mrs Frances	Sackville Mrs Stopford, Drayton House	Farmers and Graziers.
	Sackville S. G. Stopford, Esq.	Gadsby John
	M. P. Drayton House	Hill Joseph
		Hodson Thomas

SLIPTON PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Lowick and Islip, on the north by Brigstock, on the west by Cranford, and on the south by Twywell. It contains 752 acres, of the rateable value of £1215, 6s. 8d., and the gross estimated rental is £1394, 10s. The population in 1801 was 128; in 1831, 155; in 1841, 159; in 1851, 155; in 1861, 144; and in 1871, 137 souls. The soil is principally a cold clay, with a portion of good loamy soil near the church, and large beds of ironstone have been discovered, and are now extensively worked by Mr Plevins, who is the owner of the blast furnaces in the adjoining parish. Mrs Stopford Sackville is lady of the manor, and principal owner.

Manor.—The abbot of Burgh (Peterborough) had 1 hide and 1 virgate here at the general survey, which was valued at 5s. In the time of Edward IV., this manor was in the possession of the family of Walgrave, from which it passed, in the twenty-fourth of Henry VIII. (1532), to William Wales, clerk, but in the reign of Elizabeth it was in the possession of the Mordaunts, and descended in the same manner as Drayton to the present proprietor. The hospital of St John, at Northampton, had possessions here, which were valued in 1535, at £4 5s. 4d.

The Village of Slipton, which is small, is about three miles W. of Thrapston.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, is a small building in the Early English style, consisting of nave, chancel, and south porch, with bell-turret at the west end containing one bell. The living is a discharged vicarage, in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £5, 12s. 3½d., and returned at £150 per annum. Mrs Stopford Sackville is the patroness, and the Rev. John Edward Else, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1771 for land.

The School, which is free to all the children of the parish from two to seven years of age, is supported by Mrs Stopford Sackville. The children have each the use of a pinafore during school hours.

Letters are received here through the Thrapston Post-Office.

Bailey Matthew, vict. Red Cow.

Farmers and Graziers.

Dainty Thomas, Glebe Farm.

Everard Vincent

Tibbett William Thomas Smith, The Grange

SUDBOROUGH PARISH

Is bounded on the north by Brigstock Forest and Lyveden, on the south by Lowick and Slipton, on the north-west by Brigstock, and on the east by Lowick. It contains 1765 acres, of the rateable value of £2066; and the estimated gross rental is £2558. The population in 1801 was 241; in 1831, 346; in 1841, 332; in 1851, 367; in 1861, 325; and in 1871, 272 souls. The principal landowners are the Duke of Cleveland (the lord of the manor), and Lord Lyveden.

Manor.—The abbey of St Peter's, Westminster, had three hides here at the general survey, which were given by Edward the Confessor when he rebuilt and endowed it. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1295), Reginald de Waterville held the lordship of the abbey; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Robert de Veer, Robert de Arderne, and John de Tichemershe, were lords of Sudburgh, at that time accounted a member of Lowick lordship. In the fourth of Queen Mary (1556) the manor of Sudborough was restored to the abbey of Westminster, but in the second of Elizabeth (1560), it was given to the Dean and Chapter of the collegiate church of Westminster. In the reign of James I. it was in the possession of the Mordaunt family, and was sold by one of the Earls of Peterborough to the Torringtons.

The Village of Sudborough, which is small, is about three miles W. of Thrapston.

The Church, which is of various styles, and dedicated to All Saints, is a neat edifice, consisting of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, north and south transepts, south porch, and square tower partly covered with ivy, and containing four bells. It was restored in 1830, when it was reseated and a gallery erected at the west end, and again in 1857, when the gallery was removed and the western arch thrown open. The north aisle, which had become dilapidated, was rebuilt to correspond with the south aisle, and the roof of the north transept was raised. The south porch was rebuilt in 1870, and the chancel entirely restored in 1872, and newly floored, partly with encaustic tiles. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £10, 5s. 10d., and now valued at £400 per annum. The bishop of Peterborough is the patron, and the Rev. Wm. Duthy, M.A., is the rector, and rural dean. The Rectory House, which is pleasantly situated near the church, is a stone building, built by the present rector in 1826.

A School was erected in the village by the Duke of Cleveland, which is attended by about thirty scholars.

Charities.—The Marchioness of Bath, in 1788, endowed a school here, with the sum of £600 3 per cent. reduced annuities; and the church land, 10a. 3r., lets for £12 per annum.

Post-Office.—William Howe, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Thrapston at 6.45 A.M., and are despatched at 6 P.M.

Bell Mrs Ann, baker, and vict.

Cleveland Arms

Duthy Rev. William, M.A. J.P.
rector and rural dean

Height William, cottager

Howe Wm. shopkeeper, P.O.

Jellens Mrs Ann, vict. Round Ho.

Mayes Martin, deliverer for

Chaplin & Horne at Thrapston

Spendlove Jno. carptr. & grocer

Taylor William, schoolmaster

Tebbutt Miss Catherine

Tebbutt John Chew (exrs. of),

brewers and maltsters

Farmers and Graziers.

Bullymore John

Leete Tebbutt

Perkins Joseph, Lodge

Simpson George (and butcher)

Smith Samuel

Tebbutt John Chew (exrs. of)

TWYWELL PARISH

Is bounded on the east and south by Woodford, on the north by Slipton, Islip, and Lowick, and on the west by Cranford. It contains 920 acres; its population in 1801 was 230; in 1831, 199; in 1841, 232; in 1851, 300; in 1861, 336; and in 1871, 382 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1967; and the gross estimated rental £2282. The soil is in general a strong clay; ironstone is worked here by the Newbridge Iron Ore Co. The principal proprietors are the Duke of Buccleuch (the lord of the manor), Capt. Purvis, and Miss Hunt.

Manor.—The abbey of Thorney had three hides, less 1½ virgate, at the time of the Domesday survey. In the reign of Henry II., Albericus the king's chamberlain held them, and from him they descended to Sir Robert de Vere. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), the abbot of Thorney, the master of St John's Hospital, and John de Lewkenor, were lords of Twywell and its members. After the dissolution of the monasteries it was given to William, Lord Parr. It was subsequently resumed by the Crown and given to John Dudley and John Ascouge in exchange for other lands. There was another manor here which was in the possession of the Walgraves for centuries.

The Village of Twywell, which is small, stands on high ground about three miles west of Thrapston. About half a mile from the village is the station belonging to the Kettering, Huntingdon, and Cambridge branch of the Midland Railway, which intersects the parish.

The Church, dedicated to St Nicholas, is partly Norman and partly in the Early English styles, and consists of a nave, chancel, south aisle, south porch, and square tower containing three bells. It was thoroughly restored in 1867, when it was furnished with open sittings, the chancel rebuilt, the south aisle enlarged, and a painted lancet window inserted in the tower. The living is a rectory rated in the king's books at £9, and now worth nearly £400 per annum. William Allington, Esq., is the patron, and the Rev. John Edward Else, M.A., vicar of Slipton, is curate in charge. The tithes were commuted for land in 1765. The Rectory House, a large and substantial building, pleasantly situated about the centre of the village, was built about the year 1760. Here is an Infant School supported by the rector and the school pence.

The Charities are an annual rent-charge of 20s. left to the poor, in 1709, by Thomas Ekins; the interest of £10 left for the same purpose, in 1753, by John Harris; the interest of £36, which is given in bread to the poor, left by Thomas Archer, a baker; and the church land, which yields only 8s. per annum.

Mrs Chapone, the authoress, was a native of this parish.

Letters are received here through the Thrapston Post-office.

Archer John, baker & shopkpr.
Bailey William, shoemaker
Blundell William, beerhouse
Brampton John, vict. Masons' Arms
Brampton William, stonemason
Eaton John, carpner. & builder

Eldred James, grocer
Else Rev. John Edward, M.A. curate in charge, Rectory
Fowler John Henry, engineer and machinist, brass founder and agricul. implement mkr.
Hughes Miss Sarah, mistress
Infant school

Phippa, 'Pickering, & Richard,
brickmakers—William Blundell, manager
Wallis Joseph, vict. Old Frier
Farmers and Graziers
Leete Sanders (and butcher)
Manton Mrs

WARKTON PARISH

Is bounded by Grafton on the east, Geddington on the north, Weekley on the west, and Kettering and Barton Seagrave on the south. It contains 1810 acres of the rateable value of £2796; and the gross estimated rental is £3037. The population in 1801 was 220; in 1831, 300; in 1841, 313; in 1851, 310; in 1861, 315; and in 1871, 303 souls. The soil is generally a strong black clay, and the Duke of Buccleuch is lord of the manor and principal proprietor. Bridges tells us that, in a close which abounds with stone, is a remarkable petrifying spring, and that here was formerly found a petrified human skull, which was preserved in Sidney College, Cambridge. "In Warkton," writes the same author, "is a long deep trench, not improbably the remains of some Roman work. A coin of the emperor Nerva, well preserved, has been found in some neighbouring grounds."

Manor.—At the time of the general survey, Werketun contained 3½ hides, which belonged to the abbey of Suffolk. There was a mill of the yearly value of 12s., 20a. of meadow, and a wood, and the whole was rated at £8. The manor of Warkton continued with this abbey till the general dissolution of the monasteries in the reign of Henry VIII., when it was granted with other lands to Sir Edward Montagu, and his heirs, to be held by the 20th part of a knight's fee, and the yearly rent of 60s. From Sir Edward it descended to his posterity, and is now in the hands of the representative of the same noble family.

The Village of Warkton is small, and stands on a hill about 2 miles E.N.E. of Kettering.

The Church, dedicated to St Edmund, comprises a nave and side aisles, chancel, south porch, and embattled tower, containing three bells. The tower is a complete and untouched specimen of the Perpendicular style of the 15th century. It was restored and reseatd in 1867–8. A new communion cloth was also presented by Lord and Lady Walter Montagu D. Scott. The chancel is remarkable for its very sumptuous monuments to the Montagu family; that of John Duke of Montagu, ob. 1794, and Mary Duchess of Montagu, ob. 1751, are by Roubilliac; and the one to Mary Duchess of Buccleuch, ob. 1775, is by Peter Matthias Van Gelder. Another splendid monument was erected, in 1846, to the memory of Elizabeth Montagu, Duchess dowager of Buccleuch. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £18, 16s. 3d., and now worth £310 per annum. The Duke of Buccleuch is the patron, and the Rev. Henry Stobart, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes, &c., were commuted for land in 1807. The Old Rectory House, which was covered with thatch, was pulled down about 20 years ago, and an excellent new one erected on a more elevated situation, by the Duke of Buccleuch.

A School for boys, girls, and infants, was built in 1867 by the Duke of Buccleuch, by whom it is entirely supported. The children from this parish are entitled to instruction at the endowed school at Weekley.

There are several noble avenues of trees running through this and the adjoining parishes. They were planted by one of the Dukes of Montagu, and from this fact he was known as "John the planter." One of these avenues is three miles long, and their total aggregate length is estimated at 70 miles. (For charities of this parish see table prefixed to the hundred.)

Post-Office—Wall box. Letters arrive from Kettering at 7.40 A.M., and are despatched at 5.50 P.M.

Archer George, beer retailer
Fletcher John, gamekeeper
Harris Mrs Sarah, shopkeeper
Harris William, blacksmith
Mutton George, carpenter

Panther Jno. Burditt, tanner
Panther Mrs Rebecca
Potter Wm. baker & shopkr.
Stobart Rev. Henry, M.A. rector
Turner Thos. cattle dealer

Farmers and Graziers.
Dawson John, The Lodge
Lancum John
Melkin Miss Lucy
Potter John, The Lodge

WOODFORD PARISH.

The boundaries of Woodford are formed by the river Nene on the east, Denford and Islip on the north, Cranford on the west, and Ringstead on the south. It contains 2127 acres; its population in 1801 was 491; in 1831, 639; in 1841, 680; in 1851, 726; in 1861, 913; and in 1871, 1066 souls. The gross estimated rental is £6613, 14s., and the rateable value of the parish is £5677. The land is principally a stiff clay. Large beds of ironstone have been discovered here, and are now extensively worked. Mrs Stopford Sackville (lady of the manor) and the Hon. Mrs Arbuthnot are the principal proprietors. In the vicinity of the village are three tumuli, near which Roman tiles, fragments of tessellated pavements, and an urn have been discovered. The Kettering, Huntingdon, and Cambridge branch of the Midland Railway runs over a part of this parish.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey Ralph held 1 hide and 1 virgate in Wodeford, of the Bishop of Constance; the abbey of Burgh had 7 hides, which were held by Roger; and Roger, Hugh, and Seward had 3 virgates here of the abbey at the same time, and the whole was valued at £3, 10s. In the reign of Henry II. there were 8 hides here of the fee of Burgh; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), John Spigurnell, Roger de Boys, and Alice Traylly, were lords of Woodford. In the nineteenth of Henry VIII. (1528), John Norwich, Esq., died seized of a manor here, which had been previously held by the families of Traylly and Holt, and left it to his posterity; and in the following year Thomas Lenton died seized of a manor here, held of the Abbot of Peterborough, and which he left to his descendants. In the second of Elizabeth (1559), William Vaux, Lord Harrowden, levied a fine of a manor here, which subsequently passed to the family of Malory. William, Lord St John Baron Bletso, succeeded his father in the possession of the manor of Woodford with about half the parish, in 1708. Lord St John's property passed early in the present century into the hands of the Duke of Dorset and the Right Hon. Charles Arbuthnot, by purchase.

The Village of Woodford, which is pretty large, is situated on high ground, sloping to the river, about 2½ miles S.W. by W. of Thrapston.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, consists of a nave, with clerestory, north and south aisles, north and south porches, a chancel, and western tower surmounted by a handsome spire, and containing five bells. This edifice is remarkable for the beauty of its execution, and the peculiarities of its construction and arrangement. The north ground story of the nave belongs to the Transitional period, and the remainder of the building is in the later styles. The south aisle contains a most beautiful Early English porch; and there is also a very curious arcade of Lancet character; and a most singular monumental arch, with a mask corbel, belonging to the Curvilinear period. It was thoroughly restored in 1867, when the chancel was partly rebuilt, the old pews removed, and chairs substituted. Some of the windows are filled with stained glass. Whilst the church was undergoing restoration, a hole was discovered on the west side of one of the pillars of the north aisle, which contained an old box, in which a human heart was found wrapped up in a piece of cloth, but there was nothing to show to whom it belonged. At Yaxley a similar circumstance is said to have occurred, the box in which the heart was contained being made of a piece of bamboo. This curious incident will doubtless find its explanation in the fact that when Crusaders fell in the wars in the Holy Land, it was customary to bury their bodies on the field of battle, and send their hearts home in a box to their friends for interment. In the north aisle lie two effigies, supposed to represent Sir Walter Traylly and Alianora, his wife; and there is a fine brass in good preservation, dated 1583, to the memory of Simon Malory. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £22, 9s. 7d., and now worth about £540 per annum. The patronage is vested in Lord St John, and the Rev. Christopher Smyth, M.A., is the rector. The tithes were commuted for land in 1763. On the north side of the churchyard is an ancient farmhouse, which presents some features similar in style and date to parts of the church. The Rectory House, pleasantly situated, was built in 1820.

There is a Baptist Chapel, a stone building, in the village; and also a Primitive Methodist Chapel of brick, erected by subscription in 1869.

The National School, with a master's residence attached, was erected in 1858, and enlarged in 1872; it will accommodate 150 scholars.

Woodford House, the seat of the Hon. Mrs Arbuthnot, is a plain but handsome building, situated on a beautiful lawn, and surrounded by tastefully arranged pleasure grounds.

The Charities of the parish are the Charity Estate, 39a. 3r. 10p., left to the poor in 1577, by Peter and Edward Grey, and which lets for £102, 9s. 4d. per annum; the Church Land, 14a. 3r. 5p. which yields £40 per annum; and a rent-charge of 13s. 4d. called Whalley's Money, which is given to the poor.

Post-Office.—John Fletcher, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Thrapston at 7.5 A.M., and are despatched at 5.25 P.M.

Arbuthnot Hon. Mrs. Woodford House

Allen Sam. miller, Woodford Mill

Arnsby William, shoemaker

Bailey George, shoemaker

Bales Joseph, blacksmith

Barnes Matthias, baker & grocer

Beeby William, beerhouse

Bird Joseph, surgeon

Brooks Charles, miller

Childs Samuel, shopkeeper

Eady Moses Irons, milr. & farm.

Ellison William P. schoolmstr.

Fletcher Jno. shopkpr. P.O.

Gibson Chas. vict. Duke's Arms

Green Thomas, butcher

Gunn George, market gardener

Gunn Joseph Eaton, butcher

Gunn Ricd. vict. Prince of Wales

Gunn Samuel, mason & builder

Gunn Zachariah, beerhouse

Harlock Geo. vict. Bakers' Arms

Jones William, butcher

Kirton Benjamin, wheelwright

Knighton D. vict. Coach & Horses

Lort Geo. income tax collector

Manning Emanuel, shopkeeper

March William, carpenter, &c.

Milward John, shopkeeper

Neall William, tailor & draper

Newbridge Iron Ore Co.—Wm.

Geo. Bush, manager

Percival Mr James

Plevins Chas. Hy. ironmaster

Robinson Simeon, butcher

Rooksby Mrs Elizabeth

Sanderson Mr John

Smyth Rev. Christopher, M.A.

rector and rural dean

Tarrant George, carpenter

Tyley Mrs Mary

Tyrrell Rev. John (Baptist)

Vandeleur Hector Stewart,

Esq. Woodford House

Wadsworth Joseph, coaldealer

Wadsworth Thomas, baker

Watson Rev. John Theod, B.A.

curate

Woodford Iron Ore Works,

Samuel Pickett, manager

Farmers and Graden.

Allen Samuel, Woodford Mill

Dearlove John, Woodford Lodge

Eady Moses Irons, Woodford Mill

Fisher Wm. Sharp, Rose Cottage

Jervis William Hodson

Linnell Wm. Woodford Lodge

Mitchell John

Tiney John Eaton

Walker Joseph

Carrier.—Geo. Beeby, to Thrapston on Tues., to Wellingborough on Wed., & to Oundle on Thur.

CORBY HUNDRED.

THE hundred of Corby is bounded on the east by the hundreds of Willybrook and Polebrook, on the north by the river Welland, which separates it from Rutland and Leicestershire, and on the west and south by the hundreds of Rothwell and Huxloe. It extends along the north-western border of the county, and covers an area of 59,400 statute acres. Its greatest length is about 19 miles, and its greatest breadth about 9½ miles. At the time of the Conqueror's survey, this hundred was divided into Stokes and Corby hundreds, and at what time they became united is not known. Corby hundred and the manor of Corby have always had the same possessors, and the Countess of Cardigan and de

Lancastre is the present lady. It is divided into 27 parishes and 4 hamlets, of which the following table is an enumeration, showing the population and number of houses in 1871, the acreage according to the ratebooks, and the rateable value and gross estimated rental of each parish :—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Ashley	1,184	85	4	...	185	193	378	2,655	2,987
Blatherwyck	2,105	41	1	...	94	98	192	2,466	2,854
Brampton	2,192	27	76	77	153	3,197	3,579
Brigstock	5,900	255	17	...	538	523	1,061	8,004	9,116
Bulwick	2,067	72	3	...	165	190	355	2,801	3,296
Carlton East	1,598	19	5	2	35	54	89	3,127	3,355
Corby	174	24	361	338	699	3,563	3,972
Beanfield Lawns*	2,596	2	4	3	7
Cottingham	146	17	366	321	687	6,644	7,323
Middleton, township }	3,206	91	10	...	177	177	354
Deene	1,569	48	4	...	122	118	240	2,235	2,669
Deenthorpe, ham.	1,421	47	1	...	124	124	248	1,896	2,197
Dingley	1,317	23	4	1	47	63	110	2,539	2,856
Fineshade	840	12	1	...	23	24	47	726	837
Geddington	2,220	210	12	...	444	438	882	3,824	4,332
Gretton	3,792	196	8	...	444	419	863	7,376	8,187
Harringtonworth	3,307	77	1	...	184	181	365	5,692	6,414
Laxton	1,279	24	2	...	46	57	103	1,255	1,430
Newton-in-the-Willows	1,153	18	1	...	41	38	79	1,899	2,040
Oakley, Great	2,413	42	5	...	95	105	200	2,930	3,197
Oakley, Little	723	29	1	...	63	68	131	771	876
Rockingham	908	50	1	...	107	142	249	1,728	2,002
Stanion	1,550	81	177	163	340	2,336	2,568
Stoke Albany	1,656	81	5	2	181	166	347	2,853	3,028
Sutton Bassett	725	40	1	...	82	79	161	1,454	1,628
Wakerley	1,797	43	2	...	105	104	209	1,990	2,272
Weekley	1,540	51	3	...	117	128	245	2,693	2,936
Weldon, Great	2,496	62	1	...	150	152	302	2,954	3,406
Weldon, Little ham. }	1,167	121	12	...	242	250	492	2,451	2,893
Weston, by Welland	985	48	2	...	106	103	209	2,085	2,335
Wilbarston	2,782	136	10	...	283	298	581	4,342	4,886
Pipwell (part of) ham. }		18	56	63	119
	56,498	2,369	158	5	5,240	5,257	10,497	90,586	99,271

* Beanfield Lawns was constituted a separate parish in 1863, for Poor Law purposes.

CHARITIES OF CORBY HUNDRED, as abstracted from the parliamentary reports. See also the histories of the parishes, &c.

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purpose applied.	Annual value.
	Feoffment Estate (9a. 3r. 8p.)	Ashley parish, poor, church, &c.	£18 10 0
1684.	Thomas Maydwell (rent)	Ditto, poor	1 16 0
1768.	Martha Lamb (£200)	Ditto, ditto	9 5 8
1808.	Henry Farrer (£100)	Ditto, ditto
1851.	Rev. Richard Farrer (£100)	For poor widows and widowers who have attained the age of 60	2 13 8
1858.	Rev. Richd. T. P. Pulteney (£2064, 13s. 4d. 3 per cent consols)	School	80 0 0
1868.	Rev. Richd. T. P. Pulteney (£500 East India 5 per cent)	For paying organist and keeping organs in repair	25 0 0
1869.	Rev. Richd. T. P. Pulteney (£250)	Interest to be applied to repair of the church clock and heat- ing the church	10 0 0
	Benjamin Healy (£100)	Blatherwyck parish, poor	5 0 0
1684.	Thomas Coles (4 acres)	Ditto, 6 poor men	6 0 0
	Sir John Norwich's Charity (8a.) ...	Brampton parish, poor	8 0 0

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purpose applied.	Annual value.
1620.	Rev. Nicholas Latham (rent)	Brigstock parish, school	30 0 0
	Commissioners of Inclosure ($\frac{1}{2}$ acre)	Ditto, ditto	2 10 0
	Town Estate	Ditto, poor, &c.	24 0 0
	Tolls of Fairs	Ditto, poor, &c.	6 10 0
	Roger Montague	Ditto, poor	5 0 0
1658.	John Phillips (rent)	Ditto, ditto	2 0 0
1726.	Cath. Palmer (£120 3 per cent. con.)	Bulwick parish, poor	6 18 0
1705.	Charles Tryon (£200 now £400 3 } per cent. consols)	Bulwick parish, poor	12 0 0
	Poor's Land (16a.)	Sunday school and poor	23 0 0
1861.	Rev. J. T. Tryon (£100 3 per } cent consols)	Poor and school	3 0 0
1668.	Sir Geoffrey Palmer (rent)	Carlton par., hospital for 5 poor } persons	60 0 0
1734.	Thomas Hurst (rent)	Ditto, ditto	6 0 0
1765.	Sir Thomas Palmer (£100)	Ditto, ditto	8 0 0
	Mrs Catherine Palmer (£100)	Ditto, ditto	2 1 0
	Sale of a walnut tree (£35)	With which land was purchased
1711.	Lady Mary Palmer (£200)	—poor, and apprenticing childn.	70 0 0
	John Knight & others (£80)	Corby parish	10 16 6
	Church Land (2a. or. 33p.)	Ditto, poor	25 16 0
1714.	Francis Clifton (house & 2a. 1r. 1p.)	Ditto, poor	3 5 0
1627.	Richd. Gray (£100 3½ per cent. con.)	Ditto, British school	110 0 0
1834.	Wm. Rowlatt	Ditto, Independent ministry	15 0 0
1835.	Ditto (£500)	Poor	16 5 0
1867.	Thos. White (£550 3½ per cent. con.)	Cottingham par., church & poor	40 10 0
1670.	Wm. Downhall (18a.)	Ditto, school	11 0 0
	Profits of the manor, &c. (£233, } 6s. 8d., 3 per cent. consols)	Ditto, poor	4 0 0
1726.	Barbara Medlicott (£100)	Ditto, school	4 0 0
	Mrs Catherine Palmer (£100)	Ditto, poor	4 0 0
1727.	Ditto, ditto (£100)	Middleton township, for appren-
	William Riddell (land)	ticing boys and repairs of tombs
	Poor's money (£40)	in churchyard	7 14 6
	Ditto (£70)	Deene parish, poor	2 0 0
1657.	Mary Allen (£8)	Deenthorpe hamlet	3 6 8
	Donor unknown (£14)	Dingley parish, poor	1 2 0
1868.	Miss Mary Griffin (£50 3 per cent. } consols)	Ditto, ditto	1 13 0
1636.	Sir Robert Dallington (32 acres)	For poor, and keeping tomb-
1717.	Samuel Lee (£100)	stones in repair	86 0 0
	Accumulated interest (£26)	Geddington par., 24 poor persons
1813.	Nathaniel Collis (£300)	Purchase of land, ditto, poor	24 0 0
	Donor unknown	Ditto, dissenting purposes	15 0 0
	Matthew Johnson	Gretton parish, poor—lost
1813.	Thomas Peach	Ditto, apprenticing children	2 0 0
	Robert Laxton	Gretton par., 10 poor widows	10 0 0
1764.	Hon. Maria Hatton (£400)	Ditto, 8 poor widows—lost
	Charity Estates (51a.)	Lost
	Mason's Charity	Harringworth parish, school, poor } & apprenticing children	104 10 0
1635.	Andrew Pymill (rent)	Ditto, repairing tombstones, and } the poor	1 10 0
1813.	Ann Patrick Small (£10)	Great Oakley, poor	0 5 6
1730.	Hon. Ann Watson (£40)	Little Oakley, poor	0 10 0
	— Morson (£17)	Rockingham parish, poor	3 4 0
	Poor's Land in Middleton hamlet } (1r. 26p.)	Ditto, ditto	1 0 0
	Ditto, in Finedon Par. (6a. 2r. 15p.)	Ditto	10 0 0
1824.	Hon. Geo. Watson (£100)	Ditto, ditto	3 2 4
	Town Estate (12a.)	Stoke Albany par., church, &c.	56 7 5
1783.	Frances Parker (rent)	Ditto, poor	0 10 0
1797.	Rev. M. Snow (£100)	Wakerly par., Bibles and prayer- } books to poor children	3 0 0
1614.	Sir Edw. Montague (land)	Weekley parish, hospital	130 0 0
1619.	Rev. Nicholas Latham (rent)	Ditto, school	8 0 0
	Church Land (2 acres)	Ditto, ditto	1 14 0
	Hunt's Charity	Ditto, poor	2 2 0

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purpose applied.	Annual value.
	Dr Bentham	Ditto, ditto.....	0 10 0
	A customary dole	Ditto, ditto.....	6 6 8
1597.	Henry Pratt (rent)	Great & Little Weldon, ditto ...	1 0 0
1727.	James Cooper	Ditto, ditto.....	3 0 0
	Earl of Winchelsea (a customary payment)	Ditto, ditto	2 12 0
	Doles	Sutton Bassett Chapelry, ditto...	2 10 0
1623.	Robert Swan (rent)	Wilbarston parish, poor, &c. ...	2 3 4
1784.	Robert Esham (£10)	Ditto, poor—lost
1705.	Rev. Everard Smith (£10)	Ditto, ditto—lost
	Mrs Catherine Palmer (£100)	Ditto, school	4 0 0
Total.....			£1172 10 3

ASHLEY PARISH.

Ashley is bounded on the east by Cottingham and Carlton, on the south by Stoke Albany and Wilbarston, on the west by Weston, and on the north by the river Welland, which divides it from Leicestershire. It contains 1184 statute acres, of the rateable value of £2655; the gross estimated rental is £2987; and its population in 1801 was 333; in 1831, 304; in 1841, 323; in 1851, 301; in 1861, 340; and in 1871, 378 souls. The soil is of a mixed quality, and the principal proprietors are Sir Geoffrey Palmer, Bart. (the lord of the manor), Messrs Thomas and Edmund Berry, Robert Wade, Richard Farrer Owsley, and George G. Grocock. The property of this parish is all freehold. Several fragments of Roman pavement, urns, coins, &c., have been found in a field called Alderstone, whilst cutting for the Rugby and Stamford Railway, which runs along the border of the parish.

Manor.—Robert de Todeni, to whom Gunfrid and Wachelin were under-tenants, held three hides of land in Ascele, at the time of the Conqueror's survey. There was a mill, of the yearly rent of 32d., nine acres of meadow, and a small wood, and the whole was valued at 30s. Before the conquest it was the freehold of Franco and Algar, and was rated at 20s.; Wibert also held of Robert de Todeni a third part of a hide here at the same time, which was valued at 16d. In the reign of Henry II. this lordship was in the hands of several proprietors; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Walter de Langton, Robert de Waterville, and John Hotot were lords of Ashley. In the twentieth of Edward III. (1347), Edmund Peverel accounted for a fourth part and an eighth part of a knight's fee here, of the fee of John Mareschal. From the Peverel family the manor was carried in marriage to the De la Poles, with whom it continued for several generations. Another manor here, possessed by the family of Waterville, in the reign of Edward II., passed to Ralph Basset, of Weldon, who, in the thirtieth of Edward III. (1356), levied a fine in fee-simple of it. These manors afterwards passed through several possessors, amongst whom were the families of Dynham, Griffin, Brooke, and Tanfield. When Bridges wrote, about a century since, "Mr Green, of Rolleston, and Mr Street, of Harborough," were lords of them. The Manor House, an ancient stone building, stands near the church.

The Village of Ashley is pleasantly situated, about five miles E.N.E. of Market Harborough, and about half a mile from the Medburn Station on the Rugby and Stamford Railway. It has been considerably improved by the erection of several substantial dwellings and cottages; and a school-house, with master's residence attached, was built by the present rector.

The Church, dedicated to St Mary, in the Decorated style, stands at the north side of the village, and is an ancient structure, consisting of a nave and side aisles, chancel, and square tower containing five bells, and surmounted by a spire. It has been restored and enlarged within the last few years by the present rector, and is now one of the handsomest country churches in the county. The chancel in particular, with its stained glass windows, reredos of alabaster elaborately carved and heightened in effect by gold and colour, and the pavement of marble and tile combined, is very striking. The roof also is richly decorated, whilst on the walls are most interesting frescoes illustrative of the Te Deum, neatly executed by Clayton and Bell. In a side chapel immediately adjoining the chancel, and communicating with it by means of a beautiful arcade, is placed a fine-toned organ. In the body of the church is the font, particularly deserving of notice. The pulpit also is of great beauty. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £10, and now worth about £395 per annum, with residence in the gift of and held by the Rev. Richard Thomas P. Pulteney, M.A. The Rectory House, which stands in the centre of the village, has been much enlarged and improved by the present rector.

The National School, a stone building with a master's residence attached, was erected and endowed with an income of £80 a year, by the present rector, and is attended by about eighty scholars.

The Independent Chapel, established in 1673, is one of the oldest dissenting places of worship in the kingdom. The Rev. Edward H. Palmer is the pastor.

Charities.—The feoffment estate consists of 9a. 3r. 8p., the rent of which is applied to the repairs of the church, highways, &c.; and the other charities are, a rent-charge of 40s. left to the poor by Thomas Maydwell, in 1684; the interest of £200 (with which £196, 11s. 2d. navy 5 per cents. was purchased, and afterwards substituted for £206, 7s. 6d. new 4 per cents.), bequeathed to the poor, in 1768, by Matthew Lamb; and £100 by Henry Farrer, Esq., in 1808, also to the poor; and the Rev. Henry Farrer in 1851 left £100 to be given at Christmas to poor widows and widowers who have attained the age of sixty. The interest of £2066, 13s. 4d. 3 per cent. consols, given by the present rector (Rev. Richard T. P. Pulteney) for the support of a schoolmaster, and also £500 given by the same donor, East India 5 per cent., the interest to be applied to paying the organist and keeping the organ in repair. He also gave £250, the interest of which is to be applied to the repair of the church clock and heating the church.

Post-Office.—Wall Box. Letters arrive from Market Harborough about 8.30 A.M., and are despatched at 4 P.M. on week days only.

Carriss William, butcher
Chapman Mr George
Edgington Wm. Thos. schoolmar.
Elliott Mr Thomas
Fox Edwin, vict. Graziers' Arms
Kendall Philip Jas. blacksmith
Limehouse Wm. gard. Rectory
Marshall Robt. station-master
Neall Samuel, cattle dealer
Pulteney Rev. Rich. Thos P.
M.A. rector

Palmer Rev. Edwd. H. (Indpt.)
Reddish John, vict. George
Shaw William, basket-maker
Stafford Mrs Ann, flour dealer
Stafford Benj. wheelwt. & carpt.
Stafford Saml. tailor & grocer
Stafford Saml. vict. Carpenters' Arms
Stafford Thomas, baker
Watson Jas. Robt. corn merch.

Farmers and Graziers.

*Marked * are Young.*

*Berry Edmund
*Berry Thomas
Carriss Thomas
Elliott John
*Grocock George
Kirby Thos. (and parish clerk)
*Owaley Richard Farrer
Scott Mrs Ann
*Wade Robert, Manor House
Walker Joseph

Carrier.—Thomas Edgley, to Market Harborough on Tuesday, and Leicester on Saturday.

BLATHERWYCK PARISH

Comprises the parishes of the Holy Trinity and St Mary Magdalen, united in 1448, and is bounded on the east by King's Cliffe and Fineshade; by Wakerley and Laxton on the north and west, and by Bulwick on the south. It contains 2105 acres, including a part of Rockingham forest (660a.) said to be extra-parochial; its population in 1801 was 154; in 1831, 227; in 1841, 236; in 1851, 243; in 1861, 189; and in 1871, 192 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £2466; and the gross estimated rental is £2854. The soil varies, and Henry de Stafford, Esq. (the lord of the manor), is the owner of the whole, except the glebe land.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, Norman held of Robert de Buci 2 hides of land, in Blarewiche; there was a mill of the annual rent of 30d. 6 acres of meadow, and a wood 1 mile long and half a mile broad, and the whole was rated at 18s. In the reign of Henry II., these were in the possession of Robert Fitz-Hugh and Richard Dengayne. In the sixteenth of Edward II. (1322), John Engaine was lord of the manor, and it was subsequently divided in moieties, between his female descendants, after the failure of male issue. Sir Humphrey Stafford, descended from the ancient barons of Stafford, became possessed of a moiety of this manor, by his marriage with Alianora, the daughter of Sir Thomas Aylesbury, and the whole of it subsequently came into this family. The town and manor were carried in marriage more than a century since, by the daughters of William Stafford, Esq., to Henry O'Brien, Esq.; and Henry de Stafford, Esq., is the present lord.

The Village of Blatherwyck, which is very small, is eight miles S.W. from Oundle, and about the same distance N. by E. from Rockingham.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a very ancient structure, consisting of a nave and north aisle, north chapel or burying-place, chancel, south porch, and a low tower. There was another church here dedicated to St Mary Magdalen, which has long since been demolished. The present church was partially restored and entirely re-roofed in 1855, and a new south porch was erected in 1868; the church-yard wall was partially re-built in 1870. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £14, 13s. 3d., and now valued at £450 per annum. Henry de Stafford, Esq., is the patron, and the Rev. Sotherton Backler, M.A., incumbent. The tithes were commuted, in 1844, for a rent-charge of £290. The Rectory House was erected in 1836, by the late rector, and is a neat stone building in the village.

The day school here is wholly supported by the lord of the manor.

Blatherwyck Hall, the seat of Henry de Stafford, Esq., is an ancient and beautiful mansion, delightfully situated on high ground, in a splendid park or lawn, well stocked with deer, a short distance from the church. The fish-pond is the largest in the county, covering an area of 58 acres, and in the domain are 314 acres of wood-land and plantations.

Two Stone Coffins were dug up in the glebe land some years since, and are now placed in the garden of the rectory. One of them is four feet long, and contained that portion of a human skeleton, from the knees upwards; and the other, which is about two feet in length, contained the legs of the same body, and was placed at the head of the large one, and about one foot apart from it. An urn was also found in the smaller coffin, which is in the possession of the rector; the skeleton is supposed to have been that of a female, and the urn is not considered a Roman one.

Post-Office.—James Long, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Wansford at 7.30 A.M., and are despatched at 6.30 P.M.

Backler Rev. Sotherton, M.A., rector	Hercock Daniel, blacksmith	Royce Rich. farmr. & beer retlr.
Cunnington Clement, wheelwrt.	Hercock George, gamekeeper	Tomblin Henry, cottager
De Stafford Henry, Esq. Blatherwyck Park	Long Jas. steward, post-office	Tomblin John, shopkeeper
	Long Miss Fanny, schoolmrs.

BRAMPTON PARISH:

Brampton, or Brampton Ash, is bounded on the east by Stoke Albany, on the north by Weston, on the west by Dingley, and on the south by Braybrooke and Desborough. It contains 2192 acres of the rateable value of £3197; the gross estimated rental is £3578, 10s.; and the population in 1801 was 79; in 1831, 100; in 1841, 104; in 1851, 101; in 1861, 107; and in 1871, 153 souls. The soil is of a mixed quality, and the principal proprietors are Earl Spencer (lord of the manor), Henry Vane Forester Hungerford, Esq., and Mr T. W. Wartnaby.

Manor.—At the time of the general survey, this lordship was in the hands of Robert de Buci, who had 3 hides; the Countess Judith, who had 1 hide; and four socmen who had 2 carucates; and the whole was valued at £3, 16s. In the reign of Henry II., 1 hide was held of the socage of the Crown, Richard Basset had 2 hides, and Ralph Fitz Eldwin 4 hides, wanting 2 small virgates. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), John le Hotot and Roger de Lisle were lords of Brampton. The possessions held here by these persons were afterwards known as Overhall Manor and Netherhall Manor, and fines were levied of them by the family of Holt. From the Holts they passed to the family of Norwich, with which they continued for many generations, thence to the noble family that now possesses them.

In a line between Desborough and Dingley is the Hermitage House, now a farmhouse, a very ancient building, rebuilt in 1853; a chapel formerly stood at the east end of it, and the materials of which the chapel were composed were used in the erection of a house at Market Harborough.

The Village of Brampton, which is small, stands on high ground, about $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Market Harborough.

The Church, partly in the Early English and partly in the Perpendicular styles, is dedicated to St Mary, and consists of nave and side aisles, chancel, north and south porches, and a tower surmounted by a spire, and containing a peal of six bells. It was restored, reseated, and floored in 1849, at the expense of the parishioners. There are the remains of a rood loft, the stairs to it being in good repair. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £21, 6s. 8d., and now valued at £400 per annum. The Earl Spencer is the patron, and the Rev. Sidney Lidderdale Smith, M.A., is the rector. The Rectory House, a good substantial building, is pleasantly situated a little west of the church.

Charity.—Sir John Norwich's charity consists of 8 acres of land, the rent of which, £8 a year, is distributed to the poor of the parish.

Letters through Market Harborough.

Smith Rev. Sidney Lidderdale,
M.A. rector
Farmers and Graziers.
Hughes Alfred (& manufact. &

inventor of the reaping mach.
patent lifters), Manor House
Paine James, Dingley Farm
Paine William, Hermitage Farm

Schilling George
Wartnaby Thomas West
Wiles John, Dob Hall

BRIGSTOCK PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Benefield on the east, by Weldon on the north, Geddington on the west, and by Sudborough on the south. It contains 5900 acres; its population in 1801 was 903; in 1831, 1167; in 1841, 1262; in 1851, 1232; in 1861, 1159; and in 1871, 1061 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £8003, 12s.; and the gross estimated rental £9115, 14s. The land varies from a stiff clay to a light gravelly soil; the greater part of the lordship is in pasture and woodland, and the Rt. Hon. Lord Lyveden (lord of the manor), and the Dukes of Buccleuch and Cleveland, are the principal proprietors.

Manor.—Bricstoc contained 3 hides of land, and was in the hands of the Crown at the time of the Norman survey. There was a mill, of the annual value of 5s., 7 acres of meadow, and a wood, 15 furlongs in length and a mile in breadth, and the whole, including the members of Slepe, which contained 1 hide, Geitentone, 1 hide, and Stanere, $1\frac{1}{2}$ virgate, was valued at £20. In the previous reign it was rated at £15. In the reign of Henry II. this manor was still in the hands of the king, and in the twelfth of Edward II. (1318) the tenants of the manor agreed to an annual rent of £46, which continued till the reign of Edward III., when an abatement was made of it, and in the twenty-seventh of Henry VI. (1448) it was leased out at a yearly rent of £40 a year. The manor tenants, as holding of the Crown in ancient demesne, are free from all payment of toll. The late lessee of the Crown was Robert Vernon Vernon (first Lord) Lyveden, eldest son of the late R. P. Smith, Esq., by Caroline, daughter of R. Vernon, Esq., born in 1800, married 1823, Emma Mary, daughter of third Earl of Upper Ossory (extinct), educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, B.A. 1822; was a Deputy Lieutenant for the County of Northampton, Secretary of the Board of Control in 1835, Under Secretary for the Colonies in 1839, and Secretary at War in 1852; President of Board of Control, 1855-58; M.P.

for Tralee, 1829, 1831; and for Northampton, 1831, 1859; died in 1873, and succeeded by his son Fitz-Patrick Henry Vernon, born 1824; married, 1853, Albretha Elizabeth, daughter of third Earl Fitz-William. Residences—Farming Woods, Thrapston; Laundimer House, Oundle; Reform and Brooks' Clubs, S.W.; and 20 Saville Row, W. In the fifth of James I. (1607) a grant was made to Robert, Earl of Salisbury, of the manor and rectory of Brigstock; and in the same year, in consideration of £230, the king granted to Roger Montagu, Esq., and his heirs, for ever, 125 acres of pasture, meadow, and arable land, in Brigstock, at an annual rent of 40s. 6d., and these lands have descended lineally to the Duke of Buccleuch, the present proprietor. "Within Brigstock Manor," says Bridges, "are these customs. If a man die seized of copyhold lands or tenements, which come to him by descent in fee, his youngest son shall be heir. The reason assigned, is that the father, if he pleased, might sell the land. But if he die seized of lands and tenements by him purchased, the eldest shall inherit; and in case such eldest son die without issue, the youngest brother or sister shall be next heir, provided no surrender appears to the contrary. If lands be entailed they descend according to the limitation of the estate tail; by the same custom, if a man shall purchase half a yard-land, and Cossicles, in Brigstock, and at his decease leave two sons, the younger shall have the Cossicles, and the elder the land. By Cossicle is meant houses without land." The Manor House, now a farmhouse, is an ancient building.

The Village of Brigstock, which is large and important, is about six miles N.W. from Thrapston, and eight miles N.E. from Kettering. In the sixth of Edward IV. (1466) the grant of a weekly market on Saturday was made to Brigstock; it was afterwards changed to Thursday, but it has now fallen into disuse. Fairs are still held on the 25th of April, the 4th of September, and 22nd of November. The ancient market cross, erected in 1586 and bearing Queen Elizabeth's arms, still adorns the centre of the village.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, is an ancient structure, at the S.E. end of the village; it is in four different styles of architecture, Early English, Decorated, and Perpendicular, and consists of nave and chancel, north and south aisle, Lady chapel, south porch, tower and spire containing five bells, and a peculiar round tower adjoining the steeple. The living is a vicarage with the perpetual curacy of Stanion annexed, in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £11, 7s. 3½d., and now worth about £300 per annum. The Duke of Cleveland is the patron, and the Rev. J. P. Sandlands, M.A., incumbent. The tithes of Brigstock and Stanion were commuted for land in 1795.

The Independents and Primitive Methodists have each a chapel in the village.

Latham's Charity School, founded in 1620, is endowed with £30 per annum, and in it the children are taught free. It is supported by the Duke of Buccleuch, who also maintains an Infant School attached to it; and there is another school supported by the Right Hon. Lord Lyveden. The Ladies Fitzpatrick left £1000 some years since, the interest to be distributed yearly to the poor; they also built and endowed an Infant School. (For the other charities of the parish, see the table prefixed to this hundred.)

Hale, a manor, formerly a hamlet, in this parish, is now in the possession of the Duke of Buccleuch. Here was anciently a church or chapel, dedicated to St Nicholas, which on the depopulation of the hamlet was suffered to go to ruin. The Manor House, now a farmhouse, and occupied by Mr William P. Bradshaw, is supposed to be a part of St Nicholas' Church; the doors, windows, &c., have an ecclesiastical appearance.

Brigstock Park, within the limits of the forest of Rockingham, formerly belonged to the Duke of Montagu, but is now the property of the Duke of Cleveland.

Farming Woods, or Farming Woods Hall, also part of the forest, formerly the seat of the Rt. Hon. the Ladies Fitzpatrick, and now the splendid mansion of the Rt. Hon. Lord Lyveden, is situate about one mile eastward of the church. The mansion, which stands in a fine park well stocked with deer, is surrounded by masses of old woods, the demesne being a portion of the ancient forest; part of the house has been the Old Forest Lodge, to which several additions have been made by the Earl of Upper Ossory and the late noble owner.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank.—Letters arrive from Thrapston at 7.5 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 6 P.M. Joseph John Ireson, postmaster.

Lyveden The Right Hon. Lord,

Farming Woods

Allen Edward, sawyer
Arnsby Miss Hannah, beerho.
Attenborough Jno. Gowram, agt.
to Ld. Lyveden, tanner, currier, brickmkr. & limeburner
Bailey Joseph, tailor
Beale Eusby, cottager
Bellamy Jacob, shoemaker
Bellamy Mrs Rebecca M. mlnr.
Bellamy Mrs Sarah, shoemkr.
Bradshaw Wm. Philip, jun. mlnr.
Bredin Miss Mary Ann, mistress of Infant school
Cheney Thomas, farm bailiff
Clark Fred. & John, blkmths.
Clark William, butcher
Colyer Wm. grocer and draper
Dixon Geo. beerho. Golden Lion
Elliot James, wheelwright
Freeman Frederick, gardener,
Farming Woods
Freeman Septimus, baker
Gadsby Wm. Knight, gr. & dpr.
Goodacre John, baker
Gray Peter, plumb. and glazier
Gray William, hawker

Hight James, hairdresser
Hill Hayden, vict. Angel
Humphrey John, baker
Humphrey John, shoemaker
Ireson Jph. John, schoolmaster
Johnson William, wheelwright
Loveday James, saddler
Loveday William C. cottager
Loweth Jas. vict. Lord Nelson
Lucas William, grocer
Mace Isaac, carptr. and joiner
Mace John Thos. carp. and jar.
Mace Wm. joiner and builder
Merry John, vict. Old Three Cocks
Pettit John, gamekeeper
Plowright Mrs Cath. shopkpr.
Rawson Wm. vict. Black Horse
Richards Luke, tailr. & wln. dpr.
Richards Mrs Maria, cottager
Russell James, hurdle-maker
Russell John, butchr. & shpk.
Sandlands Rev. John Poole, M.A. vicar
Shaw Edward, shopkeeper
Shrive George, mail contractor
Slawson Robert, shoemaker
Smith Henry, master Latham's school, and chem. and drug.

Smith William, shoemaker
Spencer Charles, hurdle-maker
Spencer Thomas, hurdle-maker
Steward James, vict. Rox
Sturges Abrm. vict. Nes Inn
Sturges John, shopkeeper
Vickers George, butcher
Wade William Rowlett, blacksmith and grocer
Watson Mr John, Manor House
Wise Jos. vict. Green Dragon

Farmers and Graziers.

Attenborough John Gowram
Bradshaw William Philip
Brett Thomas Edward
Charlton John (and bailiff to the Duke of Cleveland)
Dixon George
Hall Matthew Henry Barning
Keach Thomas
Loak John
Loweth James
Merry John
Monck James
Wrighton Thomas, Lodge

Carriers.—Abraham Sturges to Thrapston on Tuesday, to Wellingborough on Wednesday, and Kettering on Friday; and Lucy Woodhams to Oundle on Thursday, and Kettering on Tuesday and Friday.

BULWICK PARISH

Is bounded by Glapthorn on the east, Blatherwyck on the north, Deene and Laxton on the west, and Benefield on the south. Bulwick Short Leys, formerly extra-parochial, was annexed to Southwick in 1869, but is now included in this parish. It contains 2067 acres; the rateable value is £2081; the gross estimated rental is £3296; and the population of the parish in 1801 was 389; in 1831, 482; in 1841, 467; in 1851, 441; in 1861, 426; and in 1871, 357 souls. The soil varies from a strong clay to a light loam; and Lieut.-Colonel Tryon (the lord of the manor), and Lord Carbery, are the principal proprietors. Several Roman coins have been found in this parish, near Kirby House, and in a field called Blacklands, where Roman pottery has also been discovered. The late rector (Rev. F. Tryon) had in his possession more than 100 coins, extending down from the period of Julius Cæsar; besides more than that number of Saxon and monastic coins, found in the parish, as well as a seal of Pope Urbanus V., which he found in one of the rectorial fields, and which is supposed to have been appended to some document belonging to one of the neighbouring monasteries. This parish being contiguous to the great forest of Rockingham, was in all probability a favourite station both for Romans, Saxons, and monks, the forest at that time being so well stocked with venison.

Manor.—Bulwick is not mentioned in the Domesday survey, but in the account of hides taken in the reign of Henry II. there were certified to be two in Bulwick and one in Henwick, in the hands of Vitalis Lovet. In the reign of King John this manor was held by William de Courtney, and from him it descended to his successors. In the twenty-sixth of Henry III. (1241), William Cantilupe and Vitalis Engayne made partition of the lands, which descended to them as heirs of Wm. de Courtney. Vitalis Engayne left issue, William his successor, and Thomas, bishop of Hereford, who, in 1305, was canonised, and whose festival is celebrated by the Catholic Church on the 3d of October. This manor afterward passed into the possession of the family of La Zouche; and Millisent La Zouche or De Montalt, in the twenty-second of Edward I. (1293), obtained a grant of a weekly market, on Thursday, and a fair for three days, beginning on the eve of St Matthew. In the twenty-fourth of this reign, Millisent de Montalt and John de Engaine held the township of Bulwick of the King, in capite by the service of half a knight's fee. On the decease of Millisent in the twenty-seventh of the same reign, William la Zouche, her son, succeeded to this manor; and in the first of Henry VII. (1485), John la Zouche, having espoused the cause of Richard III. at the battle of Bosworth Field, was attainted of high treason, and his estates became forfeited to the Crown. In 1487, Bulwick was granted to John Viscount Welles, but it was afterwards restored and continued with the family of Zouche till after James I.'s time, when it passed into the family of Foxley. Abraham Tryon, a gentleman of Dutch extraction, purchased it of the Foxleys, and with his descendants it still continues.

The Village of Bulwick, which is very small, stands on the Kettering and Stamford road, about 12 miles N.E. of Kettering, and 7 S.W. from Oundle; the Willybrook or Willowbrook rivulet crosses the village and divides the part called Henwick from Bulwick.

The Church, dedicated to St Nicholas, consists of a nave, side aisles, chancel, south porch, and tower, surmounted by a spire containing five bells, the proportions of which are very beautiful. The chancel was re-roofed, &c., in 1863 by the rector, and in 1865 the present handsome clock was placed in the tower. A handsome window of stained glass, the gift of Mrs Tryon, was placed in the east end of the south aisle in 1871, and another in memory of her son, who was killed at Sebastopol, was inserted in the west end of the same aisle. The church was restored at a cost of about £800 in 1870, when it was furnished with open oak sittings, and newly floored; and a new pulpit of carved oak on a base of Ketton stone, a carved oak lectern and reading-desk, chancel stalls, altar rails, and reredos of alabaster and marble, were erected. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £18, 10s. 1d., and now valued at £460 per annum. Lieut.-Col. Tryon is the patron, and the Rev. John Henry Holdich, M.A., is the incumbent. The rectory consists of 304 acres of land, and a rent-charge of £34 per annum. The Rectory House is an ancient and commodious residence, N.E. of the village. It has been restored by the present rector.

A Chantry, in honour of the Blessed Virgin and St Anne, was founded in the churchyard—one chapel by Geoffrey Cappe, Henry, Duke of Lancaster, John of Gaunt, and William Lord Zouche, for two priests, the profits of which, to each of them, were valued in 1535, at £5, 6s. 8d. Here was also a guild in honour of St Anne.

Bulwick Park or Hall, the seat of Lieut.-Col. Thomas Tryon, is a handsome building, situated on an eminence, in a well-wooded park, a little south-west of the village.

Charities.—Charles Tryon, Esq., in 1705, bequeathed £200 to the poor of Bulwick, and the legacy, with £40, being an accumulation of interest, was laid out in 1805, in the purchase of £400 3 per cent. consols; and the rest of the poor's land, consisting of about 16 acres, is expended on the school and poor. The late rector, Rev. John Thomas Tryon, in 1861, left £100, the interest of which is given to the poor and the school.

The School, which is well attended, is supported principally by Lieut.-Col. Thomas Tryon, and the children's pence.

Post-Office.—Joseph Howe, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Wansford at 7.40 A.M., and are despatched at 6.15 P.M.

Baker Mrs Ann

Barratt Mrs Ann, baker & shopr.

Barratt James Hodge, brick and tilemaker, and farmer

Bletsoe Jno. Miller, baker & farm.

Castor William, carpenter

Cave Thomas, tailor

Elger Wm. vict. Queen's Head

Elliott Thos. baker & shopkpr.

Greenberry Mrs M.A. schoolmrs.

Hays Chas. vict. Carbery Arms

Holdich Rev. John Henry, M.A.

rector

Howe Joseph Francis, tailor, beer retailer, post-office

Nichols Mrs Frances
Nichols Misses Ann, Mary, and Elizabeth
Plowright James, shoemaker
Sturges Daniel, shoemaker
Tryon Lieut.-Col. Thos. J.P.
Bulwick Park

Waterfield John, blacksmith
Whitehead Thos. Henry, farm bailiff

Farmers and Graziers.

Barratt James Hodge

Bletsoe John, Bulwick Mill
Hunt Wm. Hollowbottom Lodge
Hays Charles
Ivens William, New Lodge
Sculthorpe Richd. (& butcher)
Stokes Edw. (& cattle dealer)
Wright John, Fairhill Lodge

CARLTON EAST PARISH.

This parish is bounded by Middleton on the east, by the river Welland on the north, which divides it from Leicestershire, by Wilbarston and Ashley on the west, and on the south by Pipwell. It contains 1598 acres, of the rateable value of £3127; and the gross estimated rental is £3354, 10s. The population in 1801 was 82; in 1831, 95; in 1841, 68; in 1851, 64; in 1861, 70; and in 1871, 89 souls. The soil is mixed, and varies from a strong clay to a rich grass land, and Sir Geoffrey Palmer, Bart., is lord of the manor, and owner of the whole of the parish.

Manor.—At the time of the general survey, Humphrey held 3 virgates of land in Carlinton, of the Earl of Morton; and Roger de Juri held 10 hides of Hugh de Grentemaisnil. The former was valued at 20s., and the latter at £10. This manor became subdivided, and was in the hands of several persons; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), John Hotot, Peter Prilly, Walter de Honby, and Margery de Oseville, were lords of Carlton. Two manors in Carlton were called East Hall and West Hall manors. East Hall was in the possession of the family of Warde, in the reign of Edward III., and from them it passed in marriage to William Palmer, Esq., with whose descendants it still continues. Geoffrey Palmer, Esq., who succeeded his father, Thomas, who died in the fifth of Charles I. (1628), was bred to the law, chosen burgess of Stamford in Lincolnshire, in 1640, and was a manager of the evidence against the Earl of Stafford. In 1655 he was imprisoned in the Tower of London, as an adherent of the king, and after the restoration in 1660, he was appointed attorney-general, and about the same time, Chief-Justice of Chester; he also received the honour of knighthood, and afterwards by letters patent, dated 7th of June 1560, was created a baronet. The manor of Westhall subsequently became his property, and both are now in the possession of the lineal descendant of the family, Sir Geoffrey Palmer, the eighth Baronet, who was born in 1809, succeeded in 1865; educated at Eton and Christchurch, Oxford B.A. 1830; called to the Bar of the Inner Temple in 1838; is a J.P. for the counties of Leicester and Northampton, was High Sheriff in 1871, and late captain of the Leicestershire Yeomanry. Heir-presumptive, his brother the Rev. Lewis Henry, born in 1818. Residence, Carlton Hall, Rockingham.

The Village of Carlton East, which is very small, is about 3 miles south-west by west of Rockingham.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, was rebuilt in 1788, and is a neat structure in the Early English style, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south transepts, and square tower containing six bells. The south transept is used as the mortuary chapel, and contains some fine monuments to the Palmer family. The east window is filled with stained glass, erected to the memory of Sir John Henry Palmer, Bart., and the Honble. Mary Grace Palmer his wife, by the surviving members of the family; and on the south side of the nave are two stained windows to the Rev. Richard Thomas, and Arthur Watson, sons of Sir John Henry Palmer, seventh Baronet. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £12, 16s. 3d., and now worth about £300 per annum. Sir Geoffrey Palmer, Bart., is the patron; and the Rev. Lewis Henry Palmer, M.A., is the incumbent, and Rev. Thomas Owen Hall, B.A., curate in charge. The Rectory House was built in 1873 by the present patron, in exchange for the old Rectory House.

Carlton Park or Hall, formerly called East Hall, is the seat of Sir Geoffrey Palmer, Bart.; it is situated on an eminence a little east of the village, in a beautiful park, well stocked with deer. The park, hall, and gardens cover 90 acres, and there are in the parish about 200 acres of woodland and coppices. Bridges tells us that "upon steps within the park, is the stump of a cross," and that "near the church was a mansion, now ruined, pertaining to West Hall manor." The hall was restored and enlarged in 1870, when a handsome front in the Italian style, composed of brick with stone-dressings, was added.

Charities.—Here is an hospital or almshouses, for five poor persons, founded in 1668 by Sir Geoffrey Palmer, Bart., and endowed by him, with the rents of certain lands, amounting to the sum of £46 per annum. In addition to this, Thomas Hurst, in 1734, left a rent-charge of £5 per annum to the poor inmates, and a further sum of £1 to purchase Bibles, prayer-books, &c., for the poor. Sir Thomas Palmer, in 1765, and Mrs Catherine Palmer, left £100 each to the hospital, which sums were expended in the purchase of £266, 13s. 4d. 3 per cent. consols, and the dividends are divided among the inmates. The sum of £51, 1s. 7d. 3 per cent. consols was also purchased with £35, which arose from the sale of a walnut tree, which stood in the hospital close. Lady Mary Palmer in 1711 gave £200, to which was added £80, made up of unapplied interest and of benefactions given by John Knight and others, for which land was purchased, now consisting of nearly 26 acres, the rent of which is expended on the poor, and the apprenticing of poor children.

Post Office—Wall Box. Letters arrive from Rockingham at about 9.15 A.M., and are despatched at 4.10 P.M. on week days only.

Brown George, bailiff and manager, Carlton Park
Cursley William, parish clerk
Hall Rev. Thomas Owen, M.A. curate in charge

Kayson Thomas, gamekeeper
Palmer Sir Geoffrey, Bart.,
Carlton Park

Farmers and Graziers.

Carriass John
Greaves Richard Thomas
Northen William

CORBY PARISH

Is bounded by Weldon on the east, Stanion and Little Oakley on the south, Great Oakley and Cottingham on the west, and by Rockingham, Gretton, and Deene on the north. It contains 2596 acres; its population in 1801 was 611; in 1831, 684; in 1841, 791; in 1851, 860; in 1861, 797; and in 1871, 699 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3563, and the gross estimated rental £3972. The soil is principally a strong cold clay, except near the woodlands, where it is a light black soil, and near the road to Weldon, a light land on a redstone bottom. The principal landowners are the Countess of Cardigan and de Lancastre (the lady of the manor), Mrs Elizabeth Hales, Messrs Thomas Meadows, Richard Gray, Watson Bradshaw, and George Chapman.

Beanfield Lawns, formerly returned as part of this parish, was constituted a separate parish for Poor Law purposes in 1863, by an order of the Poor Law Board.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, Corbei contained 1½ hide of land, which was in the hands of the Crown. In the seventh of King John (1205), the manor and hundred of Corby were granted to Robert Braibroc, to hold in fee farm, "at the ancient rent of £8, and an improved rent of 40s. paid into the exchequer at Easter and Michaelmas." Henry, his son and successor, in the eleventh of Henry III. (1226), had a grant of a weekly market and two annual fairs here. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Alice de Latimer and Thomas Latimer were lords of Corby. In the fourth of Edward VI. (1550), John, Lord Latimer, conveyed this manor and hundred to William, Marquis of Northampton, who having joined the interest of Lady Jane Grey, his lands were forfeited to the Crown. In the first of Queen Mary (1553), they were granted to Edward Gryffyn, who then levied a fine of them; by inquisition taken at this gentleman's death, it was certified that he had held the hundred, manor, and advowson of the church of Corby, of the Crown, in fee farm, by the yearly payment of £10. From his son, Edward Gryffyn, they appear to have passed to Sir Christopher Hatton, Lord Chancellor of England, and from one of his successors to the Brudenell family, with which they still continue, the Countess of Cardigan and de Lancastre being the present lady of the manor. The custom of this manor is similar to that of Brigstock.

The Village of Corby, which is large and well-watered, two excellent rivulets running through it, is situate about $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles E.S.E. of Rockingham, and eight miles north of Kettering. By a curious charter, granted twenty-second of Charles II. (1682), a fair is held here every twenty-one years, and by which the inhabitants of this parish are exempt from all bridge and town tolls at fairs and markets throughout the kingdom, and from serving in the militia and on juries.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, is principally in the Early English style, and consists of nave, with clerestory, chancel, south aisle, south porch, and a square tower, surmounted by a spire, containing four bells. In the chancel are the piscina and sedilia, and on the north side is the "Latimer" Arch, in which a doorway was opened some years ago; and there is also the piscina in the south aisle, all in good preservation. The south porch, with stone groined roof, is of some interest, as is also the ancient font. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £13, 16s. 3d., and now worth £390 net per annum, in the patronage of the Countess of Cardigan and de Lancastre, and incumbency of the Rev. B. E. W. Bennett, M.A. The tithes were commuted in 1829 for 232a. 17p., excepting the forest lands, and 46a. 38p. of glebe. The Rectory House stands north of the church.

The Independent Chapel, a plain building, was much improved soon after the British School was erected, at the expense of William Rowlatt, who left at the same time an endowment of £500 in Government securities, the interest to be applied towards the support of the minister. Here is also a small Wesleyan Chapel built in 1847.

The Endowed British School for both sexes is a good stone building, with a house for the teachers. It was erected in 1834 by William Rowlatt, and subsequently endowed by him. It was afterwards transferred by deed of gift to the British and Foreign School Society, and the present income is £110 per annum. There is also the Church Sunday School in the village, built by the late Earl of Cardigan in 1858.

Charities.—The church land, 2a. 33p., now lets for £10, 6s. 6d. per annum. In 1714, Francis Clifton left a house and outbuildings. The house, &c., have since been made into six cottages, and 2a. 1r. 1p. to the poor of the parish, which let for £25, 16s. per annum. In 1627, Richard Gray left £100 in the $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cents., the interest to be distributed, in clothing, to the poor on New Year's Day by the rector and churchwardens; and in 1862 Thomas White left £500 after the death of his sister, which took place in 1867, vested in land yielding $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., the interest to be distributed in money to the poor of the parish at the discretion of the churchwardens and overseers.

Post-Office.—Samuel Barratt, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Thrapston at 8.30 A.M. and are despatched thereto at 3.20 P.M.; on Sundays, at 10.25 A.M.

Almond Thomas, tailor
Barratt Sl. gror. & drpr. P.-O.
Bell John, cottager
Bennett Rev. Barwell Ewins
Worthington, M.A. rector
Binley John, blacksmith
Bradshaw Miss Sarah, cottager
Burgess John, cottager
Burgess Mr Thomas
Butterworth Mr Edmund
Butterworth John, plumber, glazier, and painter
Chapman Edward, butcher and cattle dealer
Chapman Joseph, grocer and
tallow chandler
Chapman Robert, blacksmith

Chapman Wm. wheelwright, &c.
Clifford Mrs Ann, vict. *Old
White Horse*
Clow Thomas, slater and vict.
White Hart
Corbett Mrs Emma, baker
Dixon Mrs Elizabeth, cottager
Dixon George, stonemason
Dixon Joseph, stonemason and
vict. Black Horse
Errington William, parish clerk
Gibson Isaac, grocer, baker, butcher, & vict. Nag's Head
Glithero Miss Ann, cottager
Glithero John, cottager
Gray Mr John
Hales Mrs Elizabeth

Houghton James Monk, vict.
Cardigan Arms
Latimer George, cottager
Meadows Mr Thomas
Mills James, stonemason
Osborn James, gamekeeper
Padmore Samuel, shoemaker
Payne John, shoemaker
Payne Robert, shoemaker
Redhead Michael, hawker
Robinson John, wood-dealer
Robinson Jeremiah, wood-dealer
Robinson Joseph, higgler
Robinson Mrs Mary
Robinson William, higgler
Sarrington William, miller, baker, and grocer
Simons Mr Leonard

Snoddy James Smylie, master of British School	Farmers and Graziers. Barratt Charles	Freeman William, Lodge
Streather Robert, stonemason	Bradshaw Watson (yeoman)	Gray Richard (yeoman)
Taylor Miss Elisabeth, dressmkr.	Cheney Henry Willis	King John Walter
White Joseph, shoemaker	Clifford James	King John Walter, junior
White Thomas, stonemason	Clifford John (yeoman)	Moore John
Webster William, cottager	Dixon Austin	Perkins Charles William, Lodge
		Stokes Thos. jun. Corby Cottage

Carriers.—Daniel Ralph and John Moore to Kettering on Friday.

COTTINGHAM PARISH.

This parish includes the hamlet or township of Middleton, and is bounded on the east by Rockingham, on the north by the river Welland, on the west by Carlton, and on the south by Oakley Great. It contains with the hamlet 3206 acres, and their united population in 1801 was 882; in 1831, 903; in 1841, 1033; in 1851, 1080; in 1861, 1139; and in 1871, 1041 souls. The rateable value of the whole, including Middleton township, is £6643, 11s. 7d., and the gross estimated rental, £7323, 5s. The soil varies from a strong clay to a light strong soil, on a limestone bottom; near the woodland it is a black loam, and there is some good meadow land near the river. The principal landowners are the Hon. Mrs Pery, George Lewis Watson, Esq., Sir Geoffrey Palmer, Bart., Sir William de Capell Brooke, Bart., and Mr Henry Burgess. The land is copyhold, and the copyholders are lords of the manor, and hold a court annually on the first Thursday after 11th of October.

Manor.—There were 7 hides of land in Cotingeham, at the time of the general survey, which were held of the abbey of Burgh. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 40d., 12a. of meadow, and a wood 1 mile long and half a mile broad, and the whole was valued at £3. These possessions were the gift of Prince Alfer to the abbey. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), the abbot of Peterborough held Cotingham and Middleton of the Crown in capite, by an unknown service; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), he was lord of both townships. At the dissolution of the abbey, its possessions fell to the Crown, and Cotingham was granted to William, Marquis of Northampton. Sir Christopher Hatton possessed it in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. In the same reign, several persons were seized jointly and separately of the manor of Cotingham. There was also a manor called Hill, in Middleton, of which a fine was levied by Bartholomew Brokesby, in the second of Henry VI. (1423), and in the fourth of Edward IV. (1464), it passed to the possession of William Palmer, Esq., of Carlton, with whose lineal descendant, Sir Geoffrey H. Palmer, Bart., it still continues.

The Village of Cotingham stands partly on a declivity, about 2 miles south-west of Rockingham.

The Church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, is partly in the Early English and partly in the Decorated styles; it is situate on an eminence at the south end of the village, and consists of a nave, side aisles, chancel, tower and spire, the former containing five bells. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £23, 7s. 3½d., and now worth about £713 per annum. The principal and fellows of Brasenose College, Oxford, are patrons, and the Rev. William Yates, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1844 for £631, and there is also about 60 acres of glebe. The Rectory House, pleasantly situated, a little west of the church, has been enlarged and partly rebuilt by the present rector. Here is a small Methodist Chapel, built in 1808.

The Infant School was erected in 1871, and is attended by about 60 children. The villagers are supplied with pure spring water, conveyed through iron pipes from fountains in the parish. The main pipes were laid at the expense of the copyholders. The curious and probably ancient custom of distributing or scattering apples to the village children, after the afternoon service on Christmas-day, and which were formerly thrown from the windows of the belfry, is now done away with.

Post-Office.—John Chamberlain, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Rockingham at 8.45 A.M., and are despatched at 5 P.M. on week days only.

Binley Thos. wheelwright, &c.
Bonser Jas. brick & tilemaker,
h. Market Harborough
Buswell Mrs Madeline
Butter Hy. Vincent, saddler
Chamberlain Jno. Neville, shoe manufacturer
Chamberlain Jno. grocer, and dealer in British wines, P.O.
Claypole John, blacksmith
Coles Jno. threshing machine owner and farmer
Craford Thomas, tailor & vict.
Three Horse Shoes
Cross William, grocer
Curtis Chas. shoemaker
Gibbins George, joiner

Goodwin Mrs Rebec. vict. Crown
Gutteridge Thos. corn factor
Hack Thomas, joiner
Hobbs John, cottager
Humphrey Mrs Elizabeth
Ingram Jesse, tailor & draper
Jones Samuel, shoemaker
Minns John, tailor
Oliver Thomas, blacksmith
Pery Hon. Mrs
Rayson Mrs Rebecca, baker, grocer, and draper
Reynolds Peake, vict. Spread
Eagle
Reynolds Saml. butcher, & vict.
Royal George
Shaw Jno. vict. King's Head

Simpson Thos. gardr. & seeds
Simpson Wm. stonemason
Spriggs Edw. butcher & shpr.
Sturman John, shoemaker
West Wm. jun. flour, &c. dlr.
Yates Rev. Wm. M.A. rector

Farmers and Graziers.

Aldwinckle Thomas
Aldwinckle Wm. (& maltster)
Bradshaw Thomas
Chamberlain John
Cooke William Tyler
Hobbs William
Reynolds Thomas
Spriggs Mrs Mary
Woodcock Lewis

Carrier.—Arthur Stretton to Market Harborough on Tues. and Sat.; to Kettering on Frid.

MIDDLETON is a village and township in this parish, pleasantly situated on the bank of the Welland. It contains 1542 acres, of the rateable value of £3019; its gross estimated rental is £3333; and its population in 1841 was 411; and in 1871, 354 souls. Here is an Independent Chapel, a good stone building, erected in 1844.

The School, which is endowed with £11 per annum, was rebuilt in 1856, and enlarged in 1869. (For the Charities of the parish, see the table prefixed to this hundred.)

Post-Office.—Wall Box. Letters arrive from Rockingham at 9 A.M., and are despatched at 4.30 P.M., on week days only.

Aldwinckle Bartholomew, millr.
Cox Geo. maltr. & vict. Red Lion
Dexter Henry & Chas. rope & twine mrs. & victs. Exeter Arms
Gibbins Geo. joiner & carptr.
Freeman Jas. baker & grocer
Ingram Jas. drpr. tlr. hatr. & agt.
for Queen & Accidental Death
Main Thomas, blacksmith
Nichols William, shoemaker

Rayson Henry, vict. Woolpack
Richards Edw. mr. of Nat. sch.
Sculthope Bryan S. cottager
Stafford Joseph, wheelwright
Thorpe Wm. shoemkr. & shpr.
Tilley Thomas, timber mercht.
West William, shopkeeper
Farmers and Graziers.
(Marked * are Yeomen.)
Aldwinckle Jno. Henry (& bkr.)

Berry Charles
Burditt Thomas
* Burgess Henry
* Carter John
Cox Wm. & James, Lodge
Hercock John
Peake William Henry
Tilley William
West William

Carrier.—George West, to Market Harborough on Tuesday, to Uppingham on Wednesday, and Kettering on Friday.

DEENE PARISH.

Deene or Deane parish, includes the hamlet of Denethorpe, and is situated on the confines of Rockingham Forest; its boundaries are formed by Laxton on the east, by Harringworth on the north, Kirby on the west, and on the south by Weldon. It contains, exclusive of the hamlet, 1569 acres, and the entire parish contains 2990 acres, of the rateable value of £2235; the gross estimated rental is £2669; and the population of the whole in 1801 was 221; in 1831, 228; in 1841, 516; in 1851, 504; in 1861, 540; and in 1871, 488 souls. The soil varies from a strong clay to a light stony surface, and it is nearly equally divided between arable and pasture. The Countess of Cardigan and de Lancastre is lady of the manor, and principal owner of the land.

Manor.—There were 2½ hides of land in Deene in the possession of the monks of St Peter's Abbey at Westminster at the time of the Conqueror's survey. In the reign of Henry II. they were in the hands of Ralph Fitz-Nigel, who held them of the fee of Westminster. In the sixteenth of King John (1214), Ivo de Dene levied a fine of this manor, to be held of the Abbot of Westminster, by certain services, and an annual payment of £18; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Henry de Dene was lord of the manor. From this family it passed to the Tyndales; and in the first of Richard III. (1483), William Tyndale sold it for £300, together with his lands in Denthorpe and Kirby, to Henry Collet, alderman of London. It subsequently came into the possession of the Littons, from whom it passed, in the sixth of Henry VIII. (1514), to the Brudenells. Edmund Brudenell, by will dated 21st of June 1425, gave to St John's Hospital, in Aynho, his missal, and a chalice, for celebrating a requiem mass on the anniversary of his death. In the twentieth of Henry VII. (1504), Robert Brudenell, who was bred to the law, was made a king's serjeant; in the first of Henry VIII. (1509), he was appointed a justice of the common pleas; and in the twelfth of the same reign, chief justice of that court. He was succeeded in the twenty-second of this reign by Sir Thomas Brudenell, Knight, his eldest son, who in 1543 was sheriff of the county. On the 29th of June, 1611, Thomas Brudenell was raised by King James to the degree of baronet, then instituted; on the 26th of April, in the third of Charles I. (1627), he was raised to the dignity of a baron of the realm, by the title of Lord Brudenell, of Stanton Wyville, in Leicestershire. He was a zealous supporter of the royal cause during the civil wars, and suffered a long imprisonment in the Tower, and on the restoration of Charles II., by letters patent dated 20th of April in the thirteenth of that reign (1661), he was created Earl of Cardigan.

James Thomas Brudenell, the late possessor of this manor, was the seventh Earl of Cardigan; he was born in 1797; married in 1826 the eldest daughter of Admiral Tollemache (her previous marriage with C. F. C. A. J. Johnstone, Esq., having been dissolved). He succeeded his father (the sixth earl) in 1837; was lieutenant-colonel of the 11th Hussars; became a colonel in the army in 1846; represented Marlborough in Parliament from 1818 to 1830, Fowey from 1830 to 1831, and the northern division of Northampton from 1831 to 1837. He died 27th March 1868, by a fall from his horse. Residences—43 Portman-square, London, and Deene Park, Northamptonshire. The Right Hon. Adeline Louisa Maria, Countess of Cardigan and de Lancastre, only daughter of Spencer Horsey de Horsey, Esq., second wife of the late Earl, is the present possessor of this manor. Her ladyship married, August 28th 1873, the Count de Lancastre Saldaña.

The Village of Deene, pleasantly situated on a slight eminence, and completely enveloped in trees, is six miles W.N.W. from Oundle.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, is in the Early English style, and consists of nave, with clerestory, chancel, north and south aisles and chapels, and a square tower, containing five bells, and surmounted by a handsome spire 110 feet high. The church was magnificently restored in 1869 by the present Countess, at a cost of over £7000, when the nave was enlarged by one bay, the chancel extended, and the two chapels added. That on the south side, called the Brudenell chapel, contains all the family monuments, which previous to the restoration were dispersed in various parts of the edifice, and that on the north side contains a priests' vestry, choristers' vestry, and organ chamber. The clerestory was rebuilt, and the old ugly elliptical-headed windows were replaced by new ones with label mouldings round the arches, and the roof was replaced by a high-pitched hammered-beamed one of deal, stained and varnished, with pierced tracery in the spandrels, and having carved wall-pieces resting on stone corbels. A new window in the north aisle was rendered necessary in consequence of the extension of the nave; and, in taking down the chancel wall, a window in character with the others in the aisle was found built up, and has been made use of. The chancel, paved with Maw's tiles, is exceedingly handsome, and in which is the new east window representing twelve scenes in the life of our Lord, by Lavers, Barrand, and Westlake, of London, to the memory of the late Earl. The old stained glass window has been removed to the south recess of the Brudenell chapel. In the south chancel aisle is a triple sedilia and a piscina, and on the north side of the aisle is a credence table. The chancel is divided from the nave by a dwarf stone wall with iron rails. The altar cross—very massive and set with crystals—is the gift of Mr T. Watson, of Victoria, New South Wales, in memory of his late wife. The embroidery of the altar frontals, &c., were kindly undertaken by the ladies of the parish and neighbourhood, and the magnificent point-lace which covers the super-frontal was the special gift of Lady Cardigan. At the end of the new chapel is a very curious and handsome reredos of unique character of the date 1635, which was formerly in the chancel. It is divided into three circular panels, the centre representing the flaming heart pierced with nails, and at the top in Hebrew is the word Jehovah; that on the south side has a sheaf of wheat bending over a paten, with four loaves in the shape of a cross, and on the south side panel is a vine with grapes leaning over a chalice. On one side of the centre shield is a rose, and on the other a lily. In the centre of this chapel is also a very handsome marble monument to the memory of the late Earl of Cardigan. On the top are effigies of the late Earl and present Countess by Joseph Erasmus Boehm, Esq., and on the two ends are bas-reliefs in bronze representing the charge of Balacava and other incidents of the battle; on the sides are various shields, coats of arms, &c., and on the angles are bronze sea-horses and the Brudenell crest. The earliest remaining portion of the church is the tower and spire, which has not been touched, and dates from the beginning of the twelfth century. The old high pews have been replaced by handsome wainscot oak open seats. The pulpit is an exceedingly handsome one of alabaster with a base of Portland and Caen stone. The church is heated by Haden's apparatus from the vault underneath the priest's vestry. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £24, 3s. 6½d., and now worth £600 per annum. The tithes were commuted in 1848 for a rent-charge of £497, 11s., and there are 94 acres of glebe. The Countess of Cardigan and de Lancastre is patroness, and the Rev. Edward Thomas Sylvester is the incumbent. There is a daily choral service in the church, and the choir, a large surpliced one, maintains a high character for its efficiency. The Rectory House, which was much altered and improved in 1873 by the present rector, is a good stone mansion a little north-east of the church, built about the year 1811, by the Rev. Edward Levett.

"Bishop Tanner," writes Bridges, "from the authority of Leland, and an imperfect consideration of Domesday survey, supposeth there was an ancient priory here, a cell to the Abbey of Westminster, but that soon after the conquest it was suppressed by the convent, who, instead of the revenues, accepted of a yearly rent. There appears no just grounds for this supposition. The manor of Deene was amongst the earliest possessions of this abbey, and the mansion, supposed to have been a cell, was a grange or farm-house, to which the abbot resorted occasionally."

Deene Park, the beautiful seat of the Countess of Cardigan and de Lancastre, is in the immediate neighbourhood of the village. The mansion is an irregular stone structure, with embattled turrets. The hall has a timber-framed roof, and the windows contain the arms of the noble families of Brudenell, Montagu, and Bruce, with their alliances, &c. The library contains a collection of manuscripts, relating to this county, by Thomas, first Earl of Cardigan; and in the principal rooms are several excellent family portraits. The scenery of the magnificent park is diversified; the pleasure grounds and fish-ponds are extensive, and laid down with great taste; and the majestic oak and stately elm trees cannot be surpassed. The park is well stocked with deer. A tablet attached to a handsome oak tree, in the pleasure grounds, informs us, that this tree was produced from an acorn found in a large piece of oak in Woolwich Dockyard, and planted in 1757 by Lady Elizabeth Montagu, afterwards Duchess of Buccleuch.

The School for both sexes was rebuilt in 1872 at a cost of nearly £400. The children are also clothed by the Countess of Cardigan and de Lancastre.

In the park are several of those cavities, which in the north of England are called swallows, but in the south and west swallet-holes, through which the land-flood waters flow and disappear. These, which are found in every part of the globe, are supposed by some writers to be a kind of inland gulf, that swallowed up the waters of the deluge; and by means of which that immense liquid body returned to the centre of the earth; and where it has ever since formed a grand subterraneous abyss. It is not the least singular circumstance attending these swallows, that they are generally found upon the tops of mountains, or, as in the present case, upon very high land. These, like most that have been discovered, are nearly circular holes of various diameters, some having a perpendicular and others an oblique descent, opening beneath the apertures into large spaces, that contain several smaller caves, or conduits, through which the waters are evidently conveyed to some distant reservoir.

Charities.—The poor's money of Deene is £40, and Deenthorpe £70, the interest of which is distributed to the poor. In addition, the Countess of Cardigan and de Lancastre allows from 2s. to 5s. per week to some of the greatest objects of charity.

DEENTHORPE is a hamlet in this parish, containing 1421 acres, of the rateable value of £1896; gross estimated rental, £2197; and a population in 1841 of 250; in 1861, 259; and in 1871, 248 souls. The Manor of Deenthorpe was given in the reign of King John to Nicholas de Dene, and from this family it passed to the Tyndales, from whom it descended to the Hattons. (See Deene.)

The Village, which is small, stands about one mile south by east of Deene.

Post-office.—Joseph Spendlove, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Wansford at 8 A.M., and are despatched at 6 P.M.

Allesio F. band-master
Beeley James, blacksmith
Cardigan and de Lancastre the Right Hon. the Countess of,
Deene Park
Chappell Francis, slater
Clarke Thomas, baker
Gentry Alfred, coachman
Long Valentine, watchman
Morgan James, stud groom

Parker Richard, head gard.Hall
Plumb Jno. stonemsn. & bricklr.
Plumb Miss Sarah, schoolmstr.
Spendlove Jph. shoemkr. P. O.
Sylvester Rev. Ed. Thos. rector
Taylor Albert, schoolmaster, shopkeeper, and parish clerk
Winward Samuel, vict. Sea
Horse, and farmer

Wright Geo. bailiff to Countess
Wright Matthew, head gamekr.

Farmers and Graziers.

Davis John, Deene Park Lodge
Daykin John
Hudson Robert, Deene Lodge |
Lynn Robert

DEENTHORPE HAMLET.

Barwell William, shoemaker
Elliott Thomas, wheelwright
Gilbert Miss Eliz. ladies' sem.
Lovett William, gatekeeper
Stubbs Mrs Mary

Tomlin John, gamekeeper
Farmers and Graziers.
Berry Edmund
Hickling Wm. & vict. Cardigan
Arms

Martin John
Percival William, Deenthorpe
Grange
Stubbs Joseph, Kirby Lodge
Wright John, Deenthorpe Lodge

DINGLEY PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Brampton, on the north by Sutton, on the west by the river Welland, and on the south by Braybrooke and Little Bowden. It contains 1317 acres, of the rateable value of £2539; the gross estimated rental is £2855, 10s.; and its population in 1801 was 143; in 1831, 160; in 1841, 144; in 1851, 141; in 1861, 101; and in 1871, 110 souls. The soil is of a mixed quality; the greater part of the parish is grazing land, and Henry Vere Forester Hungerford, Esq., is lord of the manor and principal proprietor.

Manor.—The Earls of Morton, to whom Humphrey was under-tenant, had 1½ hide here at the time of the Domesday survey; Ildwin held 1 hide of Robert de Toden, and Robert de Bruce held the greater part of a hide at the same time. The value of the whole was £2, 18s. 4d., though in the preceding reign it was only rated at 30s. A part of these possessions was given in the reign of King Stephen to the Knights Hospitallers of St John of Jerusalem, who established a preceptory here. In the reign of Henry II. Alured held 2 hides and 1 virgate, and Richard Basset 1 hide and 1 great virgate in Dingle. After the time of Edward I. there were two manors in this parish, one of which was held by the family of Dingley, and the other by the Knights Hospitallers. Dingley's manor passed from them to the family of Holt, who were succeeded by that of Norwich, and from whom it passed in the 5th of Mary (1557) to Edward Griffin, Esq., second son of Sir Nicholas Griffin of Braybrooke, who was Solicitor-General to Henry VIII., and Attorney-General to Edward VI., Queens Mary and Elizabeth, and who left it to his posterity. At the suppression of the religious houses, in the reign of Henry VIII., the other manor fell to the Crown, and was afterwards purchased by the Griffin family.

The Village of Dingley, which is very small, is situate on high ground, and about 3 miles east of Market Harborough, commanding extensive prospects.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is a neat edifice, in good repair, consisting of a nave, side aisles, chancel, south porch, and square tower. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £9, 4s. 4½d., and now worth about £500 per annum. Henry Vere Forester Hungerford, Esq., is the patron, and the Rev. J. B. Cobham, M.A., rector. The Rectory House, a good stone building, stands north-east of the church.

Dingley Hall, the seat of H. V. F. Hungerford, Esq., is a handsome mansion, built upon the site of the ancient preceptory, a portion of which is still standing. The porch, which is a piece of architecture, with pillars of the Corinthian and other orders, was built in 1558, by Edward Griffin, the Attorney-General. Opposite to this, and leading to the great hall, is another porch, built in the reign of Philip and Mary. The date upon the gateway, or porter's ward, is 1560. The south front was erected in 1684 by Sir Edward Griffin, and the eastern tower and wing were probably a part of the preceptory, the latter being the chapel. The mansion is delightfully situated on an eminence a little east of the church.

A Sunday School, founded in 1792 by John P. Hungerford, Esq., is now supported by H. V. F. Hungerford, Esq.

Charities.—Mrs Mary Allen, in 1657, left £8, and an unknown donor left £14, the interest to be given to the poor at Christmas. Miss Mary Griffin, in 1868, left £50 3 per cent. consols, the interest to be devoted to the repairs and cleaning of the monuments and brasses to the Griffin family in the chancel, the balance to be distributed amongst the poor of the parish at Christmas.

Letters are received here through Market Harborough.

Bland Thos. Hardwicke, farmer,
Grange
Cobham Rev. Jonathan Blenman, M.A. rector

Hayes Wm. Sam. grazier & vict.
Horse & Jockey
Hungerford Henry Vere Forester, Esq., Dingley Hall

Miller John, grazier
Smith David, head gardener

FINESHADE PARISH.

Fineshade, or Fineshed, contains 840 acres, of the rateable value of £726; the gross estimated rental is £837; and the population in 1801 was 75; in 1831, 68; in 1841, 55; in 1851, 64; in 1861, 73; and in 1871, 64 souls. It is situate in a valley between two hills, about 7 miles west from Wansford, and 8 N.N.W. from Oundle. "Here was originally a castle," says Bridges, "named Castle-Hymel, in Laxton parish, demolished in the reign of King John. Upon the ruins of it was afterwards erected a priory of black canons, to the honour of the Virgin Mary. It was first called the priory of St Mary, Castle Hymel. In later records, it is named Finesheved, or Fineshed priory, which name it still retains." Castle Hymel stood on high ground, within a moat or ditch, and after the demolition of the castle Richard Engayne the elder founded a priory of Augustinian friars, commonly called black canons, and endowed it with the demesnes of the castle and lands in several neighbouring lordships. He died in 1208, and his successors and descendants were also benefactors to the priory. By the survey of the possessions of this establishment, in 1535, the annual income was valued at £62, 16s. After the dissolution, the site, with its demesnes, and lands here, and in Blatherwyke, Laxton, and Doddington, were granted to John lord Russell, in exchange for lands in Devonshire. It soon after passed to the family of Kirkham, and is now the property of E. H. C. Monckton, Esq.

Here was formerly a chapel, built by the Kirkhams of Stowe, from the ruins of Fotheringhay castle. The living was a donative. Iron works were very anciently erected here. The site of the abbey and castle contained about seven acres. The present fine mansion, the seat of Edward Henry Cradock Monckton, Esq., is built partly on the site and foundation of the priory; and the grounds are very beautiful.

Letters are received through the King's Cliffe post-office.

Harker William, gamekeeper
Jones William, land agent and steward

Monckton Edward Henry Cradock, Esq. Fine-shade Abbey

GEDDINGTON PARISH

Is bounded by Grafton on the east, by Brigstock and Little Oakley on the north, by Newton on the west, and Weekley on the south. It contains 2220 acres; its population in 1801 was 663; in 1831, 795; in 1841, 833; in 1851, 887; in 1861, 888; and in 1871, 882 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3824; and the gross estimated rental £4332. The soil is various, and the land is principally arable. The Duke of Buccleuch (the lord of the manor), and Sir William de Capell Brooke, Bart., are the principal landowners. At Geddington was formerly a royal seat, which stood in the castle or hall close, north-east of the church. Here, in 1188, was held a council, or parliament, by Henry II., to raise money for an expedition to the Holy Land. Six years later, Richard I. of England, and William, king of Scotland, were here together on a Good Friday, and proceeded the next day to Northampton. In the castle was a free chapel. The existence of this royal seat accounts for the fact that the corpse of Eleanor, queen of Edward I., rested here on its way from Harby to its last resting-place. One of the splendid crosses reared by her husband to her memory still stands in the centre of the village. It is a richly ornamented stone structure, and said to be in better preservation than either of the two which yet stand; being less injured by time than the one at Waltham, and not altered by modern additions like that at Northampton. It is pretty similar in style to the cross at Northampton, which see at page 264. It is about 40 feet high, and has the coats of arms of Castile, Leon, and county of Ponthieu, which in right of the Queen was annexed to England. At the top are three figures representing three queens in lamentation. Similar crosses were erected at Hardingstone (Northampton), Grantham, Stamford, Stoney Stratford, Dunstable, St Albans, Waltham, and Westminster (Charing Cross). Geddington Chase, formerly a part of Rockingham Forest, was granted to the noble family of Montagu. It originally consisted of a wood, seven miles in compass.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Gadintone contained 2 hides and 1 virgate; 1 hide belonged to the King's manor at Brigstock, and the other to St Edmund's abbey. In the nineteenth of Henry II. (1162), Geddington was in the King's hands, and so continued. Mention is made in a survey of the sixth of Richard II. (1382), of a market and fair here, which at that time had been discontinued for 20 years. At what time Geddington manor was granted by the Crown is not known, but in the thirtieth of Henry VIII. (1538), John Tresham, Esq., died seized of it. From this family it passed through several intermediate possessors to the Duke of Montagu, whose lineal descendant, the Duke of Buccleuch, is its present lord. Upon the suppression of the religious houses, the manor belonging to St Edmund's abbey was granted to Sir Edward Montagu, from whom it descended, through the Duke of Montagu, to the present proprietor. Here is also another estate (Priory House), the property of Sir William de Capell Brooke, Bart., and residence of Mrs Louisa Wetherall.

The Village of Geddington, which is rather large, is seated on low ground, on the river Ise, which runs through it, about $5\frac{1}{4}$ miles E. by N. of Rothwell, and 3 N.E. of Kettering.

The Church, dedicated to St Mary Magdalen, is a handsome ancient structure, consisting of a nave, side-aisles, south chapel, chancel, tower and spire, containing a peal of bells. In the chancel are three sedilia, a piscina, and a stone reredos over the altar; and the east window is of the Early Decorated period, and contains some handsome stained glass windows by Clayton and Bell. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £5, 11s. 0½d., returned at £100, 4s. 6d., and now worth about £200 per annum. The Duke of Buccleuch is the patron, and the Rev. T. C. B. Cornwell, M.A., is the vicar. The tithes were commuted in 1807. A handsome Vicarage House, in the Elizabethan style, was erected, at the expense of the patron, at the west end of the village, about 27 years since. There is an Independent Chapel in the village, and the Schools for boys, girls, and infants were erected in 1849 by the Duke of Buccleuch, by whom it is entirely supported; it is attended by upwards of 100 pupils.

Charities.—Sir Robert Dallington, in 1636, left £300 to the poor, the interest to be divided among 24 poor persons until land could be purchased. This purchase was effected, and the charity is now worth £86 per annum. Samuel Lee, ranger of Geddington Chase, in 1717, left £100 to the poor, also vested in land, yielding £24 per annum. Nathaniel Collis, in 1813, left £300, the interest to be applied for dissenting purposes. Mrs Cave, in 1846, left £100 in deposit 4 per cents. to pay supplies at the chapel; Mr Pack, in 1870, left £100 4 per cents. for the same purpose.

Post-Office.—Humphrey Panther, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Kettering at 8 A.M., and are despatched at 5 P.M.

Abbott Samuel, carpr. & joiner
Baines Mrs Ann
Baines Mrs Char. beer retailer
Barratt Richard, wood-dealer
Barratt Robert, shopkeeper
Binley William, wheelwright
Channon Thomas, schoolmstr.
Chapman Charles, blacksmith
Collyer Wm. draper & grocer
Cooper Mrs Elizabeth, baker
Cooper John, shopkeeper
Cornwell Rev. Thomas Charles
Brand, M.A. vicar
Craxford Miss Eliz. dressmkr.
Croot Frederick, vict. Star
Dainty John Alex. Hames, baker
Flavell Samuel, vict. White Hart
Flint Mr Stephen
Freeman Charles, wood-turner
Freestone James, clerk
Hipwell Ashton, carpenter

Hipwell John, shopkeeper
Holding Geo. rake-mkr. & turnr.
Hughes Samuel, shoemaker
Jones Francis, gardener
Jones Samuel, vict. Royal Oak
Knowles David Haines, shopkr.
Laundon Jno. sadlr. & tharn. mkr.
March John, rake-mkr. & turner
Nichols John, shoemaker
Norton Thomas, shopkeeper & dealer in wood
Panther Edmund, shoemaker
Panther George, shoemaker
Panther Humphr. shoem. P.-O.
Patrick Edw. mason & builder
Potter Arthur, rake mkr. & turnr.
Potter Henry, carpenter
Potter Wm. wheelwrt. & smith
Rippin Amos & Joseph, carriers
Rippin Jno. wood-dlr. & grazier
Ruffy Mrs Elizabeth
Smith Isaac, butcher & farmer

Stevens Mrs Lydia
Sykes Robt. butcher, & maltster
Tebbutt John, beer retailer
Thompson Lewis, dlr. in wood
Tilley Mrs Mary, shopkeeper
Walpole Wm. vict. White Lion
Wetherall Captain John William, Priory House
Wetherall Mrs Louisa, Priory House

Farmers and Graziers.

Baines Mrs Charlotte
Bell Mrs Ann
Brown John
Dainty Mrs Mary
Rippin John
Rippin Robert
Sheffield Joseph, Grange
Smith Isaac
Sykes Robert

Carrier.—Levi Clipston to Kettering daily.

GRETTON PARISH

Is bounded by Harringworth on the east; by the river Welland on the north; by Rockingham on the west; and by Deene and Corby on the south. It contains 3792 acres; its population in 1801 was 675; in 1831, 762; in 1841, 859; in 1851, 934; in 1861, 909; in 1891, 871 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £7376, and the gross estimated rental £8187. The soil varies from a strong clay to a black loam; and the principal landowners are the Earl of Winchelsea and Nottingham (the lord of the manor); Lieut.-Col. Thomas Tryon, and George Lewis Watson, Esq.

Manor.—Gretone contained 3 hides and 3 virgates, and was in the hands of the Crown at the time of the general survey. There was a mill, worth 3s. yearly, 20 acres of meadow, and a wood 1 mile in length and half a mile in breadth; and the whole was valued as before at £20. In the sixth of King John (1204) this manor was granted to Walter de Preston and his heirs, at the annual rent of £25, and the service of half a knight's fee. With this family it continued till the eighth of Henry VI. (1429), when Wymer de Preston, Esq., conveyed it to William Lord Zouch and St Maur. From the family of Zouch it passed to the Catesbys, and from Sir Wm. Catesby to Sir Christopher Hatton, who in the twenty-fourth of Elizabeth (1581) levied a fine of it, and from him it descended to his posterity. George James Finch Hatton, tenth Earl of Winchelsea and Nottingham (the present lord of the manor), is eldest son of the ninth Earl by his first wife Charlotte, daughter of the third Duke of Montrose, born in 1815, succeeded in 1858, married in 1846, Constance Henrietta, daughter of the second Marquis of Anglesey, educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford (B.A. 1835), was M.P. for North-Northamptonshire from 1837 to 1841. Residences—Eastwell, Ashford, Kent, Carlton Club, and 91 Victoria Street, S.W. Heir, his son, Viscount Maidstone.

The Village of Gretton is pleasantly seated on an eminence commanding extensive prospects, and distant $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. of Rockingham.

The Church, dedicated to St James, is an ancient edifice, consisting of a nave, side aisles, chancel, and chapels, and a square tower, in which are five bells, which were rehung in 1871. In the chancel are some monuments to the family of the Viscounts Hatton of Gretton, and underneath the chancel is a vault containing large stone coffins, enclosing the remains of Christopher Viscount Hatton and other members of the family. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £19, 6s. 8d., and now worth £510 per annum. The Bishop of Peterborough is the patron; and the Rev. Arthur White, M.A., is the incumbent. The Vicarage House, a substantial building which stands at the north-west end of the village, was erected in 1850.

The Baptist Chapel, a small brick building, was erected in 1824; and The National School, erected by a former Countess of Winchelsea, has been recently enlarged, and an Infant School added.

Kirby Hall (now in ruins), the property of the Earl of Winchelsea, was a spacious rectangular mansion, erected or rebuilt by Sir Christopher Hatton in the reign of Queen Elizabeth (see page 322). The hall was built about 1572, but the date of 1590 appears in the stables, so that it probably occupied eighteen years in its erection. The mansion consisted of two courts, each displaying much grandeur in the architecture of the several fronts, although in different styles, it having received additions in 1638 of a superb character, by Inigo Jones, the leading architect in the reign of Charles I. On the eastern side of the second or inner court was the great hall, 46 feet by 22, with an ancient oak roof. This splendid pile occupied low ground, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile south east of the village.

The Manor of Kirby forms part of the parishes of Gretton and Bulwick, the N. and N.W. parts of the house belonging to the former; and the S. and S.E. to the latter parish. Bridges tells us that in his time "the gardens were stocked with a great variety of exotic plants, and adorned with a wilderness composed of almost the whole variety of English trees, and ranged in elegant order. Where the mount now is," continues he, "a cart-load of bones was dug up twenty years since." The same learned historian tells us that the house was originally built by the Stafford family, from their crest, a boar's head out of a ducal coronet, and Humfre Stafford on several parts of it. At all events it is certain that if it was not entirely built by Sir Christopher Hatton, it was very much enlarged and ornamented by him. In the Domesday survey the manor is called Churchberie, but was afterwards changed to Kirkby, and since to Kirby. A great portion of the lands here were given by Joane Engayne, in 1297, to the Abbey of Fineshade, and after the suppression of that house, in the reign of Henry VIII., were granted to John Lord Russell. In the eighteenth of Elizabeth (1575) it passed from John Stafford, Esq. to Sir Christopher Hatton, Knt., and lineally descended through his adopted heir to the Earl of Winchelsea, the present proprietor.

Post-Office.—Letters arrive from Uppingham at 9.20 A.M., and are despatched at 2.45 P.M.—3.45 during summer months.

Barwell Thomas, slater
 Barwell William, shoemaker
 Chambers Mr John
 Colwell Robert, grocer
 Eastland Miss Eliza, schoolmrs.
 Essam Mr Francis
 Forster Rev. Maynard Shaw,
 B. A. curate
 Goode Jacob, wood-dealer
 Gregory Mrs Sarah, postmrs.
 Hilton Rev. Edward (Baptist)
 Ireland Hannah, baker
 Ireson Mrs Betsey, shopkeeper
 Lenton Mr Henry
 Lloyd George Thos. netmaker
 Loveday Matthew, collar and harness maker
 Marsh Mrs Mary Jane
 Morris Samuel, shopkeeper
 Myers Thomas, fellmonger & parchment-maker
 Preston Jno. vict. Hutton's Arms
 Pridmore Robt. & Wm. masons
 Pruden John, beerhouse

Richmond Danl. wheelwt. &c.
 Readyhoof, Robert, tailor
 Rooke Thos. land agent to the Earl of Winchelsea
 Satchell Wm. maltstr & btchr.
 Shawley James, shoemaker
 Smith Josiah & Son, blkamths.
 Sneath Jonath. vict. White Hart
 Spendlove John Bamford, shoemaker
 Spendlove Jph. grcr. & btchr.
 Spriggs Sam. whlwrt. & crpntr.
 Streather Jas. mason & par. clk.
 Warner Chas. Enos, tailor and shopkeeper
 Warner Thomas, shoemaker
 White Rev. Arthur, M. A.
 vicar, surrogate
 Whitmee, Samuel, vict. Talbot
 Whitworth Gaius, bkr. & beerh.
 Whitworth John, miller
 Woodcock Wm. baker & drpr.
 Wootton William, blacksmith
 Wootton William, beerhouse

Wright Joseph, butcher
Farmers and Graziers.
*(Marked * are Yeomen.)*
 Addison Jeremiah, Brookfield
 Bamford William
 Chapman Thomas
 Clarke Mrs
 Heard William
 Ireland Miss Hannah
 Layton William
 *Myers Thomas
 Roach John
 Rooke Samuel Rigg
 Satchell Thomas
 Satchell William
 Satchell William, jun.
 *Sculthorpe James
 Spencer John
 Spendlove James
 Spendlove Jonathan
 Stubbs Joseph
 Tee Thomas
 *Wolston Thomas

HARRINGWORTH PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Laxton on the east, by the river Welland, which divides it from Rutlandshire, on the north, by Gretton on the west, and by Kirby and Deene on the south. It contains 3307 acres; its population in 1801 was 404; in 1831, 358; in 1841, 358; in 1851, 368; in 1861, 360; and in 1871, 365 souls. The rateable value is £5692; and the gross estimated rental £6414. The soil is principally of a light description, and the grazing and meadow land is excellent. Lieut.-Col. Thomas Tryon of Bulwick Hall is lord of the manor, and owner of very nearly the whole of the land. There are about 250 acres of woodland in the parish.

Manor.—The Countess Judith, niece of the Conqueror, held 5 hides of land here at the time of the Norman survey, which were then rated at £10. In the Confessor's reign they were the freehold of Turchil. In the reign of Henry II. Harringworde was held of the fee of David, King of Scotland. In Henry III.'s time this manor was in the possession of the family of Cantilupe, from which it passed to the La Zouches, and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), William la Zouche was lord of Harringworth, which he held of the Honor of Huntingdon. Sir William la Zouche, knight, in the tenth of Richard II. (1386), obtained a licence to enclose and make a castle of his manor-house here, with the liberty of holding an annual fair for three days, beginning on the eve of St John Baptist (23d of June), and a weekly market on Tuesday. In the twenty-ninth of Elizabeth (1586), Edward Lord Zouche was one of those who sat in judgment on Mary Queen of Scots at Fotheringhay Castle. The male issue of the family failing in the reign of James I., this manor was sold to the family of Foxley, of whom it was soon after purchased by Abraham Tryon, Esq., whose lineal descendant, Lieut.-Col. Thomas Tryon, is the present possessor. The ancient manor-house, now a farm-house, stands a little north-east of the church.

The Village of Harringworth, which is large and scattered, is pleasantly situated on the south bank of the Welland, about 5½ miles east by north of Rockingham. The centre of the village forms an open square, in which stands the ancient market cross, in a good state of preservation.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, consists of a nave, chancel, side aisles, south porch, and tower, surmounted by a spire, containing five bells. It is in a state of good repair; the interior was reseeded some few years ago, and the chancel is divided from the nave by a neat wooden screen. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £11, 15s., returned at £133, 8s., and now worth about £174 per annum. The dean and canons of Christ Church, Oxford, are the patrons, and the Rev. Fred. Henry M. Blaydes, M.A., is the incumbent. There are several very fine monuments in this church, belonging to the Tryon family.

A Chantry was founded and endowed here for two priests, "who should daily celebrate divine service in the chapel of All Saints at Harringworth," by William La Zouche, in the thirty-third of Edward I. (1304). This was a free chapel, we presume, attached to the manorial residence, in which several of the ancient lords of Harringworth were buried. The Vicarage House, a good building, stands north of the church.

The School, which is chiefly supported by funds from the charity estates and children's pence, was built by the late Mr Tryon of Bulwick, who expended £50 received from the School Building Society of London to aid him in its erection, and in the purchase of books for the school. The Charity Estates of the parish consist of 51a. 14p. of land purchased with the several bequests of James Tryon, Esq. (£100), Charles Tryon, Esq. (£200), Mrs Eliz. Gardiner, and the Rev. John Palmer. The rents amount to about £104, 10s. per annum, £45 of which is paid to the schoolmaster, and the balance is appropriated to the poor and the apprenticing of poor boys belonging to the parish.

In the village is a small Congregational Chapel, erected in 1867.

Letters are received through Uppingham at 9.30 A.M., and the Letter-box is cleared at 4.40 P.M.

Andrew Thomas, shoemaker	Johnson Robert, carpenter	Cant Griffin
Barker Wm. schoolm. & par. clk.	Johnson Thomas, carpenter	Cant John Thomas
Blaydes Rev. Frederick Henry	Martin Osmond, gamekeeper	Cant Robert
Marvel, M.A. vicar	Munton Jno. Boughton, butcher	Dams John
Bradshaw Mrs Sarah, blacksm.	and grazier	Dickens William, Park Lodge
& shopkeeper	Ripplin Robert, baker	Drake John Thomas
Cooke Mrs R. draper & grocer	Sneath Thos. vict. Swan	Green Benjamin
Dams William, stonemason	Taylor John, carpenter	Hodges William
Drake Miss Charlotte	Farmers and Graziers.	Measures Charles, Lodge
Harris George, baker, grocer,	Bradshaw Wm. Manor House	Ward Robert
maltster, and beer retailer	Buzzard John	Wyman Griffin Cant

LAXTON PARISH,

Within the limits of Rockingham Forest, is bounded on the north and west by Wakerley, Harringworth, and Deene, and on the south and east by Bulwick and Fineshade. It contains 1279 acres, of the rateable value of £1255; the gross estimated rental is £1430; and its population in 1801 was 204; in 1831, 188; in 1841, 136; in 1851, 143; in 1861, 119; and in 1871, 103 souls. The soil is various, and Lord Carbery is lord of the manor, and owner of the whole. In Domesday book this parish is called Lastone, and in the account of hides, in the reign of Henry II., Lexington.

Manor.—This lordship consisted of 1½ hide of land, which was held of the Crown by William de Engayne, at the time of the general survey. In the preceding reign it was the freehold of Turulf, and rated at 10s., but it was now advanced to 30s. In the reign of Henry II., Vitalis Engayne held this estate, and from henceforth the capital manor descended to the family of Engayne. From the Engaynes it was carried in marriage to the family of Cheyne, and Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Thomas Cheyne, carried it in marriage to Sir Thomas Vaux, baron of Harrowdon. It was afterwards in the hands of the Stafford family, and is now in the possession of George Patrick Percy Evans Freke, seventh baron Carbery, eldest son of the late P. Evans Freke, Esq., by Dorothea, daughter of the Rev. Dr Harvey, and nephew of the sixth Lord, born 1801; succeeded his uncle in 1845; married in 1852 Harriet, daughter of Lieut-General Shuldharn; is J.P. for Co. Cork. Seats—Castle Freke, Ross Carbery, County Cork, Ireland, and Laxton Hall, Northamptonshire. Heir Presumptive—his brother the Hon. Fenton John, raised to the rank of a Baron's son by Royal warrant in 1845.

The Village of Laxton, which is small, is distant 8½ miles N.W. of Oundle.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints (supposed to stand on the highest ground in the county), is a handsome structure, partly in the Early English and partly in the Perpendicular styles, consisting of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, south porch, and square tower surmounted by a spire, containing one bell. The old church, which was in a dilapidated state, was thoroughly restored, with the exception of the tower, in 1867, at the sole expense of Lord Carbery and his family, at a cost of £1600. It was fitted up with handsome carved open oak sittings, together with a handsome pulpit of carved oak lined with crimson cloth, a reading desk, chancel stalls, and altar rails of carved oak, and a neat font, of Caen stone, was placed at the west end of the south aisle. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Weldon, rated at £20 and returned at £100. The patronage is vested in Lord Carbery, and the Rev. William John Pattinson, LL.B., is the incumbent. The Vicarage House, near the church, has been much improved by the present vicar. All the children of the poor are educated and clothed at the Free School by Lady Carbery.

Laxton Hall, the seat of Lord Carbery, stands near the village, and was built from a design by J. H. Repton; it has a fine portico of the Ionic order; the vestibule, erected from a design by Dance, is nearly square, but rises in a spherical ceiling, terminated by a circular lantern. The hall contains a good collection of pictures, chiefly by the old masters.

Post-Office.—Samuel Wooton, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Uppingham at 9.45 A.M., and are despatched per messenger at 3.45 P.M.

Armstrong Mrs Mary
Carbery The Rt. Hon. Lord,
Laxton Hall, & Castle Freke,
Ross Carbery, Ireland
Hercock George, farm bailiff

Hercock Stephen, gamekeeper
Pattinson Rev. Wm. Jno. LL.B.
vicar
Royce Wm. farmer & grazier

Sewell Jno. Jackson, far. & gr.
Sharman Thos. gardener, Hall
Templer Mrs Martha, vict.
Stafford Knot
Wootton Sam. blacksmith, P.O.

NEWTON PARISH.

Newton, or Newton-in-the-Willows, is bounded on the east and south by Geddington and Weekley, on the west by Rushton, and on the north by Little Oakley. It contains 1153 acres, of the rateable value of £1899, 3s., and the gross estimated rental is £2040. The population in 1801 was 104; in 1831, 111; in 1841, 103; in 1851, 97; in 1861, 84; and in 1871, 70 souls. The Duke of Buccleuch is lord of the manor and principal owner. This lordship was enclosed by the family of Tresham, in the reign of James I., when by tradition there was a tumultuous riot of the country people, and many lives lost. Here were formerly two adjacent villages, called Great and Little Newton, the latter of which, with its church, has long since been demolished.

Manor.—Gunfrid de Gioches held 3 virgates, 1½ bovate; Eustachius held 3 hides, and the Countess Judith 6 virgates and 2 bovates of land here, at the time of the general survey. The whole was valued at 62s. Newton, for several reigns, was in the hands of various possessors, without being considered an independent manor. In the reign of Richard II. it passed from the Colpepers to the family of Mulso, who held it for several generations, and from whom it passed to the Treshams. In the thirtieth of Henry VIII. (1538), John Tresham, Esq., died seized of the manors of Great and Little Newton, and from this family they passed by purchase to Sir John Langham, Bart. In 1715, Benjamin Bathurst, Esq., sold them to the Duke of Montagu, whose lineal descendant, the Duke of Buccleuch, is the present possessor.

The Village of Newton is extremely small, and situate about 3½ miles north by east of Kettering. There were formerly two chapels here, one appropriated to each township, and supplied by two chaplains; but in 1449 they were united, and one chaplain appointed to officiate in each alternately. These were originally members of Geddington Church, and part of the possessions of Pipwell Abbey.

The Church, dedicated to St Faith, is a stone building, consisting of chancel, nave, south porch, and a square tower, surmounted by a spire, and containing one bell. It was not originally the parish church of Newton, but the private family chapel of the Treshams, whose residence was in the field adjoining, close to where the dovecote now stands. The church was restored in 1858, and enlarged by the addition of the chancel; the nave was roofed and entirely restored by the Duke of Buccleuch; the chancel, which was built by the late incumbent, contains five stained glass windows by Clayton & Bell. The brass at the chancel steps, bearing date 1400, is in memory of John Mulsho, of Buckinghamshire, gentleman, who married into the Tresham family; the alabaster tomb is in memory of Richard Tresham, and his wife Isabel, date 1433. The living is a donative united to Little Oakley, value £40 per annum, in the gift of the Duke of Buccleuch, and incumbency of the Rev. Vaughan Charles Turner, who resides at Little Oakley.

Bagshaw farmer	Levi : Boughton,	Bell William and Samuel, farmers	Walpole Mrs Susannah, farmer and miller, Newton Mill
-------------------	------------------	-------------------------------------	--

OAKLEY GREAT PARISH

Is bounded on the south by Newton, on the east by Little Oakley, on the west by Pipwell, and on the north by Carlton. It contains 2413 acres; its population in 1801 was 189; in 1831, 204; in 1841, 225; in 1851, 123; in 1861, 195; and in 1871, 200 souls. The rateable value is £2930; and the gross estimated rental £3197. The soil varies from a strong clay to a light gravelly land, and the principal proprietor is Sir William de Capell Brooke, Bart., who is also the lord of the manor. Harper's Brook, a boundary of Rockingham Forest, runs through the lordship. Part of Pipwell is in this parish.

Manor.—The Countess Judith had 1½ hide and half a virgate of land here, at the time of the Domesday survey. In the Confessor's time, it was the freehold of Bondi, and valued at 20s., but was now advanced to 30s. In the reign of Henry II., there were 2½ hides here and in Newton, of the fee of King David of Scotland. This manor was subsequently held in moieties by various possessors. In the eleventh of Charles I. (1635), Sir Thomas Brooke, Knight, was lord of Great Oakley. Sir William de Capell Brooke, Bart., the present proprietor, is the son of Sir Arthur de Capell Brooke, Bart. He was born in 1801; succeeded in 1858; married in 1829 Catherine, youngest daughter of the second Lord Sondes of Rockingham Castle; educated at Rugby and Brasenose College, Oxford; B.A., 1822; M.A., 1835; called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1826; is a justice of the peace for the counties of Northampton and Leicester, and was high sheriff of Rutland in 1852. The first baronet, Sir Richard Brooke Supple, assumed the name of Brooke, in accordance with his uncle's will, and adopted the name of De Capell, in lieu of Supple, by royal licence. Seats—Oakley Hall, Northamptonshire; the Elms, Market Harborough; and Ahadoe, Roxborough, County Cork, Ireland. Heir—his son Richard Lewis, M.A., born 1831; married in 1867 Mary Grace, eldest daughter of Archdeacon Trollope, brother of Lord Kesteven.

The Church, dedicated to St Michael, is an ancient edifice, partly covered with ivy, consisting of chancel, nave, south porch, and square tower containing three bells. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Weldon, returned at £30. The lord of the manor is the patron, and the Rev. Arthur Charles Tomblin, B.A., is the incumbent. In the church are several monuments to the Brooke family; the old rood screen, and several of the original open oak seats still remain.

Great Oakley Hall, the property of Sir William de Capell Brooke, Bart., and now occupied by Captain A. W. de Capell Brooke, is a little north of the village. It was erected in 1555, and is a fine square pile, nearly covered with ivy. In front of the building is a fish-pond.

Letters are received through Kettering at about 10.15 A.M., and the Letter-box closes at 3.15 P.M.

Brooke Captain Arthur W. de
Capell, Great Oakley Hall
Ballard Wm. tailor and shpkr.
Dawkins John, gardener, Hall
Lygo Wm. vict. Spread Eagle
Pain James, miller
Patrick John, gamekeeper
Riddle Thomas, carpenter
Tebbot William, vet. surgeon

Tebbot William, blacksmith
Tomblin Rev. Arthur Charles,
B.A. vicar
Woolston John, parish clerk
Woolston John, jun. shoemkr.

Farmers and Graziers.

Bagshaw Thomas

Bagshaw William, Grange
Browett John
Coales William
Colyer Thomas, Lodge
Lygo William, Oakley Hay
Moore Jonathan
Sheffield Mrs. Eliz., Snatchill Lodge
Sheffield Jas. Lyceden Lodge

OAKLEY LITTLE PARISH.

Oakley Little or Parva, so named to distinguish it from Great Oakley, is a small parish, adjoining the latter on the east. It is situated on low ground, and contains 723 acres, of the rateable value of £770, 10s.; gross estimated rental £876. The population in 1801 was 113; in 1831, 128; in 1841, 139; in 1851, 123; in 1861, 126; and in 1871, 131 souls. The Duke of Buccleuch is lord of the manor, and owner of the whole parish.

Manor.—This lordship was included with Great Oakley, in the Domesday survey, and in the reign of Henry II. there were 3 virgates here, of the fee of Montacute, in the hands of William Fitz-Alured. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Alicide Kirkeby or de Prilly was lady of this manor, and with her descendants it continued for several generations. From the Prillys it was carried in marriage to the family of Maver, from which it passed to the Caves. Edward Gate, Esq., became possessed of it in 1571, and sold it to William Montagu, Esq., fifth son of Sir Edward Montagu, lord chief-justice of the king's bench, who levied a fine of it in the twenty-fourth of Elizabeth (1581). With the lineal descendant of the noble family of Montagu it still continues. The Manor House stands near the church.

The Village of Little Oakley, which is very small, is about 5½ miles N.N.E. of Kettering.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, is an ancient edifice in the Early English style, consisting of nave, clerestory, chancel, north and south aisles, south porch, and square tower containing one bell. It was restored in 1867 at the expense of the Duke of Buccleuch, at a cost of £1600. The chancel was rebuilt, the church partly reroofed, and reseatd with carved oak sittings, a handsome pulpit of Caen stone, and carved oak lectern and reading-desk. In the chancel are handsome monuments to the Montagu family. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weldon, annexed to Newton-in-the-Willows, rated in the king's books at £7, 7s. 6d., and now worth £120 per annum. The Duke of Buccleuch is patron, and the Rev. V. C. Turner, incumbent. The east window, which is filled with stained glass, was given by Mrs Knibb, in memory of her husband, who died in 1866. The Rectory House was built near the site of the former one, by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1872-3, at a cost of upwards of £2000. It is a large substantial building of stone in the Elizabethan style. Here is a free Church of England School built in 1852, and entirely supported by the Duke of Buccleuch, and is attended by about 40 children.

The Misses Small, in 1813, left £10, the interest of which is given away in bread to the poor on Christmas-day.

Letters are received through Kettering at 9.30 A.M., and the Wall Box is cleared at 4.10 A.M.

Austin James, cottager
Chapman Edward, fellmonger
Latimer Mrs Hannah, shopkpr.
Murdin Mrs Ann, beerhouse

Norton Daniel, hurdle-maker
Patrick Mrs Mary Ann, schmrs.
Turner Rev. Vaughan Charles,
rector

Farmers and Graziers.
Bell George
Knibb Mrs Susan, Manor House
Panther George Sidney
Veasy Darcy (& road surveyor)

ROCKINGHAM PARISH.

This parish, famous for its castle and forest, is bounded on the N.W. by the river Welland, which separates it from Leicestershire; on the N.E. by Gretton; and on the S. by Cottingham. Its area is 908 acres, of the rateable value of £1728, and the gross estimated rental is £2002. Its population in 1801 was 213; in 1831, 296; in 1841, 219; in 1851, 261; in 1861, 211; and in 1871, 249 souls, being an increase of only 36 in seventy years. The soil is generally fertile, and George Lewis Watson, Esq., is lord of the manor, and the entire owner of the parish. The following sketch of its history is compiled from various sources, but chiefly abridged from an interesting paper entitled, "Historical and Architectural Notices of Rockingham Castle," by the Rev. H. J. Bigge, M.A., the present rector.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, Rockingham was in the hands of the Crown, and was returned as consisting of 1 hide; the arable land being 3 carucates and 5 villeins; six cottagers had three carucates. It had been held by Bovi, with sac and soc. In the Confessor's time it lay waste; but William ordered a castle to be built. The demesne was then valued at 26s. This hide continued in the hands of the Crown for several years; or, as Bridges says, "in those who held it by grant from the Crown." The first grant of the manor, with the fair distinct from the Castle, was made to Alianora (Eleanor of Guienne), grandmother to Henry III., in 1224. In the same year we find from an entry in the "Close Rolls," that the profits arising from fairs and markets in those days must have been very considerable; for William de Insula (de Lisle), who was then Constable of the Castle, was directed to reserve the proceeds of the fair held on the exaltation of the cross in the preceding years for the use of the King's mother, Isabella of France. In 1271, the manor was in the hands of Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, son of Richard, King of Germany, who then obtained the grant of a market to be held here every Friday. The manor was possessed by Edward II. in 1315, when there was another grant for a market on Saturday; and this grant was confirmed by Edward III. to his mother Isabella, in 1329. The same king, in 1346, granted to his Queen Philippa, for her life, a certain spot in Rockingham Forest, containing sixty acres, in aid of the repairs of the castle, described as being then in a ruinous state. Subsequently, the castle, domain, and manor, with all their privileges, were confirmed to Queen Margaret, wife of Henry VI. In 1396 the custody of the lordship was granted to William Brancepath, for the term of twelve years, at the annual rent of £4, 2s. 1d.

In 1464, the fourth year of his reign, Edward IV. settled the manor of Rockingham on Elizabeth his queen. In 1485, Henry VII. confirmed to John Lord Welles the office of constable and steward of the castle, lordship, and manor of Rockingham, and the office of master forester, and of all the parks within the forest. In 1551 the manor was conferred on Edward Lord Clinton; and in 1598 it was given by Queen Elizabeth to Thomas Lord Burleigh. In the thirteenth of James I. (1616) the manor came into the possession of Edward Watson, who married the daughter of Everard Digby of Stoke Dry; and in the seventeenth of the same reign (1619), the park was granted to George Marquis of Buckingham, who passed it in the same year to Lewis Watson, Esq., who, on the 23d of June 1621, was created a baronet. In the fourteenth of Charles I. (1639), this Sir Lewis had the manor conferred upon him, and being a zealous royalist, garrisoned the castle for the service of the king, who in consideration of his loyalty, created him on June 1st, 1645, Baron Rockingham of Rockingham Castle. (The inscription on his tomb in the chancel of the church gives 1644 as the date of the creation.) His only son Edward married Anne, daughter of Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Stafford, and had issue, Lewis, created by George I., in 1714, Viscount Sondes and Earl of Rockingham. The titles devolved in 1745 upon his brother Thomas, who, dying in the following year, the earldom became extinct, but the barony came to his cousin, Thomas Watson Wentworth, created Marquis of Rockingham, April 19, 1746. He died in 1750, and was succeeded in the estates by Lewis, son of Lord Monson and Margaret, daughter of the first Earl of Rockingham, assumed the name and arms of Watson, and was created Lord Sondes on the 20th of May 1760. From the time of Lewis, the first Lord Rockingham, this manor has been vested in the Watson family, whose descendant, George Lewis Watson, Esq., is the present possessor.

Rockingham Forest and Castle.—On the verge of one of those ancient forests which originally covered a great portion of the northern parts of Northamptonshire, and on a lofty eminence overlooking the green vale of the Welland, stands the formerly Royal Castle of Rockingham. Its position was equally well chosen as a place of retirement and defence, being sheltered on the south-east side by deep and nearly impenetrable woods, and in the contrary direction protected by the natural acclivity of the tongue of land on which the fortress was built. This ridge, jutting out like a peninsula, from the long line of escarpments, commands a distant view up and down the valley, and a still more extensive one over the verdant and undulating heights which form its opposite horizon. The forest is said to have been anciently one of the largest in the kingdom. In the fourteenth of Edward I. (1286), it is described as extending from the town of Northampton to Stamford bridge, a distance of thirty miles; and its medium breadth, from the river Nene on the south-east to the rivers Welland and Malsell on the north-west, was about eight miles; but those limits were greatly contracted by the reduction of many new afforestations which had been made after the accession of Henry the Second.

It is very probable that the contiguity of the place to the royal demesnes originally induced the Conqueror to erect, on the confines of the forest, a castle to which he and his successors might retire, when, disencumbered of the burdens of the state, they wished to enjoy the sports of the field. And here our English sovereigns, from William I. to the last of the Plantagenets, were accustomed to repair, for the sake of following with less interrupted ardour the pleasures of the chase. It is stated by some authorities that William built this castle for the protection of the extensive iron smelting works which were then carried on in the adjacent woodlands; whilst others maintain that it was an early seat of the Britons, and had a royal residence, as its name indicates. "Rex, Roy, and Righ (Latin, French, and Gaelic), point to the first syllable rock; so that according to this etymology, Rockingham would signify the king's home." Mr Bigge, however, prefers the derivation which Mr Earle, Anglo-Saxon Professor at Oxford, has given of similar names, viz.—Rock (on a bed of which it stands), ing a meadow near water, and ham the dwelling place." Mr Bloxam, an antiquarian of deep research, seems to favour this opinion. He supposes that Rockingham, like many other mediæval castles, was erected on the site of an ancient British fastness, whose works are more apparent on the north side where the slope of the hill is terraced. The partiality of King John and his successors for the pleasures of the hunting field are well known; the former more especially seems to have delighted to resort here. He visited the castle once and sometimes twice and thrice every year of his reign; and besides these royal visits, Henry III. and the three first Edwards frequently resorted to Rockingham Castle. Edward III. attested more than twenty writs here between 1334 and 1354, and here, too, on the 24th August 1375, the truce concluded at Bruges, between this monarch and Charles V. of France, was duly ratified. The castle was placed, during the absence of the king, in the custody of constables, officially appointed, and who usually held the office for three years, generally during the king's pleasure, and sometimes for life. This privilege was considered so honourable, that it was only confided to persons of high rank and military renown. In 1214, preparatory to his annual visit to this castle, King John, according to his usual custom of having wine sent before him, ordered five casks of the best that could be found in London to be despatched into Northants for his use; and in the ninth of Henry III. (1224), the sheriff of Northampton is charged to pay for the transit of ten casks to Northampton, ten to Rockingham, three to Gedding-ton, and two to Cliffe, for the royal table. By command of King John (April 30, 1215), two cross-bow men, Peter de Barr and Nicholas de Hugesvill, were placed in the Castle of Rockingham for its defence, and allowed each sixpence a day for their services. Permission to hunt in the royal forest was seldom granted to a subject, and was so highly valued that even when the Crown granted a manor to one of its vassals, the king reserved this privilege to himself; and with such strictness was this forest preserved, and its laws enforced, that in 1256 four men are returned as being confined in the castle and fined two marks for trespassing; and in 1218 one Richard Trussell was fined for merely taking his dogs through the forest.

The castle contains an interesting collection of fire-arms and swords, with many interesting objects of art, and numerous family and other pictures; and in the old hall, among other relics, are two ancient coffers or treasure chests; one of the date of King John, which has never left the castle since the days when it was his favourite hunting-seat; the other is of the date of Henry V.

Leland, writing in 1545, thus describes the castle as it existed in his time. "The castle of Rockingham standith on the toppe of an hille, right stately, and hath a mighty diche. The kepe is exceeding fair and strong, and on the waulles be certain strong towers. The lodgings that were within the area of the castelle be discovered (i.e. uncovered), and faul to rune. One thing in the waulles of the castle is much to be noted; that they be embattled on booth, so that, if the area of the castelle were won by coming in at either of the two greate gates of the castelle, yet the keepers of the waulles might defend the castelle. I marked that there is a strong touere in the area of the castelle, and from it, over the dungeon dike, is a drawbridge to the dungeon touere." The present aspect of the castle is very different from what it was in Leland's day; but it still recalls, especially in its entrance gates, the idea of the military defences of the middle ages. The archway, flanked by two bastion towers, with its long-extending curtain walls on either side, retains all the features of the period of its original erection in the reign of Edward I.; and some Norman carving worked into the walls carries back its historical associations to a yet earlier period. The great court or entrance, originally the outer bailey, and partly of the thirteenth and sixteenth centuries, is now inhabited. The entrance doorway, with its equilateral arch, and deep mouldings and shafts, the opposite door communicating with an inner court, and the massive chimney, which is buttressed out from the present hall, and which no doubt was the ancient one, together with the existence of two windows of the same period, lately discovered, all tend to indicate that the whole of the great hall of the castle is of the same date. At the extreme end of an old enclosure is the mound on which originally rose the massive keep, strengthened with double embattled walls and numerous towers (alluded to by Leland, as standing in his day), but with the exception of the steps leading to it on both sides. There are no traces of it discernible. The whole of this enclosure, containing about $3\frac{1}{2}$ acres, is bounded by the old wall once nearly nine feet thick, some portions of which still remain; and beyond this is what was once the tilting ground, bounded on the south by a moat, and further on by a second moat, and surrounded by trees, a fine avenue of which (limes) still remains.

The first notice of payments from the Crown towards expenses at Rockingham Castle occurs on the Great Pipe Roll in the second of Henry II. (1156), when there is an entry of £4, 11s. 3d. for fixed payments for the porter and two watchmen; and there are also other entries for keeping the vineyard at Rockingham, and a charge for procuring vines in the thirty-first of Henry I. (1130). By an inquisition in the ninth of Henry V. (1440), the vineyard was worth 4s. per annum. Whenever the monarch visited this place during his sojourn, his horses had right of herbage in the pastures bordering on the river Welland, and the constable of the castle shared the same privilege. But we learn from the Hundred Rolls, that the Abbot of Peterborough gradually deprived the Crown of these rights, so that at the inquisition held, fourth of Edward I. (1266), they had become lost. The same authority tells us that a priest was appointed to the chapel of St Leonard, within the castle, to offer the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass for the souls of the deceased monarchs, for which duty the sheriff of the county was charged to pay him 40s. a year. An important council was assembled here by William Rufus, son and successor of the Conqueror, consisting of the abbots, bishops, and nobility of England, to settle the misunderstanding then in agitation between him and Anselm, Archbishop of Canterbury, concerning the right of investiture. The council sat on Midlent Sunday, March 11th 1095, in the chapel within the castle. The bishops, it is said, advised Anselm not to insist on any reservation of his rights on the ground of spiritual authority; but on his still refusing to compromise the freedom of the church by yielding a higher allegiance, in spiritual matters, to the king than to Pope Urban II., they renounced him as their archbishop.

The Village of Rockingham is situated on the declivity of a hill in the midst of the forest, and near the junction of the three counties of Northampton, Leicester, and Rutland. It is distant 9 miles north from Kettering, and about 20 north by north-east from Northampton. The market, originally established here in the beginning of the reign of Henry III., as stated above, has long been discontinued, but a portion of the old market-cross is still standing, and now used as a water-tank. There is a yearly fair held on the 25th of September for the sale of live stock, clothes, and general merchandise.

The Church, dedicated to St Leonard, stands on an elevated position, close to the castle walls. It is in the Decorated style, and consists of nave, chancel, north aisle, south mortuary chapel, and a square tower, with octagonal top, containing one bell. In 1845, through the munificence of the Hon. Richard Watson, the interior of the church was refitted with open seats. The windows were replaced by pointed ones of the Late Decorated character, and the tower added. The church suffered severely, the tower being entirely destroyed, during the Civil War, whilst the castle was being bombarded by the parliamentary troops under Fairfax. The chancel was restored in 1863 by the rector, when the roof was replaced by one of a high pitch, covered with Colly Weston slate, and panelled internally. In the same year the mortuary chapel was added by the patron, G. L. Watson, Esq. It is entered by an arch from the chancel, and the monuments belonging to the Rockingham family have been transferred here from the floor and walls of the chancel; the removal of a large monument on the north side gave place to the insertion of two arches and piers, of Early Decorated character; and the north aisle was opened to the chancel. A new east window was inserted in place of the one formerly in that position; and this was removed into the newly-erected chapel, together with the memorial window of the "Ascension," in stained glass inserted, in 1853, to the memory of the Hon. Richard Watson, by his widow. The new east window is also filled with stained glass, and is the gift of Mr and Mrs Watson; the centre light contains "the Crucifixion," that on the left "the Agony," the one on the right "the Women at the Tomb;" and beneath are smaller panels, the subjects being "the Nativity," "Baptism," and "First Miracle of our Lord." There is a handsome altar cloth of velvet, in embroidery and gold, the gift and work of the Hon. Mrs Watson in 1853. At the same time a handsome brass communion desk was presented by Mr Watson. The chapel contains all the monuments formerly in the chancel, with the exception of two of large dimensions; that on the south side is to the memory of Lewis, first Earl of Rockingham, who died in 1723, and Katharine Lady Rockingham, who died in 1695. On the opposite side is the monument of Anna Baroness Rockingham, and daughter of Lord Strafford, wife of the second Baron Rockingham, who died in 1695. The monuments in the chapel commence with the recumbent figures in alabaster of Edward Watson and his wife, the daughter of Kenelm Digby of Stoke Dry. On the floor immediately behind is the full-sized figure in white marble of Arabella Oxenden, who died in 1734, second daughter of Edward, second Baron Rockingham; on the south the centre monument is to the memory of Margaret Watson, who died in 1713, fourth daughter of the second Lord Rockingham, and was erected by the above Arabella Oxenden to the memory of her sister; the figure is of full size, under a canopy pointing to a skull at her feet, round which a serpent is entwining itself. The remaining are mural tablets, in white and black or grey marble of different sizes, including those to the memory of the first, second, and third Lords Sondes, together with that of Grace Pelham, wife of the second Lord Sondes, and Elizabeth Milles, wife of the third Lord Sondes. The vault in which the remains of most of the above are deposited is now approached from the outside, the entrance from the chancel being closed.

The living is a rectory in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £10, 2s. 3½d., and now worth £150. It is endowed with £200 private benefactions, and £200 royal bounty; is in the patronage of George Lewis Watson, Esq., and incumbency of the Rev. H. J. Bigge, M.A. Rev. J. F. Mercer, M.A., is the curate.

Here is a National School for both sexes, erected by the Hon. R. Watson in 1842, and a house for the master and mistress, erected by George Lewis Watson, Esq., in 1858.

For the charities belonging to this parish, see the table prefixed to the hundred.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank—Josiah Smith, sub-postmaster. Letters from Leicester at 7.30 A.M., despatched at 5.35 P.M.

Bigge Rev. Harry John, M.A. rector and rural dean	Jones Mrs M. vict. Sondes Arms Mercer Rev. J. F. M.A. curate	Watson George Lewis, Esq. J.P. Rockingham Castle
Brown John, bailiff, &c. to G. L. Watson, Esq.	Miller Charles, blacksmith Redshaw Miss Adel. dressmkr.	Farmers and Graziers. Baines John Laxton (& baker)
Jerrom Jabez, schoolmaster	Porter William, carpenter	Branson, John
Jones Frederick, butcher	Sharpe Edw. mnger. gas-works Smith Josiah, grocer, P.-O.	Jones Mrs Mary Marchant William Carrier.—John Wright, to Kettering on Friday, and Uppingham Wednesday and Saturday.

STANION PARISH.

Stanion, or Stanien, is bounded on the east and south by Brigstock, on the west by Little Oakley, and on the north by Corby and Weldon. It contains 1550 acres; its population in 1801 was 248; in 1831, 313; in 1841, 334; in 1851, 365; in 1861, 351; and in 1871, 340 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £2336, and the gross estimated rental £2568. The soil varies from a strong clay to a light gravelly land, and the Countess of Cardigan and de Lancastre (lady of the manor), and the Duke of Buccleuch are the principal land-owners. Here are some good stone quarries for building purposes. In Willow Spring Close, near the village, were found some Roman pavements some years since.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, the Bishop of Constance had 1½ virgate of land here, which Edwin held of him. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 32d., and a small wood, and the whole was valued at 10s. There was likewise 1½ virgate here, a member of Brigstock, at the same time. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Henry de Dene was lord of the manor. From the family of Dene it passed to the Tindales and Littons. In the sixth of Henry VIII. (1514), William Litton sold it to Sir Robert Brudenell, Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, from whom it lineally descended to the late Earl of Cardigan. The Countess of Cardigan and de Lancastre is the present possessor.

The Village of Stanion, which is small, stands on the road from Brigstock to Kettering, about 6 miles S.E. from the latter town.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, consists of a nave and side aisles, south porch, chancel, and a square tower, surmounted by a very fine spire, containing four bells. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Brigstock, and in the deanery of Weldon. The patronage is vested in the Duke of Cleveland, and the Rev. J. P. Sandilands, B.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land at the enclosure.

Here is a National School, built by the late Earl of Cardigan, who subscribed £20 per annum towards its support, and which sum is contributed by the Countess, the vicar adding £5; the Duke of Buccleuch gives £10, and a few of the inhabitants £8 per annum. There is a clothing club in the village, from which each subscriber of 8s. 8d. receives goods of the value of 15s. 6d., the difference being added by the Countess of Cardigan and de Lancastre, who is a great benefactress to the poor of this parish.

Letters are received here through the Thrapston Post-Office at 8.15 A.M., and the Wall-Box is cleared at 4 P.M.

Bell Charles, vict. Cardigan Arms , and farmer	Binder Edward, grocer & baker	Vickers William, carpenter
Bell Henry, hurdle-maker	Drage George, grocer & baker	Farmers and Grainers.
Bell Henry, cottager	Hector Nathaniel, carpenter	Abbott William
Bell Henry, jun. hurdle-maker	Jinks Henry, butcher and vict.	Bell William (and corn merchant and maltster)
Bell Mr Robert	Lord Nelson	Berry Francis John
Bell Thomas, timber merchant and charcoal burner	Jinks Mr Robert	Boraden John
Bell Thomas, hurdle-maker	Meadows & Co. tanners & curriers	Brampton Wm. Manor House
Bell William, miller, Stanton Mill (and farmer)	Moors William, schoolmaster	Harres George, h. Brewood, Staffordshire
	Stanger Matthew, gamekeeper
	Tirrell Adam, farm bailiff
	Vickers James, carpenter

STOKE ALBANY PARISH.

This parish formerly gave name to the hundred of Stoke, now a part of Corby hundred, and the addition of Albany is from the family of Albini, the ancient possessors. Its boundaries are formed by Wilbarston on the east, Desborough on the south, Brampton on the west, and Ashley on the north. It contains 1656 acres. Its population in 1801 was 377; in 1831, 339; in 1841, 362; in 1851, 319; in 1861, 344; and in 1871, 347 souls. The gross estimated rental is £3028, and the rateable value £2853. The soil varies from a strong cold clay to a light clayey and stony land, on a substratum of limestone. George Lewis Watson, Esq. (lord of the manor), Rowland Hunt, Esq., Mrs Davies, Mrs Scott, and Mr John C. Lefevre, are the principal proprietors.

Manor.—Robert de Toden, a noble Norman, to whom the Conqueror gave several lordships, in this and other counties, held 3 hides of land here, at the time of the general survey. There was a mill of the annual rent of 12d., and a small wood, and the whole was valued at 40s. William de Albini, his grandson, held this manor in the reign of Henry II., and from his descendants it passed in marriage to Robert de Roos, and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), William de Roos was lord of Stoke. It subsequently passed through the families of Hastings, Griffin, and others, and through the Earls of Rockingham to the present possessor.

The Village of Stoke Albany is seated on high ground, about five miles S.W. from Rockingham.

The Church, dedicated to St Alban, is in the Early English style, and consists of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, south porch, and square tower, containing five bells. It was thoroughly restored in 1872, at a cost of £1600, raised by subscription, and a fund saved from the town estate. The chancel and south aisle were newly roofed, and the chancel floored with Minton's tiles, and furnished with open seats; a carved oak pulpit on a base of Bath-stone, and a carved oak lectern were also added. The church is heated on Porritt's system, with hot air. In the chancel are a sedilia and a fine piscina. The living is a rectory annexed to Wilbarston, in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £13, 6s., and now worth £300 per annum, or £580 including Wilbarston. George Lewis Watson, Esq., is the patron, and the Rev. William R. P. Waudby, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1798 for land. The Rectory House, a substantial stone building situated near the church, was erected in 1871 at a cost of £2500, by the rector, and a grant from Queen Anne's bounty.

The School, a good stone building, with Bath-stone dressings, and a teacher's residence attached, was erected in 1871, by Mrs Davies, to the memory of her father, the late Richard Buckby Humfrey, Esq.

The Manor House, now a farmhouse, has some windows in it of an Early

English character, and is supposed to be a part of a Catholic church or chapel. In front of the house is a font, found by workmen engaged in digging foundations for farm buildings.

Stoke Albany House, the property of Mrs Davies, and at present occupied by General Cotton, is a handsome mansion, erected in 1838. It is delightfully situated, about a quarter of a mile S.E. of the village, and surrounded by plantations and pleasure grounds.

Charities.—The Town Estate, consisting of 12 acres, lets for £56, 7s. 5d per annum. Fras. Parker, in 1783, left 10s. per annum to the poor of Stoke.

Letters through Market Harborough. Pillar-box cleared at 4.10 P.M.

Adkins John, stonemason	Phillips Geo. vict. White Hart	Broughton William
Barlow Saml. stonemason and vict. White Horse	Slatter Miss Emily Sarah	Clarke William
Crane Edw. butch. & vict. Talbot	Swingler William, woodman	Fox Joseph
Cotton General Corbet	Waudby Rev. William R. P. M.A. rector	Harding John
Deacon Josiah, carptr. & wheelw.	Farmers and Graziers.	Platt Thomas
Franklin Miss Frances, schlmis.	Blockley James, Manor House	Rowlatt John, Lodge
Harding Wm. carptr. & wheelw.		Scott Mrs Mary Ann
Jarvis James, shopkeeper		Smith John, Lodge

SUTTON BASSET PARISH.

Sutton Basset, formerly a hamlet in Weston by Welland, is bounded on the east by Ashley, on the south by Dingley, and on the west and north by the river Welland, which separates it from Leicestershire. It contains 724a. 2r. 32p. of land, of the rateable value of £1454, and its gross estimated rental is £1628. The population in 1801 was 189; in 1831, 139; in 1841, 179; in 1851, 129; in 1861, 147; and in 1871, 161 souls. The soil is chiefly a strong clay, and the greater part of the parish is in grass. The principal owners are William Parker, Esq., Rev. — Allington, Rev. Samuel Danby, Mr John Sedgley, Messrs Wm. and James Tebbatt, and Henry Vere Forester Hungerford, Esq., who is lord of the manor.

Manor.—Robert de Buci held 1½ hide at the time of the general survey. Before the Conquest it was rated at 15s., but it was then advanced to 21s. 4d. In the reign of Henry II., Richard Basset was possessed of this and the neighbouring manors of Weston and Little Weldon, and it continued afterwards with the owners of Weston. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth it was in the hands of the Griffin family.

The Village of Sutton Basset is small, and stands on low ground, about three miles N.E. from Market Harborough.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, consists of nave, chancel, and bell turret, in which is one bell. The building, which is small, was formerly a chapel of ease to Weston. It was restored in 1861, all the main features of its original Norman architecture having been carefully preserved; and new open oak sittings, pulpit, reading-desk, lectern, altar rails, and handsome font of Caen stone were added. The living is a vicarage annexed to that of Weston by Welland, in the patronage and incumbency of the Rev. Samuel Danby, B.D. There are 31a. 2r. 24p. of glebe land, but the living is worth only £70 per annum.

Letters are received through Market Harborough.

Barron Wm. vict. Queen's Head	Farmers and Graziers.	Sedgley John (and maltster)
Faulkner William, carpenter	Ashwell —	Sedgley William Clark
Pitts Henry, shoemaker		Tebbatt Wm. & Jas. (yeomen)

WAKERLEY PARISH

Is bounded by Duddington on the east, by Kingscliffe and Fineshade on the south, Harringworth on the west, and by the river Welland on the north. It contains 1797 acres; its population in 1801 was 194; in 1831, 218; in 1841, 216; in 1851, 232; in 1861, 223; and in 1871, 209 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1990; and the gross estimated rental £2272. The soil is various, about half the parish is arable, and there are 484 acres of woodland. The Marquis of Exeter is lord of the manor, and owner of the whole.

Manor.—At the time of the Norman survey, Eudo Fitz-Hubert had 2½ hides of land in Wacherlei, which, with a mill, a wood, and 12 acres of meadow, was valued at £5. In the tenth of Richard I. (1198), William de Lanvalley was lord of Wakerley; and in the forty-eighth of Henry III. (1263), John de Burgh obtained a grant of a three days fair here, beginning on the Eve of St John the Baptist. From the De Burghs this manor was carried in marriage to the De Grellys, and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), John de la Warre was lord of it. With the de la Warres it continued till the failure of male issue in the fifth of Henry VI. (1426), when it devolved on Reginald West, who was succeeded by his son Richard, Lord de la Warre. In the fifteenth of Henry VII. (1499), it passed by fine to the Conyers' family, and in the next reign was in the possession of Richard Cecil, Esq., second son of Thomas Earl of Exeter, and in this family it still continues.

The Village of Wakerley, which is small, stands on the extreme edge of the county, on the banks of the Welland, about 7½ miles N.E. from Stamford.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, is partly in the Early English and Decorated Styles, and consists of nave, chancel, side aisles, north porch, tower and spire containing three bells. One arch between the chancel and the nave is Early Norman. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £11, 12s. 6d.; returned in 1831 at the net value of £100; in the patronage of the Marquis of Exeter, and incumbency of the Rev. Edward Holmes, B.A. The Rectory House stands about the centre of the village.

A small bequest by the Rev. Matthew Snow, of the annual value of £3, is applied to the purchase of Bibles, prayer-books, and books for the library.

Letters are received here through the Stamford Post-Office.

Hill William, blacksmith
Holmes Rev. Edw. B.A. rector
Johnson William, wheelwright
Munton Isaac, gamekeeper
Pepper John Barron, butcher

Pepper Wm. vict. Exeter Arms
Skinner Henry, stonemason
Wadkin Robert, parish clerk
Wilson Daniel Wade, baker and shopkeeper

Farmers and Graziers.
Bradshaw Mrs Mary and Henry
Clarke John Anthony Pepper
Dawson Richard
Gill William

WEEKLEY PARISH

Is bounded by Brigstock and Grafton on the east, by Warkton and Kettering on the south and west, and by Geddington on the north. It contains 1540 acres of the rateable value of £2693; and the gross estimated rental is £2935. Its population in 1801 was 253; in 1831, 273; in 1841, 271; in 1851, 265; in 1861, 268; and in 1871, 245 souls. The soil is principally a cold clay, but there is some good arable and grazing land in the parish, and the Duke of Buccleuch is lord of the manor and principal proprietor. Weekley, or as it was anciently called Wikele, or Wicklei, is so named from its situation on the river Ise. Wike and Wickey denoting a reach or bend of a river, and Lee a place.

Manor.—There were 2½ hides of land here, in the hands of the Crown, at the time of the Conqueror's survey. There was a mill of the yearly rent of 44d., and the whole was rated at £6. In the reign of Richard I. Roger de Duston held this manor, and from this family it passed in marriage to the Vavasours, who held it of the Crown by knight's service. From the Vavasours it was carried in marriage to the Langefields, and from this family it passed to St Bernard Brocus, jun., Kt. Sir Edward Montagu, Lord Chief Justice in the reign of Henry VIII., purchased this estate in 1528. His grandson, Sir Edward, was K.B. at the coronation of James I., by whom he was created Lord Montagu of Boughton, 29th June 1621, which title became extinct, in 1790, on the death of the last Duke of Montagu, whose only daughter Elizabeth married Henry Duke of Buccleuch. Walter Francis Montagu Douglas Scott, K.G., P.C., D.C.L., the fifth Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, and present proprietor of this and other neighbouring lordships, is Marquis of Dumfriesshire, Earl of Drumlanrig and Sanquhar, Viscount of Nith, Torthorwald, and Ross, Baron Douglas, Baron Scott of Buccleuch, Baron Scott of Witchester and Eskdale, Earl of Doncaster and Baron Tynedale, by which last two titles he holds his seat in the House of Lords. He is son of the fourth Duke, by the youngest daughter of the first Viscount Sidney. He was born in 1806, and married in 1829 the youngest daughter of the second Marquis of Bath; succeeded his father in 1819; is Lord Lieutenant of Midlothian and of Roxburghshire, Colonel of the Edinburgh Militia, and Captain General of the Queen's Body Guards in Scotland. This family traces its descent through a long line of distinguished chieftains and powerful nobles, from Sir Richard le Scott, of the reign of Alexander III. of Scotland, who, as a feudal lord, swore fealty to Edward I. in 1296. Among their ancestors is Sir Walter Scott, of Branxholme and Buccleuch, on whose deeds the "Lay of the Last Minstrel" is founded. Seats—Montagu House, London; Boughton House, Northamptonshire; Forest Lodge, Perthshire; Dalkeith East Park and Smeaton, near Edinburgh; Melrose, Roxburghshire; Langholme and Drumlanrig Castles, Dumfriesshire; and Richmond, Surrey. His Grace's son and heir is William Henry Walter, Earl of Dalkeith, born in 1831, married in 1859 Louisa Jane, daughter of the first Duke of Abercorn.

The Village of Weekley, which is very small, is pleasantly situated about 1½ mile east of Kettering. Near the village are vestiges of a moat, called the Hall Close, within which the ancient manor house is said to have stood.

At Castle-hedges several pavements and foundations have been turned up by the plough, and Mr William Blott, farmer, has several Roman and Saxon coins found by the late Mr Thomas Blott whilst ploughing. Weekley is well supplied with springs, in one of which, in a field near the village, stands a piece of old statuary, said to represent Moses smiting the rock.

The Church, dedicated to St Mary, is in the Early English style, and consists of nave and side aisles, chancel, and low tower, surmounted by a spire, and containing five bells. The interior contains the monument of Lord Chief Justice Montagu, dated 1512, and other monuments to his descendants. The church was thoroughly restored, and a new Vicarage House erected in 1873 at a cost of about £2000 by the Duke of Buccleuch. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Oundle, rated in the king's books at £9, os. 5d., and now worth £146 per annum. The Duke of Buccleuch is the patron, and the Rev. H. H. N. Howard, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes, &c., were commuted in 1807.

Charities.—Montagu's Hospital, near the church, was founded and endowed, in 1614, by Sir Edward Montagu, of Boughton, for the maintenance of seven poor people to be called the Master and Brethren of Weekley Hospital. These poor aged men receive 4s. per week each; and meat of the value of 13s. 9d. per week, together with fuel, is divided amongst them. Each poor man is also provided with a small garden, to which an orchard is attached. Two nurses receive 1s. 6d. each per week, and £6, 13s. 4d. is divided between them annually, but they do not reside in the hospital. The income of the charity is £131, 6s. 8d. per annum.

The Free School, endowed by the Rev. N. Latham, of Barnwell, in 1619, is further supported by the Duke of Buccleuch. Here is also an Infant School supported by the Duchess of Buccleuch. The other charities are—the Church land, about two acres; and three doles to the poor, amounting to £2, 18s. 10d. per annum.

Boughton is a distinct manor in this parish. "In levelling the ground for a bowling green," says Bridges, "there was found a coin of the Emperor Ves-pasian; foundation stones of buildings, and human bones were also dug up. There is a tradition that a chapel formerly stood here." In the twentieth of Henry VIII. (1528), Robert Burdon, and Johanna his wife, conveyed this manor to Sir Edward Montagu, Lord Chief Justice, and with his descendants it still continues.

Boughton House, one of the princely seats of the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensberry, K.G., P.C., D.C.L., stands in an extensive park well stocked with deer. The mansion was originally erected by Ralph Duke of Montagu. King William honoured the Duke with a visit at this seat on the 24th of October 1695, when his Majesty and the whole court were entertained with the greatest magnificence. Traces of the original grandeur of Boughton House are yet to be found in the noble terrace, on the principal front; but a great part of the mansion was rebuilt by John, second Duke of Montagu. It contains a fine collection of paintings, and two cartoons, said to be Raphael's, the subjects being the Holy Family and Ezekiel's vision. From the park avenues of trees branch forth, and are intersected by similar ones at different distances, and in all directions, so that the house is thus surrounded by a circumference of sixty miles of a net-work of fine shady rides. Here is also a canal nearly a mile in length. The gardens are said to have occupied above a hundred acres, and were formerly ornamented by large basins with fountains, aviaries, wildernesses, terraces, &c., and diversified by numerous statutes, vases, and other ornaments, both of marble and metal.

Archer Geo. baker & post-office
Archer Jno. vict. Montagu Arms
Buccleuch Duke of, K.G. P.C.
D.C.L. Boughton House
Eden Frederick Morton, Esq.
land agent to the Duke of Buccleuch, Boughton House
Howard Rev. Henry Howard
Nimmo, M.A. vicar

Parker John, cattle dealer
Parker Stephen, shoemaker
Potter Miss Elizabeth, mistress,
Infant School
Potter Samuel, park-keeper
Shrive James, shopkeeper
Ward Charles, corn miller,
Weekley Mill
Watkins William, farm bailiff

Whitelaw John Alex. estate bñ
Wise Chas. master Free School

Farmers and Graziers.

Blott William
Chettle Griffith Roberts
Potter Richard
Smith Jonathan
Ward Charles, Weekley Mill

WELDON GREAT PARISH.

Weldon, or Weldon-in-the-Woods, includes the hamlet of Little Weldon, and is bounded on the east by Benefield, on the south by Stanion, on the west by Corby, and on the north by Deene. It contains, exclusive of Little Weldon, 2496 acres; its population in 1801 was 364; in 1831, 338; in 1841, 339; in 1851 (with Little Weldon), 816; in 1861, 301; and in 1871, 302 souls. Its rateable value is £2954, and the gross estimated rental £3406. Little Weldon contains 1167 acres, of the rateable value of £2451; and the gross estimated rental is £2893. Its population in 1841 was 473; in 1861, 514; and in 1871, 492 souls. Weldon consists of two separate manors, and townships, divided from each other by a little brook, and distinguished by Great and Little Weldon. This distinction occurs as early as the reign of the Conqueror. There are famous quarries of freestone in this parish. "Here," says Bridges, "are very ancient stone quarries, of so hard a texture as to admit a polish almost equal to Italian marble. Many slabs and chimney-pieces in some of the principal houses in the county are made of this stone. And if we may credit the tradition of the place, founded on the report of skilful workmen, who know the grain of this stone, Old St Paul's Cathedral, before the fire of London, was built with Weldon stone." This parish is well supplied with excellent springs. In Chapel Field, near the village, a Roman tessellated pavement, 96 feet in length and 10 in breadth, within a kind of gallery, 100 Roman feet long in front, sided by several rooms about 30 feet square, in which were similar pavements: the whole structure was a double square 100 feet by 50. There were also a great number of coins of the Lower Empire, besides some of Constantine the Great, Constans Magnentius, discovered here at the same time.

Manor.—Great Weldon contained at the time of the Domesday survey, one hide and three virgates, which were held of the Crown by Robert de Buci, and valued at 30s., and Little Weldon half a hide, rated at 20s. Hugh de Irvi held the latter lordship. The family of Basset were amongst the earliest possessors of Great Weldon, and from them it passed in marriage, in the tenth of Henry IV. (1408), to Sir Thomas Aylesbury and Sir John Knyvet. In the eighteenth of Edward IV. (1478), Henry Colet, alderman of London, levied a fine of it, and dying in the twenty-first of Henry VII. (1505), was succeeded by his son John Colet, dean of St Paul's, and the celebrated founder of St Paul's school. From this gentleman's mother it reverted to the Knyvet family, with which it continued till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when it passed into the hands of Sir Christopher Hatton, Knt. The manor of Little Weldon came also into the possession of the Hattons, and the Earl of Winchelsea, their representative, is the present lord of both manors, and proprietor of nearly the whole parish. Here was also another manor called Griffin's manor, in Weldon, which in the reign of Charles I. was in the possession of Lord Brudenell.

The Village of Weldon, with that of Little Weldon which joins it, forms a large, straggling, but an exceedingly pleasant and picturesque village, about 4 miles E.S.E. of Rockingham, and 8 miles west from Oundle. Weldon has a charter for a market on Wednesday, now fallen into disuse; and charters for four fairs, in February, May, July, and November, one only of which is now held, viz., on the Thursday following the second Sunday in July. Here was formerly a handsome market-house, over which were the sessions chambers, supported by columns of the Tuscan order. This building was erected of the best stone, of the excellent quarry in the vicinity, by Lord Viscount Hatton. The sweet notes of the nightingale are nightly heard here.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, stands on a slight eminence at the north west side of the village, is in the Early English style, and consists of nave, with clerestory, chancel, north and south aisles, chancel aisles or chapels, south porch, and square tower containing a peal of six bells. The north chancel aisle was added, and the north aisle was lengthened a bay at the west end at the time of the restoration, July 1862. The south aisle was lengthened about half a bay at the west end, at the expense of the Rev. R. Mence, then curate. The aisles are separated from the nave by three plain pointed arches on either side, which are supported by clustered columns. The clerestory is lighted by three two-light windows on each side, and the chancel arch is filled with screen-work of carved oak. The founder's arch is in the south aisle, and there is a sedilia and piscina in the south chapel and chancel, which are in a state of good preservation. All the walls, with the exception of the tower, are embattled. The church was thoroughly restored and newly seated with carved oak in 1852, at a cost of about £1700, £500 of which was expended on the chancel, at the expense of the late rector. The east window was filled with stained glass, at the expense of the late Dr Clark. The centre window of the south aisle was also filled with stained glass, by the parishioners, to the memory of their late rector. A new organ by Holdich stands in the north chancel aisle. The churchyard was enlarged in 1870, by the addition of about 3 roods. The living is a rectory in the deanery to which the parish gives name, rated in the king's books at £13, 6s. 8d., now worth about £400 per annum. The Earl of Winchelsea is patron, and the Rev. W. R. Finch Hatton, B.A., is the rector. The tithes were commuted for 405 acres of land in 1792. The Rectory House stands a little south-east of the church.

The Independent Chapel, situated in Little Weldon, was erected in 1792. The dissenting interest commenced here about the year 1706, when Edward Nutt, a stonemason, licensed his dwelling-house for religious worship for Protestant dissenters, and subsequently fitted up a more commodious building in 1738, on the site of which the present chapel stands. In 1861 there was a Sunday school built at a cost of £90, to accommodate about 60, and in 1874 the minister's house was rebuilt at a further cost of £200. The Rev. T. B. Hookey is the minister.

The School, which was enlarged in 1871, is supported by voluntary contributions, Government grant, and children's pence.

Charities.—Charles Henry Pratt, in 1597, left 20s. yearly to the poor of this parish; James Cooper, in 1727, left £3 per annum, to be distributed in bread to the poor; a customary payment of 52s. a year is made by the Earl of Winchester, to provide bread for the poor; and Thomas Dash, of Kettering, left in 1341 £4 a year, to be expended on bread for the poor the first Thursday in November; and £6 a year to be expended on meat for the poor, and distributed in the Independent chapel the first week in March. Richard Grey, in 1853, left £100, the interest to be expended in fuel and clothing for the poor of Little Weldon. John Clark, in 1863, left £500, the interest to be expended on bread and meat, and given to the poor on Christmas Eve, by the rector and churchwardens.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank.—Benjamin Wadsworth, postmaster. Letters arrive from Wansford, per mail cart, at 8'48 A.M., and are despatched at 4'50 P.M. No despatch on Sunday.

Barlow Geo. V. stne&marb.msn.
Beebey George, baker
Bell William, cottager
Blackwell Joseph, postman
Brampton Robert, butcher
Burton Mrs Sarah, vict. Shoulder of Mutton
Chambers John, baker
Chapman Robert, shoemaker
Chapman Rev. Wm. Herbert, M.A. curate
Clark Mr Samuel
Coles Robert, parish clerk
Eales Jno. mr. of church sch.
Ewart Thos. grocer, draper, and clothier, & agt. for W. & A. Gilbey, wine & spirit mchts.
Fox William, general dealer
Gilby Rd. vict. Woolpack
Githero Thomas, stonemason
Gostick Heneage, grocer, ironmonger, and corndealer
Greaves Edward, surgeon
Green Henry, tailor
Hales Mr Thomas
Hatton Rev. William Robert Finch, B.A. rector
Hookey Rev. Thos. Phillips (Independent)

Horspool Mrs Mary
Hunt John, miller
Jinks Mrs Eliz. vict. Nag's Hd.
Killingier Mrs Mary
Lammie Geo. travelling draper
Lancum Fred. S. butcher, & agt. for United Temperance (life), Royal (fire & life), and Accidental insurance offices.
Lee Mrs Mary, millr. & dressmkr.
Maddocks Edwin, vict. White Hart; h. Kettering
Mehew Thos. sadl. & harnessmkr.
Melbourn Bros. victs. George, Jno. Hackney, manager
Milley Mr John
Page Amos, baker & carrier
Pollard Joshua, gamekeeper
Poole Mrs Jane, grocer
Pratt Mrs Jane
Preston Jno. vict. King's Arms
Pywell Mr John
Pywell Misses Mary Ann, and Rebecca
Richardson Edward, carpenter
Richardson Thomas, carpenter
Rowlatt Wm. rope-maker
Shaw Jno. plumber & glazier
Singleton Henry, blacksmith

Smith Robert, blacksmith
Spendlove Mrs Eliz.
Spendlove James, grocer, &c.
Spendlove Thos. whlwr. & carp.
Stirgoes Mrs Eliza
Turner Wm. whitesmith
Wade Thos. wheelwr. & carp.
Wadsworth Benj. draper, registrar of births and deaths, agt. for Sun (fire & life) office
White Thos. shoemaker
White Thos. jun. shoemaker
Wright Mr John
Yates Miss Eliza, mistress Infant school

Farmers and Graziers.

Branson William Charles
Chambers John
Compton James (grazier)
Goodey Wm. (& maltster)
Jinks Charles (grazier)
Jinks George
Parsons Wm. Park Lodge
Preston Jno. (& vict. King's Arms)
Rooke John, Weldon Grange
Singlehurst John
Wright Thomas, Lodge

Carriers.—Mrs Elizabeth Jinks, to Oundle on Tues. Thurs. and Sat., and to Kettering on Fri.; John Spencer, to Uppingham on Wed., Kettering on Mon. Wed. Thurs. and Sat., and Stamford on Fri.; Benjamin March, to Kettering on Tues. and Fri.; and Amos Page, to Stamford on Tues. and Fri. and to Oundle on Thurs.

WESTON BY WELLAND PARISH,

So called to distinguish it from other parishes of the same name, is bounded on the east by Ashley, on the south by Sutton Basset, and on the west and north by the river Welland, which here divides it from Leicestershire. It contains 985 acres, of the rateable value of £2084, 3s.; and the gross estimated rental is £2335. The population of the parish in 1801 was 229; in 1831, 208; in 1841, 199; in 1851, 199; in 1861, 204; and in 1871, 209 souls. The soil is a strong clay, two-thirds of it is in grass, and the principal proprietors are W. W. Tailby, Esq., Messrs Thomas and William Rowlatt, and John William Kendall.

Manor.—Westone, at the time of the Domesday survey, contained two hides and two parts of a hide, which were held by Robert de Buci, and valued at 42s. 8d. In the reign of Henry II. this manor was in the possession of the family of Basset, with whom it continued till the tenth of Henry IV. (1408), when it fell to Sir John Aylesbury, Kt., and John Knyvet. In the twelfth of Elizabeth (1569), Edward Griffin died seized of the whole of Weston manor, when it descended to his successors. Henry Vere Forester Hungerford, Esq., is the present lord.

The Village of Weston is pleasantly situated about four miles N.E. of Market Harborough.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a handsome structure in the Early English style, and consists of a nave and side-aisles, chancel, and square tower, in which are five bells. It has been entirely rebuilt in 1863, at a cost of about £3000, of which sum the parishioners contributed £200. It is a very good specimen of the Early English style, and is internally decorated with great taste; the whole of the windows are filled with stained glass, and the seats are open and of carved oak. The living is a vicarage, with that of Sutton Basset, in the deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £11, 17s. 1d., and now valued at about £400 per annum. The Rev. Samuel Danby, B.D., is both patron and incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land, 1642. 2r. 10p., in 1802. The Vicarage House, a good stone building, stands near the church.

The School, under the auspices of the vicar, is a commodious building, with master's house attached, capable of holding 100 children, erected in 1871 by subscription. And here is also a small bread charity, given away on Sunday to three poor widows belonging to the parish.

Letters are received through Market Harborough. Wall-box cleared at 4.30 P.M.

Danby Rev. Saml. B.D. vicar
Gibbs George, baker
Gilbert Joseph, joinr. & buildr.
Guilford Thos. vict. Shoulder of Mutton
Hartshorn John, blacksmith
Johnson Rev. Arthr. M.A. curate

Scott Robert, wheelwright
Smith John, rate collector
Smith Joseph, fruiterer, &c.
Stafford William, shopkeeper
Tilley Wm. miller, bkr. & grocer
Walter George, vict. Wheel and Compass

Warbrick Jno. mr. of Nat. schl.
Farmers and Graziers.
Dexter Mrs Mary
Kendall Jno. Wm. (yeoman)
Pick William
Rowlatt William
Smith Mrs Sarah

WILBARSTON PARISH.

This parish, which includes part of the hamlet of Pipwell, is bounded on the east by Carlton, on the south by Pipwell and Rushton, and on the west and north by Stoke Albany and Ashley. It contains 2782 acres, its rateable value is £4342; the gross estimated rental, £4886. Its population in 1801 was 755; in 1831, 681; in 1841, 684; in 1851, 754; in 1861, 721; and in 1871, 581 souls. The soil varies from a strong clay to a red soil, on a blue limestone bottom; and the principal proprietors are George Lewis Watson, Esq. (the lord of the manor), Sir Geoffrey Palmer, Bart., Mr William Edward Burditt, and Mr John Charles Lefevre. The lordship is well supplied with springs.

Manor.—Robert de Toden held three hides and one virgate in Wilberdestone, and the Crown three virgates, at the time of the Norman survey. From Robert de Toden the manor passed to his descendant William de Albini, and from this family Stoke and Wilberstone passed in marriage into the family of Roos, with which they continued for several generations. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), William de Roos was lord of this manor, which he held of the king in capite. Thomas, Lord Roos, being attainted in Parliament in the fourth of Edward IV. (1464), this manor was granted to Sir William Hastings, Knt., who was afterwards suddenly seized at the council table, by order of Richard, Duke of Gloucester, and beheaded in the Tower. The lordship was then resumed by the Crown and restored to the family of Roos, from which it passed by fine to Edward Griffin, Esq., attorney-general, in the second of Philip and Mary (1554); from the Griffins it passed to the Rockingham family, and is now in the possession of its representative, George Lewis Watson, Esq., of Rockingham Castle.

The Village of Wilbarston, which is rather large, stands on high ground commanding extensive prospects, about six miles east of Market Harborough, and four miles S.W. from Rockingham.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, consists of a nave, chancel, south porch, side aisles, tower and spire containing four bells. The living is a vicarage, annexed to Stoke Albany, in the Deanery of Weldon, rated in the king's books at £7, 17s. 1d., and now worth about £280 per annum. George Lewis Watson, Esq., is the patron, and the Rev. W. R. P. Waudby, M.A., incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land in 1798; and the tithes of Pipwell for £20 per annum. Here is a small Independent Chapel. The National School, rebuilt in 1846, is supported by subscription.

For charities of Wilbarston, see the table prefixed to this hundred. For Pipwell Hamlet and Abbey, see Rothwell hundred.

Post-Office.—Edward Wignell, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive, per messenger, from Market Harborough at 9 A.M., and are despatched at 3.55 P.M.

Almond Mrs Ann, schoolmistress.	Jannels Mr William	Woodcock Marshall, blacksmith.
Barlow Joseph, stonemason	King Samuel, butcher & grocer	Farmers and Graziers.
Barlow William, stonemason,	Markham Charles, bricklayer	Aldwinckle Barthlmew. Lodge,
and vict. King's Head	Markham Thomas, limeburner,	Pipwell
Bland Mat. saddle & harness mkr.	and vict. Fox	Burditt George
Cannam Wm. cooper & parish cl.	Mawson John, shoemaker	Burditt Miss Martha
Chapman Mrs Elizabeth, grocer	Meadows Jno. plumber, painter,	Burditt Wm. Edw. (yeoman)
and tallow chandler	and glazier	Burditt William, junr.
Coyte Rev. Walter Beeston, B.A.	Mugleton Roger, higgler	Burnaby Thos. Upper Lodge,
Driver Dan. beerho. & millwrt.	Peake Edwd. vict. Queen's Hd.	Pipwell
Fox William, shoemaker	Platt John, butcher	King Samuel (yeoman)
Gulliver Thomas, baker	Pridmore Samuel, hurdle-mkr.	Lefevre John Charles (yeoman)
Harding David, hurdle-maker	Stroud Wm. Natl. schoolmaster	Marsh Thomas
Harding John, baker	Swingler William, carpenter &	Platt Edward
Harding Jeph. junr. hurdle-mkr.	wheelwright	Platt John
Ingram Thomas and Benjamin,	Wignell Mrs Emma, grocer, P.-O.
tailors, drapers, and hatters

Carrier.—Joseph Harding, to Market Harborough, on Tuesday and Saturday.

ROTHWELL HUNDRED

Is bounded by Huxloe and Corby hundreds on the east and north, on the north-west by the river Welland, which separates it from Leicestershire, on the west by Guilsborough hundred, and on the south by the hundred of Orlingbury. Its length from east to west is about 16 miles, its greatest breadth from north to south about 9 miles, and it covers an area of 43,640 statute acres. When the Domesday survey was made, Rothwell was divided into two distinct hundreds, viz., Stotfald, comprising the western, and Rodewelle the eastern part of it. Each of these divisions contained in Henry II.'s reign thirteen townships, and in the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), the whole occurs under the name of Rothwell hundred. In the thirty-fifth of the same reign (1307), Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, died seized of this hundred, which he had held of the king in capite, by an unknown service. His son Gilbert was the next heir, after whose decease, without male issue, in the seventh of Edward II. (1314), this hundred was assigned to his second daughter Margaret, who carried it in marriage to Piers de Gaveston; and afterwards by a second marriage to Hugh de Audley, earl of Gloucester. From this nobleman it passed with his daughter in marriage to

Ralph, Earl of Stafford, in whose family it continued till the time of Henry VIII. ; and in the thirteenth year of this reign, it was forfeited to the crown, upon the attainder of Edward, Duke of Buckingham.

Rothwell hundred contains 23 parishes, 4 hamlets, and 1 chapelry. The following is an enumeration, showing the number of acres according to the rate books, together with the number of houses, population, rateable value, and gross estimated rental of each parish in 1871 :—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Arthingworth.....	1695	52	—	—	105	108	213	£ 3013	£ 3383
Barford.....	396	3	—	—	7	10	17	2651	2977
Bowden, Little.....	1866	122	3	7	258	294	552	6316	7320
Oxendam, Little ham }
Braybrooke.....	2787	90	8	—	180	185	365	6940	8187
Clipston.....	2844	190	5	—	419	463	882	5083	5725
Desborough.....	2300	315	15	—	727	709	1436	7069	8256
Draughton.....	1500	37	—	—	94	85	179	2302	2686
Farnon East.....	1485	57	—	2	99	123	222	3325	3726
Glendon.....	770	10	—	—	26	39	65	1763	2015
Harrington.....	2502	47	1	—	112	103	215	4223	4360
Hazelbeech.....	1650	34	1	—	73	79	152	2583	3000
Kelmarsh.....	2751	35	—	—	100	91	191	4520	5270
Loddington.....	1206	58	3	—	130	148	278	2711	3458
Maidwell.....	1767	51	1	—	130	139	269	2462	2831
Marston Trussell.....	1317	49	2	—	104	115	219	2561	2873
Oxendon, Great.....	1299	52	—	—	100	120	220	3057	3438
Orton, Chapelry.....	3460	535	35	—	1197	1160	2357	9596	10,210
Rothwell.....	941	17	2	—	37	36	73	1588	1720
Thorpe Underwood, &c.	610	4	—	—	9	9	18	1220	1550
Rushton, All-Sts. & St Pet.	3109	84	1	—	174	171	345	6550	7718
Pipewell, (part of) ham.
Sibbertoft.....	2011	93	3	—	156	172	328	3606	4071
Sulby.....	1566	13	—	—	39	42	81	2910	3251
Thedingworth (Leicestr.) }	1320	63	—	—	134	134	268	2640	3080
Hothorpe, hamlet..... }	932	7	—	—	13	19	32	1700	2100
Thorpe, Lubenham.....	352	3	—	—	9	11	20	883	1030
Thorpe, Malsor.....	896	51	2	—	103	96	199	1882	2072
	43,332	2009	82	9	4401	4527	8928	93,154	106,297

CHARITIES OF ROTHWELL HUNDRED, as abstracted from the last Parliamentary report of Public Charities.

Date.	Donor and nature of gift.	To what place and purposes applied.	Annual value.
1733.	Wm. Marriott (23a. 3r. 27p.).....	Arthingworth parish, school ...	£ 50 0 0
1600.	Thomas Langham (£50).....	Ditto, poor	2 2 0
	Town Land	Little Bowden parish.....	83 0 0
1630.	Christopher Coniers (£10)
1722.	Rev. Samuel Hawes (£50).....	Braybrook parish, school	20 9 8
1684.	Rev. J. Mapletoft (£50).....
1864.	Rev. John Field £220 Consols (stk.)	Ditto, ditto	6 12 0
	Church and Constable's land (5a.) ..	Braybrook parish	24 0 0
1667.	Sir Geo. Buswell (lands, &c.).....	{ Clipston parish, free grammar school and almshouse ...	350 0 0
1781.	Mrs Fras. Horton (£200)	with which £688, 3 per
	Euse Horton, Esq. (£100)	cent. were purchased } do. do.	20 0 0
1762.	Rev. Joseph Peppin (£20).....	Ditto, lost
1871.	Lady Ann B. Wilmot, Horton (£100)	Free gramr. school & almshos....	3 0 0
	Church and Poor's Land (19a. 3r.)..	Desborough parish	24 0 0
1695.	James Sewell (£20).....	Ditto, poor widows.....	1 0 0
1742.	Lewis East (£20)	Ditto, bread to poor	1 0 0

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what places and purposes applied.	Annual value.
1763.	William Cave (£10)	Deaborough parish, poor	0 10 0
	Ann Craddock (£5)	Ditto, ditto	0 5 0
	William Buckby (£10)	Ditto, 10 poor widows.....	0 6 0
1820.	William Cave (£100)	Ditto, poor	5 0 0
1826.	Mrs Mary Chapman (£50).....	Draughton parish, bread to poor	1 10 0
1866.	Rev. Thomas Holdich	Ditto, ditto	1 10 0
	Church Land (11a.)	East Farndon parish.....	16 0 0
	Randolph Middlemore (£40).....	Ditto, poor	7 10 0
1640.	Mgt. Haldford (£50) laid out on land	Ditto, apprenticing children	12 0 0
	Thomas Lee (rent)	Ditto, bread to poor, lost
1732.	Grace, Countess of Dysart (£100)...	Harrington parish, poor, lost
	Church Charity.....	Ditto	5 0 0
	Lord of the manor (a cust. paymt.)..	Haslebeach parish, bread to poor	3 0 0
1704.	Mrs Judith Bathurst.....	Hothorpe, poor.....	6 12 0
	Poor's Land (10a.)	Loddington parish.....	20 0 0
1684.	Frances Syers (rent)	Ditto, bread to poor.....	2 12 0
1705.	Sarah Wykes	Ditto, school	2 10 0
1866.	Rev. Thomas Holdich	Maidwell parish, poor	3 0 0
	Benefaction Fund (£48, 6s.)	Marston Trussell parish, poor...	2 10 6
1697.	Richard Turner (rent)	Ditto, poor	0 4 0
	Eliz. and Simon Barwell (£100) ...	Ditto, ditto	4 0 0
1671.	Wm. Quarles (£50) 3 p. ct. consols	Rushton parish, ditto	1 15 2
1809.	Hon. W. Cockayne (£100) now 3 } per cent. consols	Ditto, ditto	3 3 6
1726.	Mrs Mary Maunsell (£5).....	Thorpe Malsor parish, ditto	0 5 0
	Ditto	Rothwell parish, school	29 4 0
1590.	Owen Ragsdale.....	Ditto, Jesus' hospital.....	450 0 0
	Hunt's Charity	Ditto, poor.....	37 13 6
1728.	Agnes Hill (£700)	Ditto, six poor widows.....	29 10 0
1727.	— Cooper (rent)	Ditto, bread to poor.....	3 0 0
	Rev. Joseph Bentham	Ditto, ditto, lost
	Poor's Land	Ditto, ditto	8 0 0
1714.	T. Ponder (cottages and land)	Ditto, 6 poor widows.....	5 0 0
1730.	Sampel Tebbutt (rent)	Ditto, 6 Bibles to poor children.	1 10 0
1653.	Rd. Andrews, Esq. (£160).....	Ditto, poor, lost
Total			£1248 4 4

ARTHINGWORTH PARISH.

In Domesday book this parish is called Arningworde, Arniworde, and in later records, Aringworth. It is bounded on the east by Desborough, by Braybrook and Oxendon on the north, and by Kelmarsh and Harringworth on the west and south-west. The parish comprises 1694a. 2r. 32p., of the rateable value of £3012, 10s.; the gross estimated rental is £3383. Its population in 1801 was 207; in 1831, 225; in 1841, 242; in 1851, 250; in 1861, 273; and in 1871, 215 souls. The land varies in quality from a deep clay to a light soil; and the principal proprietors are the Rev. H. R. Rokeby, B.A. (lord of the manor), Captain the Hon. Charles Henry Cust, Richard C. Naylor, Esq., and Henry O. Nethercote, Esq.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, the Earl of Morton held 2 hides here which were valued at 20s., and there was half a virgate pertaining to the manor of Rothwell at the same time. This lordship at an early period was divided amongst several possessors, and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Alice Raboz, and the prior of the hospital of St John of Jerusalem, were proprietors of the manor. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth the family of Catesby held a manor here, which formerly belonged to the Hospitallers, and from the Catesbys it passed to the Stanhopes. From the family of Stanhope it passed into the hands of the Langhams, and was carried in marriage to Mr Benjamin Rokeby, a Spanish merchant, from whom it descended lineally to the present proprietor.

The Village of Arthingworth, which is small, is about $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. by E. of Market Harborough, 8 miles N.W. from Kettering, 14 from Northampton, and 1 mile from Kelmarsh Station, on the Northampton and Market Harborough branch of the London & North-Western Railway.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, consists of a nave, chancel, south aisle, south porch, and a tower containing five bells and a clock. It was thoroughly restored in 1872, at a cost of about £2000, subscribed by the rector, his friends, and the inhabitants, when it was newly roofed, and resealed with carved oak sittings. A handsome lectern, reading-desk, and communion rails of carved oak, were also added, and the flooring laid with encaustic tiles, those within the communion rails being of an ornamental character. A handsome reredos of Bath stone, with columns of Devonshire marble, inlaid with alabaster, a pulpit of Eden stone, and a fine font of the same material, placed on an upright shaft of Devonshire marble, were erected. The south aisle and south porch were rebuilt, and a fine three-light window of stained glass was placed at the east end of the chancel, to the memory of Langham and Henry Rokeby, Esqrs., who died, the former in 1844, and the latter in 1870. The centre light is a representation of the crucifixion, and the side lights bear figures of the Blessed Virgin, St John, and St Joseph. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £12, 2s. 8½d., but now worth about £380 per annum. The Rev. H. R. Rokeby, B.A., is both patron and incumbent.

The National School is endowed with £50 a year, arising from land left by William Marriott, in 1733.

Arthingworth House, the seat of Captain the Hon. Charles Henry Cust, J.P., is a fine substantial and pleasantly situated mansion.

Arthingworth Manor, the property and residence of the Rev. Henry Ralph Rokeby, B.A., is a good mansion, in the Tudor style of Architecture.

Letters via Northampton. The nearest Money-Order Office is Clipston.

Cust Capt. the Hon. Chas. Henry.
J.P. Arthingworth House
Rokeby Rev. Henry. Ralph, B.A. rector, Arthingworth Manor
Amies John, carpenter
Anster Alfred, blacksmith
Cook Benjamin, parish clerk

Gosling Miss Eliz. schoolmistr.
Hughes Fred. station-master,
Kelmah Station
Perkins George, gardener
Sheen Saml. coal dlr. & beerh.
Smalley Joseph, shopkeeper
Wilson Benjamin, shoemaker

Farmers & Graziers.

Aldwinckle Bartholomew
Horspool, John
Linnell Wm. Arthingworth Lodge
Siddons George
Smalley William
Wilson Jph. (& vict. Bull's Head)
Yeomans Thomas

BARFORD PARISH.

Barford, formerly an extra parochial district, was constituted an independent parish in 1859. It contains only 396 acres of land, and 17 inhabitants in 1871. The soil is loamy, subsoil ironstone. Richard Booth, Esq. (lord of the manor), and William Capel Clarke Thornhill, Esq., are the principal owners. The Glendon "Iron Ore Company" (Messrs Fisher and Checkland), have works here, and employ about 100 hands. The rateable value of the land and property of the parish is £2651; and the gross estimated rental £2977. It is situate about three quarters of a mile from Glendon. There is only one farm house in the parish, viz. Barford Lodge, now occupied by Mr William Franklin.

Letters are received through the Kettering Post-Office.

BOWDEN (LITTLE) PARISH.

This parish, which includes the hamlet of Little Oxendon, is bounded on the E. by Dingley, on the W. and S. by East Farndon, and on the N. by the river Welland, which separates it from Leicestershire. It contains, with its hamlet, 1866 acres. Its population in 1801 was 327; in 1831, 346; in 1841, 439; in 1851, 200; in 1861, 486; and in 1871, 552 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £6316, 6s; and the gross estimated rental £7319, 10s. The greater part of the parish is grazing land, of excellent quality, and the arable land produces fine crops of wheat and beans. Henry Vere Forester Hungerford, Esq., is the lord of the manor, and the principal proprietors are T. B. Saunt, Esq., Messrs William West, Richard Walker, and the Rev. George Barlow.

Manor.—The Earl of Morton held 2 hides and 1½ virgate here, at the time of the Domesday survey. There was a mill of the annual rent of 16d., and

8 acres of meadow, and the whole was valued at 30s. In the reign of Henry II. this estate was in the hands of Robert Fitz-Hugh, who held it of the fee of Berkhamstede. David, king of Scotland, held 1 hide and 1½ virgate here, at the same time; and between the successors and descendants of these possessors, the lordship was henceforth divided. One manor was afterwards in the hands of the family of Latimer, from which it passed to the Griffins, who held it for several generations; and the other, in the reign of Edward IV., was in the possession of John Beaumont, and descended to his posterity. The manor of Little Bowden subsequently came into the hands of Thomas Halford, gentleman, who died in 1684, and the widow of whose son sold it to the Griffin family. "The lands here are divided amongst several freeholders," says Bridges, "but the lord of the manor hath the privilege enjoyed by his predecessors of keeping a bull and brawn upon the river as far as Stamford."

The Village of Little Bowden, or Bowden Parva, so called to distinguish it from Great Bowden (a neighbouring village in Leicestershire), is seated in the valley of the river Welland, and the cottages are scattered so as to divide it. It is distant 1 mile S.W. of Market Harborough, and 11 N.W. of Kettering. The parish consists of the consolidated parishes of St Mary and St Nicholas.

The Church of St Nicholas, that in which divine service is performed, is in the Early English style, and consists of a nave and north aisle, south porch and chancel, and a wooden tower in which are three bells. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £15, 4s. 2d., and now worth about £370 per annum. The Rev. Thomas Wotton Barlow, M.A., is the patron, and the Rev. Thomas W. Barlow, M.A., junior, is the present rector. The tithes, the property of the dean and chapter of Oxford, were commuted in 1779 for 146 acres of land.

The Church of St Mary's, in Arden, is in the county of Leicester, but its endowment, 85 acres of land, inappropriate to Christ Church, Oxford, is in this parish. No service, except the burial service, is performed in it.

The Wesleyan Chapel is a brick building with Sunday school attached, erected here in 1871.

The Police Station, a substantial brick building with stone dressings, was erected in 1863. It has accommodation for an inspector, two constables, and three cells for prisoners, together with a room for magisterial purposes, and a witness room. The magistrates meet once a fortnight; George Ashby Esq., is the chairman.

The most important Charity in the parish is the Town Estate, consisting of about 20 acres of land and 14 cottages, half the rents and profits of which are expended in apprenticing poor children, and the other half in providing fuel, medical relief, &c., for the poor not receiving parochial relief. The Rev. Robert Atkins, who was minister of this parish, left a piece of land, the rent from which, 25s., together with 16s. left by John Parsons, and 15s. left by Mr Conyers of Blaston, is given away at Christmas in bread to the poor.

Little Oxenden is a hamlet in this parish, 2 miles S.W. of Market Harborough, containing 1 farm of 740 acres, the property of Thomas Tertius Paget, Esq. There is a modus of 4s. per annum upon this division of the parish. Here was formerly a chapel, built about the year 1398.

Barber Henry Herbert, vict.

Greyhound

Barnes Mrs Ann

Basset Geo. bldr. & contrctr.

Biddles & Watson, corn factors

Biddles Jacob, corn & coal mercht.

(West, Biddles, & Co).

Bird John, baker & grazier

Brake Mr John

Butcher Wm. Hy. coml. trvlr.

Cave Mrs Elizabeth

Eady Jph. Chamberlain, brewer,
&c. (Nunneley & Eady)

Emery George, draper

Everard Geo. mgr. steam mills

Falkner Edw. farmer & grazier

Fisher Edward, land agent

Flavell Mrs Catherine

Foster Henry, auctioneer, wine and spirit merchant

Garfield William, grazier

Gilbert William, solicitor

(Wartuaby & Gilbert)

Guest Miss Sarah, shopkeeper

Harris George, vict. Cherry Tree

Hefford Mrs Mary, carpenter

Iliff Henry, higgler

Jerwood Rev. Thomas Fredk.

curate in charge

Lester Jno. clk. to bd. of grdn.

Lester Jno. jun. sec. to gas coy.

Macklin Jas. inland revn. officer

Mee Mrs Mary

Nunneley & Eady, brewers,

maltsters, and spirit merchts.

Nunneley John Alex. grocer

&c. (Nunneley & Ashton)

Nunneley Mrs Sarah

Pigott Robt. Jackson, B.A. second master, grammar sch.	Symington Wm. & Co. coffee roasters, &c.	Watson John, corn factor
Reid Mr Thomas	Symington Sam. comml. trvlr.	West Jno. coal mercht. (West, Biddles, & Co.) Manor House
Roughton Jas. commrl. trvlr.	Symington Sam. jun. (Wm. & Co.)	West Wm. & Son (Wm. jun.), timber merchts. & yeomen
Smith Mr William	Tebbutt James, grazier	White John, grazier
Smith William, jun. assistant- overseer and clerk	Tebbutt Wm. coal merchant	White Phil. grazier, The Grange
Spencer Daniel, wheelwright	Toller Mrs Mary	Wood James, B.A. head master
Stanyon Mrs. Eliz. grazier	Tye Wm. Clarke, insper. polioe	Market Harboro. Grammar School, Bowden House
	Watson James Edward, clerk

BRAYBROOK PARISH

Is bounded by Desborough on the east, Dingley and Brampton on the north, Oxenden on the west, and Arthingworth on the south. It contains 2787 acres of the rateable value of £6940; the gross estimated rental £8177. The population in 1801 was 378; in 1831, 366; in 1841, 420; in 1851, 420; in 1861, 458; and in 1871, 365 souls. The soil is clayey; and the principal proprietors are the Rev. John Marriott (the lord of the manor), E. C. Rudge, Esq., Lord Overstone, Mrs Chater, Mr Nathaniel Gurney, H. V. F. Hungerford, Esq., H. C. Wise, Esq., and the Rev. J. W. Field, the rector. Eastward of the town stood an ancient castle, built, according to Camden, by Robert de Braybroc, in the reign of King John; it stood in a low situation, and was encompassed with a double ditch.

Manor.—Robert de Veci had 1 hide, Hugh half a hide of Robert de Buci; the abbey of Grestein, in Normandy, 2 hides; Chetelbert 1 hide and 1 virgate, of the Countess Judith; and St Edmund's Bury Abbey half a virgate, at the general survey; the 2 hides which were held of the abbey of Grestein passed afterwards to the Knights Hospitallers of St John of Jerusalem, who possessed them in the reign of Henry II., at the same time Wydo Cook had 1 hide, Peverel a third part of a hide, Ivo 2 hides and 2 virgates of Peverel's land, with half a virgate of the fee of St Edmund. At an early period the family of de Braybrooke had large possessions here, which passed to the Latimers. In the seventh of Edward IV. (1467), Edward Latimer settled the castle and manors of Braybrook on himself and his wife, and dying without issue in the twelfth of the same reign, this estate descended to John Griffyn, grandson of his sister, wife to Sir Thomas Griffyn; this castle and estate continued with the Griffyns for many generations. Sir John Griffyn, K.B., Lord Howard of Walden, was created Lord Braybrook on the 5th of September 1788; he was a descendant of Edward, Lord Griffin, of Braybrook, which title became extinct in 1742. The castle above-mentioned was the principal seat of this family. The abbey of Pipwell had large possessions here, which afterwards came to the Griffins.

The Village of Braybrook is seated in a valley about 3 miles S.E. of Market Harborough, 8 from Kettering, and 83 from London.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is a fine edifice, partly in the Early English and partly in the Decorated style. It consists of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, south chantry and chapel, vestry and south porch, and a square tower surmounted by a spire and containing four bells. There is in the chapel a fine monument to Sir Nicholas Griffin, ob. 1509, and a full-sized effigy of a cross-legged knight in a recumbent position, with the feet resting on a dog, and bearing a shield on the left arm. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £23, 6s. 10d., but now worth £600 per annum; the Rev. James William Field, M.A., is both patron and incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1778. Bridges tells us that it was customary here to strew the church with straw for three weeks at St Thomas's day; and for the rector to give 90 eggs, and the clerk 30 eggs, on Good Friday, to the parishioners. Here was formerly a chapel on the green, called the Chapel of Westhall, or of the Blessed Virgin, in which was a chantry founded and endowed by Peter de Rales. The Rectory House, a large substantial building, has been much improved by the present and late rector. Here is a Baptist Chapel, rebuilt in 1815; and a National School, endowed with £18 per annum, arising from £110 left by the parties named in the table, and £6, 12s. arising from £220 consols (stock) left by the Rev. John Field in 1864.

Worthy.—Robert de Braybrooke, Bishop of London in 1381, and afterwards for six months Lord Chancellor of England, was born in this village. He died in 1404, was buried in St Paul's Cathedral, and on pulling down the stonework after the fire in 1666, his body was found whole and incorrupt.

Letters arrive through Market Harborough, which is the nearest Money-Order Office.

Atkins Wm. carptr. & wheelwt.
Bindley Wm. carptr. & wheelwt.
Craft William, shoemaker
Everett Mrs Sarah
Field Rev. Jas. Wm. M.A. rector
Fowler Mr Thomas
Holloway William, auctioneer
Kendall Francis Burdett, shoemaker and vict. Sun
Moss Matthew, baker

Pain Robert, basketmaker
Phillips Alfred, higgler
Simpkins George, shopkeeper
Simpkins Robert, parish clerk
Tebbutt John, vict. Swan.

Farmers and Graziers.

Cooper George
Harding David
Kendall James

Kilborn Robert
Loake John
Marriott John, jun.
Norman Charles William
Payne Thomas, h. 22 Langham
place, Northampton
Ringrose George
Turner William Lovett, jun.
Underwood Joseph
Underwood Samuel

CLIPSTON PARISH.

Clipston is bounded on the north by Farndon and Marston Trussell, on the west by Naseby and Hazlebeech, and on the south and east by Kelmarsh. It contains 2844 acres; its population in 1801 was 731; in 1831, 807; in 1841, 859; in 1851, 500; in 1861, 877; and in 1871, 882 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £5082, 11s. 6d., and the gross estimated rental £5724, 14s. The soil is chiefly clay, with an admixture of gravel, and the principal proprietors are Thomas Caldecott, Esq. (the lord of the manor), Sir Robert Wilmot Horton, Bart., Lord Overstone, William H. Harrison, Esq., William Wartnaby, Esq., John R. Wartnaby, Esq., and Messrs David M. Brown and Thomas Goodill.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, this lordship was divided amongst several possessors. Wachelin held half a hide and three parts of a virgate of the Bishop of Constance; the convent of St Edmund's Bury had 2½ virgates, and in a part of the lordship, then called Calme, but since Comb, half a hide of the soke. Besides these estates, William Peverel held 3½ hides in Clipstone; and there was 1½ virgate pertaining to the manor of Rothwell. In the reign of Henry II. there were 3½ hides of the fee of Peverel, half a hide and three small virgates of the fee of David, King of Scotland, in the hands of Adam de Clipston; five small virgates of the socage of Geytington; ten small virgates of the fee of St Edmund; and one small virgate of the socage of Rowell. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Roger Pedwardyne was lord of Clipston, and from him the manor descended to his posterity. The next possessor of this manor was James Deens, Esq., who died seized of it in the twelfth of Henry VII. (1469), and it was afterwards divided amongst several possessors. In the first of Queen Elizabeth (1558), Sir Thomas Tresham, late lord prior of the hospital of St John of Jerusalem, died seized of two parts of the manor of Clipston, which were held of Lord Vaux, as of his manor of Harrowden. John Tresham, his grandson, was his successor. The other lands passed through numerous possessors, and about a century since, Sir Justinian Isham was lord of Clipston manor. It was afterwards in possession of the Walkins family, from which it passed by purchase to present possessor.

The Village of Clipston is large and respectable, situate about 4½ miles S.S.W. of Market Harborough, 14 miles north from Northampton, and 86 from London.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient edifice in the Early English style, consisting of a nave, side aisles, south porch, chancel, tower, and spire, containing five bells. A church existed here in the eleventh century, of which there remains only one Norman doorway in the south wall. The present edifice was entirely rebuilt in the middle of the thirteenth century, when it consisted of nave, chancel, two narrow aisles and western tower; the arcades, north aisle tower, and font are of this date. The south aisle was enlarged in the fourteenth century. A chantry, chapel, and clerestory windows were built in the fifteenth century, and the chancel was rebuilt, the church re-roofed, and a spire added at a later date. It was again repaired in 1847, and within the last four years nearly £1000 more have been expended in rebuilding the tower and spire, &c., and further restorations are contemplated, at an additional cost of £1000. The church contains some fine monuments to the Buswell family. The living is a rectory in three portions, in the deanery of Rothwell; two of the portions are valued in the king's books at £11, 12s. 8d., and the third at £6; it is now worth about £800 per annum; the Master and Fellows of Christ's College, Cambridge, are the patrons, and the Rev. Edmund Thompson, M.A., is the incumbent. Allotments in lieu of tithes were set out at the enclosure in 1777; the land apportioned to the living is free from church rates, the rector repairing and keeping the chancel at his own expense. Within this church was a chantry in honour of the Blessed Virgin, founded and endowed by Agnes, daughter of Adam de Clapston.

The Baptist Chapel was rebuilt in 1803 and enlarged in 1864, when a handsome frontage was added, and in 1870 the burial ground was enlarged. The chapel will seat about 800 hearers. Rev. John Nickalls is the minister.

A Free Grammar School and an Hospital were founded here in 1667, by Sir George Buswell. The school is open for the admission, free of charge, of the children of six parishes—viz., Clipston, Kelmarsh, Oxendon Great, Marston-Trussell, Hazlebeech, and East Farndon. The schoolmaster, according to the will of the donor, is to be a graduate in one of the universities, and of the Church of England; and the children are to be instructed to read and write, and in the grammar and Latin tongue when capable, and catechised and instructed in the doctrines of the Church of England, and the common prayer is to be read morning and evening in the school. The scholars receive a sound commercial education, together with Latin if required. The Hospital or almshouses attached to the foundation for the reception of twelve poor aged persons, each of whom receives 6s. a week and a suit of clothes annually, together with firing and a portion of garden ground. If fit objects cannot be found in Clipston, they are eligible from any of the other five parishes. The Rev. William Frederick Boyd, M.A., is master of the school and chaplain. The endowment consists of about 120 acres of land at Lilbourne and 70 acres at Hazlebeech, which now let for about £350 per annum, £150 of which is applied to the purposes of the school; and £688, 13s. 4d. three per cent consolidated annuities, which stock was purchased with a legacy of £200, given by Mrs. Fras. Horton, in 1781; £100 bequeathed by Eusebius Horton, the late patron, and dividends accruing from the former legacy, to which stock has lately been added from a legacy of £100, given by the late Lady Ann Beatrix Wilmot-Horton. The owner of the Clipston and Newbold estate, formerly possessed by the founder of this charity, is the patron, and appoints the masters upon the nomination of the trustees. Sir Robert Wilmot Horton, Bart., is the present patron. Besides building the school and hospital, the founder erected a gallery in the church for the twelve almshouses.

A Girls' and Infants' School, in connection with the church, was built in 1862, at a cost of £300. It is supported by subscription, government grant, and school pence. The Baptists also have a school here.

Clipston House, a substantial and commodious building, near the centre of the village, is the property of Henry Harrison, Esq., and residence of John Bass Hanbury, Esq.

NEWBOLD, or NOBOLD, is a hamlet and manor in this parish, adjoining the west end of Clipston. About half a mile westward is old Newbold, where, according to probable tradition, stood anciently a town and church. Every indication of a destroyed village is here, and foundations, hearthstones, &c., have been frequently turned up; and part of the manor house is said to have been built out of the ruins of the church. In the reign of Philip and Mary, this manor was in the possession of the family of Buswell, one of which, Sir George Buswell, founded the grammar school and hospital at Clipston. From the Buswells it passed to the Hortons.

Post, Money-Order, Savings' Bank, and Telegraph Office, at Mrs Ann Wilford's. Letters arrive via Northampton at 7.30 A.M., and are despatched at 5.29 P.M.

Asher William, higgler
 Bollard William, tailor & draper, and agent for Scottish Union
 Fire and Life Office
 Boyd Rev. Wm. Frederick,
 M.A. chaplain of the hospital
 Brown Matthew, baker & grocer
 Bull Mrs Mary Eleanor
 Burditt Mr John
 Buswell Alfred, shoemaker
 Buswell Jas. plumber, painter, glazier, & vict. Old Red Lion
 Buswell Mr Nath. Rose Villa
 Buswell Mrs Char. miller & baker
 Carvell John, grocer & draper
 Clarke William, coaldealer
 Co-operative Stores, John Jarman, manager
 Foster Thomas, farm bailiff
 Fox Mrs Elizth. vict. Bull's Head
 Fox George, saddler

Freestone William, wheelwright
 Hanbury John Bass, Esq. Clip-ston House
 Hunt Charles, butcher
 Lillie Samuel, tailor
 Newcomb John, newsagent
 Newcomb Thomas, shoemaker
 Nickalls Rev. John (Baptist)
 Palmer Charles, butcher
 Palmer Mr John
 Patrick Edw. baker & beer retail.
 Perkins William, blacksmith
 Randall Arthur, blacksmith
 Sharman Arthur, painter,
 plumber, and glazier
 Smeeton Benjamin, grocer and seedaman, ale & porter mercht.
 Smith Samuel, baker
 Thompson Rev. Edmund, M.A.
 rector
 Wartnaby John R. Esq.

White James, cattle salesman
 Wilford Edm. boot & shoemkr.
 Wilford Job, boot & shoemkr.

Farmers and Graziers.

(Marked * are Graziers only.)

Bassett Robert E.
 Brown Dav. Matthew (yeoman)
 Brown David
 *Burnham Job
 *Buswell Samuel
 *Buswell William
 *Carnell Job
 Foster John, Manor House
 Foster Joseph, Clipston Grange
 *Green Henry
 Haddon Thomas Joseph
 Humphrey Jph. Hornhill House
 Oldacre Matthew Lancelot
 Oldacre Matthew

Carrier.—William Strinson, to Northampton on Wednesday and Saturday; to Market Harborough on Tuesday.

DESBOROUGH PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Brampton and Stoke Albany on the north; Braybrook, Harrington, and Pipwell on the east; and the Ise or Ise-brooke, which divides it from Rothwell, on the south. The Leicester and London (Midland) Railway runs through the parish, and has a station close to the village. It contains 2300 acres; its population in 1801 was 831; in 1831, 988; in 1841, 1388; in 1851, 1350; in 1861, 1428; and in 1871, 1436 souls, including 163 persons attending Rothwell fair. The rateable value of the parish is £7069; its gross estimated rental £8256. The soil is various, but generally very productive, and the principal proprietors are William C. Clarke Thornhill, Esq. (the lord of the manor), H. C. Wise, Esq., and D. W. H. Hambrough, Esq.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Robert de Toden, to whom Hugh was under-tenant, held half a hide of the crown, in Deisburg; Ambrose held 1 hide and 1 virgate of William Peverell; and Alan 1 virgate of the Earl of Morton, at the same time; and the whole, including a mill of the yearly rent of 2s., was valued at 65s. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315) the prior of the hospital of St John of Jerusalem—Burdon, Nicholas Latymer, and John de Hotot, were lords of Desborough. The principal estates here continued for many generations in the families of Burdon and Latimer, and afterwards passed through the Holts to the family of Pulton. In the second of Edward VI. (1548) Giles Pulton died seized of a manor, which he held of Francis Pigot, Esq., as of his manor of Harrington. He also held the manor called Burdon's manor, of the Honor of Peverel, and several other possessions here. In Bridges' time, about a century since, the manor, with the greatest part of the lordship, was still in the Pulton family, who had inherited their estate here fourteen descents successively. It passed by marriage to the present owner in 1855.

The Village of Desborough was formerly a considerable place for the manufacture of silk plush for hats, usually employing about 300 hands, but now the sound of the loom has given place to the sound of the sewing machine. The manufacture of shoes and stays afford employment to a considerable number of the inhabitants, and a large number of hands are employed in "getting" iron ore which has been found here. The village is seated on an eminence, about 6 miles N.W. of Kettering, 5 S. from Market-Harborough, and 81 from London.

The Church, dedicated to St Giles, is cruciform, in the Early English style, and consists of a nave, side aisles, north and south porches, north and south transepts, chancel, and tower surmounted by a spire and containing five bells. Part of the spire was struck down by lightning on the 9th of August 1843, but was soon restored by the parishioners. It was struck by lightning again in the summer of 1873. It is in contemplation to erect a lightning conductor, which is much needed. It having become dilapidated, it is now undergoing restoration from a design by Mr Law of Northampton. The chancel has been partially restored at the expense of W. C. Clarke Thornhill, Esq., and the body of the church by subscriptions and donations. The cost will be about £1500. A fine belfry arch has been brought to view by the removal of an unsightly gallery, and a handsome new font of Caen stone of a quadrilateral form, having on its sides representations in alabaster of the four Evangelists, has been placed in the church. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £8, returned at £113, 16s., but the gross income is £156 per annum. Wm. C. Clarke Thornhill, Esq., is the patron, and the Rev. Wm. Wilson, B.A., is the incumbent. The Vicarage House, a substantial stone building, is pleasantly situated near the church.

A National School, for both sexes, was erected in the village in 1841; it is supported by subscription, Government grant, and the children's pence.

The Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, and Baptists have neat chapels here; the former was erected in 1844, and the two latter in 1855.

In addition to the Charities, (for which see the table prefixed to this hundred), Mrs Biggs, of this parish, left the sum of £238, 16s. 8d. to the church and Sunday-school, which, in 1843, was invested in the funds.

Post-Office.—Thomas Marlow, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Market-Harborough at 9 A.M. and 5.25 P.M., and are despatched at 9.35 A.M. and 6 P.M.

Arthur Lieut.-Colonel Thomas,
Manor House

Wilson Rev. Wm. B.A. vicar
Baguley Miss Dorothy, school-mistress

Ball Wm. & Son (William, jun.)
iron ore masters, ho. Rothwell

Blunsom —, baker

Dankins Joseph, builder

Deacon John, carptr. & sexton
Desborough Iron Ore Co. John

Hickman, manager

Foster John, tailor

Gadsby Thomas, station-master

Hickman Mr John

Humfrey Rich. mltstr. & grnr.

Jones Daniel, carpenter

Kilborn Mr Joseph

Kilborn Mrs Mary Ann, school

Morris Francis, druggist

Symington R. & W. H. & Co.

stay manufacturers, and at

Market Harborough

Thompson Mr Frederick

Turner Laurence Lovett, cattle

dealer

Weech Robt. Wm. Henry, Esq.

Wells James, iron ore master,

ho. Northampton

Blacksmiths.

Ashby Robert

Yeoman Joseph

Boot and Shoemakers.

*Marked * are Manufacturers.*

*Evans Thomas, ho. Leicester,

John Burditt, manager

Page George

*Riley Benjamin

*Snow & Bennett, John Goode, manager

Butchers.

Fitzhugh Bros. (John Thomas, & Clarke)

Kilborn Herbert

Tailby George

Tailby William

Tailby William, jun.

Coal Merchants.

Aprice John, railway station

West Biddles & Co. rly. statn.

Corn Millers.

Bland Thomas Hardwick, ho.

Dingley Grange

Paine James

Farmers and Graziers.

Cheney Mrs Mary Ann

Crick Joseph

Curtis Thomas, The Grange

Kilborn Samuel

Liner Charles

Mitchell Richard

Sumner Mrs Elizabeth Ann

Tailby Wm. (and cattle dealer)

Turner Wm. Lovett (grazier)

Grocers, &c.

*Marked * are Drapers also.*

*Aaher Joseph

Coe Nathaniel

*Co-operative stores, John

Robinson, manager

Crick William

Dawkins John Reynolds

Ginns John (and baker)

Marlow Thos. post-office

Nursey Benjamin

Page James

Panter Mrs Ann

Wilford Mrs Ann

*Yeomans James

Inns and Taverns.

Angel, John Thos. Fitzhugh

George, Wm. Ward Jesson

King's Arms, Joseph Crick

New Inn, Thomas Bosworth

Swan, Mrs Rebecca Tailby

Talbot, Robert Foster

DRAUGHTON PARISH

Is bounded by Faxton on the east, Harrington on the north, Maidwell on the west, and Lamport on the south. It contains 1500 acres, of the rateable value of £2302; the gross estimated rental is £2686. The population in 1801 was 179; in 1831, 176; in 1841, 208; in 1851, 220; in 1861, 190; and in 1871, 179 souls. The soil is various, and belongs principally to Henry Vere Forester Hungerford, Esq., who is also the lord of the manor. This lordship is well supplied with springs, one of which, called Blackwell Spring, forms a rivulet which flows into the Nene, and separates the parishes of Draughton and Maidwell. The Northampton and Market Harborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway passes through a part of the parish.

Manor.—The king had 1 hide and half a virgate in Dractone; and Malno or Mainfelin had 1 virgate. In the reign of Henry II. there was 1 hide and 1 virgate of the fee of Rowell; 1 virgate of the fee of Menfelin de Wolfington; and half a hide of the fee of David, King of Scotland. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Simon Mallore was lord of Draughton. The principal estate here subsequently came into the possession of the family of Seyton, from which it passed in the reign of Henry VIII., to John Haslewood, Esq., who levied a fine of it in 1526. From the Haslewoods it passed in marriage to Lord Hatton, who sold it to James Lord Russell, whose relict married Sir Henry Houghton, for her second husband, and from whom it passed through intermediate possessors to the present proprietor.

The Village of Draughton, situate on rising ground, is about 8 miles south by west of Kettering, 11 north-west from Wellingborough, 10 north from Northampton, 9 south from Market Harborough, 76 from London, and about 1 mile from the Lamport Station.

The Church, dedicated to St Catherine, is a neat edifice, consisting of a nave, side-aisles, south porch, chancel, and tower, in which are five bells. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £12, 2s. 11d., but now worth about £370 per annum. It was formerly annexed to Maidwell parish, from which it was separated in 1866. Henry Vere Forester Hungerford, Esq., is the patron, and the Rev. Thomas Murray Cookesley, M.A., is the incumbent.

The Independents have a small chapel here, and the National School, in the village, was erected in 1841 by George Holdich, Esq. It is supported by the lord of the manor, the rector, the farmers of the parish, and the children's pence.

Charity.—The sum of £1, 10s. per annum, the interest of £50 left in 1826 by Mrs Mary Chapman, is distributed in bread to the poor, on the first Sunday in Advent, and £1, 10s. per annum, the interest of £50 left by the Rev. T. Holdich in 1866, is distributed in coal to the poor at Christmas.

Letters are received here via Northampton. The nearest Money-Order Office is Brixworth.

Cookealey Rev. Thos. Murray, M.A. rector	Farmers and Graziers. Hewit Charles	Jethro Jno. Wiggins, Draughton Grange
Button Mrs Harriet, schoolmrs.	Horspool George	Wiggins William

FARNDON EAST PARISH

Is bounded by Oxenden Great on the east; Little Bowden and the river Welland, which divides it from Leicestershire, on the north; Marston Trussell on the west; and Clipston on the south. It contains 1485 acres, of the rateable value of £3325; the gross estimated rental is £3726. The population in 1801 was 279; in 1831, 250; in 1841, 250; in 1851, 250; in 1861, 242; and in 1871, 221 souls. The soil is various, and Henry Vere Forester Hungerford, Esq. (the lord of the manor), Hugh Stratford Stratford, Esq., Thomas T. Paget, Esq., the trustees of Dr Orton, the Rector, Thomas Y. Lee, Esq., John Noble, Esq., the trustees of Richard Herbert, Esq., and David Matthew Brown, Esq., are the principal proprietors. Here is a mineral well, called Caldwell spring, and there is a copious spring in Levitt's close, which supplies the inhabitants with excellent water.

Manor.—The Abbot of St Edmund's Bury held half a hide; the Earl of Morton, $3\frac{1}{2}$ virgates; the Countess Judith, 1 virgate; and William, one of the King's thanes, $3\frac{1}{2}$ virgates, at the general survey. In the reign of Henry II., Farndon lordship contained 1 hide of the fee of Huntingdon, and $3\frac{1}{2}$ virgates of the fee of St Edmund, in the hands of Robert Fitz-Hugh. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Ralph de Stanlowe was lord of the manor; in the eleventh of the same reign John Longeville levied a fine of it, and with his descendants it continued till the reign of James I. when it passed to the Craddocks. A little more than a century since, Mr John Griffith was lord of it, and from him it descended, through intermediate possessors, to the present proprietor.

The Village of East Farndon is distant about 2 miles S.W. of Market Harborough, 13 N.W. from Kettering, and $8\frac{1}{2}$ from London.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, consists of a nave, south aisle, and porch, chancel, and tower, in which are four bells. A gallery at the west end was removed in 1872, and the west arch thrown open. In the chancel are triple sedilia and a piscina in good preservation. In the north wall of the chancel are brass tablets to the memory of the Rev. Walter Saunders, rector of this parish for the long period of 57 years, who died in 1790, aged 94; and to George Vincent, who died in May 1707, aged 82 years. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £13, 1s. 0½d., but now worth £600 per annum. The patronage is vested in the president and fellows of St John's College, Oxford, and the Rev. Alfred Wm. Wilson, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land in 1780. The Rectory House, a good commodious residence, is pleasantly situated.

Farndon Hall is a handsome building, commanding a good eastern prospect. It belongs to the trustees of the late Rd. Herbert, Esq., and is occupied by Mrs S. H. Fagan.

Here is a Parochial School, supported by subscription. The children of this parish have the privilege of attending the free school at Clipston.

Charities.—In 1672 Miss Ann Brown left £100, the interest of which, £3, is applied to apprenticing children belonging to the parish. For the other charities, see table prefixed to this hundred.

In the field adjoining the Hall are somewhat extensive earthworks. They were examined a few years ago by Matthew H. Bloxam, Esq. of Rugby, who has come to the conclusion that they are the remains of an ancient British oppidum or frontier fortress either of the Dobuni or Cateuchlani—two of the ancient tribes of Britain, and that they were in connection with other ancient British works, viz.—those within which the Castle of Rockingham stands, and others to the westward at Sibbertoft. In a paper read some years ago by Mr Bloxam at the Philosophical Institute at Leicester, after adverting to the revolt of the Icenii, A.D. 50–51, he observed:—"It is possible that after the first revolt of the Icenii the Roman camp at Guilsborough, in Northamptonshire, was formed, cutting off the connection between Borough Hill, near Daventry, and the British posts at East Farndon and Sibbertoft, which, with the British fortress encircling Rockingham Castle, I imagine to have been frontier fortresses of the Dobuni south of the river Welland."

Letters are received here through Market Harborough, which is the nearest Money-Order Office.

Adkins Henry, bricklayer
Ashley Thomas, gardener
Berridge Joseph, farm bailiff,
The Grange
Eagle George, baker
Fagan Mrs S. H. Farndon Hall
Goodill Mr Thomas
Gregory Mrs Mary Elizabeth
Norman Miss, schoolmistress
Palmer John, bricklayer
Pollard John, shoemaker

Russell George, carpenter and vict. Three Horse Shoes
Scott Henry, shoemaker
Scott Mrs Rebekah, shopkeeper
Smith Charles, miller & baker
West Thomas, shopkeeper
Whiteman William Edward,
maltster and grazier
Wilford Mrs Mary
Wilson Rev. Alfred Wm. M.A.
rector

Farmers and Graziers.

Bainbrigg Henry Boyle
Bryan Edward
Dainty Isaac
Humphrey Daniel
Lee Frederick
Lee George
Tirrell John
Warden Jno. Rich. (& vict. Bell)
West Richard, Farrer House

GLENDON PARISH.

This parish lies north of Thorpe Malsor, and joins Rothwell on the west. It contains 769a. 2r. Its population in 1801^{*} was 48; in 1831, 44; in 1841, 44; in 1851, 38; in 1861, 63; and in 1871, 33 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £1763; and the gross estimated rental £2015. The soil varies from a red loam to a black clay, and Richard Booth, Esq., is lord of the manor and the principal proprietor.

Manor.—Half a hide and a third part of a hide in Clendone pertaining to the manor of Rothwell were in the hands of the crown; and the abbey of Grestein, in Normandy, held a similar quantity here at the general survey. This manor was afterwards in the possession of the family of de Clendon. In the fourth of Henry IV. (1402), Andrew de Newbottle was seized of it; and in the reign of Henry VIII. it was in the possession of Edward Griffin, Esq., the attorney-general. In the reign of Edward VI., the manor of Glendon was conveyed by Edward and Elizabeth Griffin to Robert Lane, Esq., in exchange for other lands, and with the family of Lane it continued for several generations.

There is neither village or church in this parish, which is situate about 3 miles N.N.W. of Kettering. It contains only a few scattered houses.

The Church or Chapel, which stood here in Bridges' time, was dedicated to St Helen, and consisted of a body and chancel. The living is a rectory, rated in the king's books at £8, and now worth £35, in the patronage of Richard Booth, Esq., and incumbency of the Rev. Richard Morton, M.A., of Rothwell.

Glendon Hall, the seat of Richard Booth, Esq., is a fine mansion, situate rather in low ground about 3 miles N.N.W. of Kettering. It contains several family portraits, and a full length one of Katherine Parr, queen of Henry VIII., by Holbein.

Letters are received here through the Kettering Post-office.

The principal inhabitants are—Richard Booth, Esq., Glendall Hall; Charles Richards, farmer and grazer, The Lodge; and Charles Irvens Richards, farmer and grazier, Upper Lodge.

HARRINGTON PARISH.

Harrington, otherwise Hetherington, is bounded by Rothwell on the east, Arthingworth on the north, and Kelmarsh and Orton on the west and south. It contains 2502 acres, of the rateable value of £4223; and the gross estimated rental is £4360. The population of the parish in 1801 was 140; in 1831, 191; in 1841, 238; in 1851, 190; in 1861, 222, and in 1871, 215 souls. R. Naylor, Esq., is lord of the manor and principal owner. The soil, for the most part, is a rich red loam; much of the pasture land is of the most excellent description, and considerable quantities of cattle are fed for the London markets. In some few parts the surface is a stiff retentive clay. There are abundant quarries of limestone, beneath which beds of sand run to a great depth.

Manor.—Mention is made of this lordship in Domesday book, from which it appears that in Edward the Confessor's time it was valued at 30s. per annum; that at the period of the Conqueror's survey it was rated at £6 annually; and that it was then in the possession partly of Roger Montgomery, earl of Shrewsbury, father-in-law of Robert, earl of Morton, half-brother to the Conqueror, and partly of Grestein abbey, a Norman monastery. In Henry II.'s time, Fitz-Alured was a principal proprietor, and about the year 1209, John Montacute, or Montagu, was seized of a considerable estate in this parish. At his death, in 1231, he bequeathed his property here to the military order of St John of Jerusalem, better known in later times as the order of Malta. The family of Saunders probably owned property here at a very early period. They were certainly settled here in the beginning of the fifteenth century, and their estate, augmented in extent by every successive proprietor, seems to have descended in regular order from father to son, until the year 1602, when, on the failure of the male line of the Saunders family, it was inherited by Sir John Stanhope, as representative of one of the female branches. Sir John was created a peer by James I., by the title of Lord Stanhope, of Harrington. He was succeeded, in 1620, by his only son, Charles, Lord Stanhope, at whose death, in 1665, the title became extinct, but the mansion and estate of Harrington fell to his eldest sister Elizabeth, who had married Sir Lionel Tollemache, Bart., of Helmingham, in the county of Suffolk. From that time the estate has continued in the hands of the Tollemaches (who subsequently became earls of Dysart) until the present day. On the death of Louisa, Countess of Dysart, in her own right, in 1840, it came, under the will of Earl Wilbraham, who died in 1821, into the possession of her youngest son, the Hon. Charles Tollemache. It was sold in 1864 by John Tollemache, Esq., the then proprietor, to Richard Christopher Naylor, Esq. of Kelmarsh Hall, who is the present owner.

Antiquities.—The site of the ancient mansion and gardens, belonging successively to the families of Saunders, of Stanhope, and of Tollemache, is evidently indicated by the remains of terraces and avenues of trees, in a meadow to the north of the village, which is now known by the name of the Falls. Another meadow of 60 acres adjoining is still designated the Park. No trace of any building, however, is now in existence. It had long ceased to be the residence of any member of the Tollemache family, and was pulled down by Lionel, Earl of Dysart, in 1745.

On the north side, separated from Harrington by the Ise brook, which flows through the lordship in an easterly direction to the Nene, lies the hamlet of Newbottle, containing at present only one farm-house; and at the north-east corner of Newbottle is Loatland wood, comprising about 59 acres. On the east side is the hamlet of Thorpe Underwood.

The Village of Harrington, which is small, stands on the brow of a hill, near the centre of the parish, and is distant 7 miles N. by W. from Kettering, 7 from Market Harborough, 12 from Northampton, and 78 from London. It is built on a limestone rock, which abounds with springs of excellent water.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter and St Paul, stands about a quarter of a mile N.E. of the village. It is in the Early English style, and consists of a nave and side aisles, north and south transepts, chancel, south porch, and a tower, which adjoins the south transept. The nave is supported by four pairs of clustered columns, connected by pointed arches. The chancel is separated from the nave by a carved oak screen, which exhibits remains of considerable elegance, though much mutilated by age. The staircase which led to the roof loft still remains. The present tower was built in 1809, by Wilbraham, Earl of Dysart, on the site of the former one, which fell down in the year 1802. At the same time he presented to the church a peal of six bells. In 1827 the old leaded roof of the church, being much decayed, was removed, and the present slated roof substituted. In 1840 a new organ was placed in the church; and in 1859 it was fitted up with open sittings, and floored with ornamental tiles, at a cost of £350. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £15, 9s. 7d. The tithes were commuted, in 1839, for a rent-charge of £530, and there are 18 acres of glebe land. The rector is the Hon. and Rev. Hugh Fras. Tollemache, B.A. Richard Christopher Naylor, Esq., is the patron.

The Rectory House (with the exception of a small part, now chiefly used as offices) was built at different periods, during the incumbency of the late rector, and is a commodious residence. It is situated at the east end of the village, and is surrounded with shrubberies and pleasure-grounds.

The Parochial School, built in 1825, is chiefly supported by the rector, with assistance from R. C. Naylor, Esq. The Sunday School is solely supported by the rector.

Charities.—Grace, Countess of Dysart, in 1732, bequeathed the sum of £100 (now lost), for apprenticing poor children of the parish. The yearly sum of £5 is paid by the lord of the manor, for the repairs of the church, in compensation for the herbage of certain headlands, now belonging to the manorial estate. The Rev. William Wilson, formerly rector of this parish, left £50, in 1831, to the poor. The money is vested in the 3 per cent. consols, and the interest is applied to the use of the poor at Christmas.

Post-Office—Charles Turner, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive via Northampton at 9 A.M., and are despatched at 4 P.M. The nearest Money-Order Office is Rothwell.

Hall Miss My. Thorpe Underwood .	Farmers and Graziers.	Pantler Emanuel
Kendall William, carpenter	Bates Joseph, (and threshing machine owner)	Perkins Edward (& vict. Tollemache Arms)
Tollemache Hon. & Rev. Hugh Francis, B. A., rector	Blyth Layton., Thorpe Underwood	Underwood William
Turner Charles, grocer	Plover Ezra	Watts James Ekins, Harrington Lodge
Turner Jno. Thos. schoolmaster

HASELBEECH PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Maidwell and Kelmars, on the north and north-west by Clipston and Naseby, and on the south by Cottesbrook. It contains 1650 acres of the rateable value of £2583, 10s.; the gross estimated rental is £3000. The population in 1801 was 118; in 1831, 140; in 1841, 194; in 1851, 148; in 1861, 180; and in 1871, 152 souls. The soil is of a mixed nature; nine-tenths of the parish is in permanent pasture. The principal landowners are the Dowager Viscountess Milton (who is lady of the manor), Sir Charles E. Isham, Bart., the trustees of Clipston Charity, and the Winstanley executors.

Manor.—The Earl of Morton had 3 hides of land here, at the general survey, which were valued at 40s. At an early period the family of Burnell possessed this manor, and with them it continued till the eighth of Henry V. (1417), when it fell to the two daughters of Sir Edward Burnell. In the reign of Henry VI. it was in the possession of the Tresham family, from which it passed to John Haselwood, Esq., one of whose successors sold it to William Saunders, Esq. The family of Wykes held it more than a century since; and the late proprietor, Sir Thomas Apreece, left it with all his property, by will, to St George's Hospital, London.

The Village of Haselbeech is distant about 4½ miles from Welford, and 12½ north by west from Northampton, 12 west from Kettering, 8½ south from Market Harborough, and 79 from London.

The Church, dedicated to St Michael, consists of a nave, side aisles, south porch, chancel, and tower, in which are four bells. It was thoroughly restored in 1860 at a cost of more than £1100. The old oak sittings, which are beautifully carved, were restored, and the church furnished with open sittings of a similar character. In 1869 the tower was repaired, and the bells rehung at a further cost of £210; and since then a large organ has been placed in the church, the whole being at the expense of the noble Viscountess. In 1872 a mortuary chapel, with vault underneath, was built at the north-east corner of the church, in which were placed a beautiful monument and an altar-tomb of alabaster and marble, with recumbent figures of a lady and child, to the memory of the wife and child of Cecil G. S. Foljambe, Esq., eldest son of the Dowager Viscountess Milton. The chapel is separated from the church by a handsome screen of wrought iron. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £13, 14s. 9½d., but now worth £350 per annum, in the patronage of the Lady of the manor; and the Rev. William Bury, M.A., is the rector. The Rectory House is a commodious building situated a little west of the church.

A Schoolroom, capable of accommodating between 60 and 70 scholars, with a teacher's residence attached, was built in 1872 at the expense of the same noble lady, at a cost of £600.

Haselbeech Hall, the seat of the Dowager Viscountess Milton, is a stone building in various styles of architecture, pleasantly situated in a well-wooded lawn.

Post Office at John Watkins. Letters arrive from Northampton at 8.30 A.M., and are despatched at 4.45 P.M.

Bury Rev. Wm. M.A. rector	Morgan Edwin, gardener, Hall	Church Charles
Milton Dowager Viscountess, Haselbeech Hall	Ward Miss Eliza. schoolmistress.	Clifford James
Pell Albert, Esq. M.P.	Watkins John, carpenter and manager co-operative stores	Gammidge William
Elsworthy John, gamekeeper	Farmers and Graziers.	Scales Edward, The Grange
Liller Joseph, tailor	Andrew William	Teesdale Edward Francis

KELMARSH PARISH.

This parish is bounded by Harrington on the east, Oxenden on the north, Clipston on the west, and Maidwell on the south. It contains 2751 acres. Its population in 1801 was 131; in 1831, 159; in 1841, 163; in 1851, 162; in 1861, 167; and in 1871, 191 souls. The rateable value of the property is £4520; and the gross estimated rental of the parish £5270. The soil is various, the greater part of the parish is in grass, and Richard Christopher Naylor, Esq., is the lord of the manor, and the principal landowner.

Manor.—The crown held 2 hides, and William Peverel $1\frac{1}{2}$ hide in Keilmerse, at the Norman survey. In the reign of Henry II., Eudo Fitz-Haschul held the greater part of the lordship, and Adam de Kelmers the remainder. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Simon de Kelmersh was lord of the manor, and it descended to his posterity. In Edward IV.'s time, this lordship was in the hands of Richard Osborne, Esq., and in the fifth and sixth of Philip and Mary, Edward Osborne, died seized of four several manors here, Osborne's, Pulton's, Tiffeld's, and Pilington's manors. From the Osbornes the lordship appears to have passed to Sir John Hanbury, Knight. Wm. Bateman Bateman Hanbury, the second Baron Bateman, and late proprietor of this lordship, was son of the first baron by the daughter of Lord Spencer Chichester. It passed by purchase to the present proprietor in 1865.

The Village of Kelmarsh, which is small, is 5 miles south of Market Harborough, 12 north from Northampton, and 78 from London.

The Church, dedicated to St Dennis or St Luke, consists of a nave, side-aisles, porch, chancel, tower surmounted by a spire, and containing six bells. It has recently been tastefully restored and fitted up, and partly rebuilt at the expense of the patron. The piers between the nave and the north aisle are of red polished granite. The old roof of the nave was replaced by one of oak in the "hammer-beam" style, and a carved panelled oak roof was added to the chancel at the same time. The church was also furnished with carved oak sittings, a fine pulpit and reading-desk of carved walnut wood, and a handsome mosaic reredos inlaid with sacred emblems; the side arcades of the chancel are also inlaid with alabaster and antique marble from Rome, the spandrels between the arches contain carved emblems of the "Passion." The east window, which is of 14th century work, was the gift of the rector. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £23, 1s. 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., but now valued at about £700 per annum. R. C. Naylor, Esq., is the patron, and the Rev. Richard Dalton, M.A., is the incumbent. The Rectory House, which is a commodious residence, is situated at a short distance from the church.

Kelmarsh Hall, the residence of Richard Christopher Naylor, Esq., J.P., is pleasantly situated on rising ground, near the village.

Post and Telegraph Office at John Bihdley's. Letters arrive from Northampton at 7 A.M., and are despatched at 5.44 P.M.

Bindley John, carpenter and wheelwright	King Miss Eliza Jane, school- mistress	Naylor Richard Christopher, Esq. J.P. Kelmarsh Hall
Dalton Rev. Rich. M.A. rector	Kitchin James, farm bailiff	Wiggins Robert, shopkeeper

LODDINGTON PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Thorpe Malsor, on the north by Orton and Rothwell, on the west by Maidwell, and on the south by Cransley. It contains 1206 acres of the rateable value of £2711; the gross estimated rental is £3458.

The population in 1801 was 183; in 1831, 218; in 1841, 226; in 1851, 226; in 1861, 289; and in 1871, 278 souls. The soil is principally a cold clay; the greater part is arable, and the principal proprietors are Lord Overstone (the lord of the manor), and Francis W. Higgins, Esq. The parish is well supplied with springs, one of which is petrifying. The lordship was enclosed in the protectorate of Oliver Cromwell, and thence called the "Godly Enclosure."

Manor.—There was $1\frac{1}{2}$ hide in Lodintone belonging to Rothwell manor in the hands of the crown at the Domesday survey. In the fourth of Edward II. (1310) Henry de Lacy, earl of Lincoln, died seized of the manor of Lodington, which he held of the king by the service of one knight's fee, and in the ninth of the same reign (1315) Peter de Dalderby and the Earl of Gloucester were lords of Lodington. In the eleventh of the same reign (1318) Peter de Dalderby levied a fine of the manor, and it descended to his heirs. In the eighteenth of Richard II. (1394) John de Knighton possessed it, and it soon after passed to Kynnesmans, Simon Kynnesman being lord of it in 1420, in which year he obtained licence of the bishop to have mass celebrated in his mansion-house here. In Bridges' time, Benjamin Allcock, Esq., was lord of the manor. His successor was Allen Allcock Young, Esq., from whom it passed by purchase to John Pell Dainty, Esq., who sold it in 1859 to Lord Overstone, the present possessor.

The Village of Loddington is distant 4 miles W. of Kettering, 8 N.W. from Wellingborough, 9 S.E. from Market Harborough, 13 N. from Northampton, and 79 from London.

The Church, dedicated to St Leonard, is a handsome stone structure in the Early English style, consisting of nave, chancel, south aisle, south chapel (the property of the lord of the manor), clerestory, north porch, and square tower, surmounted by a handsome perpendicular spire, and containing three bells. It was thoroughly restored in 1859, when it was furnished with open sittings of carved oak. The chancel stalls are of carved oak, as is also the pulpit, which rests on a foundation of Caen stone, and the floor within the communion rails is laid with ornamental tiles. In the chancel is a double sedilia and piscina in good preservation, and the Lady Chapel contains a piscina and locker. In the north wall of the chancel is a founder's arch, and another is to be seen in the wall of the south aisle; and built into the west wall of the churchyard is a singular stone with a large cross cut in the centre of it, and two smaller crosses on the sides, but its history is unknown. The living is a rectory in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor, and incumbency of the Rev. David Thomas Gladstone, M.A. It was valued in the king's books at £10, 4s. 4½d., but is now worth £500 per annum. The tithes were commuted for £384, and there are 40 acres of glebe land. The Rectory House, a good substantial building, is pleasantly situated about the centre of the village; and there is a dissenting place of worship in the village which is used by different denominations.

A National School, with class-room attached, was built by the Rev. T. W. Carr, the former rector, and opened in 1863. It is supported by subscription, Government grant, and school pence, and is also used as a day and Sunday school.

Loddington Hall, the property of Lord Overstone, is a good stone building, now in the occupation of Mr Tom Edward Oldham, farmer.

Loddington House, a substantial mansion, is the property and residence of Captain Joseph Thomas Wetherall.

Charities.—The poor's land consists of 10 acres, now let for £20 a year. Francis Syers, in 1684, left an annual rent charge of £2, 12s. to be distributed in bread to the poor; and Sarah Wykes, in 1705, bequeathed the sum of £2, 10s. per annum to the school.

Letters are received here through the Kettering Post-office; the nearest Money-Order Office is Rothwell.

Andrew George, baker	Humphrey Daniel, tailor and vict. New Inn	Farmers and Graziers.
Andrew Th. wheelwt. & carpnr.	Kilborn Henry, butcher	Dainty William
Bates Samuel, shopkeeper	Norris Mr Joseph	Holme James
Brittan Miss Clara Jane, school-mistress	Oldham Mr Edward, The Hall	Lodder Thomas
Browning Wm. wheelwright	Sharman Charles, grocer	Oldham Tom Edw. Loddington Hall
Gladstone Rev. David Thomas, M.A., rector	Wetherall Capt. Joseph Thos. Loddington House	Wilkinson Robert
	Wheatley James, blacksmith	York William

Carrier.—Samuel Bates, to Market Harborough on Tuesday; Kettering on Friday; and Northampton on Saturday.

MAIDWELL PARISH,

Called in Domesday book Medewell, and in later records Maydenwell, is bounded by Draughton on the east, Kelmarsh on the north, Cottesbrook on the west, and Lamport on the south. It contains 1767 acres; its population in 1801 was 208; in 1831, 278; in 1841, 258; in 1851, 280; in 1861, 290; and 1871, 290 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £2462, 4s. 6d.; and the gross estimated rental £2831, 5s. The soil is generally a deep clay, and belongs principally to Henry Vere Forester Hungerford, Esq., who is also lord of the manor. The Northampton and Market Harborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway runs through a part of the parish.

Manor.—Berner held of Maino 4 hides here, at the Norman survey. In the reign of Henry II. Alen de Maydwell possessed 4 hides of Hamon or Fitz-Hamon, son of Maino; and at the same time, 2 hides of the fee of Ranulph de Baieux, by Rabas; and henceforth this lordship contained two distinct manors. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315) Sir Nicholas Seyton, Kt., was lord of Maidwell, and from him it descended to his heirs. This part of the lordship, which in Henry II.'s time was in the possession of the family of Rabas, continued with them till the ninth of Richard II. (1385), when Agnes, relict of Robert Rabas, levied a fine of it to the use of Robert Fordinge. Henceforth no mention is to be found of the lordship till the sixteenth of Edward IV. (1486), when Everard Seyton, Esq., died seized of two manors here. From this family they passed in the reign of Henry VIII. to John Hazelwood, Esq. About the year 1683, the lordship of Maidwell was carried in marriage to the Hatton family, and it was afterwards sold by Lord Hatton to Lord James Russel, sixth son of the first Duke of Bedford. Henry Vere Forester Hungerford, Esq., is the present proprietor.

The Village of Maidwell stands low, and is situated about 10½ miles N. from Northampton, and 7 S. from Market Harborough, 9 W. from Kettering, and 76 from London. Near the church is a quick flowing spring, called Maidwell, from which the parish is supposed to have taken its name. The Lamport station is about 1¼ mile from the village.

Here were anciently two churches, one dedicated to the Blessed Virgin (now standing), to which the chapel of Kelmarsh was annexed; the other dedicated to St Peter (long since destroyed), stood N.E. of the present church, in St Peter's Close, but when it fell to decay, does not appear. The present edifice consists of a nave, chancel, south porch, and tower, containing a peal of five bells and a clock. The living is a rectory, in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £16, 5s. 2½d., but now worth £240 per annum. The patronage is vested in the lord of the manor, and the Rev. John L. Whiteford, M.A., is the rector. In the chancel are two old battered figures of men in armour, one of which is supposed to be the effigy of Sir John Seaton, Kt., who died in Jerusalem in 1396, and whose remains were interred here. There are several monuments to the Hazelwood, Buller, and Holdich families. One, 1634, is outside in the corner arch of the chancel, and is enclosed by a glass window. The chancel was pulled down about the year 1819, and has not been rebuilt. There is in the church a painting of the "Nativity," a copy of one by Rubens, which was brought from Rome by a former rector. The School, in the village, is supported by subscription.

Charity.—The sum of £3 per annum, the interest of £100 left in 1866 by the Rev. Thomas Holdich, is given away in coal at Christmas to the deserving poor of the parish.

Maidwell Hall, the property of the lord of the manor, and residence of William Belgrave, Esq., was formerly the seat of Lord James Russell. It is a commodious stone mansion, erected in 1637.

Post-Office.—Miss Mary Lee Ravens, sub-postmistress. Letters arrive from Northampton at 7 A.M., and are despatched at 6 P.M. The nearest Money-Order Office is Brixworth.

Belgrave W. Esq. Maidwell Hall
 Bland Edmund, farm bailiff
 Bland Elias, shopkeeper
 Bottrill Chas. baker & maltster
 Fowke Mrs Sarah A. schoolmrs.
 Heaps Charles, blacksmith
 Heaps Jeremiah, blacksmith

Heaps Thomas, shopkeeper
 Lucas Jas. wheelwght & carptr.
 Ravens Miss My. Lee, vict. Goat
 Whiteford Rev. John Lyson,
 M. A. rector
Farmers and Graziers.
 Bradshaw Mrs Emma & Son

Bradshaw James Manning
 Everett Thomas (and butcher)
 Hamshaw William L.
 Hipwell Daniel, Dale
 Measures Wm. Maidwell Lodge
 Rowledge John

MARSTON TRUSSELL PARISH.

This parish is bounded by Farndon on the east, Lubbenham in Leicestershire on the north, Hothorp on the west, and Clipston and Sibbertoft on the south. It contains 1317 acres, the rateable value of which is £2561, 8s., and the gross estimated rental £2873, 7s. Its population in 1801 was 212; in 1831, 223; in 1841, 247; in 1851, 270; in 1861, 219; and in 1871, 219 souls. It is called Marston Trussell from the Trussells, who were lords of it soon after the Conquest. The soil is principally a strong clay and loam; and B. E. Bennett, Esq., lord of the manor, and Hugh Stratford Stratford, Esq., are the principal proprietors.

Manor.—At the general survey Hugh de Grentmaisnil had 2 hides in Mersitone and Torp, which were valued at 4s. In the reign of Henry II., Osbert Trussell held 1½ hide and half a virgate here, of the Earl of Leicester; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), William Trussell was lord of the manor. With the family of Trussell it continued till the reign of Henry VII., when it was carried in marriage to John Vere, Earl of Oxford, and descended to his posterity. Barwell Ewins Bennett, Esq., the present proprietor, whose ancestor, Henry Barwell, Esq., purchased it in the early part of the seventeenth century. At the east end of the village was formerly a castle, surrounded by a moat, the position of which is still clearly defined.

The Village of Marston Trussell is about 3 miles W. by S. of Market Harborough.

The Church, dedicated to St Nicholas, comprises a nave, side aisles, porches, and a tower containing five bells. In the chancel are the remains of an Early English double sedilia, with nail-head ornaments. The church bears marks of having been at one time larger than it is at present, one of the arches and capital projecting beyond the present wall. There is good evidence that many of the pursued Cavaliers from the field of Naseby are interred in the churchyard, on the south side of which the cul-de-sac in which they were captured and cut down ends on the north side of it. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £15, 2s. 11d., but now worth about £500 per annum; the Rev. William Law, M.A., is the present incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1813.

The Rectory-House, a good residence, was built by the present rector in 1844.

There is a Parochial School for boys and girls in the village, supported principally by the rector. The children of the parish have also the privilege of attending the free school at Clipston.

Marston Hall, the seat of B. E. Bennett, Esq., is a handsome mansion pleasantly situated on rising ground at the west end of the village. It has latterly been much improved, and a handsome sheet of water formed in the grounds adds to its attractiveness.

Amongst the charities for the parish are £100 left by Elizabeth and Simon Barwell, with which land has been purchased in Lubbenham parish. The interest, amounting to £4 per annum, is distributed amongst the poor in coats and gowns, by Barwell E. Bennett, Esq. In addition to this charity are the following—£10 left by Mrs Ann Ragg, for apprenticing poor children of the parish; £10 left by Mr Smith; £5 by Mr White; £2 by Mr Brewster; and £18, 16s. by Mrs A. C. Barwell. Of these charities the interest received on the three latter is applied to the purchase of bread, which is distributed to the poor, annually, on St Thomas's day. The interest of Mr Smith's £10 is divided in money amongst the sick and aged on Easter Monday. These five latter charities are administered by the rector, an account of which was forwarded to the Charity Commissioners in December 1871.

Letters are received here through Market Harborough.

Bennett Barwell Ewins, Esq.
The Hall
Bennett Wm. John Ewins, Esq.
Barrister-at-Law, The Hall
Davis John, shopkeeper
Flint William, parish clerk
Harrauld Alexander, tailor

Harrauld Xenophon, vict. Sun
Law Rev. Wm. M.A. rector
Saddington Miss Frances Ann,
schoolmistress
Stratford Hugh Stratford, Esq.
Thorpe, Lubbenham
Sturgess John, blacksmith

Farmers and Graziers.
Clarke William
Fox George (and cattle dealer)
Hart Mrs Mary, Rectory Farm
Hart Philip
Rowlatt William
Simons Thomas

OXENDEN GREAT PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Braybrook and Arthingworth, on the north by Bowden Little, on the west by Clipston and Oxenden Little, and on the south by Kelmars. It contains 1299 acres of the rateable value of £3057; the gross estimated rental is £3437, 13s. 9d. The population in 1801 was 281; in 1831, 239; in 1841, 234; in 1851, 222; in 1861, 238; and in 1871, 220 souls. The bounds of Rockingham Forest formerly extended to a bridge over the rivulet which divides this parish from Kelmars. The soil varies from a good clay to loam with a mixture of gravel; the greater part of the lordship is in grass, and Thomas Tertius Paget, Esq. (the lord of the manor), William Henry Harrison, Esq., Lord Overstone, and Henry O. Nethercote, Esq., are the principal proprietors. The Northampton and Market Harborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway runs through the parish, and has a station about half a mile from the village.

Manor.—There was 1 hide and 1 virgate belonging to Rothwell manor in the hands of the crown, and Ulf held 1 hide here of the Countess Judith, at the general survey. This division of the lordship subsisted for some time; but in the fourteenth of Richard II. (1320), the king, who then possessed it, granted it to Sir John Holt and others. In the time of Henry VII. a moiety of it was in the hands of the Pulteney family; one of whom sold it, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, for £200, to Edward Griffin, Esq.; the other moiety subsequently came to the same family.

The Village of Great Oxenden, which is rather handsome and respectable, is seated on the declivity of a small hill about 3 miles south from Market Harborough. The ancient hall or manor house is supposed to have stood in the centre of it. There are some good residences here, including the Rectory and Oxenden House.

The Church, dedicated to St Helen, is a neat edifice, standing a quarter of a mile from the village, and consisting of a nave, side aisles, porch, chancel, and square embattled tower, containing four bells. The present edifice dates from the fourteenth century; the font is more ancient, probably of the eleventh century. The church was restored in 1847, when it was resealed throughout, the chancel re-roofed, and the east end rebuilt. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £13, 8s., and now worth about £423 per annum. The Rev. Edward Parker, M.A., rural dean, is patron and incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1767 for land. Within the town was formerly a chapel, standing some distance from the church.

The Baptists have a place of worship in the village, which also contains a parochial school. The children of this parish have the privilege of attending the free school at Clipston.

Oxenden House, the seat and property of William Henry Harrison, Esq., is a handsome mansion, pleasantly situated, and commanding extensive prospects.

Worthy.—The Rev. John Morton, author of the “Natural History of Northamptonshire,” which was printed in London, in folio, 1712, was instituted rector of this parish in 1706. He died, and was buried here, in 1737. In the chancel of the church is a monument to his memory. Sir Francis Bond Head, Bart., who resided here for some time, and now of Croydon, is author of “Rough Notes of a Journey across the Pampas,” “Bubbles from the Brunnens of Nassau,” “The Emigrant,” “Life of Bruce, the Traveller,” &c.

Post-office.—William Coleman, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Market Harborough at 7 A.M., and are despatched at 5.45 P.M.

Atkins Geo. bricklry. & buildr.
Chester John, shopkeeper
Coleman Wm. baker & post-office
Cook Miss Sus. schoolmistress
Granger Fredk. shopkeeper
Granger George, shopkeeper
Harrison William Henry, Esq.
Oxenden House

Loomes Edward, vict. George
Oliver John, Esq.
Parker Rev. Edw. M.A. rector, and rural dean
Sumpter Wm. carprtr. & wheelw.
Symington Robt. stay manufr.
Market Harborough
Thomson John, station-master

Watkin Isaac, vict. Black Horse
Farmers and Graziers.
*Marked * are Graziers.*
Battams Robert
* Glover Chas. (and salesman)
Kirby George
* Simons Benjamin
* Ward Richard

Carrier.—Benjamin Wilford to Market Harborough on Tuesday and Thursday.

ROTHWELL PARISH.

Rothwell, popularly called Rowell, including the chapelry of Orton, and the hamlet of Thorpe Underwood, is bounded on the east by Rushton, on the north by Desborough, on the west by Harrington, and on the south by Loddington and Thorpe Malzor. It contains 3460 acres; its population in 1801 was 1409; in 1831, 2002; in 1841, 2939; in 1851, 2391; in 1861, 2663; and in 1871, 2375 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £9596, 9s., exclusive of the chapelry, which is £1588; and the gross estimated rental is £10,210. The land is chiefly arable, the soil various, and the principal proprietors are Capt. J. B. Tibbetts (lord of the manor), Rev. George E. Maunsell, Capt. Cokayne Maunsell, Francis F. Turvell, Esq., Richard Booth, Esq., and Messrs Thomas Miller and Charles Brown, John Stockburn, John Styles, Montague Cole, and William Chater. The lordship is well supplied with springs, one of which, Shotwell, is petrifying.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, this lordship, with its several members in various lordships, was in the hands of the king, and valued at £50. In the reign of Henry II., Eudo de Haschall held 9 hides in Rowell, Overton, and Lodington. Roger, Earl of Clare, the superior lord, granted in this reign (1154), the monks of Sulby, an exemption from toll on all articles bought or sold by them at the market of Rowell. In the fifth of King John (1204), the manor was confirmed to Richard, Earl of Clare, with the weekly market, formerly kept on Sunday, to be held on Monday, and an annual fair which is now proclaimed on Trinity Monday at six o'clock in the morning, and is continued the four following days. It used to commence on Saturday, and generally lasted the whole of the following week; but such was the amount of drunkenness and profligacy which took place on the Fair Sunday, that a successful attempt was at length made to suppress it by not proclaiming the fair until Monday morning. His successor was Gilbert, his son, the first Earl of Gloucester and Hertford, who, in the ninth of this reign (1208), gave the king a palfrey to hold the weekly market upon Sunday, as had been formerly done. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), the king was lord of the hundred and manor of Rothwell and Orton; and partition being afterwards made of the late Earl of Gloucester's estate, they were assigned to Margaret, his sister, the wife of Hugh de Audley, afterwards Earl of Gloucester. From this family Rothwell passed to that of Stafford. In the twenty-third of Henry VI. (1444), Humphrey, Earl of Stafford, was created Duke of Buckingham, and was beheaded at Salisbury without trial or sentence at the command of Richard III., whom he had been greatly instrumental in raising to the crown. His son Edward, Duke of Buckingham, obtained possession of his maternal inheritance in the fourteenth of Henry VII. (1498), but being attainted of high treason in the next reign, he met with the same fate which befell his father, and was beheaded, 1521, upon Tower Hill. By the death of this nobleman the hundred and manor of Rothwell became forfeited to the crown. In the thirty-eighth of this reign (1546), the manor was granted for life to Lord Parr, of Horton, at whose death it devolved on the family of Tresham. Reverting again from the Treshams to the crown, the manor and hundred were purchased in the reign of James I., by the family of Hill, from which it descended through intermediate possessors to Thos. P. Maunsell, Esq., from whom it passed in 1867 to his son, Capt. John Borelase Tibbetts, of Barton Seagrave Hall, who is the present proprietor. Here was also a smaller manor, which formerly belonged to the abbot or prior of Cirencester, and which also came into the possession of the Hill family.

The Town or Village of Rothwell is situated about four miles N.W. by W. of Kettering, and seventy-five from London. It was formerly a market town of considerable size and importance; and it is said to have been once surrounded with a wall, in which were several gates, two of them being distinguished by the names of East-bar and West-bar. It is now lighted with gas by the Rothwell Gas Light Coal and Coke Company (limited). A laudable attempt to restore the disused market was made a few years since, which perhaps for want of unanimity, was a complete failure. In the centre of the town stands the beautiful but unfinished Market House, which is a fine specimen of the architecture of the sixteenth century, "and remains an elegant monument of the interest taken in the prosperity of the inhabitants of Rowell, by the pious and accomplished Sir Thomas Tresham, of Rushton Hall." It is a large square stone building, erected in 1577, as we learn from the following inscription, sculptured on the frieze: "Thome Tresami militis fvit hoc opus in gratium dulcis patriæ fecit suæ tribusque Northamptoniæ velmaxime hujusque vicinisibi pagi. Nihil præter bonum commune quæsit nihil præter decus pepenne amicorum. Male qui interpretatur dignus haud tanto est bono. Ao. Domini millesimo Quingentesimo Septuagesimo Septimo." Around the cornice are the arms of a great number of the nobility and gentry then living in the county. Sir Thomas Tresham is said to have had great taste in architecture, and to have designed and begun several public and private buildings; but a fatality which attended most of his architectural undertakings is most remarkable; one only, it is supposed, attained completion, viz., the Triangular Lodge at Rushton. Among other structures the "New Building," at Liveden (which see), another unfinished monument, attests his architectural taste and skill. This interesting building (the Market House) being in a dilapidated state, a subscription was set on foot among the gentlemen of the county, by means of which its walls were repaired in 1827, and a surplus having remained, it was appropriated to the presentation of a fine engraving of the building to Mr Baker's excellent history of the county. A most meritorious act, and would be deserving of the highest commendation to restore this public edifice, and convert the upper portion into a reading room for the benefit of the inhabitants of Rothwell and neighbourhood. The manufacture of silk plush for hats was formerly carried on here to a considerable extent, but this is amongst the things of the past—the sound of the weaver's loom having given place to that of the sewing machine. The manufacture of stays and shoes affords employment to a considerable number of the inhabitants. Here was a small priory of nuns, of the order of St Augustine, dedicated to St John the Baptist ; it was probably founded by the Clare family, whose successors in the manor were patrons of it. It was valued at £10, 10s. 4d. per annum at the dissolution, and was granted, together with the lands, demesnes, &c., belonging to it, to Henry Lee. The residence, now called the Nunnery, with its out-buildings, occupies the site of the conventual edifice, erected in 1631.

The Church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is an ancient and beautiful structure, consisting of a nave, side aisles (at the ends of which are chapels), chancel, and a broad embattled tower containing a peal of six bells. "It is the longest parish church in the county." The earliest work in the church is found in the south wall of the chancel, the clerestory windows of which are Norman. The nave, chancel, and lower stages of the tower, are semi-Norman or Transition, as are also the north and south aisles. The tower arch is a beautiful specimen of the Early Decorated period, to which also belongs the Lady's Chapel on the north side of the chancel, as did also the transepts taken down in 1673. The clerestory of the nave, the handsome east window and the Saunders chantry (now the vestry), are perpendicular. The chancel, which is very fine, and about 78 feet in length, was partially restored, and re-roofed in 1848, at the expense of the late George Fortescue Turville, Esq., the then lay impropiator, under the superintendence of the Architectural Society. In 1660, the spire of the church fell down, carrying with it in its descent six bays of the church, and in 1673 the transepts were taken down. In the churchyard may still be seen an elaborately sculptured tomb, which formerly stood at the further extremity of the south aisle. "Upwards of six centuries have elapsed," says a local writer, "since this once superb structure received its completion at the hands of its pious architects. It has not indeed descended to us unscathed by time, nor unmutilated by accident. Many of the sepulchral chapels, with the elaborately sculptured transepts, have suffered by the former ; and the total destruction of the lofty spire in 1660, from lightning, is a melancholy instance of its deterioration by the latter cause. There seems little doubt that, originally, this edifice must have held high rank in an age, which, more than any other, was characterised by the number and beauty of its sacred edifices. Without pretending to cathedral magnificence, the church of Rothwell was evidently constructed on the most liberal scale ; and affords an additional proof to the already convincing evidence, of the former importance of a district in which such ample provision was made for the spiritual welfare of its inhabitants. Despite of the dilapidations of time, the ruinous effect of casualty, and, worse than all, the disfiguring metamorphosis of injudicious repairs, it is still an easy task to trace the extent of the original edifice. Entering the west door, some three centuries since, probably the eye of the spectator would have embraced the whole space from the portal even to the high altar, chequered only by the varied dyes which, in those days of monastic magnificence, streamed through the richly painted windows, faintly reproducing their faded legends on the cold marble of the echoing aisles. And beautiful indeed must have been the clustering pillars, with their capitals of drooping foliage, and the lofty arches reaching into darkness, when viewed in that dim mysterious light. On the right of the altar, opposite the lowly portal of the vestuary, and the chapel of our 'Lady of Sorrows' may still be seen the triple piscina, and the quadruple sedilia. The finely carved oaken stalls, with their anti-somniferous seats, minutely sculptured quatrefoils, and grotesque finials, are in all probability not far removed from their ancient situation. Above these, looking westward, was then the rood-loft, from which the image of Him who died to save a universe gazed downward on the kneeling multitude with that expression of silent agony, it was the principal, and generally successful endeavour of the sculptor to pourtray. Stretching north and south were the transepts, each probably terminated by its own peculiar altar ; and here and there, at intervals along the aisles, would be the altar tombs of the Clares, the Audleys, and the Staffords, each with its recumbent effigy of the stalwart warrior at rest beneath, the gauntleted hands clasped in prayer, and pointed heavenward ; whilst from the lofty rereward wall would silently depend the empty suit of mail, the rusted weapon, and the tattered banner. Of the many chapels, which, from the traces against the main walls, appear to have been once annexed to the buildings, two only remain—that of Saunders, now used as the vestry, and that of the Mater-doloris. Beneath the south aisle, is all that remains of the funeral crypt, which possibly may once have extended under the entire circumference of the building.” The living is a discharged vicarage, with the curacy of Orton, in the deanery to which it gives name, rated in the king’s books at £7, 8s. 11d., and returned at £148 per annum. The patronage is at present vested in the hands of Miss Hall of Thorpe Underwood, Thomas Wood, Esq., and the Governors of Jesus’ Hospital, Cambridge, who appoint to the living in turn; the Rev. Richard Morton, M.A., is the vicar. Inside the altar rails is the brass effigy of William de Rothwelle, Archdeacon of Essex, Keeper of the Mint, &c., and the traditionary founder of the church, who died on the 4th August 1220. The brass is in an excellent state of preservation, representing a Catholic priest in his vestments, the head resting on a pillow, supported by seraphs, with hands folded in a gesture of prayer. The tithes were commuted in 1812. There was formerly a Chapel here dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and subordinate to the parish church; and in the church was a chantry, founded by Edward Saunders, in honour of St Nicholas.

The Charnel House or Crypt.—Beneath the two bays of the south aisle of the church, and immediately west of the transept, is a crypt or charnel house, accidentally discovered by some workmen about 175 years since. The descent to it is by a flight of seventeen steps from the west end of the church. Its extreme length is 30 feet 3 in., width 15 feet 6 in., and height 8 feet 6 in. It is of the semi-Norman or Transition period, and of the same date as of the greater portion of the church. On the eastern wall is an indication of a fresco painting, which may be assigned to the close of the thirteenth century, or the beginning of the fourteenth. When discovered, it was found to contain human bones (chiefly the larger bones) piled very carefully, in alternate strata of skulls, arms, legs, &c., from the ground to the roof, down the two sides, and at the end opposite the entrance, so that the visitor walks between heaps of human remains, which, however, owing partly to the admission of the air, have mouldered down to half their former height. It has been the popular belief that the number of skulls and bones was as large as 30,000 and even 40,000; but Samuel Sharp, Esq. of Dalington Hall, who has written a most carefully prepared paper on the subject, proves clearly from elaborate measurements and calculations, that the number cannot be certainly more than 4000, if so many. To account for their presence here, it may be assumed that some, perhaps old and unused burial ground, or some portion of the existing burial ground, being required for other purposes, was cleared of its human remains, which, with reverential regard, were here carefully bestowed. It is therefore possible that Owen Ragsdale, the founder of Jesus’ Hospital (situated immediately south of the churchyard), effected some exchange, by which some part of the churchyard, or perhaps the old monastic burial ground, was taken for the purpose of his new buildings. The opinion that these remains were not transferred there till this event, which took place in the sixteenth century, would appear to be confirmed by a portion of the bone-slack recently falling on the floor of the vault, and with the bones a considerable fragment of an earthen vessel of glazed dark chocolate ware; such was not manufactured earlier than the middle of the sixteenth century.

This Crypt is by some thought to have been originally intended for, and used as a private chapel, and afterwards converted into a bone-vault: but we know of no good reason for doubting that it was constructed for the purpose to which it is now applied. At the end is a much defaced picture of the Resurrection, which has been regarded as proof that the place was a chapel, but it seems at least as appropriate to a charnel-house as to a chapel. A similar collection of bones may be seen at Hythe in Kent and at Ripon in Yorkshire. There is also a charnel-house at Stratford-on-Avon, which Shakespeare seems to have regarded with no comfortable feelings:—

"If charnel-houses, and our graves, must send
Those that we bury back, our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites."

A curious and mournful account of a charnel-house now in use may be seen in a description of the Convent of Mount Sinai, given in "Robinson's Biblical Researches," vol. i. p. 146. The popular opinion that the bones at Rothwell were collected from the battlefield at Naseby, seems to rest on no better foundation than the similar notion that the bones at Hythe are the remains of persons slain in a battle between the Britons and an invading army, in the 5th century.

The Independent Chapel, built in 1735, is a large substantial building at the west end of the village, and is capable of accommodating about 800 persons. In 1852 the chapel was altered and enlarged at a cost of £800; and since then about £400 has been laid out in further alterations. The Protestant dissenters of this place entered the congregational covenant in 1656.

In connection with this religious body is the British School, erected in 1836, which is well conducted and numerous attended. Mr Richard Davis, who was minister of this chapel from 1690 to 1714, was noted for his zeal and activity during his ministry. "Members" were admitted not only in this county, but also in the counties of Leicester, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Bedford, and Bucks, and who, tradition informs us, were in the habit of attending the church at Rothwell. It is said that the members from the neighbourhood of Ringstead and Hargrave used to leave their homes before daylight, carrying lanterns, which they left at Cranford; returning after the afternoon service, they again lighted their lanterns at Cranford, and so reached their homes. The members from about Oundle are said in the same way to have left their lanterns at Aldwinkle, calling for them on their return from Rothwell at night. The members from about Kimbolton left their lanterns at Raunds, and those from Higham Ferrars, and the villages in the northern parts of Bedfordshire, left them at Irthlingborough toll-bar, calling for them in the same way on their return from Rothwell.

The Wesleyan Chapel is a neat building, erected in 1833, and considerably repaired in 1871, at a cost of about £400. A new school-room was added, the chapel was reseated, and other improvements effected. It will seat about 300.

CHARITIES.—The Free School. By a decree of the Commissioners of Charities, in the thirty-sixth of Charles II. (1684), it was ordered that St Mary's Chapel, in Rothwell, should be used as a free school, and that the yearly rent of £3, 4s. 11d., with which Queen Elizabeth had endowed the said chapel, should be paid for the use of the school, together with the rents and profits of divers messuages and lands, left by Owen Ragsdale, Esq., for the same purpose. The rents from these sources amount to about £30 per annum. The master's residence and the school-room (formerly St Mary's Chapel) having fallen into a dilapidated condition, application was made to the Charity Commissioners for permission to take down the old building. Through the exertions of the present vicar, who is ex officio a trustee, a convenient school-house, two school-rooms, and two classrooms, were erected and opened by the Lord Bishop of Peterborough on the 1st October 1870. More than 200 children are receiving instruction here.

Jesus' Hospital.—In the thirty-third of Elizabeth (1590), Owen Ragsdale settled his manor in Old, and certain other lands, &c., in five feoffees, on trust for the use of himself for life, and after his decease, with the rents and profits to build an hospital for a master and 24 poor men. The hospital contains four common halls, or sitting-rooms, with four bedrooms adjoining to each of them, and a chamber over a part of the building, and it has a garden and orchard, divided into plots, for the separate use of the principal and almsmen, attached to it; and about 85 years since a separate house was built for the use of the principal. It was enlarged in 1833 by the addition of six rooms, capable of accommodating 12 men. One of the rooms is at present unoccupied. The establishment now consists of 26 almsmen and the principal, who has an allowance of £35 a-year, and each of the almsmen a stipend of £15, 12s. a-year, paid quarterly, besides a customary gift of 2s. 6d. to each on St Thomas' Day and on the 7th of August; and the almsmen are also provided with an annual suit of clothing and a gown, with fuel and medical assistance. They have also the attendance of two nurses, who occupy a cottage belonging to the charity, and have a pension of £24 a year. The annual income of the charity, according to the Commissioners' Report, is £431. In addition, Francis F. Turville, Esq. of Bosworth Hall, Leicestershire, left, in 1829, the interest of £100, which is invested in the 3 per cent. annuities, to be distributed in coals to the poor at Christmas. For the other charities of the parish see the table prefixed to this hundred.

ORTON is a hamlet and chapelry, pleasantly situated in an elevated locality, about 1½ mile S.W. from Rothwell. It contains a few good houses, and 941 acres; its population in 1871 was 73; its rateable value £1588, 6s. 3d.; and the gross estimated rental was £1720. Bridges tells us, that Orton is a hamlet, pertaining to the manor of Rothwell, having been always held by the same possessors. Though it is united to Rothwell for ecclesiastical purposes, it enjoys within itself all other parochial privileges, and is generally considered a separate parish. The land is arable; the soil varies from a light to a very stiff clay; the lordship is well watered by excellent springs, and Henry Vere Forester Hungerford, Esq., is lord of the manor and sole owner.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is a neat edifice, in the Early English style, consisting of a nave, with clerestory, south aisle, small chancel, south porch, and a low embattled tower, containing one bell. The nave is divided from the chancel by a massive Saxon arch. The church was repaired in 1842, and the burial ground consecrated, so that the inhabitants have now their own registers, which date from 1846. The living is a curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Rothwell. The great tithes, £105 per annum, form part of the endowment of Jesus' Hospital; and the small tithes, amounting to £17 per annum, are the property of the Vicar of Rothwell.

THORPE UNDERWOOD is a hamlet partly in the parishes of Rothwell and Harrington, containing altogether 7 houses, 18 inhabitants, and 610 acres, and situate about 1½ mile N.W. of Rothwell. This manor anciently belonged to the family of Belet, from which it was called Thorp-Belet. Michael Belet founded the Priory of Canons regular of St Augustine at Wroxton, and endowed it with this manor and other possessions. After the dissolution of the monasteries, the lands, &c., in Thorpe, belonging to the priory, were granted to Thomas Pope, Esq., Treasurer of the Court of Augmentations. The present owners of the soil are Thomas Wood, Esq., Miss Hall, and the Governors of Jesus' Hospital.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank.—Joseph Ginns, postmaster. Letters arrive from Kettering at 8 A.M. and 3 P.M., and are despatched at 9 A.M., 5.30, and 8 P.M.

Ashley Alfred, saddler
Ball Wm. & Son, agricultural implement makers and iron and brass founders
Ball Wm. jun. (Wm. & Son) h.
Spring Villa
Barlow Mr Thomas
Brown Alfred, confectioner
Buckby Thomas, boot manu-
factur. (Buckby & Sargeant)
Buswell Ash. plumb. & painter
Chater William, corn miller
Church William, bookseller
Cook Alfred, relieving officer, and registrar of births and deaths for Rothwell district
Cook Mr William
Cramp John, iron-ore foreman
Dalby Mrs Mary
Dalby William Rasin, Principal of Jesus' Hospital
Dyke C. & Son (George) general drapers

Dyke Chas. hairdrsr. & perfr.
Easex Chas. carpnt. & wheelwt.
Fifield Charles Hafford, ironmonger and tinplate worker
Gibson Jacob, beerhouse
Ginns Jph. & Son (Albin Burt) booksellers, chemists and druggists, and paper-hangers
Ginns Jph. (J. & Son) land sur.
Gray William, pharmaceutical chemist and vetnry. surgeon
Green Wm. S. master British
School
Gue Mrs Mary Ann
Hafford Mr Charles
Hall Miss Mary, Thorpe Underwood.
Hilson Thomas, coachpainter
Hopkins Walter, cattle dr. &c.
Joyce William, corn miller
Law William, clothes dealer
Laywood John, manager, gas-works, Lodge

Liner Timothy, brick and tile manufacturer, Lodge
Loake George, farm bailiff
Matson Rev. Wm. Tidd (Indpt.)
Maydwell Thomas Allen, tailor
and draper
Miller Thomas, cottager
More Jas. M.D. surg. Red Hall
Morton Rev. Richd. M.A. vicar
Needham Mrs Sophia, dressmr.
Northern Sl. thresh-mach. our.
Parker Hy. saddler & coal mcht.
Sargeant Samuel, boot manufacturer (Buckby & Sargeant)
Sharman Wm. coopr. & brushmr.
Shaw Enos, cottager
Shaw Thomas, basket maker
Shortland Mrs Sophia, tripe dr.
Symington R. & W. H. & Co.
stay manufs. and at; Market
Harborough, S.E. Betta, mngr.
Taylor Mrs Jane
Veasey William, coal merchant

Waters James Hipwell, tailor and draper
Whiteman Jph. master of the Grammar School
Wilson Philip, maltster and fellmonger
Witt Isaac, watchmaker

Bakers.

Bambridge John
Chandler W. G. (and corn dlr.)
Essex Mrs Ann
Hafford Samuel
Liner Wm. jun. (and miller)
Wells John
York Allen

Blacksmiths.

Moore John
Smith Thomas
Smith William

Boot and Shoe Makers.

*Marked * are Manufacturers.*

Ambler Samuel
Bollard Thos. (& leather cutter)
Bradshaw William
Buckby & Sargeant
Burnham Isaac
*Butlin Thomas
Letts Allen
*Tebbutt George
Willis Benjamin (and sexton)
*Willis Thomas

Builders.

Austin Walter (& furnitr. dlr.)
Barlow George (& brick mfr.)
Buckby John
Butlin Joseph
Haycock George
Needham Isaac Sharman
Peach Henry

Butchers.

Ball Charles
Guildford Thomas Otho
Kilborn William Baines
Marriott Thomas
Palmer Charles
Willis Isaac

Farmers and Graziers.

Attenborough Wm. The Grange
Austin Joseph
Austin Thomas
Austin William
Blythe Layton, Thorpe Underwood.
Brown Chas. (yeo.) Nunnery Hse.
Brown Thos. Miller (yeoman)
Burditt Charles, Lodge
Chater Wm. Cheney, Lodge
Cox Richard
Guildford Rd. (and cattle dlr.)
Hafford Samuel
Hayes James (and maltster)
Lane Rich. Chas. (and maltster)
Liner William
Oswin William, Orton
Shaw Joseph

Turnell Francis, Orton
Wallis Thomas
Wiggins Robert, Orton Lodge
Wiggins Thomas, Orton

Grocers.

*Marked * are Drapers also.*

Ambler Samuel
Bambridge John
Baxter Eli (and miller)
Chamberlain Daniel Bollard
Co-op. Stores, John Wilson, mnr.*
*Joyce John
*Moore Jonathan
Remington John
Sharman Charles
Tye Joseph
*Walker Jabez
York William

Inns and Taverns.

Bell, Sl. Shortland (& farmer)
Bull's Head, Mrs Ann Essex
Chequers, William Cross
Crown, Thos. Marriott (& farmer)
Horse and Groom, Wm. Wilson
New Inn, William Capps.
Red Lion, Ephraim Willis
Sun, John Slow (and farmer)
Woolpack, James Burditt.

Maltsters.

Hayes James
Lane Richard Charles
Wilson Philip

Carriers.—William Willis, to Desborough Railway Station twice a-day, to Kettering on Friday; Richard Broome, to Market Harborough on Tuesday and Friday; and Thomas Tink, to Kettering daily.

RUSHTON PARISH.

Rushton, or Rishton, comprises the consolidated parishes of All Saints, and part of the hamlet of Pipwell, and is bounded by Wilbarston on the north, Rothwell on the south, Great Oakley on the east, and Desborough and Braybrook on the west. The Leicester and London (Midland) Railway runs through the parish, and has a station here. It contains 3109 acres; its population in 1801 was 434; in 1831, 405; in 1841, 497; in 1851, 416; in 1861, 450; and in 1871, 345 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £6550, and the gross estimated rental £7718. The soil is various. William Capel Clarke Thornhill, Esq., is lord of the manor, and principal proprietor.

Manor.—Robert de Toden, to whom Hugh was under-tenant, had 1½ hide in Ristone, at the Domesday survey; William held half a hide of Robert de Buci; and Eustachius 2½ hides of the Countess Judith, at the same time. In the reign of Henry II. the principal proprietors were Andrew de Riston, who had 2½ hides of the fee of David, King of Scots; Robert Basset, 1½ hide of the fee of William de Aubeny, and Vitalis Engayne, half a hide, which were held by Vitalis Lovet. These estates passed through various hands, and in the reign of Henry VI. (1439), the greater part of them came into the possession of William Tresham, Esq., afterwards knighted. This Sir William was lord of Sywell, and by his wife Isabel, daughter of Sir William Vaux of Harrowden, he had issue Sir Thomas Tresham, his successor, who married Margaret, daughter of William lord Zouch of Harringworth, upon whom he settled the manor of Rushton and other lordships, with remainder to John Tresham his son and heir; but adhering to the house of Lancaster he was made prisoner at Tewkesbury, and beheaded in the first year of Edward IV. (1461), when his lands became forfeited to the Crown. In the fifth of this reign (1465), the manor of Rushton, called the West manor, with his other estates in the county, were given to John Donn; but reverting again to the Crown, they were granted in the twentieth of the same reign (1481), to William Sayer for his life. They appear, however, to have been afterwards restored to the Tresham family; for, in the twelfth of Henry VII. (1497) the convent of Pipwell was certified to hold by fealty certain lands and tenements in Rushton of John Tresham, Esq., who married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir James Harrington of Hornby in Lancashire, and by whom he had issue Sir Thomas Tresham, his successor. This gentleman zealously espoused the cause of Queen Mary at her accession to the throne, and in reward for his services, on restoring the order of Knights Templars of St John of Jerusalem, she appointed him lord prior of the order. This dignity, however, he enjoyed but little more than a year; for on the succession of Elizabeth he retired to Rushton, where he died in 1559, and was buried in the church of St Peter. He was succeeded by his grandson, Thomas Tresham, a minor, fifteen years old, on whom, in the eighteenth of her reign (1576), Elizabeth conferred the honour of knighthood at Kenilworth castle. He died in September 1605, and was succeeded by his eldest son, Francis Tresham, the conspirator in the Gunpowder Plot. "This Francis," says Bridges, "was very strenuous in the Catholic cause, and though a principal person in the projected gunpowder treason, was in effect the instrument of its discovery. It was he that sent the letter to Lord Montague, who married Elizabeth Tresham, his sister, which gave the first suspicion of the plot. Being attainted, and with the other conspirators apprehended, he afterwards died of the strangury, or as some say of poison, in the Tower." It is however said, that the Government was well aware of the plot, and that had not the letter been written it was prepared for the event. There seems strong reason for believing that Tresham revealed the project to his brother-in-law, and that the letter which the king's superhuman wisdom is said to have unriddled was a mere feint. Tresham was a double-minded man: his hesitancy ruined him, and has left an indelible stain on his memory. He had not the resolution either to reject the murderous proposal that was made to him, or be faithful to his accomplices, or to reveal the project so as to save either them or himself. From the Treshams this lordship passed to Sir William Cockayne, Knight, Alderman of London, who died seized of it in the third of Charles I. (1627). From him it descended to his posterity; and when Bridges wrote, Lord Cullen, his descendant, was possessed of it. It passed by marriage, in 1855, to William Capel Clarke Thornhill, Esq., the present owner.

The Triangular Lodge, at the extremity of the grounds at Rushton, also owes its origin to Sir Thomas Tresham. It is an excellent stone structure, and though nearly three hundred years old is in good preservation. Its three sides are covered with figures and letters, all most distinctly carved, many of which have baffled all attempts at solution. The purpose for which it was built can only be guessed at, and therefore the uncertainty of its object, and its peculiar form combined, render the building in all its features unique. "The ground plan of the lodge is an equilateral triangle, each side being 33 feet 3 inches. Its sides approximately face the south-east, the north, and the south-west; the door being on the south-east. There are three floors; cellar, ground-floor, and upper-floor. It is built in layers of dark and light stone, the dressings at the corners and of the windows being worked in the lighter stone. Very near the ground are three windows on each side to light the cellar. Each of these windows is shaped like a trefoil, has its opening triangular, and is of small size. Above are three much larger windows giving light to the ground floor. These are set in a plate of stone more than 6 feet square. At each corner is a shield; the openings for light have in the centre a thin cross and twelve circles, placed in a diamond around it. Above these is the cornice marking the position of the floor; and at the angles of this cornice are shields each bearing a T. These windows, nine in all, are the same on each side. Above the cornice, on each of the three sides, are two large letters or figures in metal about three feet high, and these read 1593, TT., giving the date of erection and the builder's initials. The windows of the upper floor, like those of the lower ones, are three on each side, set in a square. All the windows are shaped alike, but have different designs for tracery. The centre window on the north side has the Tresham arms thrice worked in the tracery. Above each of the six shields is a letter in a square frame, and taking these consecutively on the three sides, they read thus:—MENTES TVORVM VISITA (visit the minds of thy people). In the same range with these letters are angles with shields bearing spouts five or six feet long. All the angels have a letter on the breast, and another on the shield below. These letters are amongst the inexplicable parts of the building. The letter on the breast of each angel at the angle is Q, and on the shield below, a triangle in a circle; the intermediate angels have other letters; and taking first all the letters on the breasts, and then those on the shields, and putting O for the triangle in the circle, the letters in all read thus:—

Q E E Q E E Q V E
O S S O S D O D S

Will some kind friend," asks Mr Sweeting, "offer a solution of these letters, for beyond all doubt they admit of some, and the recurrence of a few letters suggest some connection with the Latin formula expressing the doctrine of the Trinity." The solution invited has been given by a correspondent of the Northampton Mercury, under the initials "W. D." on the 23d July 1868, and is as follows:—"The three letters O in the second line are put for the symbol of the Trinity, a triangle in a circle; and the whole explanation is—Qui Erāt Et Qui Est Et Qui Venturus Est.—Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus, Dominus Deus Sabaoth. Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Sabaoth; which was, and is, and is to come." Above these are two cornices with an inscription between them. The three inscriptions are these, APERIATUR TERRA & GERMINET SALVATOREM—(May the earth bring forth a Saviour). QUIS SEPARABIT NOS A CHARITATE CHRISTI—(Who shall separate us from the love of Christ)? CONSIDERAVI OPERA TVA DOMINE ET EXPAVI—(I have considered thy works, O Lord, and was afraid). At each angle of the upper cornice is a shield. The roof above rises into three gables richly crocketed with heraldic and other monsters, and terminated with a lofty triangular pinnacle surmounted by a trefoil. At the upper part of each gable is a date or set of figures, or in the central gables a word; and below these are emblems or mottoes set in square frames. The mottoes consecutively would read, "Behold, not for myself alone have I laboured."

In the centre of the roof, or rather from the point of conjunction of the nine gabled roofs, rises a massive triangular chimney. At about half its height a heavy cornice with shields at the angles, diminishes in section above till it is finished by a grand central trefoil, the crown of the work. On the lower part each face has a date, symbol, and word. The date in each case is the same, 1595, the date (as suggested) of the completion of the work. The symbols are these,—a cross with I.H.S. and three nails; a lamb bearing a cross and banner, and a chalice. The mottoes beneath are, ESTO MIHI—LEGE—SALVIS—(May I have safety in the law). The word on the second side is barely legible; but an old drawing of the lodge gives the word "Ecce," which may possibly refer to the "Agnus Dei," above. Access to the interior is obtained by steps which run down the side of the building. Above the door is a shield with the Tresham arms, and the very happy motto, TRES TESTIMONIUM DANT ("There are three that bear record"). There are also four large figures of 5, another piece of sculpture that has sorely tried the tempers of those who wish to explain it. The rooms within are hexagonal, the corners of the large triangle being separated off into triangular closets, one containing the staircase. There is one shield in the inside having Tresham and Throckmorton impaled. Sir Thomas married Muriel, daughter of Robert Throckmorton. The shields on the outside are eighteen on each side, exclusive of small ones bearing letters or figures, and of the one over the door. On the south-east side two are blank, four have the Tresham arms, and three the Tresham crest; nine have other coats, amongst them being Harrington, Parr, Ross, and Parker. The north face has six blank, three with the Tresham arms, and three with their crest; among the other six are Harrington, Montacute, and Strongbow. The south-west face has also six blank, three with the Tresham arms, and three with their crest; among the other six are Fitzhugh, Marmion, Walrond, and de Saint Quintin."

"The most generally received account of the object of this building, makes it to have been a disguised religious house or chapel wherein the priests might say mass without fear of detection. This conjecture is probable, and no other of greater plausibility has been suggested. The frequent recurrence of the triple form has been held to be a sermon in stones preached on the doctrine of the Trinity; but it is much to be doubted if this doctrine were uppermost in the builder's mind. Is it not more likely that the whole is a grand illustration of his own name and arms?—an innocent conceit for the elaboration of which his lengthened imprisonments had given the poor man ample time; and, if so, the great Christian verity would also be illustrated and adapted as an exemplification of the designer's ideas; but it would be subsidiary to the main design. That it has several sacred symbols carved on it does not prove it to have been for an exclusively religious end. A man who had suffered so much for his religion, whose estates had been wasted by fines, and whose body had been weakened by long occupation of his 'familiar prison,' whose son had been only by great exertions saved from the scaffold, may well be excused for having religious devices engraven on a building even of purely secular character. Little, therefore, is to be argued from the carvings as to its object. It is, perhaps, hopeless now to assign definitely for what purpose it was built. Within memory it has been occupied by a servant of the house." (Architectural Description of the Triangular Lodge, by the Rev. W. D. Sweeting, M.A.) On carefully looking round it, the observant visitor will perceive that almost everything about it is trine. Popular rumour affirms the existence of an underground passage, from the lodge to the mansion. There is not, as far as we can learn, any other ground for this rumour than an excavation running a few yards from the lodge: no evidence whatever appearing of its having been ever carried beyond this short distance. Sir Thomas Tresham was originally a Protestant, but had been converted to the ancient faith by Campion and Parsons, two Catholic missionaries. He was cruelly persecuted, because he would not swear that Campion had not been in his house; and was sentenced to pay a heavy fine, and to be imprisoned until he should swear as required. Under this and other severe sentences passed on him for recusancy, he suffered imprisonment several times; and for more than twenty years he constantly paid into the treasury £260 a year as the penalty for not going to church. Writing to Lord Howard, about two years before his death, he said that "he had completed his triple apprenticeship in direct adversity, and that the years seemed to him but a few days, for the love he bore his beloved, beautiful, and graceful Rachel," meaning the Catholic Church.

The Village of Rushton stands about 4 miles N.N.W. from Kettering by road, and 79 from London.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is a stone structure, consisting of nave, chancel, north aisle, with "Lady Chapel," south porch, and square embattled tower, containing five bells and a clock. The building, which is of the Early English character (except the clerestory windows, which are in the Tudor style), was thoroughly restored and fitted up in 1869, chiefly at the expense of the patron; the chancel was newly roofed and furnished with carved oak stalls, at the expense of the rector; and the pillars and arcades, separating the nave from the north aisle, were rebuilt, and both were fitted with open sittings of carved oak. A handsome carved oak pulpit, resting on a base of Caen stone, and a carved oak lectern and reading-desk were added, together with a fine octahedron font of Bath stone, elaborately carved, and having on four sides representations of the four Evangelists. It stands at the west end of the nave, upon an upright shaft and four smaller columns of Devonshire marble. There are in the chancel, nave, &c., several handsome memorial windows of stained glass to the Wetherall, Thornhill, Ashby, and other families, and a fine brass in the nave erected by W. C. C. Thornhill, Esq., in memory of his wife, who died in 1865. There is on the north side of the chancel a monument of historical interest; it is a fine altar tomb of alabaster and marble, to the memory of Sir Thomas Tresham. The figure is life-size, in a recumbent position, with the hands folded in an attitude of prayer. He is in the habit of lord prior; a tight shirt of mail is covered by a long-flowing gown, the sword is by his side, the cross of the Templars on his breast, he wears numerous rings, and has both beard and moustache. On the west side of the tomb is a shield of arms, and over all is an escutcheon of pretence, containing ten coats. Four of these coats—Ross, Parr, Fitzhugh, and Marmion—were borne by Catherine Parr, the consort of Henry VIII., and these appear on the shield of Sir Thomas's wife, who was daughter to Lord Parr. The late Rev. Thomas James, in a paper on "Round Churches," referring to this monument, says:—"And this last grave of its last prior is yet to be found in this county. In the parish church of Rushton (removed, I believe, from the destroyed church, which stood in the last century close to the hall), is the beautiful monument of Sir Thomas Tresham, in his robes of prior of the Order of St John of Jerusalem. Though Henry VIII. suppressed the order, Queen Mary revived it on her attaining the throne, and appointed Sir Thomas Tresham, well regarded for his adherence to the "unreformed" faith, as the head and prior of the order in England. He died shortly after; and this most unique and curious, but little known monument, remains a singular memorial of the last brief revival of this ancient society." There is another fine altar tomb of granite in the Lady Chapel, bearing the figure of a cross-legged knight in armour, supposed to be a crusader, with a shield on the left arm, and the right hand grasping a sword. These monuments were formerly in St Peter's Church (the burial-place of the Treshams), which was standing in Bridges' time, and from which they were removed, when that building was taken down, to their present position. There was another memorial tomb, with the figure of a nun in marble. This was Clementina Tresham, sister of Sir Thomas; she was of Sion monastery, and had a pension at its dissolution. She died in 1567, but her tomb has not been preserved. The benefice is a rectory united with that of St Peter. The former was rated in the king's books at £10, 12s. 10d., the latter at £11, 13s. 4d., and is now worth upwards of £700 per annum. It is in the deanery of Rothwell, in the patronage of W. C. C. Thornhill, Esq., and incumbency of the Rev. Abiather Hawkes, M.A. There was a chantry in this church, founded in 1267 in honour of the Blessed Virgin. The Rectory House, which stands near the church, is a substantial building. The Parochial School, with teacher's residence attached, was erected in 1852 by W. W. Hope, Esq., and is principally supported by Mr Thornhill and the rector.

Rushton Hall, the seat of William Capel Clarke Thornhill, Esq., was commenced by Sir Thomas Tresham about 1595, but appears to have been carried on and finished by the Cockayne family at different periods to 1630. It is a fine building, surrounding three sides of a quadrangle, having upon the front a Doric screen. Amidst the delightful shades of the wilderness, Dryden passed much of his time, and is said to have written the "Hind and Panther," published in 1687, at this seat. In 1832 this mansion was undergoing some repairs, and on the removal of a lintel, over an ancient doorway, a handsomely bound breviary fell out. On further search, an opening was discovered in a thick stone wall, of about 5 feet long, and 15 inches wide, containing about 20 Catholic books, in excellent preservation, and several bundles of MSS., consisting of historical notes by Sir Thomas Tresham, building bills, and a portion of the domestic correspondence of the family. There is nothing in the papers specially relating to the Gunpowder Plot, but they contain much valuable information upon the condition and domestic history of the Catholics at that period; their expectations from

James I. ; their grievous disappointments on his accession ; and they throw great light upon the causes which led to the conspiracy. (See Calendar of Papers preserved in Rushton Hall, published by Messrs Taylor & Son, Northampton.)

The Charities of the parish are £50, which was left to the poor in 1671 by William Quarles, and invested in the 3 per cent. consols. The Hon. William Cockayne, who died in 1809, bequeathed £100, now in the 3 per cent. consols. The interest of these dividends are distributed amongst the poor at Easter.

PIPEWELL, or PIPEWELL, hamlet was formerly an extra-parochial district, within the precincts of Rockingham forest, and now lying in the parishes of Rushton, All Saints, Great Oakley, and Wilbarston. It took its name from a neighbouring spring. Here was anciently a small village which fell to decay on the dissolution of the abbey.

Pipwell Abbey, for monks of the Cistercian order, and dedicated in honour of the Blessed Virgin, was founded about the latter part of the reign of king Stephen, by William Butevileyn. In the earliest charters after its foundation it is called St Mary de Divisis, either because it stood on two distinct fees, Wahul and Geytington, or because its demesnes lay on both sides of Harper's Brook, which divides the hundreds of Rothwell and Corby. Ranulph, Earl of Chester, Robert Fitz-Hugh de Pipewell, and several others, endowed it with lands here and in other places. There were two granges called East and West Grange, connected with the abbey. By the survey of its estate and possession, in 1535, the annual profits arising from the monastery were valued at £347, 8s. ; and after paying the various rents resolute, fees, &c., the clear annual value was £283, 1s. 7d. In the 1st of Edward VI. (1547), William, Marquis of Northampton, obtained a grant of the possessions of the abbey here ; and, in the 17th of Elizabeth (1575), the site of the monastery and granges were given to John Dudley and John Ascoughe, for lands in other places. Pipwell is situated about two miles north of Rushton. William Holden Hambrough, Esq., is the principal proprietor.

Post-Office.—John Sharman, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Kettering at 8 A.M., and are despatched at 5 P.M. The nearest Money-Order Office is Rothwell.

Beadman Mrs Maria Elizabeth, vict. Thornhill Arms	Sheffield Joseph & Son, coal merts. h. Geddington Grange	Burnaby Frederick, Low Lodge, Pipwell
Bellamy John, schoolmaster	Stiles Jas. wheelwrt. & blksmith.	Cockin Samuel
Benner George, station-master	millar, grocer, and baker	Cook Edward, Lodge
Coe Samuel, shopkeeper	Thornhill Wm. Capel Clarke, Esq. ushton Hall	Cook Henry, Lodge
Ellis & Everard, coal merchts.	West, Biddles & Co. coal merts.	Craddock Robert, Lodge
Hawkes Rev. A., M.A. rector	Farmers and Graziers.	Lole Benjamin
Hood Hon. Alexander Freder- rick, Esq. Pipwell Hall	Burditt Charles William	Stiles John
Sharman John, parish clerk		Trolove William Henry
		Willows John Glover

SIBBERTOFT PARISH

Is bounded by Clipston on the east, Marston Trussell on the north, Leicester-shire on the west, and Naseby on the south. It contains 2011 acres of the rateable value of £3606 ; the gross estimated rental is £4071, 5s. 6d. ; and the population in 1801 was 330 ; in 1831, 402 ; in 1841, 437 ; in 1851, 376 ; in 1861, 399 ; and in 1871, 328 souls. The greater part of the lordship is in grass, the soil is chiefly a mixed loam, and the principal landowners are Lady Elizabeth Villiers, Sir James H. Langham, Bart. (the lord of the manor), Messrs William and John Smeeton, and John Scott. Of this lordship Bridges says, "Its situation is high, several hills lying about it ; of these the most remarkable is Fox Hill, to the N.E. of the town, where on the ground now called the castle yard, anciently stood a castle. In the lower part is a promontory shooting northward into a deep valley formed by a steep hill on each side ; on the point of the promontory is raised a round mount, entrenched on the south side and with a natural precipice on the other sides ; southwardly below this mount is a semicircular bank encompassed with a trench, and enclosing an area of about half an acre ; and upon the borders of this trench have been dug up the remains of a stone wall. The entrance to this fortress is from the north very narrow, and so defended with hills that it could not from that quarter be attacked without great difficulty; and it appears to have been designed to repel the inroads of a northern enemy. It is supposed to have been a British fortress and in connection with that at East Farndon. At the battle of Naseby, King Charles I.'s standard was erected on Moot Hill, about half a mile eastward of the town. The river Welland has its rise here from a fine spring near the Vicarage House, and flows through the village to Hothorpe."

Manor.—The Earl of Morton held 3 hides here at the general survey, which were afterwards with the remainder of his estate forfeited to the crown. In the reign of Henry III., the manor of Sibbertoft was held of the family of le Archer, in capite of the Crown, by the serjeanty of finding one foot soldier with a bow and arrows to serve in the king's army, within the bounds of the realm, for forty days at his own expense. From this family it passed to Roger Brabazon, who in the thirty-eighth of Edward I. (1309), obtained a grant of a weekly market here, on Saturday, and an annual fair, on the eve and festival of the Invention of the Holy Cross; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), he was lord of the manor. The next possessors of it were the Staffords, from whom it passed through intermediate hands to the family of Smith, who held it in the reigns of Henry VIII. and Edward VI., and it was carried in marriage in the following reign to William Alicock. In the third of Charles I. (1627) John and Thomas Alicock conveyed the manor of Sibbertoft and Westhorpe to William Halford, Esq., in fee; and in 1661, Roger Halford sold them with other lands here, to Sir John Langham, Bart., for £3897, in whose family it has continued down to the present time. The income of the estate is appropriated to the support of Cottesbrook Hospital and the free grammar school at Guilsborough. The Knights Hospitallers and the Abbey of Sulby had each possessions in this parish.

The Village of Sibbertoft, which is scattered, is distant 6 miles S.W. of Market Harborough, 3 N.E. from Welford, 13 N.W. from Kettering, and 81 from London.

The Church, dedicated to St Helen, is a neat structure consisting of a nave, north and south aisles, south porch, chancel, and tower containing five bells and a clock. It was enlarged by the addition of the south aisle, the foundation stone of which was laid in 1863. A brass tablet in the north aisle bears the following inscription, "The roof of this aisle was restored by the Hon. Frederick and Lady Elizabeth Villiers in memory of the late Rev. Thomas James, M.A., vicar of this parish, December 2d, 1864," and there is also a stained glass window in the chancel erected to his memory, also one to the Rev. T. Bull. The floor is laid with encaustic tiles of various colours and designs, the pulpit and reading-desk are of carved oak, and the entrance to the pulpit is by a winding staircase discovered in the wall during the alterations. An excellent clock was placed in the tower in 1872, by Lady Elizabeth Villiers, in memory of her husband, Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Frederick William Child Villiers. The bells were presented by George Payne, Esq., when he came of age. The font is well worth notice: it served as a pedestal for that previously used, but it is now restored to its original purpose. There is a monument to Ambrose Saunders, Esq., High Sheriff of this county, who died October 7th, 1765; and a brass bearing the following inscription, besides another in Latin:—"Anno dni 1564. Septembris 20—Anthony Atkins.

"Atkins priest religeous and lerned
Not haveyng where to dwell
Wandering lycke at last heare stayed
Tyll deathe did lyfe expell."

It now stands on a marble pedestal with four smaller marble columns. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Rothwell, in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough, and incumbency of the Rev. Miles Joseph Berkeley, M.A. The value of the benefice is about £400 per annum. The Vicarage House was erected in 1867.

The Methodist Chapel, erected in 1824, is a plain brick building, and the National School was built in 1847, and a teacher's residence added in 1864.

Letters through Market Harborough. The nearest Money-Order Office is Welford.

Berkeley Capt. Emeric Streatfield, The Cottage	Linnel Wm. jun. farm bailiff	Williams William, shoemaker
Berkeley Rev. Miles Joseph, M.A. F.L.S. vicar	Ore Mrs Ann A. schoolmrs.	Farmers and Graziers.
Barber William, blacksmith	Ore John Lambert, carp. & jr.	Bassett John, and fellmonger and woolstapler
Barker Andrew, shopkeeper	Payne Henry, butcher	Berridge William
Basset James, fellmonger	Steanes George Newton, blacksmith, & vict. Old Swan	Gilbert James, Manor House
Harald George, tailor	Ward Isaac, baker	Jennaway Thomas
Jones William, butcher	Wilford Halford, shopkeeper	Manton Thomas Varnham
Kemp Baptist, vet. surgeon, M.R.C.V.S.L. and grazier	Wilford John, thrashing-machine owner	Perkins Joseph, jun.
	Wilford Shadrach, vict. Red Lion	Smeeton Job (yeoman), grazier

Carrier.—Peter Bassett, to Market Harborough on Tuesday.

SULBY.

Sulby is a parish containing 1565a. 2r. 26p.; of the gross estimated rental of £3250, 12s. 3d., and the rateable value is £2910. Its population in 1801 was 43; in 1831, 78; in 1841, 70; in 1851, 70; in 1861, 87; and in 1871, 81 souls. It contains 13 dispersed houses, and is situate 1 mile north from Welford, and 6 miles S.W. from Market Harborough. The land is principally in grass; and Lady Elizabeth Villiers, and the Dowager Lady Willoughby de Broke, the lady of the manor, are the proprietors.

Sulby Abbey was founded by William de Wideville about 1115, for monks of the Premonstratensian Order. Sir Robert de Paveley was also a great benefactor to this monastery; it was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and at the dissolution was valued at £305, 8s. 5d. per annum. In 1567 it was granted to Sir Christopher Hatton; its site is now occupied by farming buildings, and is the property of Lady Willoughby de Broke.

Sulby Hall, the seat of Lady Elizabeth Villiers, is a fine mansion about 1 mile N.E. from Welford. It was erected about the year 1795, after a design by Soane. In the grounds is a very fine piece of water, and the celebrated field of Naseby is comprised in the views.

Letters are received from Welford, which is the nearest Money-Order Office, via Rugby.

Jones John Lewis, farm bailiff	Woddrop William Allen, Esq.	Farmers and Graziers.
Nightingale Wm. coachman	Sulby House	Berridge James, Sulby Lodge
Villiers Lady Elizabeth, Sulby Hall	Warren James, farm bailiff	Linnell William
	Williams Rob. gardener, Hall	Linnell William, Sulby Grange

THEDDINGWORTH (PART OF) PARISH.

The parish of Theddingworth is mostly situated in the hundred of Gartree, Leicestershire, and partly in this hundred. The whole parish contains 2220 acres, and 268 inhabitants in 1871. Its rateable value is about £4340, and the gross estimated rental £5180.

The hamlet of Hothorpe, which is the part lying in this county, contains 932 acres, and 32 inhabitants, and its rateable value is about £1700, and the gross estimated rental £2100. The hamlet lies about a quarter of a mile S. of Theddingworth, and Henry Everett, Esq., is lord of the manor and the sole owner of the soil. His seat is Hothorpe House, a handsome mansion, pleasantly situated in a valley $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. of Market Harborough.

THORPE LUBENHAM PARISH.

Thorpe Lubenham, formerly an extra-parochial district, was constituted an independent parish in 1863. It contains 352 acres, of the rateable value of £883; the gross estimated rental is £987.

Thorpe Lubenham Hall, the only residence in the parish, and the seat of Hugh Stratford Stratford, Esq., the entire owner of the soil, is situate about 2 miles west from Market Harborough. The population in 1871 was 20.

Letters are received through Market Harborough.
Stratford Hugh Stratford, Esq., Thorpe Lubenham Hall.

THORPE MALSOR PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Kettering on the east, Rothwell on the north, Loddington on the west, and Cransley on the south. It contains 896 acres, of the rateable value of £1881, 8s.; the gross estimated rental is £2072; and the population in 1801 was 230; in 1831, 297; in 1841, 366; in 1851, 296; in 1861, 297; and in 1871, 199 souls. About two-thirds of the parish is arable; the soil is chiefly a red loam on ironstone; and the Rev. G. E. Maunsell, M.A., is lord of the manor, and principal landowner. Thorpe Malsor or Malsover is named from the Malesoures who were formerly lords of it. The parish contains several excellent springs, one of which, at the end of the town, is walled in, and a square stone in the wall bears date 1589; there is also an abundance of building stone in the parish.

Manor.—There is no mention of this lordship in the Domesday Book, but in the reign of Henry II., Fucherus Malesoures held 1½ hide here of the fee of William Avenel, and at what time the estate passed from this family is not known, but in the 4th of Edward I. (1275), William de Trussell held it. With the Trussells the lordship continued till the reign of Henry VII., when it was carried in marriage to John Vere, earl of Oxford. In the twentieth of Elizabeth (1577), Edward, earl of Oxford, sold it to John Watkyn, gent., who resold it in the twentieth of James I. (1619), to John Maunsell, Esq., of Chicheley, in Buckinghamshire, and in this family it still continues.

The Village of Thorpe Malsor is distant about 2½ miles west by north of Kettering, and 77 from London.

The Church, dedicated to St Leonard, is principally in the Decorated and Perpendicular styles, and consists of a nave, side aisles, chancel, north chantry chapel, north and south porches, tower and spire containing six bells—the sixth, (a treble bell) was given by the late W. T. Maunsell, Esq. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £11, 14s. 2d., but now worth about £320 per annum, in the gift of and held by the Rev. G. E. Maunsell, M.A., who resides at the Hall. The tithes were commuted in 1777 for land.

Thorpe Malsor Hall, the seat of the Rev. G. E. Maunsell, M.A., is a substantial mansion, erected in the reign of James I.

Charity.—Mrs Savage left £270 consols (stock), the interest of which, £7, 17s. 8d., is given to the poor in coal.

Letters are received through the Kettering Post-office.

Andrew Henry, carpenter
Essam Mrs Eliz. vict. Crown
Essam Joseph, shopkeeper
Maunsell Rev. George Edmond, M.A. rector

Roe John, gardener, Hall
Stevens Solomon, carpenter
Willis Richard, baker

Farmers and Graziers.

Garratt Richard, Lancefield
Mawby Mrs Ann
Stonton Richard Garratt
Willis Saml. & William, Lodge

ORLINGBURY HUNDRED.

THE boundaries of Orlingbury, or, as it is called in Domesday Book, Ordinbaro, are formed by the hundred of Rothwell on the north, that of Guilsborough on the west, Spelhoe and Hamfordshoe hundreds on the south, and Huxloe on the east. It is situated near the centre of the county, and extends over an area of 29,600 acres. At the time of the Norman survey, Houghton, Langport, Scald-well, Walde, Faxton, Waldegrave, and Bricklesworth were comprised in the hundred of Maleslea. This division subsisted till the reign of Edward I., when the fifteen parishes which at present compose it constituted the hundred of Orlingbury. The fee of it is in the Crown, and the following is an enumeration showing the number of acres as collected from the rate-books, together with the population and number of houses in 1871, and the rateable value and gross estimated rental of each parish.

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Brixworth,	3,052	246	31	—	553	559	1,112	£ 6,392	£ 7,569
Broughton,	1,674	161	11	4	335	319	654	3,636	4,041
Cransley,	2,062	67	9	—	159	170	329	3,958	4,310
Hannington,	1,192	45	6	—	107	115	222	1,572	1,856
Hardwycke,	1,235	24	2	—	54	49	103	1,367	1,530
Harrowden, Great,	1,347	28	—	—	49	68	117	3,460	4,055
Harrowden, Little,	1,505	160	8	—	372	371	743	4,156	4,959
Isham,	1,332	93	9	—	227	229	456	3,722	4,414
Lampport,	1,394	29	1	—	81	86	167	2,480	2,850
Hanging Houghton, &c. }	1,292	26	—	—	55	52	107	2,135	2,500
Faxton Chapelry,	1,774	18	—	—	37	36	73	2,838	3,104
Old, or Wold,	1,954	99	19	—	207	209	416	3,445	4,078
Orlingbury,	1,858	74	2	—	141	154	295	2,372	2,927
Pytchley,	2,792	130	4	2	281	266	547	5,566	6,295
Scaldwell,	1,214	92	16	—	182	186	368	2,378	2,810
Walgrave,	2,253	154	7	—	343	317	660	3,449	3,978
	27,930	1,446	125	6	3,183	3,186	6,369	52,926	61,276

CHARITIES OF ORLINGBURY HUNDRED, as abstracted from the Parliamentary reports, &c. See also the histories of the parishes, &c. :—

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purposes applied.	Annual value.
	Poors' Land (13a. 1r. 13p.).....	Brixworth parish.....	£40 5 0
	Church Land (6a. 2r.).....	Ditto	20 0 0
1601.	Thomas Lelam	Ditto, poor.....	0 8 0
1665.	Thomas Roe (24a. 2r. 11p.).....	Ditto and Scaldwell, school.....	85 0 0
1674.	Edward Hunt (61a.).....	Broughton, Kettering, Rothwell, Pytchley, Weekley, Warkton, } poor.....	120 0 0
	Poor's and Town Land (14a.).....	Broughton parish	30 0 0
1777.	Elizabeth Henchman (£40)	Ditto, poor widows	2 0 0
	Church Land (18a.).....	Ditto	36 0 0
1857.	Lord Douglas (£1000 3 per cent.)... Mr Holled (£10).....	Ditto, poor..... Cransley parish, bread to poor	30 0 0 0 10 0
1729.	John Warner.....	Ditto, ditto	0 10 0
1823.	Rev. George Anderson (rent)..... The Wentworth Charity..... Poor's Land (2a. 23p.)..... Church Allotment (40a. 9p.).....	Ditto, school	26 0 0
1661.	William Aylworth.....	Harrowden (Great), parish, poor	16 13 0
	Church and Charity Land (36a. 23p.)	Harrowden (Little), parish..... Ditto.....	5 0 0 100 0 0
		Ditto, school	26 0 0
		Isham parish, church and ap- prenticing	75 18 0
1762.	Sir Edmund Isham.....	Ditto, school	45 0 0
	Ditto.....	Ditto, poor	5 0 0
1829.	William Green (£300 4 new per cent. annuities).....	Ditto, ditto	12 0 0
1829.	Mrs Green (£19, 19s. 3½ per cent.) Ditto (£40, 3½ per cent stock)	Ditto, Sunday school	0 14 0
1730.	Susannah Danvers	Ditto, bread to the poor	1 8 0
1750.	Robert Bushby (£10)	Ditto, four poor persons	2 0 0
1818.	Joseph Manning (£11)	Orlingbury parish, poor	0 10 0
		Ditto, ditto.....	0 18 0

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purposes applied.	Annual value.
1668.	Rev. John Townson (33a. 8p.)	Old parish, school and poor.....	£70 0 0
1707.	John Ward (cottage)	Ditto, poor.....	2 0 0
	Advice Lucas (£40).....	With which 1a. 1r. was purchased
	Added from Townson's Charity...}	ditto, poor	10 0 0
1768.	Poor's Allotment (24a.)	Ditto, school	20 5 0
	Church or Town Land (11a. & tene.)	Ditto	56 0 0
1774.	James Parr (£100)	Ditto, school and poor.....	5 0 0
	Francis Baxter (rent)	Ditto, bread to poor.....	0 15 0
	Rev. Dr Napleton	Ditto, Bibles, &c. to poor, lost.
1661.	William Aylworth (rents).....	Pytchley parish, school.....	20 0 0
1674.	Hunt's Charity	Ditto, poor.....	5 0 0
	Church Allotment (14a.)	Ditto.....	40 0 0
1685.	Edw. Palmer (£100), expended in land	Scaldwell parish, poor	30 10 0
1665.	Thomas Roe.....	Ditto, school (See Brixworth)
	Ditto (rent)	Ditto, bread to poor, and preach- ing a sermon	1 10 0
1775.	Poor's Allotment (4a. & an annual payment of 10s.)	Ditto, poor.....	16 0 0
1738.	Town Estate.....	Ditto	2 10 0
	Town Land (35a. 2r. 15p.)	Walgrave parish, poor.....	50 0 0
	Poor's Allotment (8a.)	Ditto, ditto	14 0 0
	Francis Baxter (rent)	Ditto, ditto	0 15 0
1812.	John Sheldon (£12)	Ditto, ditto	0 8 6
1670.	Montague Lane (£400)	Ditto, school	12 0 0
Total.....			£1039 7 6

BRIXWORTH PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the east by Scaldwell, on the north by Lamport, on the west by Spratton, and on the south by Pitsford. Its area is 3052 acres, of the rateable value of £6392; and its gross estimated rental is £7569. The population of the parish in 1801 was 718; in 1831, 973; in 1841, 1202; in 1851, 1258; in 1861, 1260; and in 1871, 1112 souls. The soil, which varies in quality, belongs to several proprietors, the principal of whom are Thomas Wood, Esq. (lord of the manor), Rev. W. W. Andrew, Lord Overstone, Richard Lee Bevan, Esq., Henry O. Nethercote, Esq., and a few resident yeomen and freeholders. The original name of the place, according to the Saxon Chronicle, is Bricklesworthe; in the Domesday Book it is written Bricklesworde. In the taxation of Pope Nicholas it is written Bricklesworthy, and afterwards Bricklesworth. The name is first found in its present form in the "Valor Ecclesiasticus." The original word Bricklesworthe, says Bridges, denotes its fame for springs, of which it has an abundant supply. "There is scarce a field in the lordship," says the Rev. C. F. Watkins, "in which you cannot arrive at a spring of moderate depth, and generally one near the surface, which vindicates the auspicious meaning of the word."

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, the lordship of Briclesworde contained 9½ hides of land, which were in the hands of the Crown. To this manor pertained the lordship of Holcot, and a wood, and the whole was valued at £36. In the reign of Henry II., Simon Fitz-Simon held 8½ hides here, of the fee of Curcy; and Alured 1 hide and 1 virgate of the fee of Salesburi. Simon, son and successor of the above-named Simon Fitz-Simon, obtained a grant of a weekly market on Tuesday, and an annual fair for three days, beginning on the Eve of St Boniface. The family of De Verdon possessed a large estate here in the reign of Edward I., and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), John de Verdon was lord of Brixworth. In the eighth of Henry IV. (1396), John Pylkington levied a fine of the manor, and it descended to his posterity. About the reign of Henry VIII., it became divided into three manors, one of which was called Wolfage, which name it still bears.

The Village of Brixworth, which is large and scattered, contains several very good houses, and is situate six miles north of Northampton. Bartlet's Well was made in 1631 by Margaret Bartlet, for the use of travellers. Bridges tells us that "to the north of the church are vestigia of trenches, and to the east of it butts or hillocks." "That the Romans had a station here of some importance is a reasonable presumption," says the Rev. C. F. Watkins, "as there is a castmentation in the paddock adjoining the churchyard, and it is central in the line of the forts which have been traced on either side, from the Wash on the east to the Severn on the west of the island; and Roman coins of Antoninus Pius, and Carausius, and also Roman urns, have been dug up in the place." Here is an annual fair on the 5th of June. The celebrated Pytchley hounds have been kept here for some time, and the kennels and stables are near to the village. The Right Hon. Earl Spencer, K.G., Althorpe Park, is master. The Northampton and Market Harborough branch of the London and North Western Railway has two stations in the parish, each about three quarters of a mile from the village; one is the Spratton station.

The Church, which is dedicated to All Saints, occupies a gentle acclivity overlooking the village, and is one of the most remarkable structures in the county. Its origin we are told by Leland, on the authority of Hugo, the monk of Peterborough, and recorded by Dugdale in his "Monasticon," took place under the rule of Saxulphus or Saxwulf, the first Abbot of Medehamstede, towards the latter part of the seventh century, probably in 673, the last year of his abbacy. The particular date of its erection is, however, uncertain, but about 690 it was a dependency of Medehamstede, and had a monastery attached to it. Some antiquarians give to this church a more remote antiquity even than that assigned to it by the monk Hugo. Many think it probable that it was founded in the time of the Romans; and if so, it is the only ecclesiastical monument of that people in this country, as well as the most ancient of our ecclesiastical edifices. This opinion seems in some measure confirmed by the discoveries which have been made during its restoration by the late vicar, Rev. C. F. Watkins, who found within the square tower the bases of circular columns, which formed the propyleum to the Roman temple, or early Christian Church, of the four first centuries, after the model of which this church was built. Mr Watkins also discovered in one of the piers of the early Saxon arches, a Roman eagle of the Assyrian type, built in by the Saxons, and evidently taken from an earlier building. The reasonable conclusion is, he adds, that the Saxons of the seventh century rebuilt their churches after the form of provincial basilica or stationary Prætorium of the earliest and simplest type.

The church, as we are told by Tanner, in his "Notitia," was partially destroyed by the Danes in 870, the aisles and part of the chancel being entirely demolished, but the nave with its noble arcade and clerestory, and the chief part of the square tower, with the north end of the chancel, escaped their fury. Soon after this date, the round tower, which reaches more than half-way, was appended to the square porch at the west end. This tower, which is of the Saxon period, has a winding staircase from top to bottom, and is loopholed all round for archery, most probably to serve for defence against the incursions of the Danes, and to secure the church, and perhaps the inhabitants, from any future assaults of those fierce invaders. Coeval with the staircase is a three-light window with baluster shafts like those at Earl's Barton, and St Benet's, Cambridge, set in upon an earlier semicircular arch of the same character as the rest of the original structure. The tower is of the same date as Earl's Barton, but the church is much earlier. That a monastery was attached to it is evident from the remains which were discovered by Mr Watkins, when rebuilding the vicarage house. These remains consisted of arches of the Saxon and Transition periods, decayed coffins, and human skeletons which were then exhumed. The church has undergone great and successive alterations of an architectural character which may be traced through the various styles of which it is composed. The arches, springing from the original nave into the aisles, had been for the most part stopped up. The staircase turret, the belfry story of the tower and a lofty spire, with an aisle on the south side of the nave, were added in later times; and windows of various dates, styles, and sizes inserted, and other changes made at different periods from the Conquest to the Reformation.

"The original aisles, which were built in with the arcade," says Mr Watkins, "must have been destroyed before the Norman period, for a Norman door has been inserted in one of the original arches of the nave, which could not have been done had the south aisle been standing; and thus we deduce the erection of the main structure (consisting of the nave, the square tower, the remains of the eastern apse, and the destroyed aisles with their double terminals), to precede the ninth century, when the alterations first commenced. The ground plan of the building, taken from existing remains, shows that it was built after the earliest types of the Basilica, traced through Roman examples to one in Nineveh, discovered by Layard, and that it is the only one in this kingdom preserved from such great antiquity.

"The eastern apse, polygonal without, and semicircular within, is of the same date and style as the nave, and is surrounded by a corridor or ambulatory, the outward wall of which is parallel to the inner circular wall, having recesses in some of the sides, and receiving a vaulted ceiling from the string course of the inner circular wall. The north and south aisles, each terminating at the east end in a square apse, and at the west end in an oblong, the recess from the wall of the nave to the square tower being added to the square terminal of the aisle. The whole nave is ninety feet long by thirty in width, originally parted at two-thirds its length, or sixty feet, from its west end by a transverse wall—now no more—with a central or triumphal arch in the middle, corresponding to the large arch which leads into the eastern apse. Besides this central arch, it had arched openings on either side with clerestory windows above, corresponding and opposite to those at the east end."

The walls of the nave between the west end and the extinct partition, are sixty feet in length, and consist on either side of four bays, the arches of which are semicircular, and built with Roman tiles, or flat bricks of large dimensions, resting upon square imposts of the same material, and set upon square piers of brick tiles and stone intermixed. Above, on either side, are three clerestory windows, built in the same form, but much narrower and smaller. They are constructed with a mixture of stone and fragments of bricks, as though all the whole bricks taken from a previous building had been exhausted in the construction of the lower arches.

That the Roman tiles used were taken from a pre-existing building is evident, not only from their fragmentary character in the clerestory, and even in the piers and walls beneath, but also from the appearance of Roman mortar, of a different character from the rest, which was found some time ago still adhering to one of the tiles. Besides the Roman tiles used in the construction of the church, the materials were principally the stones of the neighbouring beds, which belong to the lias formation, and the masonry is, for the most part, of a rubble texture, strengthened at the corners with large rude blocks of granite, sandstone, and clay slate, transported from other strata, as well as the rubbly stones, cemented together by a mortar as hardened as the stones themselves. There is also a kind of tufa or carbonate of lime used in the upper arch of the square tower, but which is very sparsely mixed in this local bed.

The square tower is of the same massive character as the nave, with similar arches on its four sides—the largest to the west forming the original grand west entrance to the building; a lesser one leading into the nave; and on the sides, two still smaller ones, leading into the western terminals, or apsidal chambers of the north and south aisles. The arches are similar in their form and material, and composed of Roman tiles as entire as those of the nave. "The square tower," says Mr Watkins, "was subject to the first alterations of which we have any evidence, that is in the year 870; for when the round tower was then, or very soon after, appended thereto, and pierced for archery, to protect the place against any fresh aggression of the Danes, the semicircular arch in the east end of the square tower was shorn of its crown, to receive the three-light window named above, with baluster shafts, as a substitute for the window in the west end, which had been closed up by the building of the round tower."

The present south aisle was added in the Early English period, as a chapel for the family of Sir John de Verdun, whose effigy, in the costume of a Knight Templar, is in an arched recess; and there is in a similar recess an altar tomb to the late Lord Inverurie, who died in 1842. There is also in the south aisle a handsome oak screen of the sixteenth century. And there is a stone slab, with an inscription in Norman French, early in the fourteenth century, to the memory of Adam de Taunton, vicar of the parish; and a similar one of the same period to Simon Curtais. Another of the same period to one Hugo, probably the monk of Peterborough. These three are in the floor of the nave.

The noble central arch in the eastern wall of the nave or choir, remains entire as originally built. The two clerestory windows above, which served to throw light into the choir, and two similar windows on the opposite wall, brought a further portion of light from the clerestory of the nave. Underneath these windows were arched doorways, those at the east end leading down to the ambulatory, and at the west end into the choir from the nave. In the reign of Henry VI., adds Mr Watkins, "the chancel must have been elongated, as the late east window would testify; but whether the original apse had remained entire up to this period, or had undergone previous mutilation, it is impossible to say. Luckily two sides of the outward polygon, with the outward parallel wall, and the corresponding part of the ambulatory, two recesses, and the original steps of descent remain, and the whole circular wall of the crypt upon which the apse was built, so as to direct us rightly in the restoration of this interesting portion of the original building."

This venerable and beautiful edifice is one of the most interesting in England. There is scarcely a church in the whole kingdom whose ecclesiastical history extends over a longer period, or which bears stronger testimony to the different eras in which it was constructed, and the various styles of architecture which it represents, viz.—The Later Saxon, the Post-Norman, Transition Norman, Late Norman, Early English, Decorated, and Tudor. The church now consists of nave, apsidal chancel, south transept, and square tower, surmounted by a lofty spire, and containing five bells. It was re-opened on the 11th July 1866, after a thorough restoration, at a cost of £2500, raised by the voluntary contributions of the nobility and gentry of the county. By the restoration two hundred and forty-seven additional free seats have been secured; and open sittings of Baltic pine were substituted for the old ones. The chancel was rebuilt on the original crypt wall, and in accordance with a part of the original building still standing. The recovery by the Corporation of Worcester of their ancient seal, having the exterior of a Saxon church of the same period incised upon it, is copied in the Architectural Journal. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £14, 15s. 10d., and now worth about £380 per annum. It was endowed with £200 of Queen Anne's bounty, to meet a donation of £200 from Sir Justinian Isham, Bart., in 1726; is in the gift of the bishop of the diocese, and incumbency of the Rev. Henry Erskine Gedge, M.A. The value of the living in Pope Nicholas' taxation was £21, 6s. 8d. for the rectory, and £4, 13s. 4d. for the vicarage. The tithes were commuted for land in 1780. The Vicarage House is pleasantly situated near the church. Bridges says, "There are old arches in the Vicarage House, and dead bodies have been dug up in the brewhouse and cellar; and from these circumstances it is supposed to have been formerly a chapel." Probably the monastery alluded to above. There was formerly a chantry chapel here, founded by William Courtyes in 1331; and in the manor house of Wolfage, which stood south-west of the village, was likewise a chantry, founded and endowed by Sir James Harrington. Here was also a guild or fraternity in honour of St Boniface.

There is a Methodist Chapel in the village, built by subscription in 1811.

The School was erected by subscription in 1870 on a site given by the late vicar. It stands near the church, and has sufficient accommodation for all the children of the parish, boys and girls. It is supported by subscription, Government grant, and an endowment of £30 a year, arising from land left by Thomas Roe, gent., in 1665; the land consists of 24a. 31p. and lets for £60 per annum; it was originally left for the education of ten poor children of this parish, and ten from Scaldwell parish. The school of the latter parish receives £30 per annum. The other charities belonging to this parish will be found in the table prefixed to the hundred.

Brixworth Hall, the property of Thomas Wood, Esq., and residence of Richard Lee Bevan, Esq., is situated in beautiful grounds, ornamented with a fine fish-pond, and richly clothed with timber.

The Union Workhouse, a handsome stone building, is pleasantly situated, about a quarter of a mile S.W. of the village. It was erected at a cost of £5800, and will accommodate 265 persons. The union comprises 37 parishes and townships, embracing an area of 87 square miles. The following are the parishes—viz., Althorp, Boughton, Brampton Chapel, Brampton Church, Brington, Brixworth, Creaton Great, Creaton Little, Cold Ashby, Coton, Cottesbrooke, Draughton, East Haddon, Faxton, Guilsborough, Hanging Houghton, Hannington, Harlestone, Haselbeech, Holcot, Holdenby, Hollowell, Lamport, Maidwell, Moulton, Naseby, Old, Overstone, Pitsford, Ravensthorpe, Scaldwell, Spratton, Teeton, Thornby, and Walgrave. The principal officers are Mr William Elworthy, chairman to the board of guardians, Rev. W. Bury, and Mr William Hamshaw, vice-chairmen, Mr A. J. Jeffrey, clerk, Rev. John L. Roberts, M.A., chaplain, and Mr Richard and Mrs Giles, master and matron. The medical officers are Messrs Frederick Luther Harper, Wilson H. Hedley, F. H. Marshall, W. Dix, and G. Olive. The average weekly number of paupers received during the past year was about 65, and the average weekly expense of each was 3s. 10d.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank. — William Fox, postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 6 A.M., and are despatched at 6.25 P.M.

Andrew Robt. Carr, solicitor
Attenborough Mrs My. Hannah
Attwood Wm. hairdresser and news-agent

Baxter Wm. station-master
Bevan Richard Lee, Esq. J. P.

Brixworth Hall

Blackmore Thomas, gardener
Buswell John, baker

Cale Reuben, mr. National sch.
Clark Wm. carpr. & wheelwt.

Cooper Major R., The Rookery
Crow Samuel Laundon, regr.
of births & deaths, & r. offir.

Derry Mrs Sarah

Edey Edward, watchmaker
Gedge Rev. Henry Erskine,
M.A. vicar

Giles Rd. mr. union w'khouse
Harper Fred. Luther, surgeon
Matthews Abm. B., sta.-mr.

Spratton station
Watkinson Rev. Jph. (Wesleyan)

Weston Misses Eliza. and Jane
Woodford Mr Joseph

Wright Mr Joseph

Blacksmiths.

Evans Charles
Walter Chas. Benjn. (& agricultural impt. maker)

Boot and Shoemakers.

Burgess Thomas
Gammage George

Builders.

Adnitt James
Payne Frederick

Butchers.

Adnitt Samuel
Alcock Thomas
Allen William
Jones Joseph
Rose George

Farmers and Graziers.

*Marked * are Yeomen.*

Bates John Denny
Cattell William
Elworthy William
Gage Samuel

*Goode John

*Goode Joseph Edward

*Green Miss Frances

Holmes William

Holt William

Howe Benjamin

Ireland Joseph (agt. for L'pool,

London, & Globe fire & life)

Jeyes Francis Chevalier

Laundon William, Lodge

Mallard Jas. Henry (& threshing machine owner)

Turnell Mrs Sophia, Lodge

Grocers.

Baker George (and draper)
Cooper William (and draper)
Co-operative stores — James
Hardwick, manager

Faulkner John
Martin William

Inns and Taverns.

Coach & Horses, John Billing
George, William Sansum
Hare & Hounds, Joseph Richardson (& wheelwright)
Red Lion, William Cattell

Beerhouses.

Adnitt Mrs Elizabeth
Blunt William
Cook Mrs Sarah
Rose George

Plumbers, &c.

Brown Edmund
Richardson George

Saddlers.

Flood William
Fox William, post-office

Stonemasons.

Campion William
Holt Thomas

Surgeons.

Harper Frederick Luther
Noble Charles

Tailors.

Green John
West Charles
York William Smith

Carriers.—James Stafford, to Northampton on Mon. Wed. and Sat.; to Market Harborough on Tues.; and Samuel Turland, to Northampton on Wed. and Saturday.

BROUGHTON PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Kettering, on the north by Cransley, on the west by Faxon, and on the south by Pytchley. It contains 1674a. 1r. 16p.; its population in 1801 was 374; in 1831, 533; in 1841, 593; in 1851, 691; in 1861, 738; and in 1871, 654 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3636, and the gross estimated rental is £4040. The land is chiefly arable, the soil various, subsoil ironstone, and the principal owners are the Duke of Buccleuch (lord of the manor), and Lord Overstone.

Manor.—Walchelin held two hides and three virgates here at the general survey. In the Confessor's reign, Burred was the proprietor, and it then was advanced in value from 20s. to 40s. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), William de St German was lord of the manor, and with his descendants it continued till the reign of Henry VII. when it was carried in marriage to Thomas Agard. In the seventh of James I. (1609), Stephen Agard conveyed it to Sir Augustin Nicholls, who sold it to Henry Cotton, Esq.; it subsequently passed to the family of Montagu, and descended lineally to the present lord.

The Village of Broughton contains several good houses, and stands on the Northampton and Kettering road, about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. of the latter town; 7 N.W. from Wellingborough; 11 N.E. from Northampton; 11 S.E. from Market Harborough; and 77 from London.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, is situated on an eminence at the south end of the village. It is in the Norman, Early Decorated, and Perpendicular styles, and consists of a nave, side aisles, north and south porches, chancel, and tower surmounted by a spire, containing a peal of five bells and a clock. The font, which stands in the centre of the chancel, is ancient and interesting. The church was restored in 1854, when it was re-seated with open sittings, and the chancel with carved oak stalls. At the east end is placed a fine stained glass window, having in the centre a representation of the Good Shepherd. The churchyard was enlarged in 1860 by the addition of a piece of ground given by the present rector, and is tastefully laid out and planted with young trees. A handsomely carved pulpit of Caen stone was erected in 1867. In the chancel is a small monument with a bust to the memory of Robert Bolton, the famous puritan, and another monument with a bust to Harrold Kynesman, and there is a mural tablet to the memory of the Rev. Zachary Rose, a former rector of this parish. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £21, 9s. 7d., and valued at £500 per annum; the Duke of Buccleuch is patron, and the Rev. Granville Hamilton Forbes, M.A., incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1786 for land. The Rectory House, which stands in a fine lawn near the church, is a handsome building surrounded by pleasure grounds.

Here is a Dissenting place of worship called the "Union Chapel," built in 1868, and is used by different denominations.

The National School, a stone building, enlarged and rebuilt in 1873, is supported by subscriptions, Government grant, and school pence. This parish possesses the privilege of sending children to a free school at Pytchley.

Charities.—Edward Hunt in 1674 left certain lands, in lieu of which an allotment of 63a. was awarded at the enclosure, to the poor of Broughton, Pytchley, Weekley, Warkton, Kettering, and Rothwell; this land now yields an annual rent of £120, which is distributed according to the intention of the donor. The church land, 18a., now lets for £36 per annum. In 1772, Mrs Eliz. Henchman left £40, the interest to be given to poor widows who attend church regularly. The poor's or town land consists of 14a., now lets for £30. Mrs Keyston, in 1841, left the interest of £10 to the poor. In 1857, the late Lord Douglas gave £1000 3 per cent. consols, the interest of which is given half-yearly to the poor of the parish.

Worthy.—Edward Bagshaw, a learned polemic of the seventeenth century, was a native of this parish.

Post-Office.—Mrs Esther Baker, receiver. Letters arrive from Kettering at 9 A.M., and are despatched at 6.5 P.M. Kettering is the nearest Money-Order Office.

Andrew George, shoemaker	Falkner William, saddler	Shatford Mrs Mary, vict. Red Lion , and shopkeeper
Andrew John, baker & coal dlr.	Frankling Mr Edward	Shaw Henry, Natl. schoolmstr.
Andrew Jph. wheelwt. & carptr.	Garley Mrs Susan	Smith Jas. vict. Buccleuch Arms
Baines Henry, butcher & vict. Three Tuns	Holland Richard, gamekeeper	Spencer Mrs Maria Deverill
Baker Wm. Sanders, saddler	Hopkins Mrs Elizabeth	Thompson Alfred, shoemaker
Ball John, beerhouse	Forbes Rev. Granville Hamilton, M.A. rector	Tilley George, tailor
Barber Geo. wheelwt. & carptr.	James Thomas, blacksmith	Toseland Spencer, tailor, draper and grocer
Bird Benj. basket maker and vict. Green Dragon	Jeffcott Charles, shoemaker	Woolston Mrs Elizabeth
Busby George, butcher	Kilsby William, shopkeeper	Woolston Wm. grocer & draper
Busby Mrs Sarah, baker	Kitely Alfd. plumber & glazier	Farmers and Graziers.
Clarke Wm. parish clerk	Leake David, shopkeeper	Blott Thomas, Broughton Lodge
Coleman John, tailor	Lyon Job, vict. White Horse	Perkins Richd. (and maltster)
David Thomas, shopkeeper	Mash Wm. wheelwt. & carptr.	Pulver Samuel
Dawkins Chs. mason & builder	Matthuen Robert, pig dealer	Pulver Thomas
Eaton George, gardener	Meadows Robert, shopkeeper	Sharp John Jarvis (& maltster)
Essam Jno. corn & flour dealer	Mobbs Richard, draper	Shatford William
	Morris David, shoemaker

Carrier.—William Height, to Kettering, on Friday, and Northampton, on Saturday.

CRANSLEY PARISH.

Cransley or Cranesley, is bounded by Kettering on the east, Loddington and Thorpe Malsor on the north, Walgrave and Old on the west, and Broughton on the south. It includes the hamlet of Little Cransley, and contains 2062 acres of the rateable value of £3958; the gross estimated rental is £4310. Its population in 1801 was 217; in 1831, 308; in 1841, 319; in 1851, 309; in 1861, 350; and in 1871, 329 souls. The soil is various, and the principal proprietors are W. S. Rose, Esq. (lord of the manor), and Messrs Wm. Garratt, Thomas Houghton, and David Leake.

Manor.—At the Domesday survey, Gunfrid de Cioches, and the Countess Judith, had each 1 hide in Craneslea; and there were 2 hides and 1 virgate here at the same time belonging to Rothwell manor, in the hands of the Crown. At an early period this manor was in the possession of the family of Cranesley, and it was subsequently divided into several manors, which were in the hands of several proprietors. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, Sir Thomas Cecil, Knt., son and heir of William Lord Burghley, was possessed of three manors here, called Merton's or Dallison's, Newark, and Pullon's manors; and in the thirty-seventh of the same reign (1584), he sold them to Mrs Alice Elkin; from this lady they passed through several intermediate possessors to the present proprietor.

The Village of Cransley is distant about 3 miles S.W. of Kettering, 7 S.W. from Wellingborough, 11 S.E. from Market Harborough, 12 north from Northampton, and 78 from London.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, is a stone structure in the Early English style, consisting of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, south porch, and square tower, surmounted by a spire, and containing six bells. It was thoroughly restored in 1870, at a cost of £2500, when it was furnished with carved open oak sittings, a carved oak pulpit resting on a foundation of Caen stone. A carved oak lectern and a new font of Caen stone was placed in the church. The chancel is laid with ornamental tiles, and contains a founder's arch, a triple sedilia and locker, and several handsome mural tablets to the Rose and Robinson families. There is a piscina in the south aisle, and two brasses—one to Edward Barnewell, who died in 1602, and his two wives, and the other to Edward Dallison and Anne Snagge, who died in 1589. At the east end of the north aisle is a piscina in good preservation. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £8, 5s., and now worth £115 per annum. W. S. Rose, Esq., is the patron, and the Rev. Henry James is the vicar. The Vicarage House, which stands near the church, was restored and enlarged in 1858.

The School, with a girls' class-room attached, was built in 1872, chiefly at the expense of W. S. Rose, Esq., who also gave the site. The girls are taught separately by a mistress. It is supported by endowment, subscription, and the children's pence.

The other charities are 20s. per annum, left by Mr Holled and John Warner, to be distributed in bread to the poor.

Cransley Hall, the seat of W. S. Rose, Esq., is a handsome mansion, a short distance from the church.

CRANSLEY LITTLE is a hamlet in this parish, containing a few scattered houses, which nearly adjoin the village of Broughton.

Letters arrive here through Kettering, which is the nearest Money-Order Office.

Abbot George, corn miller	Rixon John, brick and tile-maker, h. Spratton	Farmers and Graziers.
Barton Daniel, shopkeeper	Rose William Somerset, Esq.	Houghton Thomas
Frisby Jno. carpnr. & whlwr.	J.P., Cransley Hall	Jones Thomas
James Rev. Henry, vicar	Sharman Albert, shoemaker	Lea Samuel, Lodge
Marriott Mrs Eliz. corn miller	Thompson William, shoemaker	Sharman William
Moore William, schoolmaster		Turnell Robert

HANNINGTON PARISH

Is bounded on the east and south-east by Orlingbury and Sywell, on the north by Walgrave, on the south by Hardwycke, and on the west and south-west by Holcot. It contains 1192 acres of the rateable value of £1571, 18s.; the gross estimated rental of the parish is £1855, 7s.; and the population in 1801 was 144; in 1831, 196; in 1841, 201; in 1851, 210; in 1861, 226; and in 1871, 222 souls. The soil varies from a black loam to a red clay and gravel; and the principal owners are the Rev. T. C. Thornton (lord of the manor), James Gibbs, Esq., Rev. W. W. Andrew, Rev. Dr Lightfoot, and Messrs Richard West and Robert Kins.

Manor.—The Earl of Morton had half a hide here, held of him by William de Hanitone; and the Countess Judith 3 virgates and 1½ carucate, at the time of the Domesday survey. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), William de Warden and Ralph de Hannington were lords of this manor. In the first of Richard II. (1377), Edward and Elizabeth Davinbridge levied a fine of it. In the reign of James I. it was possessed by the Wilmer family, and from them it passed through several intermediate possessors to the present proprietor.

The Village of Hannington, which is small, contains several excellent houses, as well as having superior cottage accommodation for the labouring classes, and is pleasantly situated about seven miles N.W. by W. of Wellingborough, and eight north from Northampton. There is a plentiful supply of excellent water.

The Church, dedicated to Sts Peter and Paul, is an ancient stone structure partly in the Early English and partly in the Decorated styles, and consisting of nave, chancel, north porch, and low square tower containing two bells, one being a sanctus bell. It was thoroughly restored at a cost of £1000 in 1868, when, on removing an unsightly gallery at the west end, a handsome arch was discovered. The church is furnished with open oak sittings, the roof is open and of pitch pine, and the floor is paved with tiles, those in the chancel being of an ornamental character. The screen is a very handsome one. In the chancel are stalls for the members of the choir, and the oaken pulpit, elaborately carved, is supposed to be of the same date as the screen. Two leper windows, which were formerly blocked up, were discovered during the Restoration. There was formerly a cell here belonging to the Gilbertine order, and attached to the abbey of Sempringham in Lincolnshire. The living is a rectory, formerly annexed to that of Walgrave, but was separated from it in 1866. It is rated in the king's books at £10, 11s. 3d., and now worth £300 per annum, in the gift of the Bishop of Peterborough, and incumbency of the Rev. John Downes, M.A.

The Rectory House, built by the present incumbent in 1868, is a good residence.

The Primitive Methodists have a small chapel here, built in 1865; and there is a good school in the village with a residence for the teachers adjoining, which was erected in 1871 at the sole expense of the lord of the manor. It is well attended, and is supported by subscription, Government grant, and the weekly payments of the children.

Worthy.—Francis Godwin, Bishop of Hereford, was born in this parish in 1561.

Post.—Wall-box. Cleared for Northampton at 4.10 P.M. Money-Order Office, Brixworth.

Downes Rev. Jno. M.A. rector	Litchfield Wm. vict. Old Mill-stone	Collins William (and pig dealer)
Durham Ed. shopk. & wood-dlr.		Cross William
Harris Joel, blacksmith	Farmers and Graziers.	Dickens Jas. Jabez, The Grange
Herring Miss Annie, schoolmrs.	Allibone Joseph	Drage Binyoun Francis
Holman Jos. baker & shopkr.	Barber Jno. Clarke, The Cottage	Lowick William
Judkins Mrs Mary Ann, vict.	Blunt Mrs Elizabeth	Turner Saml. (and cattle dealer)
Red House		Weston John, The Lodge

HARDWYCKE PARISH

Is bounded by Great Harrowden on the east, Little Harrowden and Orlingbury on the north, Mears Ashby on the west, and Wellingborough on the south. It contains 1235 acres, of the rateable value of £1367, and the gross estimated rental is £1530. The population in 1801 was 68; in 1831, 86; in 1841, 82; in 1851, 81; in 1861, 83; and in 1871, 103 souls. The soil is chiefly loamy, with clay subsoil. The trustees of the late Mrs M'Kenzie, who are lords of the manor, and the trustees of Nicholls' Charity, are the principal landowners.

Manor.—Here were two hides which belonged to the Countess Judith, and were valued at £3 at the Domesday survey. At an early period the families of de Barry and de Seymour had large possessions here, which descended to their posterity. In the fifth of Henry V. (1417), Sir Thomas Greene died seized of Hardewyk Manor, and was succeeded by his son. In the tenth of Elizabeth (1567), Wiston Broune, Esq., conveyed a third part of this manor to Thomas Nicholls, Esq., who then levied a fine of it. Sir Edward Nicholls, Bart., who died in 1717, devised lands here and in other places, for augmenting the eight following livings with £30 each yearly—viz., All Saints in Northampton, Oundle, Kettering, Rothwell, Hardwick, Moulton, Guilsborough, and Spratton. In the reign of James I., the other part of the manor was in the possession of the Mordaunt family; and about a century since, William Ward, Esq., of Little Houghton, was lord of Hardwick.

The Village of Hardwycke, or Hardwick, which is small and sequestered, is three miles W. by N.W. of Wellingborough.

The Church, dedicated to St Leonard, is an ancient stone structure in the Early English style, consisting of a nave, chancel, south aisle, north porch, and square tower containing one bell. It was thoroughly restored in 1866, when it was newly roofed, the south aisle and north porch erected, and carved open oak sittings introduced; a handsome pulpit of alabaster inlaid with mosaic, resting on a foundation of Bath stone; and a fine lectern of carved oak, representing an eagle, were also erected. In the chancel is an ancient monument to the Nicholls family, dated 1604, and a neat mural tablet of white marble to the memory of a daughter of Robert Andrew, Esq., of Harleston Park (who was lady of the manor), and who died in October 1839. In the nave are four ancient brasses to the Nicolls and Bagshaw families in good preservation. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £6, 17s. 6d., and now valued at £280 per annum, in the gift of W. Odell, Esq., and the Rev. Thomas Richards, M.A., is the rector. The tithes were commuted in 1839 for a rent-charge of £230, 2s. The old rectory is in ruins.

Hardwycke House is a good residence, built by the present rector in 1868, and is pleasantly situated at the north-east end of the village.

The School, a neat building with a teacher's residence attached, was erected by the Thornton family in 1870. It is attended by about twenty scholars, and will accommodate upwards of sixty.

The house occupied by Mr Archibald Sharman is said to have been the abode of the Knights Templars.

Post.—Wall-box cleared at 4.25 p.m. The nearest Money-Order Office is Wellingborough.

Easton Mrs My. Ann, schoolmrs.
Kirton Geo. Harper, wheelwrt.
Richards Rev. Thomas, M.A. rector, Hardwycke House

Farmers and Graziers.
Barber Geo. Humphrey, Hardwycke Grange

Middleton John, Lodge
Phipps Henry
Sharman Archibald

Carrier.—Mrs Sophia Esson, to Wellingborough, on Wednesday and Saturday.

HARROWDEN GREAT PARISH.

This parish is bounded on the north by Little Harrowden, on the west by Hardwycke, on the south by Wellingborough, and on the east by the Ise brook, which divides it from the hundred of Huxloe. It contains 1347 acres; its population in 1801 was 95; in 1831, 148; in 1841, 168; in 1851, 137; in 1861, 125; and in 1871, 117 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3459, 8s., and the gross estimated rental £4054, 16s. The soil is very rich and productive, and the executors of the late Hon. George Wentworth Fitzwilliam are the lords of the manor, and principal proprietors.

Manor.—At the Conqueror's survey, the Bishop of Constance had 2 hides and 3 virgates here, which, with a mill of the yearly rent of 8s., was valued at £5. Before the Conquest it was the freehold of Edwin, and rated at £3. Norgiot held 1 hide here of Wido de Reinbudcurt at the same time, and this with a mill of the same value as the other was rated at 20s. Algar was the Saxon proprietor, and then it was valued at 5s. In the reign of Henry II., the lands held by the bishop were of the fee of Huntingdon, and consisted of 2 hides less 1 bovat; and Nicholas de Cugenho had 1 hide here of the fee of the Crown. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), John de Lewkenor was lord of Harwedon. In the thirty-fourth of Edward III. (1360), John de Lewknore conveyed the manors of Great and Little Harrowden to Simon Simeon, who levied a fine of them in fee simple, and died in the eleventh of Richard II. (1387); in the following year a fine was levied of it by John la Ware and Elizabeth his wife; by him it was afterwards settled on Thomas la Ware, and his brother conveyed it by the name of Lewkenor's manor, in Great and Little Harwedon; and from him it passed to Sir William Vaux, Knight. This gentleman was a descendant of Robert de Vaux, who in the reign of King Stephen founded the abbey of Lanercost, in Cumberland. Sir William Vaux, Knight, son and successor of the above-named Sir William, was created a baron of the realm in the fifteenth of Henry VIII. (1523). In 1694 Thomas Wentworth, Esq., purchased it, and from him it descended lineally to the present proprietors.

The Village of Great Harrowden, which is small, is distant 2 miles N.N.W. of Wellingborough, 5 from Kettering, and 68 from London.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is a stone structure in the Early English style, consisting of nave with clerestory, chancel, north aisle, north porch, vestry, square embattled tower with crocketed pinnacles at the corners, and containing three bells and a clock; the chancel, which is separated from the nave by a carved wood screen, was rebuilt in 1845, by the late Earl Fitzwilliam. In the chancel is a triple sedilia and a piscina, in good preservation, and two brasses, one representing a knight in armour, the other a lady, supposed to be to the memory of William of Harrowden and his wife; also a mural tablet to the memory of Lady Mary Milbanke, daughter of Thomas, Marquis of Rockingham, and wife of John Milbanke, Esq. In 1873, an organ was placed in the church by subscription. The nave contains mural tablets to the Layng family. The living is a discharged vicarage, united with that of Little Harrowden, in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £13, 3s. 8d., and now worth about £545 per annum. The executors of the late Hon. George Wentworth Fitzwilliam are patrons, and the Rev. Wentworth Charles Roughton, M.A., is the incumbent.

The Rectory House, a stone structure rebuilt by the present rector, in 1872, stands at the west end of the village. The male children of this parish have the privilege of attending an endowed school at Little Harrowden.

Harrowden Hall is a fine mansion, east of the church, now unoccupied.

There are four Alms-houses or tenements here, occupied by poor persons.

Post-Office.—Joseph Knight, receiver. Letters arrive from Wellingborough at 7 A.M., and are despatched at 5.30 P.M. Wellingborough is the nearest Money-Order Office.

Burr Henry, miller & farmer,
Harrowden Mill
Craddock Wm. shoemaker
Freestone Mrs Martha
Knight Chas. carptr. & beerhse.
Knight Joseph, carpenter

Roughton Rev. Wentworth
Charles, M.A. vicar
Soames Miss Mary
Farmers and Graziers.
Jelley James

Sanders John
Soames Thos. Arth. Manor Ho.
Turnell John, Lodge
Walter Thomas

Carriers.—See Little Harrowden.

HARROWDEN LITTLE PARISH.

This parish lies northward of Great Harrowden, and contains 1505a. or. 20p. Its rateable value is £4155, 11s. 6d.; the gross estimated rental is £4958, 15s. Its population in 1801 was 284; in 1831, 465; in 1841, 673; in 1851, 638; in 1861, 679; and in 1871, 743 souls. The land is chiefly arable, the soil gravelly, with a mixture of stiff black clay; and the principal proprietors are A. A. Young, Esq. (the lord of the manor), and the executors of the late Hon. George Wentworth Fitzwilliam.

Manor.—The Bishop of Constance had 1½ hide here at the Conqueror's survey, which was valued with Harrowden Great; and Hardewin, a tenant to Walchelin, held 1 hide and 1 virgate, of the fee of the bishop, at the same time. This was valued at 40s. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), William de Raunds was lord of Little Harrowden. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, it was in the possession of the family of Vaux, and from them it passed through several intermediate possessors to the present proprietor.

The Village of Little Harrowden, which is long, is situated 3 miles N.N.W. of Wellingborough, 5 S.E. from Kettering, and 69 from London.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a stone structure, partly covered with ivy, in the Early English style, consisting of nave with clerestory, chancel, north and south aisles, south chancel chapel (now used as a vestry), and a square tower containing four bells. It was restored in 1850, when a north aisle was erected, the west arch opened, the body fitted with open sittings, and a carved oak pulpit and reading-desk added. In the chancel, which is separated from the nave by a carved oak screen, is a trefoil-headed piscina in good preservation; and there is a small organ which stands at the east end of south aisle. The living is a discharged vicarage, united with that of Harrowden Great. Thomas Wentworth, Esq., augmented it with £200 in 1725, to meet a grant of a similar sum from Queen Anne's bounty.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a small place of worship here.

The National School, a stone building, was erected in 1850; it will accommodate 99 scholars, and is supported by endowment, Government grant, and the school pence. The master's residence near the school was erected in 1857.

The Pinedon Ironworks belonging to the Glendon Iron Ore Company (Messrs Fisher & Checkland) are situated in this parish; there are three blast furnaces, and the company are about to erect two more, and also an iron foundry. The present number of hands employed is about 300.

Post-Office.—Thomas Webster Hobbs, receiver. Letters from Wellingborough at 7 A.M., despatched at 5.15 P.M. Wellingborough is the nearest Money-Order Office.

Abbott Saml. stone mason & bldr.
Bagshaw Joseph, butcher
Bollard William, pig-dealer
Canwarden Mr John

Coles Benj. baker & shopkeeper.
Coles Montague Fred. beer retlr.
Cramp Jacob Pearson, manager
Pinedon Ironworks

Higgins Mr John
Hobbs Thos. Webster, tailor, draper, & post-office
Hodson Edw. wheelwrt. & carpt.

Lingard Jas. Edward, resident engineer, Pinedon Ironworks	Royds William Herbert Molyneux, Esq.	Walton David, butcher, baker and vict. Lamb
M'Alister Chas. Nat. schoolmr.	Smith John, baker & shopkeeper	Farmers and Graziers.
Newill Levi, butcher & dealer in British wines	Stokes Jas. Alf. shoemr. & shkpr.	Higgins Joseph
Page Charles, beerhouse	Talbutt Bryan, wheelwright, &c.	Walker Thos. Austin
Reynolds Thos. brass & ironfdr.	Talbutt Mrs Sarah, beer retailer	Watts John Walker
	Taylor Bennett, vict. Red Lion
	Walpole John, shopkeeper

Carriers.—St. Bolland, to Wellingborough, on Wed., Northampton, on Sat.; Jas. Smith, to Wellingborough daily; and Simeon Smith, to Kettering on Fri., to Northampton Wed. and Sat.

ISHAM PARISH,

So named from its situation on the Ise brook, is bounded by Pytchley on the north, Orlingbury and Little Harrowden on the south and west, and the Ise brook separates it on the east from the hundred of Huxloe. The Leicester and London (Midland) Railway runs through the parish, and has a station about half a mile from the village. The parish contains 1332 acres, of the rateable value of £3722; the gross estimated rental is £4413, 17s. The population in 1801 was 247; in 1831, 318; in 1841, 397; in 1851, 392; in 1861, 430; and in 1871, 456 souls. The soil is various, and the principal owners are the Hon. Mrs Perry (the lady of the manor), Miss Green, Mrs Maudson, Mrs Jones, and the Rev. Henry Harper.

Manor.—At the general survey, there was 1 hide $2\frac{1}{2}$ virgates of land here, which was held by Eustachius, who dispossessed the abbey of Ramsey of it by force; and a similar quantity was held by Ralph de Isham, of Wido de Reinbuedcurt. In the reign of William Rufus, the moiety which formerly belonged to the monks of Ramsey was restored to them; and in the reign of Henry II. Thomas Pyel held $1\frac{1}{2}$ hide, and $2\frac{1}{2}$ small virgates, of the fee of Ramsey; Henry de Isham $2\frac{1}{2}$ hides of the fee of Daundeville; and one Geoffrey, 6 virgates of the fee of Huntingdon. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), William de Lisle was lord of Isham, and in the year following, William Isham and Alice his wife levied a fine of the manor, and it descended to their posterity. In after-times, this lordship was divided into three manors, one of which was a member of Great Harrowden.

The Village of Isham, which is small, is about 3 miles S.S.E. of Kettering, 4 N. from Wellingborough, 8 S.W. from Thrapston, 8 N.W. from Higham Ferrers, and 68 from London.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, is a stone structure, partly in the Norman style, and partly in the Early English, consisting of nave, with clerestory, chancel and chancel chapels, north and south aisles, north and south porches, and a square embattled tower containing five bells and a clock. It was thoroughly restored in 1870, at a cost of about £1100, when the chancel was re-roofed, the north porch erected, and the south porch rebuilt upon the old foundation. The new seats are open and of carved oak. A gallery at the west end was removed, and the west arch thrown open, which adds to the beauty of the church. At the east end of the nave is a bell turret, in which was formerly a sanctus bell, and there is a piscina in good preservation in each of the chancel chapels. The living is a rectory in two portions, inferior and superior, each rated in the king's books at £7, 10s., and now worth £550 per annum, in the deanery of Rothwell, patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough, and incumbency of the Rev. Robert John Clarke, M.A. The Rectory House, which stands N.W. of the church, has been restored and enlarged by the late and present rector.

The Wesleyan Chapel, a brick building erected by subscription in 1861, will seat about 200 hearers.

The National School (for boys and girls), was erected by subscription in 1840. It is supported by subscription, Government grant, and school pence.

Charities.—In 1829 William Green bequeathed £300 4 new per cent. annuities, the annual dividend to be applied to the purchase of an ox or cow, to be divided among the poor on Christmas eve. In the same year Mrs Green left £40 3½ per cent. stock, the interest to be distributed in bread to the poor at Christmas; she also left £19, 19s. in new 3½ per cent. stock towards the support of the Sunday school. The other charities belonging to the parish will be found in the table prefixed to this hundred.

Post-Office.—Thomas Bayes, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Wellingborough at 8 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 4.45 P.M. The Money-Order Office is Kettering.

Bayes Thos. shoe manfr. P.-O.
Buxton Miss Susan. schoolmrs.
Clarke Rev. Rt. Jno. M. A. rector
Coltman Geo. baker & shpr.
Doughty Wm. stat.-master,
Finedon Station
Ellis and Everard, coal &c. mrchts. Finedon Station
Garly Thomas, farm bailiff
Harris Mrs Charlotte
Johnson Thomas, butcher

Lewis Alfred, bricklayer
Lewis S. mason, shpr. & beerh.
Lewis William, blacksmith
Marriott Jno. surv. of highways
Miller Amos, pig dealer
Palmer Nathan, baker
Randall Geo. corn miller
Roughton John Ayer, vict.
Old Red Lion
West, Biddles & Co. coal mrchts.
Finedon Station

Wilson Edward, wheelwright, baker, and beerhouse
Wood Mrs Ann, draper

Farmers and Graziers.

Dicks Thomas, Lodge
Hobson James
Manton Joseph
Wells Alfred

Carriers.—James Mitchell, to Wellingborough on Wednesday; Kettering on Friday; and Thomas Shrivess, to Wellingborough, Tuesday and Saturday.

LAMPORT PARISH,

Including the hamlet of Hanging Houghton, is bounded on the east by Faxon, on the north by Maidwell, on the west by Cottesbrook, and on the south by Brixworth. It contains 1394 acres; its population in 1801 was 148; in 1831, 250; in 1841, 234; in 1851, 228; in 1861, 195; and in 1871, 274 souls. The rateable value is £2480; and the gross estimated rental £2850. The soil is various; and Sir Charles E. Isham, Bart., is lord of the manor and the principal landowner. The Northampton and Market Harborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway runs through the parish, and has a station about half a mile from the village.

Manor.—Lamport, or as it is called in Domesday Book, Langeport, that is Langton, or Longtown, contained 4 hides and 1 virgate at the general survey, which were held by Fulcherius, of Walterius Flandrensis. There were four acres of meadow and a grove of ash trees, and the whole was valued at £4. There were also here at the same time one virgate and one bovatc belonging to the abbey of St Edmund, and one bovatc the property of the Countess Judith. In the reign of Henry II., Simon Malesoures held 4 hides here, of the fee of Wahul, and half a hide of the socage of St Edmund. These lands passed afterwards into the Trussell family; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), William Trussell was lord of Lamport. From this family it passed in marriage in the time of Henry VIII. to Sir John de Vere, Kt., who succeeded to the title of Earl of Oxford, in the eighteenth of that king's reign (1526). His son John, Earl of Oxford, sold it, together with the advowson of the church of Lamport, in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign, to Robert Isham, clerk, and John Isham, sons of Euseby Isham, Esq. of Pytchley. Upon the decease of Robert Isham, without issue, in the sixth of the same reign (1560), his moiety of the manor and advowson fell to John Isham, Esq., his brother, who thus became possessed of the whole rectory and manor. His grandson, John, was knighted in the reign of James I., and in the third of Charles I. (1627), was advanced to the dignity of a baronet. The lordship still continues in the possession of this family. Sir Charles Edmund Isham, the present lord of Lamport, the tenth baronet, is second son of the eighth baronet, by the eldest daughter of the Rev. Samuel Close, of Drumbanagher, and Elm Park, county Armagh. He was born at Lamport in 1819; married in 1847 the youngest daughter of the late Rt. Hon. Sir John Vaughan; and succeeded his brother in 1846; his cousin, John Vere Isham, Esq., is his heir presumptive.

The Village of Lamport is picturesquely situated, about 8½ miles north of Northampton, nine south-west from Kettering, eleven north-west from Wellingborough, nine south from Market Harborough, and seventy-four from London.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, stands on an eminence in the village, and consists of nave, aisles, chancel, chancel chapel, and a square tower containing four bells. The east window is filled with stained glass and represents the "Resurrection." It is to the memory of the late Sir Justinian Isham, eighth baronet, and his two brothers, Vere, rector of Lampport, and Henry Charles, rector of Shangton, Leicestershire. At the west end of the church a handsome font has been placed to the memory of Isabel Vere, daughter of Sir Charles E. Isham, who died February 14th 1868, in the seventh year of her age. The church is lighted with seven beautiful coronas; that near the chancel arch was the gift of Sir Charles and Lady Isham. The Isham Chapel in this church contains many memorials of the family, and inside the altar rails is a brass recording the death of John Isham, Esq., in 1590. The living is a rectory, with the curacy of Faxton, in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £42, 8s. 6d., and now worth £950 per annum. The patronage is vested in Sir C. E. Isham, Bart., and the Rev. Robert Isham, M.A., is the rector. The tithes were commuted in 1794. The Rectory House is a good building of Harlestone stone with freestone facings, erected about 1700 or 1730 by Sir Justian Isham the patron.

The School, free to the children of Lampport and Hanging Houghton, was founded in 1762 by Sir Edmund Isham, Bart., who endowed it with £45 per annum. The present building was erected in 1852 by Sir Charles E. Isham, Bart., at a cost of about £700. For the other Charities of the parish, see the table prefixed to this hundred.

Lampport Hall, the seat of Sir C. E. Isham, Bart., is a handsome mansion, erected from a design by Webb, son-in-law of Inigo Jones; the distant views over a tract adorned with woods, and the mansions of the nobility and gentry contribute much to the beauty of the diversified grounds.

HANGING HOUGHTON, so called from the declining situation of the houses on the side of a hill, a short distance from Lampport, is a hamlet containing several scattered dwellings. It contains 1292 acres. Its rateable value is £2135, and the gross estimated rental £2500, and Sir C. E. Isham is lord of the manor, it having been purchased of Lord Manchester, by his ancestor, Sir Justinian Isham, Bart., in 1670. Here was anciently a chapel and a hall, the residence of Sir Edward Montagu, which was deserted by the family in 1665 on account of the plague, which was brought from London by the servants, and which carried off whole families at once, as recorded in the parish register.

FAXTON is a chapelry in this parish, situate on an elevation, about one mile north from Old. It contains 1774 acres, of the rateable value of £2838; the gross estimated rental is £3103, 6s. The population in 1801 was 54; in 1831, 103; in 1841, 108; in 1851, 95; in 1861, 79; and in 1871, 73 souls. Sir James Hay Langham, Bart., is lord of the manor, and principal owner.

The Church, dedicated to St Dennis, is a plain low structure, and the living is annexed to the rectory of Lampport. In the interior is a fine old monument to Judge Nichols, who formerly resided here, and who was poisoned by four women—on the eve of the trial of a relative of one of them, to prevent, as they thought, the sentence of death being passed on the culprit—while on circuit at Kendal in 1616, where a handsome monument erected to his memory was rescued from a lumber-room in the church, through the Rev. J. Wilkinson, late curate of Faxton, showing a drawing of it, which was sent by the Rev. R. Isham to Mr Fisher, an archæologist of Kendal.

Here are four tenements, or Alms-houses, erected in 1736 by Mrs Jane Kemsey for four poor widows; and Dame Susannah Danvers, her sister, in 1730, left £2 per annum, arising out of land in Pitsford, now the property of H. O. Nethercote, Esq., which is distributed to them.

MAWSLEY, which formerly gave name to the hundred of Maleslea, and was an extra-parochial district, was by a recent Act of Parliament annexed to Faxton, to which it pays rates, and is now included in the chapelry.

Post-office.—Mrs Elizabeth Bamford, sub-postmistress. Letters arrive from Northampton at 7 A.M. and are despatched at 6.15 P.M. The nearest Money-Order Office is Brixworth.

Bamford Mrs Elza. shpkpr. P.O.
 Dickens Edward, boot & shoemaker, Hanging Houghton
 Graves Jno. Jas. schoolmaster
 Isham Sir Charles Edmund,
 Bart. Lamport Hall
 Isham Rev. Robt. M.A. rector
 Roothan Henry, carpenter
 Smith Thomas, station-master

Turner Rev. Herbert Charles,
 M.A. curate
 Tyrrell Charles, blacksmith
 Weeds Wm. grazr. & vict. Swan

Farmers and Graziers.

Curtis William
 Eaton Thos. Hanging Houghton
 Francis Thomas, Manor Farm

Hales Henry, Shortwood House,
Faxton
 Hales Thomas Kendall, Faxton
Lodge
 Hales Wm. Fox Hall, Faxton
 Watson Adam Robertson (and land agent)
 Whiteman William

OLD OR WOLD PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Walgrave on the east, Loddington on the north, Lamport on the west, and Holcot on the south. It contains 1954 acres, of the rateable value of £3445, 4s. The gross estimated rental is £4078, 5s.; and the population in 1801 was 369; in 1831, 458; in 1841, 497; in 1851, 449; in 1861, 472; and in 1871, 416 souls. The parish is about equally divided between arable and pasture land; the soil on the north side is a cold black clay, on the south a red clay and gravel; and the principal proprietors are Lord Overstone, Joseph Tomblin, Esq., Rev. W. W. Andrew, Sir Charles E. Isham, Bart., A. Isted, Esq., and the Trustees of Rothwell Hospital.

Manor.—A part of this lordship, with Walgrave, consisting of 2 hides 3½ virgates, pertained to Faxton manor. In the reign of Henry II., the Earl of Albemarle held in Walde 4 hides and 4 virgates, of the fee of Oxford. These lands in subsequent times were divided amongst 4 possessors, and continued to be so held for several generations. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), John Landwath, or Landwade, and James de Audele, were lords of Wolde. It was afterwards divided into several, and still continues a divided manor.

The Village of Old is pleasantly situated about 9 miles N.W. by W. from Wellingborough, 6½ from Kettering, and 9 from Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St Andrew, stands on a slight elevation in the village, and consists of a nave, chancel, side aisle, north porch, and tower, in which is a peal of five bells. It is a stone structure built at different periods, part being Early English, but the pillars of the arcade belong to the Perpendicular period; and the north doorway is a good specimen of Perpendicular work of the date of about A.D. 1450. It is now (1874) undergoing restoration. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £18, 12s. 8½d., and now worth nearly £500 per annum. The patronage is vested in Brasenose College, Oxford, and the Rev. Thomas Henry Rodie Shand, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land in 1767. The Rectory House is a good building situated in the village.

The Independent Chapel, a plain brick building, was erected in 1809, at a cost of £850, and has accommodation for about 300 persons. The Rev. Samuel Laundon Marsh is the minister; it has a Sunday school attached, built in 1857.

The School is under Government inspection. Six children are taught free, and a portion of the expenses is paid by the rent of the pasturage of the poor's gorse.

For the other charities of the parish, see the table prefixed to this hundred.

Post-Office.—Edward Manning, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 8.30 A.M., and are despatched at 5 P.M. The nearest Money-Order Office is Brixworth.

Bamford Thomas, butcher
 Beeson Samuel Beeby, master
 Endowed school
 Brown Miss Mary Ann, day sch.
 Busby Wm. miller and baker
 Co-operative stores, William
 Blakeley, manager
 Gamme David, stonemason
 Marsh Rev. Sl. Laundon (Indpt.)
 Meadows Jno. vict. Old Chequers
 Norton John, blacksmith

Owen Stephen & Page Charles, threshing machine owners
 Percival Geo. grocer & beerho.
 Ponton Thomas, carpenter
 Shand Rev. Thomas Henry
 Rodie, M.A. rector
 Smith Wm. Bradley, shoemkr.
 Stevens George, carpenter
 Tomblin Jph. brewr. & maltstr.

Farmers and Graziers.

Bale Samuel
 Bamford George

Bamford John
 Bamford Watts Richard
 Bryan Thos. Andrew, Kite Hall
 Eady Samuel
 Groome Alfred
 Hobbs Eusebius
 Leake Lewis George
 Leake Samuel
 Leake Walter
 Page Charles (and beerhouse)
 Walton Saml. (& cattle salesman.)
 York William

Carrier.—John Chapman, to Market-Harborough, on Tuesday; Northampton, Wednesday; and Kettering on Friday.

ORLINGBURY PARISH

This parish is bounded by Isham on the east, Pytchley on the north, Walgrave and Hannington on the west, and Little Harrowden on the south. It contains 1858 acres; its population in 1801 was 268; in 1831, 336; in 1841, 351; in 1851, 330; in 1861, 307; and in 1871, 295 souls. The rateable value is £2926, 17s. 6d.; and the gross estimated rental is £3271, 10s. The land is chiefly arable, the soil good, and the principal landowners are Allen Allicock Young, Esq. (the lord of the manor), the Fitzwilliam family, and John Manning, Esq.

Manor.—Fulcherius held 3 virgates of land here, of the Earl of Morton, at the Domesday survey, which were rated at 10s. In the reign of Henry II., Fulcherius Malesoures had 1 hide of the fee of Wahul, in Orlinberge; and there were also 1½ hide of the fee of William de Curcy. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Hugh de Orlingbury was lord of this manor, and it was afterwards divided and passed through several hands. In the reigns of Henry VII. and VIII., the family of Lane possessed it; in the following reign it was in the Vaux family; and in the thirty-ninth of the same reign (1596), William Toft died seized of it, and left it to Elizabeth his sister, wife of Godfrey Chibnall. With this family it continued for several generations, and was sold by them to Brook Bridges, Esq., of whom it was purchased by Richard Young, Esq., whose lineal descendant is the present possessor. Wythemale, commonly called Wilmer Park, within the limits of this lordship, was imparked about the year 1614, and disparked in 1658. The Fitzwilliam family are the present possessors.

The Village of Orlingbury, which is small, is pleasantly situated on elevated ground, about 4 miles N.W. by W. of Wellingborough, 4 from Kettering, and 10 from Northampton.

The Church, which is cruciform, is dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and is a handsome stone structure of the Early English period, consisting of nave, chancel, north and south transepts, vestry, south porch, and a lofty square tower with neat balustrade around it, and containing five bells, with crocketed pinnacles. It was rebuilt and enlarged in 1843, when a handsome reredos of Bath-stone, a pulpit and reading-desk of carved oak, and open sittings were added. The east window, which is circular and of considerable circumference, has been, with four other windows in the chancel, filled with stained glass by the patron, who is also rector. In the south transept are many fine mural tablets to the memory of the ancestors and relatives of the present lord of the manor, together with several brasses in fine preservation to the Chibnall family; on the north side of the chancel is an ancient tomb of freestone, with the effigy of a man in armour, and which tradition says is to the memory of "Jock of Batsaddle," a man of large stature, who formerly resided at Batsaddle Lodge, in this parish, and who it is said died from the effects of drinking cold water from a spring, now called Batsaddle Spring, after a dreadful encounter with a wolf and a wild boar, which he slew in the meadow adjoining the house. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £20, 7s. 3½d., and now worth £400 per annum; in the patronage and incumbency of the Rev. Henry Denne Hilton, M.A. The tithes were commuted for land in 1808.

The Rectory House, situated in the centre of the village, was built in 1703.

Near the church is the National School, a stone building, with a teacher's residence attached, erected in 1845, chiefly by the lord of the manor and Earl Fitzwilliam.

Orlingbury Hall, the seat of A. A. Young, Esq., and the seat of John Manning, Esq., are commodious residences, pleasantly situated in the village.

Batsaddle Lodge and estate, formerly a manor-house surrounded by a moat, is the property of Lord Overstone.

Worthy.—Rev. Owen Manning, the historian of Surrey, was born here in 1721.

Charities.—Robert Bushby, in 1750, left £10; and Joseph Manning, in 1818, £18, to the poor of this parish.

Post-Office.—Mrs Fanny Reynolds, receiver. Letters arrive at 9 A.M., from Wellingborough, which is the Money-Order Office, and are despatched at 4.55 P.M.

Bamford Mrs Mary Ann, grocer, baker, & vict. Queen's Arms
Fox James, shoe-mkr. & sexton
Fox Owen, shoemaker
Hedges Miss Ellis, schoolmrs.
Hilton Rev. Henry Denne, M.A.
rector

King George, farm bailiff
Munday Geo. wheelwrt. & carpt.
Pratt Mrs Phoebe, brick, &c. mkr.
Ward William, blacksmith
Young Allen Allicock, Esq.
J.P. Orlingbury Hall

Young Captain Richard Newton

Farmers and Graziers.

Hull Mrs Mary, Wythmale Park
Manning John (yeoman)
Pell Robert, The Lodge

Carrier.—William Driver, to Wellingborough on Wed. and Sat., and Kettering on Friday.

PYTCHLEY PARISH.

Pytchley, or Pycheley, is bounded on the east by Isham, on the north by Broughton, on the west by Walgrave, and on the south by Orlingbury. The Leicester and London (Midland) Railway runs through the parish. It contains 2792 acres; its rateable value is £5565, 12s.; the gross estimated rental £6295. The population in 1801 was 361; in 1831, 558; in 1841, 610; in 1851, 606; in 1861, 536; and in 1871, 547 souls. The land is chiefly arable, the soil various, and the principal proprietors are Lord Overstone (lord of the manor), Captain Charles Hensman Heycock, Dr H. S. Dyer, and John Manning, Esq.

Manor.—The Abbot of Peterborough had 5 hides and 1 virgate in Pihstleslea, at the general survey, which was held of him by Azo, who had also of the abbot here 1½ hide, to which there were 4 socmen. This manor was rated at £5. Fulcherius held 3 virgates here of the Earl of Morton, and one William 2 hides of the Crown at the same time; in King Edward's time these last were held by Alwin, the huntsman. In the reign of Henry II. the Abbot of Burgh had 5½ hides here, Richard Engayne 3 hides, and William Fitzgery half a hide. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Ralph Basset and John Engayne were lords of Pighstesley. The manor, which before the Conquest was held by Alwin the huntsman, in Henry the Second's time consisted of 3 hides and 1 virgate, and was in the hands of Richard Engayne. It was held of the Crown down to the time of Charles II., by the service of finding certain dogs, for the destruction of wolves, foxes, and other vermin, within the counties of Northampton, Rutland, Oxford, Buckingham, Essex, and Huntingdon; thus it will be seen that the celebrated Pytchley hunt may date its origin from before the Conquest. Here were three manors called Bassett's, Engayne's, and Isham's manors, from the families who possessed them for a long period. They afterwards descended through several intermediate possessors to the present proprietor.

The Manor House, or Hall, once so celebrated in the annals of sporting for its fox-hunts, was erected by Sir Euseby Isham, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and used for many years as a club-house by the members of the celebrated hunt, was an elegant mansion, and was taken down in 1828. The gateway, which is in the same style as those at Holdenby, the houses being built by the same architect, was removed in 1843 to Overston Park. The kennels are now at Brixworth, having been removed about seventy-four years since, and Richard Christopher Naylor, Esq. of Kelmars Hall, is master of the Pytchley hunt.

The Village of Pytchley, which is rather straggling, is about 2¾ miles S. by W. of Kettering, 6 north-west from Wellingborough, 9 north-west from Higham Ferrers, and 75 from London. Here was one of the best race-courses in England, and Pytchley was once noted for its annual races and steeple-chases, which have been discontinued for many years.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is a stone structure, in various styles, of the Norman, Early English, Decorated, and Perpendicular. It consists of a nave, with clerestory, chancel, north and south aisles, vestry, south porch, and square embattled tower, containing five bells and a clock. The bells are celebrated for their melody, having been cast partly of silver; one of them is ancient, the others are of the date of James I. and Charles I. The upper storey was added to the tower in 1422. The church was partly restored in 1845, when the chancel arch and the north-east corner of the edifice were rebuilt. Several human skeletons were found during the restoration, in rude stone coffins, on their sides, with their feet to the east and faces to the south. The chancel, which was restored in 1861 by Lord Overstone, is separated from the nave by an oak screen, and contains a triple sedilia, piscina, and locker, in good preservation, together with a fine brass, to the memory of Charles Heycock Domenichetti, son of R. Domenichetti, M.D., who was born at Calcutta in 1861, and died at Glasgow in 1862; two mural tablets, one to Susannah, wife of the Rev. E. J. Laughlin, 1844, the other to Vincent Dunkley, 1872. The font, which is ancient, was found buried in the churchyard in 1838, when it was restored to the church, and an organ was placed in the chancel, by subscription, in 1871. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £30, 1s. 1d., and now worth £130 per annum, in the patronage of the Bishop of Peterborough, and incumbency of the Rev. John Hamilton Bullivant, B.A. The Vicarage House stands north of the church.

There is a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel in the village, which was erected in 1825.

The School, endowed with a house, garden, orchard, a close of 2 acres, and a rent-charge of £20, in 1661, by Wm. Aylworth, is free to all the children of Pytchley, to be instructed conformable to the doctrines of the Church of England.

The share of Hunt's Charity (for which see Broughton parish) received for the poor of this parish is about £5 per annum. The church land consists of 14 acres, which now lets in allotments for £40 a year.

Antiquities.—Roman barrows have been found here, and the late vicar had several Roman coins, pieces of British and Roman pottery, Druidical beads, fragments of a silver necklace, and other ancient curiosities, found in the parish.

Post.—Letters received here through Kettering, which is the nearest Money-Order Office.

Bullivant Rev. John Hamilton,
B.A. vicar
Heycock Capt. Chas. Hensman,
Pytchley House
Baker George, shoemaker
Briggs John, general dealer
Dickens Edward, shoemaker
Eads William John, butcher
Gilbert Noah, mr. Endowed sch.
Lewis Joseph, stonemason,
shopkeeper, and beer retailer.

Linnell Hy. Wm. blacksmith
Marsh Mrs Mary, farmer and vict. Overstone Arms
Maash John, grocer and surveyor of highways
M'Main Samuel, shoemaker
Mobbs George, gardener
Shrives John, parish clerk
Simpson George, carpenter
Stanley John, baker

Farmers and Graziers.

Bryan James
Burdett Thomas (yeoman)
Clark Richard
Cox Miss Martha
Dunkley Henry, The Grange
Lane Richard
Manning William, Lodge
Marsh Mrs Mary
Mather Benjamin, Lodge
Panther Charles (grazier)
Spencer Ekens Pentelow, Lodge

Carrier.—George Stanley, to Wellingborough on Wed.; Kettering, Fri.; Northampton, Sat.

SCALDWELL PARISH

Is bounded by Walgrave on the east, Old and Brixworth on the north and west, and by Holcot on the south. It contains 1214 acres, of the rateable value of £2378; and the gross estimated rental is £2810. The population in 1801 was 276; in 1831, 387; in 1841, 416; in 1851, 400; in 1861, 398; and in 1871, 368 souls. The soil is chiefly a rich red loam on a gravelly subsoil, and the principal owners are Sir C. E. Isham, Bart. (the lord of the manor), Messrs Thomas Wood, John Manning, George and W. R. Bamford, and Joseph Woodford.

Manor.—The Countess Judith, to whom Hugh was under-tenant, had 2 hides and 1 virgate in Scaldeswelle; the Abbot of St Edmund's Bury, by gift of the king, for the soul of Maud, his queen, had 1 hide and 3 virgates; and Albericus held 3 virgates here of the Bishop of Constance, pertaining to the manor of Wadenhoe, at the time of the Domesday survey. In the reign of Henry II. these 3 virgates were in the hands of Alberic de Vere; the fee of the abbey of St Edmund consisted of 1½ hide and 1 great virgate; and David King of Scotland, successor to the countess, had 2½ hides and 1 virgate. In the reign of Edward III., the manor of Scaldwell was in the possession of the family of Trussell, with which it continued for several successions, and from which it passed to the Isham family, with which it still remains. The lands here, belonging to St Edmund's abbey, were granted, after the dissolution, to Sir Edward Montagu, knight.

The Village of Scaldwell, which is very picturesque, is situate about eight miles north by east of Northampton, and commands some pleasing views of the surrounding country.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter and St Paul, stands on an eminence in the village, and consists of a nave, side aisles, south porch, chancel, with north and south chapels, and a tower, containing four bells; it was restored in 1863 at a cost of £1000, when the north and west galleries were removed, and the south chapel in which the organ is now placed was built. A new reredos will be added, and the handsome east window filled with stained glass. The font is an ancient one, and has an elaborately carved cover, made and presented by Mr Charles Brown. The lighting of the church was done by Sir C. E. Isham, Bart., as a memorial to his daughter Isabel Vere, who died in 1868, in her seventh year. The main portion of the church dates from the thirteenth century, but the tower has Anglo-Saxon work in it. The register dates from the year 1560. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £14, os. 10d., and now worth £500 per annum. The Duke of Buccleuch is the patron, and the Rev. A. H. Cole-Hamilton, M.A., incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1775 for land.

The Independent Chapel is a neat brick building, with Bath-stone dressings, erected in 1868, at a cost of £300. The site was given by Mr Thomas Cox, and the chapel will seat about 200 hearers.

The School is endowed with £30 per annum, out of Thomas Roe's charity, bequeathed in 1665, for the education of the children of the parishes of Brixworth and Scaldwell. It is a substantial stone building, erected in 1836. For the other charities of the parish, see the table prefixed to this hundred.

Post Pillar-Box.—Cleared at 5.30 P.M., letters via Northampton. The nearest Money-Order Office is Brixworth.

Barlow Chas. brick & tile manfr.
Brown Chas. builder, & agricul.
implement maker
Brown Mrs Mary
Brown Sam. vict. Old Red Lion
Cole-Hamilton Rev. Arthur
Henry M.A. rector
Coles Edw. baker and grocer.
Compton John, tailor
Corby Joseph, shoemaker
Cox Stephen, tailor and grocer

Crawley Mrs Emily
Drage Binyoun, gentleman
Hardwick Muns, beerhouse
Higgs Mrs Mary
Hyde Henry, hawker
Kiteby William, stonemason
Langley James, butchr. & grazr.
Packwood Joseph, baker
Payne Thomas, shopkeeper
Soames Captain Robert
Walton Wm. B. cattle-salesm.

Farmers and Graziers.
Allen Wm. (yeoman & butcher)
Bradshaw William (yeoman, miller, and maltster)
Cox Thomas
Hamshaw William (yeoman),
Scaldwell Villa
Langley William
Law William Henry
Wisdom Jabez
York James

Carrier.—Robert Adams, to Northampton on Wednesday and Saturday.

WALGRAVE PARISH

Is bounded by Orlingbury on the east, by Old on the west, by Broughton on the north, and by Hannington and Holcot on the south. Its population in 1801 was 424; in 1831, 575; in 1841, 593; in 1851, 613; in 1861, 650; and in 1871, 660 souls. It contains 2253 acres; the rateable value of the parish is £3349; and the gross estimated rental £3978. The soil is various, and the principal proprietors are Sir James Langham, Bart. (lord of the manor), Lord Overstone, Miss Sheldon, Messrs B. Bletsoe, Joseph Tomblin, and the Rev. H. Newby.

Manor.—Fulcherius held 3 hides and 3 virgates here, of the Countess Judith, at the time of the Conqueror's survey, which were valued at £3; and one Robert held half a hide of the Earl of Morton, at the same time, which was rated at 10s. The former estate was the freehold of Alsi, and the latter of Martin before the Conquest. A part of this lordship also pertained to the manor of Faxton, in the hands of the Crown. In the reign of Henry II., Henry Malesoures held 3 hides and 1 virgate, of the fee of David King of Scotland; the Earl of Leicester had half a hide; and Henry de Tracey 3 virgates of the socage of Faxton. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), John Fitz-walter de Walgrave was lord of Walgrave, and in this family it continued till the reign of Henry VII., when it passed to the family of Lane. In the twentieth of Elizabeth (1577), William Lane sold it to William Saunders, who levied a fine of it. In the thirty-second of the same reign (1589), it was conveyed to Thomas Paget. In 1655 it was purchased, with other lands, by John Langham, Esq., for £8630. From this gentleman it descended lineally to the present proprietor. The lands, formerly of the fee of Leicester, formed another manor, which was sold to John Langham, Esq., in 1657, for £760.

Walgrave Hall (the manor-house), formerly the seat of the Langham family, and now in the occupation of Mr Richard Knight, is an ancient stone building, south-east of the village. The fine oaken staircase is still in good preservation. On one of the interior walls is the coat of arms, in bas-relief, of the Langham family. The foundations of a moated house belonging to this manor may be seen in a field on the north side of the village.

The Village of Walgrave, which is of good size, very pretty and compact, is seated in a hollow, about eight miles north-west of Wellingborough, and nine from Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, stands on elevated ground in the centre of the village. It consists of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, porches, and square tower, containing five bells, and surmounted by a lofty broach spire of considerable beauty. The building, which was much dilapidated, was thoroughly restored in 1868 at a cost of £1500; and the spire being in a dangerous condition was partly taken down and rebuilt, great care being used in the preservation of its original form and character. The west window and belfry arch, which were both blocked up, have been reopened, the walls have been cleaned of the unsightly plaster, and pointed; new high-pitched roofs have been placed on the nave and chancel, and open oak seats substituted for the old pews. The arcade is very beautiful, the style being Early Decorated. In the chancel the high roof affords a good view of the east window, the upper portion of which was formerly hidden by a flat roof. A low side-window, remarkable for its beautiful tracery, was discovered in the usual place on the south side of the chancel, which is paved with Goodwin's tiles, the design being very chaste. Oak stalls are fixed in this part of the church. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £22, 4s. 7d., and now worth about £500 per annum. The Bishop of Peterborough is the patron, and the Rev. Edwin Hamilton Gifford, D.D., incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land in 1776. The Rectory House, which has recently been enlarged, is pleasantly situated near the church.

Here is a good-sized Baptist Chapel, with a small burial-ground attached; it was erected in 1786; and there is a Calvinistic Chapel in the village, built in 1838.

The National School, erected in 1828, at a cost of £500, is a large stone building, with a residence for the master. It is supported by subscription, voluntary rate, and Government grant, and is endowed with a rent-charge of £12 per annum, bequeathed, in 1670, by Montagu Lane. The other charities of the parish are the town land, which is let to the poor in allotments, and yields an annual rent of £50; the poor's allotment for £14 per annum; a rent-charge of 15s. per annum, left by Francis Baxter, to be distributed in bread to the poor; and the interest of £12 left by John Sheldon, in 1812, to poor communicants.

Post-Office.—Samuel Barritt, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 8.30 A.M., and are despatched at 4.25 P.M. The nearest Money-Order Office is Brixworth.

Barritt Chas. grcr. & shoe agt.
Barritt Sl. grocer, post-office
Blunt Stphn. carpr. & beerho.
Britten Edw. master End. scho.

Dainty Mrs Mary, beerhouse
Gammage Mrs Caroline, jun. vict. Langham Arms
Gibson Joseph, shopkeeper

Gifford Rev. E. H., D.D. rector
Gostick Wm. whlwt. & blacks.
Judkins Wm. baker & butcher.
Kimbell Nath. crptr. & whlwt.

Knight Alfred, butcher
 Knight William, shoe agent
 Lee Rev. J. B., (Baptist)
 Norton Bonham, tailor
 Sheldon Miss Mary
 Walker Wm. baker and grocer

York Daniel, beerhouse

Farmers and Graziers.

Brawn John and Thomas
 Dunkley John, Red Lodge
 Emerson Thomas

Hill Edwin
 Knight Mrs Mary Ann
 Knight Richard, Walgrave Hall
 Lee John
 Munden Samuel (and baker)

Carrier.—Thos. Deacon, Wed. to Northampton, and Thursday and Saturday to Wellingborough.

HAMFORDSHOE HUNDRED.

THIS hundred, called in Domesday book Hanvordesho, is bounded on the east by the hundred of Higham Ferrers, from which it is divided by the river Nene, on the south by those of Huxloe and Orlingbury, on the west by Spelhoe, and on the south by the Nene, which separates it from the hundred of Wymersley. It contains 16,530 statute acres. Hamfordshoe appears to have been always held by the lords of Yardley-Hastings, and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), John de Hastings was lord of it. In the twentieth of Henry VIII. (1528), Sir Wm. Compton, Kt., died seized of it, and from him it descended lineally to its present possessor, the Marquis of Northampton. It is divided into eight parishes, including the market-town of Wellingborough, of which the following is an enumeration, showing their area as collected from the ratebooks, the number of houses and population in 1871, together with the rateable value and gross estimated rental of each parish:—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Doddington, Great	1,537	136	6	2	320	306	626	£ 3,050	£ 3,483
Earls Barton.....	2,268	394	1	3	932	973	1,905	6,673	7,462
Ecton	2,199	142	1	...	313	316	629	4,475	4,994
Holcot.....	1,335	96	16	...	219	185	404	2,443	2,894
Mears Ashby	1,619	121	5	1	261	272	533	2,952	3,368
Sywell	2,101	52	119	129	240	3,177	3,462
Wellingborough	3,992	1,848	50	30	4,585	4,800	9,385	34,346	41,475
Wilby	1,132	97	5	...	242	221	463	2,193	2,476
	16,183	2,886	84	36	6,991	7,202	14,185	59,309	69,614

CHARITIES OF HAMFORDSHOE HUNDRED, as abstracted from the Parliamentary Reports, &c. See also the histories of the towns, parishes, &c.

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purposes applied.	Annual value.
1744.	Poor's and Church Land (9a.).....	Ashby Mears Parish.....	£17 0 0
„	Town Estate (14a. 12p., 5 cottages and garden).....	Ditto.....	34 10 0
1710.	Sarah Kinlock (£200 laid out in land)	Ditto, School	67 0 0
„	Poor's Land (2a. 1r. 28p.).....	Doddington Great Parish, poor	6 10 2
1680.	Rev. Wm. Farrow.....	Earls Barton Parish, poor.....	0 10 0
1750.	William Farrow.....	Ditto, coats to 2 poor men.....	1 10 0
1700.	William Whitworth (£10).....	Ditto, 10 poor widows.....	last
1719.	Rev. Henry Medburn.....	Ditto, poor widows.....	0 10 0

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purpose applied.	Annual value.
1719.	Rev. Henry Medburn	Ditto, Vicar	1 4 0
"	Rev. Henry Medburn (tithes of 5 acres and 3 roods land).....	Ditto, Vicar	£1 16 0
1814.	Elizabeth Whitworth (£500 and rent)	Ditto, the interest of £600 to the Vicar	9 5 4
1823.	Mary Whitworth (£200).....	Ditto, bread to poor, &c.....	lost.
1821.	William Whitworth.....	Ditto, coats to 6 poor men and bread to poor	lost.
"	Palmer's Charity (12a.).....	Ecton parish, apprenticing children and school.....	46 0 0
1729.	John Barker (1a.).....	Ditto, coats for 2 poor men	2 10 0
1801.	Rev. Peter Whalley (£116, 16s. 4d., 3 per cent consols).....	Ditto, bread to poor	3 10 0
1636.	Rev. Wm. Champion (rent).....	Holcot parish, 18 poor people	0 6 0
1735.	Rev. Christopher Crouch (2a.).....	Ditto, 10 poor people	2 12 6
"	Poor's and Church Land.....	Ditto	21 0 0
1684.	John Clark (rent).....	Ditto, poor.....	1 0 0
1687.	Elias Groom (rent).....	Ditto, poor.....	0 6 0
"	Customary payment.....	Ditto, ditto	0 15 0
1735.	Ambrose Marriott (rent).....	Sywell parish, ditto.....	2 0 0
"	Church and Poor's Land.....	Wellingborough parish	75 0 0
"	Town Estate and Wellingborough Free School Charity.....	Ditto, grammar school and parochial purposes	524 16 6
1711.	John Freeman.....	Ditto, charity school.....	95 0 0
1711.	Richard Fisher (land).....	Ditto, ditto, and grammar sch.	207 5 0
1728.	Samuel Knight (£100).....	Ditto, Freemans' charity sch.	10 0 0
1715.	Mary Roane (£100).....	Ditto, ditto.....	5 0 0
1791.	John Robinson (£100).....	Ditto, ditto.....	5 0 0
1596.	William Peake (rent).....	Ditto, poor	5 4 0
1665.	John Orlebar (£100).....	{ Ditto, with which land was purchased at East Farndon, blankets to poor. }	20 0 0
"	Unknown (£100)
1662.	Edward Cheney (rent).....	Ditto, bread to poor.....	0 6 0
1693.	John Pulley (rent).....	Ditto, 24 poor people	5 4 0
1728.	Samuel Knight.....	Ditto, bread to poor	2 0 0
1733.	Thos. Sheppard (£20 invested in stock).....	Ditto, ditto.....	0 17 0
1790.	Ann Glasbrook.....	Ditto, 4 poor widows	13 5 2
1728.	Elizabeth Goodman (rent).....	Ditto, educating 4 poor children	8 0 0
"	Church Land (2a. 4p.).....	Wilby parish.....	8 0 0
"	Poor's Land (½a.).....	Ditto, poor	2 0 0
Total.....			£1201 12 8

DODDINGTON GREAT PARISH

Is bounded by Wellingborough on the east, Wilby on the north, Earls Barton on the west, and the river Nene, which divides it from Wollaston, on the south. It contains 1537 acres, of the rateable value of £3050; the gross estimated rental is £3482, 10s. The population in 1801 was 311; in 1831, 442; in 1841, 474; in 1851, 493; in 1861, 580; and in 1871, 626 souls. The land is principally arable, the soil chiefly a red loam, on a subsoil of ironstone, and the lord of the manor and principal owner is the Marquis of Northampton.

Manor.—In the list of lands held by the Countess Judith, the following entry occurs in Domesday Book:—"The same countess holds 4 hides in Dodingtone. There is land for 8 ploughs. In demesne there are 2 ploughs and 2 serfs; and 12 villeins and 5 bordars, with 5 sochmen, have 6 ploughs. There are 12 acres of meadow; it was and is worth £4. Bondi held it." The Countess Judith was a niece of William the Conqueror and the wife of Earl Waltheof, the son of the Saxon Earl Siward. Waltheof fell under the displeasure of William, was imprisoned, and afterwards beheaded at Winchester. Judith had been suspected of treachery towards her husband, after whose death the Conqueror wished her to marry Simon de St Liz, but the countess indignantly rejected him on account of his deformity. The angry monarch made her pay the penalty of her refusal by seizing her possessions and bestowing them upon her daughter, Maud or Matilda, who willingly accepted the bridegroom her mother had rejected. (See page 100.) In the reign of Henry II., David, King of Scotland, was possessed of the 4 hides which Judith had held. In Henry Third's reign, John, Earl of Huntingdon, gave this manor to the family of Champayne, from which it passed in marriage to Sir John Sulne, Kt. It subsequently came to the Daundelyn family, and was carried from them in marriage to the Barnards. The lordship has been for some time in the hands of the Earls of Northampton, and is now the property of the present Marquis.

The Village of Doddington is pleasantly situated on the northern ridge of the fertile valley of the Nene, which it overlooks. It is distant about 2½ miles south by west from Wellingborough, and consists mainly of one long street, and a smaller one on a lower terrace, with a few scattered houses. "Altogether," says the author of "Rambles Roundabout," "it is a pleasant village, with here and there a good old gable, and an inn (The Stag's Head), which is clothed with greenery, and has a covered gallery, from which there is a most comprehensive view of the valley—from Wollaston spire to the woods of noble Castle Ashby. The Manor House, which occupies a more elevated situation, is a fine old building of the sixteenth century, with its gables and mullioned windows, and which in Bridges' time was occupied by Major Ekins of Weston, who is described as the impropiator of the great tithes, and as having "the largest estate and the best house in the town." The Peterborough branch of the London and North Western Railway passes through a part of this parish, and the Wellingborough station is about 1½ mile from the village, not far from which is the old corn mill, which adds much to the rural beauty of the place. "In the foreground is a wooden foot-bridge spanning the river diagonally; behind it is the mill, just what a water-mill should be. Tennyson's Miller's Daughter inhabited such an one. There is the mill proper, with its arch reflected reversely in the stream, and beside it the dwelling-house, covered with creepers and greenery; and on either side luxuriant tees make the water dark with their rich autumnal hues."

The Church, dedicated to St Luke, stands on an elevated terrace, with a background of trees; and consists of nave with clerestory, chancel, north and south aisles, south porch, and tower at the west end containing five bells. The tower is in the Early English style, with a west door of the same period, and over it is a small circular-headed window in good preservation. The interior is deeply splayed, and it has bold buttresses of three stages. In the upper stage is a window of two circular-headed lights under a circular head, the tympanum of which is not pierced. The remains of a decorated window now stopped up, indicate its former beauty. It is ogee-headed, and the cusplings were cinquefoil. The inner doorway of the porch has an original oaken door of perpendicular character, with much of the tracery and the old iron-work remaining. The interior of the building has some interesting features. Four of the stalls in the chancel remain, and the upper part of one of the Misereres represents a man carving a rose. The hand is evidently that of the artist who carved the curiously interesting Misereres in Wellingborough Church. In the chancel is a handsome cinquefoil-headed piscina, and two trefoil-headed sedilia of the same date; and at the east end of the south aisle is another piscina, all in good preservation. There is in the north aisle a slab with an inscription in Lombardic characters, but much defaced; and there is another slab in the nave, with a Latin inscription, and a bed of brass cross fleury. The church was restored at a cost of £1300 in 1871, when it was newly roofed, and partially fitted with open sittings. The interior of the roof is open and of pitch pine. During the restoration, an old painting of the "Crucifixion" was discovered on the south side of the chancel. Here is a book of the "Homilies" of the date 1562, and a Bible dated 1613. The benefice is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £8, 13s. 4d., and now worth about £160 per annum, in the gift of the Lord Chancellor, and incumbency of the Rev. Maze Wm. Gregory, M.A. There is no vicarage house, but the vicar occupies the old manor house, which was kindly given for his use by the Marquis of Northampton. Simon de St Liz,

Earl of Northampton, gave this church with its appendages in frank almain to the convent of Delapré, near Northampton, which he had founded.

The Independents and the Primitive Methodists have each a chapel in the village—the latter built in 1863. The National School, erected in 1833, enlarged in 1868 and 1874, will accommodate 100; the average attendance is about 60, and it is supported by subscription, Government grant, and the school pence.

Charity.—The only charity for this parish consists of 2a. 1r. 28p. of land, which lets for £5 per annum.

Post-Office.—Letters arrive from Wellingborough about 7.30 A.M., and the box is cleared at 5.40 P.M.

Borrie Mrs Martha, schoolmrs.
Gibson Mrs Ann, beerhouse &
shopkeeper
Gibson Benjn. C. parish clerk
Gibson William, shopkeeper
Green Jonathan, baker
Gregg John, farm-bailiff
Gregory Rev. Maze William,
M.A. vicar

Hillyard Bros. (Matt. & Saml.),
fellmrs. parchment & manfrs
Lilley Samuel, blacksmith
Newett Mrs Elizabeth, vict.
Stag's Head
Perkins Samuel, shopkeeper
Summerfield Jas. shopkeeper
Turnell George, corn miller,
Wollaston Mill

Farmers & Graziers.

Bishop William (and miller),
Hard Water Mill
Brayfield Henry
Chambers Saml. vicarage farm
Everett William,
Woolston Daniel (yeoman)

Carrier.—Mrs Harriet Bonham, to Wellingborough on Wed. & Northampton on Sat.

EARL'S BARTON PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Doddington, on the north by Mears Ashby, on the west by Ecton, and on the south by the river Nene, which separates it from Whitson and Grendon. It contains 2268 acres. Its population in 1801 was 725; in 1831, 977; in 1841, 1079; in 1851, 1277; in 1861, 1537; and in 1871, 1905 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £6673, 5s. 6d., and the gross estimated rental £7461, 11s. 4d. The parish is crossed by the river Nene, through which the Northampton canal communicates with the German Ocean, and the Peterborough railway is distant only 1½ mile. The soil is red loam, subsoil, ironstone and limestone. The principal landowners are the Executors of the late William Whitworth, Esq. (the lords of the manor), Richard Hall, Esq., John Woolston, Esq., and Edward Thornton, Esq. The parish is named Earl's Barton from the Earls of Huntingdon, who were formerly superior lords of the fee.

Manor.—The Countess Judith had 4 hides in Bartone, at the Domesday survey, which, with 3 mills of the yearly rent of 28s. 8d., and 34 acres of meadow, was rated at £4. This lordship then included those of Doddington, Wilby, and Mears Ashby; and from the Countess Judith it passed to the royal line of Scotland. David, king of Scotland, having been created Earl of Huntingdon in the reign of Henry I., this manor was afterwards considered as parcel of that honor. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), John de Hastings was lord of Barton; and in the 18th of Edward III. (1344), William Carvaile levied a fine of it. In the reign of Edward IV., William Daundelyn was possessed of it, and his daughter carried it in marriage to John Barnard, with whose descendants it continued for several generations; it is now possessed by the Executors of William Whitworth, Esq., as above stated.

The Village of Earl's Barton stands on the slope of a hill, 3½ miles S.W. of Wellingborough, and 6½ E.N.E. from Northampton. The principal trade is boot and shoemaking, which gives employment to a great number of the inhabitants.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient structure, consisting of nave, chancel, side aisles, south porch, and a broad embattled tower in which are six bells. The tower, which is Saxon, is very singular, both in design and construction; the south porch is a specimen of highly ornamented Anglo Norman work; and the whole fabric, which, with the exception of Brixworth, is considered the oldest in the county, contains specimens of the styles of ecclesiastical architecture from Saxon and Norman to the Perpendicular. It is said to occupy

Ward (Jno.) & Sheffield (Danl.) Whitney Frederick	West Biddles & Co., Eli Jones, agent	Coleman Christopher (and threshing machine owner)
Coal Merchants.	Farmers & Graziers.	Earl Edward
Ellis & Everard, Ry. station	Austin Charles	Earl John
Goodman William		Lyman Edward
		Ward John

Carriers.—Joseph Horne, to Northampton, Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday; James Line, to Northampton, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday; and Enoch Rogers, to Wellingborough daily.

ECTON PARISH.

Ecton or Eketon is bounded on the east by Earl's Barton, on the north by Mears Ashby, Sywell, and Overstone, on the west by Great and Little Billing, and on the south by the river Nene, which separates it from Cogenhoe and Whiston. It contains 2199 acres of the rateable value of £4475; the gross estimated rental is £4994. Its population in 1801 was 474; in 1831, 570; in 1841, 602; in 1851, 631; in 1861, 640; and in 1871, 629 souls. The land is principally arable, the soil is light and sandy, and Ambrose Isted, Esq., the lord of the manor, is the largest owner. In levelling the ground about 200 yards eastward from the church, several human bones and skulls, lying in order from west to east, together with two silver Saxon coins, were found. The Corporation of Northampton have a sewage farm, partly in this and partly in the adjoining parish of Great Billing, comprising about 600 acres. The soil is conveyed from Northampton by a culvert, and used for irrigating purposes.

Manor.—At the Norman survey, Henry de Ferrieres had 4 hides in Echen-ton, which, with two mills and 32 acres of meadow, were rated at £5. In the reign of Henry II. they were in the hands of William de Mungomery, who held them of the Earl of Ferrers, and with this family the manor of Ecton continued till 1595. The Catesbys were the next possessors, and from them it passed in marriage to Ralph Freeman, Esq., whose successor sold it in 1712 to Thomas Isted, Esq., of the Middle Temple, whose lineal descendant is the present possessor.

The Village of Ecton, which is compact, is about 5 miles S.W. of Wellingborough, and 5 E.N.E. from Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to St Mary Magdalene, is a handsome structure in the Pointed Style, consisting of nave, side-aisles, north and south porches, and a square embattled tower containing six bells. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £21, 8s. 8d., and now worth £700 per annum, in the gift of the Crown, and held by the Rev. Charles Tizard Davies, M.A. The tithes were commuted in 1759. The Rectory House, which stands north of the church, is a substantial stone building, erected by the Rev. Thomas Palmer, a former rector; it was enlarged in 1830. The Baptists and Methodists have each chapels in the village. The National School, built in 1852, by Mr John Palmer, is supported by endowment, subscription, Government grant, and the weekly payments of the children; an Infant School was erected here in 1850.

Ecton House, the seat of Ambrose Isted, Esq., is delightfully situated on rising ground, commanding an extensive view over a fine wooded country. Here is said to have been formerly a nunnery or cell to the abbey of Delapré, near Northampton; a yard at the rear of the house still retains the name of Nun's Court. In 1756 a handsome front of fine yellow stone from Mears Ashby quarry was added to the building, and the lawn, enlivened by a fine sheet of water in the centre, is very beautiful.

For the Charities of the parish see the table prefixed to this hundred.

Post-Office.—John Jolly, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 6.30 A.M., and are despatched at 6 P.M. Earl's Barton is the nearest Money-Order and Telegraph Office.

Beasley Henry, gardener	Bucklar Wm. shoemaker	Davies Rev. Charles Tizard,
Blason George, baker	Co-operative Stores, Mrs Esther	M.A. rector
Bradshaw Charles, butcher	Elson, manager	Dunkley Mr Hy. The Cottage
Bradshaw Daniel, roadsurveyor	Darker George, tailor	Field John, butcher

Green John George, wheelwright and carpenter	Langley Mrs Mary, shopkeeper	Farmers and Graziers.
Howard Joseph Thos. builder	Penn John, shopkeeper	Child Anthony Barker, Lodge
Hunter Miss Afra, mistress, Infant school	Perkins Miss Charlotte	Dawes Josiah Belton, Lodge
Isted Ambrose, Esq. Hall	Pettitt Wm. blacksmith	Hawkes Stephen, Lodge
Kirby Thomas, timber merchant and beerhouse	Slow Wm. vict. World's End	Pell John White, Lodge
Langdell Geo. Arthur, shoe mfr.	Street Wm. Ed. maestr. Nat. schl.	Sharman Samuel
Langdell Thomas, blacksmith	Tarry John, market gardener	Walker William
	Tarry Mrs Sarah, mkt. gardener	Whitehead William
	Tassell Daniel, gamekeeper
	Tassell Henry, baker

Carriers.—William Brown and Thomas Tebbutt, to Northampton daily; John Mallard, to Northampton on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday.

HOLCOT PARISH.

Holcot is bounded on the east by Hannington and Sywell, on the north by Walgrave, on the west by Brixworth, and on the south by Overstone and Moulton. It has an area of 1335 acres, of the rateable value of £2442, 13s. 6d.; the gross estimated rental is £2894, 4s. The population in 1801 was 343; in 1831, 433; in 1841, 456; in 1851, 508; in 1861, 517; and in 1871, 404 souls. The land is generally arable, and consists of a fine red loam, which is very successfully cultivated; and the principal proprietors are Lord Overstone (lord of the manor), Rev Robert Montgomery, Mr Robert Ekins, Dr Faircloth, Mr William Drage, and Mrs Houghton.

Manor.—This lordship at the Conqueror's survey contained 3 hides and 4 virgates; 2 hides and 2 virgates of which belonged to the Crown, and 1 hide 1½ virgate to the Countess Judith. In the reign of Henry II. Adam de Halcote held 2½ hides of the fee of William de Curcy, which formerly belonged to the Crown, and David, King of Scotland, 1 hide and 4 small virgates. In the twentieth of Edward III. (1346), John Smith of Holcote accounted for the fourth part of a knight's fee here, of the fee of John de Verdoun. In the reign of Henry VIII., this manor was in the possession of Thomas Chipsey, founder of the grammar school at Northampton, who endowed it with certain lands here, and in other places; and it subsequently came into the hands of the Earl of Northampton, and is now in the possession of Lord Overstone.

The Village of Holcot is pleasantly seated on a slight elevation, about 7 miles W.N.W. of Wellingborough, and 7 N.E. from Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient edifice in the Decorated style, consisting of a nave, with clerestory, chancel, side-aisles, south porch, and tower containing three bells. The chancel was renovated, the roof raised, and a new vestry built in 1845. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £13, 6s. 8d., and now worth about £390 per annum. The Rev. Robert Montgomery, M.A., is both patron and incumbent. The Rectory House, a stone building, stands near the church. The Wesleyan Chapel here will accommodate about 150 persons.

Charities.—The poor's and church land lets for £30 per annum; 2a. left in 1735, by the Rev. Charles Crouch, to ten poor people, lets for £6 per annum; and there are three other charities (see table), which yield £2, 7s. per annum.

Worthy.—Robert Holcot, a Dominican Friar at Northampton, esteemed one of the greatest scholars of that age, and a very eloquent preacher, is supposed to have been born in this parish. He died at Northampton in 1349.

Post.—Pillar-Box cleared at 3.30 P.M.; letters via Northampton.

Clark William, blacksmith	Houghton William, farmer,	Tresler Robert, baker
Cooke David, butcher, grocer, and vict. Old Chequers	grocer, and beer retailer	Whitney Jeremiah, shoe-agent
Darker Watkin, tailor	Montgomery Rev. Robt. M.A. rector
Green Wm. wheelwrt. & carpt.	Orland John, baker	Farmers and Graziers.
Holt Mrs Ann	Poole Samuel, shoemaker	Drage William
Holt William, butcher, grocer, and vict. Swan	Tarry David, grocer & shoe agt.	Marsh John Carriers.—Jeremiah Whitney, to Northampton, on Mon. Tue. Thu. & Fri.; to Wellingborough and Higham Ferrers, on Wed. and Sat.; and James Gammidge, to Northampton on Wed. & Sat.

MEARS ASHBY PARISH.

Mears Ashby is bounded by Wilby on the east, Hardwycke on the north, Sywell on the west, and Earl's Barton on the south. It contains 1619 acres; its population in 1801 was 339; in 1831, 466; in 1841, 496; in 1851, 489; in 1861, 525; and in 1871, 533 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £2952; and the gross estimated rental £3368. It is called Ashby Mears, or Mares, from the family of Mares, who possessed the principal manor for several generations, and whose name in old writings is written fifteen different ways. The soil is various, and the land is chiefly arable. The manor is divided; Thomas Mercer, Esq., being lord of two-thirds, and Lord Overstone of the remainder. The principal landowners are Henry Minshull Stockdale, Esq., D.L., Lord Overstone, Thomas Mercer, Esq., and the Impropropriators of the rectorial tithes.

Manor.—The Countess Judith had 4 hides of land in Asbi at the time of the Conqueror's survey; and in the reign of Henry II. they were held of the fee of David, king of Scotland. In the ninth of Edward I. (1280), John de Mares accounted for half a knight's fee, and in the twenty-fourth of the same reign, John de Mareys was lord of a manor here. At the same time, William Fitz-Warine held a third part of the township of the king of Scotland, by the service of lifting up his right hand towards him on Christmas day. From the family of Mares this lordship passed to Sir Henry Greene, Knt., a judge of the king's bench; and the other estate passed to the Ashebys. In the division of Sir Thomas Greene's estate, in the reign of Edward IV., it was assigned to his eldest daughter Anne, wife to Sir Nicholas Vaux, with whose posterity it continued. It was subsequently divided, and descended through several intermediate hands to the present possessors.

The Village of Mears Ashby, which is very straggling, stands $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of Wellingborough, and 7 north-east from Northampton.

The Church, which is dedicated to All Saints, and dates from the thirteenth century, is a stone structure in the Early English style, consisting of nave with clerestory, chancel, north and south aisles, vestry, south porch, and square embattled tower containing four bells. The chancel was repaired in 1848 by Sir James Langham, Bart., and in 1859 it was rebuilt and the body of the church generally restored at a cost of about £1700. The tower was repaired and buttresses added in 1861. The east window is of stained glass, by Clayton and Bell of London. The centre light is a representation of the "Crucifixion," and the two outer ones St Joseph of Arimathea and Nicodemus. On the south side of the chancel is another stained glass window representing the "Flight into Egypt," given by H. M. Stockdale, Esq., to the memory of his father and mother. In the chancel is a piscina and credence table, and at east end of the south aisle is a piscina and locker. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £4, 13s. 9d., and now worth about £240 per annum. Sir James Langham and others are the patrons, and the Rev. Henry Bowmar, M.A., is the incumbent. The Vicarage House, which stands south-east of the church, is a stone building erected in 1858.

The Wesleyan Chapel was built in 1843, with the sum of £140, left by the late Joseph Phillips, shoemaker, of this parish.

The School is endowed with lands purchased with £200, left by Mrs Sarah Kinloch in 1710, and which now let for £67 per annum. The schoolmaster receives a salary of £56 per annum, for which all the poor children of the parish are taught free. It was rebuilt in 1870 at a cost of £500, including the master's residence, and is attended by about 70 children.

The other Charities of the parish are the Town estate, consisting of 14a. 12p., 5 cottages and a garden, which lets for £34 per annum; the church land, 4a., yielding £7; and the Poor's land, 5a., yielding a rent of £10 per annum.

Post-Office.—J. H. Simcoe, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Northampton at 7.30 A.M., and are despatched at 4.20 P.M. Earl's Barton is the nearest Money-Order Office.

Arch Chas. maltster, baker & vict. Red Lion	Minden Henry, shopkeeper	Thompson Thos. parish clerk
Barker Wm. Roger, carpt. & baker	Newby Miss Elizbth. Sunnyside	Tompkins Thomas, shoemaker
Berrill Thomas, mason	Pell Mr John	Wright Mrs Jane
Bowmar Rev. Henry, M.A. vicar	Pell Mr Samuel
Bryan James, schoolmaster	Pratt Henry, shoemaker	Farmers and Graziers.
Callis Mrs Mary, The Cottage	Pratt William, wheelwright	Callis Wm. Henry
Hardwick Mrs Emily Isabella, vict. Griffin Head	Simcoe George, blacksmith	Eads George
Haynes Mrs Sarah Ann, shopkr.	Simcoe John Hy. tailor, P.O.	Freeman Henry
Marriott Ambrose, shopkeeper	Stockdale Benjn. Park, Esq. Brookside	Gillitt Richd. (& auctioneer)
Mercer Thomas, Esq.	Stockdale Henry Minahull Esq. J.P. D.L. The Hall	Gillitt Thomas
Middleton George, pig-dealer	Thompson John, beerhouse	Hawkes Thomas
		Smith Matthew
		Watts Thomas (& butcher)

Carriers.—Alfred Thomson, to Northampton on Tues. and Sat., to Wellingborough on Wed.; and Edward Mallard, to Wellingborough on Wed.

SYWELL PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Mears Ashby, by Hardwick and Holcot on the north, Moulton on the west, and Overstone and Ecton on the south. It contains 2101 acres. Its population in 1801 was 199; in 1831, 216; in 1841, 211; in 1851, 218; in 1861, 241; and in 1871, 248 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £3177; and the gross estimated rental £3462. The soil is principally a red and black clay, and Lord Overstone is the principal owner, and lord of the manor.

Manor.—The Earl of Morton had 4 hides in Snewelle, at the general survey. Upon the forfeiture of his estates to the Crown, this lordship was granted to Nigel de Mandevill, whose daughter Maud bestowed it, together with the church, to the priory of St Andrew, at Northampton; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), the prior of St Andrews was lord of the manor. The profits of the priory manor were rated at £24 per annum in 1535, and upon the suppression of the monasteries it fell to the Crown. In the reign of James I., Robert Wilmer, Esq., died seized of Sywell manor, and the advowson of the church, which were held of the Crown by knight's service. It passed by purchase, in 1849, to the late Lewis Lloyd, Esq., and descended to his son, Lord Overstone, the present possessor, in 1858. Here was anciently another estate or manor, belonging to the Tresham family.

The Village of Sywell, which is small and picturesque, is seated in a hollow, and surrounded by woodland, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles west from Wellingborough, 6 from Northampton, and 8 from Kettering.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter and St Paul, is an ancient structure consisting of a nave, chancel, north transept, south aisle, south porch, and square embattled tower, mantled with ivy, and containing three bells. The chancel was rebuilt in 1862, by the present rector. The church was thoroughly restored and partly rebuilt in 1870, at the sole cost of Lord Overstone. It was fitted with open sittings, a fine organ, and a handsome pulpit, resting on a foundation of Ketton stone, and a lectern and reading-desk of carved oak. The tower was raised 6 feet, and pinnacles placed at the corners. In the north transept are several mural tablets to the Wilmer and Pell families. One of them is to Lady Mary Wilmer, daughter of Charles, late Earl of Tankerville. There are two piscina—one in the chancel, and one at the east end of south aisle. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £11, 1s. $5\frac{1}{4}$ d., and now valued at £600 per annum. The Prince of Wales is the patron, and the Rev. Robert Baillie, M.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted in 1845 for a rent-charge of £540, 10s., and there are also 70 acres of glebe land. The Rectory House, which is pleasantly situated south-west of the church, was enlarged by the present rector in 1862. The School, a stone building, with teacher's residence attached, was erected by Lady Overstone, in 1864. It will accommodate sixty scholars, is attended by about forty, and supported by Lord Overstone and by subscription.

The only Charity belonging to this parish is a rent-charge of £2 per annum, left to the poor in 1735, by Ambrose Marriott.

Post-Office.—Wall Letter-box cleared at 4.40 P.M. Letters from Northampton.

Baillie Rev. Robt. M.A. rector	Noble Jno. carpt. & timber drl.	Godfrey Valentine William
Green Mrs Ann, vict. Horseshoe	Palmer Miss My. Jane, schlmrs.	Robinson George
Green Edwin, wheelwright	Farmers and Graziers.	Siddons James
Marriott John, blacksmith	Barker John (and shopkeeper)	Underwood Thos. Sywell Hall West Thos. Wm. Sywell House

Carrier—John Barker, to Northampton on Wednesday and Saturday.

WELLINGBOROUGH PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Great Harrowden and Hardwycke on the north; Doddington Great, Wilby, and Mears Ashby on the west; the river Nene, which divides it from Irchester, on the south; and the Ise brook, which separates it from Irthlingborough and Finedon, on the east. The quality of the soil is various; that of the northern part of the lordship is principally clay; on the east it is composed of a fine rich red loam, and in other parts it is of a sandy nature. The pasture is well adapted for cattle-feeding, and the arable land produces excellent corn crops. The area of the parish comprises 3992 acres of the rateable value, including buildings, &c., of £34,346; and its gross estimated rental is £41,475. The population in 1801 was 3325; in 1831, 4688; in 1841, 5041; in 1851, 5297; in 1861, 6382; and in 1871 it had increased to 9385 persons. The principal proprietors are Major Quintus Vivian (lord of the manor), Lord Overstone, John Woolston, Esq., Capt. Stockdale, Rev. W. Adams, G. H. Burnham, Esq., and N. P. Sharman, Esq.

Wellingborough—the name of which is originally Saxon—has had many orthographies. In 948 it was called Welingburgh; in Domesday Book Wedlingeberie, and at various other times Wendlesberie, Wendleberie, Wendynburgh. It is supposed to have derived its present appellation from a spring named the Red Well, which had become of considerable repute on account of its medicinal properties. This Red Well, Bridges tells us, which rises at the foot of the hill about a mile from the town, was a water of some distinction in 1628. About that time Charles I., and his Queen Henrietta, were at Wellingborough for the benefit of its waters, under the prescription of the Queen's physicians, and resided a whole season in tents erected on the side of the hill above the spring. "This once famous well is strong, and its water bubbles up abundantly, leaving a red deposit on the stones and earth over which it flows." It is situated on the vicarage farm in a field lying between the Kettering and Hardwick roads—a spot thoroughly secluded and very picturesque, but it is little noticed in the present day. It has, however, lately come into the possession of Messrs Dulley, brewers, of this town, who, at an outlay of more than £2000, have acquired a right to the water, and have connected the well with their brewery in Sheep street by means of pipes, so that their celebrated ales and stout may possess the stimulating medicinal qualities of the water. The name of the town does not seem to have been fixed in 1610, for Norden says, "Wellingborrow, called of some Wedlingborow, of others Wenlingborowe, it may be thought that the name should be Wellingbrowe, so given in regard of the springs that rise in many places in and near the town." Drayton, in his "Polyolbion," written about the beginning of the seventeenth century, makes no mention of the earlier names, but gives it in its present form, Wellingborough, so called, he says, for its many wells and fountains.

Manor.—Ædred, king of Mercia, gave 6½ hides in Wedlingburgh, with the advowson of the church, and other privileges, to the abbey of Croyland, Lincolnshire, in 948; the gift was confirmed by King Edgar, in 996; and afterwards by a charter of William the Conqueror. At the time of the Domesday survey, the abbot of Croyland had 5½ hides here, which with 2 mills of the yearly rent of 16d., and 30a. of meadow, was valued at £6. The Countess Judith had half a hide, and the Bishop of Constance 1 virgate at the same time. In the twenty-fourth of Edward I. (1296), the abbot was certified to hold this township of the king in capite; and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), he was lord of it. In the second of King John, the abbot obtained the privilege of a weekly market to be held here on Wednesday. After the dissolution of the religious houses, the possessions of Croyland were seized by the Crown, and the manor of Wellingborough given to the princess Elizabeth; and after her accession to the throne, this lordship was divided into two manors, and granted to Robert, Earl of Leicester, and Sir Christopher Hatton. In the thirty-ninth of this reign (1596), Sir Christopher died seized of a manor here, formerly belonging to the abbey of Croyland, and of a second manor which formed part of the possessions of the late dissolved college of Irthlingborough. In the reign of Charles I., Fulk, Lord Brook, died seized of these manors, and left them to his sister, wife to Sir Richard Verney, Knt. The priory of St Andrew, and the hospital of St John, at Northampton, had each possessions here. Major Quintus Vivian, the present lord, holds a court baron annually, in November, for the manors of Wellingborough.

THE TOWN OF WELLINGBOROUGH.

Wellingborough is a prosperous and compact market town, occupying a pleasant situation on the declivity of a hill near the junction of the Ise Brook with the Nene. It consists chiefly of four principal streets, diverging from the marketplace in the centre, and forming the roads to Thrapston, Higham Ferrers, Kettering, and Northampton; and is distant about 10 miles N.E. by E. from the latter town, $7\frac{1}{2}$ from Kettering, 12 from Bedford, and 66 from London. It contains many well-built houses, good shops, and inns; is well lighted with gas, and has a plentiful supply of excellent water. The town has been considerably enlarged and improved during the last few years; on the road leading to the Midland Station several handsome villas and good residences have been erected, and new streets have been opened on what was called the Victoria Estate. Wellingborough, it might be said, has been rebuilt since its destruction by the "great fire" which occurred on the 28th of July 1738. "In that destructive fire," says the Northampton Mercury of the period, "in the space of six hours, were burned down and consumed nearly 220 dwelling houses, besides out-houses, barns, stables, &c., amounting in the whole to above 800, mostly in the east and south parts of the town." The following incident in connection with the fire is given by Cole: "A lady named Hannah Spark," he says, "saved a house in the Butchery by ordering her servants, when water failed, to resort to the beer in the cellar, which they did with such effect as to extinguish the blazing wood-work. Mrs Spark was at this time sixty years old. She lived to nearly the age of 107. When she reached her hundredth year, she was chaired round the square in which she resided—a testimony to the excellence of her nerves, as well as the enthusiasm and regard of her neighbours." A board of health was established here in 1855, and great advantages have been derived from it, owing to its superior sanitary regulations.

Until the invention of machine lace, this town carried on an extensive trade in the making of pillow-lace, but the latter seems dying out, having given place to the sewing machine, or machine upper-closing, for the local and London boot manufacturers. The shoe trade is still the staple manufacture of the place, many thousand pairs being made weekly. During the last thirty years a considerable number of hands have been employed in the manufacture of Messrs Brown & Sons' patent "Euknemida," which appears to have had an extensive sale. Wellingborough always had the reputation of being a substantial town; and although it suffered—as all other places similarly situated suffered—during the transition days when railways were first introduced, and coaches and stage waggons and carriers were driven from their old tracks, yet a good substantial town it has continued, and it now promises to be more than ever prosperous. Within the last few years it has added to its other industries that of iron-smelting, which not only rivals but bids fair to surpass that of the shoe trade. About fifteen years ago Mr William Butlin made experiments in the smelting of the ore into pig iron, and the experiments being successful, he has, with great perseverance, and in spite of many discouragements, succeeded in founding a vast industry, and in establishing works which may, in course of time, have an important effect upon the character of the district. "Iron abounds in the soil, but the great question is, whether, in the event of coal not being found in the county, it is more profitable to carry the coal to the iron, or the iron to the coal. Mr Butlin seems, at all events, to have demonstrated, that an industry of this peculiar description may be profitably carried on in the county; and who shall say that, at some far-off time, from this small beginning, Wellingborough may not become another Wolverhampton? We have lived to see changes far more improbable."

Wellingborough may be said to be the seat of the iron trade of the county, and it was there, as we have seen, that the ore was first smelted by Mr Butlin, who commenced operations close to the Midland Railway, and the result of his labours has been such as to show that he had formed a true estimate of the value of the ores that permeate almost every part of the county. For a long time the fact of there being an abundance of ore in the county was but little known, but about four or five years ago, a series of articles on the ores of Northamptonshire appeared in the Mining Journal, and were quoted into the local and other papers, and from that time to the present the production has been truly extraordinary, the output having nearly doubled between 1869 and 1872, as will be seen from the returns of the quantity furnished in each of those years. They are as follow:—Blisworth produced in 1869, 61,117 tons; in 1872, 83,514 tons; Brixworth, in 1869, 9545; in 1872, 10,850; Castle Dyke, in 1869, —; in 1872, 1500; Cogenhoe, in 1869, 35,000; in 1872, 25,000; Duston, in 1869, 59,869; in 1872, 87,019; do. in 1869, 51,007; in 1872, 63,703; Gayton, in 1869, 46,575; in 1872, 33,961; Wellingborough, in 1869, 106,886; in 1872, 215,867; Glendon, in 1869, 80,000; in 1872, 98,148; Irthingborough, in 1869, —; in 1872, 114,869; Islip, in 1869, 25,000; in 1872, 35,700; Woodford, 1869, 65,400; in 1872, 73,502; Newbridge, in 1869, —; in 1872, 70,000; Ringstead, in 1869, —; in 1872, 43,500; Irchester, in 1869, —; in 1872, 46,960. Totals, in 1869, 540,259 tons; in 1872, 1,004,093.

In 1869 Northamptonshire held the fifth position in English counties producing ironstone, but in 1872 it was second—standing next to Yorkshire. The Midland Railway Company has greatly benefited by the vast increase in the output of ore in Northamptonshire, for whilst in 1869 there went over that line 319,696 tons, in 1872 there were no less than 681,798 tons, or more than 100 per cent. The quality of the ore appears to vary very much, that found near to Wellingborough being so far the richest found in the county. Some of the stone in the locality of Irchester and neighbourhood contains as much as 45 per cent. of iron, and there is a considerable tract of land where a similar quality is known to exist, but at present there are not the necessary facilities of transit. To open it out, one of the principal ironmasters has suggested the formation of a line of railway from the Midland at Kettering to Northampton to the east and west junction. Were that done, then the best stone, with 40 per cent. of iron and upwards, would be eagerly purchased by the Welsh ironmasters. Such a line of railway would be warmly supported by the owners of the land through which it would pass, and would open up several districts where there is by no means a sparse population. "Scarcely anything in the history of the iron trade of the county is more remarkable than the great progress made within the last three or four years in the development of the ores of Northamptonshire, and the increasing activity that is now going on in the northern part of that county. Quite recently some very extensive fields have been opened out, in which the ores are of a superior quality, in some instances giving upwards of 40 per cent. of iron. The estate of Lord Overstone, a few miles from Northampton, has just been broken into by the Messrs Butlin, whilst several new blast-furnaces are about to be erected. The stone is now being worked for nearly thirty miles in a straight line, commencing at a short distance from Market Harborough, and continuing along the Midland Railway for some distance past Wellingborough station, towards Bedford. The actual extent of the deposits of ore, however, has not yet been defined, but the probability is that it embraces some hundreds of miles running in one direction into the county of Rutland, and there is every reason to believe that it extends into Lincolnshire, where the stone now being worked is the same in appearance, but less silicious. On the opposite side of Northampton the ore is raised at Blisworth, Gayton, and other places, and is sent into South Wales and Staffordshire." (Mining Journal, March 1874.)

The make of pig-iron in Northamptonshire is also on the increase, the Messrs Butlin having four furnaces at Wellingborough, the output averaging more than 500 tons per week. In addition to raising the ore to feed these furnaces, several thousands of tons are sent weekly into Derbyshire, and also into the Cleveland district, where it is found to mix well with the local stone, and to produce a superior quality of iron. At Finedon, the Glendon Company have three furnaces going, and there are three at Lower Heyford, near Weedon, whilst Mr Plevins has two near Thrapston. In addition to these, the Northampton Iron Ore, Coal, and Waggon Company are having two furnaces erected at Hemsbury Hill near Northampton; and there are others in course of construction at Towcester, and the iron ore is now being extensively worked on the Easton Neston estate near that town. All that is needed to make this one of the richest and most flourishing districts in England is coal, and of the probability of that mineral being found in the county, and close to Wellingborough, there are unmistakeable signs. The indications at the shaft sunk some years ago to a depth of nearly 300 yards, within a few miles of Northampton, favoured the theory that coal would be found in connection with the ironstone, and attempts have been made to settle the question by means of the "borer," but the intervention of one or two "croakers" has been hitherto sufficient to retard the proceedings. The question is still a moot point, and will, no doubt, be set at rest before very long. Considerable sums of money have been offered towards testing the matter in the most efficient and practical manner; and it will be seen that the progress made during the last few years in the development of the ores of Northamptonshire has been truly exceptional, and that it gives every promise of being still more so. The stone is now found in many parts of the county, and new discoveries are being constantly made. A short time ago we noticed that in Wellingborough there was some very fine ore brought out in sinking the foundations of some houses, so that there is every evidence that the town is actually built upon ironstone.

The following prose sketch by Mr John Askham of Wellingborough, which appeared in the local papers in 1864, gives a graphic description as to the abundance of the iron ore of Wellingborough:—

"The Iron Town.—Wellingborough might almost without a figure of speech be called the 'iron town.' There is something astonishing in its resources with regard to this valuable metal. Ore, containing more than an average per cent. of iron of the finest quality, may be found by just removing the soil in nearly every part of the town and lordship. In highway, byway, lane, and alley, it crops out, and seems to invite the hand of labour to turn it to account. The older part of the town is built almost exclusively of ironstone. The tower, buttresses, &c., of the western part of the parish church are built of ironstone. Several of the Dissenting places of worship, the old workhouse, and other public buildings, are of ironstone. Iron, iron, iron. Everywhere, from church to cottage, from mansion to pig-stye, all is of iron. We worship in walls of iron, we lie down to sleep encased in iron, we walk on iron, and we even drink at the Red Well spring. There is a sturdy time-defying look about our iron walls, massive, sombre, solemn, solid. People rush to far-off goldfields for doubtful riches. We have a mine of wealth close to our doors and within our doors. If I were to take up the floor of my residence and remove the earth a foot, I should find the precious ore. If a foundation is to be laid, a drain to be cut, or a gas-pipe to be put down, the labourer's pick is pretty sure to come in contact with unyielding ironstone. Cellars of iron keep our beer cool, vaults of iron contain our wine, storehouses of iron hold our corn—above, below, around, we are hemmed in on every hand with inflexible iron. The produce of our fields is grown on beds of iron; and, finally, we are buried in iron."

The Peterborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway has a principal station about one mile south of the town; and there is another station about a mile from the town, on the east side, belonging to the Midland Company, where they have large works for the repairs of rolling stock, &c.; so that great facilities, both for travelling and the transit of live and dead stock, &c., to all parts of the kingdom, are now enjoyed by the inhabitants of Wellingborough and the adjoining villages.

The Gas Works, situated on the London Road, were established in 1833 at a cost of £4150, by a company of shareholders in £25 shares. The present capital is £12,450. There are four gas-holders capable of containing 155,000 cubic feet, which is supplied to the inhabitants at 5s. 5d. per thousand feet, and there are 149 public lamps. The Water Works were established by the local Board of Health in 1871, at a cost of £8000. The water, which is of a superior quality, is obtained from two springs at Busby Field, one of which is chalybeate, and conveyed to the reservoir on the Hardwick road, a distance of about a thousand yards, with a rise of about ninety feet, through a nine-inch main; and the water is brought to the town, a distance of $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile, by an eight-inch main.

The Market is on Wednesday, and is well supplied and attended; and fairs are held on Wednesday in Easter week, for horses and hogs; on Whit-Wednesday for horned cattle, horses, and sheep; and on the 29th of October, for horses, cattle, sheep, and cheese.

The Town Hall, in High Street, was erected in 1821, and is let for various uses, club meetings, building societies, &c. Wellingborough is remarkable for the longevity of its inhabitants, and it is supposed to contain more persons above the age of eighty than any other town in this or the adjoining counties. The air is very salubrious, and the water, as already observed, particularly good.

The Corn Exchange, situated in the Market Square, is a brick building with stone dressings, erected in 1861, at a cost of £4000, by a company of shareholders in £25 shares. It has a portico in front surmounted by a stone turret. The large room, which is let to merchants on market days, and for various other purposes, viz., balls, concerts, lectures, public meetings, auction sales, &c., will accommodate 800. The upper or concert room is occupied by the committee and members of the Literary Institute, and will seat about 300. A portion of the ground floor is let for offices, the Board of Health occupying one, and the remainder of the ground floor is occupied by the hall-keeper as a residence. When the houses (which are now destined to come down) forming the south side of the Market Place, and intervening between it and Market street, are removed, Wellingborough will possess one of the finest market places in the country. Norden says the town was distinguished by the name of "Wellingborowe Forum of the Market theare;" so that the market must have been a considerable one formerly.

The County Court, for the recovery of debts under £50, is held in the Corn Exchange monthly on Tuesday. The district comprises the following parishes and places:—Bozeat, Ecton, Earl's Barton, Easton Mandit, Farndish, Finedon, Grendon, Great Doddington, Great Harrowden, Little Harrowden, Hardwycke, Higham Ferrers, Higham Park, Irchester, Irthlingborough, Isham, Mears Ashby, Newton Bromshold, Orlingbury, Overstone, Poddington, Rushden, Sywell, Sywell Lodge, Strixton, Wollaston, Wellingborough, Wilby, and Wymington.

The County Police Station, situated on the Midland Road, is a brick building with stone dressings, erected in 1866. There is accommodation for an inspector and six constables, and a fine room for magisterial purposes. The magistrates meet every Friday, when two or more of the following preside : H. M. Stockdale, Esq. (chairman), R. W. Arkwright, Esq., W. F. Higgins, Esq., J. Hill, Esq., G. F. Holroyd, Esq., Richard Orlibar, Esq., S. Pratt, Esq., F. U. Sartoris, Esq., Major Quintus Vivian, and A. A. Young, Esq.

The Parish Church, dedicated to St Luke, is an exceedingly handsome structure in various styles, principally in the Perpendicular, with portions of Decorated and Norman work. It consists of a nave with clerestory, south transept, chancel with chapels, north vestry, north and south aisles, north and south porches, and a square tower, surmounted by a fine spire, and containing six bells. There are parvises over both the porches, and in that over the south doorway are the mouldering remains of old oak chests cut out of the solid wood. The entrances to both these chambers are blocked up. Some of the roofing of the interior, especially that in the chantry chapel in the south aisle, is very good ; it is rich in carving and in shields and paintings of angelic figures, and the emblems of the Crucifixion. From this chapel a view of the high altar would be obtained through a squint. On each side of the choir are three very rich and curious old oak stalls with Misereres, having grotesque carvings on the under part of the turn-up seats. These seats have a bracket which gives them the effect of a double seat ; and the carvings found on the under part have been the subject of much speculation. The chancel was restored in 1851, when it was re-seated with carved oak stalls, pulpit, and reading desk. It contains six ancient stalls elaborately carved, and is separated from the chapels by carved oak screens. The body of the church was restored in 1861, when the old pews were removed and open oak sittings substituted. The nave was re-roofed, the side and west galleries were removed, the west arch thrown open, and a circular window filled with stained glass was placed at the west end of the tower. The east window, which is a noble piece of work, and a fine specimen of the Decorated period, was filled with stained glass in 1871, by subscription, in commemoration of the thirty years' ministry of Canon Broughton as vicar of the parish. In 1873, the north aisle was re-roofed with Baltic pine, when the fine old hexagonal font, which was found in a farm-yard on the Harrowden road, where it was used as a drinking trough for cattle, was restored and placed in the church by the present vicar, and the south aisle is now (July 1874) being re-roofed. The inner doorway of the south porch, which is of Norman character, is ornamented with bold chevron mouldings and shafts. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £24, 1s. 8d., and now worth £600 per annum, in the patronage of Major Quintus Vivian, and incumbency of the Rev. Reginald Prideaux Lightfoot, M.A. The tithes were commuted for land in 1765, except some small tithes which were commuted for £40. In 1829, the several paths which led through the churchyard were enclosed by the parishioners with iron palisades at a cost of £500. The Vicarage House, which stands near the church, is a substantial building. A story is told of one of the incumbents of this Church, the Rev. Aaron Locock, who was instituted in 1718, which is worth repeating. In the dusk of the evening, Mr Locock (who was tall and athletic) was crossing the Long bridge, when he was attacked by a footpad. Instead, however, of yielding up his purse, as demanded, he collared the robber, and was in the act of throwing him over the parapet when he recognised the man's features, and exclaiming—"If it wasn't more for your soul than your body, Jack, I would drop you,"—set him at liberty. Mr Locock was appointed vicar of All Saints, Northampton, in 1731. A curious relic is kept in the vestry called the Wellingborough lock of hair, which was dug up many years ago in the churchyard. When discovered, it was about a yard in length, but is not above two feet now. It is twisted or plaited, and was evidently the "back hair" of a lady of very remote times. The Anglo-Saxon and Norman ladies wore their hair twisted into long tails, "as the fashion was with the Miss Kenwigs of our times some fifteen years ago."

All Saints Church, Midland Road, is a fine structure in the Geometric

Gothic style, erected in 1868, at a cost of £4500, on land given by the Rev. F. Custance and family, and consists of nave with clerestory, apsidal chancel, north and south aisles, organ chamber, north porch, with bell turret at the east end of the nave, containing one bell. It will accommodate 500, and is furnished with open sittings. In the chancel, which is floored with encaustic tiles, is a double sedilia and credence table. The pulpit is of carved oak, resting on a foundation of Bath-stone, and the lectern, representing an eagle, is also of carved oak. The living is a vicarage (not endowed) in the gift of the Vicar of Wellingborough, and held by the Rev. Frederick William Willis, M.A.

Saint Barnabas, situated at the west end of the town, is an iron structure, consisting of nave and small chancel, erected by subscription in 1863 at a cost of £650. The interior, which is seated with rush-bottom chairs, is neatly fitted up. It is a chapel of ease to the parish church. The Rev. Thomas William Owen, B.A., is curate in charge.

The Catholics have a large room in Church street fitted up as a chapel, where divine service is held twice on Sunday, morning and evening, by a priest from the cathedral at Northampton. The Rev. William Blackman is the present pastor of the mission. A site for a new chapel has been obtained at the east end of the town, which will be erected when the necessary funds are forthcoming; it is to be dedicated to our "Blessed Lady and All Saints."

Chapels.—The Independent Chapel, in Cheese lane, is a plain stone building, capable of seating about 600 persons. Salem Chapel (Independent or Congregational), in Salem lane, erected in 1812, will accommodate 700. Adam Corrie, Esq., in 1846, left the interest of £100 to be distributed amongst the poor of this congregation; and the interest of £200 towards the support of the minister. There are sick and clothing clubs connected with the Sunday school. The Congregational Church, now in course of erection, the entrance to which is from High street, is of stone, in the Early Gothic style, and in the form of an egg. It has two centre and two side aisles, with galleries about three parts round, a recess at the back of the pulpit for an organ, and the roof is flat, with a dome in the centre, which will admit light and ventilation. The cost of the building will be about £10,000, and it will seat 1200 persons. The Independent Chapel, West street (now rented by the Primitive Methodists), is of brick, erected in 1791. The Calvinistic Baptist Chapel, Park street, is a brick building, with Sunday school attached, erected in 1862, at a cost of about £2000. It will seat about 500; the Rev. William Bull is the minister. The Strict Particular Baptist Chapel, Knox road, is a small brick building erected in 1874, at a cost of £500, and seats about 200. Rev. William Henry Lee is the minister. The Friends' Meeting House, in St John's street, is a plain substantial stone building, erected in 1819. The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, Park street, a brick building with stone dressings, and Sunday schools attached, was erected in 1872 at a cost of about £2600. It has a portico in front, supported by small granite columns. The interior is neatly fitted up, having galleries all round, and furnished with open sittings of varnished pine. It will seat about 600. Wesleyan Reform Chapel, Herriott's lane, is a small building erected in 1849.

Schools.—The Grammar School, on the north side of the churchyard, founded in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, is a commodious structure, with gabled roof and stone mullioned windows, after the fashion of the period. It has an upper and lower school. The present school, which was erected or rebuilt in 1620, was originally endowed with revenues belonging to a guild of the Blessed Virgin, attached to the church since then; however, it has received many bequests at different times; amongst which may be noticed, the sum of £130 left in 1680 by Edward Pickering, Esq., with which land was purchased. The funds now yield about £700 per annum, and are apportioned by the feoffees and town officers. The Upper School, in which a fee of £1 per quarter is charged, affords instruction in classics, French, mathematics, and other subjects. A new scheme was authorised by the Charity Commissioners in 1862; but since 1871 the school has increased so much that another new scheme is now being prepared for the approval of the Endowed Schools Commissioners. When this scheme comes into force, the feoffees will, it is expected, erect new buildings for this school. The headmaster, G. Plummer, Esq., B.A., has accommodation for about thirty boarders. The subjects of instruction in the Lower School include Latin and English grammar, physical science, drawing, reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, and history. The proposed new scheme will make this school what the Commissioners call a third grade school, and new buildings will probably be erected for its accommodation. The education afforded will be suitable to the wants of the commercial classes.

Freeman's School, in Oxford street, founded in 1711, is a good substantial structure, rebuilt in 1812, rebuilt a second time in 1859, and enlarged in 1871 by the addition of class-rooms. John Freeman, in 1711, devised a copyhold house to the trustees, to be used as a charity school, and Richard Fisher, in 1711, gave £20 a year, for the benefit of such poor children as should be put into this charity-school, and also £10 yearly to the headmaster of the free-school in Wellingborough, and his successors, and £5 yearly to the undermaster, and £5 a year to the bede-house or hospital of Higham Ferrers, upon condition the feoffees of this town should send a poor inhabitant to the said hospital, to be kept there. By an order of the Court of Chancery, made soon after his death, it was ordered that certain lands, part of his estate, instead of being sold to raise money to provide for the annual payment of the charities, should be conveyed to proper trustees for the support of the charities. At the enclosure in 1767, an allotment of 55a. 1r. 13p., was awarded in lieu of these lands, which now yield an annual rent of £207, 5s.; half of which is applied to these schools, one quarter to the headmaster of the grammar school, one-eighth to the undermaster, and one-eighth to two decayed tradesmen of Wellingborough. The endowment was subsequently increased by a bequest of £100 by Mary Roane, in 1715; a legacy of £100, bequeathed by Samuel Knight in 1728, to provide for the teaching of fifteen male children of poor parents, to read, till they should be made fit for the grammar school; and a further legacy of £100, bequeathed to the charity-school by John Robinson, in 1791.

The Board School, in Park street, is a brick building with stone dressings, erected in 1873 at a cost of about £4120, including purchase of site. It is divided into three parts, or schools for boys, girls, and infants, with spacious pleasure grounds attached to each. The schools, in accordance with the Government requirements, will accommodate 500 pupils, and the average attendance is about 350. The Board School, Rock street, was also erected in 1873, at a cost of £3191. This school is on the same principle and composed of the same material as the above, and will accommodate 500 children, the average attendance being 300.

The approaches to Wellingborough are pleasant and picturesque; that from the old station, on the Northampton and Peterborough line, is very agreeable. A noble walk, in some parts forty feet wide, "straight as an arrow," parallel with the road, bordered on either side with limes, and terminating in a vista of trees and the lofty spire of the parish church. This fine promenade, which enhances the beauty of this approach to the town, and of which Wellingborough has good reason to be proud, was formed by the town feoffees in 1847, at a cost of £670. Soon after its formation an attempt was made by some enemy to improvement to injure and destroy several of these trees, and the indignation felt at so wanton an act was rather facetiously expressed in a witty pamphlet published at the time by Mr A. Wilkin, "The Genius of Wellingborough," in a supposed express from Olympus, by the "Aerial Electric Telegraph." Mr Wilkin delivers himself thus: "All honour, then, to the projectors and finishers of your New Walk. Tell the feoffees that the gods of Olympus deign to walk upon it. Tell them that their children's children will bless them, and that Heaven especially delights in those who endeavour to add to the comforts of their fellow-mortals, and increase the dignity of their native town. An anathema rest upon the Goth—that double-distilled Vandal—that brutal Iconoclast, who dared to destroy those trees which imaged forth, as it were, the good intention of the planters ; those trees which would have been the pride and comfort of the future sons and daughters of Wellingborough—under whose shade the tales of lovers yet unborn would have been told. I say again, accused be the destroyer ! The Olympian fiat is, that the wretch shall wander forth a second Cain, and every twig and every tree shall become to his sight a hideous monster, and every branch and every arm shall seem to threaten him with destruction, and the viewless ‘wanderer’ that once wooed their branches shall hiss like a concealed serpent for ever in his ears !”

Approaching from the cemetery on the London Road, the aspect of the town is novel and picturesque. “Tall chimneys,” says the author of “Rambles Roundabout,” in his “Gossiping Sketch” of the town, “are not usually agreeable adjuncts to a landscape, but the tall chimney and the adjoining tower-like building at Mr Dulleys brewery are really ornamental, and show how the most utilitarian and unpromising structures may be wrought into elegance and picturesqueness by a cultivated and artistic taste. Rising upward from the dip along which the Swan’s Pool stream meanders, the houses, rising one above another, intermingled with trees, give an agreeable character to the scene.” Wellingborough possesses several old houses, streets, and inns of historical and picturesque interest. “The Golden Lion,” an unostentatious structure of one storey only, with a gable projecting from its centre towards the street, is one of these. “On entering from the passage, we find ourselves in a low room of black oak, and ponderous beams, with elaborate mouldings. Across the fireplace is an immense piece of oak timber.” Cole, in his “History of Wellingborough,” speaks of “a carved wood chimney-piece of curious workmanship,” but the carving has disappeared. In a room upstairs is a Tudor fireplace, with an ornament in the spandril. The stables and granaries in the rear, which were taken down a short time since, were of the same date, and equally ponderous with timber, the gables being finished with finials. “This house,” says Cole, “was formerly the residence of a gentleman named Thomas Roane, who died in 1676, but the house is at least a century earlier. Thomas Roane may have been the owner, but he could not have been the original builder—probably an ancestor may ; the house is very interesting, as showing the modest residence of a country gentleman of the seventeenth century. Roane married the daughter of William Law, Esq., of Glendon, and his daughter, who died in 1717, left £100 to the girls’ charity school.”

The “Hind Hotel,” another object of interest, and an ornament to the Market-place, is stated to have been building when the Parliamentarians marched through Wellingborough, previous to the battle of Naseby, which would give the date of its erection about the year 1645. Just beyond the Hind is Burystead place, a very suggestive name. A stone in the church records that George Hodges de Burystead, “hic jacet sepultus, 14 Feb. Ano Dni 1623.” The site of Burystead is indicated by some large buildings of the sixteenth century, but when the house was demolished does not seem to be known. There was a much older inn than the Hind existing in the Market-place within the last forty years. This was the White Swan. Here Charles I. and his queen were lodged when they visited the town in 1628, for the benefit of the Red Well waters, which were then in repute. And it was the White Swan, too, in all probability, that drew forth the bitter criticism of Horace Walpole, who was here for a night in 1763. “We lay,” he says, “at Wellingborough—pray never lie there—the beastliest inn upon earth is there ! We were carried into a vast bed-chamber, which I suppose is the club-room, for it stunk of tobacco like a justice of the peace ! I desired some boiling water for tea ; they brought me a sugar-dish of hot water in a pewter plate.” If Horace Walpole’s words are to be taken literally, we must infer that tea was not in general use at Wellingborough, even at commercial inns, a century ago ; but at the houses of the nobility and gentry we may well believe that tea was an accustomed luxury. Horace Walpole asked not for tea as a traveller or guest would now, but for “some boiling water for tea,” as if he carried his own tea with him, and only required the means of making it.

Broad Green, with the trees of Hatton House and its own ample spaciousness, is a very pleasant place. St John street, said by Cole to have had an old house in it, on the front of which was a representation of the Crucifixion carved in stone, which was traditionally called St John, from having been affixed to a wall in an edifice (probably a chapel) dedicated to that saint, but house and carving have long since disappeared. Gold street, running eastward, at the northern extremity of the town, is an ancient way, and shows that Wellingborough three or four hundred years ago was at least co-extensive with its present boundaries. There is in this street an old house of some pretensions, with respect to frontage. At each extremity are excellent Tudor doorways, the original oak door in one instance remaining almost perfect. In Sheep street is another "eminently picturesque old house, respecting which," says the authority just quoted, "we are sorry to say we are in the position of Canning's knife-grinder, having no story to tell; but we believe it is 'in Chancery,' and if so, we have a tolerable certainty that it will not be disturbed in a hurry. It is now occupied as a broker's shop."

Gloucester place, formerly known as Hog Hill, the hog market being held there; a public-house close by, called the "Sow and Pigs," still attests the character of the neighbourhood. Gloucester place, then, owes its present aristocratic appellation to the following incident: "Between forty and fifty years ago the Duke of Gloucester was going to Cambridge on some public occasion; and the landlord of the Hind Hotel put his best horses to the carriage, which was honoured with the august person of His Royal Highness. The post-boy was duly apprized of the importance of his task, and directed to drive as it became a Duke to be driven. 'Thou bearest Cæsar and his fortunes,' was repeated by the worthy host, mutatis mutandis, and off the vehicle dashed with its noble freight, to the admiration and pride of the bystanders. Up the ascent of the Market-place, along Silver street, the postillion's whips crashing, the four horses' heels making a tattoo, as if 'played with iron sticks on the kettle-drum of granite.' Hog Hill is reached, and now for the postillion's triumph, to sweep grandly round into East End, at showing-off corner. 'It's awful work! It's faster than Turpin's ride to York on Bess, that notable clipper.' Round the corner they go, never pulling a rein, and over goes the carriage, depositing the Duke at the foot of the pump in the middle of the hill. How from all the fair dames who thronged the windows round Hog Hill there proceeded one simultaneous shriek of horror; and how all the loyalty rushed headlong on to the hill to assist the downfallen royalty, used to be graphically told by Mrs Wells, the landlady of the Globe Inn, in 1862, who herself remembered the event, and whose father was one of the first to render help. Fortunately, though the carriage was smashed, the Duke was not, and in reply to the inquiry of the worthy citizen whether His Royal Highness was hurt, he very courteously thanked the inquirer, and assured him he was not. Another carriage was soon procured, and the Duke proceeded on his route. But dukes don't get upset every day, and to commemorate the event and the place it was unanimously resolved that Hog Hill was a name clearly unfitted to be handed down in connection with the spilling of a Duke, that henceforth Hog Hill should be called by the style and title of Gloucester place. And Gloucester place it accordingly has been ever since, because the Duke of Gloucester was spilt there. There are few places with a high-sounding name that can give so good a reason for their christening."

The Town Estate consists of certain lands and houses in the parishes of Wellingborough, Bozeat, and Burton Latimer, which now yield an annual rent of £604; and the income, after providing for the repair of the houses, the masters of the Free School, and the expenses of the trust, may be applied for purposes of public utility in the town.

For the charities of the parish, see the table prefixed to this hundred.

Banks.—The Northamptonshire Union Bank, and the Northamptonshire Banking Co., have branch establishments here. There also is a branch of the Northampton Savings' Bank, conducted by the Vicar, John Woolston, Esq., David Duley, jun., Esq., and Mr T. S. Curtis. The business is carried on at the residence of Mr Curtis.

Rifle Volunteers.—The Wellingborough 7th Northamptonshire Rifle Volunteers were embodied in 1860. The corps is composed of 93 effective members, the maximum strength being 100 men. The armoury and orderly room is in High street. William Wake Clark, captain; Wm. Askham, lieutenant; Sergt. Alfred Lloyd, drill-instructor.

Here are several friendly benefit societies, sick and clothing clubs, &c., and nearly 100 acres of land are let to the working classes. There is also an Agricultural Society, of which the neighbouring gentry and farmers are members.

The Literary Institute, established in 1862, is held in the Corn Exchange. It has a library of 2800 volumes, and is supplied with the London and local papers and leading periodicals. Members pay a subscription of 6s. per annum; hon. members 10s. 6d. and a guinea. There are 280 members, with an income of £110. Benjn. Duley, Esq., president; Mr T. S. Curtis, hon. secretary; William Henry Cooper, librarian.

The New Public Hall, Church street, formerly a Wesleyan chapel, built in 1791, is let for various uses—concerts, public lectures, &c., &c.

The Union Workhouse, which stands near the south end of the town, off the London road, was erected at a cost of £5000, and will accommodate 250 persons; an infirmary was added in 1860 at a cost of £1930. The union extends over an area of 84 square miles, and comprehends the following 27 parishes, viz.: Wellingborough, Irthlingborough, Finedon, Isham, Orlingbury, Great Harrowden, Little Harrowden, Hardwycke, Mears Ashby, Sywell, Ecton, Earl's Barton, Great Doddington, Wilby, Higham Ferrers, Higham Park, Rushden, Irchester, Wymington, Newton Bromshold, Poddington, Farndish, Grendon, Bozeat, Strixton, Wollaston, and Easton Maudit. The principal officers are Richard Orlebar, Esq., chairman; Rev. Wentworth Charles Roughton and Mr Thomas Smith Curtis, vice-chairmen; Rev. John Smith, B.A., chaplain; Mr and Mrs Simmons, master and matron; and the medical officers are Mr Thomas Clark for the Wellingborough district; Mr E. Hemsted, Earl's Barton district; Mr Edward R. Bird, Wollaston district; and Mr Thomas John Starling, for the Higham Ferrers district. Mr Matthew R. Sharman is clerk to the Board of Guardians. The average weekly cost of each pauper for the past year was 4s. 5d. The relieving officers are George Frederick Packwood for the southern district, and George Frederick Packwood, jun., for the northern district.

The Cemetery, situated on the London road, was consecrated by the Bishop of Peterborough on the 22d March 1858. It covers an area of six acres, one half of which was added in 1874; it is tastefully laid out, and planted with shrubs, &c.; there are two neat chapels, and a good lodge for the superintendent. The entire cost was about £5200.

The Grange, formerly belonging to the abbey of Croyland, stands at the back of the Hind Hotel, and is a fine old building of the sixteenth century. It has an oaken staircase in good preservation, and some fine old panelling in its spacious and handsome hall. It occupies the brow of a hill with its front facing the south, and its pleasant gardens are bounded by a moat supplied with clear water. Beneath its slope picturesque grounds down to the Swan's Pool stream, and beyond is a pleasant country clothed with trees. All about it speaks of antiquity and country life as if it were far remote from towns. It was built from a wing of the old abbey; and the other wing has been converted into a handsome building called Croyland Abbey, now the residence of Edward Sharman, Esq. The old tithe-barn is still standing, and forms, in its architectural features, one of the most interesting objects to be found in the town.

Hatton House is situated on an elevated plot of ground at the top of the town, but free from all connection with it. It is a handsome building, in the Tudor style of domestic architecture, possessing several bold triangular pediments, and adorned with trees.

Worthies.—Sir Paul Pindar, Kt., a famous merchant, and consul and ambassador to Turkey in the reign of James I., was born in this town, and remained at school here till he was sixteen, when he was bound to an Italian merchant, who sent him at eighteen, as his factor, to Venice. In 1611, he was sent as ambassador to the Grand Signor at Constantinople, where he continued nine years. Three years after his return, in 1623, King James having knighted him, offered, as a reward of his services, to make him his Lieutenant of the Tower; but this honour Sir Paul humbly refused, and the rather, in regard his Majesty desired to purchase Sir Paul's diamond-jewel of £30,000 value, upon credit. Sir Paul brought home this diamond-jewel from Turkey, and lent it to King James to wear at divers times on days of great solemnity, on opening Parliaments, and when audiences were given to foreign ambassadors. It was afterwards sold to King Charles I. Sir Paul expended £2000 in repairing the entry porches and front of St Paul's Cathedral, and on being appointed for his skill in commerce one of the farmers of the Custom-house, he expended £17,000 on the repairs of the south aisle of the same church. He supplied King Charles at different times with large sums of money; the communion plate of Wellingborough church was presented by him in 1634, and the first bell in 1640. He died in London in 1650, and was buried in St Botolph's church.

Mr John Askham, a working shoemaker, and a native of this town, is the author of several volumes of poems and sonnets, which have met with a most favourable reception at the hands of the public, and the highest praise from the local and provincial press. In 1868 the Government granted Mr Askham £50 from the Queen's bounty fund.

WELLINGBOROUGH DIRECTORY.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank, Burystead place.—Frederic Woolston, postmaster. Letters arrive from all parts at 7 and 10.45 A.M. and 6.15 P.M., and are despatched to London, Northampton, and the North, West, and Midland Counties, 6.50 A.M.; to Higham Ferrers, Thrapston, Oundle, and Peterborough, 9.15 A.M.; to London, Northampton, and Kettering, 10.30 A.M.; to Northampton, North and North-West, Scotland and Ireland, and Bletchley (Beds. Bucks. and Herts) 6.10 P.M.; North and North-West, Scotland and Ireland, 6.30 P.M.; Peterboro' and Eastern Counties, 7.30 P.M.; to London, Leicester, Derby, Northampton, North, North-East, and Midland Counties, 9.30 P.M. On Sunday they arrive at 7 A.M., and are despatched to Northampton and Birmingham at 7 P.M., and to all parts at 7.40 P.M.

ABBOTT John, machine-closer, Havelock st.
 Abbott Mr John, Park Crescent Cottage.
 Abbott John, painter, &c. 48 Midland road
 Abbott William, joiner and builder, Park cres.
 Adkins Thomas, manager, Nobles' buildings
 Affleck Jas. travelling draper, Ranelagh road
 Affleck Thos. travelling draper and tea-dealer,
 27 Cambridge street
 Allen Miss Eliz. confectioner, 16 Sheep st.
 Allen George, machine-closer, 32 West ter.
 Allen John, beerhouse, 15 Market street
 Allen Wallis, bookslr. and statnr. 3 Market st.
 Allen William, shoe manufacturer, and draper,
 8 Market street
 Allen Wm. machine-closer, Harrowden road
 Anderson John, trav. draper, 4 Castle street
 Archer Caleb, architect's asst. Northampton rd.
 Archer Henry, solicitor's clerk, Harrowden rd.
 Archer John, farm-bailiff, 12 Cheese lane
 Aris Benj. Blunsom, vet. surgeon, 1 London rd.
 Ashby Peter, foreman tailor, 41 Midland rd.
 Askham John, reporter, 1 Church lane
 Askham Thomas, vict. Crown, 49 Market st.
 Askham William, currier, Church yard

BALAAM Mrs Alice Eliz. & Sons, cabinetmkrs.
 and upholrs. 13 Market st. & 4 Midland rd.
 Balaam Mrs Harriet Amelia (& Sons), ho. 4
 Midland rd.
 Balaam Fred. Wm. (& Sons), 13 Market st.
 Balaam Mrs Elizabeth, lodgings, 3 London rd.

Ball James, builder, 39 Broad green
 Banks Edward, farmer, The Grange
 Banks John Humbley, farmer, Croyland Hall
 Barber Rev. Henry, M.D., curate of St Luke's, 38 Broad green
 Barker Jas. shopkpr. and beerhse. Finedon rd.
 Barron Chas. furniture broker, 5 Broad green
 Barron James, machine closer, Havelock st.
 Barron Samuel, machine-closer, 19 Hill street
 Barson George, clicker, Winstanley road
 Baxter John Christley, grocer and wine dealer, 31 Cambridge street
 Beale Mr John, Hatton Park road
 Bearn John Hobson, grocer, 23 Silver street; house, 3 Cambridge street
 Bearn Mrs Sarah, baker and corn dealer, 23
 Silver street; house, Finedon
 Bearn Miss Sarah Ann, bookseller, 25 Silver st.
 Beeby Thomas, machine-closer, 47 Broad green
 Beeby Walter, machine-closer, 4 Park street
 Beedham Carter Sharp, grocer, &c. 1 Silver st.
 Belcher Joseph, machine-closer, Box gardens
 Bell Jackson, carpr. & joiner, Spring gardens
 Bellamy James Hall, printer, &c. (Sanders
 & B.), 22 Silver street
 Bellamy Wm. Henry, painter, &c. Oxford st.
 Belton Arthur, machinist, repairer of sewing machines and all kinds of light machinery,
 37 West terrace
 Berrill Joseph, bricklayer, St Barnabas' street
 Bibby Mrs Emma, 5 Gloucester place

Bignell Thomas, j. brickmaker, 9 Buckwell end
 Billing Mrs Eliza, shopkeeper, 54 Oxford st.
 Billington John, butcher, 18 Market street
 Bird Mrs Jemima, vict. Swan and Nest, 65
 Cannon street
 Blackford Arthur Budding, clerk, Midland ter.
 Bland Mrs Susan, school, 62 Broad green
 Blott Edward, butcher, 21 Silver street
 Blott Johnson, butcher, 23 Church street
 Blott William, corn, seed, and coal merchant and farmer, 8 Market square, h. The Poplars
 Blunt Mr John, Cross street
 Blunt Wm. Ellis, machine-closer, Rock street
 Bodaly & Co., drapers & mercers, 6 Silver st.
 Boddington John, builder, Orchard Cottage
 Bond Fred. machine-closer, Newcomen rd.
 Boswell John, builder, 18 West street
 Bown Wm. organist of St Luke's, Strode rd.
 Boxall Geo. clothier and hatter, High street
 Boyce James, manager, West street
 Bradford George, engine driver, Newcomen rd.
 Brightwell Alfred, shoe mfr. Newcomen rd.
 Brightwell Wm. shopkeeper, Harrowden road
 Bromage Rev. Thos. (Wesleyan), 23 Park st.
 Brown & Sons, boot-upper manufacturers,
 Cheese lane, and 38 Noble street, London
 Brown Benj. (Brown & Sons), h. Cedar Lawn
 Brown Jacob Young, shopkeeper, King street
 Brown John, hosier and glover, 2 Silver street
 Brown Mrs Mary Butlin, 33 Midland road
 Brown Rd. Thompson, draper's asst. Oxford st.
 Brown Thomas (Brown & Sons), h. Cedar Lawn
 Brown Thos. statr. and newsagent, 7 Sheep st.
 Brown Wm. (Brown & Sons), h. Burystead pl.
 Browne Leonard, anal. chemist, 58 Midland rd.
 Brummitt Edw. toy, &c. dealer, 44 Market st.
 Bryant Wm. tailor and draper, 12 Silver street
 Bull Charles, machine-closer, 25 Oxford street
 Bull Rev. William (Baptist) 26 Broad green
 Bullivant John, baker and shopkeeper, 22
 Well street; house, St Barnabas' street
 Burditt Mr Robert, 31 Oxford street
 Burkitt John, builder and contr. Midland rd.
 Burkitt John, machine-closer, Oxford street
 Burnham & Henry, solicitors, 1 High street
 Burnham Geo. Hodson (B. & H.), h. 63 Oxford st.
 Burr Josiah, corn and seed merchant and malt-
 ster, 3 Midland road and Finedon
 Busby Samuel, tailor, 1 St John's street
 Butcher Hy. Septimus, watchmkr. 38 Market st
 Butcher Mr John, London road
 Butlin, Bevan, & Co. iron ore mine proprietors
 Butlin Thomas & Co. iron manufacturers,
East End, and Irthingborough Iron Works
 Butlin Edwin (Thos. & Co., & B. B. & Co.), h.
 39 Cambridge street
 Butlin Miss Elizabeth, shopkeeper, Knox rd.
 Butlin Wm. (Thos. & Co., & B. B. & Co.), h.
Duston House, Duston, Northampton

CAPELL H. & J. engineers, agricl. implement makers, brassfounders, &c. Herriot's lane
 Capell Harry (H. & J.), house, Strode road
 Capell James, farmer, Buckwell green
 Capell Jas. jun. (H. & J.), h. 2 Buckwell green
 Carruthers Thos. Geo. tra. draper, Midland ter.
 Carter Joseph, boot-upper manf. 2 Knox road
 Cattell Clement, shoemaker, 1 Gloucester pl.
 Caven Douglas, travelling draper and tea
 dealer, 46 Oxford street
 Challoner Mrs Mary, 43 Midland road
 Chamberlain Mrs Ann, shopkpr. 28 Knight st.

Chamberlain James, machine-closer, Park st.
 Chaplin & Horne, carriers to L. & N. W. R.
 Co. 40 Market st.—Wm. Grainger, agent
 Charter Charles, brewer, &c. 33 Market st.
 Cheatter James, carpenter, 26 Oxford street
 Checkley Alfd. bkr. & confectnr. 7 Oxford st.
 Cheetham Joseph, gentleman, 34 Sheep street
 Cheetham Mrs Leah Matilda, 69 Midland road
 Cheney Riley, tinman, 9 Wood street
 Clarabut Samuel, draper, 20 Silver street
 Clare Job, scripture reader, Havelock street
 Clark Alfred, commerc. traveller, London road
 Clark Mrs Harriet, clothes dlr. 1 Herriot's ln.
 Clark Thos. surgeon, West Villa, Oxford st.
 Clark Wm. Wake, M.D. surgeon, 24 Silver st.
 Clarke Miss Harriet, vict. Boat, 11 Herriot's l.
 Clayson Alfred, foreman, Broad green
 Clayson Chas. machine-closer, 18 Hill street
 Clayson Chas. Eli, shoemkr. 34 Cambridge st.
 Clayson John, iron ore contractor, Knox road
 Clayson John, machine-closer, West street
 Cleaver John, tailor and draper, 8 High street
 Cleaver Miss Julia Mary, school, 44 Midland rd.
 Cobb Joseph, shopkeeper, 13 Cambridge st.
 Cobley Ebenezer, shopkeeper, Havelock street
 Cobley Eusebius, beerhouse, 61 Midland road
 Cobley William, beerhouse, Ball street
 Coleman Mrs Sarah, draper, 36 Midland road
 Coles Alexander, foreman, 7 Doddington road
 Coles Benjamin, machine-closer, Hill street
 Coles Chas. shoe manufacturer, 11 Oxford st.
 Coles George Alexander, shoemaker, 38 Sheep street, h. 40 Midland road
 Coles John, grindery dealer, 57 Broad green
 Coles Thomas, iron ore contractor, Knox rd.
 Collier Miss Harriet, milliner, &c. 29 Market st.
 Collier John Watkin, cooper, &c., 37 Sheep st.
 Collins Montague, boat proprietor, London rd.
 Colpman George, brewery agent, 38 Sheep st.
 Colson Thos. vict. Duke of York, 57 Oxford st.
 Compton John, tailor and draper, 33 Sheep st.
 Cook & Parker, solicitors, 27 Church street
 Cook James Brewster, vict. Sow and Pigs, 41
 Cambridge street
 Cook John, machine-closer, Knox road
 Cook Thos. solicitor (C. & Parker), 27 Church st.
 Cooke Jas. boot and shoemaker, 29 Cannon st.
 Coombs Chas. vict. White Horse, 7 Pebble lane
 Coombs Thos. vict. Chequers, 11 Cambridge st.
 Cooper Wm. Hy. cur. & lethr. mer. 9 Church st.
 Co-operative Store, Joseph Staples Lovett, manager, Newcomen road
 Co-operative Stores, 20 Herriot's lane, and 3
 Broad Green—Joseph Mundin, secretary;
 John White and John Clayson, managers
 Copson James, vict. George, 17 Oxford street
 Corn Exchange Co. Market square, Wm. Williamson, sec.; W. H. Cowper, hall-keeper
 Cowper Mrs Frances Mary, straw-bonnet maker,
 1 Cannon street
 Cowper Jas. vict. Railway Inn, 29 Cambridge st.
 Cowper Thomas, beerhouse, 21 Cambridge st.
 Cowper William Henry, hall-keeper, &c. 6
 Market square
 Cox John, machine closer, 57 Midland road
 Cox Thomas, j. plasterer, Palk road
 Cradock John, shopkeeper, 54 Wood street
 Crane Joseph, machine-closer, Church street;
 h. Irchester place
 Crawford James Robert, master of Board school, Midland terrace
 Crick Jph. Job, tailor and draper, 3 Oxford st.

Cryer Arthur, grindery dlr. &c. 9 Church lane
 Cullingford Edwin, draper, Strode road
 Cumberlidge William, assistant engineer, Irthlingborough Iron Works
 Curtis Charles William, shoe manufacturer and pork butcher, 32 Cambridge street
 Curtis John Bailey, shoe manufacturer, butcher, and beerhouse, 59 Gold street
 Curtis Thomas Smith, draper, 2 Sheep street, h. London road
 Cusley George, shopkeeper, 7 Cambridge st.

DAINTY James, wine, spirit, and hop merchant, 45 Market street
 Dally Mrs Emma, 5 Gloucester place
 Daniel John, draper and milliner, 4 Market st.
 Davies Wm. bank manager, 48 Market street
 Davison William, shopkeeper, Victoria road
 Deacon Samuel, jun. auctioneer, Market sq. h. 6 Silver street
 Denby Miss Anne, school, 59 Midland road
 Denton Mr Joseph, Palk road
 Dickens Henry, ropemaker, 53 West street
 Dickens Wm. Wood, turner, 11 Pebble lane
 Dickens John, shopkeeper, 19 High street
 Dicks Ham, fishmonger & greengr. 10 High st.
 Di Villa Felix Mano, photogrphr. Midland rd.
 Dolby Thomas, stonemason, 16 Herriott's ln.
 Douglas George, nurseryman, seedsman, &c., 11 Midland road
 Dulley William & Sons, brewers and spirit merchants, Sheep street
 Dulley Benjamin, surgeon, 17 Sheep street
 Dulley David, Esq. Westfield, Oxford street
 Dulley David, jun. (Wm. & Sons), h. Fairlawn, Oxford street
 Dulley Mrs Fanny, Linden House, Midland rd.
 Dulley James, brewer's assistant, 17 Sheep st.
 Dulley Wm. (Wm. & Sons), h. 20 Sheep street
 Dunkley George, machine-closer, 15 Oxford st.
 Dunmur Mrs Jane, milliner, 55 West street
 Dunn Mrs Eliza, lodgings, 3 Victoria terrace
 Dycer William, farmer, Brickhill road
 Dykes Jno. butcher & vict. Dun Cow, 73 Gold st.
 Dyson James Greaves, corn salesman, 77 Midland road

EADY Amos, gr. & provision. dlr. 58 Oxford st.
 Early William John, baker, 32 Sheep street
 Edwards Amos, furntr. & hardwr. dl. 9 High st.
 Ekins John, manager, 28 Midland road
 Ellis & Everard, coal, timber, & slate merchts. Midland road—John Andrew Moore, agent.
 Elton Alfred, ironmaster (Thomas Butlin & Co., & Butlin, Bevan, & Co.), h. Shenstone Lodge, Bedford
 Ette Hy. auctioneer & house agt. 9 Oxford pl.
 Evans William, greengrocer, 61 Gold street

FAIRCLOUGH Rd. loco. foreman, 74 Midland rd.
 Fairey George, plumber, painter, &c. Park st.
 Farey Joseph, machine-closer, 46 Broad green
 Faulkner Mrs Ann, machine-closer, 12 Herriott's lane
 Fernie Mrs Sophia, Oxford street
 Finding James, cow keeper, 1 Northampton rd.
 Ford James, brewer's clerk, Midland road
 Fowler Hy. shoe mfr. grocer, &c. 21 High st.
 Fowler John, shoe manufr. 32 Market street
 Freeman Charles, boot-upper manufacturer, Palk road; h. 62 Midland road
 Freeman Rich. cabinet mkr. &c. Broad green.

Freeman William Henry, butcher, 40 Cambridge street; h. Midland road
 Froggatt George, j. saddler, 21 Oxford street
 Froggatt Jas. & Thos. saddlers, 10 Market sq.
 Froggatt Thomas (J. & T.), h. 37 Oxford st.
 Froscutt Zacchias, shoe manufr. 2 Pebble lane

GAINS John Fredk. railway clerk, Knox road
 Garfirth John, machine-closer and pawnbroker, 6 White Horse yard
 Garlic Wm. Jaunes, shopkeeper, 1 Wood street
 Garner Wm. Jas. baker, &c. Winstanley rd.
 Garrod Edward, boot-blocker, Hatton Park rd.
 Garrod James, hairdresser, 32 High street
 Genner Benj. mr. Freeman's Sch. 5 Castle st.
 Gent Charles, boot-closer, 32 St John street
 Gent Mr James, St John street
 Gent Jno. mach. upper-closer, 8 Spring gardens
 Gibbins Wm. machine-closer, Harrowden rd.
 Gibson George, machine-closer, Knox road
 Gill William, ironmonger, 4 Sheep street
 Gillham James Hy. (Jones & G.) h. Alma ter.
 Gillitt Ambrose, grocer, &c. Midland road
 Gillitt Thomas, butcher, 1 Oxford street
 Goodfellow John, vict. Midland Hotel
 Goodman Henry, green-grocer, Knox road
 Goodman John, machine-closer, Wood street
 Goodman Wm. machine-closer, Park street
 Goosey Wm. machine-closer, Hatton Park road
 Grainger Wm. agent to Chaplin & Horne, railway carriers, 40 Market street
Grammar School (Lower) Church street, Wm. Winterton, headmaster
Grammar School (Upper) Church street, Geo. Plummer, B.A. headmaster
 Gravely Fred. (Bodaly & Co.) Silver street
 Green Geo. draper's assistant, 31 Midland rd.
 Green G. Hipwell (Hull & G.) h. Newcomen rd.
 Green John, station-master, L. & N.W. Railway
 Griffin John, iron ore manager, Finedon rd.

HACKSLEY George, boot-blocker, Chequer's lane; h. Alma terrace
 Hackley Goodwin, joiner, &c. 21 Cannon street
 Hackley John, shoe manfr. 1 Hatton garden
 Hale John Henry, clerk, 3 Castle street
 Hale Miss Maria, mistress Freeman's school
 Hardwick Mrs Harriet Banks, 27 Market st.
 Hare Mrs Miriam, school, West End House
 Hare Saml. John, accountant, &c. Exchange; h. West End House
 Harrington Wm. Richard, professor of music & organist, 27 Sheep street
 Harley Charles, beerhouse, 85 Midland road
 Harris George, watchmaker, 12 West street
 Harrison Walter Isaac, bricklayer, Knox road
 Harrold Miss Eliz. milliner, &c. 41 Broad green
 Hawkes Richard, farmer, Manor Farm
 Hawkins Mrs Emma, 4 Gloucester place
 Hawkins Joseph, railway guard, 5 Brook st.
 Hazeldine Wm. Hills, lastmaker and shopkeeper, 1 St Barnabas' street
 Heelin Wm. machine-closer, 12 Midland road
 Hemsted Edwin, M.D. surgeon, 61 Oxford st.
 Henry William James (Burnham & H.) h. 31 Market street
 Henson Wm. greengrocer, 17 Herriott's lane
 Hepton Rt. Hy. clockmaker, Box gardens
 Hewens Nicholas Thos. ironmfr. 47 Market pl.
 Heygate Jas. solr. 9 Market sq. h. Sheep st.
 Higgins John Hale, stonemason, Midland rd.
 Hinch Thos. shopkeeper, 3 Jackson's lane

Hinman Mrs Ann, shopkeeper, 33 St John's st.
Hinslea Alkan, bricklayer, Midland road
Hitchcock Mrs Eliza, register-office, 2 Cambridge street

Hobbs James, vict. Prince of Wales, London rd.
Hobbs Saml. Eusebius, vict. Masons' Arms, 9 St John's street

Hocken William, draper, 4 Market square
Hodson Mrs Kate, 62 Oxford Street
Holding John, furntr. brokr. 11 Jackson's lne.
Hollis John, shopkeeper, 4 Cambridge street
Hooper George, boot-blocker, Cambridge st.
Hope Wm. Ash, chemist, soda water manufr.
22 Silver st. & cattle food mfr. Agricultural Hall, London

Hopwood Mrs Elizabeth, 2 Park road
Horn Mrs Catherine, Park road
Housdon Wm. Hy. shoe manfr. 66 Midland rd. gardens

Howe Chas. builder & vict. Peacock, Spring gds.
Howe Hy. greengrocer, 35 Cambridge street
Howe Hy. junr. greengrocer, 23 High street
Howe John, bricklayer, Knox road

Howes Thomas, wheelwright, Hatton garden
Hudson Mrs Hannah, 35 High street

Hull & Green, bricklayers, Newcomen road
Hull John (H. & Green), h. Buckwell end
Humphries Harrold, jun. machine-closer, 36 Cambridge street

Humphries Harrold, furn.-broker, 30 Sheep st.
Humphries Wm. furniture-broker, 23 Sheepst.
Hustwait Lewis, tailor, 17 Cannon street
Hustwait Wm. blacksmith, Angel Lane
Hutchinson Wm. eating-house, 35 Market st.

INFIELD George, shoemaker, 5 Church street
Islip Henry, engine-driver, 80 Midland road

JAMES Bros. grocers, wine, & spirit & ale agnts., Market place

James Peter (James Bros.), h. Silver street
James Samuel, butcher, 14 Oxford street
James Wm. Warwick (Bros.), h. 64 Broad grn.
Jay Chas. vict. Dog and Duck, London road
Jeffs Mrs Car. vict. Queen's Head, 50 Broad grn.
Jinks Benjamin, shopkeeper, 13 Gold street
Johnson Mr William, Spring Hill
Johnson William, tailor, 14 Doddington road
Jones & Gillham, Blake's operators, Park st.
Jones George, vict. New Inn, 7 Broad street
Jones Matthew Easton, farmer, Midland road
Jones Rd. basket-maker, 32 Church street
Jones William (J. and Gillham), h. London

KEEP Mrs Peggy, 2 Church street
Keller Jno. Fred. machine-closer, 33 Westter.
Keller Mr Thomas, 42 Midland road
Key Hy. Knapp, plumber, &c. Newcomen rd.
Kilborn Thos. miller & farmer, Vicarage farm
Kimbell Mrs Mary Ann, 60 Midland road
Kimbell Nathan, shopkeeper, 27 West street
Kimbell Sl. Hy. sec. to Gasworks, Market sq.
King George, timber merchant, 39 Midland rd.
King William, vict. Globe, 6 Gloucester place
Kirby Henry James, vict. Sun, 16 Church st.
Knight Charles, greengrocer, 6 Cannon street
Knight Mr Edwin, 51 Broad green
Knight Miss Maria, Havelock street
Knight Luke, rate-collector and assistant overseer, 30 Church street
Knight Wm. ironmonger's assistant, 4 Brook street

LACK Ezra, nurseryman, seedsman, and florist, 13 Sheep street, and Midland road
Lack Henry, manager, Midland road
Lamb Mrs Rebecca, 6 Castle street
Lambert James, tailor & draper, Midland rd.
Lane Wm. sup. inland rev. 71 Midland road
Land William, machine-closer, Rock street
Langdale Chpr. plumber, painter, &c. 2 High st.
Lansberry Thos. vict. Angel, 18 Silver street
Lay and Smith, coachbuilders, Midland road
Lay John Watts (L. & Smith), h. Midland road
Laycock & Sons (Thos. & Hy.), shoe mfs. Rock st.
Lee Rev. Wm. Hy. (Baptist), Winstanley rd.
Leech, Thomas, beer retailer, 12 Gold street
Leete Jas. carpenter & builder, Buckwell green
Leete Miss Dorothy, Knox road
Leigh Thos. refreshment rooms, 3 Market sq.
Lethbridge Joseph Watts, town missionary, 8 London road

Lewin Wm. Saddington, solr. clerk, 3 High st.
Lightfoot Rev. Regid. Prideaux, M.A. Vicarage
Lilley George, blacksmith, Cambridge street ; h. 3 Gloucester place

Lilley Thomas, shoe manufacturer, 51 Market street ; and Irthlingborough

Lilleyman Wm. m'chine-closer, Doddington rd.
Linnell John, greengrocer, 70 Cannon street
Literary Institute, Exchange, W. H. Cowper, lib.
Lloyd Sergt. Alf. drill-instructor, 37 High st.
Lomath Thomas, greengrocer, 69 Gold street
London John, hairdresser, 36 Broad green
Loveday John, baker, Finedon road
Loveday Samuel, saddler, 3 Silver street
Lovell Chas. (Newbridge Brick and Tile Co.), Harrowden road

Lovitt Joseph, greengrocer, Park street
Lowe Saml. hairdresser, 1 Broad green

M'GOWAN, Peter Daniel, assistant master of Board school, Rock street

Mabbott Samuel, machine-closer, 30 Gold st.
Maddison William, baker, 45 Broad green
Maillard Rev. Danl. Galland (Wea.), 2 Castle st.
Marchant Jas. insurance agent, 27 Oxford st.
Markham Wm. Hrbt. plbr. &c. Winstanley ter.
Marriott Geo. fishmger. & fruiterer, 11 Silver st.
Marriott Mrs Mary Ann, St Helier's, 6 High st.
Marriott Robert, builder, Park road
Martin Hy. inspector of police, Midland road
Martin Thomas, machine-closer, 2 Park street
Mason James, machine-closer, Church street
Mather Geo. Radford, ironfounder, engineer, & mchinit. Albion Foundry, h. 12 Market st.
Matthews Caleb, solr. clerk, Hatton Park road
Matthews Mrs Mary, 32 Oxford street
Matthews Wm. machine-closer, 17 Broad green
Maycock Geo. Wm. shoemaker, 14 Pebble lane
Meadows Mrs Mary Ann, 19 Well street
Meather Mrs Louisa, pork butchr. 2 Oxford st.
Mee Mrs Elizabeth, school, 7 High street
Mee John, baker, 14 Knight street
Meyer Fredk. pork butcher, 13 Silver street
Miles Mrs Ann, currier, 31 Wood street
Miller Thos. photographer, 14 Midland road
Millns John George, coml. traveller, Rock st.
Mills & Co. ironmongers and agricultural implement makers. 7 Market st. & Midland rd.
Mills Jno. (Mills & Co.) h. Castle street
Mills Hugh Jno. ironmgr's assist. 45 Midland rd.
Mitton Geo. Pearce, clerk, 18 Sheep street
Moore Chas. baker, 13 High street
Moore Harry, machine-closer, Harrowden rd.

Moore John Andrew, agent for Ellis & Everard,
78 Midland road
Moore Mrs Louisa, dressmaker, 10 Park street
Moore Mrs Mary Ann, lodgings, 38 Midland rd.
Morbey Henry, baker, &c. Hill street
Morris Jas. joiner and builder, Oxford st. h.
St Barnabas' street
Munds Hy. chimney sweeper, 6 Church lane
Murphy Miss Anna Maria, 32 Midland road

NEGUS George, plumber, &c. 2 Brook st.
Newbridge Brick and Tile Co. Harrowden rd.
Newman Alex. vict. Oxford Tavern, 42 Oxfrd. st.
Newton John, cartowner, Cannon street
Noble George, grocer, 8 St John's street
Noble Geo. Chas. builder, &c. Ranelagh road
Noble Jno. brazier and ironmng. 59 Oxford st.
Noble Wm. machine-closer, 5 South row
Norman Thos. grocer and tea dlr. 19 Silver st.
Northampton Brewery Co. (stores) 38 Sheep st.
and Northampton; Geo. Colpman, agent
Northamptonshire Banking Co. 48 Market st.;
William Davis, manager
Northamptonshire Union Bank, 41 Market st.;
William Alfred Rubbra, manager
Northern Edward Henry, tailor, Strode rd.
Nutt & Stokes, bakers & shopkrs. 32 Park st.
Nutt George (N. and Stokes), 32 Park street

O'CONNELL Richard, greengrocer, 16 Well st.
Orton Wm. joiner and builder, 5 High street
Owen Rev. Thos. Wm. B.A. curate St Barnabas

PACKE John, machine-closer, 34 West terrace
Packwood Geo. Fred. relvg. officer, Victoria rd.
Parke Wm. Bushell, clerk, Knox road
Parker Miss Ann Goodman, Berlin wool rep.
and register office for servants, 6 Sheep st.
Parker James, shopkeeper, London road
Parker John Thos. (Cook & P.) Gloucester pl.
Parker Jph. vict. Aze and Cleaver, 22 High st.
Parr Fred. Ch. hairdr. & shopkr. Herriott's la.
Patenall William, foreman, 55 Broad green
Patrick Jph. grocer and provision dlr. Park st.
Partridge Hugh, farmer, Wellingborough Lodge
Payne Charles, shopkeeper, 12 Sheep street
Payne John, saddler, 5 Cambridge street
Peabody Saml. Thos. shopkeeper. 69 Cannon st.
Peasnell James, baker, &c. 54 Gold street
Peck John, watchmaker, 9 Sheep street
Pell Chas. bank cashier, 39 Oxford street
Pell Edwin, butcher, 52 Wood street
Pell George, beerhouse, 9 Broad green
Pendered Joseph and Son, auctioneers, accountants, and estate agents; and rope, twine, sack, and tarpaulin manfrs. 5 Market square
Pendered Wm. and Co. cabinet-makers and upholsterers, and pianoforte dlrs. 10 Market street; h. Brookfield, 64 Midland road
Pendered Joseph, clerk, 5 Pebble lane
Pendered Thos. (& Son). h. 38 Cambridge st.
Pendred Warren, vict. Star, 11 High street
Pendred William, beerhouse, 21 Wood street;
Perkins Chas. machine-closer, 3 Buckwell green
Perkins John Berrill, builder, &c. Ranelagh rd.
Perkins Samuel, baker and grocer, Winstanley road; h. Doddington
Perkins Thos. machine-closer, 14 Jackson's ln.
Perrin Geo. j. shoemaker, 34 Midland road
Perrin Peter, shoe manufr. 2 St John street
Pettitt Jno. baker and beerhse. 7 Herriott's ln.
Phillips Wm. shoe manufr. Winstanley road

Plackett Joseph, shoe agent, 3 Cheese lane
Pleasance Charles, butcher, 28 Market street
Plowman Jno. machine-closer, Havelock st.
Plummer George, B.A. head master of Upper Grammar School; h. 30 High street
Ponting Fred. vict. King's Arms, Market st.
Poole Lewis, supt. of police, 47 Midland rd.
Powell Geo. manager of gasworks, London rd.
Pratt William, shoemaker, 25 St John's street
Priestley Mrs Mary, hosier, &c., 42 Market st.
Prosser Henry, bookkeeper, Knox road
Pruen Miss Amelia, school, Hatton Hall
Pym Joseph, ale and porter agent, Strode rd.

RABBIT William, boot-upper manufacturer,
Oxford street; h. London
Rainey Mrs Sarah Ann, dressm. 82 Midland rd.
Randall Charles, j. shoemaker, 26 Knight st.
Randall Samuel, shoe manuf. 71 Midland rd.
Randall Wm. machine-closer, 52 Midland rd.
Randall Wm. teach. of music, 8 Northampton
road
Redley James, hairdresser, White's place
Reeve Edwin, vict. Station Hotel, 73 Midland rd.
Renshaw Wm. station-master, Midland Railway
Richards Henry, carpenter, 10 Midland road
Richards Jno. plumber & painter, 12 High st.
Rixon & Co. iron ore merchants, and brick and tile makers, Finedon road
Rixon James (Rixon & Co.) h. 61 Cannon st.
Roberts Eli, shoemaker, 4 Church lane
Roberts Wm. greengrocer, &c. 12 Oxford st.
Robins Mrs Mary, 8 Cambridge street
Robinson Bros. & Co. wine, spirit, and coal merchants, High street
Robinson Mrs Emma Jane, watchmaker and jeweller, and bookseller, 2 Market street
Robinson Jno. & Chas. shoe manuf. 6 Oxford st.
Robinson George, machine-closer, Hill street
Robinson Jph. Hy. (Bros. & Co.) h. 1 Church st.
Rogers Mr Thomas, 7 London road
Rubbra Frederick William, agent for Burton
Brewery Co. (Limited), 41 Market street
Rubbra Mrs Sarah, 50 Midland road
Rubbra Wm. Alfred, manager, Union Bank
Rudlin Robt. shoe manufacturer, 14 Wood st.

SANDERS & BELLAMY, printers and booksellers,
22 Silver street
Sanders & Co. corn & seed factors, Herriott's ln.
Sanders John (S. & Co. and S. & Bellamy),
h. 28 Cambridge street
Sanders John Hy. (& Co.), h. 28 Cambridge st.
Sanderson Alfred, grocer and spirit merchant,
46 Market street
Sanderson Lawrence, cowkpr. Buckwell green
Sanderson Mrs Mary, lodgings, 56 Midland rd.
Sanderson Thomas, beerhouse, London road
Sanderson William, greengrocer, Buckwell end
Sarjeant John Wm. chemist, &c., 26 Silver st.
Saward Wm. Thos. coal, &c. mer. Midland rd.
Sawyer Henry Wm. printer and publisher of the Wellingborough Weekly News, 9 Midland rd.
Sears Mrs Mary & Robert, ironstone owners and brickmakers, Park Cottage
Sears William, blacksmith, Broad green
Sharman Edward, architect and surveyor, 9
Market square, h. Croyland Abbey
Sharman Edward, bookslr. and stat. Market sq.
Sharman Mrs Frances, Isbank, 70 Midland rd.
Sharman John Wood, Esq., Elden Lodge
Sharman Matthew Reid, solicitor, Iry Lodge

Sharman Nathl. Pearce, shoe manufacturer,
Sheep street, h. Swanspool
Sharp Edwin, beerhouse, 38 Cambridge street
Sharp Wm. machine-closer, 40 Broad green
Sharpe Joseph, shopkr. & beerh. 11 Park st.
Shaw Fred. cutler and shopkeeper, 17 High st.
Shaw Whitsey, machine-closer, 17 Hill street
Shelton Mr John, 27 Midland road
Sherwood Rd. Wm. solicitor, 10 Sheep street
Sheppard Jno. ironstone contr. 79 Midland rd.
Short James, cart-owner, Brickwell green
Simco Fredk. chemist & druggist, 23 Market st.
Simco Saml. Hillyer, blacksmith, 24 Market st.
Simmons Thos. master of Union workhouse
Simonds Fredk. Allen, currier & levant dresser,
Oxford street, h. 39 West street
Simonds Mrs Mary, 39 West street
Simons Wm. Jones, grocer, &c. 37 Market st.
Skidmore Oliver, asst.-schoolmstr. 8 Regent st.
Skinner Mr John, Palk road
Skinner Maurice, jun. butcher, Knox road
Skinner Mr Wm. Palk road
Slinn Thomas, builder, Rocklands, West street
Slinn Thomas Partridge, shoe mfr. 65 Broad green; h. West street
Smart John And. hairdresser, 14 Market st.
Smeathers John, billposter & broker, Oxford st.
Smith & Harley, boot upper mfrs. Church st.
Smith Alfred Wm. machine-clsr. 1 Furnace st.
Smith Benj. seedsman & fruitr. 25 Market st.
Smith Chas. coach bldr. (Lay & S.) h. Midland
road
Smith Edward, shoemaker, 11 Furnace street
Smith Edwin, plumber, &c. 60 Cannon street
Smith Emanuel j. joiner, 55 Gold street
Smith George j. currier, 13 Cheese lane
Smith Mrs Harriet, dressmaker, 55 Gold street
Smith Isaac, hairdresser, 15 Silver street
Smith Jno. ironstone contractor, Park street
Smith Jno. wheelwrt. Midland rd. h. Finedon
Smith Mrs Mary, Winstanley road
Smith Rd. miller & farmer, Wellingboro' Mill
Smith Samuel, tobaccoconist, &c. 14 Sheep st.
Smith Thomas, coal & salt merchant, London
and North-Western Railway Station
Smith William, clerk, Winstanley road
Smith William, riveter, 6 London road
Smith William, chimney sweeper, Oxford st.
Spencer John, thread lace buyer & silk agent,
41 Oxford street
Spencer John Shadrach, farmer, Lodge
Spencer Thomas, shopkeeper and coal dealer,
51 Cross street and Hill street
Spencer Wm. wheelwright, 30 Market street
Stanton Iron Ore Co., Finedon road, John
Griffin, manager
Starmer Edwin Wm. mchin.-clsr. 9 Oxford st.
Starmer Mrs Maria Ann, school, 4 Victoria ter.
Steel Wm. currier, Pebble lane; h. Hill street
Stevens John, baker, 2 Broad green
Stevens Mrs Lydia, 15 Well street
Stevens Mr William, 3 Alma ter. Cannon st.
Stevens William, shopkeeper, 21 Park street
Strachan William, clrk. 11 Sheep street
Stokes Robert (Nutt & S.) h. 32 Park street
Stretton Humphrey, carpenter, 43 Broad green
Sturman Wm. vict. Crown & Anchor, London rd.
Swales Eli, machine-closer, 16 Park street
Swales William, machine-closer, Hill street
Swannell Ebenr. bkr. & corn dlr. 21 Market st.
Swannell John Thos. confectioner Midland rd.
Sykes Mrs Maria, Cambridge street

TANGYE Wm. Hy. glass & china dlr. 2 Silver st.
Tasker Alfred, machine-closer, 28 Oxford st.
Tasker Mr John, Church street
Taylor James, shopkeeper, 1 Regent street
Teater Thos. jeweller, &c. 22 Market street
Teater William, butcher, 20 High street
Thomas David Hicks, law clerk, 44 Oxford st.
Thompson Chas. machine-closer, 5 Park street
Thompson Fred. carrier & shopr. Havelock st.
Thompson Geo. brickmaker and coal & salt merchant, Cobley's buildings, Midland road
Thompson John, machine-closer, 6 Park street
Thompson Mrs Susan, 30 Midland road
Thompson Thos. shoe mfr. 65 Midland road
Thompson Wm. shopkeeper, 8 Salem lane
Thompson Wm. shopkeeper, 6 Midland road
Thorne John chemist & druggist, 39 Market st.
Tiley Henry, vict. Horseshoe, 36 Sheep street
Timpson John, machine-closer, Hill street
Tomlin Wm. machine-closer, Harrowden road
Tomlinson Mr John, 46 Midland road
Tompkins Mrs Elizabeth
Tompkins Miss Hephzibah, shopk. 46 West st.
Tozer Edward, j. painter, Winstanley road
Tozer Wm. Hy. plumber, &c. 34 Market street
Trezise Octav. Edwards, chemist, 15 Church st.
Turnell George, miller, Wellingborough Mills
Turnell Wm. Henry, draper, 5 & 35 Sheep st.
Turvey John, shopkeeper, 41 Cannon street

UNDERWOOD Jabez, builder, Herriott's lane; h.
Park street
Underwood Jesse, machine-closer, Rock street
Underwood Joseph, military boot-blocker,
45 Oxford street
Underwood Miss Mary Ann, Berlin & fancy repository, Midland road

VALENTINE Jph. wheelwright, 9 Cambridge st.
Vaughan Wm. beerhouse, 14 Silver street
Vickers James, vict. Victoria, 1 Oxford street
Vickers Geo. Wm. salctr's. clrk. 29 Midland rd.

WAINWRIGHT Jno. vict. Golden Lion, 19 Sheep st.
Walker Mrs Eliz. machn.-clsr. St Barnabas st.
Walker George, currier, Wood street
Walker William, machine-closer, 30 Wood st.
Wallis Miss Frances, vict. Three Tuns, 2 Market square

Wallis John, vict. Hind Hotel, Sheep street
Wallis Owen, ironmonger, 36 High street; h.
6 Cambridge street

Waples Fredk. machine-closer, 15 Jackson's Ln.
Ward Nicholas, hairdresser, 18 Cambridge st.
Warden Charles, cart-owner, Oxford street
Warden George, machine-closer, Hill street
Warren Abraham, baker & confr. 10 Silver st
Warwick Samuel, tailor, 18 High street
Watkins L. & Sons, boot-upper mfrs. Oxford st.
Watkins Chas. (L. & Sons), h. 29 High street
Watkins Geo. Lucas (& Sons), h. 29 Oxford st.
Watkin Lucas (L. & Sons), h. 29 Oxford st.
Watts Alfred, machine-closer, West street
Watts Mrs Charlotte, 8 Church street
Watts Geo. machine-closer, 55 Midland road
Watts John, cart-owner, Gloucester place
Watts John, jun. vict. Bee's Wing, 31 Sheep st.
Watts Joseph, machine-closer, 53 Midland rd.
Watts Thos. shoemaker, Newcomen road
Watts Thos. machine-closer, 54 Midland road
Wellingborough Brick & Tile Co. (Limited),
Dale street, John Burkitt, manager

Wellingborough Gas Light & Coke Co., London road, S. H. Kimble, sec.
 Wellingborough Local Board of Health, offices, Corn Exchange, Thos. Cook, clerk
 Wellingborough Town and District Permanent Benefit Building Society, Oxford street, Caleb Matthews, secretary
Wellingborough Weekly News, Hy. Wm. Sawyer, 9 Midland road
 Wells Miss Mary, 16 Midland road
 West, Biddles & Co. coal merchants, Midland road, Wm. Hy. Cooper, agent
 West, Mrs Sarah, 30 Oxford street
 Westley Joseph, fruiterer, 31 High street, & 36 Market street
 Weston Wm. watchmaker, 19 Cambridge st.
 White Geo. builder, Harrowden rd. h. Denton
 White John, manager of co-oper. Herriott's ln.
 Whitehead David, boot-blockr. Winstanley rd.
 Whitehead Mrs Sarah, 15 Midland road
 White Joseph, carpenter, Hill street
 Whitaker, Mrs Susannah, 40 Oxford street
 Whitten Mr John, 39 Cambridge street
 Wilkinson John, shoe-machinist, 31 Church st.
 Williamson J. & Co. railway iron-founders, and general engineers, Midland Works & Chilver's Cotton Works, near Nuneaton
 Williamson Mrs Harriet, 61 Midland road
 Williamson Mrs Mary Ann (J. & Co.), h. Midland road
 Williamson Robert, butcher, 66 Cannon street
 Williamson Wm. hatter & clothr. 5 Market st.
 Willis Rev. Fredk. Wm. M. A. vicar of All Sts.
 Willis Wm. hurdle-maker, 2 Court, St John st.

Willman Rd. railway-inspector, Knox road
 Wilson Geo. machine-closer, Harrowden road
 Wilson Saml. supt.-of cemetery, London road
 Wing Mrs Annie, draper, &c. 20 Market street
 Winkless Wm. builder, &c., Knox road
 Winsor Wm. Lea, brazier, &c. 4 Silver street
 Winterton Joseph Hy. master of Government school, 37 Midland road
 Winterton Wm. headmaster of Lower Grammar School; h. 49 Midland road
 Wooding Chas. soda-water mfr. &c. 13 Midlandr.
 Wooding Ralph, vict. Volunteer, 35 Midland rd.
 Woodruff Thos. machine-closer, 8 Oxford st.
 Woolston Chas. Jph. Keep, cornmert. 26 Sheepst.
 Woolston Frederic, postmaster, Burystead pl.
 Woolston John, brewer, and corn, seed, and spirit merchant, Sheep street; h. 4 High st.
 Woolston Josiah Clarke, tailor, 22 Herriott's la.
 Woolston, Saml. Hames, clerk, 2 Cheese lane
 Woolston, Wm. Esq. Westlands, Oxford street
 Worley Joseph, bank clerk, 63 Broad green
 Worsam Hy. ironstone contr. Winstanley road
 Wright Jph. Brampton, M. D. surgeon, 5 Oxford street
 Wright Jno. Thos. baker & coal dlr. 8 West st.
 Wright Joseph, baker, 60 Broad green
 Wright Miss Mary, Hatton Park road
 Wright Mrs Sarah, pork butcher, 33 High st.
 Wright Thomas, shoe manufacturer, 8 Sheep st.
 Wyldes Wm. grocr. & tallo. chandlr. 9 Silver st.

YORK John and Son (Henry), coach builder, Oxford street, h. 3 Spring gardens
 Young Jas. shoe manufacturer, 1 Park street

TRADES AND PROFESSIONS.

Academies and Schools.

(Marked * take Boarders.)

Bland Mrs Susan, 62 Broad gn.
 Cleaver Miss J. M. 44 Midland rd.
 Denby Miss Ann, 59 Midland rd.
Freeman's, Oxford st.—Benj. Fenner and Maria G. Hale
 * Grammar Upper School, Church street—Geo. Plummer, B. A. headmaster Grammar Lower School, Church street—William Winterton, head master
 * Hare Mrs Miriam, Westend Ho.
 Mee Mrs Elizabeth, 7 High st.
National (All Saints, Infant) Midland road—Miss Sarah Catherine Billing
National (School Board) Rock street—J. R. Crawford, P. D. M'Gowan, Miss Magt. Palmer, & Miss Annie Raworth
National (School Board) Park street—J. H. Winterton, J. Caddy, Miss Sarah Hale, & Miss Catherine James
 * Pruen Miss A. Hatton Hall
 Starmer Mrs M. A. 14 Vict. ter.

Accountant.

Hare Sml. Jno. Corn Exchange

 Agents—Commission.

Hare Saml. Jno. Corn Exchange
 Spencer John (lace and silk), 41 Oxford street

Agents—Ale and Porter.

James Bros. (J. Nunnely's, Burton), Market place
 Pym Joseph (Thompson & Son, Burton) Strode road
 Rubbra F. W. (Burton Brewery Co. Limited), 41 Market st.
 Sanderson Alfred, 46 Market st.
 Wyldes, William, 9 Silver st.

Agents—Wine and Spirit.

Baxter J. C. (wine dealer), 31 Cambridge street
 Beedham (Spiers & Pond), 1 Silver street
 James Bros. (W. and A. Gilbert), Market place
 Simons William Jones (Litre Bottle Co.), 87 Market street

Agricultural Implement Makers.

Cassell H. & J. Herriott's lane
 Mills and Co. Midland road

Architect.

Sharman Edward, Market sq.

Attorneys.

Burnham and Henry, 1 High st.
 Cook and Parker, 27 Church st.
 Heygate James, 9 Market sq.
 Sharman Matthew R. Oxford st.
 Sherwood Rd. Wm. 10 Sheep st.

Auctionrs. & Appraisers.

Deacon Saml. jun., Market sq.
 Ette Henry, 9 Oxford place
 Pendered Jph. & Son, 5 Markt sq.

Baby-linen, &c. Warehs.

Hudson Mrs Hannah, 35 High st.
 Parker Miss Ann, 6 Sheep st.
 Underwood Miss M. A. Midland road

Bakers, &c.

Bearn Mrs Sarah, 23 Silver st.
 Bullivant John, 22 Well street
 Checkley Alfred, 7 Oxford st.
 Early Wm. Jno. 32 Sheep st.
 Garner Wm. Jas. Winstanley rd.
 Maddison Wm. 45 Broad green
 Mee John, 14 Knight street
 Moore Charles, 13 High street
 Morley Henry, Hill street

Nutt and Stokes, 32 Park st.
 Peasnell James, 54 Gold street
 Perkins Saml. Winstanley rd.
 Pettitt John, 7 Herriott's lane
 Stevens John, 2 Broad green
 Swannell Ebnzr. 21 Market st.
 Swannell J. T. Midland road
 Warren Abraham, 10 Silver st.
 Wright John Thos. 8 West st.
 Wright Joseph, 60 Broad green

Bankers.

Northamptonshire Banking Co.
 (draw on London and Westminster Bank), 48 Market street; Wm. Davis, manager
 Northamptonshire Union Bank
 (draw on Williams, Deacon, and Co.) 41 Market street;
 Wm. A. Rubbra, manager
Savings Bank, London road; T.
 S. Curtis, secretary

Basket Makers.

Collier Jno. Watkin, 37 Sheep st.
 Jones Richard, 32 Church st.

Billposter.

Smeathers John, 16 Oxford st.

Bird and Animal Preserver.

Leigh Thomas, 3 Market sq.

Blacksmiths.

Hustwait Wm. Angel lane
 Lilley Geo. Cambridge street
 Sears William, Broad green
 Simco Saml. H. 24 Market st.

Boat Proprietor.

Collins Montague, London rd.

Booksellers and Staturs.

(* Are also Printers.)

Allen Wallis, 3 Market street
 Bearn Miss Sar. A. 25 Silver st.
 Brown Thomas, 7 Sheep street
 Robinson Mrs E. J. 2 Market st.
 *Sanders & Bellamy, 22 Silver st.
 *Sawyer Hy. Wm. Midland rd.
 Sharman Edwd. Market square

Boot-Blockers.

Garrod Edwd. Hatton Park rd.
 Hacksley Geo. Chequers lane
 Underwood Joseph (military),
 45 Oxford street
 Whitehead Dd. Winstanley rd.

Boot (Machine) Closers.

Abbott John, Havelock street
 Adkins Thomas, Church street
 Allen George, 32 West terrace
 Allen Wm. Harrowden road
 Barron James, Havelock street

Barron Saml. 19 Hill street
 Beeby Thos. 47 Broad green
 Beeby Walter, 4 Park street
 Belcher Josiah, St Barnabas st.
 Blunt Wm. Ellis, Rock street
 Bond Fredk. Newcomen road
 Bull Chas. 25 Oxford street
 Burkitt John, Oxford street
 Burnell Alex. 30 Broad green
 Chamberlain James, Park st.
 Clayton Charles, 18 Hill street
 Clayson John, West street
 Coles Benjamin, Hill street
 Coles John, 57 Broad green
 Cook John, Knox road
 Copson James, 17 Oxford st.
 Cox John, 57 Midland road
 Crane Joseph, Church street
 Dickens John, 19 High street
 Dunkley Geo. 15 Oxford st.
 Farey Joseph, 46 Broad green
 Faulkner Mrs A. 12 Herriott's la.
 Gent Charles, 32 St John st.
 Gent John, 8 Spring gardens
 Gibbins Wm. Harrowden rd.
 Gibson George, Knox road
 Goodman John, Wood street
 Goodman Wm. Park street
 Goosey Wm. Hatton Park rd.
 Heelin Wm. 12 Midland road
 Humphries H. 36 Cambridge st.
 Jones & Gillham (sole), Park st.
 Keller Jno. Fred. 33 West ter.
 Laud William, Rock street
 Lilleman Wm. Doddington rd.
 Mabbott Saml. 30 Gold street
 Martin Thomas, 2 Park street
 Mason James, Church street
 Matthews Wm. 17 Broad green
 Miles Mrs Ann, 31 Wood st.
 Moore Harry, Harrowden road
 Noble William, 5 South row
 Packe John, 34 West terrace
 Perkins Chas. 3 Buckwell green
 Perkins Thos. 14 Jackson's lane
 Plowman John, Havelock st.
 Randall Mrs Ann, 8 Norampt. rd.
 Randall Wm. 52 Midland rd.
 Robinson Geo. Hill street
 Sharp Benj. 40 Broad green
 Shaw Whitsey, 17 Hill street
 Smith Alfd. Wm. Knox road
 Starmer Edwin Wm. 9 Oxford st.
 Swailes Eli, 16 Park street
 Swailes William, Hill street
 Tasker Alfred, 28 Oxford st.
 Thompson Chas. 5 Park street
 Thompson John, 6 Park street
 Timpson John, Hill street
 Tomlin Wm. Harrowden road
 Underwood Jesse, Rock street
 Walker Mrs Eliz. St Barnabas st.
 Walker Wm. 30 Wood street
 Waples Fredk. 15 Jackson's ln.
 Warden George, Hill street
 Watts Alfred, West street
 Watts Geo. 55 Midland road
 Watts Joseph, 53 Midland rd.
 Watts Thos. 54 Midland road
 Whitehead Dd. Winstanley rd.
 Wilson Geo. Harrowden road
 Woodruff Thomas, 8 Oxford st.

Boot & Shoe Manufactrs. (Wholesale.)

Allen Wm. 8 Market street
 Brightwell Alf. Newcomen rd.
 Coles Charles, 11 Oxford street
 Curtis Chas. Wm. 32 Cambge. st.
 Curtis Jno. Bailey, 59 Gold st.
 Froscutt Zacchias, 2 Pebble ln.
 Fowler John, 32 Market street
 Garfirth J. 6 White Horse yd.
 Hacksley Jno. 1 Hatton garden
 Housdon Wm. H. 66 Midland rd.
 Laycock & Sons, Rock street
 Lilley Thomas, 51 Market st.
 Perrin Peter, 2 St John's street
 Phillips Wm. Winstanley rd.
 Randall Samuel, 71 Midland rd.
 Robinson J. & C. 6 Oxford st.
 Rudlin Robert, Wood street
 Sharman Nathaniel P. Sheep st.
 Slinn Thos. P. 65 Broad green
 Thompson Thos. 65 Midland rd.
 Watkin L. & Sons, Oxford st.
 Wright Thomas, 8 Sheep street
 Young James, 1 Park street

Boot and Shoe Makers.

Cattell Clement, 1 Gloucester pl.
 Clayson C. E. 34 Cambridge st.
 Coles Geo. Alex. 38 Sheep st.
 Cooke James, 29 Cannon street
 Infield George, 5 Church street
 Maycock Geo. Wm. 14 Pebble ln.
 Pratt Wm. 25 St John's street
 Roberts Eli, 4 Church lane
 Smith Edward, 11 Furnace st.
 Watts Thos. Newcomen road

Boot and Shoe Upper Manufacturers.

Brown & Sons, Cheese lane,
 and 58 Noble street, London
 Carter Joseph, 2 Knox road
 Freeman Charles, Palk road
 Lilley Thomas, 51 Market st.
 Rabbit W. Oxford st. & London
 Sharman N. P. Sheep street
 Smith & Harley, Church street
 Watkin L. & Sons, Oxford st.

Brasiers and Tinsplate Workers.

Cheney Riley, 9 Wood street
 Noble John, 59 Oxford street
 Winsor Wm. Lea, 4 Silver st.

Brewers.

Charter Charles, 33 Market st.
 Dulley Wm. & Sons, Sheep st.
 Northampton Brewery Co.
 (stores), 38 Sheep st. George
 Colpman, agent
 Woolston John, Sheep street

Brick and Tile Makers.

Newbridge Brick & Tile Co.
 Rixon & Co. Finendon road
 Sanderson J. Northampton rd.
 Sears Mrs M. & R. Park Cottage

Thompson George, Midland rd.
Wellingborough Brick & Tile
Co. (Limited), Dale street,
John Burkitt, manager.

Builders, Joiners, &c.

Abbott William, Park crescent
Ball James, 39 Broad green
Berrill Joseph, St Barnabas st.
Boddington J. Orchard Cottage
Boswell John, 18 West street
Burkitt John, Midland road
Hacksley G. 21 Cannon st.
Harrison Walter Isaac, Knox
road

Hinslea Alkan, Midland road
Howe Charles, Spring gardens
Howe, John, Knox road
Hull & Green, Newcomen road
Leete James, Buckwell green
Marriott Robert, Palk road
Morris James, Oxford street
Noble Geo. Chas. Ranelagh rd.
Orton William, 5 High street
Perkins J. Berrill, Ranelagh rd.
Slinn Thomas, Rocklands
Underwood Jabez, Herriott's ln.
White George, Harrowden road and Denton

Winkless William, Knox road

Building Society.

Wellingborough Town and District Permanent Benefit, Oxford st. Caleb Matthews, sec.

Butchers.

Billington John, 18 Market st.
Blott Edward, 21 Silver street
Blott Johnson, 23 Church st.
Curtis John Bailey, 59 Gold st.
Dykes John, 73 Gold street
Freeman W. H. 40 Cambridge st.
Gillitt Thomas, 1 Oxford street
James Samuel, 14 Oxford st.
Pell Edwin, 52 Wood street
Pleasance Chas. 28 Market st.
Skinner Maurice, Knox road
Tester William, 20 High street
Willman Robert, 66 Cannon st.

Butchers—Pork.

Curtis C. W. 32 Cambridge st.
Meather Mrs Louisa, 2 Oxford st.
Meyer Frederick, 13 Silver st.
Wright Mrs Sarah, 33 High st.

Cabinet-makers and Upholsterers.

Balaam & Sons, 13 Market st.
Freeman Richd. Broad green
Pendered Wm. & Co. (and pianoforte dealers), 10 Market st.
Reeve Edwin, 73 Midland road

Carpenters.

Bell Jackson, Spring gardens
Cheatter James, Oxford street
Leete James, Buckwell green
Noble Geo. Chas. Ranelagh rd.
Richards Henry, 10 Midland rd.

Stretton H. 43 Broad green
Willis William (hurdle-maker),
St John's street
Underwood Jabez, Herriott's ln.
White Joseph, Hill street

Cattle Food Manufacr.

Hope William Ash, Silver st.

Chemists and Druggists.

Hope Wm. Ash, 22 Silver st.
Sarjeant J. W. 26 Silver street
Simco Frederick, 23 Market st.
Thorne John, 39 Market street
Trezise Octavs. E. 15 Church st.

Chimney Sweepers.

Munda Henry, 6 Church lane
Smith William, Oxford street

China and Glass Dealers.

Butcher H. S. (glass) 38 Market st.
Edwards Amos, 9 High street
Tangye William Henry, 2 Silver street

Clothiers.

Boxall George, High street
Williamson Wm. 5 Market st.

Coachbuilders.

Lay & Smith, Midland road
York John & Son, Oxford st.

Coal Dealers.

Cradock John, 54 Wood street
Spencer T. Cross st. & Hill st.
Wright John Thos. 8 West st.

Coal Merchants.

Blott William, 8 Market square
Ellis & Everard (and timber),
Midland road, John Andrew
Moore, agent
Robinson Bros. & Co. High st.
Saward Wm. Thos. Midland rd.
Smith Thomas (and salt), London & North-Western station
Thompson George, Midland rd.
West, Biddles & Co. Midland rd.

Confectioners.

Allen Miss Eliz. 16 Sheep st.
Checkley Alfred, 7 Oxford st.
Swannell J. T. Midland road
Warren Abm. 10 Silver st.
Wooding Charles (and sugar boiler), 13 Midland road

Cooper.

Collier Jno. Watkin, 36 sheep st.

Corn Merchants.

Blott Wm. (& seed) 8 Market sq.
Burr Josiah, 3 Midland road
Woolston Chas. J. K. 26 Sheep st.
Woolston Jno. (& seed) Sheep st.

Corn Millers.

Kilborn Thos. Harrowden road
Smith Richd. Wellingboro' Mill
Turnell Geo. Wellingboro' Mills

Curriers and Leather Sellers.

Askham Wm. Church lane
Cooper Wm. Hy. 9 Church st.
Simonds Fred. Allen, Oxford st.
Steel William, Pebble lane
Walker George, Wood street

Drapers—Linen and Woollen.

(Marked * are Travelling Drapers.)

* Affleck Jaa. Ranelagh road
* Affleck Thos. 27 Cambridge st.
Allen Wm. 9 Market street
* Anderson John, 4 Castle st.
Bodaly and Co. 6 Silver street
* Carruthers T. G. Midland ter.
* Caven Douglas, 46 Oxford st.
Clarabut Saml. 20 Silver st.
Curtis Thos. Smith, Sheep st.
Cullingford Edwin, Strode rd.
Coleman Mrs S. 36 Midland rd.
Daniel John, 4 Market street
Hocken Wm. 4 Market square
Priestly Mrs Mary, 42 Market st.
Turnell W. H. 5 & 35 Sheep st.
Wing Mrs Annie, 20 Market st.

Engineers and Machinists.

Capell H. & J. Herriott's lane
Mather Geo. R. Albion Foundry
Williamson J. and Co. Midland Works

Fancy Repositories.

Smith Saml. 14 Sheep street
Tester Thos. 22 Market street

Eating Houses.

Hutchinson Wm. 35 Market st.
Leigh Thos. (oyster rooms), 3
Market square

Farmers and Graders.

Blott Wm. The Poplars
Banks Edward, The Grange
Banks John H. Croyland Hall
Capell James, Buckwell green
Dycer Wm. Brickhill road
Hawkes Rd. Manor Farm
Jones Matthew E. Midland rd.
Kilborn Thos. Vicarage Farm
Partridge Hugh, Wellingbo Lodge
Smith Rd. Wellingborough Mill
Spencer Jno. Shachach, Lodge
Turnell Geo. Wellingboro' Mills

Fire and Life Offices.

Accident (life), John A. Moore,
Midland road
Atlas, Joseph Pendered & Son,
5 Market square
Border Counties (fire), E. Smith,
60 Cannon street

British Equitable, James Marchant, 27 Oxford street
City of Glasgow (life), Joseph H. Robinson, 1 Church st.
County (fire), Thos. Cook, 27 Church street
County (hail-storm), Sanders and Bellamy, 22 Silver st.; N. T. Hewens, 27 Mkt. st.
Crown (life), M. R. Sharman, Oxford street
General, Sanders and Bellamy, 22 Silver street
Guardian, Jas. Heygate, Mkt. sq.
Imperial, Hy. Ette, 9 Oxford pl.
Law (fire), M. R. Sharman, Oxford street
Legal and General (life), G. H. Burnham, 1 High street
Liverpool, & London, & Globe, Wm. Davis, 48 Market st.; T. S. Curtis, Sheep street; Thos. Leigh, 3 Market sq.
London, Jas. Dainty, 45 Market street; S. J. Hare, Corn Exchange
London and Lancashire, John Compton, 33 Sheep street
Midland Counties, D. H. Thomas, 44 Oxford street
Mutual (life), N. T. Hewens, Market street
Norwich Union, Mrs Sarah Rubbra, 50 Midland road
Pelican (life), Alfred Sanderson, 46 Market street
Phoenix, Geo. H. Burnham, 1 High street
Provident (life), Thos. Cook, 27 Church street
Prudential (life), E. Smith, 60 Cannon street
Railway Passengers, William Davis, 48 Market street
Royal Exchange, Wm. Woolston, Westlands; F. Gravely, 8 Sheep street
Scottish Commercial (fire) N. T. Hewens, 47 Market street
Scottish (fire), J. A. Moore, Midland road
Scottish Union, R. W. Sherwood, 10 Sheep street

Hotels, Inns, and Taverns.

Angel (Commercial), T. Lansberry, Silver st.
Axe and Cleaver, Joseph Parker, 22 High st.
Beeswing, John Watts, 31 Sheep street
Boot, Miss Harriet Clarke, 11 Herriott's lane
Chequers, Thos. Coombs, 11 Cambridge street
Crown, Thos. Askham, 49 Market street
Crown & Anchor, Wm. Sturman, London road
Dog & Duck, Charles Jay, London road
Duke of York, Thos. Colson, 57 Oxford street
Dun Cow, John Dykes, 73 Gold street
George, James Copson, 17 Oxford street
Globe, Wm. King, 6 Gloucester place
Golden Lion, John Wainwright, 19 Sheep st.
Hind (Coml.), John Wallis, Sheep street
Horseshoe, Hy. Tiley, 36 Sheep street
King's Arms, F. Ponting, 36 Market street

Scottish Widows' Fund, W. A. Hope, 22 Silver street
Standard, William Davis, 48 Market street
Sovereign (life), John A. Moore, Midland road
Suffolk Alliance, T. S. Curtis, Sheep street
Sun, Edwd. Sharman, Mkt. sq.
Fishmongers & Gamedrs.
 Dicks Ham, 10 High street
 Marriott Geo. 11 Silver street
 Roberts Wm. 12 Oxford street

Furniture Brokers.

Barron Charles, 5 Broad green
 Edwards Amos, 9 High street
 Holding John, 11 Jackson's ln.
 Humphries Harld. 30 Sheep st.
 Humphries Wm. 28 Sheep st.
 Smeathers John, 16 Oxford st.

Greengrocers, &c.

Dicks Ham, 10 High street
 Evans Wm. 61 Gold street
 Goodman Henry, Knox road
 Howe Hy. 35 Cambridge street
 Howe Hy. jun. 23 High street
 Henson Wm. 17 Herriott's lane
 Knight Charles, 6 Cannon st.
 Linnell John, 70 Cannon street
 Lomath Thos. 69 Gold street
 Lovett Joseph, Park street
 Marriott George, 11 Silver st.
 O'Connell Rd. 16 Well street
 Roberts Wm. 12 Oxford street
 Sanderson Wm. Buckwell end
 Smith Benj. 25 Market street
 Westley Joseph, 31 High st. and 36 Market street

Grindery Dealers.

Coles John, 57 Broad green
 Cryer Arthur, 9 Church lane
 Robinson J. & C. 6 Oxford st.

Grocers, Tea & Provision Dealers.

Baxter Jno. C. 31 Cambridge st.
 Bearn Jno. Hoban. 23 Silver st.

Beadharn C. S. 1 Silver street
 Co-operative Stores, 20 Herriott's lane, & 3 Broad green—Jno. White & John Clayson, managers
 Co-operative Stores, Newcomen road.—J. S. Lovett, mgr.
 Eady Amos, 58 Oxford street
 Fowler Henry, 21 High street
 Garner Wm. Jas. Winstanley rd.
 Gillitt Ambrose, Midland road
 James Brothers, Market place
 Noble Geo. 8 St John's street
 Norman Thos. 19 Silver street
 Patrick Joseph, Park street
 Perkins Saml. Winstanley rd.
 Sanderson Alfred, 46 Mrkt. st.
 Simons Wm. Jones, 37 Mrkt. st.
 Wyldes William, 9 Silver st.

Hairdressers.

Cryer Arthur, 9 Church lane
 Garrod James, 32 High street
 London John, 36 Broad green
 Lowe Samuel, 1 Broad green
 Parr Frdk. Cha. 15 Herriott's ln.
 Redley James, White's place
 Smart John Ander. 14 Mrkt. st.
 Smith Isaac, 15 Silver street
 Ward Nichlas. 18 Cambridge st.

Hard & Smallware Dirs.

Brummit Edwd. 44 Market st.
 Cryer Arthur, 9 Church lane
 Edwards Amos, 9 High street
 Tester Thos. 22 Market street

Hatters.

Boxall George, High street
 Bryant Wm. 12 Silver street
 Compton John, 33 Sheep st.
 Williamson Wm. 5 Market st.

Hop Merchants.

Dainty James, 45 Market st.
 Wyldes William, 9 Silver street

Hosiery, Glovers, &c.

Brown John, 2 Silver street
 Priestly Mrs Mary, 42 Mrkt. st.

Mason's Arms, Saml. E. Hobbs, 9 St John st.
Midland (Coml.) Jno. Goodfellow, Midland rd.
New Inn, George Jones, 7 Broad green
Oxford Tavern, Alex. Newman, Oxford street
Peacock, Charles Howe, 1 Spring gardens
Prince of Wales, James Hobbs, London road
Queen's Head, Mrs Carline. Jeffs, 50 Broad grn.
Railway Inn, James Cowper, 29 Cambridge st.
Sow & Pigs, James B. Cook, 41 Cambridge st.
Star, Warren Pendred, 11 High street
Station Hotel, Edwin Reeve, 73 Midland road
Sun, Hy. James Kirby, 16 Church street
Swan & Nest, Mrs Bird, 65 Cannon street
Three Tuns, Miss Frances Wallis, 2 Market sq.
Victoria, James Vickers, 1 Oxford street
Volunteer, Ralph Wooding, 35 Midland road
White Horse, Charles Coombs, 7 Pebble lane

Beerhouses.

Allen John, 15 Market street
 Barker James, Finedon road
 Charter Chas. 33 Market street
 Copley Eusebius, 51 Midland rd.
 Copley William, Bell street
 Cowper Thos. 21 Cambridge st.
 Curtis John Bailey, 59 Gold st.
 Harley Chas. 85 Midland road
 Leech Thos. (outdoor), 12 Gold street
 Pell George, 9 Broad green
 Pendred William, 21 Wood st.
 Pettitt John, 7 Herriott's lane
 Sanderson Thos. London road
 Sharp Edwin, 33 Cambridge st.
 Sharpe Joseph, 11 Park street
 Vaughan Wm. 14 Silver street

Iron and Brass Founders.

Capell H. & J. Herriott's lane
 Mather Geo. R. Albion Foundry
 Williamson J. & Co. (railway
 &c.) Midland Works

Iron Manufacturers.

Butlin T. & Co. East End, and Irthlingborough Iron Works

Ironmongers.

Gill William, 4 Sheep street
 Hewens N. T. 47 Market st.
 Mills & Co. 7 Market street
 Noble John, 59 Oxford street
 Wallis Owen, 36 High street

Iron-ore Proprietors.

Butlin, Bevan, & Company
 Stanton Iron Ore Co. Finedon rd.
 Rixon & Co. (Merts.) Finedon rd.
 Sears Mrs My. & Rt. Park Cot.

Last-Maker.

Hazeldine W. H. 1 St Barnabas st.

Maltster.

Burr Josiah, 3 Midland road

Manure (Artificial) Agents.

Ellis & Everard (mfrs.) Midland road
 Hare S. J. Corn Exchange
 Hewens N. T. 47 Market place

Milliners & Dressmakers.

Collier Miss Harriet, 29 Market st.
 Daniel John, 4 Market street
 Dunmur Mrs Jane, 55 West st.
 Harold Miss E. 41 Broad green
 Hocken Wm. 4 Market square
 Moore Mrs Louisa, 10 Park st.
 Rainey Mrs S. A. 82 Midland rd.
 Smith Mrs Harriet, 55 Gold st.
 Turnell Wm. Hy. 5 & 35 Sheep st.
 Wing Mrs Annie, 20 Market st.

Newspaper.

Wellingborough Weekly News
 (Wed.) Hy. Wm. Sawyer, 9
 Midland road

Nurserymen, Seedsmen, and Florists.

Douglas Geo. 11 Midland road
 Lack Ezra, 13 Sheep street
 Smith Benjn. 25 Market street

Pawnbroker.

Garfirth John, 6 White Horse yd.

Photographers.

Di Villa Felix M. Midland rd.
 Miller Thos. 14 Midland road

Plumbers, Glaziers, and Painters.

Abbott John, 48 Midland road
 Bellamy Wm. Hy. Oxford st.
 Fairey George, Park street
 Key Hy. Knapp, Newcomen rd.
 Langdale Chpr. 2 High street
 Markham W. H. Winstanley ter.
 Negus George, 2 Brook street
 Richards John, 12 High street
 Smith Edwin, 60 Cannon street
 Tozer William Henry, 34 Market street

Register Offices for Servants.

Hitchcock Mrs E. 2 Cambridge st.
 Parker Miss Ann G. 6 Sheep st.

Rope and Twine Makers.

Dickens Hy. 53 West street
 Pendered Joseph & Son (& sack & tarpaulin), 5 Market sq.

Saddlers and Harness-makers.

Froggatt J. & T. 10 Market sq.
 Loveday Samuel, 3 Silver st.
 Payne John, 5 Cambridge st.

Sawmills.

King George, 39 Midland rd.

Sewing-mach. Repairers, and General Machinists.

Belton Arthur, 37 West ter.
 Wilkinson John, 31 Church st.

Shopkeepers.

Barker James, Finedon road
 Billing Mrs Eliza, 54 Oxford st.
 Brown Jacob Young, King st.
 Bullivant John, 22 Well st.
 Butlin Miss Eliz. Knox road
 Chamberlain Mrs A. 28 Knight st.
 Cobb Jph. 13 Cambridge st.
 Cradock John, 54 Wood street
 Cusley George, 7 Cambridge st.
 Davison William, Victoria rd.

Dickins John, 19 High street
 Garlic Wm. Jas. 1 Wood st.
 Hazeldine W. H. 1 St Barnabas st.
 Hinch Thos. 3 Jackson's lane
 Hinman Mrs Ann, 33 St John st.
 Kimbell Nathan, 27 West st.
 Hollis John, 4 Cambridge st.
 Loveday John, Finedon road
 Jinks, Benjamin, 13 Gold st.
 Nutt & Stokes, 32 Park street
 Parker James, London road
 Parr F. C. 15 Herriott's lane
 Payne Chas. 12 Sheep street
 Peabody S. T. 69 Cannon st.
 Shaw Frederick, 17 High street
 Sharpe Joseph, 11 Park street
 Stevens Wm. 21 Park street
 Spencer T. Cross st. & Hill st.
 Taylor James, 1 Regent street
 Thompson Fred. Havelock st.
 Thompson Wm. 6 Midland rd.
 Thompson Wm. 8 Salem lane
 Tompkins Miss H. 46 West st.
 Turvey John, 41 Cannon street

Soda Water and Ginger Beer Manufacturers.

Hope Wm. Ash, 22 Silver st.
 Wooding Chas. 13 Midland rd.

Stonemasons.

Burkitt John, Midland road
 Dolby Thos. 16 Herriott's lane
 Higgins John Hale (& marble,
 Midland road
 White G. Harrowden rd. & Denton

Surgeons.

Clark Thomas, West Villa
 Clark Wm. W. M. D. 24 Silver st.
 Hemsted E. M. D. 61 Oxford st.
 Wright J. B. M. D. 5 Oxford st.

Tallow Chandler.

Wylde Wm. 9 Silver street

Tailors.

(Marked * are also Drapers.)

* Bryant Wm. 12 Silver street
 Busby Saml. 1 St John's street
 * Cleaver John, 8 High street
 * Compton John, 33 Sheep st.
 * Crick Jph. Job, 3 Oxford st.
 Hustwait Lewis, 17 Cannon st.
 Johnson Wm. 14 Doddington rd.
 * Lambert Jas. Midland road.
 Northern Edw. Hy. Stode rd.
 Warwick Samuel 18 High st.
 * Woolston J. 22 Herriott's lane

Teachers of Music.

Harrington Wm. Rd. 27 Sheep st.
 Randall Wm. 8 Northampton rd.

Timber Merchants.

Ellis & Everard, Midland road,
 J. A. Moore, agent
 King George, 39 Midland road

Tobaccoonists.

Smith Isaac, 15 Silver street
Smith Saml. 14 Sheep street

Veterinary Surgeon.

Aris Benj. Blunsom, London rd.

Watchmakers.

Butcher H. S. 38 Market st
Harris George, 12 West street

Hepton Rt. Hy. Box gardens
Peck John, 9 Sheep street ;
Robinson Mrs E. J. 2 Market st.
Weston Wm. 19 Cambridge st.

Wheelwrights.

Howes Thomas, Broad green
Smith John, Midland road
Spencer Wm. White's place
Valentine Jph. 9 Cambridge st.

Wine & Spirit Merchts.

Dainty Jas. 45 Market street
Dulley Wm. & Sons, Sheep st.
Robinson Bros. & Co. High st.
Sanderson Alfred, 46 Market st.
Woolston John, Sheep street

Wood Turner.

Dickens Wm. 11 Pebble lane

Public Officers.

Clerk to Board of Guardians, R. Sharman, Oxford street
Clerk to Burial Board, G. H. Burnham, High st.
Clerk to Commissioners of Land, Income, and Property Taxes, and to Commissioners of Kettering, Northampton, and Higham Ferriers Turnpike Roads, G. H. Burnham
Clerk to the Magistrates of Wellingborough division, G. H. Burnham
Clerk of the Market, Luke Knight, Church st.
Clerk to School Board, J. Heygate, Market sq.
Solicitor to Stubbs' Trade Protection Society, Thomas Cook, 27 Church street
Superintendent Registrar of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, Matthew Reid Sharman ; Caleb Matthews, deputy-supt. ; Thomas Clark, Oxford street, registrar of births and deaths ; and George Green, 31 Midland rd. registrar of marriages

Public Establishments.

Corn Exchange, Market square, Wm. Henry Cowper, hall-keeper
County Court Office, High street, Richard Harington, Esq., judge ; Geo. H. Burnham, registrar and high bailiff ; Wm. Henry Cooper, under bailiff Cemetery, London road, Samuel Wilson, supt.
Gas Works, London road, S. H. Kimble, sec. ; G. Powell, manager
Inland Revenue Office, Wm. Lane, supt.
Literary Institute, Corn Exchange, Thos. S. Curtis, hon. sec. ; W. H. Cowper, librarian
Local Board of Health Office, Corn Exchange, Thos. Cook, Clerk ; Edward Sharman, surveyor ; Luke Knight, collector and inspector of nuisance
Police Station, Midland road, Lewis Poole, supt. ; Henry Martin, inspector
Rifle Volunteer Corps, drill-room, High street, Sergt. Alfred Lloyd, drill instructor
Union Workhouse, London road, Thomas Simmons, master
Young Men's Christian Association, 9 Market square, Henry Archer, secretary

Railways.

London and North Western, John Green, station-master and goods manager ; Chaplin and Horne, Market street, carrying agents ; John Wallis, parcel agent, whose omnibus from the Hind meets all trains on week days

Midland, Wm. Renshaw, station-master and goods manager ; Thos. Truman, locomotive supt. ; Thos. Lansberry, parcel agent, whose omnibus from the Angel meets all trains on week days.

Carriers.

Bozeat—F. and J. Shrive, Horseshoe, Monday, Wednesday, and Friday
Brigstock—Abm. Sturgess, Crown, Wed.
Carlton and Harrold—Robt. Franklin, Market place, Wednesday and Friday
Chelverston and Caldecote—Ephraim Driver, Horseshoe, Wednesday
Doddington—Mrs Har. Bonham, Crown, Wed.
Earl's Barton—Enoch Rogers, Silver st. daily
Finedon—Joseph Clapham, Angel, Wed. and Sat. ; and John Deaborough, Silver st. daily
Grendon—Geo. Brealey, Crown, Wed. & Sat.
Hardwycke—Gibson, Royal Oak, Wed.
Harrowden Little—Samuel Ballard, Market st. Mon. Wed. and Fri. ; and Joseph Smith, Market street, Mon. Wed. Thur. and Sat.
Higham Ferrers—Alex. Patenall, Silver st. Wed. ; Felce, Market place, daily
Irchester—Geo. Goddard, and John Manning, Silver street, daily
Irthlingborough—Millard, Silver st. Monday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday
Kimbolton—Jas. Perridge, Victoria, Wed.
Mears Ashby, and Sywell—Alfred Thompson, Victoria, Wednesday and Friday
Northampton—Fredk. Thompson, Havelock street, Mon. Wed. and Sat. ; and John Turvey, Cannon st. Tues. Thur. and Sat.
Orlbury—Wm. Driver, Angel, Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday
Poddington—Geo. Cooper, Angel, Wed. & Sat.
Pytchley—Geo. Stanley, Beeswing, Wednesday
Raunds—Owen Nunley, Crown, Monday, Wednesday, and Friday
Ringstead—Eli Robinson, Crown, Wed. ; and Saml. Wilson, Sow and Pigs, Friday
Rushden—Wm. Warren, Silver street, daily
Sywell—see Mears Ashby
Tichmarsh—Saml. Wilson, Sow & Pigs, Wed.
Walgrave—Wilson, Crown, Wednesday
Wollaston—F. D. Smart, Horseshoe ; and John Woods, Crown, daily
Woodford—Beeby, Crown, Wednesday
Wymington—Perkins, Silver street, Wed.
Yelden—Joseph White, Beeswing, Wed.

WILBY PARISH.

Wilby, or Wilbye, is bounded on the east by Wellingborough, on the north by Hardwycke, on the west by Earl's Barton, and on the south by Doddington. It contains 1132 acres of the rateable value of £2193 ; the gross estimated rental is £2476. The population in 1801 was 95 ; in 1831, 123 ; in 1841, 428 ; in 1851, 468 ; in 1861, 456 ; and in 1871, 463 souls. The soil is chiefly a red and black clay, and the principal landowners are John Corrie, Esq. (the lord of the manor), Richard Hall, Esq., and Mr Matthew Easton Jones.

Manor.—The Countess Judith had 4 hides of land in Wilebi, at the general survey; and in the reign of Henry II. they were held of the fee of David, King of Scotland. The manor of Wilby, at an early period, formed part of the possessions of the family of Fitz Warine; in the sixteenth of Edward III. (1342), Richard Maundevyll levied a fine of it; and in the thirty-second of the same reign he gave it up to Sir William de Wileby, Knight, and his heirs. In the reigns of Henry VII., Henry VIII., and Queen Elizabeth, this manor was possessed by the family of Vaux, of Harrowden. The family of Pentlow afterwards had it; and about 1706, William Pentlow, Esq., sold it to John Freeman, Esq.; after the decease of Mrs Freeman, relict of John Freeman, it descended to her daughters, and now belongs to John Corrie, Esq.

The Village of Wilby is small and pleasantly situated, about two miles south-west of Wellingborough, and eight north-north-east from Northampton.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is an ancient stone structure in the Early English style, consisting of nave with clerestory, chancel, south aisle, south porch, and tower, which is square at the base, and of octagonal form about the centre, surmounted by a neat spire and containing three bells. The chancel was rebuilt in 1853, at a cost of about £500, by the Rev. Robert Stockdale, the late rector. In the south wall is a handsome stained glass window representing the Annunciation. A new vestry, on the north side of the chancel, was added in 1873 by the present rector as a memorial to his late wife. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Rothwell, rated in the king's books at £13, 19s. 4d., and now worth about £390 per annum, in the gift of Henry M. Stockdale, Esq., and incumbency of the Rev. Henry Dale, M.A. The tithes were commuted in 1801 for land. The Rectory House, built in 1849 by the Rev. Septimus Stockdale, M.A., late rector, stands pleasantly on an elevation north-east of the church; it is in the Elizabethan style, with a high-pitched roof, and quite ecclesiastical in character. The cost, exclusive of stables and out-offices, was about £1600. For the Charities of the parish see the table prefixed to this hundred.

The School, which adjoins the churchyard, was built by subscription in 1854. It is supported by voluntary contributions, aided by the school pence, and is attended by about forty scholars; it will accommodate eighty.

The Independents have a Sunday School here, which is used occasionally by that body for service. The Wesleyan Methodists have a small chapel in the village, erected in 1859, which will seat about 130.

Post-Office.—George Cox, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Wellingborough at 7.30 A.M., and are despatched at 5.10 P.M.

Braybrook George, shopkeeper
Dale Rev. Henry, M.A. rector
Elson Miss Ann, schoolmistress
Hall Mrs Emma Hall Richard, Esq.
Hayes John, baker & shopkpr.
Johnson Luke, limeburner
Jones Saml. machine-closer

Lewis Abraham, shopkeeper
Stanton Wm. vict. George, & graz.
Tassell Geo. wheelwright, blacksmith, and beerhouse
Thompson Geo. brick and tile maker, h. Wellingborough
West George Thomas, Esq.
Righi Cottage

Farmers and Graziers.

Fortescue Gerrard
Hayes John
Newitt Thos. Brooks
Pumfrey Samuel
Ratcliffe John, Manor House
Rippin Thomas
Sanders Thomas, Wilby Hall

Carrier.—See Earl's Barton.

HIGHAM FERRERS HUNDRED,

SITUATE on the eastern side of the county, is bounded on the east by the counties of Bedford and Huntingdon, on the south by Buckinghamshire, on the west by the hundreds of Wymersley, Hamfordshoe, and Huxloe, and on the north by Navisford hundred. Its shape is narrow and irregular, and extends along the border of the county for nearly sixteen miles, covering an area of 30,730 statute acres. It takes its name from the principal town in it. William Peverel, the Conqueror's natural son, possessed this hundred, then called Hecham, at the time of the Domesday survey. It afterwards passed through the Ferrers, Earls of Derby, and the Earls of Lancaster, and came to the possession of the Crown, with which it still continues, as parcel of the duchy of Lancaster. The hundred comprises the borough-town of Higham Ferrers, and thirteen parishes, of which the following table is an enumeration, showing the acreage as collected from the rate-books, together with the rateable value and gross estimated rental, and the number of houses and population of each parish in 1871:—

PARISHES, &c.	Rateable Acres.	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Bozeat	2,523	235	3	...	554	532	1,086	£ 3,400	£ 3,900
Chelveston-Cum-Caldecot	1,752	102	4	...	218	228	446	2,300	2,718
Easton Maudit	1,763	41	89	103	192	1,841	2,208
Farndish (part of)	300	1,032	1,204
Hargrave	1,379	79	5	...	186	192	378	1,608	1,894
Higham Ferrers	1,918	261	580	652	1,232	4,413	5,027
Higham Park	660	1	4	5	9	700	820
Irchester	2,679	309	2	...	697	701	1,398	8,926	10,354
Knuston, ham. ..	800	36	72	85	157	912	1,012
Newton Bromshold*	4,254	552	14	3	1,294	1,286	2,580	7,738	9,232
Raunds	1,929	195	12	...	435	440	875	4,494	5,290
Ringstead	3,570	84	1	...	1,076	1,046	2,122	6,900	8,000
Rushden	1,952	154	10	...	330	348	678	3,800	4,514
Stanwick	880	11	25	23	48	1,271	1,520
Strixton	2,796	320	11	...	691	703	1,394	6,406	7,183
Wollaston	29,155	2,380	62	3	6,251	6,344	12,595	55,741	64,876

* Two cottages in this village are in the parish of Yelden, in Bedfordshire.

CHARITIES OF HIGHAM FERRERS HUNDRED, as abstracted from the Parliamentary Reports, &c. See also the histories of the town, parishes, &c.

Date.	Donor and nature of gift.	To what place and purposes applied.	Annual value.
	Stephen Cox (£20)	Bozeat parish, bread to poor	£1 0 0
	— Dexter (rent)	Ditto, 10 poor men	0 5 0
	Town Land (13a.) and cottages	Ditto, church	35 0 0
1760.	Abigail Bailey and Ann Levitt (£260, for which land was purchased) ...	Chelveston-cum-Caldecot, school ..	50 0 0
1765.	Thomas Neale (£20)	Ditto, poor	3 0 0
1699.	James Sawyer (rents)	Chelveston and Raunds parish, 4 poor widows	42 0 0
	In lieu of the herbage of the green lanes	Easton Maudit parish, poor	4 8 0
1422.	Archbishop Chichele	Higham Ferrers parish school ...	10 0 0
	Fitzwilliam family	Ditto, voluntary gift, ditto	10 0 0
	Archbishop Chichele	Ditto, 13 poor bedesmen	3 9 7
	Corporation	Ditto, ditto	2 10 0
	John Dewberry	Ditto, 20 poor widows	1 0 0
1619.	Rev. Nicholas Latham (rent)	Ditto, 6 poor persons	3 0 0
1715.	Eliz. Freeman (£20)	Ditto, minister and 10 poor widows	1 0 0
1708.	Hon. Lewis Watson (£50)	Ditto, poor	4 0 0
1747.	Richard Wagstaff	Ditto, bread to poor	1 0 0
"	Ditto	Ditto, minister, for preaching a sermon	0 10 0

Date.	Donors and nature of gifts.	To what place and purpose applied.	Annual value.
1790.	Ann Glasbrook (£50)	Ditto, gowns for 4 poor widows...	2 10 0
1804.	Ann Saunders (£50)	Ditto, poor	2 5 0
	Mrs Maskell (£20)	Ditto, ditto	0 19 0
	Mrs Wyld (£30)	Ditto, ditto	1 7 0
	Mrs Rowlet (rent)	Ditto, ditto	0 10 0
1855.	George Newman (£5000)	Ditto, 6 poor women	124 4 0
1804.	Feoffee estate	Irchester parish	114 0 0
1611.	Thomas Jenyson	Ditto, bread, 12 poor persons	5 4 0
1858.	Samuel Sharwood (£182)	Ditto, school and poor	4 0 0
1704.	Mrs Peaps (£100)	Raunds parish, school { making }	85 0 0
1722.	John Blaise (18a.)	Ditto, poor { total of }
1797.	Commissioners of Inclosure (10a.)...	Ditto, church land ... { 51a. }	16 5 0
1720.	Robert Nichols (6 tenements, &c.)...	Ditto, poor
	Ditto, land (2 roods)	Ditto, poor and church	1 0 0
	Charity estate (27 acres & a limekiln)	Ringstead parish, school and poor	58 12 0
1619.	William May (£100)	Rushden parish, poor, &c.	25 0 0
1619.	Rev. N. Latham	Ditto, 6 poor people	3 0 0
	Mary Greaves	Ditto, poor	3 0 0
	Church Land (15a.)	Stanwick parish	28 0 0
	Rev. Peter Needham, D.D. (£10)...	Ditto, poor	3 12 6
1674.	Thomas Neale (rent)	Wollaston parish, bread to poor	10 8 0
1730.	Charles Neale (£120)
1732.	James Hafelden (rent)	Ditto, poor	1 19 0
1800.	Jonathan Bettle (£306, 13s. 4d., 3 per cents.)	Ditto, bread to poor and books for the choir	9 4 0
Total			£672 2 1

BOZEAT PARISH.

Bozeat, or Boziate, is bounded on the east by Bedfordshire, on the north by Strixton and Grendon, on the west by Easton Maudit, and on the south by Buckinghamshire. It contains 2523 acres, of the rateable value of £3400, and the gross estimated rental is £3900. The population in 1801 was 680; in 1831, 812; in 1841, 845; in 1851, 921; in 1861, 955; and in 1871, 1086 souls. The soil is various; there are some good springs in the lordship, one of which, called Sandwell Spring, is excellent, and the town well is endowed with an acre of land, from which, it is said, the place takes its name "Beau-jaiet." Thomas Revis, Esq., is lord of the manor, and the Marquis of Northampton and Mr Charles Talbot are the principal proprietors.

Manor.—The Countess Judith possessed 2 hides of land here, which were held by Lanzelin and Winemar; and Turstin held 1½ virgate in Boziete, at the time of the Conqueror's survey. In the reign of Henry II., David, king of Scotland, had 2 hides, and William Peverel 3 small virgates. In the thirty-ninth of Henry III. (1216) John de Stokes gave all his possessions here to the abbey of St James in Northampton, and by the gift of other benefactors St James' Abbey had many other lands and tenements in Bozeat. In the third of Edward I. (1272), this manor was in the hands of the Crown, and in the thirteenth of the same reign it was in the possession of Robert de Twengh. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Wm. de Latimer and the abbot of St James, near Northampton, were lords of Bozeat. With the Latimer family the manor continued till the ninth of Elizabeth (1576), when it descended to Dorathy, daughter of John lord Latimer, and wife of Sir Thomas Cecil, who sold it to John Wiseman, Esq., to whose posterity it descended. The manor belonging to the abbey of St James was valued at the dissolution at £10, and granted to Philip Meredith, William Woodleys, and others, and in the reign of James I. it was in the possession of John Wiseman, Esq.

The Village of Bozeat stands on the London road, about 6 miles S. of Wellingborough, and 12 miles from Northampton.

The Church, which is much in need of restoration, is dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and consists of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, and tower, from which rises an octagonal broach spire. The tower, a fine one, for the most part of the First Pointed period, is in an exceedingly bad condition. It had suffered greatly from the insertion of a large window and of a Late Decorated doorway beneath it; the half of each have been walled up probably soon after the mischief was done, and further attempts to strengthen the tower were made in 1753, but it has still a very insecure appearance. The south entrance to the church is through a lofty Perpendicular porch, the doorway within which is a fine specimen of Early English. In the chancel are a priest's door and a low side-window. The greater part of the nave is of a Decorated character, whilst the chancel windows are of modern date. The east window, of three lights, is of the Decorated style, filled with stained glass representing the Ascension, and is to the memory of Thomas Hardy, only son of Thomas Revis, Esq., lord of the manor. On each side of this window are tablets having painted on, in black letters with illuminated capitals, the Lord's Prayer, the Creed, and the Ten Commandments. A small gallery is at the west end, on which was formerly the organ, which has recently been removed to the north side of the chancel. The chancel was restored in 1873-4 at the expense of the vicar, assisted by the lay impropiator, at a cost of £400, including an organ. The living is a discharged vicarage, consolidated with that of Strixton, in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £8, and now worth £300 per annum, in the patronage of Earl Spencer, and incumbency of the Rev. John Frederick Pizey, M.A. The tithes were commuted in 1798 for land. The Vicarage House stands near the church.

Here is a Baptist Chapel, erected in 1844, a Wesleyan Chapel, in 1834, and there is also a Wesleyan Reform Chapel in the village.

Charities.—The town land, 13 acres, with cottages, yield £35 a year (which go to the repairs of the church), and 25s., left by Cox and Dexter, is annually distributed to the poor.

The School, situated in the centre of the village, was erected in 1873 at a cost of about £2000, under the Government Educational Board. It is a very good building of stone, capable of accommodating 230, and the present average attendance is 150. The Reading Room and Library were established in October 1872. There are at present 50 members, who pay 5s. each per annum.

Post-office.—Wall-Box. Letters arrive from Wellingborough at 9 A.M., and the box is cleared at 4.5 P.M., and 10.15 A.M. on Sundays.

Belcher Benjamin, shoe agent
Berry John, vict. Chequers
Brown Mrs Ann, baker & shopkr.
Chapman Stephen, cottager
Co-op. Stores, Jas. Pettitt, mngr.
Corby John, smith and beerho.
Corby Thos., shoe agt. & beerh.
Drage Hy. boot-upper manfr.
Drage John, shoe mfr. and grindery, &c.
Drage William, shoe manufr.
Fancott Mr William
Green Miss Susan Annie, mistress infant school
Harrison William, grocer

Hill Wm. Fred. vict. Red Lion
Houghton Thomas, butcher
Kirby Jno. Wm. schoolmaster
Monk John, baker, &c.
Pettitt Mrs Jane
Pettitt William, shoe manufr.
Pizey Rev. Jno. Fred. M.A. vicar
Skevington Mrs Martha, shopkr.
Skevington Mrs Martha, baker
Skevington Mrs Mary, baker
Skevington Thomas, butcher
Skevington Thomas, beerhouse
Smart William, higgler
Timpson Joseph, carpenter
Walker Dexter Jno. painter

Walker Jno. shoe agt. & grocer
Walker John, miller
Wallis Thomas, blacksmith, grocer & draper, & assist. overseer

Farmers and Graziers.

Ashwell George, Spring Farm
Deverell Richard
Fancott Thos. (& corn mercht.)
Howe Henry
Hutchinson Hy. Church Farm
Maxwell Edward
Maxwell Walter, The Grange
Pollard Joseph
Sanders William

Carriers.—Frank and Jacob Shrives, to Wellingborough Monday, Wednesday, and Friday; and Northampton Tuesday and Saturday.

CHELVESTON-CUM-CALDECOT PARISH

Is bounded by Yelden and Shelten, in Bedfordshire, on the east; Stanwick on the north; the river Nene, which divides it from Irthlingborough, on the west; Higham Ferrers on the south-west, and by Newton Bromshold on the south. It contains 1752 acres, including the hamlet of Caldecot; the rateable value of the parish is £2300, and the gross estimated rental, £2718. Their united population in 1801 was 266; in 1831, 332; in 1841, 288; in 1851, 402; in 1861, 454; and in 1871, 500 souls. The soil varies from a strong clay to a light sand, and in Caldecot there is some black marl. The principal proprietor is H. C. Wise, Esq., lord of the manor of Chelveston, and the manorial rights of Caldecot are exercised by the Fitzwilliam family in virtue of a lease of that manor from the Crown.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, there was 1 hide and 3 virgates of land in Celvestone and Caldecote, which formed a member of Higham Ferrers manor. In the thirty-second of Henry III. (1247), William, Earl of Derby, was lord of the manor of Chelveston. In the first of Edward IV. (1461), Chelveston and Caldecot were granted to Anne, Duchess of Exeter, the king's sister, and it afterwards passed through the several families of Lovell, Somerset, Pickering, and Ekins. Sir E. C. Disbrowe, who descended maternally from the family of Cromwell, succeeded to the Chelveston manor on the demise of his father, Colonel Disbrowe, in 1818, and his youngest daughter carried it in marriage to the present possessor, Henry Christopher Wise, Esq., in 1863.

The Village is about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles E. by N. of Higham Ferrers, $7\frac{1}{2}$ N.E. of Wellingborough, 6 S. by W. from Thrapston, $17\frac{1}{2}$ from Northampton, and 2 miles from the Higham Ferrers station (L. and N.W.), which is situated in this parish. Bidwell-water is a small brook, having its source in a spring $\frac{1}{4}$ mile from the church.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, is an ancient Perpendicular structure, situated about half way between the village and the hamlet of Caldecot, consisting of nave, chancel, north and south aisles, porch, and tower containing 5 bells. The church was restored in 1849, when the north aisle was added, at a cost of about £1000. The tower stands at the east end of the north aisle, in which was placed a new clock in 1868, at a cost of £100, and an organ stands at the east end of the south aisle, purchased about 14 years ago for £150. The east window, of three lights, is of the Decorated style; the west window is Perpendicular, having four lights, and the clerestory windows are Early English, and remarkably beautiful. In 1872 two marble tablets were placed in the north wall of the chancel, by the Disbrowe family; one is to Sir Edward and Lady Disbrowe, their two sons and daughter; and the other to Mr Andrew Leighton, their late agent. The living is a vicarage, united to that of Higham Ferrers (which see). The tithes were commuted at the enclosure for land.

The School, founded in 1760, was rebuilt by subscription in 1864, at a cost of £853, 3s. 4d. The site and stone, and a liberal donation in money, were the gift of H. C. Wise, Esq.; and Mrs Wise, of Woodcote Hall, Warwickshire, Miss Disbrowe, of Walton Hall, Derbyshire, and the Rev. Alex. Dixon, of Higham Ferrers, were also contributors. It is endowed with 23 acres of land, and a dwelling-house, &c., the annual rent of which is £50.

Alms-houses for four poor persons (2 from Raunds, and 2 from this parish) were founded in 1699 by James Sawyer, and Thomas his son, and endowed with £42 per annum. The inmates receive 3s. each per week, and coals. Neale's charity consists of 20s. per annum to the poor, and the interest of £20 is given in bread to the poor.

CALDECOT is a hamlet containing 3 farmhouses, and a few cottages, and is situate $\frac{1}{4}$ mile from Chelveston.

Post-office.—Wall Letter-Box. Letters arrive from Higham Ferrers at 8 A.M., and are despatched thereto at 5.5 P.M.

Apthorp Rev. East, M.A. cur.
Bonfield Wm. vict. Star & Garter
Bramscombe Samuel, shopkpr.
Chettle Mrs Hannah
Colson Gideon, butcher
Curtis James, station-master
Driver Ephraim, grcr. & corn dlr.
Eady Enoch, schoolmaster
Farrow James, grocer
Gray James Moyes, land-agent

Haseldine Wm. j. shoemaker
Hornsay John, lace-dealer
Jellis William, blacksmith
Knight Wm. Douglas, baker, grocer, and beer retailer
Martin Mrs Mary
Page Joseph, wheelwright
Peacock John, parish clerk
Scarborough Rt. vict. Fitzwilliam Arms
Stirman John, higgler

Farmers and Graziers.

Britten Thomas
Browning Benj., Anwell Lodge
Browning Mrs Mary Ann
Eady Roderic (and farrier)
Gross William
Jellis Thomas
Martin Nathaniel
Martin Thomas

Carrier.—Ephraim Driver, to Wellingborough, on Wednesday.

EASTON MAUDIT PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Bozeat, on the north by Grendon, on the west by Yardley Hastings, and on the south by Buckinghamshire. It contains 1763 acres of the rateable value of £1841, and the gross estimated rental is £2208. The population in 1801 was 135; in 1831, 210; in 1841, 214; in 1851, 217; in 1861, 207; and in 1871, 192 souls. The soil varies from a stiff clay to a light stony land, and the Marquis of Northampton is lord of the manor and owner of the whole parish, except the rectorial lands. There are 295a. 1r. 1p. of wood-land in the lordship.

Manor.—William Peverel, the Conqueror's natural son, and the Countess Judith, his niece, held in Estone 2½ virgates at the general survey. In the reign of Henry II., there were 3½ hides and 1 great virgate here and in Strixton, of the fee of Michael de Hanslape, which are not mentioned in Domesday Book. In Henry I.'s time, William Malduith, or Maudit, the king's chamberlain, received certain lands here from Michael de Hanslape, which descended to his posterity, and from this family the parish is called Easton Maudit. In the reign of Henry VI., this manor was in the possession of the family of Trussell, and in the reign of Henry VII., Elizabeth Trussell carried it in marriage to the Earl of Oxford, by whom it was sold to Christopher Yelverton, Esq., who in the twenty-first of Elizabeth (1578) levied a fine of it. This gentleman descended from an ancient family at Rougham in Norfolk; and in the reign of Queen Elizabeth was made a serjeant-at-law, Speaker of the House of Commons, and a judge of the Queen's Bench. He died in the eleventh of James I. (1613), and was succeeded by Henry his son, who received the honour of knighthood; in 1617 he was appointed attorney-general, and in 1625 a judge in the Court of Common Pleas. His son Christopher was created a baronet in 1641; and Sir Charles Yelverton, who succeeded to this manor in 1670, was called to the House of Lords by the title of Lord Grey of Ruthin. Upon his decease without issue in 1679, he was succeeded by his younger brother, Henry, who in 1690 was raised to the dignity of Viscount Longueville, whose eldest son, Talbot, was created Earl of Sussex by George I. in 1717, a title which is now extinct. Here was formerly a large mansion, the seat of the Yelvertons, which was taken down about sixty-five years since, when the estate passed by purchase to the Marquis of Northampton. This house contained a large collection of ancient portraits, which were disposed of by public sale.

The Village of Easton Maudit, which is small and secluded, is about seven miles south of Wellingborough, and eleven from Northampton. From foundations of houses, dove-cots, and walls of wells, which have been discovered here, it is supposed to have been a much larger place, and tradition says that there were once many weavers' shops here. The manorial residence of the Earl of Sussex stood near the church, and the handsome trees which remain near the site bespeak its former grandeur.

The Church, dedicated to Sts Peter and Paul, is of the Decorated period—the chapel at the north end being of a later date. It consists of a nave and side aisles, chancel, chapel, south porch, and a tower surmounted by a beautiful spire. The latter was partly rebuilt in 1832. The church was carefully restored in 1859–60, principally at the expense of the Marquis of Northampton. The total cost was £2480, 16s. 7d.; and of this sum £2332, 16s. 7d. was given by the Marquis; £50 by the Rev. Henry Smith, the vicar; £25 by the Dean and Chapter of Christ's Church College, Oxford, lay improprators and patrons of the living; and £73 by the parishioners. Previous to the restoration there were on the walls of the chancel a number of marble monuments and tablets, which were then removed, and now form the pavement of the north chancel. The whole of the interior, chancel and church, is paved with very handsome encaustic tiles, manufactured by Minton, and designed by Lord Alwyne Compton. Several tombstones, one of them to the memory of the Percy family, have been removed from the pavement of the church; but they have been replaced with monumental slabs of encaustic tiles, with all the inscriptions and designs complete. The old pulpit has been replaced by one of elaborately carved oak, and the wooden communion rails by a low screen of beautiful alabaster. The piscina in the chancel has above it a wooden ledge, as is occasionally, but not often, seen. The church is now a remarkably handsome one. It contains the ashes and monuments of many illustrious personages who once resided in the place, amongst whom may be mentioned Dr Thomas Morton, bishop of Durham, who died here in 1659. On his ejection from his see, Bishop Morton, who was noted for his learning, piety, and generosity, was received into the family of Sir Christopher Yelverton, lord of the manor, who made him tutor to his son; and on his father's death, in 1654, Sir Henry Yelverton, by whom the Bishop was much beloved and respected, continued to support him. Also Charles Longueville, Lord Grey of Ruthin, who died in 1643. The living is a discharged vicarage in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £6, endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and now worth about £170 per annum. The vicarial tithes were commuted in 1840 for about £128. The patronage is vested in Christ College, Oxford. Dr Percy, Bishop of Dromore in Ireland, was sometime vicar of this parish. During his residence here, that great giant of literature, Dr Johnson, visited him several times. The Vicarage House, a neat building, stands near the church.

Post-Office—Wall-Box. Letters arrive from Northampton at about 9.30 A.M., and the box is cleared at 3.40 P.M., on week days only.

Cooper Humphrey, parish clrk.
Labutt Thomas, higgler
Longland Miss Emma, schlmrs.
Robinson John, beerseller

Silby Samuel, shopkeeper

Farmers.

Adcock James

Allebone John
Church William, The Lodge
Coles George
Davison John Perry

FARNDISH (PART OF) PARISH.

About 300 acres of this parish, and part of one house, are situate in this county, and the remainder of it is in Bedfordshire. It contains 647 acres, of the rateable value of £1032; the gross estimated rental is £1204; and the population in 1861 was 67, and in 1871, 75.

HARGRAVE PARISH

Is bounded by part of the counties of Bedford and Huntingdon on the south and east, on the north by Raunds, and on the west by Stanwick. It contains about 1379 acres, of the rateable value of £1608; the gross estimated rental is £1894. The population in 1801 was 158; in 1831, 203; in 1841, 257; in 1851, 278; in 1861, 310; and in 1871, 378 souls. The soil is chiefly a strong clay, and the principal landowners are the Rev. R. S. Baker, the rector, who is lord of the manor, the executors of the late G. W. Fitzwilliam, Sir James Hay Langham, and the trustees of John Rawson, Esq. The Thrapston and Huntingdon line of railway intersects the parish.

Manor.—Eustachius held of William Peverel half a hide of land in Hargrave at the general survey, which was valued at 68d. In the reign of Henry III. the prior of Chicksand was certified to be possessed of an eighth part of a knight's fee, of the fee of William Earl Ferrers. After the dissolution of the monasteries, the manor, which belonged to the priory, was given to Anthony Browne and Richard Weston, from whom it passed to the Catlyn family.

The Village of Hargrave, which is very scattered, stands about 5½ miles east by north of Higham Ferrers, and 21 from Northampton. About half a mile from the village, the counties of Northampton, Bedford, and Huntingdon join.

The Church, dedicated to All Saints, is an ancient edifice consisting of nave and side-aisles, north transept, chancel, and south porch, and a tower containing four bells, and surmounted by a spire. It was rebuilt in 1868 at a cost of £1700. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £13, 6s. 8d., and now worth £300 per annum. The Rev. Robert Silby Baker, B.A., is both patron and incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land about the year 1800. The register dates from 1572.

The Wesleyans have a small chapel in the village, which will seat 130 hearers. It was built in 1860 at a cost of about £200.

The National School is a good building erected in 1857 by subscription, at a cost of about £400; average attendance, 60.

Post-Office.—Mrs Mary Cox, sub-postmistress—letters arrive via St Neots at 10 A.M. and are despatched at 4 P.M. Raunds is the nearest Money-Order Office.

Baker J. L. and Co. engineers, iron & brass foundry, & agri- cultural implement manu- facturers, Cockatrice Works	Fisher Wm. vict. Nag's Head Harris Mrs Elizabeth, grocer Hatt Mrs Marg. Lavinia, schlmrs. Newton Mr Thomas Pashler Joseph, baker & grocer Pettitt William, blacksmith Tomblin Thomas, farmer, horse- dealer, and beerhouse York George, greengrocer York John, cottager
---	---

Farmers.

Baker John Lake (& surveyor & brickmaker), Manor House Baxter Joseph Ekins Thomas, Lodge Farm Fuller Wm. Three Shire House Hunt Thomas Newton Thos. jun. Top Farm

HIGHAM FERRERS PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Chelveston on the east, Stanwick on the north, the river Nene which divides it from Irthlingborough on the west, and Rushden on the south. The town and parish contain about 191 acres, of the rateable value of £4413, and the gross estimated rental is £50278. Its population in 1801 was 726; in 1831, 965; in 1841, 1030; in 1851, 1140; in 1861, 1152; and in 1871, 1285 souls. The land varies from a strong clay to a gravelly or sandy soil, and the eldest son of the late Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam, a minor, is heir to the greater part of the property.

Manor.—At the time of the Conqueror's survey, Hecham contained 6 hides of land, which were held by William Peverel of the king. There was a market of the annual value of 20s., a mill of the same value, 10 acres of meadow, and a small wood, and the whole was rated at £18. Gitda was the Saxon proprietor. Several of the present neighbouring manors were then members of this lordship. In the first year of king John (1199), William Ferrers, Earl of Derby, who in right of his great-grandmother, was heir to the lands of Peverel (William de Ferrers having married the daughter and heiress of William Peverel), obtained this lordship with the hundred and park of Hecham; and upon the attainder of Robert Earl Ferrers, in the fiftieth of Henry III. (1265), this lordship, with his other possessions, fell to the Crown, and was granted to Edmund Earl of Lancaster, the king's younger son. Henry Earl of Lancaster, in the reign of Edward III., was advanced to the dignity of Earl of Lincoln, and in the twenty-fifth of the same reign (1351) raised to the title of Duke of Lancaster. In the thirty-fifth of this reign (1361), he died of the plague in Leicester, and his inheritance devolved upon his daughters and heirs. In the partition of the estates, this manor with its members of Raunds, Rushden, and Irchester, were assigned to Blanch, wife of John of Gaunt, fourth son of Edward III., Duke of Lancaster, and Aquitaine; Earl of Richmond, Earl of Derby, Lincoln, and Leicester; High Steward of England, and Constable of France; who sat in Parliament with the title of John, King of Castile and Leon. After the death of Constance his wife, this nobleman withdrew to Lincoln, where, finding Catherine Swinford, by whom he had previously four children, who by an Act of Parliament were legitimated, the year following he honourably married her, and died in the twenty-second of Richard II. (1398), leaving Henry, from the place of his birth surnamed De Bollingbroke, his son and heir, successor. This Henry, afterwards created Duke of Hereford, ascended the throne, by the title of Henry IV., and thus the lordship of Higham came to the possession of the Crown. The manor with the castle and hundred of Higham Ferrers, as part of the duchy of Lancaster, was settled in the fifth of Henry V. (1417), on the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Durham, and others; and in the fifth of Edward IV. (1465), William Lord Hastings obtained a grant of them. In the reign of Edward VI., the Earl of Worcester possessed them; and returning to the Crown by Charles II., the manor was granted to Catherine, the queen dowager, with reversion to Lewis, Earl of Feversham, of whom it was purchased by the Hon. Thomas Wentworth, with whose descendants, the Fitzwilliam family, it still continues.

The Castle stood northward of the church; the date of its erection cannot be ascertained, but it is supposed to have been built by one of the family of Ferrers. The situation it occupied is plainly indicated by earthworks, from which an idea of its great strength and extent may be conceived. When Leland wrote, about the year 1540, he noticed the "Castel, now of late faullen and taken doune." William Lord Hastings, who obtained a grant of it in 1465, is the last constable on record; and Camden who finished his 'Britannica,' in 1607, speaking of it observes, "the ruins whereof are yet to be seen near the church."

THE TOWN OF HIGHAM FERRERS,

Which was a borough by prescription, is ancient and irregularly built, on a considerably elevated rocky substratum, abounding in springs, a short distance from the river Nene, 5 miles E. of Wellingborough, 8 S.W. from Thrapston, 10 S.E. from Kettering, 16 N.E. from Northampton, and 65 from London. The town is plain, and consists of a market-place, and one line of spacious street, nearly a mile in length. Its general appearance is healthy, cheerful, and respectable. It returned one member to Parliament previous to the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832; and here were formerly three weekly markets, on Monday, Thursday, and Saturday, which have all fallen into disuse. The shaft of the ancient market cross, 16 feet in height, and composed of one entire stone, still remains opposite the town hall, which is a very plain stone building, erected in 1808, at a cost of £755. Fairs are held on the Wednesday before February 5th; March 7th; Thursday before August 5th; October 11th; and December 6th; and the feast is held on the first Sunday after the 15th of August, the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, after whom the church takes its name. Boot and shoemaking is now the principal employment of the inhabitants. The town is on the line of the Peterborough branch of the London and North-Western Railway, the station of which is about a mile distant, and the Irchester station on the Midland main line is about two miles distant. It is also a corporate town; the charter of incorporation is dated 14th March, second and third of Philip and Mary, 1554-5; but this was probably a new charter, for Leland, in the reign of Henry VIII., tells us that "Ther is a mair at Hyam Ferrers." The corporation consists of a mayor, 7 aldermen, 13 capital burgesses, a recorder, and deputy-recorder, and the style of the corporation is the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough and parish of Higham Ferrers. The aldermen are chosen out of the burgesses, and the mayor out of the aldermen. By a curious custom, the mayor and corporation walk in procession to church three times a year, when the bidding-prayer is used, and a special sermon is preached by the vicar, who is the mayor's chaplain. The property of the corporation consists of 53a. 3r. 27p., some houses, the interest of money, and tolls of fairs, and amounts to about £150 per annum. The mayor's salary is £30 per annum. The seal of the borough contains within a circle, circumscribed Sigillum municipii, de Higham Ferrers, a dexter hand coupe at the wrist, and a base of 9 human heads, 5 and 4. The following are the members of the corporate body of the present year (1873-4)—viz., George Shelton, Esq., mayor; W. Hirst Simpson, deputy-recorder; the aldermen are Thomas John Starling, John Sanderson, Thomas Randall, John Crew, George Edmund Lamb, Edward Brown Randall (one vacant); and the burgesses are John Sanders, Thomas Fisher, Christian Hawkes, John Sargent, William Marriott, William Wyman, Richard Flintham, William Brown, Abraham Groome, John Knighton,

John Lamb, Walter Spong, and William John Lamb. The town is lighted with gas by a company established in 1855, with a nominal capital of £1500 raised in £10 shares. The gas-holder, which is on the telescope principle, will contain 8000 cubic feet, the price charged to consumers is 6s. 8d. per 1000 feet, and there are 22 public lamps.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, was formerly collegiate, and is one of the finest in itself, and richest in its monuments, even in a district remarkable for the splendour of its ecclesiastical buildings. It consists of a nave and choir, or chancel, and Lady chapel, north and south aisles, an additional north aisle, western tower, containing a fine peal of six bells and one mass bell, which are inscribed with curious mottoes, and spire, and south porch. The western front of the tower, which is 71 feet in height, is curious in its architecture; the beautiful hexagonal spire is 99 feet high, and replaced the former one which was blown down in 1631. The porch or doorway contains two openings; the mouldings surrounding it are charged with sculpture; also a niche, from which probably effigies of the "Virgin and Child" have been removed, and a curious figure, representing a man whose feet were hurt in the stocks, still remains; and over these are ten circular compartments, representing passages from the Old and New Testaments, in bas relief, which were originally painted. The aisles at the east end are divided from the chancel by carved screens; and on each side of the chancel are stalls, with carved subsealæ. Under an arch on the north side of the altar, is a slab, inlaid with brass, to the memory of St Maur, rector, in the reign of Henry VI., and the church is remarkably rich in monumental brasses. Here is also a monument, consisting of a Latin decorated cross, to the memory of Thomas Chichele, and Agnes his wife, the parents of Archbishop Chichele, dated 1400. And over the chancel is a richly carved head of our Saviour crowned with thorns, on one side the head of the Blessed Virgin, and on the other that of the Beloved Disciple; the Misereres in the choir, of black oak, are of great antiquity and richly ornamented. The old tiles, which are very curious and remain in the chancel, are decorated with strange devices—the rose being very common, and probably much used as an insignia in the time of the feuds between the Houses of York and Lancaster. It is supposed that the tomb in the chancel was intended for some royal personage, probably John of Gaunt; it has on it the royal arms, the lions and the roses; the canopy over it is richly wrought, and until lately armour hung over it, which should be replaced; the devices on the canopy appear to consist of bees or some large insects; and on the tiles in the floor stags are not uncommon. The priest's door is curious, and the double piscina is worthy of inspection. There are two richly ornamented chapels of the Holy Rood and Jesus. The font appears to be Norman and of great antiquity, decorated with a rich cross and possibly a pomegranate, the little window over it is of Early English, and probably the oldest part of the church. The best view of the interior is from the north aisle at the north end of the belfry arch; its length, 119 feet from end to end, and its beautiful proportions, are at once seen from this spot. The mixture of ironstone with white stone in the arches has a pleasing and sobering effect on the eye and is generally admired. On the outside of the church, at the belfry staircase, a handsome statue was placed to the memory of Archbishop Chichele, who was a native of Higham Ferrers, representing him with mitre and crosier and uplifted hand in the act of giving the blessing; it was copied from a print in the possession of Mrs Allen, of this town, and on one of the choir seats is carved the head of the archbishop; on one of the Misereres there is the head with a crown, it is supposed, of Edward I. The figure with feet in the stocks in the porch, it has been suggested, may have been that of Richard I., a part of the crown being visible on the head of the figure. At the west end of the churchyard is a sepulchral cross, which was at some period a very elegantly sculptured pillar, but now considerably mutilated. The church was tastefully and thoroughly restored in 1864 at the expense of the late Earl Fitzwilliam, the parishioners, and several of the principal residents of the county, at a cost of £6000. The magnificent belfry arch has been thrown out, the pillars of which are universally admired. The church was reseated throughout and each seat differently carved. The roofs are the same in height, but there is no chancel arch. There are two richly carved screens, one at the chancel entrance, the other at that of the Lady chapel. The east windows are of the Decorated style, and much require stained glass. The churchyard was considerably enlarged in 1870, when new iron gates were placed at the entrance by subscription, at a cost of £50. The living is a vicarage, with that of Chelveston, in the deanery to which the parish gives its name, rated in the king's books at £33, 4s. 4d., and now worth about £400 per annum. The patronage is vested in the trustees of the late Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam, and the Rev. Edward Templeman, B.A., is vicar. The tithes were commuted at the inclosure for land. The Vicarage House or Priory, adjoining the Bede House, was formerly the residence of the warden who, it is supposed, officiated for the bedesmen. There is much old oak throughout the building, and the rose, carved on one of its beams, is still preserved.

Henry Chichele, Archbishop of Canterbury, founded here, under a licence from the Crown, in 1422, a college, for a warden, seven fellows, four clerks, or chaplains (one of whom was to teach grammar, and another chanting or singing), and six choristers; and he founded, or annexed to the foundation of the college, an hospital or bedehouse, for twelve poor men, and one woman to attend on the men; and he granted and settled certain lands and real estates in Higham Ferrers, Denford, and Stanwick, in the county of Northampton, and elsewhere, for the support of the college, and the maintenance of the members of the institution. On the dissolution of religious houses, in the reign of Henry VIII., the possessions of the college, which were valued at £856, 2s. 7d. per annum, were surrendered to the Crown; and granted to Robert Dacres, Esq., in fee, subject to the proviso and condition that the said Robert Dacres, his heirs and assigns, should for ever find and maintain two chaplains, to be nominated by the king, his heirs and successors, to pray for his and their souls, and to perform divine offices in the church at Higham Ferrers, and have the care of souls of the parishioners of the said parish; and that the said Robert Dacres, his heirs and assigns, should also maintain a schoolmaster, well learned, who should instruct the boys and youths of Higham Ferrers in the art of grammar, such schoolmaster to be nominated by the king, and should also maintain thirteen poor men called bedesmen, to be nominated also by the king, to pray for his and their souls; and that the said Robert Dacres should yearly pay to one of the chaplains, for his salary, £10, and the other £8, and to the schoolmaster for his salary, £10, and to the superior chaplain, for the maintenance of the said thirteen bedesmen, £24, in order that they might have each of them a salary of 7d. a week, and five yards of frieze, at 8d. a yard, once a year, on the feast of St John Baptist, and that they should have eight cartloads of wood delivered to them, and also 10s. at Easter, for fuel-money, and 5s. a year for shaving-money, and 5s. a year to provide a lamp to burn in their dormitory; and that the said Robert Dacres should for ever keep or maintain the hospital or bedehouse in repair. In the charter of incorporation of the borough of Higham Ferrers, after reciting that after the dissolution of Higham College, Henry VIII. had reserved to himself the election and nomination of two curates, one schoolmaster, twelve poor people, and one woman; their Majesties granted to the mayor and aldermen power to elect and nominate the said curates, schoolmaster, and poor persons in the almshouse, as often as any of them should die, or for reasonable cause be removed.

About the year 1734, Thomas Dacres, Esq., the then proprietor of the estates which had belonged to the college, sold the same to the Earl of Malton, subject to the several charges mentioned; and the same now form part of the family estates of the Hon. G. W. Fitzwilliam. The stipends of the two chaplains used to be paid to the vicar of Higham Ferrers, in augmentation of the vicarage. The master of the grammar-school is appointed by the corporation, and receives the stipend of £10 a year from the Fitzwilliam family, together with a voluntary addition of £10, and the use of a house, and the children of the place and neighbourhood are taught reading, writing, and arithmetic, the learned languages not being in requisition. The remains of the college, which are in a very ruinous condition, stand in the main street of the town, N.W. of the church. There is a curious sun-dial with the inscription "Tenpus Fustur," which no one can translate. When Bridges wrote it was occupied as an inn, called the Saracen's Head, but it is now used for domestic or agricultural purposes. The Bedehouse, with a chapel annexed, on the south side of the churchyard, was completely restored about the year 1854 by the late Earl Fitzwilliam, shortly before his death. It is now, by permission of the vicar, used for a Sunday school, and for lectures and entertainments for the working people. The bedesmen are accommodated with houses in the town; they dine together annually on St Thomas' Day, after attending Divine service in St Mary's Church. It is a handsome Perpendicular building, of an oblong form, with a high-pitched roof, capable of holding 300; and the chapel is a small graceful building, also restored by the corporation at the same time. The bedespeople are still appointed by the corporation, and they each receive the weekly stipend of 7d., with 10s. divided amongst them for shaving and lamp-money, and each of the men has a coat and the women a gown provided once in two years; the expense of the clothing being about £10. A supply of wood for fuel used to be given when the poor resided in the bedehouse. This has been discontinued since they ceased to dwell there, but they now receive instead a contribution in money. The bedesmen also receive the rents of some small gardens belonging to the bedehouse, which are collected and paid to them by the chamberlains of the corporation, amounting at present to £2, 2s. per annum. There is also an annual customary payment to the bedesmen of £2, 10s. made by the corporation.

The Wesleyan Methodists and Baptists have each a small chapel here. The latter occupies an out-building to one of the houses in the town, where it is said John Bunyan was in the habit of preaching; and afterwards, about 1716, when the Rev. Dr Gill first became a preacher, he officiated to a congregation in this chapel, from whence, in 1719, he was removed to London.

The School-house in the churchyard, near the west end of the church, is a beautiful Perpendicular structure of three bays, with a window of three lights in each, and one of five lights, at the east and west.

The School Board, of five members, was formed here in July 1870, and the School was erected in 1873, to accommodate 250, at a cost, including purchase of site, and master's house attached, of about £2500. It is a very good building of brick, and the present average attendance is 150. The science classes in connection with the science and art department of South Kensington are held here from October to May.

The Newsroom and Library in the Town Hall was established in 1856; the library contains about 200 volumes. There are about 40 members who pay 1s. 6d. each per quarter, besides several hon. members. The vicar is president, and Mr John Sanderson is secretary and treasurer.

Newman's Charity Almshouses.—Mr George Newman, an exciseman resident at Higham Ferrers, left about £5000, in 1855, for building and endowing six almshouses, for six old women, either widows or spinsters, inhabitants of the parish, which were erected by the Corporation in the principal street of the town; the occupants each receive £5, 4s. quarterly. (For the other charities of the parish, see the table prefixed to this hundred.)

Antiquities.—Roman baths having been discovered in the easterly part of the Castle ground, it is conjectured that the northerly portion may have been the site of a small Roman camp, particularly as it possesses so considerable a rampart and fosse. About a mile from Higham, on the western extremity of the lordship of Stanwick, is an extensive tumulus, about 120 yards in circumference. An antique alabaster lamp, somewhat similar to the lamps of the Romans, was discovered in the crypt below the chapel of the bedehouse, about 72 years since. Anterior to the foundation of the college or bedehouse, it appears that an hospital dedicated to St James, existed here, as two presentations to the wardenship are recorded in the Lincoln registers. The site of this house is unknown.

Biography.—Henry Chichele, Archbishop of Canterbury, was born of an obscure family in this town, in 1360. Tradition says that when a boy keeping his father's sheep near Higham, he was noticed by William of Wykeham, who was so pleased with the talent displayed in his answers that he took him under his patronage, and promoted him in his college. He afterwards held several church preferments, including the rectory of Brington, in this county, which he held from 1400 to 1408, the chancellorship of Sarum, the bishopric of St David's, to which he was consecrated at Sienna, in 1409, by the Pope's own hands, and finally the archbishopric of Canterbury, from 1414 to his death in 1443. Besides the college and bedehouse here, he built St John's and All Souls' Colleges, at Oxford; he spent a large sum in repairing the library at Canterbury, and he gave to the church many rich ornaments and valuable jewels, and built a great part of the tower called the Oxford tower, in the same church. Archbishop Chichele was one of the ablest men of the age in which he lived; a thorough politician, an eminent negociator, a great patron of learning and learned men, and was esteemed a fine speaker. In 1442 he petitioned the Pope for permission to resign his archbishopric, on the ground of extreme old age and infirmity, and a desire to devote the remainder of his days to the care of his own soul. The petition, which was couched in very beautiful and touching language, was not successful, although the king joined in the prayer. He died in the following year.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank.—John Groome, postmaster. Letters delivered at 7 A.M. and 11 A.M., and are despatched to London and all parts at 6.50 A.M. and 6.15 P.M.; to Peterborough, 9.40 A.M.; to London only, 11.57 noon; and to London, Bletchley, Brackley, Oxford, Cambridge, and Northampton, at 9.5 P.M.. On Sunday they arrive at 7 A.M., and are despatched at 6.5 P.M.

Allen Misses Margaret & Ellen
Archer Rev. John (Wesleyan)
Ashby Charles, tailor
Brown Mrs Jane, brickmaker
Brown Jph. brick & tile-maker.
Brown William, draper
Brown Wm. grocer & draper
Bunting Rev. Peter
Carter James, blacksmith
Chown Mrs Ann, miller
Cottrell Miss Phoebe, mistress
Infant school
Crew John, R.C.P. surgeon
Cunnington Charles, baker rtrr.
Dixon Rev. Alex. B.A. curate
Fisher Thomas, shopkeeper
Greene Mrs Charlotte
Groome Abraham, shoe mfr.
Groome John, shoe manufacturer, and at Liverpool
Groome John, postmaster
Hawks Christian, coal mercht.
Higgins John William, draper
Johnson Mrs Laura
Lamb Wm. John, baker & corn merchant
Malim Mrs Mary
Marriott William, blacksmith
Measures Emanuel, baker
Noble Robert, tinplate worker
Pack Jas. hairdrr. & towncrier
Pack Samuel, baker
Pack Mrs Sarah, shopkeeper
Parker & Co. curriers, shoe
manufra. & army contractors

Parker John, wheelwright, &c.
Parker Wm. foreman currier
Patenall Abm. Thos. hairdrrer.
Patenall Mrs Jane, shoemaker
Randall Thomas (Parker & Co.)
Rooksby Henry, clicker
Robinson Wm. schoolmaster
Sanders Hy. shoe manufactr.
Sanders Thos. currier, leather seller, and maltster
Sanderson Alfred, grocer and tea-dealer, and Wellinboro
Sanderson John, schoolmaster
Sargent John, carriage builder
Seamark David, shopkeeper
Shelton Edwin, butcher
Shelton Geo. shoe manufactr.
Shelton George, junr. manager
Shelton John, grocer
Simpson William Hirst, B.A. solicitor
Smith Alfred, butcher
Smith George, carpenter
Smith John, cooper and grocer
Spencer Samuel, saddler
Starling Thos. John, M.D. sur.
Templeman Rev. Edwd. B.A.
vicar
Thomson Charles, clicker
Thompson James, land agent
Thomson David, M.D. surgeon, and Irthlingborough
Ward Thomas, grocer
West William, beer retailer
Wingill John, shopkeeper

Wright Mrs Elizabeth, stationer
Wyman George, butcher

Farmers and Graziers.

Burgees Mrs Ann
Chambers Thos. Manor House
Flawn William
Flintham Richard
Knighton John
Lamb George Edmund
Lamb John
Randall Edward Brown
Shelton George
Slater George, Higham Lodge
Spong Walter
Wyman William

Fire and Life Offices.

Atlas (life), W. H. Simpson,
B.A.
Norwich (fire), W. H. Simpson,
B.A.

Inns and Taverns.

Anchor, James West, Wharf
Chequers, Charles Cox
Green Dragon (commercial),
John Knighton
Griffin, Wm. Miller (& builder)
Swan, George Skilaby
Queen's Head, John Lamb
(and coal dealer, &c.)
White Horse, James Sargent
(and plumber, &c.)

Public Officers.

Clerk to the Magistrates, Steward of the Burgh of Higham Ferrers, Solicitor and Treasurer to Higham Ferrers Association for Prosecution of Felons, W. H. Simpson, B.A.

Town Crier, James Pack

Public Establishments.

Gas Works, W. H. Simpson, B.A., sec.; James Slingsby, manager

Inland Revenue Office, White Horse Inn, John Glasier, officer, h. Irthlingborough Stamp Office, John William Higgins, sub-distributor

Carriers.—William Felce and Alexander Patenall, to Wellingborough, all days except Thursday.

HIGHAM PARK PARISH.

This formerly extra-parochial district, but now independent parish, is within the liberty of Rushden, from which it is distant about $1\frac{1}{4}$ mile. It contains one farm-house, now in the occupation of Mr Ralph Dearlove, and 660 acres of the rateable value of £700, and of the gross estimated rental of £820. The tithes, which are impropriated, were commuted, in 1839, for a rentcharge of £120. The park (now disparked) was originally formed in the reign of Henry II.

IRCHESTER PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Rushden, on the north by the river Nene, which divides it from Wellingborough, and on the west and south by Wollaston. It includes the hamlet of Knuston, and contains 2679 acres. The population in 1801 was 523; in 1831, 797; in 1841, 907; in 1851, 960; in 1861, 1168; and in 1871, 1398 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £8926, and the gross estimated rental £10,354. The Midland line of railway from the north to London passes through the parish, and has a station half a mile from the village. The Peterborough branch of the L. & N.-W. Railway also intersects the parish, and the Wellingborough station of that line is at the north-west boundary, on the bank of the river Nene, about two miles from Irchester. The land here is very fertile, and mostly arable; the soil is principally a red loam or marl, on a substratum of limestone, and the principal proprietors are Lord Overstone and R. W. Arkwright, Esq. Ironstone is plentiful in the parish, and it is now (1874) extensively worked on the estates of R. W. Arkwright, Esq., and Lord Overstone, by Messrs Butlin, Bevan, & Co., of Wellingborough. In the reign of Edward III., the parishes of Richendon (Rushden), Irthlingborough, and Irchester, built the present bridge at Ditchford by united contributions.

Manor.—At the general survey, William Peverel held 1 hide and 3 virgates of the soke of Higham, in Irecestre. These lands passed afterwards, as a member of Higham, to the family of Ferrers. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), the Earl of Lancaster and Margery Kriell were lords of Irchester. It subsequently passed through the family of Pabenharn, and in the reigns of Henry VII. and Henry VIII. it was possessed by the Cheynes. The manor of Irchester, as parcel of the duchy of Lancaster, is now in the hands of the Crown.

The Village of Irchester, which is rather long, is seated on rising ground, about 3 miles S.E. of Wellingborough, and the same distance south of Higham Ferrers. Agriculture and shoemaking are the principal pursuits of the inhabitants.

The Church, dedicated to St Catherine, is in the Perpendicular style of architecture; it stands on a gentle eminence, and consists of a nave with clerestory, side-aisles, chancel, south porch, and western tower and spire. There is a peal of five bells in the tower; and the steeple, which is very handsome, forms a conspicuous object among the noble group of spires of which it is a member. The chancel is separated from the nave by a lofty arch; and an arch similar in design, but not so lofty, opens from the chancel into the north aisle. The chancel floor appears to have been raised, as the sedilia and piscina are nearly on a level with the floor; and in the south wall were three arched windows and a door now blocked up. The chancel window, of five lights, is Perpendicular in style, and the pulpit, of carved oak, is of exquisite workmanship, and in good preservation. A few of the old oak seats still remain; they are beautifully carved, and in very fair condition. The font, which is very ancient, stands at the west end of the south aisle; it is octagonal, and on the sides are curiously sculptured figures. The organ stands on a small gallery at the west end, purchased in 1860 at a cost of about £140. In the chancel are monuments to members of the Jenyson family, formerly owners of Knuston Hall; there are also tablets to the memory of Sir Peter Payne, Bart., and his wife and son. The living is a discharged vicarage annexed to that of Wollaston, in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, and worth conjointly £500 a year. Rev. Joseph Monk is patron, and the Rev. Jacob Tomlin, B.A., incumbent. The tithes were commuted for land in 1769. The Vicarage House, an ancient plain building, stands in the village. The register dates from 1622.

The Old Wesleyan Chapel has been superseded by a very neat building, which was opened at Easter 1870, at a cost of £800. The site was given by W. W. Asplin, Esq. It will accommodate about 400 persons.

National School, with master's house attached, was built in 1848 at a cost of about £450; and in 1873 it was enlarged, at a further cost of £400, to accommodate 188. The present average attendance is 120.

Early in the present year (1874) the men, when digging where the ironstone is now being worked, near Chester House, in the vicinity of the old Roman station, came upon what was undoubtedly a Roman burial-ground, and turned up some hundreds of skulls, some of them very perfect, and in not a few of them the teeth were in a very fine state of preservation. A coffin made of lead, but having a considerable per-centage of silver, was also met with close to the surface, the head being placed towards the east. There were also some golden cups discovered a short time since in the same locality.

CHESTER, so named from the adjoining Roman encampment or Castro, consists of one house and farm, which is a manor in itself, and the only one in this hundred that is not part of the duchy of Lancaster.

Chester House, an ancient building, formerly the seat of the Ekins family, and now the property of G. F. Whidbourne, Esq., is in the occupation of the vicar, the Rev. Jacob Tomlin, and stands about one mile N.W. of Irchester. Here are the remains of an encampment or fortification, called the Burrow. It was in form a parallelogram, containing about 18 acres, situated upon a declivity, the longest diameter being parallel with the course of the river. Mr Morton thinks it was a Roman summer station, the winter one being probably at Irchester; and this conjecture is borne out by the fact that among the ruins have been found two stone pillars resembling sepulchral altars, and fragments of Roman pavement and bricks have been thrown up by the plough. Coins of Faustina, Adrianus, Gratianus, Antonius, and Constantinus, have been found here; and in an orchard, an urn, containing 45 brass coins, with a ring and chain attached to it, have been also discovered.

KNUSTON is a hamlet, picturesquely disposed, about one mile N.E. of the village, and the same distance from Rushden.

Knuston Hall, the seat of Quintus Vivian, Esq., is a large square mansion of some beauty, standing on an elevated spot in the centre of a well-wooded park, overlooking a vast area of country. A new wing was added in 1865. Various improvements have also been made in the park. A fine stream of water, recently improved and enlarged, crosses the park, over which a bridge is thrown, and the stream in passing under forms a waterfall.

The Charities are the feoffees' estates, yielding an annual rent of £114, which, after keeping the premises in repair, is expended on the poor, and the reparation of two bridges; and an annuity of £5, 4s. to provide for twelve poor people who should attend divine service in the parish church regularly. Mr Samuel Sharwood, whose father was born in this parish, gave, in 1858, the sum of £182, with directions to the minister and churchwardens to apply the interest as follows—viz., £2 annually to the support of the National School; and to distribute the remainder at Christmas, in sums of five or ten shillings each, to the most deserving of the industrious poor.

Post-Office.—Daniel Ward, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive via Wellingborough at 7.50 A.M., and are despatched at 5.15 P.M.

Arkwright Robt. Wigram, Esq.
J.P. Knuston Hall
Barnes Mr John
Bayes Joseph, stonemason
Blythe Jno. farm-bailiff, Chester Farm
Cooper Thomas, carpenter and vict. Carpenter's Arms
Co-op. Stores, W. Darnell, mng'r.
Dickins John, miller, Ditchford
Ellis & Everard, coal merts.
Facer Wm. Francis, blacksmith
Flanders Fred. baker
Gray Alfred, mast. of Nat. Schl.
Hodges Richard, shoe agent
Joyce Owen, vict. Red Lion
Joyce Wm. thresh. mach. owner
Kemshed Jonas, j. shoemaker
Lilley Charles, shoemaker and china dealer, &c.

Nichols John (Parsons & N.)
and railway contractor
Parsons & Nichols, coal and salt merchants
Parsons Miss Emily, milliner
Parsons John, baker
Parsons Stephen, lace manufacturer, draper, and grocer
Parsons Thomas (P. & Nichols), and baker, grocer, & butcher
Potter Mrs. teacher of Inf't. Schl.
Saxby Henry, tailor
Saxby John Henry, tailor and draper, and assist. overseer
Sharp —, ironstone contractor
Sheldon Wm. coal & salt mert.
Smith Rev. John, B.A. curate and chaplain to Wellingbro' Union, Vicarage

Spencer Thomas, baker, grocer and beer retailer
Tomlin Rev. Jacob, B.A. vicar of Irchester and Wollaston, Chester House
Ward William, parish clerk
West James, carpenter
Willis William, station-master
Woodward Jno. Wm. plumber, &c.

Farmers and Graziers.

Attenborough William, Lodge
Blott William, Chester Farm
Cooke William Lucy
Cooper Joseph, Grange
Mather John, Knuston Lodge
Parsons Thomas
Spencer Charles
Turnell Thomas Battams

Carriers.—George Gaddard and John Manning, to Wellingborough daily.

NEWTON BROMSHOLD PARISH.

Newton Bromshold, or Bromswold, is bounded on the east and north by Bedfordshire, on the west by Rushden, and on the south by Higham Park. It contains 800 acres, of the rateable value of £913, and the gross estimated rental is £1075. The population in 1801 was 101; in 1831, 122; in 1841, 161; in 1851, 178; in 1861, 163; and in 1871, 157 souls. The soil is a strong cold clay, and F. W. Sartoris, Esq., H. C. Wise, Esq., M.P., and the Warden and Fellows of All Souls' College, Oxford, are the principal landowners.

Manor.—The Bishop of Constance held 2½ hides of land here at the general survey. In the reign of Henry II., they were in the possession of the family of Bidun; and in the reign of Henry III., the family of Newton held ¼ a knight's fee here. In the twelfth of Henry VII. (1496), John Druell, or Drewell, died seized of this manor, and it descended to his posterity. It is now in the possession of the Crown as parcel of the duchy of Lancaster.

The Village, which is very small, is on the edge of the county, 3½ miles S.E. from Higham Ferrers.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, is a small edifice in the Decorated style, consisting of a nave, north aisle, south porch and chancel, and a tower containing three bells and a spire. In the south wall of the chancel are five sedilia and one piscina, and in the north wall, under a pointed arch, is what is supposed to be an Easter sepulchre, or probably a founder's tomb; on the floor of the chancel are two brasses having effigies of priests in their vestments. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £8, 3s. 4d., and now worth £225 per annum. All Souls' College, Oxford, possesses the patronage, and the Rev. Wm. Taylor, M.A., is the present rector. The tithes were commuted for land in 1800.

The National School (of brick), was built by subscription in 1867, at a cost of about £100.

Post-Office.—Wall-Box. Letters arrive from Higham Ferrers at about 9 A.M., and the box is cleared at 4 P.M.

Smart Henry, vict. Swan
Taylor Rev. William, M.A. rector

Farmers.
Browning John
Dickens Daniel
Lynes John, Newton Lodge

Rootham William
Sykes Ebenezer
Wyman John, Rectory Farm

RAUNDS PARISH.

Raunds is bounded on the east by Hargrave and Keston in Huntingdonshire, on the north by Denford-Wold, on the west by Ringstead and the river Nene, and on the south by Stanwick. It contains 4254 acres; its population in 1801 was 800; in 1831, 1370; in 1841, 1653; in 1851, 1873; in 1861, 2337; and in 1871, 2580 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £7738, and the gross estimated rental £9232. The soil is principally a strong clay, on a substratum of limestone. Ironstone has also been discovered here, but not yet worked. The lordship possesses some excellent springs, one of which is petrifying, and the principal proprietors are Messrs Thomas Nichols, John K. Nichols, John Pentelow, Samuel Brown, Sir James Hay Langham, and a few resident yeomen. This lordship is famous for its quarries of ragstone. "The stone raised here," writes Bridges, "from the beauty of its grain, and firmness of its texture, is usually called Raundes marble. It is generally set with a great variety of shells; and seemeth to be that kind of marble which the Italians have named nephiri. In many of the best seats of the county are chimney-pieces and window-slabs of this stone." The parish is intersected by the Kettering and Huntingdon branch of the Midland Railway, which has a station here about $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile from the village.

Manor.—At the Norman survey, the Bishop of Constance had 6 hides and $1\frac{1}{2}$ virgate, which, with a mill of the yearly value of 34s. 8d., 100 eels, and 20a. of meadow, were valued at £5. William Peverel held $7\frac{1}{2}$ hides here at the same time, of the soke of Higham, which were rated at £18. In the reign of Henry II., Robert Fitz-Roger held $2\frac{1}{2}$ hides, and Gilbert Fitz-Richard, 4 small virgates here. These were the lands which formerly belonged to the Bishop of Constance; and the lands which William Peverel held appear to be contained in the 33 hides which were certified to be in the hundred of the demesnes of Peverel, and which passed with Higham to the Ferrers family. In the ninth of Edward II. (1315), the king and the Earl of Lancaster were lords of Raunds. We subsequently find a third manor in Raunds, and the whole of them passed through several intermediate hands to the present possessors, Sir James Hay Langham, Bart., and the Crown; the former possessing 2 manors, called Furnell's and Gage's manors, one of which (Gage's) was purchased by Sir John Langham, Bart., in the twelfth of Charles II. (1660), and the other by Sir W. Langham, for £4600, in 1675. The third manor is now in the possession of the Crown.

The Village of Raunds, which is large and scattered, is distant 6 miles west from Thrapston, and is a place of considerable importance for the manufacture of shoes. The Gas Works were established in 1866 by a company of shareholders, whose present nominal capital is £3600, raised in £10 shares. The gas-holder will contain 9000 cubic feet, and the village is lighted with 45 public lamps. The price charged to consumers is 6s. 8d. per 1000 cubic feet, and the annual consumption is 1,012,950, and that of Stanwick is 340,000 cubic feet.

The Hall, which is a very handsome mansion, the residence of John K. Nichols, Esq., was erected in 1871.

The Church, dedicated to St Peter, is a large handsome edifice, consisting of a nave and side-aisles, chancel, south chantry, west tower, and spire, and south porch. The tower belongs to the first half of the reign of Henry III., and the walls of the chancel, with the fine east window, are of the same period. The nave and aisles were rebuilt in the time of Edward III., and shortly afterwards the side walls of the chancel were raised, and the clerestory introduced with a new roof in imitation of that of the nave. Many windows were inserted in the later period of the Perpendicular style. The spire was rebuilt, it having been struck with lightning on the 31st of July 1826, when about 30 feet were thrown down, and much damage done to the church, the repairs of which cost £1731, 15s. 3d.; in the rebuilding of the spire the original pattern was faithfully copied. This tower and spire, which are 180 feet high, are celebrated as amongst the finest even in this district of spires, which contains some of the best in England. The font, which stands at the west end of the south aisle, is Early English, plain, circular. The cover is made out of an old one, having a finial formed of four heads united. There are five piscina—three in the chancel, one in the chantry, and one in the north aisle. One of those in the chancel is placed in the east end wall, as is also that in the chantry; and the single sedilia, which has a trefoil arch, and a pediment over it, seems to have been part of the original design, though it has been restored. Near the south-east corner of the chancel is a flat grove stone or coffin-lid of the thirteenth century, ornamented with a rich floriated cross—very likely to be the tombstone of the founder, removed from the chancel, and now fast decaying from exposure to the weather. A lid of a tomb, with an Early English floriated cross, turned downwards, was discovered in 1874, and is now placed in the churchyard, west of the south porch. On the southern side of the churchyard are the steps and shaft of an ancient stone sepulchral cross of the late Decorated style. It has a band of quatrefoil panels round the base, and the emblems of the evangelists on the four sides of the shaft; that of St Matthew is unusual, being a bird with a human face instead of an angel. At the west end of the nave a circular stone face for a clock has just been discovered, having 24 discs in its circumference. This is supported by an arc of masonry inside the western arch, and being cleared, some very good frescoes were also discovered.

The church is rich in tombs and brasses. Fourteen of the latter were discovered some years ago under the south chantry floor; two of them have effigies, supposed to be of the Talbot family—one of the brasses having the inscription, "Of your charity pray for the souls of John Talbot and Margaret his wife, which John deceased the 11th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1470. On whose souls Jesus have mercy." In the chancel is a brass plate bearing the inscription, "Hic Jacet Gulielmus Holmes Sacre Theologiæ Baccalarie Quondâ Vicaris hujus Ecclesiæ qui obit 9th January 1653." There are also monuments to members of the Gage family. The communion table is of oak, massive, and beautifully carved, and having round the sides the following inscription, "The gift of Gilbert Negouse, who died on 2d August 1630. The church is now (1873-4), under restoration from plans by Sir G. G. Scott, at a cost of about £4000, exclusive of the chancel, the restoration of which rests with the lay impropiator, Thomas Nichols, Esq. of the Grange. The living is a vicarage in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £11, 9s. 7d., and now worth about £300 per annum. The patronage is vested in the Bishop of Peterborough, and the Rev. Charles Porter, M.A., is the vicar. The tithes were commuted for land in 1797. The register dates from 1581. The Vicarage House stands near the church; and near it also stood a fine barn of the thirteenth century, with a very high-pitched roof, which was taken down some sixteen years ago.

The Baptist Chapel was built in 1837, at a cost of about £500, and will seat about 400. Rev. Joseph Pearce is the minister.

The Wesleyan Chapel, erected in 1812, was rebuilt in 1874, at a cost of nearly £3000. It is a very good substantial stone structure, capable of seating 800, with lecture-room underneath to hold about 300.

The Primitive Methodists have also a chapel here, built in 1870, at a cost of £212, and will seat 150 persons.

The National School (mixed) was built in 1860, at a cost of £1400, including the purchase of site, and the master's residence. The funds were raised by subscription, and a Government grant of £372. An Infant School was built in 1870. The average number in attendance is 250. The Wesleyans have also a good school, built in 1861, at a cost of £1300, towards which the Government granted £420. An Infant School was added in 1871, at a further cost of £300. The average attendance is 220. The Science Classes in connection with the science and art department are held in the school from November to May, and are attended by an average of forty students. Here is a Temperance Hall, built in 1859 at a cost of nearly £400. The large room has accommodation for about 300.

Amongst the benefit and friendly societies here are the Oddfellows', Foresters', and the Tradesmen's.

The Charities of this parish consist of 51 acres of land, which lets for £85 per annum, which sum is divided for the repairs of the church, the support of the national school, and for those of the poor who are not in receipt of parochial relief. There are also about 2 roods of land in Ringstead parish, let in allotments for about £1 per annum each, and which is divided between the church and the poor; and in 1720, Robert Nichols left six houses to the poor of this parish, the present rent of which is £16, 5s. per annum.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank.—Andrew Walker, postmaster. Letters arrive from Thrapston at 8 A.M. and 3 P.M., and are despatched at 10.5 A.M. and 3.55 P.M., on week days only.

Abbott William, ropemaker
Allen Wm. agri. machine-maker
Asbery William, cabinet-maker and upholsterer
Bass Robert, shoemaker
Bass Thomas, watch and clock-maker and timber dealer
Beeby John, baker
Bell Mr Henry
Blott Abraham, butcher
Brown James, maltster
Burgess John & Son (Thomas), tailors and drapers
Chambers Misses Char. and Ann
Chester John, cowkeeper
Chester William, cowkeeper
Clark Ebenezer, draper
Clark Thomas, shoe-agent
Clark Wm. boot & shoemaker
Cobley John, coal mer. & beerho.
Coggins Silas, beerhouse
Coles James, meat, &c. dealer
Cooke Robert, butcher
Ekins Mr George
Ekins Robert, cattle-dealer
Ekins Thomas, butcher
Ekins William, cattle-dealer
Eldred Robt. iron ore contractor
Finding Clark, photographer
Finding Wilson, baker
Fisher Amos, watch & clockmr.
Foskett Thos. mangr. gasworks
Gambriel Geo. mangr. brickwork
Goodman John, plumber, &c.
Griffin Rev. Geo. (Prim. Meth.)
Husseldine Robert, butcher
Howell John, clerk
Kitcher William Henry Rogers, vet. surgeon
Knight Robt. regr. births, deaths, marriages, & relieving officer
Knighton Mrs Ann
Leach Rev. Wm. Attfield (Wes.)
Lee Geo. master Wesleyan Sch.
Lord James, saddler
Love Wm. & Son, brick and tile manufacturers, h. Stoneley.

Lovell Thomas Rippin, builder
M'Donald Miss Margaret, mistress of Wesleyan Infant Sch.
Meakins Alfd. boot & shoemkr.
Mills Edward, herbalist
Moore Silas, buildr. & wheelwrt.
Nichols William & Son, shoe manufacturers, and London
Nichols John Knighton (W. & Son), h. The Hall
Nichols Mrs Sarah
Nunley Jph. coal & lime dlr. & carting agent to the Midland Rwy. Co. and beerhouse
Nunley Owen, beerhouse
Partridge Joseph, blacksmith
Pearce Rev. Joseph (Baptist)
Pentelow Job, corn miller
Porter Rev. Chas. M.A. vicar
Porter Rev. Wm. Carmichael, M.A. curate
Pulpher Jethro, ropemaker
Rains George, baker
Shaw Thomas, basket-maker
Shelmerdine Jesse, master of National School
Smith Wm. & Son (Enos) bldrs.
Smith John King, & Owen, shoe-upper manufacturers
Streather Edward, builder
Streather William, stone and marble mason
Whitney Eugene Joseph, secretary and collector, Gasworks
Walker Andrew, saddler, news-agent, &c. P.O.
Wingell Mrs Mary
Wingell William, tailor and draper, and beerhouse
Woodruff Mr John
Woodruff Robert, baker
Woolston Mr Stephen
Yorke William, blacksmith

Farmers and Graziers.

(Marked * are Yeomen.)

*Arnsby Lot, Langham Cottage

*Blott James
*Blott Jonathan
*Brawn John
*Brawn John & Hy. (and bakers)
*Brown Samuel
Bugby Thos. (and cattle dealer)
Colson Ekin
*Colson Thomas (and baker)
Elderkin Benj. Vicarage Farm
*Green John
*Nichols Thomas, The Grange
*Pentelow John, Manor House
*Rotton Rich. Napleton Lodge: house, London
Woolston Thos. h. Doddington

Grocers, etc.

Allen Owen
Bass George (and draper and china, &c. dealer)
Berry Mrs Mary Ann
Chapman John
Finding Mrs Elizabeth
Finding Sam. (and draper, &c.)
Gostick Jas. (and parish clerk)
Knighton Thomas Nichols
Knighton Wm. (& pork butcher)
Marlin Mrs Ann
Nichols W. & Son (and drapers and butchers)
Sanders Mrs Caroline
Smith Joseph Woodruff (and coal-dealer)
Stock Geo. (and tailor & draper)

Inns, etc.

Cock, Alfred Smith
Forester's Arms, William Bell (and butcher)
George, Samuel Lovell
Globe, William Knighton
Golden Fleece, Rich. Hopkins
Railway, Joseph Nunley
Red Lion, John Young (and coal merchant)
Robin Hood, Mrs Ann Marlin

Carrier.—Joseph Nunley, to Wellingborough, Monday, Wednesday, and Friday; to Thrapston on Tuesday; and Oundle on Thursday.

RINGSTEAD PARISH.

The boundaries of this parish are formed by Denford on the N.E., the river Nene on the W., and Raunds on the S.E. It contains 1929 acres, of the rateable value of £4494, and the gross estimated rental is £5290. The population in 1801 was 454; in 1831, 620; in 1841, 640; in 1851, 640; in 1861, 831; and in 1871, 875 souls. The soil varies from a strong clay to a red clayey earth. The executors of Thomas Burton, Esq., are lords of the manor, and George Capron, Esq., and Mrs Stopford Sackville, are the principal landowners. "Here," writes Bridges, "are good pits of red and white building stone, of which the red will best endure the weather. The pits are scarce three feet asunder." Ironstone is found here in abundance, and worked by Messrs Butlin, Bevan, & Co., of Wellingborough, since 1871. The workings extend about $1\frac{1}{2}$ mile in length up to the parish of Raunds. About 70 hands are employed, who turn out an average of 1000 tons weekly, yielding from 35 to 40 per cent. of iron.

Manor.—Ringstead not being mentioned in the Domesday survey, appears to have been comprehended in the manor of Raunds, as a member of Higham. In the reign of Edward III. a portion of it was in the hands of the family of Broune, and so it continued for several generations; and in the reign of James I. Henry Lord Mordaunt died seized of a manor here. The Tresham family possessed considerable property here, which in the reign of Henry VIII. passed to the Pyckerings. When Bridges wrote, more than a century since, Mrs Creed, of Barnwell, was lady of the manor.

The Village of Ringstead, which is large and irregularly built, is seated about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. by W. of Thrapston. The inhabitants are principally occupied in shoemaking and agriculture. The Peterborough branch of the London and North Western Railway passes through, and has a station about a mile from the village.

The Church, dedicated to St Mary, consists of nave, chancel, north aisle, chantry, north and south porches—the latter being beautifully arched—vestry, tower, and spire containing six bells. It was thoroughly restored in 1863 at a cost of about £2000; the Incorporated Society for the Building, &c., of Churches contributed £80 towards the reseating. The sittings, which are open, are of varnished deal, and the roof is also open and of the same material. The flooring of the body is of plain tile, and that of the chancel of the mosaic pattern. On the north side is the clerestory, extending the length of the chantry. The east window of five lights, of handsome design, is in the Early Decorated style. The chancel stalls are of the same design as the old ones. At the west end are several mural tablets, but possessing no particular historic interest. The spire is a very pretty object from the opposite side of the river, forming one of a series, embracing Thrapston, Denford, Raunds, Stanwick, and Higham Ferrers, all visible at the same time. The living is a discharged vicarage annexed to that of Denford, in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, patronage of Miss Leggat, and incumbency of the Rev. Edward Sandford. The tithes, great and small, have been commuted for land.

Here is a Baptist Chapel, a stone building, erected in 1848, on the site of an old one, built in 1720, at a cost of £300, and will seat about 300. Here is a mural tablet erected by the congregation to the memory of the Rev. Leonard Joseph Abington, twelve years pastor of the mission. Rev. William Kitchen is the present minister. The Wesleyan Chapel, of brick with stone dressings, was built in 1857 at a cost of £416, and will seat 250.

The National School, with master's house attached, was erected in 1867, at a cost of £860, and is now (1874) being enlarged at a further cost of £160. It is a handsome building, capable of accommodating 200 pupils, and is attended by an average of 100.

The Temperance Hall, a brick building, was erected in 1861 by subscription, at a cost of about £200. It will accommodate 200.

The Charities of Ringstead are the charity estate, consisting of 27 acres of land, which lets for £51, and a lime-kiln, which lets for £7, 12s., making a total of £58, 12s., two-thirds of which go to the support of the school, and the remainder to the aged poor.

COTTONS. There were formerly three several enclosed innships, or demolished hamlets, in the liberties of Raunds and Ringstead. In Raunds was West Cotton, and a part of Mallows Cotton, and in Ringstead is Cotton House, or Mill Cotton, and the other part of Mallows Cotton. At Mill Cotton are some remains of an entrenchment, consisting of a high bank of earth, enclosed within a deep ditch. From an urn which was found within the ditch, and which contained ashes, it is supposed to have been a Roman work. Several Roman coins have been found in the fields above Mill Cotton; and at Mallows Cotton is a knot of small closes on the bank of the river, where are vestiges of a town, as appears from fragments and foundations which have been discovered. The family of Chamberleyn formerly possessed the manor of Cotes, and from them it passed to the Pickeringes. There was a chapel at Cotton, in which the minister of Shelton, in Bedfordshire, officiated once a month.

Biography.—Leonard Joseph Abington, 12 years pastor of the Baptist chapel of the parish, who was born in London on the 11th June 1763, and died in 1842 in the 79th year of his age. He was of an ancient family, and was a classical scholar of fair repute, and the author of the works entitled "Letters from the Dead to the Living," "Consummation," a poem, "The Living Temple," "The Rebellion of Korah," a sacred drama, &c.

Post-Office.—William Bradshaw, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Thrapston 7.15 A.M. and 2 P.M., and are despatched 4.35 P.M. on week days only.

Abbot Miss Elizth. milliner
Abbot Joseph, shopkeeper
Abington Herbert Joseph, chemist and druggist
Abington Mr Samuel John
Austin Thomas, butcher, baker and grocer
Balderson Joseph, p. constable
Bannister John, master Nat. Sch.
Barritt John, shoe agent and china and marine store dlr.
Bradshaw Fredk. blacksmith
Bradshaw Wm. shopkeeper, parish clerk, post-office
Bull Andrew, baker
Bull Mrs Eliza, shopkeeper
Bull Wm. tailor, shopkeeper
Bull Wm. Saml, tinner & shopkr.
Childs John, baker
Clark Elijah, wheelwright
Dearlove Mr Jph. Ringstead Ho.

Dicks Hy. marine store dealer
Ding Wm. Exton, gro. & drpr.
Eldred George, fireman
Figgis Mrs Maria, vict. New Inn
Green Noah, tax collector
Green Mr Thomas
Kitchen Rev. Wm. (Baptist)
Knight Thos. Grant, butcher
Leveratt Wm. station-master
Mason Amos, vict. Swan
Mayes John, coal-dealer
Mercer Mr Thomas
Mundin James, poulterer
Peacock Richard, shopkeeper
Roberts Alfred, shopkeeper
Robinson Chas. shoe agent
Robinson Elijah, carrier & beerh.
Sharman Mrs Hannah
Sivers Fred. carpenter & shopkr.
Smith George, shoe agent and assistant overseer

Warner George, shoe agent
Warren Wm. parish constable
Weekly Mrs Elizabeth
Weekly John, cottager
Weekly Mrs Sarah, shopkeeper
Weekly Wm. marine str. dlr.
Whitwell John, vict. Aze and Compass

Farmers and Graziers.

Agutter John
Ball John (and butcher)
Beeby David
Beeby William
Brawn James Wright
Childs Robert (and shoe agent)
Dearlove Jno. Ringstead Ct.
Dearlove Wm. Ralph, Ringstead House
Knight Robert
Peach Tha. (yeoman), Hill Ho.

Carriers.—Elijah Robinson and Samuel Wilson, to Kettering, Friday; Thrapston, Tuesday; to Wellingborough, Wednesday; and the latter to Oundle on Thursday.

RUSHDEN PARISH

Is bounded on the south and west by Bedfordshire, on the north by Higham Ferrers and the river Nene, and on the east by Newton. It contains 3570 acres; its population in 1801 was 818; in 1831, 1245; in 1841, 1311; in 1851, 1460; in 1861, 1748; and in 1871, 2122 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £6900, and the gross estimated rental is £8000. The soil varies from a strong clay to a light sandy land, and Fred. U. Sartoris, Esq., is the principal proprietor. Messrs Nicholas Fisher, Thomas Sanders, Michael Mason, George Denton, Joseph Hill, and Alfred Manning, are also considerable owners. The lordship is well watered with excellent springs.

Manor.—At the time of the Domesday survey, Risdene, which contained 6 hides, was a member of Higham manor, and in the ninth of Edward II. (1315), Richard Faber held the manor of Rushden of the Earl of Lancaster. With the Lancaster family it came to the Crown, as parcel of the duchy of Lancaster, in the person of Henry IV. In the reign of Henry VIII. the tenants and inhabitants of Rushden and Higham obtained of Sir Thomas Cheyne the right of fishing in those lordships. George H. Burnham, Esq., is steward for the several manors of Rushden, Raunds, and Irchester, and holds courts baron annually in each place.

The Village of Rushden, which is large, straggling, and irregularly built, but rather handsome, stands on elevated ground, 1 mile south of Higham Ferrers. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in boot and shoemaking. It is lighted with gas by a company formed in 1864, with a nominal capital of £1600. The number of public lamps is 45, and the present price of gas is 6s. 8d. per 1000 cubic feet.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, was formerly collegiate, and consists of a nave and side-aisles, transepts, choir or chancel, north, south, and west porches—the latter is rather shallow and has a pointed arch supported by ribs rising from corbels—an octangular turret at the north angle of the east end, and a beautifully proportioned tower in the Perpendicular style, containing a peal of six bells, and surmounted by a lofty octagonal spire, with pierced crockets up the several angles,—up which adventurous youths of the parish have been known to climb. The whole is 192 feet in height. The boldness, loftiness, and perfect elegance of this magnificent steeple, surpasses that of Higham, in the greater elegance of its taper spire, which is 96 feet high. Over the windows of the upper division of the tower is a moulding composed of a double series of trefoiled blank arches possessed of excellent Perpendicular character; above which is a battlement ornamented with pierced quatrefoils presenting a light and rich appearance. The general aspect of the interior is very striking; there are evidences of there having been originally five altars in the church; the sedilia and piscina of the high altar are of singular beauty, and the reredos in the north chantry remains in good preservation, though partly hidden by a monument. The wide and lofty chancel-arch is very effective; but the most singular feature in the church, and one which immediately strikes the eye upon entering, is a stone arch richly pierced with tracery, which acts as a double buttress between the nave walls. Only two other examples of similar arches have been observed, at Finedon in this neighbourhood, and at Wells Cathedral. The Rood screen is in good condition, and there are four other screens in the church—that to the north chancel aisle having a very rich cornice. The whole fabric exhibits a mixture of the Early English, Decorated, and Perpendicular styles; the north transept, which is the earliest part remaining, dates from about 1270; the church not having assumed its present form till about the beginning of the sixteenth century. There are some very interesting remains of stained glass, especially four figures of apostles in the north aisle. Amongst the monuments there are two to the Pemberton family, who resided in this parish for several generations. The church is now (1874) undergoing a thorough restoration at an estimated cost of £4500, from plans by Gordon Hills, Esq. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £12, 16s. 3d., and now worth about £400 per annum. The Rev. John T. Barker, M.A., is the rector and patron of the living. The old Rectory House was sold in 1869, and a commodious one was built by the present rector, a little to the north of the church in the years 1870-71. The tithes were commuted for land in 1778.

The Baptist Chapel dates from 1796, and has accommodation for about 600 persons; the Sunday-school adjoining was built in 1860 at a cost of about £250. The Rev. Jonathan Whittemore, who started the Christian World and other publications, was minister of this chapel from 1832 to 1852. He died in 1860. The Wesleyan Chapel was erected in 1873 at a cost of £1000, including the purchase of the site. It is a neat building of white brick, with stone dressings, capable of seating about 350.

Rushden Hall, the seat of F. U. Sartoris, Esq., is situated near the village, on an elevation, surrounded by fine plantations, gardens, and pleasure grounds. The house is quadrangular, and principally consists of a retreating centre, and two projecting wings. On the south side is a square embattled tower, presenting much the appearance of a castellated edifice. This mansion once possessed one of the finest old halls in the county, but it has of late years been incorporated with other apartments, and thus entirely swept away. Norden tells us that "there was in Rushden an ancient house of the Dukes of Lancaster." This house is supposed to have been built by the renowned John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster; and upon its site the present mansion in the Elizabethan style has been erected.

Rushden House, the seat of H. W. Currie, Esq., is a handsome mansion, erected in 1870-71, in the Domestic Gothic style of architecture.

The Charities of this parish are £25 per annum, derived from property purchased with £100 left to the poor, &c., in 1619, by William May; £3 per annum given to 6 poor persons, which was left in 1619, by the Rev. Nicholas Latham, and £3 per annum, left to the poor by Mary Greaves.

A handsome National School in the Gothic style was built in 1870-71 at a cost of £1100, on land given by F. U. Sartoris, Esq., who also contributed largely to the building fund. Grants were also made by the Committee of Council on Education, the National Society, and the Diocesan Society. It is built of stone, and consists of a large schoolroom, measuring 51 feet by 20 feet, class-room 20 feet square, infant school 49 feet by 18 feet. The interior is elegantly fitted up with the latest appliances—the desks especially being on a novel principle, and are called Hockerill from the designer. It possesses accommodation for over 250 children, and is well attended. The General School, established April 1872, is at present held in the Temperance Hall, and is attended by an average of 100.

The Temperance Hall was built in 1871 at a cost of about £600, raised in £1 shares by the Temperance Hall Company Limited; the large room will accommodate about 300 persons.

Post, Money-Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings' Bank.—Charles Hewitt, postmaster. Letters arrive from Higham Ferrers at 7.10 A.M. and 12 noon, and are despatched at 11.5 A.M. and 5.15 P.M. On Sunday there is no despatch, but the letters arrive at 7.10 A.M.

Alderman Mr George Arnold	ironmonger, shoemaker, and	Piggott John, joiner & builder
Bagnall Mr Hy. Haslope, The Cot.	grindery dealer	Radburne John & Son (Wm.)
Barker Rev. John Thomas,	Dickens Robert, baker	drapers
M.A. rector	Fisher Charles, watchmaker	Radburne Mr Thomas
Bayes Charles, mason, builder,	Foskett Wm. carpnt. & builder	Rice Daniel, cottager
and draper	Franklin Miss Mary, greengr. &c.	Robinson George, shopkeeper
Bayes Mr Joseph	Ginns Adam, blacksmith	Robinson John, corn dealer
Bayes Joseph, junior, builder	Green Joseph, miller	Robinson Joseph, coal dealer,
Betson Mrs Sarah, dressmaker	Green Wm. shoe manufacturer	and trap proprietor
Bradfield Rev. Robt. (Baptist)	Gross Mr Joseph	Ruddle John, tailor
Bull James, j. shoemaker	Hall Stephen, miller	Sanders Mr William
Bull John, chimney sweeper	Hewitt Mrs Elizabeth	Sartoris Frederick Urban, Esq.
Burton Robinson, baker	Hewitt Chas. station. post office	J.P. Rushden Hall
Burton Thomas, grocer	Hustwaite Geo. mstr. Gen. Schl.	Skinner George Henry, butcher
Butcher Robt. Octavius, grocer,	Jaques John, clicker	Skinner Maurice, grocer
& brick & tile manufacturer	Kilaby William, boot-closer	Skinner Samuel, draper
Cave John, shoe manufacturer	Knight Ed. pig dlr. Old Rectory	Slater Mrs Elizabeth
Cave Paul, manager	Knight Frederick, shoe manufr.	Smith John, butcher
Chapman Thomas, beer retailer	Knight Jeremiah, shopkeeper	Sykes John Thos. horse-dealer
Chettle Benjamin, baker	Knight John, pig dealer	Taylor Wm. police constable
Chettle Edwin, horse-dealer	Knight Samuel, carpenter	Vorley Foster, botanical drug.
Chettle Joseph, draper	Knight Samuel, junr. builder	Warren Jno. mstr. of Nat. Sch.
Chettle Saml. fishmgr. & fruitr.	Laughton Alb. plumb. & paintr.	Whitbread Philip, beer retailr.
Claridge Ebenezer, clicker	Lewis Charles, blacksmith	White Thomas, shopkeeper
Claridge William, shoe manufr.	Lewis John, mangr. of gaswrks.	Wilby Thomas, currier, leather
Clayton Wm. head gardener	Lovell William, cowkeeper	seller, grocer, drpr. & br. retr.
Colson Wm. shoe mnfr. & currier	Maddock Thomas, j. shoemaker	Wilkins Mr William Henry
Corbett John, baker	Margetts John, plumber, &c.	Wright William, baker
Crick James, hawker	Margetts Thomas, builder, &c.	Whiting Mrs Sarah Elizabeth
Cunnington Chas. Geo. currier	Martin John, beerhouse
Currie Henry William, Esq.	Mason Mrs Mary
Rushden House	Meadows Harvey, fishmonger, &c.	Farmers and Graziers.
Curtis John, wheelwright	Packwood George Frederick,	(Marked * are Yeomen.)
Darnell Alfd. fishmgr. & fruitr.	registrar of births and deaths,	*Denton George
Denton Benj. & Son (George),	and relieving officer	*Gross John shoe manufacturers, curriers,	Packwood John, mason	*Lawton Mrs Mary
grocers, and drapers	Packwood Wm. inspec. nuisance	Linnett John Fisher
Denton Charles, shopkeeper	Parnell Henry, beerhouse	*Mason Michael
Denton John, furniture brokr.	Perkins Geo. shoemkr. & grocer.	Rhodes Richard Corby

*Sanders Thos. Prospect House	Treen Thomas	Rose & Crown , Joseph Higgins
Skinner George	Wyldes Robert, Rectory Farm	(and baker)
*Tailby Geo. (& sec. to gas co. and assistant overseer).	Wyldes Thomson	Wagon & Horses , John Wood
*Tailby Thomas	Inns, &c.	Wheat Sheaf , Thomas Treen
Tomlinson Bruce	Coach & Horses , Thos. Hulatt

Carrier.—William Warren, to Wellingborough, on all days except Thursday.

STANWICK PARISH

Is bounded on the east by Shelton in Bedfordshire, on the north by Raunds, by the river Nene on the west, and on the south by Chelveston-cum-Caldecot. It contains 1952 acres, of the rateable value of £3800; and the gross estimated rental is £4514. The population in 1801 was 332; in 1831, 503; in 1841, 577; in 1851, 609; in 1861, 669; and in 1871, 678 persons. The soil varies from a strong clay to a light gravelly land on a limestone bottom; and the principal owners are Mr John K. Nichols, Lord Overstone, Spencer Pratt, Esq., and John Bush, Esq. (who possesses the manorial rights). The Peterborough railway passes through the parish. The lordship is well supplied with springs, one of which possesses petrifying qualities; and fragments of Roman tessellated pavement have been found, according to Bridges, at "the further end of Meadow-furlong."

Manor.—The Abbey of Burgh had 1 hide and 1 virgate in Stanwice at the general survey, but the whole manor consisted of 3 hides, two of which lay within the limits of Bedfordshire. With the abbey the manor continued till its dissolution, when it was seized by the Crown and given to the Dean and Chapter in the thirty-third of Henry VIII. (1541), but was resumed by the Crown in the same reign. It was sold in the reign of Charles I. to Mr Atkins, one of whose descendants sold it to the family of Ekins, who possessed it for several generations.

The Village of Stanwick, which is rather scattered, is pleasantly situated on a declivity about 2½ miles E. by N. of Higham Ferrers. Here are some good family residences, amongst which may be noticed Stanwick House, the residence of Spencer Pratt, Esq., which is a handsome square building, commanding extensive prospects; Stanwick Hall, the residence of Cecil A. S. Wetenhall, Esq.; and that of John Bush, Esq., which is an ancient Manor House enveloped in trees, a little east of the church. The village is supplied with gas from Raunds since 1869.

The Church, dedicated to St Lawrence, is a small ancient edifice, consisting of a nave, chancel, south porch, and a beautiful octagonal western tower and spire. The total height of the tower and spire is 156 feet, and the date of the edifice is about 1230. The living is a rectory in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £6, 13s. 4d., and now worth about £750 per annum. The patronage is vested in the Crown, and the Rev. George Mansfield, LL.D., is the rector. The tithes were commuted at the enclosure for land. The Rectory House, a little west of the church, is a large square building.

Here are three small Chapels, one belonging to the Baptists and two to Wesleyan Methodists.

The National School, built by subscription, aided by grants of £54 from the Council of Education, and £30 from the Northampton National Society, is a stone building. It was repaired in 1870 at a cost of about £80.

Charities.—The church land consists of 15 acres, and lets for £28 per annum. The Rev. Peter Needham left £10 to the poor, which was expended in the purchase of land, for which the Commissioners of Enclosure allotted 1a. 7p., yielding an annual rent of £3, 12s. 6d.

Worthy.—Richard Cumberland, the celebrated dramatist, was born in this parish in 1732.

Post-Office.—Samuel Pettit, sub-postmaster. Letters arrive from Higham Ferrers at 8 A.M. and noon, and are despatched at 9.45 A.M. and 5 P.M.

Bayley Mr Arthur
 Cox Thomas, baker
 Denton Mr Samuel
 Denton Mr William
 Derbyshire Mr Joseph
 Firkins Thomas, saddler
 Harrison Mrs Sarah
 Maddison Mrs Mary, grocer & but.
 Mansfield, Rev. G. LL.D. rector
 Marchant Robert, tailor

Marchant William, grocer
 Marshall Mrs Mary, Stanwick Villa
 Morris Geo. mason & beerhae.
 Morris John, marble mason
 Partridge William, smith
 Patrick John, jun. shopkeeper
 Perkins Edward, vict. Duke of Wellington
 Pettit Samuel, grocer, P. O.
 Pratt Spencer, Esq. J.P. Stanwick House

Sergeant Jno. B. Esq. barrister-at-law
 Welford George Penco, miller
 Wetchhall Cecil Arbuthnot
 Salisbury, Esq. Stanwick Hall

Farmers and Graziers.

Brawn John Thomas
 Gascoyne George Goodhall
 Nichols Joseph, Stanwick Lodge

STRIXTON PARISH

Is bounded by Wollaston on the north, by Grendon and Bozeat on the south and west, and by Bedfordshire on the east. It contains 880 acres, of the rateable value of £1271, and the gross estimated rental is £1520. The population in 1801 was 57; in 1831, 69; in 1841, 55; in 1851, 56; in 1861, 61; and in 1871, 48 souls. The soil is various; and the Earl Spencer is lord of the manor and owner of the whole.

Manor.—This lordship was named after the Saxon proprietor Stric, and is not mentioned in the general survey. In the reign of Richard I., it was in the hands of William de Pratelis or Prayers, who in 1192 was taken prisoner by the Saracens in the Holy Land. With his posterity it continued till the reign of Henry V., when it passed in marriage to the Draytons. In the nineteenth of Edward IV. (1479), upon the decease of Richard Drayton, it fell to Anne, the wife of Thomas Lovett, his sister and heir. In Queen Elizabeth's time, it passed from the Lovetts to the Shirleys, and through several intermediate possessors to the present noble earl.

The Village of Strixton, which is very small, is about 4½ miles S. by E. of Wellingborough.

The Church, dedicated to St John the Baptist, or St Romald, is in the Early style of English architecture, and consists of a nave, chancel, and south porch. Amongst the features of interest are the Early English stanchions of its windows, priest's door, the rood-screen, hourglass-stand, traces of wood-loft-beam, and sedilia. At the west end is a plain-pointed door, and above it is a handsome, sexfoil window, having the hood-mould carried entirely round it. There is a low doorway on the south side of the chancel, and near it is a small square-headed side-window. The south door is blocked up. On the south side of the west end is a stone coffin, which is now used as a receptacle for coal, &c. The church is now (1874) undergoing a thorough restoration from its foundation, at a cost of about £2000, towards which the Earl Spencer contributed £400; the rector, Messrs Thomas Walker, John S. Gibbard, £50 each, and Mr Thomas Wykes, £25. The living is a discharged rectory, annexed to the vicarage of Bozeat in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £7. The patronage is vested in the Earl Spencer, and the Rev. John Frederick Pizey, M.A., is the incumbent.

Letters arrive through Wellingborough.

Mr Thomas Wykes. The farmers are, John Stevens Gibbard, Thomas Walker, and Thomas Hensman Wykes, Greenfield Lodge.

WOLLASTON PARISH

Is bounded on the north by the river Nene, on the west by Grendon and Strixton, and on the east and south by Irchester, and a part of Bedfordshire. It contains about 2796 acres. Its population in 1801 was 761; in 1831, 975; in 1841, 1120; in 1851, 1261; in 1861, 1443; and in 1871, 1394 souls. The rateable value of the parish is £6406; and the gross estimated rental £7183. The soil varies from a strong clay to a gravelly land. Ironstone also abounds in the parish. The principal landowners are George Burnham, Joseph Hill (lord of the manor), Adam. C. Keep, Esqs., Lieut.-Col. Thompson, Christ's Hospital, Bartholomew's Hospital, William Whitehead, Esq., and Earl Spencer.

Beacon-hill, formerly called Mill-hill, is an eminence in circumference about half an acre, supposed to have been a Roman Specula. It is now the property of Mrs Patenall, and from it no less than 27 church spires may be seen on a clear day with the naked eye.

Manor.—Gunfrid de Cioches held 5 hides of land in Wilvestone at the Domesday survey, which with a mill of the annual value of 5s. and 48 acres of meadow, were then rated at £10. Corbelin held two hides here of the Countess Judith at the same time, which with a mill was rated at 40s. Stric was the Saxon proprietor of the latter estate, and the former was held by four thanes, with sac and soc. Amongst the earliest possessors of this manor were the de Brays, one of whom, William de Bray, in the forty-fourth of King John (1242) obtained a grant of a weekly market here on Tuesday, and an annual fair on the eve of the Invention of the Holy Cross, and two following days. From this family the manor passed to Thomas, son of Maurice, Lord Berkeley, whose descendants held it till the twentieth of Edward III. (1346), when it was seized into the hands of the Crown. The other part of this lordship, which formerly belonged to the Countess Judith, was in the possession of the family of de Wollaston at an early period; and in Norden's time, Wollaston, as part of the Duchy of Lancaster, was in the Crown. Thomas Wentworth, Esq., of Harrowden, purchased it of the Earl of Bridgewater, and from him it passed through several intermediate possessors to the present proprietor.

The Village of Wollaston, which is pretty large, but scattered, is 3½ miles S. by E. of Wellingborough, and 11 E. from Northampton. Shoemaking is the principal employment of the inhabitants. Here are some very good houses, including the residences of George Burnham, Joseph Hill, and Adam C. Keep, Esqrs.

The Church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a handsome structure, with a tower surmounted by a lofty spire. The greater part of the edifice having fallen down in 1737, there is only the tower and spire with the north transept of the original fabric remaining. The tower and spire form a fine specimen of the Decorated style of the early part of the reign of Richard II. The roof of the nave, which is flat, is supported by four massive pillars. The accommodation in the church was increased in 1841 by erecting north and south galleries, extending the west gallery, and seating the chancel, by which means 496 sittings were obtained, and in consequence of a grant from the Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement of Churches, 430 of that number are free and unappropriated; previous to the alteration there were 470 sittings, 66 of which are also free. In the chancel are tablets to the Neale, Dickins, and Shipton families, and near the chancel entrance are also tablets to the Hill, Griesbach, and Manning families. The living is a discharged vicarage, to which is annexed that of Irchester, in the deanery of Higham Ferrers, rated in the king's books at £13, 6s. 8d., endowed with £200 private benefaction, and £200 royal bounty, and now worth about £500 per annum. Rev. Joseph Monk is the patron, and the Rev. Jacob Tomlin, B.A., is the incumbent. The tithes were commuted at the enclosure, in 1788, for land. There is no vicarage house in the parish, the incumbent resides at Chester House.

The Independent Chapel, of stone, erected in 1752, will seat about 400. The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, built in 1840, will seat 250, is also of stone; and the Baptist Chapel, of white brick, was erected in 1867, at the expense of Mr Joseph and Miss Knighton, and has superseded a former one dating from 1834, which is now used as a Sunday school.

A School Board, consisting of five members, was formed here in 1871, and in 1873 the school was built at a cost of £2712, to accommodate 250 pupils. The present average attendance is 160.

Post, Money-Order Office and Savings' Bank.—Watson George Parbury, postmaster. Letters arrive from Wellingborough at 8 A.M., and are despatched at 4.55 P.M.

Bell Mrs James	Jones John, shopkeeper	Slenth Mrs Eliza. grcr. & draper
Bird Edw. Robathan, M.D. sur.	Keep Adam Corrie, Esq.	Speight William, saddler
Blight Richd. Inld. Revenue. offir.	Knighton Joseph, druggist	Summerlin John and Charles,
Brown Newman Turland, bakr.	Laughton Alfred, plumber, &c.	blacksmiths
Brunham George, Esq.	& auctioneer & house-agent	Tilling Miss Janet Emily, mis-
Byson Mrs Ann & Sons (Edw. &	Lovell Wm. carptr. & wheelwht.	tress Infant School
Jno.) blacksmiths & farriers	Lucy Jas. Crisp, btchr. & frmr.	Tye James, lace dealer
Charlton George, beerhouse	Luddington Jno. grocer. & frmr.	Walker Frcis. tailor & shopkpr.
Cook Thomas, vict. Nag's Head	Packwood Jas. tailor & draper	Walker John, shoe manufactr.
Cook William, baker & farmer	Parbury Watson Geo. grcr. P.O.	Walker Pratt, machine-closer
Cooper Fredk. & Jesse, joiners	Partridge John, wheelwright	Walker Thos. shoe agnt. & grcr.
and builders	Partridge Robert, vict. Marquis	Woodhams John, newsagent
Co-operative Stores, Thomas	of Granby	Woodhams Thos. watchmaker
Nutt, manager	Patchett George, horse clipper	Woods Jno. shopkpr. & carrier
Crawley Charles, vict. Bell	Patenall Mrs Rebecca	Wright John, shoe agent
Denton Reuben, grocer	Pettitt Edward, carpenter	Farmers.
Fowler Hy. & Co. curriers, grcrs.	Pettitt William, baker	Bettles Mrs Susannah
Hall Rev. George (Indpt.)	Pitta William, beerhouse	Cook William
Hayes George, schoolmaster	Pollard William, shopkeeper	Gillatt Thomas
Hill Joseph, Esq. J.P. Wollas-	Pratt Jonathan, beerhouse	Gross William John
ton Hall	Pratt Rev. Thomas, curate	Harris William
Hills Joseph, beerhouse	Rice Mrs Ruth, shopkeeper	Howe Ezra
Hornshy Jas. pork-behr. & grcr.	Richardson Mrs Mary Ann	Luddington John
Hurry Jno. maltster, and regis-	Rivett Charles, boot & shoemkr.	Sanders Geo Walker, The Hill
trar of births and deaths	Sanders Miss Mary, school	Sanders John, Prospect House
Jones George, organist	Shelton George, butcher	Sanders John Nethercote
Jones Jeremiah, shopkeeper	Shelton William, shoe manufr.	Shilcock Samuel, Lodge
Jones John Porter, butcher	Sherwood Edmund, shoe agent	Whitehead Wm. Cragle House

Carriers.—Benjamin Partridge, to Northampton, Wednesday and Saturday; and Francis Downing Smart and John Woods, to Wallingborough, daily.

MEMBERS OF THE TOWN COUNCIL FOR THE CITY AND BOROUGH OF PETERBOROUGH.

Mayor—HENRY PEARSON GATES, ESQ.

Aldermen.

Henry Pearson Gates	John Thompson	Andrew Percival
Matthew Brown	William Vergette	Edward Vergette

Councillors.

East Ward.	George Fitzroy Dean Gaches	North Ward.
Stephen Stanley, jun.	John Miller	John Whitwell
John House	Alexander Beeby	Wm. Daniel Nichols
Benjamin Taylor	South Ward.	John Adams
William Barford	George Hunting	William Collingwood
John Core	William Hemment	Henry Little
Joseph Serjeant	John Fairweather	William Paley, M.D.

Officers.

Town-Clerk —W. D. Gaches	Auditors —J. F. Arnold and	Town-Crier —Thos. Harrison
Treasurer —Wm. Rowell	J. B. Craig	Assessors —J. Graves, and J.
Surveyor and Inspector —H.	Mayor's Chaplain —Rev. A. J.	Rippon
Key	Skrimshire	Mayor's Auditor —Alderman
Collector —W. J. Searjeant	Medical Officer of Health —	Percival
	Wm. Thomson, M.D.

SUMMARY OF THE COUNTY.

HUNDREDS, &c.	Rateable Acres, as Collected from the Parish Rate-Books	HOUSES.			POPULATION.			Rateable Value.	Gross Estimated Rental.
		Inhabited.	Uninhabited.	Building.	Males.	Females.	Total.
Chipping Warden	17,831	1064	71	2	2208	2172	4380	£ 33,855	£ 39,137
Cleley	24,395	1819	78	8	3991	4040	8031	51,409	92,474
Corby	56,498	2380	157	6	5267	5275	10,542	90,586	99,271
Fawsley	46,741	2311	224	6	4984	4781	9765	108,339	126,077
Greens Norton	22,606	1280	82	...	2582	2741	5323	37,966	42,367
Guildenburgh	40,691	2380	182	8	4873	4940	9813	85,466	97,975
Hamfordshoe	16,183	2886	84	36	6991	7202	14,193	59,309	69,614
Higham Ferrers*	29,155	2745	72	5	6251	6344	12,595	55,741	64,876
Huxloe	38,670	3975	113	21	9388	9423	18,811	92,114	107,902
King's Sutton	43,190	3212	170	24	7053	7257	14,310	91,529	108,009
Nassaburgh or Peterborough Liberty†	53,114	5336	183	40	12,312	12,861	25,173	148,192	168,514
Navisford	12,160	639	39	4	1482	1567	3049	20,967	24,608
Nobottle-Grove	31,632	2406	129	38	5395	5377	10,772	82,159	95,679
Orlingbury	27,930	1448	125	6	3193	3190	6383	52,926	61,276
Polebrook	21,299	1176	71	...	2698	2720	5418	37,380	43,841
Rothwell	43,332	2009	82	9	4401	4527	8928	93,154	106,297
Spelhoe	21,111	1663	125	19	3532	3561	7093	152,657	182,854
Towcester	12,850	1167	84	2	2609	2654	5263	31,278	55,049
Willybrook	31,078	1429	56	2	3092	3079	6171	41,408	48,087
Wymersley	32,977	2474	76	1	5772	5727	11,499	71,587	103,339
Daventry Borough	894	79	...	1979	2072	4051
Northampton Borough‡	7594	210	63	20,266	20,902	41,168
Stamford Boro., part of	252	13	...	540	620	1160
	623,443	52,539	2505	300	120,859	123,032	243,891	1,438,022	1,737,246

* The Incorporation of Higham Ferrers not being under the Municipal Corporation Act (5 and 6 Wm. IV., cap. 76), is returned with the Hundred in which it is situated.

† The City of Peterborough is returned with the Hundred of Nassaburgh, but its Parliamentary borough contained in 1871 17,429 inhabitants.

‡ In the last Parliamentary returns, the borough of Northampton is stated to contain only 1342 acres, but it is supposed to contain about 4000 acres.

MEASUREMENT, &c., IN DOMESDAY BOOK.

A perch, twenty feet. An acre, forty perches in length, and four in breadth. An oxgang or bovate, as much as a pair of oxen can keep in husbandry, usually 15 acres. A virgate or yard-land, about forty acres. A carucate, caroc, or plough land, generally 100 acres, or eight oxgangs. A hide, an uncertain quantity, generally about 120 acres. A knight's fee, five hides. Berewicks, are manors within manors. Merchet, or Maiden's Rent, was a payment to the lord of the manor, in commutation of his right with the virgin bride on the marriage of a vassal's daughter. Heriot, a tribute to the lord for his better maintenance in war. Theam was a manorial jurisdiction; and Infangtheof, the power of passing judgment on any theft.

Sockmen were inferior landowners, who held land in the soc, soke, or liberty of a great baron, by copyhold or socage tenure. Bordars were small occupiers, living in a bord or cottage, and supplying eggs, &c., for their lords' board or table. Villeins or Villains, were husbandmen, servants, &c., little better than the Saxon serfs. These were attached to the soil; and though on taking the oath of fealty, they had the right of protection from cruelty, yet they were not allowed to acquire property of any sort.

THE END.

